CT-2023-003

THE COMPETITION TRIBUNAL

IN THE MATTER OF an Application by the Commissioner of Competition for an order under sections 74.01 and 74.1 of the Competition Act, RSC 1985, c C-34.

BETWEEN:

COMMISSIONER OF COMPETITION

Applicant

- and -

CINEPLEX INC.

Respondent

BOOK OF AUTHORITIES OF THE RESPONDENT, CINEPLEX INC.

BORDEN LADNER GERVAIS LLP
Bay Adelaide Centre, East Tower
22 Adelaide Street West, Suite 3400
Toronto ON M5H 4E3
T: 416.367.6000
F: 416.367.6749

Robert S. Russell (25529R)
rrussell@blg.com
T: 416-367-6256

Martin Abadi (53275J)
mabadi@blg.com
T: 416-367-6158

Raymond Ashurov (72806N)
rashurov@blg.com
T: 416-367- 6503

Joshua Abaki (75327L)
jabaki@blg.com
T: 416-367-6568

Counsel to Cineplex Inc.

TO: ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA
Department of Justice Canada Competition Bureau Legal Services
Place du Portage, Phase 1
50 Victoria Street, 22nd Floor
Gatineau, QC K1A 0C9

Jonathan Hood
Tel: 416-954-5925
Jonathan.Hood@cb-bc-gc.ca

Irene Cybulsky
Tel: 613-316-5034
Irene.Cybulsky@cb-bc.gc.ca

Adam Newman
Tel: 819-953-3888
Adam.Newman@cb-bc.gc.ca

Counsel to the Commissioner Competition

INDEX

21.	Pries v Economical Mutual Insurance Co., 2012 CarswellOnt 12509 (FSCO Arb).
22.	Purolator Courier Ltd. v United Parcel Service Canada Ltd., [1995] OJ 876, 60 CPR (3d) 473.
23.	R. v. Abbey, 2009 ONCA 624
24.	R v Batista, 2008 ONCA 804
25.	R v Blackham's Construction, [1980] BCJ No 1265, 10 CELR 115 (BCCA).
26.	R. v Canadian Broadcasting Corp., [1992] OJ No 957 (Gen Div), 42 CPR (3d) 252.
27.	R v Church of Scientology of Toronto, [1974] OJ No 2013, 4 OR (2d) 707 (Co Ct).
28.	R. v. Clark (J.) & Son Limited, 1986 CanLII 5223, 71 NBR (2d) 257 (NB KB)
29.	R v Coates, [1981] SJ No 1151, 15 MVR 70 (Sask QB).
30.	R v Dubois, [1935] SCR 378, 3 DLR 209.
31.	R v International Vacations Ltd., [1980] 33 OR (2d) 327 (CA), 124 DLR (3d) 319.
32.	R v McIntosh, [1995] 1 SCR 686, SCJ No 16.
33.	R. v Mohan, [1994] 2 SCR 9, ACS No 36.
34.	Regina v Morgentaler, Smoling and Scott, [1985] OJ No 2662, 52 OR (2d) 353 (CA).
35.	R v Nahar, 2004 BCCA 77
36.	R. v. S. (R.D.), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 484
37.	R v Tuttle, [1951] OWN 750, 101 CCC 249.
38.	RJR-Macdonald Inc. c. Canada (Procureur général), [1995] 3 S.C.R. 199 (S.C.C.)
39.	Royal Trust Co v Minister of National Revenue, [1953] Ex CR 287, 54 DTC 1001.
40.	Saskatchewan Action Foundation for the Environment Inc. v Saskatchewan (Minister of the Environment & Public Safety, [1992] 2 WWR 97, 86 DLR (4th) 577 (Sask CA).
41.	Smith v London (City), [1909] OJ No 16, 20 OLR 133 (Div Ct).
42.	Tele-Mobile Co v Bell Mobility Inc., 2006 BCSC 161.
43.	Thomson v Canada (Department of Agriculture), [1992] 1 SCR 385, 89 DLR (4th) 218.

44.	White Burgess Langille Inman v Abbott and Haliburton Co., 2015 SCC 23 at para 23.
Legislation
45.	Competition Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-34.
Secondary Sources
46.	Anita Banicevic, "Assessing General Impression under the Competition Act: The Credulous Man Who Was Never There" (2016) 29:2 CCLR.
47.	Canada, Parliament, House of Commons Debates, 33rd Parl, 1st Sess, vol. 8, 1986 (March 3, 1986).
48.	Canada, Parliament, House of Commons Debates, 44th Parl,1st Sess, vol. 151, No. 065 (May 5, 2022).
49.	Canada, Parliament, House of Commons Debates, 44th Parl,1st Sess, vol. 151, No. 084 (June 8, 2022).
50.	The Commissioner of Competition v. Aviscar Inc., CT-2015-001, Registered Consent Agreement, (2 June 2016)
51.	House of Commons, Senate Standing Committee on Industry and Technology, Minutes of Proceeding and Evidence, 44th Parl., 1st Sess., No. 49 (May 19,2022)
52.	House of Commons, Standing Committee on Industry and Technology, Minutes of Proceeding and Evidence, 44th Parl., 1st Sess., No 25 (May 20,2022).
53.	House of Commons, Standing Committee on Finance, Minutes of Proceeding and Evidence, 44th Parl., 1st Sess., No 50 (May 24,2022)
54.	R. Sullivan, Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes (7th ed. 2014), at §15.05

NOVA SCOTIA COURT OF APPEAL

Citation: Antigonish (County) v. Antigonish (Town), 2006 NSCA 29

Date: 20060307
Docket: CA 242677
Registry: Halifax

Between:

Town of Antigonish

Appellant

v.

Municipality of the County of Antigonish

Respondent

Judges: Cromwell, Freeman and Oland, JJ.A.

Appeal Heard: September 23, 2005, in Halifax, Nova Scotia

Held: Appeal dismissed without costs per reasons for judgment of Oland, J.A.; Freeman and Cromwell, JJ.A. concurring.

Counsel: John MacPherson, Q.C. and Jack Innes, Q.C., for the appellant
Robert Grant, Q.C. and Nancy Rubin, for the respondent
Bruce Outhouse, Q.C., for the Nova Scotia Utility and Review Board, not present
Edward Gores, Q.C., for the Attorney General of Nova Scotia, not present Gary Cusack in person, for the Antigonish Chamber of Commerce, not present

Reasons for judgment:

Introduction

[1] In May of 2001, the Town of Antigonish (the "Town") applied to the Nova Scotia Utility and Review Board (the "Board") for the annexation of several thousand acres of the Municipality of the County of Antigonish (the "Municipality"). Later that very same month, the Municipality applied to the Board for the amalgamation of it and the Town.

[2] The public hearing before the Board took 11 days. After determining that it had the jurisdiction to hear the Municipality's amalgamation application, the Board proceeded to consider both the annexation and the amalgamation applications. Its preliminary opinion (2005 NSUARB 12), which issued in February 2005, was that the amalgamation that would be in the best interests of the Town and the Municipality. The Board indicated that after receiving the results of a plebiscite which would be held to measure the public support for an amalgamated municipal unit, it would consider all the evidence and then render its ultimate decision. The holding of the plebiscite was stayed after the Town appealed the Board's preliminary opinion.

[3] The Town's appeal to this court raises a single issue, namely whether the Board erred in finding that it had the jurisdiction to hear an application for the amalgamation of the Town and the Municipality. For the reasons which follow, I am of the view that it did not so err.

Background

[4] Three municipal entities lie within the boundaries of the County of Antigonish: the Town, the Municipality, and Havre Boucher Village Commission. As will be seen, the fact that all three exist was considered by the Board in determining whether it could hear the Municipality's amalgamation application.

[5] Each of the Town and the Municipality brought its application for annexation or amalgamation respectively pursuant to s. 358 of the Municipal Government Act, S.N.S. 1998, c. 18 (the Act"):

Amalgamation or annexation

Municipalities may be amalgamated or the whole or part of a municipality may be annexed to another upon application to the Board by

(a) the Minister;

(b) a municipality; or

c) the greater of ten percent or one hundred of the electors in the area proposed to be amalgamated or annexed. (Emphasis added)

[6] Section 358 falls under Part XVI (Boundaries) of the Act. Each of the Town and the Municipality qualifies as a "municipality" as defined in its s. 3(aw):

"Municipality" means a regional municipality, town or county or district municipality, except where the context otherwise requires or as otherwise defined in this Act;

[7] Havre Boucher Village Commission is not a "municipality" as defined in the Act. It comes within the definition of a municipal government in s. 3(ar):

3(ar) "municipal government" means a municipal unit, village or service commission in the area to be incorporated as a regional municipality, and includes every authority, board, commission, corporation or other entity of that municipal unit, village or service commission and every joint authority, board, commission, committee or other entity involving that municipal unit, village or service commission;

[8] The essence of the Town's argument on appeal is that the proposed amalgamation of the Town and the Municipality would result in the forced creation of a regional municipality, which is beyond the Board's jurisdiction. According to s. 3(be) of the Act, a "regional municipality" is a regional municipality established by or continued under the Act. The definition of that term specifically includes the Cape Breton Regional Municipality, the Halifax Regional Municipality, the Region of Queens Municipality, and the area over which each of those bodies corporate has jurisdiction.

[9] The creation of a regional municipality is set out in s. 372 which falls under Part XVII (Municipal Incorporation) of the Act. That section begins:

> Establishment of regional municipality
>
> (1) The Board may, if requested by all of the councils of the municipalities in a county, undertake a study of the form of municipal government in the county to determine whether a regional municipality would be in the interests of the people of the county.
>
> (2) Where
>
> > (a) a study of the form of municipal government in a county to determine whether a regional municipality would be in the interests of the people of the county has been undertaken, whether the study was undertaken by the Minister or otherwise prepared; and
> >
> > (b) a plebiscite has taken place and its results show that a majority of the electors who voted in the plebiscite are in favour of the establishment of a regional municipality for the county,
>
> the Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister, order that a regional municipality be established for the county.

Thus a regional municipality can only be created following the requisite approach by all the municipal councils within a county, the submission of a study, the holding of a plebiscite showing a majority of the electors in favour, the Minister of Housing and Municipal Affairs' recommendation and, even then, only if the Governor in Council should so order.

[10] The Town also argues that in reaching its preliminary conclusion regarding amalgamation, the Board considered irrelevant factors, such as the existence of the Village of Havre Boucher and eligibility for equalization funding from the Province under the Municipal Grants Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 302. Furthermore it submits that a town cannot be amalgamated with another municipality, since this results in the dissolution of the town contrary to s. 394 of the Act. That provision requires an application to the Board by the Minister, the town council, or ten per cent of the electors of the town.

[11] The issues argued before the Board which concerned its jurisdiction to hear an amalgamation application under s. 358 of the Act were as follows:

(a) Does s. 372 which deals with the establishment of a regional municipality implicitly prohibit the amalgamation of all municipalities in a county under s. 358?

(b) Does s. 394 which deals with the dissolution of a town implicitly prohibit the amalgamation of two or more municipalities if one of them is a town?

c) Since the Village of Havre Boucher does not necessarily cease to exist under an amalgamation order, is the form of government which results from an amalgamation under s. 358 a "regional municipality" as contemplated by section 372?

[12] The Board responded to each of these issues in the negative. At § 86 of its decision, it stated its conclusion on the issue of jurisdiction thus:

> The Board has found that the result of an amalgamation under s. 358 is that, unlike under s. 372, Havre Boucher may continue to exist. Even if this were not so, however, the Board also considers that while a similar result (i.e., combining the municipal units) may be achieved by two different avenues under the Act, that does not mean that the result should only be achieved by using one of the methods, to the exclusion of the other. The Board considers that nothing, explicit or implicit, in the legislation compels such a conclusion, nor does any principle of statutory interpretation of which it is aware. Based on the Board's conclusions on questions (a) to c) described above, it finds that it has the jurisdiction to consider the Municipality's application to amalgamate the Municipality and the Town. (Emphasis added)

Issues

[13] The core issue on this appeal, namely whether the Board erred in finding that it had the jurisdiction to hear an application for the amalgamation of the Town and the Municipality pursuant to s. 358 of the Act, requires consideration of the following:

1. To what extent should debates in the Legislature and legislative history be considered in determining the intent of the Legislature in enacting certain provisions of the Act?

2. Is the result of a s. 358 amalgamation application the creation of a regional municipality?

3. Does the Board have jurisdiction where an amalgamation would result in the dissolution of the Town contrary s. 394 of the Act?

4. Did the Board exceed its jurisdiction by considering irrelevant factors when rendering its decision?

Before addressing these matters, I must first determine the correct standard of review.

Standard of Review

[14] In dealing with the question of its jurisdiction to hear the Town's amalgamation application, the Board stated:

> ¶ 52 . . . the Board views the task before it as strictly one of statutory interpretation. As a result, the statutory framework and the applicable provisions are of primary significance. In this case, all provisions under review are contained in one statute, i.e., the Municipal Government Act.

[15] According to the Town, the standard of review of the Board's decision in respect of a matter of statutory interpretation is one of correctness. In its view, Myers v. Windsor (Town), 2003 NSCA 64 which concerned the Board's interpretation of a provision pertaining to amendment of land-use by-laws is a complete answer. There Hamilton, J.A. wrote:

> 16 The standard of review on appeal of a Board decision to this Court on questions of law and jurisdiction is one of correctness. Heritage Trust of Nova Scotia et al v. Nova Scotia (Utility and Review Board), [1994] N.S.J. No. 50

> (C.A.). The Board's interpretation of the legislation that confers jurisdiction on the Board is afforded no deference.

[16] While the Town suggests that Myers, supra is determinative, Canadian jurisprudence requires an analysis under the pragmatic and functional approach whenever the court conducts a judicial review of an administrative tribunal's decision: see, for example, Dr. Q. v. College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia [2003] 1 S.C.R. 226 at ¶ 24-35. In Creager v. Provincial Dental Board of Nova Scotia, [2005] N.S.C.A. 9, Fichaud, J.A. recounted the applicable factors in assessing the appropriate level of curial deference as follows:

> ¶ 15 . . . Under the pragmatic and functional approach, the court analyses the cumulative effect of four contextual factors: the presence, absence or wording of a privative clause or statutory appeal; the comparative expertise of the tribunal and court on the appealed issue; the purpose of the governing legislation; and the nature of the question, fact, law or mixed. From this, the court selects a standard of review of correctness, reasonableness, or patent unreasonableness. The functional and practical approach applies even when there is a statutory right of appeal: Dr. Q. v. College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 226, at paras. 17, 21-25, 33; Law Society of New Brunswick v. Ryan, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 247, at para. 21. The approach applies even to pure issues of law, for which the standard of review need not be correctness. The existence of the statutory right of appeal and whether the issue is one of law, are merely factors weighed with the others in the process to select the standard of review: Ryan at paras. 21, 41, 42; Dr. Q. at paras. 17, 21-26, 28-30, 33-34.

[17] Thus in addition to considering the nature of the question, which I agree is one of statutory interpretation, for which the Board would be accorded scant if any deference, the other contextual factors still must be examined. The first factor concerns the presence or absence of a privative clause or statutory right of appeal. The Utility and Review Board Act, S.N.S. 1992, c. 11 (the UARB Act) contains a strong privative clause regarding the Board's findings of fact. The finding or determination of the Board upon a question of fact within its jurisdiction is binding and conclusive (s. 26). There is no absolute privative clause, one which would shield the Board's decisions from review. Rather, an appeal lies to this court from an order of the Board upon any question as to its jurisdiction or any question of law (s. 30(1)). This suggests a more searching standard of review with respect to those questions. The subject matter of the appeal here concerns a decision of the Board as to its own jurisdiction.

[18] Next to be taken into account is the expertise of the Board. The UARB Act does not set out any statutorily prescribed expert qualifications for membership on the Board. The Board is an independent quasi-judicial body which has both regulatory and adjudicative functions. The Act gives it the authority to attend to various matters concerning municipalities including, upon application, municipal boundary lines (s. 356 and s. 357) and the incorporation or dissolution (s. 383 and s. 394 respectively) of a town. Before this court it was undisputed that the Board has adjudicated several matters involving the Town and the Municipality, including ones dealing with water utilities, the Town electric utility, land use planning, and municipal electoral boundaries. Although it has not heard any amalgamation application under s. 358 or its predecessors, the Board has heard applications regarding alternation of municipal boundaries by annexation. On this appeal however the question pertains to the Board's own jurisdiction, a question outside its core area of expertise as it concerns municipalities. Relative to this court, it lacks any expertise which is superior in regard to that question.

[19] The final factor to be considered is the purpose of the legislation. Greater deference is to be given where a statute's purpose requires an administrative body "to select from a range of remedial choices or administrative responses, is concerned with the protection of the public, engages policy issues, or involves the balancing of multiple sets of interests or considerations": Dr. Q., supra at ¶ 31. Section 363(1) of the Act provides that the Board may order amalgamation or annexation if satisfied that the order would be in:

> . . . the best interests of the inhabitants of the area, taking into account the financial and social implications of the order applied for . . .

Here, however, the matter under appeal is not the final determination or even the initial determination of the applications for amalgamation and annexation. Rather, the issue is one pertaining to the Board's authority to even hear the Municipality's application. As a result, this factor does not demand deference to the Board's decision as to its jurisdiction.

[20] After considering the four contextual factors of the functional and pragmatic approach, it is my view that the standard of review to be applied to the question of the Board's jurisdiction to hear an amalgamation application pursuant to s. 358 of the Act is that of correctness.

Analysis

The Board's Jurisdiction

[21] In its decision at ¶ 254, the Board stated that it had no jurisdiction in respect to the creation of a regional municipality. The Town and the Municipality agree that, as the Board itself recognized, the Board lacks the jurisdiction to establish a regional municipality. On this appeal from the Board's decision the Town submits that, both in fact and in law, the application brought by the Municipality for amalgamation, if successful, will create just such a municipality. It says that if the Board's decision is upheld, there will be two methods by which a single government unit within a county can be established.

[22] The Town's arguments are based on the fact that the Act contains two provisions which refer to amalgamation, namely s. 358 which concerns amalgamations and annexations and s. 372 which deals with the creation of a regional municipality. According to the Town, the Legislature intended the two sections to serve two distinct and separate processes. Its factum urged that:

> . . . Section 372 was intended to address the difficulties which had arisen through the "forced" amalgamations in Cape Breton and Halifax and to ensure that any future regional municipalities were created on a voluntary basis with the support of all of the political units contained therein, i.e. the municipal councils (section 372(1)) as well as the electors in the county as confirmed by a plebiscite (372(2)(b)). Section 358 was intended to apply to the "usual" situation in which a municipality applies to annex a portion of a neighbouring municipality. Such annexations were not intended to lead to the creation of regional municipalities.

[23] The Municipality agrees with the Town's submission that s. 372 and s. 358 were intended to serve different purposes. Where the parties differ is in their interpretation of the authority granted the Board under s. 358. The Town submits that the application of that provision is limited to the "usual" situation of annexation. The Municipality takes the position that a "plain and ordinary" reading of it confirms that the Legislature vested the Board with the authority to hear and to decide amalgamation applications.

Statutory Interpretation

[24] E.A. Driedger set out the modern principle of statutory interpretation in the Construction of Statutes (2nd ed. 1983), at p. 87 as follows:

> Today there is only one principle or approach, namely, the words of an Act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament.

This principle has been cited and relied upon in numerous decisions, and has been acknowledged as the preferred approach. See, for example, Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27, at 41; Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559 and the cases cited at para. 26; and Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Canada (Attorney General), [2005] S.C.J. No. 26 at ¶ 95.

[25] Also to be considered is s. 9(5) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 235, as amended which directs that:

> 9 (5) Every enactment shall be deemed remedial and interpreted to insure the attainment of its objects by considering among other matters
>
> (a) the occasion and necessity for the enactment;
>
> (b) the circumstances existing at the time it was passed;
>
> c) the mischief to be remedied;
>
> (d) the object to be attained;
>
> (e) the former law, including other enactments upon the same or similar subjects;
>
> (f) the consequences of a particular interpretation; and
>
> (g) the history of legislation on the subject.

I will begin by considering the extent to which the legislative history of s. 358 and s. 372 and the debates in the Legislature may be considered.

Legislative History and Debates in the Legislature

[26] Professor Ruth Sullivan, Sullivan and Driedger on the Construction of Statutes, 4th ed. (Markham: Butterworths, 2002) states at p. 497 that the general tendency in the modern evolution of statutory interpretation is to move from a rule-based to a principle-based approach and further at p. 499 that:

> . . . it is now well accepted that legislative history, Parliamentary debates, and similar material may be quite properly considered as long as it is relevant and reliable and is not assigned undue weight. . . .

See also Municipal Enterprises Ltd. v. Nova Scotia (Attorney General), 2003 NSCA 10 at ¶ 65.

(a) Legislative History

[27] The Act is the culmination of the consolidation of earlier legislation governing municipalities and the enactment of new legislation. Previous to its passage in 1998, municipalities could apply to annex portions of adjoining municipalities or to amalgamate with those municipalities under provisions first contained in the Municipal Boundaries Act, S.N.S. 1964, c. 8, s. 20 and thereafter in the Municipal Boundaries and Representation Act, R.S.N.S. 1967, c. 195, s. 18, the Municipal Boundaries and Representation Act, S.N.S. 1982, c. 10, s. 20 and the Municipal Boundaries and Representation Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 298, s. 20. These provisions were all essentially similar to s. 358 of the Act.

[28] The Board noted at ¶ 361 that prior to the Municipality's application, neither those provisions nor s. 358 had been used for amalgamation purposes:

> While the Board occasionally receives applications for annexation, the application for amalgamation is unique in the Board's experience.

[29] No legislation provided for the establishment of regional municipalities until the enactment of the Halifax Regional Municipality Act, S.N.S. 1995, c. 3, s. 217; the Cape Breton Regional Municipality Act, S.N.S. 1994, c. 3; and the Queens Municipality Act, S.N.S. 1995, c. 9. Those statutes created regional municipalities in each of those counties. They also dissolved the towns contained within those regional municipalities.

[30] The passage of the Act in 1998 effected a major consolidation of the legislation with respect to municipal governments. The Act repealed 19 statutes and amended many others (see s. 545-583 of the Act). The legislation that was repealed included the Municipal Affairs Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 296, the Municipal Boundaries and Representation Act, supra, the Halifax Regional Municipality Act, supra, the Cape Breton Regional Municipality Act, supra, and the Queens Municipality Act, supra. Section 372 on the creation of regional municipalities first appeared in the Act.

[31] It is noteworthy that the predecessor of s. 358 as contained in the Municipal Boundaries and Representation Act, supra, did not disappear when the Act was passed by the Legislature. Rather, that provision was transposed to Part XV1 (Boundaries) of the Act as s. 358. It continued to refer to amalgamations as well as to annexations. Moreover, although somewhat modified, the provisions which set out the procedures to be followed regarding preliminary orders for amalgamations or annexations (now s. 359-362), were incorporated in the Act. Indeed, in some instances such as ss. 362(2)(3) [required studies] and s. 367 [effect of annexation or amalgamation "unless the Board otherwise orders"], the Board's powers were increased.

[32] In my view, the legislative history would suggest a reaffirmation of the Board's jurisdiction to order amalgamation pursuant to s. 358.

(b) Legislative Debates

[33] In support of its submission that the legislative intent behind s. 372 on the creation of regional municipalities was to remedy the "mischief" of forced amalgamations, the Town urged that certain excerpts from Hansard, regarding comments made during the debates in the legislature when the Act was introduced, were relevant and should be considered. To that end, it filed an appeal book volume containing those extracts.

[34] Much of the material sought to be introduced did not consist of statements or accompanying text supplied by the minister introducing or defending the Act in the Legislature, which can be helpful in establishing legislative intent. Rather, they were statements or comments made by members of the opposition who criticized the lack of consultation prior to the formation of the Cape Breton and Halifax Regional Municipalities. The minister did not say anything which would even suggest that the Act was intended as a response to those criticisms. Furthermore, it is significant that none of the remarks directly address the question of whether or not s. 372 which deals with the creation of regional municipalities, was intended to displace or to be paramount over s. 358 which concerns amalgamations and annexations.

[35] In my view, the material the Town sought to be introduced does not satisfy the threshold tests of relevance and reliability. Accordingly the volume of Hansard extracts will not be considered in the search for legislative intent.

Whether s. 358 Amalgamation Order Creates a Regional Municipality

[36] According to the Town, the Board erred in determining that the combining of municipal units "may be achieved by two different avenues under the Act . . ." It says that s. 358 is limited to annexations and argues that both in fact and in law, the application for amalgamation under that provision, if successful, will create a regional municipality. The Town added that the evidence before the Board supports the conclusion that the Municipality seeks the establishment of a single regional municipal in the County of Antigonish. At ¶ 252 of its decision the Board noted that the Warden of the Municipality suggested that "amalgamation could be the first step on the path to regional government." In addition, the Chair of the Havre Boucher Village Commission advised that if the Board should decide to order the amalgamation of the Municipality and the Town:

> . . . the Village of Havre Boucher intend to request that it be included in the amalgamation so that the resulting municipality would qualify as a Regional Municipality.

[37] For convenience, I set out again s. 358 and s. 372 of the Act:

> Amalgamation or annexation
>
> 358 Municipalities may be amalgamated or the whole or part of a municipality may be annexed to another upon application to the Board by
>
> (a) the Minister;
>
> (b) a municipality; or

> c) the greater of ten percent or one hundred of the electors in the area proposed to be amalgamated or annexed.

Establishment of regional municipality

372 (1) The Board may, if requested by all of the councils of the municipalities in a county, undertake a study of the form of municipal government in the county to determine whether a regional municipality would be in the interests of the people of the county.

(2) Where

> (a) a study of the form of municipal government in a county to determine whether a regional municipality would be in the interests of the people of the county has been undertaken, whether the study was undertaken by the Minister or otherwise prepared; and
>
> (b) a plebiscite has taken place and its results show that a majority of the electors who voted in the plebiscite are in favour of the establishment of a regional municipality for the county,

the Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister, order that a regional municipality be established for the county.

[38] Section 358 respecting amalgamations and annexations is followed by various provisions dealing with the application and hearing process. For example, s. 359 sets out the contents of an application for a preliminary order, s. 360 details the notification to be given of the hearing before the Board, s. 361 lists the persons who are to be heard, s. 362 deals with any preliminary order the Board may make, and s. 363(2) the contents of an order. All these provisions, either directly or indirectly, refer to applications or orders for amalgamations and annexations. Section 372, respecting the creation of a regional municipality, is also accompanied by provisions dealing with the application and the process. Those provisions include ones dealing with the transition to a regional municipality.

[39] Statutory interpretation uses certain rules to guide what may be examined to determine legislative intent and meaning. For example, the analysis may include the application of the “presumption against tautology” which Professor Sullivan in

Sullivan and Driedger on the Construction of Statutes, supra, described thus at p. 159:

> . . . every word and provision found in a statute is supposed to have a meaning and a function. For this reason courts should avoid, as much as possible, adopting interpretations that would render any portion of a statute meaningless or pointless or redundant.

She also notes that this presumption applies not only to individual words and phrases but also to paragraphs and sections.

[40] The Town's position that s. 358 is limited to annexations ignores the express references to amalgamations in that provision and in the procedural provisions which follow. It consequently ignores the presumption against tautology.

[41] The foundation for the Town's arguments is another principle of statutory interpretation, that known as the "presumption of coherence." It provides that the various sections of a statute should and must be read together in a coherent fashion, each portion serving a particular purpose. The Town submits that the Board erred in failing to consider this presumption.

[42] Professor Sullivan explained the governing principle underlying the presumption of coherence thus at pp. 262-263:

> It is presumed that the provisions of legislation are meant to work together, both logically and teleologically, as parts of a functioning whole. The parts are presumed to fit together logically to form a rational, internally consistent framework; and because the framework has a purpose the parts are also presumed to work together dynamically, each contributing something toward accomplishing the intended goal.
>
> The presumption of coherence is also expressed as a presumption against internal conflict. It is presumed that the body of legislation enacted by a legislature does not contain contradictions or inconsistencies, that each provision is capable of operating without coming into conflict with any other. As LaForest J. wrote in Friends of Oldman River Society v. Canada (Minister of Transport) [[1992] 1 S.C.R. 3, at p. 38]:
>
> > . . . there is a presumption that the legislature did not intend to make or empower the making of contradictory enactments. . . .

[43] The question becomes whether the existence of both sections 358 and 372 within the Act amounts to an internal conflict, repugnancy or inconsistency. In Toronto Railway Co. v. Paget (1909), 42 S.C.R. 488, at 499, Anglin, J. stated that:

> It is not enough to exclude the application of the general Act that it deals somewhat differently with the same subject-matter. It is not "inconsistent" unless the two provisions cannot stand together.

If they can "stand together and both operate without either interfering with the other," there is no irreconcilable inconsistency or conflict*: Tabernacle Permanent Building Society v. Knight*, [1892] A.C. 298, at 302 (H.L.).

[44] The Act provides for two distinct processes in respect to the joining of municipalities. One, that under s. 358, is essentially adjudicative in nature. Under it, municipalities may apply to the Board for a hearing to determine whether amalgamation would be "in the best interests of the inhabitants of the affected area" (s. 363(1)). The second, under s. 372, is heavily political in nature. Under that process, the Minister must recommend to the Governor in Council the creation of a regional municipality and it is the Governor in Council which determines whether one will be formed. The consent of the municipalities involved and the support of the electors in the area, as expressed through a plebiscite, are also required.

[45] In my opinion, there is no genuine conflict or inconsistency between a union of municipalities resulting from the "adjudicative" process under s. 358 and one resulting from the "political" process under s. 372.

[46] According to the Town, a successful s. 358 amalgamation application would result in a regional municipality; consequently, the Board would have exceeded its jurisdiction. It says that if any form of amalgamation is authorized under s. 358, it would be that of one municipality with any other municipality or municipalities, but not all the municipalities in a county. The last would result in a single municipal unit with authority over the entire county. That, the Town submits, is a regional municipality and the only way to create that entity is through s. 372 which calls for a political process entirely removed from the Board.

[47] The difficulty with this argument is that the two provisions have different objectives and concern different aspects of municipal amalgamation. By definition, s. 358 cannot be used to create a regional municipality. An order pursuant to that provision does not result in a "regional municipality" as that term is defined in the Act. It is s. 372 that must be used to create such a municipality. Quite simply, whatever similarities the outcome of a successful s. 358 application for amalgamation may have to a regional municipality, it is not a regional municipality. Moreover, it is not recognized as a regional municipality. As will be seen in the passage later in this decision dealing with equalization grants, there are practical implications which depend on whether the amalgamated entity was formed under s. 358 or s. 372.

[48] In my respectful opinion, the situation here is not one to which the internal coherence principle applies. The provisions do not conflict and they are not inconsistent with one another. What they do, is overlap. Each sets out a method whereby municipalities may seek to be combined. Professor Sullivan states at p. 264:

> When two provisions are applicable without conflict to the same facts, it is presumed that each is meant to operate fully according to its terms. So long as overlapping provisions can apply, it is presumed that they are meant to apply. The only issue for the court is whether the presumption is rebutted by evidence that one of the provisions was intended to provide an exhaustive declaration of the applicable law.

[49] There was no evidence before the Board or the court that s. 372, which deals with the creation of regional municipalities, was intended to be exhaustive. Both it and s. 358 contemplate the merger of two or more municipalities. Nothing in the wording of s. 358 suggests that amalgamations, pursuant to its terms, were to be limited as the Town urges. Furthermore, a plain reading of s. 372 does not disclose any prohibition against an amalgamation of all the municipalities in a county pursuant to s. 358. I am not persuaded that s. 372, which pertains to regional municipalities, was intended to exclude s. 358, which specifically refers to amalgamations, from having any application or a restricted application with respect to amalgamations.

[50] In my view, the Board did not err in failing to rely upon the presumption of coherence or in determining that the Act allows for the combining of municipal units by two different methods.

Dissolution of the Town

[51] Section 394 of the Act provides:

> A town may be dissolved upon application to the Board by
>
> (a) the Minister;
>
> (b) the council of the town; or
>
> c) ten percent of the electors of the town.

The Town argues that a town cannot be amalgamated with another municipality, since this would result in its dissolution contrary to s. 394, which it maintains is the sole method for the dissolution of a town.

[52] An amalgamation does result in the loss of the identities of the amalgamating entities and their continuation as a new one. In MacPump Developments Ltd. v. Sarnia (City) (1994) 20 O.R. (3d) 755, the Ontario Court of Appeal stated:

> [38] The word "amalgamation" does not admit of a single meaning. Used in the corporate law context, an amalgamation may extinguish old entities and create new entities in their place, or it may blend those pre-existing entities and continue them under the auspices of the new amalgamated entity. The effect of a particular amalgamation depends on the purpose the amalgamation is intended to promote as discerned by an examination of the agreement or statute bringing about the amalgamation: R. v. Black & Decker Manufacturing Co., [1975] 1 S.C.R. 411; 1 N.R. 299, at pp. 416-418; Witco Chemical Co. v. Oakville (Town), [1975] 1 S.C.R. 273; 1 N.R. 453, at pp. 281-283. In my view, the same assessment must be made where amalgamation occurs in the municipal law context: Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M-45; s. 7, Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. I-11, s. 27(a).
>
> [39] In pursuing the purpose underlying the statutory amalgamation of two former municipalities, it is important to focus on the overall thrust of the relevant > legislation rather than on isolated words in specific provisions. When I read the Sarnia-Lambton Act as a whole and, in particular, those provisions specifically relating to the amalgamation of Old Sarnia and Clearwater, I am satisfied that it was intended that the two former municipalities should be rolled into one and continued as a single undertaking. In the language of Dickson, J., in Black and Decker, supra, at p. 421, "the end result is to coalesce to create a homogeneous whole". Or to use the words of Kelly, J.A., in Stanward Corp. v. Denison Mines Ltd., [1966] 2 O.R. 585 (C.A.), at p. 592, the legislative intent was "to provide that what were hitherto two shall continue as one".

See also Rogers, The Law of Canadian Municipal Corporations, Vol. 1 (Toronto: Carswell, 2003) which states at p. 71:

> . . . An "amalgamation" has been defined as a fusion of two or more legal entities into a continued new union with the obligations, by-laws and assets of the former municipalities. . . .

[53] I am, however, not convinced that because the proposed amalgamation will result in the dissolution of the Town, the Board exceeded its jurisdiction by considering the Municipality's amalgamation application.

[54] After all, s. 358 begins "Municipalities may be amalgamated. . ." and, as set out earlier, the term "municipality" is defined at s. 3(aw) to "mean . . . a town". The Town's argument that s. 394 prevents amalgamations involving towns completely fails to acknowledge or to apply the statutory definition to the term "municipality" as established by the Legislature in the Act.

[55] As to the Town's submission that there is no precedent for the dissolution of a town being brought about by the amalgamation application made pursuant to s. 358 this, of course, is nothing more than the natural consequence of the fact that the Municipality's application for amalgamation is apparently the first under that provision.

[56] The Town then argues that the matter falls under the principle of construction that, within a statute, special provisions prevail over general ones. It says that consequently, s. 358 which deals with amalgamations should give way to s. 394 which deals with the dissolution of a town. Professor Sullivan set out the principle thus at p. 273:

> Implied exception (generalia specialibus non derogant). When two provisions are in conflict and one of them deals specifically with the matter in question while the other is of more general application, the conflict may be avoided by applying the specific provision to the exclusion of the more general one. The specific prevails over the general; it does not matter which was enacted first.

[57] In my view, there is no conflict such as that put forward by the Town. Sections 358 and 394 have different purposes. The purpose of the former is to permit the Board to hear applications for the amalgamation or annexation of municipalities. The purpose of the latter is to permit it to hear applications for the dissolution of a town. As discussed earlier, an amalgamation results in the loss of the identities of the amalgamating entities and their continuation as a new one. Again, a conflict arises only if one refuses to ascribe to the term "amalgamation" in s. 358 its plain and ordinary meaning and refuses or fails to apply the statutory definition given to the term "municipality."

[58] In the result, I am not satisfied that the Board exceeded its jurisdiction because a s. 358 amalgamation would result in the dissolution of the Town.

Irrelevant Factors

[59] According to the Town, the Board considered irrelevant factors in reaching its preliminary conclusion that amalgamation, rather than annexation, was in the best interests of the inhabitants of the area and thus exceeded its jurisdiction. In particular, the Town says that the Board took into account the existence of the Village of Havre Boucher, and eligibility for equalization funding under the Municipal Grants Act, supra. I will address each in turn.

(a) The Village of Havre Boucher

[60] In order to appreciate the Town's argument regarding the Village, it would be helpful to set out the effect of the incorporation of a regional municipality and an order for the amalgamation of all municipalities in a county as it pertains to the Village. In the former situation, the "municipal governments" in the area to be incorporated as a regional municipality are dissolved and their assets and liabilities are vested in the regional municipality (s. 379(1) and (2) of the Act). Since Havre Boucher Village Commission comprises a "municipal government" under s. 3(ar) of the Act, it would be automatically dissolved following the establishment of a regional municipality.

[61] However, an amalgamation does not have the same effect. In that situation, the Board would have the discretion to determine whether the Village Commission should be dissolved or affected in any another way. Section 363(3) which relates to orders for amalgamation and annexation provides that:

> 363(3) An order of the Board may
>
> (a) adjust assets and liabilities among those affected by the order as the Board considers fair;
>
> (b) annex, amalgamate, continue or dissolve boards, commissions, villages and service commissions and allocate their assets as the Board considers fair; and
>
> c) require compensating grants for a period of not more than five years from a benefiting municipality to a municipality that loses assessment as a result of an order. (Emphasis added)

[62] The Town takes the position that the Board relied heavily upon the continued existence of the Village of Havre Boucher in deciding that it had jurisdiction to consider amalgamation, when that was an irrelevant factor. It points to the following passage in its decision:

> ¶ 68 Thus, an amalgamated municipal structure clearly falls outside the scope of a regional municipality as contemplated in s. 379(1), since the Village Commission, a "municipal government" as defined in s. 3(ar), does not automatically collapse into a new amalgamated municipal unit. Upon the creation of a regional municipality, a village commission is automatically dissolved, without exception, and its assets and liabilities are assumed by the new municipal entity (s. 379). There is no discretion to do otherwise in the case of a regional municipality. Thus, in the opinion of the Board, the existence of the Havre Boucher Village Commission, and the conflicting operation of ss. 363(3)(b) and 379, prove fatal to the Town's argument. (Emphasis added)

[63] However, it is clear from its decision that, in the Board's assessment, the possibility of the Village Commission's continuing existence was nowhere near determinative. It stated that even if that were not the case, its decision would have been the same. At § 86, the last and summary paragraph of its consideration of the jurisdiction issue, the Board wrote:

> The Board has found that the result of an amalgamation under s. 358 is that, unlike under s. 372, Havre Boucher may continue to exist. Even if this were not so, however, the Board also considers that while a similar result (i.e., combining the municipal units) may be achieved by two different avenues under the Act, that does not mean that the result should only be achieved by using one of the methods, to the exclusion of the other. The Board considers that nothing, explicit or implicit, in the legislation compels such a conclusion, nor does any principle of statutory interpretation of which it is aware. . . . (Emphasis added)

[64] The Board did not rely upon the existence of the Village Commission, as urged by the Town, in making its determination.

(b) Equalization Funding

[65] The second irrelevant factor the Town claims the Board considered in rendering its decision, relates to entitlement to equalization grants under the Municipal Grants Act, supra. At ¶ 70 of its decision, the Board stated:

> In addition to the impact upon village commissions, the Board notes a second clear distinction between the proposed amalgamated unit and a regional municipality, which relates to the resulting unit's eligibility for equalization funding under the Municipal Grants Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 302. While a regional municipality clearly qualifies for funding as a Class 1 entity under s. 9(1)(a) of the Act, it appears that an amalgamated body comprising all municipalities within a county would not automatically attract similar treatment. Using the example cited above, the Municipality of the County of Victoria (which comprises the only municipality within Victoria County) is designated as a Class II municipality under the Municipal Grants Act, s. 9(1)(b). A different funding formula applies to a county municipality. While the issue of equalization could be a topic of discussion between provincial and municipal officials in the event of amalgamation . . . it appears doubtful that an amalgamated unit would be treated in like fashion to a regional municipality under the present legislative structure for equalization funding. (Emphasis added)

[66] This was not, as the Town submits, improper speculation on the part of the Board as to the level of funding which a new amalgamated entity might receive nor inappropriate reliance on the provisions of the Municipal Grants Act, supra to determine its jurisdiction to consider an application for amalgamation under s. 358 of the Act. The Town was arguing before the Board that the Municipality's amalgamation application would result in a regional municipality. Parts XVI and XVII of the Act and the provisions of the Municipal Grants Act could be argued as indications that the Legislature intended to treat "regional municipalities" as special entities in certain respects. Moreover, s. 9(5)(e) and (f) of the Interpretation Act, supra requires consideration of "the consequences of a particular interpretation." Taking these factors in combination into account, I am not persuaded by the Town's argument that the Board erred in considering the Municipal Grants Act and funding availability.

Disposition

[67] The standard of review of the Board's decision in respect to its jurisdiction to hear an application pursuant to s. 358 of the Act is that of correctness. Not having been persuaded that it erred in finding that it had such jurisdiction, I would dismiss the appeal. This being an appeal of a tribunal decision, there will be no award of costs.

Oland, J.A.

Concurred in:

Freeman, J.A.

Cromwell, J.A.

COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Citation: Bell Mobility Inc. v. Telus Communications Company, 2006 BCCA 578

Date: 20061215
Docket: CA034616

Between:

Bell Mobility Inc.

Appellant (Plaintiff)

And

Telus Communications Company

Respondent
(Defendant)

Before: The Honourable Madam Justice Ryan
The Honourable Madam Justice Newbury
The Honourable Madam Justice Levine

Oral Reasons for Judgment

R.J. Deane P.G. Foy, Q.C.	Counsel for the Appellant
D.G. Cowper, Q.C. D. Ullrich	Counsel for the Respondent
Place and Date of Hearing:	Vancouver, British Columbia 11 December 2006
Place and Date of Judgment:	Vancouver, British Columbia 15 December 2006

Introduction

[1] RYAN, J.A.: On 23 November 2006 Mr. Justice Kelleher dismissed the application of the appellant, Bell Mobility ("Bell"), for an interlocutory injunction prohibiting the respondent, Telus Communications Inc. ("Telus"), from including the phrase "Only from Telus" in connection with its advertising of "Flexible Share Plans".

[2] On 6 December 2006 I granted Bell Leave to appeal and ordered that the matter be heard on an expedited basis.

[3] The issue on this appeal is whether the Chambers judge applied the wrong test in determining whether there was a fair issue to be tried, and if he did, whether this Court should make the order that the Chambers judge refused to make.

Factual Background

[4] Bell commenced an action against Telus on 15 November of this year. In its statement of claim, Bell seeks damages for injurious falsehood, unjust enrichment, and damages flowing from the alleged breaches of s. 52 of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34 ("Competition Act") and s. 7 of the Trade-marks Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-13.

[5] Telus is currently engaged in an advertising campaign for "Flexible Share Plans". The campaign has placed advertisements in local and national newspapers. The advertisement contains a photo of a group of three monkeys with copy that reads:

> For a family of small, medium and extra large talkers

> Flexible Share Plans, only from Telus
> 2 can share their minutes from as low as $35/month.

[6] Television advertisements included depictions of monkeys moving walls together with print that runs across the screen:

> Some family members need more minutes. Others need a lot less. Introducing flexible Share Plans. Only from Telus. Telus. Telus, the the future is friendly. telus mobility.com [7] Bell took the position before the Chambers judge that these advertisements left the reader or viewer with the impression that Telus was the only wireless telephone provider to offer share plans that are flexible. Or, to put it another way, that Bell does not offer "flexible" share plans.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[8] Evidence was led in the form of affidavits that the major three providers of wireless telephone service in Canada all provide share plans with varying degrees of "flexibility". For example, Telus has individual plans that can be combined. One individual can purchase 50 minutes for $15 a month (Share 15), a second individual can purchase 100 minutes for $20 a month (Share 20), and these plans can then be combined for a total of 150 minutes for $35. There are additional plans for a greater number of minutes and additional individuals may be added to the combined Share Plans. Within the combined plans, each individual may customize his or her options, such as voicemail and caller ID.

[9] Bell has a plan known as the "Family Share Plan." The least expensive is sold for $35 for two subscribers. Each additional subscriber can be added for $15.

In the $35 plan, two subscribers would share 200 calling minutes. Features such as caller ID and text messaging may be added to the shared plan for additional fees. Therefore, if the advertisements in question left the consumer with the impression that Telus was the only wireless telephone service offering flexible share plans, its advertisements would be false or misleading.

Reasons of the Chambers Judge

[10] There is no issue that the Chambers judge correctly set out the test he was to apply in determining whether to grant the injunction. He applied the traditional two pronged test recently approved in Onkea Interactive Ltd. v. Smith 2006 BCCA 521 where Mr. Justice Smith writing for the Court said this at paras. 9 and 10:

> This Court described the test for the granting of an interlocutory injunction in British Columbia (A.G.) v. Wale (1986), 9 B.C.L.R. (2d) 333 at 345, [1987] 2 W.W.R. 331; aff'd [1991] 1 S.C.R. 62, [1991] 2 W.W.R. 568, in this way:
>
> > The traditional test for the granting of an interim injunction in British Columbia is two-pronged. First, the appellant must satisfy the court that there is a fair question to be tried as to the existence of the right which he alleges and a breach thereof, actual or reasonably apprehended. Second, he must establish that the balance of convenience favours the granting of an injunction.
>
> The Supreme Court of Canada has also approved a three-pronged test, in which the question of irreparable harm is a separate inquiry: Manitoba (Attorney General) v. Metropolitan Stores Ltd., [1987] 1 S.C.R. 110 at 127-29, 38 D.L.R. (4th) 321; RJR-MacDonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney-General), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 311 at 334, 111 D.L.R. (4th) 385. However, this Court commonly applies the test in Wale, which acknowledges, as Madam Justice Saunders said for the Court in Roxul (West) Inc. v. 445162 B.C. Ltd. (2001), 89 B.C.L.R. (3d) 21, 2001 BCCA 362, that,
>
> > [13] … The issue of irreparable harm is bound up in the issue of balance of convenience. So, too, is consideration > of the adequacy of damages as a remedy for the parties, recognizing that prudence counsels preservation of the status quo where damages might not be an adequate remedy.

[11] The Chambers judge concluded that the first prong required a low threshold. He found that it had been met.

[12] Turning to the balance of convenience, the Chambers judge concluded that the factors he should consider under this part of the test were set out in this Court's decision in CBC v. CKPG Television Ltd. (1992), 64 B.C.L.R. (2d) 96. They are:

1. whether one of the parties will suffer irreparable harm from granting or not granting the injunction;
2. the strength of the appellant's case;
3. which of the parties has acted to alter the balance of the relationship and so affected the status quo;
4. factors affecting the public interest; and
5. any other factor.

[13] It is unnecessary to review the reasons of the Chambers judge with respect to any of these factors with the exception of "the strength of the appellant's case". It is unnecessary to do so because it is common ground that the Chambers judge found that it was the weakness of the appellant's case that tipped the balance of convenience (and the question of irreparable harm) in the respondent's favour.

Grounds of Appeal

[14] Bell says that the Chambers judge applied the wrong test in determining the strength of its case. If the Chambers judge had applied the proper test, counsel argues, he would have concluded that Bell has a strong case. Furthermore, since the strength of the case was the determining point for the Chambers judge's evaluation of the rest of the factors, it follows, Bell says, that the injunction would have been granted had the Chambers judge applied the correct test.

The Proper Test

[15] The test to apply in determining whether an advertisement is false or misleading is found in the provisions of the Competition Act. The relevant provisions, sections 52(1) and (4), provide:

> 52. (1) No person shall, for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, the supply or use of a product or for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, any business interest, by any means whatever, knowingly or recklessly make a representation to the public that is false or misleading in a material respect.
>
> …
>
> (4) In a prosecution for a contravention of this section, the general impression conveyed by a representation as well as its literal meaning shall be taken into account in determining whether or not the representation is false or misleading in a material respect.
>
> [Emphasis added.]

[16] The case law tracks the legislation in setting out the test to apply. In his factum, counsel for Bell, Mr. Deane, summarized the approach required of a trial judge in deciding whether an advertisement can be said to be false or misleading. First, the trial judge must determine the general impression conveyed to consumers, based only on the representations actually made in the advertisements. This is the impression formed by consumers upon seeing the advertising in its intended form. Once assessed in light of the information presented to the consumer in the body of the advertisement, the impression is fixed as the impression of the average consumer.

[17] I agree with Mr. Deane. I would only add that s. 52(4) requires that the trial judge also examine the literal meaning of the representation in determining whether the advertisement is false or misleading.

[18] Next, Mr. Deane says the giving of a particular impression is only unlawful if the impression is false or misleading in a material respect. The second step of the test requires the court, having regard to extraneous facts if necessary, to gauge whether the impression conveyed to consumers by the representations is false or, alternatively, misleading in a material respect. Only at this stage is extraneous evidence considered, not to alter the general impression, but to gauge whether the impression is false or misleading.

[19] I agree and I do not take counsel for Telus to take issue with that iteration of the test.

Discussion

[20] Bell says that the force of its claim that Telus is in violation of s. 52 of the Competition Act depends upon the general impression conveyed by the advertisements in question. On the authorities, as just set out, this impression is determined by the average consumer's perception of the information contained within the four corners of the impugned advertisements. The thrust of Bell's argument is that the Chambers judge assessed the general impression conveyed by the advertisements not only in light of the representations made within the advertisements themselves, but in light of the additional information made available to him in the affidavits filed on the application. Since none of that information is available to consumers viewing the advertisements, it was an error for the Chambers judge to bring that information to bear in the course of assessing the general impression conveyed by the advertisements.

[21] The Chambers judge, says counsel, revealed his error in para. 22 of his draft reasons for judgment. Before turning to it, the alleged offending paragraph must be set in context:

> [21] The Flexible Share Plan is the one Telus provides, so in the most technical sense it is only available from Telus. In that sense, Bell could say equally "Family Share Plan only from Bell Mobility". But that is only part of it. The product is also different from the Bell plan. Telus allows the customer to combine the individual share plans into flexible share plans. Bell does not. Whether this is significant or superior from the consumer's point of view is a question for the consumer, but the share plans are different in that respect.
>
> [22] The real complaint of Bell Mobility though is the implication. Telus conveys the message says Bell Mobility, that Bell and Rogers offer no flexibility. I do not agree that that is the message. It conveys the message that Telus is more flexible in that it offers more options. This does not seem to me to be "false" or "misleading in a material respect" (Competition Act, s. 52). Bell Mobility has five categories in its Family Share Plan. Telus has a product with more options which it says is more accommodating to the different needs of different persons. Whether it is, is a question for the consumer.
>
> [23] I am not persuaded that the plaintiff's case is a strong one.

[22] Counsel for Telus submitted, and I understood counsel for Bell to agree, that in paragraph 21 the Chambers judge was examining the literal meaning of the advertisements. Bell says, however, that in para. 22, when the Chambers judge went on to discuss the "implication" or "general impression" of the advertisements, he conflated the test for "general impression" with the test for actual falsity. Specifically, Mr. Deane argues that the Chambers judge imported evidence as to whether the advertisement was actually correct into his analysis of what message it conveyed.

[23] Mr. Cowper, counsel for Telus, submitted that the reasons for judgment should not be read in the way Bell advances.

[24] Bearing in mind that these reasons for judgment were oral, Telus says that the finding with respect to general impression by the Chambers judge was simply his statement, "I do not agree that that is the message. It conveys the message that Telus is more flexible in that it offers more options." The next sentence, urges Mr. Cowper, addresses the question of the falsity of the advertisements, but not as part of determining the general impression, but rather as a separate consideration. The final two sentences should be read as a consideration of the second step under the legislation, that is, whether the impression left by the words is actually false or misleading.

[25] Mr. Cowper submits that the conclusion of the Chambers judge is supportable on the evidence. He submits that the conclusion that Telus' plans were "more flexible" than others is derived from examining the advertisements as a whole. In particular, Mr. Cowper directs the court to a disclaimer in the newspaper advertisement that says, "minimum combination of Share 15 and Share 20 plans is required. All Share Plan members must be on Share Plans on the same account." Counsel says; first, that it follows from this disclaimer that with the Flexible Share Plan, combinations are possible; second, that there are more combinations than just the two identified plans; and third, that the individual “Share Plans” are registered to the same account.

[26] Counsel for Telus submits that the print advertisement draws consumers’ attention to the fact that the divergent needs of individual members within a share plan can be readily accommodated. The description “for a family of small, medium and extra large talkers” also serves to clarify the statement “Flexible Share Plans, only from Telus” to mean that individual members with notably different needs can be readily accommodated only by Telus.

[27] As for the television commercial, counsel for Telus submits that the advertisement is a visual metaphor that expresses the distinguishing feature of Flexible Share Plans with a reference to its website at the end of the commercial. The website contains a full explanation of the plan.

[28] In my view, both interpretations given to paragraph 22 by Mr. Deane and Mr. Cowper have merit. However, it is not enough that this Court is uncertain as to the meaning of this paragraph. To succeed, the appellant must demonstrate error. In this case, the words reasonably bear the meaning ascribed to them by counsel for Telus. I cannot conclude that the paragraph in question demonstrates that the Chambers judge erred in law in analyzing the general impression left by the advertisements. Whether that view prevails at trial is another matter. That being so, this Court should not interfere with the discretionary order made by the Chambers judge.

[29] I would dismiss the appeal.

[30] NEWBURY, J.A.: I agree.

[31] LEVINE, J.A.: I agree.

[32] RYAN, J.A.: The appeal is dismissed.

"The Honourable Madam Justice Ryan"

UNION BANK OF CANADA (DEFENDANT) ..... } APPELLANT;

AND

FRANK C. PHILLIPS AND OTHERS—(DEFENDANTS) .....

AND

BOULTER WAUGH LIMITED (PLAINTIFF) ..... } RESPONDENT.

1919
*Feb. 18,19.
*Mar. 17.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR SASKATCHEWAN.

Statute—Construction—Agreement for sale—Assignment—Assignor giving mortgage—Caveat by assignee—Lapse of—Knowledge by mortgagee—Priorities—"The Land Titles Act," Sask. S., 1917, 2nd sess., c. 18, s. 194. R.S. Sask., 1909, c. 41, s. 162.

In April, 1912, the owner made an agreement to sell a lot of land to P. for a price payable by instalments, and in May, 1913, P. assigned to B. his interest in this agreement. This assignment was not registered, but in June, 1913, B. filed a caveat. In September, 1914, P., having paid the purchase price, was registered as owner of the land subject to the caveat. Subsequently P. executed a mortgage of the land, and when it was registered the mortgagee was made aware of B.'s caveat. In June, 1915, the registrar, under section 136 of "The Land Titles Act" of Saskatchewan, notified B., at the request of the mortgagee, that his caveat would lapse at the expiration of a certain delay, unless continued by order of the court; and, by a subsequent order, B.'s caveat was continued for 35 days from the 8th of October, 1915. As no action had been taken by B. within that time, the caveat was vacated.

Held that, under section 194 of "The Land Titles Act" of Saskatchewan and in the absence of fraud, B., having allowed his caveat to be vacated, could not invoke the knowledge by the mortgagee of the existence of the caveat in order to maintain its priority of claim.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal (11 Sask. L.R. 297; 42 D.L.R. 548; (1918) 3 W.W.R. 27, 196), reversed.

---

*PRESENT:—Sir Louis Davies C.J. and Idington, Anglin and Mignault JJ. and Cassels J. ad hoc.

1919
UNION BANK OF CANADA
v.
PHILLIPS AND BOULTER WAUGH LIMITED.

APPEAL from the judgment of the Court of Appeal for Saskatchewan (1), reversing the judgment of Brown C.J. at the trial and maintaining the plaintiff's action. The material facts of the case and the questions in issue are fully stated in the above head-note and in the judgments now reported.

S. B. Woods K.C. for the appellant.
P. E. Mackenzie K.C. for the respondent.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The question for our decision in this appeal really turns upon the proper construction to be given section 194 of "The Land Titles Act, 1917," of Saskatchewan. Apart from that statute, and especially from section 194, there is little doubt that, under the authorities, the plaintiff respondent would have a right to maintain its action and the priority of its security over that of the bank and that, but for section 194, the failure on its part to maintain or renew its caveat which it had registered to protect its interest would not, with the knowledge possessed by the bank of the respondent's interest, operate to affect such right of priority. As Chief Justice Haultain puts it,

> The outstanding and important facts are that the plaintiff had an equitable interest in the land in question prior in time to the equitable interest of the defendant bank, and that the bank had full knowledge and notice of that interest at the time it took its security from Phillips. Apart from the provisions of "The Land Titles Act, 1917" (2nd sess.), ch. 18, these facts bring this case clearly within well established principles.

The section in question, 194, reads as follows:—

> 194. No person contracting or dealing with or taking or proposing to take a transfer, mortgage, incumbrance or lease from the owner of any land for which a certificate of title has been granted shall, except in case of fraud by such person, be bound or concerned to inquire into or ascertain the circumstances in or the consideration for which the owner or any previous owner of the land is or was registered or to see to the application of the purchase money or of any part thereof nor shall he be affected by any notice direct, implied or constructive, of any trust or unregistered interest in the land, any rule of law or equity to the contrary notwithstanding.

(1) 11 Sask. L.R. 297; 42 D.L.R. 548; (1918), 3 W.W.R. 27, 196.

2. Knowledge on the part of any such person that any trust or unregistered interest is in existence shall not of itself be imputed as fraud.

The authorities relied upon in the argument at bar were to the effect that a purchaser or morgtagee for value of an equitable interest in lands with actual or constructive notice of other equitable unregistered interests prior to that which he acquired took subject to those interests.

But it seems to me that the object and purpose of this section, apart from cases of fraud, was to lay down a different rule which should govern in cases coming within its ambit, and, unless we are prepared to ignore the section altogether or fritter away its language and meaning, we must hold that, except in cases of fraud, these equitable rules established by the authorities, however just and equitable they may seem to be under ordinary circumstances, are not applicable to cases coming within section 194 of "The Land Titles Act."

I think the object and purpose of such statutes as the one here was very well stated by Edwards J. in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal in New Zealand in Fels v. Knowles (1):—

> The object of the Act was to contain within its four corners a complete system which any intelligent man could understand, and which could be carried into effect in practice without the intervention of persons skilled in the law. * * * The cardinal principle of the statute is that the register is everything and that, except in cases of actual fraud on the part of the person dealing with the registered proprietor, such person, upon registration of the title under which he takes from the registered proprietor, has an indefeasible title against all the world. Nothing can be registered the registration of which is not expressly authorized by the statute. Everything which can be registered gives,

(1) 26 N.Z. Rep. 604, at p. 620.

1919
UNION BANK OF CANADA
v.
PHILLIPS AND BOULTER WAUGH LIMITED.
The Chief Justice.

in the absence of fraud, an indefeasible title to the estate or interest, or in the cases in which registration of a right is authorized, as in the case of easements or incorporeal rights, to the right registered.

In construing section 194 of "The Saskatchewan Land Titles Act," we must always bear in mind that cases of fraud are excepted from it, but that knowledge of an unregistered interest in lands "shall not of itself be imputed as fraud." The section provides that no person dealing with lands for which a certificate of title has been granted shall > be affected by any notice direct implied or constructive of any trust or unregistered interest in the land any rule of law or equity to the contrary notwithstanding.

That seems to be sufficiently explicit and clear as making the register everything and outside notices or knowledge immaterial.

Now in this case a caveat had been filed on behalf of the plaintiff respondent against the lands in question and the registrar having given the plaintiff respondent notice to take action on the caveat the local master made an order under the statute directing the plaintiff within 35 days to bring an action to establish any claim it might have to the lands with an express provision that if such action was not brought the caveat should be vacated. No action having been brought the caveat was vacated.

The plaintiff then notified the appellant bank that it had not abandoned its claim and it brought the present action resting its claim to relief on the ground that the appellant bank, having had the knowledge of plaintiff's claim before taking its mortgage, cannot in equity acquire a title free from and prior to such claim.

This raises a clear cut issue whether the old rules of equity which section 194 was supposed to do away with still prevail and will be given effect to notwithstanding the section or whether the plain words of the section itself, which practically makes the register everything, shall prevail.

I have no hesitation myself, apart from cases of fraud, in reaching the latter conclusion and that the plaintiff, whether by mistake or negligence, having allowed its caveat to be vacated, cannot invoke the old rule of notice and knowledge to maintain its priority of claim over that of the bank.

Such rule has, in my judgment, been expressly abrogated by this section 194, in all cases coming within its ambit and the register alone made the sole test always of course excepting, as the section does, cases of fraud.

I cannot find that the plaintiff has any one to blame but itself for the position it finds itself in. The bank did not try to take any unjust advantage of it. Perfectly within its right, the bank took proceedings under the Act which resulted in the plaintiff being ordered to bring an action to enforce that claim within a definite period, otherwise its caveat would lapse and be vacated.

The respondent allowed it, by its own neglect and inaction, to be vacated and so lost the right it otherwise would have had to enforce its claim of priority as against the defendant bank which in the meantime had acquired an interest in the land. I agree with Mr. Justice Newlands that the vacating of the caveat cleared the registered title to the land of any claim the plaintiff might have against it in priority to any right that had attached to such land by such lapse.

I would allow the appeal with costs here and in the Court of Appeal and restore the judgment of the trial judge.

1919
UNION BANK OF CANADA
v.
PHILLIPS AND BOULTER WAUGH LIMITED.
Idington J.

IDINGTON J.—The question raised herein, I think, should be determined by the interpretation and construction of section 162 of "The Lands Titles Act," ch. 41 of the Revised Statutes of Saskatchewan, 1909, (Sask. s. 1917, 2nd session, c. 18, s. 194) so far as relevant to the facts in evidence.

162. No person contracting or dealing with or taking or proposing to take a transfer, mortgage, incumbrance or lease, from the owner of any land for which a certificate of title has been granted shall, except in case of fraud by such person, be bound or concerned to inquire into or ascertain the circumstances in or the consideration for which the owner or any previous owner of the land is or was registered or to see to the application of the purchase money or of any part thereof nor shall he be affected by any notice direct, implied or constructive of any trust or unregistered interest in the land any rule of law or equity to the contrary notwithstanding.

2. The knowledge that any trust or unregistered interest is in existence shall not of itself be imputed as fraud.

One Munson sold some land to one Phillips and gave him an agreement of purchase therefor on the 2nd of April, 1912, which he assigned, merely in the way of security, on the 2nd of May, 1913, to a company under whom, by virtue of several assignments, the respondent corporate company claims.

In the course of events attendant upon the said several assignments, one Scott Barlow, who had become one of the said several assignees, as trustee for respondent company, registered a caveat on the 5th of June, 1913.

In September, 1914, Phillips had paid the balance of the purchase money and obtained a conveyance from Munson who had never been notified by the assignees aforesaid, or any of them, of the fact of the said assignment by Phillips the vendor.

No one has pretended that Phillips, in doing so, had any fraudulent purpose in view or claimed that his action in doing so was fraudulent.

Thereafter, on the 23rd of March, 1915, the appellant obtained from Phillips a mortgage upon the said lands and having had, when doing so, knowledge of the said caveat filed by Scott Barlow, the appellant is held by the court below to have committed a fraud and thereby is deprived of its rights as such mortgagee.

Not a word appears in the pleading herein charging such fraud.

And a very curious circumstance appears in evidence which seems quite inconsistent with the charge of fraud made by the court below. It is this: that the appellant, shortly after getting its mortgage from Phillips, instructed solicitors to call the attention of Scott Barlow, in whose name the caveat stood, that he must proceed to enforce his claim thereunder or it would lapse in thirty days, unless continued by order of the court.

The respondent, in consequence of this, applied accordingly and obtained an order continuing the caveat for thirty-five days on terms of the caveator taking proceedings within that time to establish his rights thereunder.

This he and the respondent failed to do and in the language used in the western provinces relative to such omissions, the caveat lapsed.

The respondent took ineffectual steps later to have it re-established.

The consequence of such failures is that on the registry record the appellant stands in priority to anything the respondent can now get registered against the same land. What has that in it in the nature of fraud?

The answer is furnished by the judgment in Le Neve v. Le Neve (1), upon which had been built, as it were, an enormous volume of law, which produces judicial

(1) 1 Ambler 436.

1919
UNION BANK OF CANADA
v.
PHILLIPS AND BOULTER WAUGH LIMITED.
Idington J.

expressions that might, if later legislation discarded, warrant one in saying any such advantage with knowledge, was equivalent to fraud and liable to have that declared and the priority of registration deprived of its usual effect.

I cannot, however, see how such doctrines can be maintained in such cases as this, in view of the express language of the legislature in the clause above quoted.

It seems impossible that the proper effect can be given to that section unless we try to appreciate what the legislature was about.

Clearly it was not satisfied with the results of the law as settled by judicial expressions and decisions, and had determined upon the adoption of a system of registration as a basis of ownership of land and a means of settling the order of priority of claims into or out of any such ownership when once registered under the Act in question.

In doing so it cast upon those acquiring any such ownership or claim to any interest therein burdens, perhaps previously unknown, in the way of diligence in order to protect the rights so acquired by observing the provisions of the Act in that regard under penalty of losing ownership or priority of claim save in the case of fraud on the part of those obtaining the priority, which the Act seems clearly to contemplate as possible even with notice or knowledge unless springing from that conveyed by means of registration of a caveat. Notice or knowledge resting upon the warning given by a permissible caveat would be available to him registering it, or those claiming under him by virtue thereof as a means of maintaining priority over any later registration.

But the steps necessary to secure such benefits must be those contemplated by the Act and not something else.

The principle involved is not new. A privilege of any kind created by statute must be enforced in the way that statute provides.

It cannot be made available in any other way. The respondent seems to have recognized that by getting the renewal under the Act.

When it failed to proceed according to the law enacted for its benefit its rights ceased.

The notice or knowledge thus obtained by appellant was nothing more than all other kinds of notice or knowledge excluded by the section quoted from having any effect and, by the express language of the Act, "shall not of itself be imputed as fraud."

I am unable, therefore, to see how the language of the legislature can be properly defied and set at naught by reason of judicial conceptions of what might have been called fraud, before this express prohibition of their being given further recognition.

We have been referred to a number of New Zealand cases which, of course, do not bind us any more than the judgment appealed from. I have, however, looked at them and find in most, if not all, some element of fact which could well be interpreted as to constitute fraud, or might well be held as within such a compliance with the statute as to found a claim thereunder for the relief sought and got.

The New Zealand Act differs somewhat from that now in question and the corresponding section to that above quoted is capable of a less drastic meaning than it.

The Australian statutes, upon which cases were cited to us, are not in our library. And I may be permitted to think that the attempted construction of

1919
UNION BANK OF CANADA
v.
PHILLIPS AND BOULTER WAUGH LIMITED.
Idington J.

such like statutes as in question from a reading of a single section or extract therefrom is rather a hazardous sort of proceeding.

For this court to attempt to call that fraud on the part of the appellant which it appears to have done herein, would only tend to impair the regard attaching to any finding of fraud we might be able to find as understood by the exception in above quoted section.

Nor is this the only illustration furnished by the administration of justice wherein due diligence is recognized as entitled to acquire its reward and he wanting in the application thereof is doomed to disappointment.

So long as its application is not associated with a fraudulent purpose, he suffering has no legal right to complain.

It does not seem to me that the facts upon which the court above had to proceed in the case of Loke Yew v. Port Swettenham Rubber Co. (1), have much resemblance to those we have to deal with and the relevant law contained in the statute there in question has still less to that above quoted.

The appeal should be allowed with costs throughout and, I think, the respondent should be at liberty to redeem and judgment go for that as falling under its alternative prayer for relief.

ANGLIN J.—The facts in this case appear in the judgments delivered (2), in the Court of Appeal. They establish that the appellant bank took the mortgage for which it now claims priority over the respondent's unregistered equitable interest in, or claim upon, the lands in question with "direct" notice of such interest.

(1) [1913] A.C. 491.

(2) 11 Sask. L.R. 297; (1918) 3 W.W.R. 27, 196; 42 D.L.R. 548.

Were it not for the effect of section 194 of "The Land Titles Act" (statutes of Saskatchewan, 1917 (2nd sess.), ch. 18), I should unhesitatingly agree with the learned Chief Justice of Saskatchewan and Lamont J. that any attempt of the bank to give to its security "an effect inconsistent with or destructive of" the respondent's prior interest would, under these circumstances, be "looked upon by equity as a fraud which it (could) not countenance." Mr. Justice Lamont has, in my opinion very convincingly shewn that but for the effect of section 194 a caveat would not have been required to protect the respondent's interest against the bank and that the lapse of its caveat, therefore, did not leave it in any worse position than it would have occupied had it never lodged it.

But I find in section 194 an insuperable difficulty to giving effect to the principle of equity which would otherwise support the respondent in this position. The language of that section is so explicit that it leaves no room for doubt as to the intention of the legislature that that principle shall be abrogated in favour of a person * * * taking * * * a transfer mortgage, incumbrance or lease from the owner of any land for which a certificate of title has been granted, except in the case of fraud.

By sub-sec. 2:

Knowledge that any trust or unregistered instrument is in existence shall not of itself be imputed as fraud.

Here there was knowledge, but nothing more. Knowledge, of course, could not of itself constitute fraud. Fraud must always have consisted in the doing of something which that knowledge made it unjust or inequitable to do. The meaning of the statute must, therefore, be that the doing of that which mere knowledge of "any trust or unregistered interest" would make it inequitable to do shall nevertheless not be imputed as fraud, within the meaning of that term as used in

1919
UNION BANK OF CANADA
v.
PHILLIPS AND BOULTER WAUGH LIMITED.
Anglin J.

sub-sec. 1 of sec. 194. That which equity deems fraud, therefore, is by this enactment of a competent legislature declared not to be imputable as fraud.

A passage from my judgment in Grace v. Kuebler (1), is cited by the learned Chief Justice and by Lamont J. apparently as inconsistent with this view. All that that case decided was that the mere lodging of a caveat to protect an interest acquired subsequently to the making of an agreement for the sale of registered land does not affect the purchaser under such agreement, otherwise ignorant of them, with notice of the rights to protect which the caveat is lodged so as to render ineffectual as against the caveator payments on account of purchase money subsequently made by the purchaser to his vendor. Expressions of opinion in the judgment on any other point must, it is needless to say, be regarded as obiter. If anything I said in that case is really inconsistent with the views I have expressed above, I can only cry peccavi and plead that it was not so intended. I find in section 194 the "very explicit language" which I deem necessary to justify our regarding a statute as intended to render unenforceable such a wholesome doctrine as that of the effect of notice in equity. To give effect to a provision that a person is to be unaffected by notice, his rights and remedies must be the same as they would have been had he not had notice. However wholesome we may consider the equitable doctrine as to the effect of notice—however regrettable and even demoralizing in its tendency we may deem legislation rendering it inoperative—it is not in our power to disregard it. The legislative purpose being clear we have no right to decline to carry it out. Were we to do so consequences still more deplorable must ensue. The court would occupy a wholly indefensible position, one of usurpation of an authority, sovereign within its ambit, which it is its imperative duty to uphold.

(1) 56 Can. S.C.R. 1, at p. 14; 39 D.L.R. 39, at pp. 47-8.

MIGNAULT J.—In my opinion the decision of the question submitted is entirely governed by the provisions of "The Land Titles Act" of Saskatchewan (ch. 41 of the Revised Statutes of Saskatchewan (1909)). (Sask. S., 1917, 2nd session, c. 18).

As briefly as they can be stated, the pertinent facts are as follows:—

In April, 1912, one J. H. Munson made an agreement to sell to Frank C. Phillips lot 10, block 6, plan E.M., town of Humboldt, Saskatchewan, for $1,750 payable by instalments.

In May, 1913, Phillips, being indebted to Boulter Waugh and Company, Limited (now represented by the respondent), assigned his interest in the agreement for sale to the said company, which immediately transferred its interest to its credit manager, Mr. Scott Barlow, in trust for the company. These assignments were not registered, but on the 5th June, 1913, Mr. Barlow filed a caveat in the district land titles office to protect the interest thus assigned by Phillips.

In September, 1914, Phillips, having paid to Munson the purchase price, received a transfer and was registered as owner of the land, subject to a mechanic's lien and to the Barlow caveat.

Subsequently Phillips became indebted to the appellant and executed a mortgage of the land in its favour, which mortgage was registered on the 24th March, 1915. When the appellant acquired this mortgage from Phillips, it was aware of the Barlow caveat, which was entered on the certificate of title, and of the rights represented by this caveat.

1919
UNION BANK OF CANADA
v.
PHILLIPS AND BOULTER WAUGH LIMITED.
Mignault J.

On the 29th June, 1915, the deputy registrar, under section 130 of "The Land Titles Act," (R.S. Sask. 1909, c. 41) notified Mr. Barlow at the request of the appellant that his caveat would lapse at the end of 30 days unless continued by order of the court. An order was made on the 28th July, 1915, and registered, continuing the caveat until further order. By a subsequent order of the court, the Barlow caveat was continued for 35 days from the 8th October, 1915, and it was ordered that in default of the caveator taking proceedings within that time, the caveat should be vacated. On the 13th November, 1915, a certificate of the clerk of the court was registered stating that no action had been taken during the 35 days continuing the caveat, and that this time having expired the caveat was vacated.

Legal proceedings were subsequently taken to reinstate the Barlow caveat resulting in a judgment of the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan en banc of the 14th July, 1916, setting aside an order of the local master at Humboldt reinstating the Barlow caveat, without prejudice, the judgment stated, to the right of the respondent to make application to file a new caveat.

The question to be decided is whether the appellant is entitled to priority over the respondent in respect of their respective rights in and to the lands in question, and this question, as I have said, must be determined according to the rules enacted by "The Saskatchewan Land Titles Act."

The material provisions of this statute (R.S. Sask. 1909, c. 41) are as follows:—

125. Any person claiming to be interested in any land under any will, settlement or trust deed or under any instrument of transfer or transmission or under any unregistered instrument or under an execution where the execution creditor seeks to affect land in which the execution debtor is interested beneficially, but the title to which is registered in the name of some other person or otherwise, may lodge a caveat with the registrar to the effect that no registration of any transfer or other instrument affecting the said land shall be made and that no certificate of title therefor shall be granted until such caveat has been withdrawn or has lapsed as hereinafter provided unless such instrument or certificate of title is expressed to be subject to the claim of the caveator as stated in such caveat;

Provided that no caveat which has heretofore been or that may hereafter be lodged shall be deemed to be insufficient for the purposes of the lodgment thereof merely upon the ground that the interest claimed therein is not shewn to be derived from the registered owner of the land affected.

129. The owner or other person claiming any interest in such land may by summons call upon the caveator to attend before a judge to shew cause why the caveat should not be withdrawn; and the said judge may upon proof that such last mentioned person has been summoned and upon such evidence as the judge requires make such order in the premises as to the said judge seems fit.

130. Subject to the provisions of the preceding section such caveat shall continue unless and until it is removed as hereinafter set forth, namely: The owner or other person claiming any interest in such land may require the registrar by notice in writing which shall be in form Y in the schedule to this Act to notify the caveator at his address for service as set forth in the caveat that such caveat shall lapse at the expiration of thirty days from the mailing of such notice by the registrar unless within said thirty days, the caveator shall file with the registrar an order made by the judge providing for the continuing beyond the said thirty days of said caveat, and in the event of such order not being filed with the registrar within the said thirty days, such caveat shall lapse and shall be treated as lapsed by the registrar; the notice hereinbefore provided to be given by the registrar shall be by registered letter.

Provided, however, that whenever the registrar is satisfied that any interest in such land other than the interest therein of the caveator is protected by such caveat he may refuse to notify the caveator as required by this section, and in such case the removal of such caveat shall be subject only to the provisions of sec. 129 hereof.

131. The caveator may by notice in writing to the registrar withdraw his caveat at any time; but notwithstanding such withdrawal the court or judge may order the payment by the caveator of the costs of the caveatee incurred prior to such withdrawal.

132. A memorandum shall be made by the registrar upon the certificate of title and upon the duplicate certificate of the withdrawal, lapse or removal of any caveat or of any order made by the court or a judge in connection therewith.

2. After such withdrawal, lapse or removal it shall not be lawful for the same person or for any one on his behalf to lodge a further caveat in relation to the same matter unless by leave of the judge.

1919

UNION BANK OF CANADA v. PHILLIPS AND BOULTER WAUGH LIMITED.

Mignault J.

133. Any person lodging or continuing any caveat wrongfully, and without any reasonable cause, shall be liable to make compensation to any person who has sustained damage thereby.

2. Such compensation with costs may be recovered by proceedings at law if the caveator has withdrawn such caveat and no proceedings have been taken by the caveatee as herein provided.

3. If proceedings have been taken by the caveatee then the compensation and costs shall be determined by the court or judge acting in the same proceedings.

The rules laid down here can give rise to no difficulty. Under section 129, the owner or other person interested in a lot of land may by summons call upon the caveator to attend before a judge to shew cause why the caveat should not be withdrawn, or he may, under section 130, require the registrar to notify the caveator that such caveat shall lapse at the expiration of 30 days from the mailing of the notice by the registrar, unless, within 30 days, the caveator shall file with the registrar an order made by the judge providing for the continuing of the caveat beyond the 30 days, and if such order is not filed, the caveat shall lapse and shall be treated as lapsed by the registrar.

The notice in question was given under section 130. The caveator first obtained an order of the court continuing the caveat until further order, but a subsequent order continued the caveat for 35 days from the 8th of October, 1915, and ordered that in default of the caveator taking proceedings during this term, the caveat should be vacated. No proceedings having been taken by the caveator during the 35 days I am of the opinion that his caveat fully lapsed. The permission subsequently granted him by the Supreme Court en banc to file a new caveat—permission which was required under section 132—and the filing of the caveat could only operate from the date of the new caveat and could not affect the prior registered mortgage of the appellant.

But the respondent relies on the knowledge acquired by the appellant at the time it took its mortgage from Phillips of the rights represented by the Barlow caveat as first filed, and the respondent contends that it would be "against conscience" or equivalent to fraud to thus acquire a right in land with knowledge of the existing unregistered rights of the respondent. Many cases are cited in this connection, but I cannot but think that they are without application in view of sec. 162 of "The Saskatchewan Land Titles Act," (R.S. Sask. 1909, c. 41) which section is, in my opinion, a complete answer to the respondent's contention.

This section reads as follows:—

162. No person contracting or dealing with or taking or proposing to take a transfer, mortgage, incumbrance or lease from the owner of any land for which a certificate of title has been granted shall, except in case of fraud by such person, be bound or concerned to inquire into or ascertain the circumstances in or the consideration for which the owner or any previous owner of the land is or was registered or to see to the application of the purchase money or of any part thereof, nor shall he be affected by notice direct, implied or constructive, of any trust or unregistered interest in the land any rule of law or equity to the contrary notwithstanding.

2. The knowledge that any trust or unregistered interest is in existence shall not of itself be imputed as fraud.

In this connection, but of course not an authority, but merely as shewing that the registration laws of the different provinces are not so far apart, I might refer to art. 2085 of the Quebec Civil Code, the application of which has never given rise to any difficulty, and which reads as follows:—

2085. The notice or knowledge acquired of an unregistered right belonging to a third party and subject to registration cannot prejudice the rights of a subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration whose title is duly registered, except when such title is derived from an insolvent trader.

I, however, base entirely my opinion on section 162 of "The Land Titles Act," and I take it that the knowledge acquired by the appellant of the unregistered interest of the respondent cannot, of itself, be imputed

1919
UNION BANK OF CANADA
v.
PHILLIPS AND BOULTER WAUGH LIMITED.
Mignault J.

as fraud. The registration by the appellant of the mortgage acquired by it from Phillips was certainly not a fraudulent act, for if the Barlow caveat had been maintained by the court the appellant's mortgage would have been subject to the rights represented by this caveat. And it certainly cannot be contended that the appellant committed a fraudulent act by availing itself of the right granted by sec. 130 of "The Land Titles Act" to any person claiming an interest in a lot of land to test the validity of a caveat lodged in the land titles office. If Barlow or the respondent allowed the caveat to lapse, no fault or fraud can be imputed to the appellant, but the respondent suffers by reason of its own negligence.

The learned judges of the Court of Appeal who have found in favour of the respondent observe that if the opinion I feel constrained to adopt is to be followed, Barlow would be in a worse position by filing a caveat than if he had relied on the equitable doctrine that the knowledge of his right by the appellant prevented the latter from acquiring priority as against his interest in the land in question.

I am not at all sure in view of sec. 162 that Barlow would have been in a better position had he not filed the caveat, a point on which it is unnecessary to express any opinion. He has, however, filed a caveat to protect his rights and he, therefore, has put himself entirely under "The Land Titles Act." The respondent has, moreover, since the first caveat lapsed and it was refused reinstalment, filed a new caveat which is subsequent in date to the registration of the appellant's mortgage. I think, therefore, that the statute entirely governs the parties in this case, and it is clear to my mind that the appellant is entitled to preference.

The learned Chief Justice of Saskatchewan cites

certain maxims coming, I think, originally from the Roman Law with which, as a civilian, I am familiar, such as nemo dat qui non habet, or qui prior est tempore potior est jure But I may say with deference that these maxims are not of universal application, and when third parties are concerned they cannot be applied without some qualification. It might, moreover, be possible to offset axiom by axiom and to refer to the one so often mentioned by the old jurists, vigilantibus non dormientibus scripta est lex. I prefer, however, to rest on the clear text of the statute, and I take it as being eminently desirable, in the interest of the security of land transactions in a system where registration of titles to land is provided for, that the entries in the public register, in the absence of fraud, be taken as conclusive. Here the respondent failed to register its assignment and even to protect its caveat when it was called upon in the manner prescribed for by "The Land Titles Act" to do so. I cannot, under the circumstances of this case, come to its assistance.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the appeal should be allowed and the judgment of the learned trial judge restored with costs throughout.

CASSELS J.—I concur in the reasons and result arrived at by Mr. Justice Mignault.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitor for the appellant: F. H. Bence.
Solicitors for the respondent: McCraney, Mackenzie & Hutchinson.

CITATION: Canada (Competition Bureau) v. Chatr Wireless Inc., 2013 ONSC 5315
COURT FILE NO.: CV-10-8993-00 CL
DATE: 20130819

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:	)
	)
THE COMMISSIONER OF COMPETITION	)	J. Thomas Curry, Jaan Lilles, Paul-Erik Veel, for the Applicant
Applicant	)
	)
– and –	)
	)	Kent E. Thomson, Anita Banicevic, James D. Bunting, Sean R. Campbell, Nicholas Van Exan, Andrew Carlson, for the Respondents
CHATR WIRELESS INC. AND ROGERS COMMUNICATIONS INC.	)
Respondents	)
	)
	)	HEARD: November 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 28, 29, 2011 August 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 24, 27, 28, 29, 30, 2012 March 20, 21, 22, 25, 26, 27, 28, April 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 May 13, 14, 15 & 16, 2013

MARROCCO J.

Contents

The nature of this Application

[1] The Commissioner of Competition commenced this Application on November 19, 2010. The original Application was amended on March 1, 2011.

[2] As amended, the Application requested:

- A declaration that Rogers Communications Inc. ("Rogers") and Chatr Wireless Inc. ("Chatr") had engaged in reviewable conduct contrary to paragraphs 74.01(1)(a) and 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34;
- An order that the respondents pay an administrative monetary penalty of $10 million;
- An order that the respondents stop making representations about dropped call performance for a period of 10 years;
- An order that the respondents stop making false or misleading representations to the public for the purpose of promoting the use of wireless telecommunication services for a period of 10 years;
- An order requiring the respondents to publish notices describing their reviewable conduct, including the geographic area to which the conduct related and a description of the manner in which the false and misleading representations were disseminated;
- A restitution order for the benefit of each Chatr customer for the period in which the offending representations were published;
- An order pursuant to s. 137(2) of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990 c. C. 43 preserving the confidentiality of confidential information referred to during the hearing of the Application; and
- An order that the respondents pay the costs of the applicant's investigation as well as this Application.

[3] During closing argument all parties agreed that if this Application was successful a further hearing should be held concerning penalty.

[4] There were two responding parties named in the Application: Chatr Wireless Inc. and Rogers Communications Inc. It is not disputed that all shares of Chatr Wireless Inc. are owned or controlled by Rogers Communications Inc.

The grounds for this Application

[5] The Application set out the grounds upon which it was based. The grounds are important because the applicant did not serve affidavits with its Notice and Application. Therefore on November 19, 2010, when this Application was served and filed, the grounds for it were those set out in it.

[6] The grounds identified two offending representations:

- "Fewer dropped calls than new wireless carriers"; and
- After November 5, 2010, representations that Chatr subscribers would have "no worries about dropped calls."

[7] For convenience, I will refer to the two offending representations throughout as the fewer dropped calls claim.

[8] The applicant claimed that these two representations, which appeared in both French and English, created a false or misleading general impression regarding the service offered by Chatr as compared to the "new wireless carriers."

[9] When the Application was amended March 1, 2011, the applicant also claimed that the respondents made these two representations in the absence of adequate and proper testing.

[10] The grounds for the Application also set out that these two offending representations were part of an extensive social media and public relations campaign coincident with the launch of Chatr on July 28, 2010.

[11] The grounds for the Application assert that commencing August 9, 2010, there was a broad and nationwide public relations campaign composed of television, radio, digital, out of home and print advertising.

[12] The grounds set out that the two representations were sometimes accompanied by a disclaimer or explainer that stated: "Based on: cell site density; quality of indoor and underground reception; and seamless call transition when moving out of zone."

[13] The Application claims that the disclaimer was inaccurate and ineffective. It claims that the detail in the disclaimer was meaningless to the ordinary average consumer.

[14] The grounds set out that the "no worries about dropped calls" advertisements made after November 5, 2010, included images similar to the images that accompanied the "fewer dropped calls than new wireless carriers" ads, causing the offending conduct to continue.

The Application claims the contentious representations are false and misleading

[15] The Application asserts that the two representations were false because, in certain markets, Chatr had higher dropped call rates than at least one wireless carrier. Specifically, the Application asserts that the advertisements were false because:

- In Ottawa, Chatr's dropped call rate was higher than those of one new carrier on 84 of 92 days.
- In Toronto, Chatr's dropped call rate was higher than one new carrier on 53 of 92 days.

[16] The Application also maintains that the representations were misleading because they conveyed the general impression that there was an appreciable dropped call rate difference among carriers, whereas the truth was that the difference was not appreciable or significant between July 28, 2010, and October 27, 2010.

The Application claims the contentious claims are material

[17] The Application asserts that the claims were material because they were made for the purpose of promoting the purchase of wireless services from Chatr rather than the new carriers.

[18] The Application also asserts that network reliability, including dropped call rates, was a material aspect of wireless telecommunication services and a component of a consumer's decision to purchase a particular wireless telecommunication service.

[19] It is not disputed that dropped calls, and therefore claims concerning dropped calls, are material to consumers.

[20] It is not disputed that the fewer dropped calls claim was made to the public.

[21] It is not disputed that the fewer dropped calls claim was made to promote Chatr, which was a business interest of Rogers.

The Application claims automobile drive tests are not adequate and proper tests

[22] After March 1, 2011, the existence of adequate and proper tests for the fewer dropped calls claim was a live issue in this Application.

[23] The Application sets out that the respondents attempted to support the fewer dropped calls claim with automobile-based drive tests. The Application asserts that the drive tests do not constitute an adequate and proper test of the claim because:

- Given their purpose and limitations, drive tests cannot be used as the basis for market-wide conclusions about wireless network performance, including dropped call rates;
- Rogers' own drive test data in Vancouver, Calgary and Edmonton did not show a statistically significant difference between Chatr's dropped call rates and those of some or all of the new carriers;
- Rogers did not conduct any drive tests in Calgary or Edmonton before making the two offending representations; and
- Rogers' drive tests in the greater Toronto area prior to September 27, 2010, did not include all of the new entrants operating in the greater Toronto area.

The Issues

[24] The Application raised three issues:

- The fewer dropped calls claim was false;
- The fewer dropped calls claim was misleading; and
- The fewer dropped calls claim was not adequately and properly tested before it was made.

[25] The respondents added two issues:

- Section 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act is inconsistent with s. 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and
- The administrative monetary penalty provided for in 74.1(1)(c) of the Competition Act engages s. 11 of the Charter.

The commencement of proceedings

[26] I have set out the Application in detail because the respondents complained that they could not publicly respond to the initiation of this proceeding because supporting affidavits were not served with the Application. Specifically, the applicant failed to serve the affidavits of Andrew McAlpine, a Senior Competition Law Officer with the Competition Bureau; Ken Campbell, Chief Executive Officer of Globalive Wireless Management Corp. (Wind Mobile); and Aleks Krstajic, President and Chief Executive Officer of Public Mobile Inc.

[27] I attach no significance to the respondents' complaints. The respondents knew on November 19, 2010, from the Application, if nothing else, in reasonably specific terms, the reasons why the applicant maintained that the "fewer dropped calls than new wireless carriers" and "no worries about dropped calls" claims were false or misleading.

The Advanced Wireless Spectrum auction

[28] In 2007, as a result of studies it had undertaken, the Government of Canada concluded that Canadian consumers and businesses were paying more for wireless services than consumers in other countries.

[29] In an effort to increase competition, Industry Canada conducted an auction of bands of wireless services radiofrequency spectrum known as the Advanced Wireless Services spectrum.

[30] Radiofrequency spectrum is a finite public resource made available through the infrequent issuance of licences. Not surprisingly, these seldom-issued licences are valuable.

[31] The Government of Canada's stated goal in permitting this auction was lower prices, more choice and increased innovation for Canadian consumers of wireless services. Similar measures had been undertaken in the United States and the United Kingdom.

[32] At the time the auction was announced, the wireless sector of the Canadian telecommunications industry generated approximately $12.7 billion. At the time of the auction, Rogers, Bell Canada and TELUS dominated the wireless market with 94 per cent of the subscribers and 95 per cent of the revenues.

[33] Bell Canada and TELUS were never part of these proceedings.

[34] Industry Canada auctioned 105 MHz of Advanced Wireless Services spectrum: 40 MHz of this spectrum was reserved for persons with less than 10 per cent of Canada's wireless revenue; 65 MHz of spectrum was available to all bidders.

[35] Rogers was precluded from bidding on licences of the 40 MHz of spectrum. Rogers successfully purchased $1 billion worth of spectrum available to all bidders.

[36] The results of the auction were announced on or about July 21, 2008. New wireless carriers were created: Globalive Wireless Management Corp., carrying on business as Wind Mobile; Public Mobile Inc., carrying on business as Public Mobile; Data & Audio-Visual Enterprises Wireless Inc., carrying on business as Mobilicity; and Videotron S.E.N.C.

[37] Prior to the auction, Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and Mobilicity had not provided wireless telecommunication services in Canada. Videotron had a different history.

[38] The amounts paid for the auctioned spectrum licences were as follows:

- Videotron approximately $550 million
- Wind Mobile approximately $442 million
- Mobilicity approximately $243 million and
- Public Mobile approximately $52 million.

Videotron's History

[39] Videotron started in 1964 as a cable television network, and later broadened into other aspects of telecommunications. As far as wireless services were concerned, Videotron had been a reseller of those services in Québec. Specifically, in 2005 Videotron and Rogers began a strategic relationship. Videotron was able to offer Québec consumers Videotron branded mobile wireless services, in addition to its television, broadband Internet and cable telephone services.

[40] From 2005 and on, Videotron operated as a virtual mobile network operator, utilizing wireless voice and data services provided by Rogers. Videotron was responsible for acquiring, billing and technically supporting its customers.

[41] At the time of the events which concern us, Videotron had 1.8 million cable television subscribers, 1.2 million high-speed Internet subscribers, 1 million landline telephone subscribers and more than 80,000 wireless customers.

[42] Rogers' 2010 Leger Brandwatch Study showed that consumers in Québec had a high awareness of Videotron.

[43] I am satisfied by the evidence that, during the time frame with which we are concerned (July 28, 2010, to November 30, 2010), Videotron was an established brand in the Province of Québec.

The unlimited talk and text segment of the wireless services market

[44] Wireless cell phone service began in Canada in the mid-1980s. The evidence established that during the time period referenced in this Application, approximately 75 per cent of Canadians had a cell phone.

[45] Dr. Michael Pearce, a witness called by the respondents who was qualified as an expert to give opinion evidence concerning marketing to consumers, including consumers in the wireless industry in Canada, explained that as an industry matures, different segments of customers for that industry can emerge.

[46] As a result of the Advanced Wireless Spectrum auction in 2008, and the marketing decisions of the new wireless carriers who acquired spectrum in that auction, a zone-based unlimited use segment of the Canadian wireless market emerged. A similar segment had already emerged in the United States in the mid-1990s. This zone-based unlimited use segment differentiated itself in its approach to pricing and usage. This segment did not emerge as a result of a change in technology.

[47] Dr. Pearce explained that market segmentation in the wireless industry encourages innovation, competitive pricing, better products and service and the publication of informative advertising.

[48] Zone-based unlimited use customers were offered prepaid use monthly plans with no term contracts. These plans are different than postpaid use plans, which require the subscriber to sign a term contract for periods longer than one month.

[49] Videotron did not offer prepaid plans during the relevant period of this Application.

[50] Zone-based unlimited use customers were heavy users of wireless services. For example, Chatr customers averaged 1,364 minutes of use per month in 2010, compared to 453 minutes per month on average for customers using other Rogers brand services.

[51] I infer from the fact that zone-based unlimited use customers were heavy users of wireless services that they were also experienced users of those services.

Rogers' strategy for competing with the new carriers

[52] Based in part on the public statements of the new licensees, Rogers anticipated that the new licensees would try to appeal to the unlimited talking and texting segment of the wireless services market. Rogers took note of the US experience, which illustrated a significant demand for unlimited talking and texting services.

[53] Rogers concluded that the incumbent American carriers had waited too long to compete for this segment after it emerged, and resolved not to make the same mistake.

[54] In late 2008 or early 2009, Rogers began seriously considering the launch of a new brand. Mr. Garrick Tiplady, Senior Vice President of Chatr in the July 28, 2010, to November 30, 2010, time period testified that a small group was formed within Rogers to work on this project. The project was known internally as Project Columbia.

[55] The group produced a strategy brief entitled "Columbia the Brand Strategy Brief" dated October 22, 2009.

[56] This strategy brief identified the following problems for consumers:

- Wireless service plans were hard to understand;
- Devices may not work; and
- Discounts may change.

[57] The brief recorded that for customers, price was the dominant factor while network quality was next in importance.

[58] Significantly, the brief identified the challenges facing the new wireless carriers as follows:

- The spectrum that they had purchased had poor propagation qualities. It was harder for that spectrum to achieve in-building coverage and density of signal;
- The coverage offered by the new wireless providers would not be as good as Rogers';
- It would cost the new providers more to achieve parity with Rogers; and
- Although the new wireless service providers must be allowed to roam on the Rogers network, their customers who leave their coverage area while engaged in a call will experience a dropped call, and will have to redial and roam on the Rogers network in order to continue the call (the "hard handoff").

[59] The strategy brief stated that a new Rogers brand would compete head on with the new carriers using a zone-based unlimited talk and text offer. The new brand would offer a low monthly price, unlimited voice and short message service and a pay-in-advance approach.

[60] The brief identified Rogers' objectives as follows:

- Disrupt the new entrants' plan for easy market share steal;
- Take up shelf space, making distribution difficult for the new wireless carriers; and
- Insulate Rogers' existing brands from this competition.

[61] The brief identified the primary target subscribers as follows:

- Heavy users wanting cost-certainty in their monthly cell phone spend;
- Persons for whom their cell phone was an indispensable connection device;
- Users wanting to spend much less on a monthly basis than they are presently spending; and
- Existing wireless users who no longer need a landline.

[62] According to the strategy brief, Rogers' new brand would be different because it would provide low-priced unlimited usage that worked in more places than the new service providers. It was a service that did not drop calls and reliably connected you. The Rogers brand would not disconnect a user when the user moved out of zone (no "hard handoff"). It was worry-free wireless through certainty. It would provide brand-name and reliable devices at good prices, and it would be easy to manage because users could set up automatic payments with no surprises. Finally, there would be no term contract. If a user was not happy he or she could cancel.

[63] The brief noted that this strategy would likely catch the new wireless providers by surprise.

[64] The brief declared that the new brand would position itself as "unlimited wireless that works."

[65] Rogers retained both an advertising agency and a public relations firm to assist with the new brand. The advertising agency produced a November 6, 2009, document entitled "Brand Positioning Recommendations."

[66] The advertising agency suggested that Rogers name the new brand Chatr. The agency also suggested that coverage and reception were key advantages that Rogers had over the new wireless carriers, and that to exploit this advantage the communication strategy in part had to create doubt that the new carriers' service would work. It pointed out that the phrase which defined its approach, namely "unlimited wireless that actually works," suggested that others did not work. The agency suggested that Chatr should position itself on the side of heavy users who wanted cost certainty and suggested that Chatr differentiate itself on the basis that "it actually works."

[67] The agency described the target customers as "mainstreamers". They were persons who needed stability and valued authenticity. It speculated that the competition would be pursuing individualists. Ultimately, the brand positioning was defined as: "for mainstreamers who are heavy mobile phone users, Chatr is the unlimited wireless service that actually works."

[68] The advertising agency speculated that demographically, the market would consist of urbanite adults between the ages of 18 and 54 earning less than $60,000 per year.

[69] Significantly for our purposes, the advertising agency asked the question: "how do we support our claims?"

[70] The advertising agency made more than one presentation in this regard but the essence of its approach remained unchanged.

[71] A public relations firm was retained to disseminate the marketing message. A briefing provided to the public relations firm on February 4, 2010, outlined Rogers' strategy. This briefing added that the new Rogers brand would try to take customers from the new entrants and not from incumbent wireless providers. It would focus most heavily on Wind Mobile, while also considering Public Mobile and Mobilicity.

[72] Rogers decided that customers of the new brand (Chatr) would use the Rogers Network rather than a separate Chatr network. Chatr customers would use both the 850 MHz radio spectrum band and the 1900 MHz spectrum band to provide service. At all times, Chatr customers travelling within Canada would be on the Rogers Network whether or not the customers were within a Chatr zone.

[73] The briefing refers to Videotron on page 12, and records its prospective launch date along with the launch dates of Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and Mobilicity.

[74] I am satisfied that Rogers viewed Videotron as a new carrier. This is quite a separate question from how Videotron was viewed by consumers of wireless services in Québec.

Wind Mobile and Public Mobile enter the market

[75] While Rogers was preparing to compete with the new carriers, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile entered the market, albeit with considerable difficulty.

[76] Wind Mobile launched its services in Toronto and Calgary in December 2009. It launched in Edmonton and Ottawa on February 25 and March 26, 2010, respectively.

[77] Public Mobile launched in Toronto on May 26, 2010, and in Montréal on June 25, 2010.

[78] The evidence offered by the respondents established that Wind Mobile and Public Mobile were criticized in various publications and in the social media after their launch. I will offer four examples from the evidence.

[79] On January 22, 2010, TD Newcrest, a division of TD Securities Inc., published an article entitled: "Wind or just a light breeze?" The authors concluded as follows:

> So our overwhelming conclusion from a month of usage is that [Wind Mobile's] quality and coverage is significantly inferior to that offered by Rogers Wireless…One could argue that [Wind Mobile] will continue to add cell sites and improve its coverage over time, but this is something that customers will have to find out the hard way by enduring dropped calls and dead zones for an unknown period of time.

[80] On March 9, 2010, the Edmonton Journal reported that the Chairman of Wind Mobile acknowledged that Wind was experiencing weaknesses in the Toronto and Calgary networks, and that it was adding cell sites and towers to strengthen coverage.

[81] On July 6, 2010, the Globe and Mail published an article about Public Mobile that stated in part: "Public Mobile has admitted that several key areas in Montréal are without service and the company is refunding phone purchases and offering free service until the problems are resolved." An article to the same effect was published on September 16, 2010, in the Montréal Gazette.

[82] Mr. Brian O'Shaughnessy, the Chief Technology Officer for Public Mobile, testified in these proceedings and confirmed that Public Mobile customers were receiving poor service as late as December 2010, although Mr. O'Shaughnessy indicated that this was true of all networks.

[83] Mobilicity launched in Toronto on May 15, 2010. The respondents did not lead evidence concerning Mobilicity because, apart from complaining to the Competition Bureau, Mobilicity did not assist the Commissioner in these proceedings. Mobilicity declined to provide data derived from the operation of its network to the Commissioner.

[84] The evidence established that the respondents conducted drive tests in Toronto during the relevant period which, among other things, compared the performance of the Rogers and Mobilicity networks. The drive test results demonstrated that the Rogers network had fewer dropped calls than Mobilicity's network. I will elaborate further on the drive testing evidence elsewhere in these reasons.

[85] The inference I draw is that, if Mobilicity had produced the data requested by the applicant, it would have demonstrated that the respondents' network had fewer dropped calls than Mobilicity's network from July 28, 2010, to November 30, 2010. I will not seriously further consider Mobilicity in these reasons.

[86] I am satisfied that the well-publicized difficulties experienced by Wind Mobile and Public Mobile confirmed the respondents' view that their network, during the relevant period, was more reliable and would drop fewer calls than the Wind Mobile or Public Mobile networks.

The hard handoff

[87] As indicated, Rogers planned to compete with the new licensees by taking advantage of the "hard handoff."

[88] At the time of the spectrum auction in July 2008, Industry Canada required Rogers to permit the new licensees to roam on its network. This meant, for example, that Rogers was required to make its network available to a Wind Mobile subscriber who was outside a Wind coverage zone. Specifically, Wind Mobile paid Rogers a negotiated fee in accordance with the Industry Canada Policy Framework; Wind subscribers were permitted to use the Rogers network when outside a Wind Zone, and those subscribers paid Wind Mobile "roaming fees."

[89] A Wind Mobile subscriber who had a call underway within the Wind Zone would experience a dropped call if the subscriber left that zone. In order to complete the call, the Wind subscriber would have to reinitiate the call using the Rogers network.

[90] Mobilicity and Videotron subscribers were in a similar position.

[91] Public Mobile had no roaming agreement at all with Rogers. As a result, Public Mobile subscribers could not use their handsets outside of Public Mobile coverage zones in Toronto and Montréal.

[92] For a Chatr subscriber who had a call underway and who left a Chatr coverage zone, the call continued. It did not drop. The Chatr subscriber was, however, charged a roaming fee by Rogers. This was known as a "seamless handoff."

[93] The "hard handoff" created dropped calls for Wind Mobile, Mobilicity and Videotron subscribers, but not for Chatr customers.

[94] Precisely how the hard handoff affects the calculation of dropped calls is not obvious except to say it would increase dropped calls for Wind Mobile, Mobilicity and Videotron. The evidence established that Wind Mobile, Mobilicity and Videotron subscribers made 2.3 million calls roaming on the Rogers 2G network between August and November 2010. Because the location of the calls is not known, one cannot conclude that all of these calls occurred because customers left the Wind Mobile, Mobilicity or Videotron coverage areas, and therefore experienced a dropped call that they had to reinitiate. However, in some cases that is precisely what happened.

[95] It is also clear that Wind Mobile and Mobilicity complained to the Canadian Radio-television Telecommunications Commission ("CRTC") about the problems created by the dropped calls caused by the hard handoff, demonstrating that these dropped calls had their attention and were important to them.

Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and Mobilicity respond to the Chatr launch

[96] The respondents launched Chatr in Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto and Ottawa on July 28, 2010. The respondents launched Chatr in Montréal on September 16, 2010.

[97] Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and Mobilicity responded to the launch of Chatr by making three complaints to regulatory bodies.

[98] Videotron made no complaints to any regulator.

The abuse of dominance complaint

[99] I elaborate on this complaint because it is contemporaneous with, and provides context for, the Wind Mobile and Public Mobile complaint about false or misleading advertising with which we are concerned.

[100] Shortly after the July 28, 2010, launch of Chatr, Mobilicity made an "abuse of dominance" complaint with the Fair Business Practices Branch of the Competition Bureau. Rogers began responding to this complaint in August 2010.

[101] Mobilicity's complaint was that Rogers was exploiting its market power in the wireless services market to exclude or limit competition in that marketplace. Specifically, the complaint was that Rogers was using Chatr on a temporary basis to substantially lessen or prevent competition from Mobilicity.

[102] Public Mobile, in a September 2, 2010, letter to the Competition Bureau, also complained that Chatr's actions in the marketplace were an abuse of Rogers' dominant market position. Specifically, in an email dated September 24, 2010, Public Mobile complained that it had experienced difficulty in obtaining retail space at major malls because the space had been taken by Rogers and other incumbent carriers. Public

Mobile also complained that it had received "unofficial feedback" from unnamed major electronics retailers that Rogers and the other incumbent carriers had taken steps to prevent its products from being sold in those points of distribution.

The false advertising complaint

[103] On August 24, 2010, counsel for Wind Mobile complained to the Competition Bureau about the fewer dropped calls claim which led to this proceeding.

The hard handoff/undue preference complaint to the CRTC

[104] In October 2010, Wind Mobile and Mobilicity complained to the CRTC about Rogers' failure to permit "seamless handoffs." They argued that dropped calls caused by the lack of seamless handoffs conferred an "undue preference" on Rogers under s. 27(2) of the Telecommunications Act, S.C. 1993, c. 38.

[105] Wind Mobile told the CRTC that Chatr's fewer dropped calls claim created the false impression that the networks of the new wireless carriers were less reliable.

[106] Wind Mobile in part asked the CRTC to make an order directing Rogers to provide the same seamless call transition to Wind Mobile subscribers moving out of zone that it provided to Chatr customers. Wind claimed that the current situation was causing ongoing harm to competition in the marketplace and to itself. Wind acknowledged that Industry Canada had declined to make seamless handoffs a requirement when Rogers purchased additional spectrum during the July 2008 auction.

[107] Wind Mobile pointed out that when it began building its network, the only feasible out-of-territory roaming agreement was one with Rogers. Rogers was the only incumbent wireless service provider on whose network Wind subscribers could roam.

[108] Wind Mobile then made submissions concerning whether Rogers had engaged in conduct that was preferential. Wind Mobile complained that Chatr advertised using a tag line of: "fewer dropped calls than new wireless carriers," and in that advertisement relied upon "seamless call transition when moving out of zone." Wind objected to the fact that Rogers, through Chatr, relied upon "fewer dropped calls" as a differentiator while Rogers at the same time dropped its competitors' calls.

[109] Wind Mobile specified the injuries caused by Rogers' conduct as follows:

- Prospective Wind subscribers were offered identical commercial arrangements by Chatr except that Chatr subscribers were offered seamless handoffs while Rogers prevented Wind from making the same offer. As a result, Chatr subscribers were offered the opportunity to avoid the threat of dropped calls;

- Wind subscribers experienced degrading call quality followed by a dropped call as they moved out of a Wind Zone, but were not told why it had occurred. The dropped call was described as an annoyance on social calls, an acute disadvantage on business calls and possibly a matter of life or death on 911 calls; and

- Wind complained that Rogers' conduct put Wind at an undue and unreasonable disadvantage because it undermined potential Wind subscribers' confidence in Wind's ability to provide access to reliable communications.

[110] Pursuant to the CRTC's procedure, Rogers provided an Answer, and Wind Mobile was permitted a Reply.

[111] In its Answer, Rogers referenced that in submissions to the Competition Bureau in this Application, Wind had stated that calls dropped due to hard handoffs were "an extremely low statistical event."

[112] In its Reply, Wind Mobile made the following statement:

> Put simply, every dropped call matters. Prospective subscribers selecting a mobile provider and to whom Rogers Chatr now offers commercial arrangements that are virtually identical to those offered by Wind neither know nor need to know how often they will be affected by the threat of dropped calls. Instead prospective subscribers are offered an opportunity to avoid the problem altogether.

[113] Wind also stated that Rogers' Answer ignored "the reputational effects and basic consumer consequences of each dropped call".

[114] On March 31, 2011, Wind Mobile answered additional questions posed by the CRTC. In that submission, Wind Mobile asserted that by prominently advertising "fewer dropped calls than new wireless carriers," based in part on its seamless network, Rogers created the impression that the new networks were generally less reliable.

[115] On June 3, 2011, the CRTC declined the complaint concerning a preference on the basis that Wind Mobile had not negotiated seamless call transitioning with Rogers. In addition, the CRTC found that there was insufficient evidence to permit a decision mandating seamless roaming.

[116] It is helpful to consider the statements in these complaints. Regardless of their truth, they provide evidence that Wind Mobile and Public Mobile thought dropped calls, including those caused by hard handoffs, were a significant problem. They thought that dropped calls, including those caused by hard handoffs, negatively reflected on the reliability of their networks. Their statements prove to me that the leaders of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile thought that the public was concerned with the risk of dropped calls rather than their comparative frequency.

The nature of and context for the contentious advertisements

[117] A portion of this Application deals with the assertion that the fewer dropped calls claim is both false and misleading. As a result, the nature of the advertisements containing the claim, as well as the context in which the advertisements were relayed, is relevant.

The claims and expenditures of Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and Videotron

[118] Dr. Michael Pearce, called by the respondents as an expert to give opinion evidence concerning marketing to consumers, including consumers in the wireless industry in Canada, collected the advertisements of Chatr, Videotron, Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and Mobilicity during the period with which we are concerned. Copies of those advertisements were received into evidence. I am satisfied that Dr. Pearce collected a representative sample of those ads.

[119] Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and Mobilicity engaged in aggressive price competition with each other and with Chatr. Their ads provided little information concerning roaming costs or dropped calls resulting from a customer leaving their coverage zone.

[120] The evidence disclosed that in 2010, Wind Mobile spent $36.9 million on advertising while offering services in 5 cities. Mobilicity spent $6.1 million while offering services in 4 cities. Public Mobile spent $6.8 million while offering services in 2 cities. The evidence disclosed that in 2010, Chatr spent $7.1 million on advertising; Chatr was offering services in 6 cities.

[121] Videotron took a different approach. Videotron concentrated on bundling its wireless services with existing Internet, telephone and cable services. Mr. Aleks Krstajic, the President and Chief Executive Officer of Public Mobile during the relevant time period, testified that Videotron was trying to attract a different demographic than Public Mobile. He testified that Videotron was competing for a higher end customer than his company. His evidence in this regard was not contentious and I accept it.

[122] The evidence disclosed that in 2010, Videotron spent $5.3 million on advertising in the Province of Québec; Videotron offered wireless services, according to Tab 14 of Exhibit 37A, in three Québec cities.

Characterizing the consumer

[123] The applicant contends that the general impression conveyed by the advertisements in question is to be assessed from the perspective of a credulous and inexperienced consumer. The applicant describes this perspective as the average consumer who is "credulous and inexperienced and takes no more than the ordinary care to observe that which is staring him or her in the face upon first entering into contact with an entire advertisement." The applicant cites Richard v. Time Inc., 2012 SCC 8, [2012] 1 S.C.R. 265, at paras. 65-68, 71, as authority for its position.

[124] The Richard v. Time Inc. decision involved a representation by means of a direct mail campaign to the public at large, and not to a targeted group of consumers. Mr. Richard was convinced that he had been awarded a cash prize of $833,000, and that all he had to do was return a reply coupon to claim his prize. Time Inc. refused to pay. Mr. Richard commenced proceedings in the Québec Superior Court, alleging prohibited business practices contrary to Québec's Consumer Protection Act, R.S.Q. c. P-40.1. It is in this context that the Supreme Court of Canada determined that the average consumer contemplated by Québec's Consumer Protection Act was credulous and inexperienced.

[125] The respondents contend that in determining the general impression conveyed by the contentious advertisements, the court should consider the advertisements from the perspective of the average consumer to whom the statements were targeted.

[126] There is a difference between the purpose of Québec's Consumer Protection Act and the purpose of the Competition Act. The Québec legislation is intended to protect vulnerable persons from the dangers of certain advertising techniques: see Richard v. Time Inc., at para. 72. The Competition Act is intended to maintain and encourage competition in Canada in order to "provide consumers with competitive prices and product choices": see s. 1.1 of the Competition Act.

[127] The difference in purpose between Québec's Consumer Protection Act and the Competition Act is a relevant consideration in determining the proper consumer perspective to be applied to the contentious representations.

[128] Richard v. Time Inc. defines the person considering the advertisement in three ways: credulous, inexperienced and a consumer. I take this as a starting point for determining the proper consumer perspective for the purposes of this Application.

[129] The consumer in Richard v. Time Inc. was less of a consideration because that case involved a representation made to the public at large. In this Application, a consideration of the mass media advertising leads to the conclusion that the consumer is a person wanting unlimited talking and texting wireless services, as well as cost certainty.

[130] Accepting that the consumer is credulous in the context of this Application means that the consumer is willing to believe the fewer dropped calls claim because it is contained in public representations to that effect.

[131] The requirement that the consumer be inexperienced is more difficult to apply. The consumer by definition resides in a segment of the wireless services market that wants unlimited talking and texting wireless services. Such a consumer cannot be viewed as inexperienced with wireless talking and texting, otherwise the consumer would not reside in a segment of the wireless services market. For example, the consumer might know that he or she wants certainty in their wireless monthly bill due to a previous bad experience with unexpected cell phone fees. In addition, the consumer knows that he or she wants talking and texting wireless services and that he or she wants those services in an unlimited way. Accordingly, I am satisfied that the lack of experience relates to the technical information contained in the advertisements. For example, the advertisements claim that Chatr will drop fewer calls because of its cell site density. It is this aspect of the claim with which the consumer lacks experience.

[132] I am satisfied therefore that the consumer perspective in this case is that of a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer of wireless services.

The literal meaning of the contentious ads

[133] Section 74.03(5) of the Competition Act provides that in proceedings under s. 74.01, the literal meaning and the general impression conveyed by a representation must be taken into account in determining whether or not the person making the representation engaged in reviewable conduct.

[134] A literal read of the fewer dropped calls ads conveys the following to a prospective credulous and technically inexperienced consumer exposed to the claim:

- You will have no worries when talking on your cell phone (parle relax);
- You will have worry-free unlimited talk (appels illimités sans souci)(parle au max, parle relax);
- You will have fewer dropped calls than customers of the new wireless carriers (moins d'appels interrompus qu'avec les nouveaux opérateurs sans-fil);
- Your zone plan will be unlimited;
- You will pay a flat fee;
- You will not be asked to sign a term contract;
- You will have great coverage in and out of your zone;
- When you leave your zone, you get unlimited usage in any other Chatr zone;
- You can keep talking and texting as if you never left your zone;
- You will have great reception indoors and underground;

- You will be on a reliable network; and
- You will have a quality phone.

The visual images and sounds in the ads

[135] The visual images that accompany the wording are more general. They convey the sense that the person who is not a Chatr customer is having difficulty with his or her phone, which is obviously not working properly. This person has a cloud or fuzzy speech bubble over his or her head.

[136] The visual portion of the advertisements leaves open the possibility that the non-Chatr customer cannot place a call. The non-Chatr customer is pictured having difficulty in an open area, where there is no obvious obstruction to the wireless communication.

[137] The Chatr customer pictured in the ads is smiling, talking on his or her cell phone and unconcerned about communicating wirelessly. This person has a Chatr balloon over his or her head.

[138] The picture of the smiling unconcerned Chatr customer is usually the picture of someone talking on their cell phone in a covered space, a subway or underground where one might expect reception to be difficult.

[139] The radio ads are accompanied by the Bobby McFerrin song "Don't Worry, Be Happy."

[140] Despite the ambiguity in the visuals, I am satisfied that the visuals, in addition to the English or French words, create the general impression that the representation is in reference to dropped calls only.

[141] I am not satisfied that the "Don't Worry, Be Happy" song, when coupled with the words in the radio ads, broaden the literal reference to dropped calls to give the general impression that the Chatr subscriber will not only have no worries about dropped calls, but also no worries about accessing the Chatr network.

[142] However, I am also satisfied that the constant references to "worry free unlimited talk" and "no worries talk happy" (parle au max parle relax) (appels illimités sans souci) in the contentious ads give the general impression that the Chatr network is more reliable than the networks of the new wireless carriers.

[143] Professor Moorthy, who was called by the respondents and qualified as an expert to give opinion evidence in the areas of marketing and economics, testified that in his opinion, dropped calls were a proxy for the performance of the network. Professor Moorthy, like the other expert witnesses, was well qualified. Where I have not accepted his evidence, it is because I have disagreed with his conclusion for reasons other than his credibility or reliability.

[144] Wind Mobile, in its hard handoff/undue preference complaint submissions to the CRTC, stated that Rogers undermined confidence in Wind's ability to provide access to reliable communications.

What is the relevant time period for the contentious ads?

[145] The relevant time period is not entirely straightforward. Although Chatr launched on July 28, 2010, its national advertising campaign did not begin until August 9, 2010.

[146] On July 28, Rogers began making the fewer dropped calls representation on its website, on social media, through public relations channels and on product packaging.

[147] Chatr commenced operations on July 28, 2010, in Toronto, Ottawa, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver. This meant that Chatr phones were available for purchase at Chatr retail kiosks, as well as through third-party retailers and distributors in each of these places on that date. In addition, the Chatr Wireless Call Centre was open and the Chatr website was operational on July 28, 2010.

[148] The "fewer dropped calls" representation was made between July 28, 2010, and November 30, 2010. The "no worries about dropped calls" representation was made in November 2010. I am satisfied that these two advertising campaigns had one central theme during the period of July 28, 2010 to November 30, 2010. This theme was that the Chatr network dropped fewer calls than the networks of the new wireless carriers, and was therefore a more reliable network.

[149] I am satisfied that, with the exception of Montréal, in order for the fewer dropped calls representation not to be false or misleading, the Rogers network would have to have had fewer dropped calls than the Wind Mobile and Public Mobile networks during the period of July 28, 2010, to November 30, 2010.

[150] Chatr launched in Montréal on September 16, 2010. Accordingly I am satisfied that in order for the fewer dropped calls representation not to be false or misleading, the Rogers network would have to have had fewer dropped calls than the Public Mobile network in Montréal during the period of September 16, 2010, to November 30, 2010.

[151] For the sake of completeness, while the "no worries network" (December 2010) representation did follow a continuous national media campaign about dropped calls that began in August 2010, and while there is a similarity in visual presentation, I am satisfied that this version of the advertising was not comparative and did not literally or by general impression continue to convey the fewer dropped calls claim.

The general impression of the contentious ads

[152] As indicated elsewhere, Dr. Michael Pearce was called as an expert by the respondents. I will not review in detail Dr. Pearce's lengthy and impressive resume. I will simply point out that Dr. Pearce has a doctorate from the Harvard Business School in marketing. He has been a faculty member at the Ivey Business School for almost 40 years. He has consulted in consumer marketing in Canada, the United States, Europe, Asia and the Middle East.

[153] There were issues raised about the admissibility of Dr. Pearce's evidence; there was no attack upon his credibility. Dr. Pearce was an impressive and reliable witness. I have relied on portions of Dr. Pearce's evidence for the purposes of deciding this Application, and I will describe those portions in these reasons.

[154] Dr. Pearce testified that he was provided with copies of marketing communications for Chatr and the new wireless carriers, including Videotron, for the period with which we are concerned. Dr. Pearce included 153 pages of Chatr advertising as an Appendix to his report. I am satisfied that this appendix (Appendix 7) is representative of the marketing communications that the applicant characterizes as false or misleading.

[155] The evidence disclosed that in 2010, Chatr spent $7.1 million on advertising. During this period, Chatr was offering services in six cities: Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto, Ottawa and Montréal.

[156] Chatr's media communications programme consisted of: newspaper banner ads, newspaper display ads, third-party retailer ads, merchandising material, packaging, online ads, television ads, radio ads, outdoor ads and transit ads.

[157] During the relevant period, Chatr's ads were part of a national advertising campaign. There were no Chatr zones in Eastern Canada.

[158] Chatr used national media and national retailers to publicize itself.

[159] Dr. Pearce testified that during the relevant period, the Chatr communication programme comprised of the following three advertising campaigns: August 2010 to November 2010 ("fewer dropped calls"); November 2010 to December 2010 ("no worries about dropped calls"); and December 2010 ("no worries network").

[160] Chatr began to transition to its second campaign in the week of October 11, 2010. This transition was mostly completed by mid-November. The second campaign put forward a broader proposition, namely "no worries about dropped calls." A Chatr balloon that had been pictured in the first campaign continued to be prominently pictured in the second campaign print ads.

[161] I am satisfied that the second campaign drew less of a comparison to the new wireless carriers. This can be seen from a comparison of the explanations for the claims that appeared in the ads. For example the first ad campaign contained this explanatory note: "Seamless Canadian network-no need to switch on to other networks when zipping in and out of your Chatr Zone, which means fewer dropped calls." The second campaign version of this explanatory note provided as follows: "[T]he Chatr no worries network has got you covered in over 94% of the Canadian population, whether you're in or out of a Chatr zone."

[162] After the commencement of this Application on November 19, 2010, Chatr began moving to the "no worries network" tagline. These ads were again less comparative than the ones they were replacing. For example, as indicated, the second ad campaign contained the note: "the Chatr no worries network has got you covered in over 94% of the Canadian population, whether you're in or out of a Chatr zone." The third ad campaign version of this explanatory note provided: "Coast-to-coast footprint that covers over 94% of the Canadian population." Finally, the third campaign version of the ads focused more on price, although Chatr did not claim to offer the lowest price for its wireless services. The central messages and taglines were: "No worries. Talk happy or Worry-free unlimited talk."

[163] All three versions of these ads were part of an extensive media campaign suggesting that a Chatr customer would have "fewer dropped calls", "no worries about dropped calls (oublie les appels interrompus)" and finally a "no worries network." While the "no worries network" representation followed a continuous national media campaign about dropped calls that began in August 2010, and while there is a similarity in visual presentation, I am satisfied that that version of the advertising was not comparative and did not literally or by impression continue to convey the fewer dropped calls claim.

[164] I am satisfied that the credulous and technically inexperienced consumer would have had the general impression from all of the "fewer dropped calls" and "no worries about dropped calls" versions of the ad campaigns that there were no worries about dropped calls on the Chatr network because there were fewer dropped calls on that network.

[165] I am satisfied that a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer would not have had the general impression from the "no worries network" campaign that a comparative dropped call claim was being made.

[166] I am satisfied that the credulous and technically inexperienced consumer would also have the general impression that the Chatr network was more reliable.

Must the fewer dropped call claim be true in each city?

[167] The applicant submits that the contentious ads are false unless the evidence proves that the fewer dropped calls claim is true in each of Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto, Ottawa and Montréal.

[168] The respondents take the position that consumers would have expected the fewer dropped calls claim to be true on average across all cities where Chatr operated.

[169] There were no Chatr zones in Eastern Canada during the relevant period, and so Chatr was not nationally available.

[170] There was no statement in the ads that suggested that the claim was based on a national average or national calculation.

[171] The $35 per month Chatr plan provided unlimited outgoing calls to anywhere in the province. I take this to mean the province where the Chatr customer is located. It was only the more expensive Chatr plan that offered unlimited outgoing calls to anywhere in Canada from a Chatr zone.

[172] It was suggested during the course of closing argument that Mr. G. McPhail, the Vice President and Associate General Counsel of Rogers at the relevant time, on behalf of Rogers, admitted in a letter dated October 8, 2010, that Rogers had to demonstrate dropped call superiority both at a national level and in each urban area in which the new entrants had launched. I do not read Mr. McPhail's letter as such an admission. Rather, I interpret his reference to "each urban area in which the new entrants have launched service" as a response to what he termed a specific concern of the Competition Bureau that "in some cities where Chatr and the new wireless carriers operate, the representations… are false."

[173] As indicated elsewhere, Dr. Michael Pearce, an expert witness called by the respondents, collected as many of the Chatr advertisements as possible for the period of July 28, 2010, to December 30, 2010. Copies of these advertisements were filed as an Appendix to a Slide Brief summarizing his expert report. There was no suggestion that Dr. Pearce's collection was deficient. I am satisfied that Dr. Pearce collected a representative and complete sampling of the contentious advertising claims.

[174] A perusal of Dr. Pearce's sampling is extremely helpful on this issue.

[175] When I consider the evidence, including the evidence to which I referred, I am satisfied that the fewer dropped calls claim represents to a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer that use of a Chatr phone within any Chatr zone will result in fewer dropped calls than would be true for a Wind Mobile, Public Mobile or Mobilicity customer.

[176] Accordingly, I am satisfied that, in order for the fewer dropped calls claim to be neither false nor misleading, the Rogers network should have offered fewer dropped calls than Wind Mobile or Public Mobile in each of Montréal, Toronto, Ottawa, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver during the relevant time period.

[177] I have not mentioned Mobilicity because I have drawn an adverse inference concerning Mobilicity's dropped call rate due to its failure to produce information required by the applicant in this proceeding.

Is Videotron captured by the reference to "new wireless carriers"?

[178] There is an issue concerning whether a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer of wireless services in Québec who saw, heard or read the Chatr advertisements between September 24, 2010, and November 30, 2010, would have considered Videotron a new wireless carrier.

[179] At the relevant time Videotron was a wholly-owned subsidiary of Québecor Media Inc. It was also an integrated communications company engaged in cable television, interactive multimedia, Internet access, cable telephone and wireless telephone services.

[180] According to the evidence, Videotron started in Québec in 1964 as a cable television network with 66 subscribers. At the time of the events that concern us, Videotron had 1.8 million cable television subscribers, 1.2 million high-speed Internet subscribers, 1 million landline telephone subscribers and more than 80,000 wireless customers.

[181] The Videotron footprint of its services in Montréal was larger than the Rogers footprint. Unlike the other new wireless service networks, Videotron had a large footprint in Québec that was not limited to metropolitan areas.

[182] Videotron announced for the first time in a press release dated September 20, 2005, that it was providing wireless services in Québec. The press release stated in part that "Videotron plans to launch its mobile wireless offering in the first half of 2006". Videotron also stated in the release that it was offering "one stop shopping: one customer service number."

[183] From 2006 onward Videotron operated wireless services under its own brand name in the province of Québec. Prior to the Advanced Wireless Spectrum auction in July 2008, Videotron provided wireless services as a mobile virtual network operator, utilizing wireless voice and data services provided by Rogers. Videotron, under its own brand name, was responsible for acquiring and billing customers, as well as providing technical support.

[184] Videotron was precluded by its agreement with Rogers from associating itself with Rogers in any way.

[185] Prior to acquiring its own spectrum, Videotron could not offer unlimited talking and texting because Rogers would not offer a low enough wholesale price per minute.

[186] Aleks Krstajic, the President and Chief Executive Officer of Public Mobile at the time he gave evidence, described Videotron as a "very powerful presence in the Québec market". This evidence was not contentious and I accept it.

[187] After acquiring spectrum in July 2008, Videotron marketed its wireless services by bringing all of its services, namely its cable television, Internet and wireless services, under one umbrella. It marketed one bundled set of services exclusively in Québec using the media tagline "The Infinite Power."

[188] In January 2010, Videotron announced in a press release that it would be soon rolling out its own Advanced Wireless Services network.

[189] Videotron offered competitive bundling arrangements and postpaid zone-based unlimited talking and texting.

[190] Public Mobile, Wind Mobile, Chatr and Mobilicity offered prepaid zone-based unlimited talking and texting.

[191] Mr. Garrick Tiplady, Senior Vice President of Chatr at the relevant time, testified that the prepaid segment of the wireless services market was markedly different than the postpaid segment. His evidence in this regard was not contentious and I accept it.

[192] Reference was made to the fact that Industry Canada referred to Videotron as a "new entrant" during the July 2008 auction. I do not view this as helpful when considering whether a credulous and technically inexperienced wireless services consumer in Québec, between September and November 2010, would have considered Videotron a new wireless carrier. Apart from the fact that the perspectives of a consumer and Industry Canada would be different, the Industry Canada definition of a new entrant included entities that held less than 10 per cent of the national wireless market based on revenue. This suggests that existing carriers could be new entrants for purposes of the Industry Canada July 2008 auction.

[193] The applicant also suggested that Videotron was defined as a new wireless carrier by the respondents in two affidavits that they filed in this Application. These references are not helpful. It is true that Mr. Berner and Mr. Garrick Tiplady, both

Rogers employees, referred to Videotron as a new carrier in their affidavits. Rogers may have considered Videotron a new carrier but the issue for me is whether a credulous and technically inexperienced wireless services consumer in Québec, between September and November 2010, would have considered Videotron a new wireless carrier. Mr. Berner and Mr. Garrick Tiplady hardly match the credulous and technically inexperienced description of the consumer with whom I am concerned.

[194] The applicant pointed out that in Montréal, Chatr was competing with Public Mobile and Videotron, and that the ads in French make the statement "moins d'appels interrompus qu'avec les nouveaux opérateurs sans-fil." The reference to operators in the plural at a time when the only competing operators were Public Mobile and Videotron, according to the applicant, is some evidence that a consumer in Québec would think that the ads referred to Videotron.

[195] It is true that Chatr was created to compete directly with Mobilicity, Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and Videotron. Mr. Garrick Tiplady testified that Chatr delayed its launch in Montréal to see if Videotron was going to go to market with a prepaid wireless services plan. Mr. Garrick Tiplady testified that Rogers wanted to make sure that Chatr was as competitive as possible with Videotron if Videotron made a prepaid wireless plan available.

[196] Videotron launched its network on September 9, 2010. The respondents launched Chatr service in Montréal on September 16, 2010. The respondents maintained that their advertising campaign did not begin until September 24, 2010. However, a press release dated September 8, 2010, was introduced and appended to the affidavit of Mr. McAlpine.

[197] When Videotron launched its network on September 9, its strategic relationship with Rogers ended. Videotron was no longer a mobile virtual network operator. Videotron's customers moved to the new Videotron network.

[198] The new Videotron network offered similar plans to those it had been operating as a mobile virtual network operator. Videotron did not, however, offer a prepaid plan when it launched. This created a situation in which Chatr had a prepaid offering and Videotron did not, while Videotron had a postpaid offering and Chatr did not. It is for this reason that I accept Mr. Garrick Tiplady's evidence that Rogers and Videotron were not competitors in the prepaid market. An October 22, 2008, press release issued by Québecor Media and Videotron is consistent with Mr. Tiplady's evidence. In that press release, Québecor Media and Videotron announced a $1 billion investment "to roll out their own advanced wireless network." They announced their intention to bring an unprecedented offering of advanced wireless telecommunications to consumers and small businesses. They announced that the project would create an additional 1000 jobs at Videotron. Québecor Media and Videotron announced that the creativity of the members of the Québecor Media family would be their chief asset in facing the challenges of creating a new business model for Québecor Media and its subsidiaries.

[199] The October 22 press release contained a quote from the president and CEO of Videotron as follows: "True to its track record of bringing its customers the best in technology and entertainment, Videotron intends to launch an unprecedented offering of advanced wireless telecommunication services on the Québec market."

[200] The October 22 press release provided that 100 experts would be added to Videotron's engineering department staff of 800 engineers.

[201] The press release provided background about Québecor Media and Videotron. Québecor Media was described in part as a communications company with operations in North America, Europe and Asia. Videotron was described as a wholly-owned subsidiary engaged in cable television, interactive media development, Internet access services, cable and wireless telephone services. Videotron described itself as a leader in new technologies. Finally, the press release described Videotron as a leader in high-speed Internet access with over one million customers.

[202] This press release is quite dissimilar from the Chatr concept.

[203] There is a reference to Videotron being "new" in the October 22 press release. Specifically, Videotron claimed that, because it was a new entrant in the industry, its network would be designed using the latest technology.

[204] Public Mobile, on the other hand, was a new wireless carrier in the sense that it had no history of carrying on business in the Province of Québec. Further, by the time Videotron and Chatr launched in Québec in September 2010, Public Mobile had already launched there.

[205] I make two final observations. First, Videotron launched in Québec under its own name. It maintained a consistent brand image as demonstrated by the Videotron ads that were admitted into evidence. Second, from 2005 and onward, Videotron existed side-by-side with Rogers in the Province of Québec and had 80,000 wireless customers in its own name.

[206] After considering the evidence, including the evidence to which I have referred, I am satisfied that a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer of wireless services in Québec would view Québecor Media and Videotron as companies in Québec with a proven track record who were rolling out their own advanced wireless network. I am satisfied that such a consumer in Québec would have considered Videotron an established presence in Québec, and a known service provider. In short, I am satisfied that a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer of wireless services in Québec would not view Videotron as captured in the Chatr ads by references such as "les nouveaux opérateurs sans-fil."

Conclusions concerning the nature of and context for the contentious advertisements

[207] When I consider the evidence, including the evidence to which I have referred, I am satisfied that the fewer dropped calls and more reliable network general impressions represented to the credulous and technically inexperienced consumer of wireless services that these advantages were available to consumers in each Chatr zone (appels illimités sans souci dans ta zone chatr) (emphasis added).

[208] I am satisfied that the literal meaning of the contentious claims is consistent with this general impression.

[209] I am satisfied that the combined effect of the literal meaning of the contentious ads and their general impression is that the Chatr advantages of fewer dropped calls and network reliability represented in the ads were available to Chatr customers in each Chatr zone.

[210] Finally I am also satisfied that a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer of wireless services in Québec would not view Videotron as captured by the references in the contentious ads to new wireless carriers (les nouveaux opérateurs sans-fil).

The use of switch generated data

[211] An issue arose during the proceedings concerning the use of "switch generated" data. The term switch comes from the fact that initial hardline telephone communication systems required a mechanical switch to connect the caller to the person called.

[212] At the time with which we are concerned, the switching function was performed by multitasking computers. These computers form the highly complex brain of a wireless network. The dialogue between network components is controlled, monitored and recorded by these multitasking computers.

[213] The development and manufacture of switches can occupy the time of thousands of engineers and software developers for a number of years. These multitasking computers operate 24 hours a day, 7 days a week and 365 days a year, and must perform reliably at all times.

[214] Mr. Harri Pietila, called as a witness by the respondents, was qualified to express opinions on the design and use of wireless network switches, switch generated data and the appropriateness of using switch generated data to compare the performance of wireless networks. Mr. Pietila characterized these multitasking computers as one of the most complicated software-controlled computer systems in the world.

[215] Mr. Pietila testified that the mobile switching centers used in the LM Ericsson wireless system utilized a software control logic that had been developed by thousands of engineers over a period of more than 20 years. He testified that the system was still under development.

[216] Competing manufacturers of these multitasking computers do not share their hardware and software.

[217] Each switch collects data. This data describes and logs the operation of the switch. Switch generated data helps the network operator understand what happened on the network on a day-to-day basis. It can help the network operator understand what happened to a customer who experienced a particular issue during a call.

[218] A multitasking computer has thousands of software blocks, which are pieces of software that perform a dedicated task. The software blocks contain counters that track what happens during each call connected by the switch. The software endeavors to capture these "events" into a centralized database. A combination of events is used to calculate key performance indicators, such as the rate at which the network drops calls.

[219] Switch generated data is analyzed by performance management tools that constitute a computer system outside the switch. These computers collect raw data and produce reports. The nature of the reports produced is defined by the operator.

[220] Generally speaking, this switch generated data is used by network operators to modify and improve their network.

[221] Switch generated data is also proprietary. Competing operators do not share their switch generated data. In part, this is because doing so would disclose the improvements in their network.

[222] The applicant submits that regulators in different parts of the world rely on switch generated data. Specifically, the applicant referred to the Australian regulator and to OFCOM, the British telecommunications regulator.

[223] The applicant submitted that there are standards that define how dropped calls should be calculated on a wireless carrier's network. The 3rd Generation Partnership Project ("3GPP"), is an international standards body. It governs GSM and WCDMA technologies. It provides a high level definition for dropped call rates.

[224] Dr. Robert Ziegler, a witness called by the respondents, was qualified as an expert to give opinion evidence concerning the configuration and performance of wireless networks, and the measurement and evaluation of the performance of those networks. Dr. Ziegler testified that while the 3GPP dropped call definition was at a "very high level", there were no established standards for implementing the definition at the operational level.

[225] Rogers, Wind Mobile and Videotron complied with 3GPP at this "high level." Public Mobile had a different methodology, and was not a part of 3GPP.

[226] The applicant produced evidence that established that Ericsson publishes comparisons of different carriers using Ericsson switches. It provides each of those customers/carriers with that anonymized information so that the customers can see how they rank on a variety of metrics, including dropped call rates. The applicant submits that this means that Ericsson believes that the comparisons are meaningful, and points out that the respondents relied on one such report in a submission to the Competition Bureau.

[227] The applicant's position is that switch generated network data is helpful because it contains data about every call on the network. It is the applicant's position that network data can be used by the court to assess whether representations are false or misleading.

[228] The applicant takes the position that switch generated data, provided to the Competition Bureau by Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and the respondents, demonstrate that the fewer dropped calls claim is false with respect to Videotron and Wind Mobile in Montréal and Ottawa respectively. As indicated elsewhere, I am not satisfied Videotron would be viewed as a new wireless carrier in Québec. As a result, I will not comment further on Videotron.

[229] The applicant takes the position that the switch generated data demonstrates that the representations are misleading with respect to Wind Mobile in Toronto and Edmonton because the differences in drop call rates in those two locations are insignificant.

[230] It is the applicant's position that the dropped call statistics produced using switch generated data constitute real evidence of the dropped call rates of each network. Accordingly, it is the applicant's position that network generated data is admissible evidence capable of being used to prove and compare the dropped call rates of Chatr, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile during the relevant period.

[231] It is the applicant's position that the court can determine from the evidence whether the different networks have counted the same events.

[232] The applicant relied upon the fact that Wind Mobile compares dropped call rates on its own network, despite the fact that different portions of the network use switches manufactured by different manufacturers.

[233] The applicant called Dr. Raymond Nettleton. He was qualified as an expert witness entitled to give opinion evidence on electrical engineering and wireless telecommunications, including the collection and analysis of network key performance indicator data, drive test results and the adequacy of drive tests undertaken by the respondents.

[234] Dr. Nettleton testified that the Rogers and Wind Mobile formulae for measuring dropped calls reflect the same data. Dr. Nettleton pointed out that the switch data provided by the carriers contained details of more than 3 billion calls, including over 23 million dropped calls. It was his view that this volume overrode minor differences that might introduce errors into switch-based data comparisons between carriers.

[235] Dr. Nettleton offered the opinion that differences in counting formulae used by different equipment vendors would be inconsequential. In his opinion, switch generated data was comparable across carriers.

[236] It was also Dr. Nettleton's view that even if a small amount of network generated data was lost, for example, due to network upgrades, the omission would not impact dropped call rates.

[237] The respondent's position is that switch generated data is not a fair or reliable basis for comparing the dropped call rate performance of one network with another. This view was supported by the evidence of Mr. Berner, the Chief Technology Officer for Rogers, Dr. Ziegler, Harri Pietila and Michael Tiplady. Mr. Michael Tiplady was qualified as an expert to give opinion evidence concerning the measurement and evaluation of the performance of wireless networks. He is no relation to Garrick Tiplady, Senior Vice President of Chatr at the relevant time, who also testified in this proceeding.

[238] I found Mr. Pietila's evidence quite helpful on this question. Mr. Pietila has a Master of Science degree in electrical engineering from the Technical University of Helsinki. Mr. Pietila was a switch engineer with Ericsson until he retired in 2010. During his 25 years with Ericsson, Mr. Pietila specialized in wireless switching-related products and solutions. He was responsible for Ericsson's GSM switching systems, including all research and development activities at one point in his career.

[239] Mr. Pietila's evidence that he was heavily involved in research and development activities for Ericsson switches was not contentious. I accept not only this aspect of his evidence, but I accept his evidence entirely. Of all the expert witnesses, Mr. Pietila had the most practical work experience with multitasking computers or switches. He designed software for GSM switches. He was responsible for the deployment and support of Ericsson cellular switching technology in northern Europe. He has Canadian work experience. He was the head of research and development at Ericsson's Research and Development Centre in Montréal; this facility employed approximately 2000 researchers when he was there.

[240] Mr. Pietila explained that there are several different suppliers of switches or multitasking computers. These different suppliers compete with each other. Each supplier develops, separately and independently, their own multitasking computers as well as the software that operates them.

[241] Mr. Pietila explained that the data recorded by switches is always used as a diagnostic tool within a single network. It assists the network operator in understanding how the network is performing, and what changes should be made to improve its performance.

[242] Mr. Pietila testified that different wireless networks use different technology, software and multitasking computers. He testified that there are no standards governing the design and manufacture of switches. Switches developed by different vendors are not the same. In his experience, every wireless network is configured differently, and each operator has the ability to adjust the results in numerous ways. It was Mr. Pietila's view that there is no way to assess the impact of any one factor on the results generated by each switch. Mr. Pietila testified that comparing switch generated data derived from different switches supplied by different manufacturers is exceedingly difficult. He testified that comparing the performance of one Ericsson-supplied wireless network to another Ericsson-supplied network is exceedingly difficult using switch generated data.

[243] Mr. Pietila testified that there are at least two parties who have an interest in manipulating switch generated data: the vendor of the switch and the network operator's personnel. Mr. Pietila indicated that there are financial and reputational incentives tied to switch generated network performance results.

[244] Mr. Pietila examined the switch data that was made available in this case. He reached the conclusion that it could not be used to perform a fair or reliable comparison between the performance of the wireless networks of Rogers, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile. Mr. Pietila noted that Rogers uses Ericsson switches, while Public Mobile and Wind Mobile do not. Mr. Pietila was concerned that the underlying data for each counter used to calculate the daily drop call rates provided to the Competition Bureau was not available. The underlying data was not available because it had been destroyed by Wind Mobile and Public Mobile after these proceedings were commenced as part of their routine destruction of such data.

[245] Mr. Pietila's concern about using switch generated data to compare networks was confirmed in this case. Public Mobile excludes seven counters from its dropped call formula. One of those counters captures "customer forced terminations." Rogers does not exclude "customer forced terminations" from its dropped call formula; Rogers counts such terminations as dropped calls. On the Public Mobile network, during the relevant time period, a customer forced termination occurred when the network lost contact with a handset during a call, the channel remained open and a new call was established on the network by that same handset within 18 seconds. Customer forced terminations accounted for 35 to 38 per cent of the total monthly abnormal termination events captured on the Public Mobile network during the relevant time period.

[246] Public Mobile did not disclose these exclusions, including the very significant exclusion of customer forced terminations, to the Competition Bureau when Public Mobile provided its dropped call rates in 2010. These exclusions were not disclosed in the affidavits sworn by Public Mobile's representative in these proceedings. These terminations would have to be added to Public Mobile's dropped call rate calculation to fairly compare Rogers' and Public Mobile's dropped call rates. Adding customer forced terminations to Public Mobile's dropped call rate increases that rate significantly.

[247] It was not contentious that the software used to operate these multitasking computers is regularly upgraded. This means that two wireless networks using multitasking computers manufactured by the same source may be using different software versions to operate. For example, Wind Mobile's network in Eastern Canada, and Videotron's network in Montréal, both use Nokia switches. However, they use different versions of the operating software. The dropped call formulae are different. The more recent version of the Nokia software takes an event that was previously counted by one counter and splits that event into three different sub-events. These sub-events are counted by three different counters. Dr. Ziegler testified that he was unable to determine how this change affected a comparison of their dropped call rate calculations.

[248] Dr. Ziegler testified that had he been asked to verify the comparability of switch generated data in making key performance indicator comparisons, he would have declined because it was at odds with his professional experience. I accept Dr. Ziegler's evidence in this regard. Dr. Ziegler testified that this was the only time he had testified as an expert. Dr. Ziegler testified that Applied Communication Sciences, his employer, rarely provides opinion evidence in proceedings by deliberate choice.

[249] The European Telecommunications Standards Institute published a paper in April 2005 that dealt in part with two approaches to quality of service issues in the area of mobile communications. The two approaches were drive tests and measurements based on switch generated data.

[250] The paper set out the advantages of switch generated data as follows:

- It includes the effects of all calls and therefore provides better comparability of congestion and network failures;

- It takes into account changes in terminals and the actual performance achieved by real terminals used by real users; and

- Quality indicators are produced from the same database for the whole network as well as for different regions and periods.

[251] The paper set out disadvantages of switch generated data as follows:

- Call attempts made out of coverage are not taken into account because the network does not get that information; and

- Measurements based on network counters depend on software algorithms in the switches and base station controllers that implement the counters. The algorithms of different manufacturers may differ, and there may be differences in the algorithms in different versions of the same software.

[252] It is the latter disadvantage that is concerning. There is no evidence that persuades me that the software algorithms in the Rogers, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile switches are the same, or that explains the differences if there are any.

[253] I have not referred to Videotron in this portion of the reasons because, as indicated elsewhere, I am not satisfied that a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer of wireless services in Québec would have viewed Videotron as a new wireless carrier.

[254] I also considered whether Rogers' switch generated data could be used to confirm or deny Rogers' drive test results for the Rogers network. Drive testing is discussed elsewhere in these reasons. Suffice it to say here that drive testing is a standardized and highly utilized method of comparing the performance of different wireless networks. Drive testing was undertaken at times between July 28, 2010, and November 30, 2010, and the results were introduced into evidence.

[255] Dr. Dippon was a witness called by the applicant. Dr. Dippon was qualified to give expert opinion evidence on the wireless telecommunications industry. He provided a statistical analysis of drive test results in Table 9 of his report. The analysis compared Rogers' drive test data of dropped call rates for Chatr, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile. It also addressed network dropped call rates produced by network generated data from the Rogers, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile networks.

[256] Dr. Dippon's Table 9 suggests that Rogers' drive test generated dropped call rates were lower than Rogers' switch generated dropped call rates in Calgary, Edmonton, Montréal, Ottawa and portions of Vancouver. Table 9 suggests that Rogers' drive test generated dropped call rates for portions of Vancouver were higher than Rogers' switch generated dropped call rates for those same areas of Vancouver.

[257] I am unable to conclude that there is any consistent correlation between Rogers' drive test generated dropped call rates and Rogers' switch generated dropped call rates.

[258] I disagree with Dr. Dippon's conclusion that the deviations between drive test generated dropped call rates and switch data generated dropped call rates mean that the drive test data is unreliable. I prefer the conclusion that the deviations, which occur in both directions, make it impossible to safely use Rogers' switch generated dropped call results to confirm or deny Rogers' drive test generated drop call results.

Conclusions concerning the switch generated data

[259] I agree that switch generated data is admissible in this proceeding. However, I am satisfied, based on the evidence, that it is dangerous to place significant weight on a comparison of the Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and Chatr switch generated dropped call rates when determining whether the Chatr fewer dropped calls claim is false or misleading.

[260] The Commissioner bears the burden of proving that Rogers' fewer dropped calls claim is false.

[261] The applicant's assertion that the fewer dropped calls claim is false is based upon switch generated data.

[262] When I consider all of the evidence in this matter, as well as the fact that I consider switch generated data of little help for the purposes of comparing the dropped call performance of different wireless networks, I come to the conclusion that I am not satisfied that the applicant has proven on a balance of probabilities that the respondents' fewer dropped calls claim is false in Ottawa with respect to Wind Mobile.

[263] Similarly I am not prepared to conclude on the basis of switch generated data that the fewer dropped calls claim was misleading in Calgary, Edmonton and Toronto with respect to Wind Mobile.

Must the differences in dropped call rates be discernible?

[264] I do not accept the applicant's view that differences in drop call rates must be discernible.

[265] I indicated elsewhere that I am satisfied the ads gave the general impression that there were no worries about dropped calls on the Chatr network. They suggested there were fewer dropped calls on that network, and that the Chatr network was more reliable.

[266] I recognize that the Advertising Standards Canada Guidelines provide that comparative performance claims should not be made when the difference is barely discernible to consumers. Similarly, the Canadian Marketing Association's Code of Ethics and Standards of Practice provides that marketing communications should not stress insignificant differences designed to lead the consumer to draw a false conclusion.

[267] At the same time, it is true that there are many claims about products that are not discernible, and yet still important to consumers. Dr. Pearce offered the example of food safety claims or nutritional claims.

[268] On April 17, 2012, Rogers received a Port-Out Analysis that was designed to test the importance of dropped calls to customers who had left Rogers for another telecommunications provider. The customers whose accounts were examined were postpaid term contract customers. The analysis concluded that dropped calls have a statistically significant impact on postpaid customers who have decided to change wireless carriers.

[269] Further, this report identified that the precipice for port-outs (leaving Rogers for another telecommunication provider) and dropped calls in the postpaid long-term contract segment of the telecommunications market was between three and six dropped calls per month. The report concluded that targeting customers with five dropped calls would likely improve Rogers' port-out rate.

[270] The Chatr market was a prepaid services market with no term contracts. It is easier for a prepaid no term contract customer to move to another wireless provider than it is for a postpaid long-term contract customer. I conclude therefore that the precipice for port-outs and dropped calls in the prepaid no term contract segment of the market is likely lower than 3-6 dropped calls per month.

[271] In addition, during the relevant time period, no wireless service provider had a pricing advantage over the other. There was aggressive pricing prior to Chatr's launch in July 2010. Aleks Krystajic testified that from March to June 2010, price competition from other wireless carriers, particularly Mobilicity, forced Public Mobile to respond. Mr. Krystajic described the pricing plans offered by Wind Mobile and Mobilicity as "bordering on lunacy."

[272] In their hard handoff/undue preference complaint submission to the CRTC, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile emphasized the importance of dropped calls. Specifically, in its submissions to the CRTC, Wind Mobile stated:

> Put simply, every dropped call matters. Prospective subscribers selecting a mobile provider and to whom Rogers Chatr now offers commercial arrangements that are virtually identical to those offered by Wind neither know nor need to know how often they will be affected by the threat of dropped calls. Instead prospective subscribers are offered an opportunity to avoid the problem altogether.

[273] In an email to the Competition Bureau dated September 24, 2010, Public Mobile stated that a differential in drop call rates as small as 10 per cent would be significant.

[274] The statements made by Wind and Public to the CRTC provide, regardless of their truth, significant evidence that Wind Mobile and Public Mobile thought dropped calls, including those caused by hard handoffs, were a significant problem. The statements also prove that they thought that dropped calls, including those caused by hard handoffs, reflected badly on the public's perception of the reliability of their networks. Their statements prove that the leaders of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile thought that the public was concerned with the risk of dropped calls rather than their relative frequency.

[275] Michael Tiplady, whose qualifications are discussed elsewhere, testified that a dropped call can be quite significant if the customer is experiencing other problems with the network.

[276] Finally, as a matter of common sense, dropped calls can have a significance that is not quantitative. The customer is not making a comparative analysis to other carriers in that situation. This significance was captured by Wind Mobile in its submission to the CRTC, to which I have referred elsewhere. In that submission, Wind Mobile described a dropped call as an annoyance on social calls, an acute disadvantage on business calls and possibly a matter of life or death on 911 calls.

[277] When I consider the evidence, including the evidence to which I specifically referred, I am satisfied that the credulous and technically inexperienced wireless services consumer between July 28, 2010, and November 30, 2010, would be more inclined to be a customer of a network that offered fewer dropped calls. Where price is not a factor, I find it difficult to believe that a consumer would choose a network that offered only a few more dropped calls. Even if one network only had a few more dropped calls, one of those calls could be extremely important.

[278] This notion was captured by Wind Mobile in its Reply submission to the CRTC in its hard handoff/undue preference complaint. The Reply stated as follows:

> Prospective subscribers selecting a mobile provider and to whom Rogers Chatr now offers commercial arrangements that are virtually identical to those offered by Wind neither know nor need to know how often they will be affected by the threat of dropped calls. Instead prospective subscribers are offered an opportunity to avoid the problem altogether (emphasis added).

[279] I am satisfied that the credulous and technically inexperienced consumer would choose a network that offered fewer dropped calls to avoid the possibility of an important call being dropped.

[280] This is not a case where an indiscernible difference means that the services are indistinguishable.

[281] I am not satisfied that the credulous and technically inexperienced consumer viewing the Chatr ads expected the dropped call experience to be discernibly different.

[282] Accordingly I am not satisfied that the fewer dropped calls claim is misleading unless there is a discernible difference in drop call rates among the respondents, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile.

Is a one per cent dropped call rate a standard beyond which consumers are unconcerned?

[283] The applicant contends that the fewer dropped calls claim is misleading because the dropped call rates of Wind Mobile and Chatr are below one per cent in Calgary. It is the applicant's submission that a dropped call rate of one per cent is a standard below which consumers are unconcerned about dropped calls.

[284] Kenneth Campbell, Wind Mobile's CEO, and Aleks Krystajic, Public Mobile's CEO, testified that consumers are unlikely to consider dropped call rates discernible where the rates are below one per cent.

[285] I do not accept this evidence, nor do I accept the applicant's contention in this regard.

[286] Dr. Bekheit, the Vice-President of Access Network for Wind Mobile, testified that Wind Mobile continued to work and invest money to improve its dropped call rate in Toronto and Ottawa after the rate fell below one per cent in those cities.

[287] Dr. Bekheit testified that as a matter of general policy, Wind Mobile did not stop working to improve its dropped call rate when it fell below one per cent.

[288] In an email to the Competition Bureau dated September 24, 2010, Public Mobile stated that a 10 per cent differential in dropped call rates was significant.

[289] Wind Mobile submitted to the CRTC that "every dropped call matters."

[290] I do not accept the applicant's contention that the fewer dropped calls claim is misleading because the dropped call rates of Wind Mobile and Chatr in Calgary were, during the relevant period, below what it termed the one per cent threshold for dropped calls.

Adequate and proper testing

[291] As indicated earlier, the Application was amended on March 1, 2011. The amendment maintained that Rogers and Chatr made the "fewer dropped calls than new wireless carriers" and "no worries about dropped calls" performance claims in the absence of adequate and proper testing.

[292] The burden of proving adequate and proper testing lies upon the respondents by virtue of the express wording of s. 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act.

[293] The adequate and proper test must be made prior to the representation to the public: see Canada (Commissioner of Competition) v. Imperial Brush Co., 2008 Comp. Trib. 2, [2008] C.C.T.D. No. 2 (Canadian Competition Tribunal), at para. 125.

[294] The respondents do not dispute that they made the contentious claims about the performance of their wireless network to the public. They do not dispute that they did so for the purpose of promoting the use of wireless services provided by Chatr, and to the detriment of Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and Mobilicity.

[295] The phrase "adequate and proper test" is not defined in the Competition Act. Whether a particular test is "adequate and proper" will depend on the nature of the representation made and the meaning or impression conveyed by that representation. Subjectivity in the testing should be eliminated as much as possible. The test must establish the effect claimed. The testing need not be as exacting as would be required to publish the test in a scholarly journal. The test should demonstrate that the result claimed is not a chance result: see Imperial Brush Co., at paras. 122, 124, 126, and 127.

[296] The respondents must show that adequate and proper testing supported the fewer dropped calls claim ("fewer dropped calls than new wireless carriers" and "no worries about dropped calls.")

No testing

[297] Chatr was launched in Calgary and Edmonton on July 28, 2010. Although at this time the fewer dropped calls claim was first made, the respondents had not conducted any tests of the performance of Wind Mobile in Calgary or Edmonton.

[298] With respect to Montréal, the respondents first made the fewer dropped calls claim in a press release issued on September 8, 2010, prior to the Chatr launch in that city. The respondents conducted their first set of drive tests in Montréal from September 15-19, 2010. The results of these drive tests were not available on either September 8 or 16, 2010, and therefore could not have formed the basis for the fewer dropped calls claim in relation to Public Mobile in Montréal.

Drive tests

[299] Drive testing involves placing simultaneous calls on competing wireless networks within a coverage area. These calls are placed at exactly the same location and contain exactly the same content.

[300] Wireless devices using competing wireless networks are attached to a vehicle equipped with an expensive and sophisticated drive test measuring system. The vehicle travels a predetermined route that has been designed having regard to population density and traffic patterns. While the vehicles are traveling the predetermined routes, the wireless devices use both competitors' networks as well as Rogers' network. The devices automatically make calls to particular land lines. The results of these calls are monitored and evaluated.

[301] The respondents offered drive test results both as an adequate and proper test, as well as helpful evidence concerning the fewer dropped calls comparative claim. The applicant asserted that the drive tests did not constitute adequate and proper testing of the fewer dropped calls claim because:

- Given their purpose and limitations, drive tests could not be used as the basis for market-wide conclusions about wireless network performance, including dropped call rates;

- Rogers' own drive test data in Vancouver, Calgary and Edmonton did not show a statistically significant difference between Chatr's dropped call rates and those of some or all of the new carriers;

- Rogers did not conduct any drive tests in Calgary or Edmonton before making the claim there; and

- Rogers' drive tests in the greater Toronto area prior to September 27, 2010, did not include all of the new entrants operating in the greater Toronto area.

[302] There are three issues that I must consider:

- Are drive tests capable of adequately and properly testing the respondents' fewer dropped calls claim?;

- If drive tests are capable of adequately and properly testing the fewer dropped calls claim, did the drive tests actually conducted adequately and properly test it?; and

- If the drive tests conducted did in fact adequately and properly test the fewer dropped calls claim, do the results of those tests provide a basis for the claim?

[303] The burden of proving that the fewer dropped calls claim was adequately and properly tested lies upon the respondents. Furthermore, the reliability of a new network can change over time, and therefore it is necessary to consider whether the drive testing results were always sufficiently current.

[304] I recognize that drive tests do not actually provide a measure of all dropped calls experienced on a network. Drive tests estimate the actual dropped call rate. As well, drive test results are results occurring in the particular conditions under which the drive test took place. These qualifications are counterbalanced by evidence that proved that benchmark drive testing is used all over the world to compare network performance.

[305] I also recognize that drive testing is conducted outdoors. According to the evidence, more than half of the cell phone calls with which we are concerned were likely made indoors. Indoor testing occurred after the fewer dropped calls claim was made. Mr. Michael Tiplady reviewed the indoor testing results and offered the opinion that the results of the indoor testing were consistent with Rogers' earlier drive test results. Mr. Tiplady's evidence, which as indicated earlier I accept, and the evidence that wireless networks improve with time, support the conclusion that the drive testing results are an adequate and proper basis for the fewer dropped calls claim both indoors and outdoors.

[306] The Competition Act requires an adequate and proper test of a performance claim. Significantly, benchmark drive testing is accepted universally as a way of comparing key performance indicators, including dropped call rates, on different networks. Drive testing does not have to be a perfect test to be an adequate and proper test.

[307] The demand of wireless operators for reliable drive test results has given rise to a $300 million per year industry. To state that billions of dollars have been invested world-wide in wireless networks is to state a well-known and easily confirmed fact. Some significance must be attached to evidence that the persons who invested these significant sums rely on benchmark drive testing.

[308] Evidence, which was not contentious, was introduced describing instances where wireless companies had sought to distinguish themselves in comparative advertising by claiming superior dropped call rates. These claims were based on drive test results.

[309] Rogers tendered two witnesses who were qualified to offer opinion evidence about drive testing. Michael Tiplady, who served as the Chief Technology Officer for O2, a large wireless service provider in the United Kingdom, was one of those witnesses. As Chief Technology Officer for O2, Mr. Tiplady was responsible for an annual budget of approximately £250 million. Mr. Tiplady has extensive experience with the actual operation of wireless networks.

[310] Mr. Tiplady testified that drive testing is globally recognized as the most accurate method of comparing different networks from the user's perspective. I accept Mr. Tiplady's evidence in this regard.

[311] Dr. Robert Ziegler was the second expert called by the respondents. Dr. Ziegler has a PhD in electrical engineering from Stanford University. He manages approximately 250 people at Applied Communication Sciences. The Wireless Systems and Networks Research Department at Applied Communication Sciences provides research and engineering services to government and commercial customers. Applied Communication Sciences' clients include agencies of the United States government, including both defence and non-defence agencies. Its clients also include AT&T, Q West, Verizon, Sprint and other wireless network operators around the world.

[312] Applied Communication Sciences is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Telcordia Technologies, which is ultimately owned by LM Ericsson. I recognize that LM Ericsson manufactured the multitasking computers used by the respondents.

[313] Dr. Ziegler testified that drive testing is an established and well-thought-out industry-accepted practice for providing comparative assessments of the performance of wireless networks. I accept Dr. Ziegler's evidence in this regard.

[314] The evidence of Dr. Ziegler and Michael Tiplady is consistent with public submissions made by Verizon and AT&T to the United States Federal Communications Commission concerning drive testing. These submissions were to the effect that drive testing is an excellent way to compare the performance of wireless networks in respect of dropped calls.

[315] Vimplecom, Wind Mobile's parent company, uses drive testing to compare the performance of its networks with its competitors.

[316] I am satisfied by the evidence that drive testing is a standardized international method for comparing the performance of wireless networks.

[317] I am satisfied by the evidence that drive tests are capable of adequately and properly testing the respondents' fewer dropped calls claim.

Did Rogers' drive test programme adequately and properly test its fewer dropped call claims?

[318] Rogers began its drive test programme in 2005. Rogers has spent approximately $20 million on the development and implementation of its drive testing programme. Each year since 2005, Rogers has conducted drive tests across Canada four times per year in metropolitan areas.

[319] Rogers uses vehicles equipped with specially calibrated drive testing equipment provided by a company known as SwissQual AG. SwissQual AG is a Swiss company specializing in wireless network benchmarking and wireless network optimization. The evidence established that SwissQual AG is internationally known in this area, and is independent of Rogers.

[320] Rogers' drive test vehicles adhere to SwissQual AG's standards in hardware and software configuration. The test script, speech clips, sequence and frequency used during Rogers' drive tests are predetermined in accordance with established SwissQual protocols.

[321] The applicant submitted that Rogers' drive tests had to be carried out with third-party validation in order to be an adequate and proper test.

[322] There is no provision in the Competition Act that expressly provides that an adequate and proper test of a comparative performance claim must be validated by a third-party. Case law has established that courts have applied a flexible and contextual analysis when assessing whether a representation is based on an adequate and proper test. It is not consistent with the notion of a flexible and contextual analysis to invariably insist on third-party validation of test results. I am satisfied that such validation is not a prerequisite to an adequate and proper test: see Imperial Brush Co., at para. 122.

[323] If I am wrong about this, I am satisfied also that Rogers' drive testing and drive test results have been independently validated. Specifically, Telcordia Technologies prepared an audit of Rogers' drive test methodology in 2005 and 2011. I recognize that Telcordia Technologies did not audit the methodology or the results of the specific drive tests relied upon in this Application. Rogers engaged Score Technologies and Nielsen Mobility to conduct drive tests to validate and supplement its own drive test results. Score Technologies and Nielsen Mobility are independent of Rogers. The evidence established that these two companies have specialized expertise in the field of drive testing, and that they are used by other wireless service providers for the same purpose. Score Technologies conducted four of the drive tests relied upon in this Application. Score and Neilsen conducted drive tests in the same area that Rogers conducted drive tests. Their results were compared with Rogers' results to provide a level of independent assurance concerning those results.

[324] The applicant submitted that handsets are an important element in a drive test. The applicant relied on the fact that the handsets used to conduct drive tests of Rogers 2G network and the networks of at least some of the new wireless carriers were not handsets purchased from those carriers, nor were they handsets that were commercially available from them.

[325] Specifically, for testing Wind Mobile and Rogers, Score Technologies used the Samsung T-819. The applicant suggested that there was no evidence that this handset was purchased from a Wind Mobile store. The evidence established that it was a common practice to purchase a Wind Mobile handset and then use that handset in the drive test to test the Wind Mobile network.

[326] Rogers' drive test programme uses equipment supplied by SwissQual, one of the leading drive test firms in the world. Evidence was adduced from SwissQual in the form of an email that suggested that Wind Mobile had informed SwissQual that it uses the Samsung T-819. Rogers provided the Competition Bureau on November 4, 2010, with an email from SwissQual confirming that the Samsung T-819 is compatible with its equipment.

[327] Dr. Ziegler testified that the Samsung T-819 uses a common chipset and was specifically validated by SwissQual for use with the drive test equipment used by Rogers in 2010. I accept Dr. Ziegler's evidence in this regard.

[328] The applicant also criticized the fact that Rogers used the Nokia N95 when drive testing its own network. The applicant claimed that this device was not sold by Chatr in 2010. Mr. Berner, the respondents' Chief Technology Officer at the relevant time, testified that this device was fully validated and tested for use on the Rogers GSM network, and that it was used by customers on the network.

[329] I accept this aspect of Mr. Berner's evidence. Mr. Berner was clearly concerned about the Rogers network. He arranged for Rogers' drive testing methodology to be audited by Telcordia Technologies. He arranged for independent testing by Score Technologies and Nielsen Mobility. It seems only reasonable that he would avoid handsets that invalidated or undermined the drive test results that he had otherwise made efforts to verify.

[330] Mr. Michael Tiplady testified that SwissQual tests handsets and recommends to its customers handsets that work well with SwissQual equipment. It was Mr. Tiplady's evidence that the important thing was to use a handset that was so recommended. I accept Mr. Tiplady's evidence in this regard.

[331] I am satisfied that the handsets used by Rogers during its drive tests were compatible with the SwissQual equipment used by the respondents. I am also satisfied that this was an important fact in terms of the validity and reliability of Rogers' drive test results.

[332] Mr. Berner testified that he had no direct knowledge of the conduct of the drive tests with which we are concerned. Mr. Berner's only knowledge about the drive test programme and methodology came through conversations with persons reporting to him. Mr. Berner could not be effectively cross-examined concerning the methodology used on the actual drive tests. This circumstance goes to the weight attached to the drive test results. Its negative effects, however, are offset by the fact that independent auditing of the tests with which we are concerned, was conducted by Mr. Michael Tiplady.

[333] Michael Tiplady conducted a full review of the Rogers drive tests referred to in this proceeding. He reviewed the information provided by Mr. Berner in his affidavit.

He reviewed the methodology and he examined the information from the subcontractors Score Technologies and Nielsen Mobility. He looked at information on the equipment used. Mr. Tiplady examined printouts of the drive test routes to see whether the routes were consistent with the area Rogers was purporting to test. Mr. Tiplady concluded that the drive tests were conducted according to the normal international standard. He concluded that the drive tests were well-thought-out and what you would expect from an operator of Rogers' standing. The tests were what you would expect from similar operators in other countries. I accept Mr. Tiplady's evidence in this regard.

[334] I am satisfied that Mr. Tiplady's validation offsets to a significant degree the fact that no persons were called with personal knowledge of the actual drive tests with which we are concerned.

[335] I reject the applicant's criticism of the Rogers benchmark drive testing.

Is belief in a technological fact an adequate and proper test?

[336] Rogers has invested billions of dollars in capital expenditures to develop and enhance its wireless network. Rogers has a national network that provides services to approximately 95 per cent of the Canadian population. When Wind Mobile and Public Mobile commenced operations, Rogers had been in business for over 25 years.

[337] It was not contentious that the deployment of a wireless network is an iterative process that requires the operator to make constant adjustments to optimize performance. Mr. Berner testified that "we're never done deploying a network". Mr. Berner explained that if a wireless service provider has a brand-new network, its objective is to get as much coverage as it can in order to have a competitive product. As a result, he explained a wireless service provider will not be able to immediately build all the infill sites needed to solve specific coverage problems within its coverage area. In short, it was his evidence that a network gets better over time.

[338] Dr. Ziegler testified that there was no way that a new entrant or any other operator could catch up to 25 years of experience in a few months.

[339] I accept the evidence of both Mr. Berner and Dr. Ziegler in this regard.

[340] I am satisfied that Mr. Berner honestly believed that it was impossible for Wind Mobile and Public Mobile to build and develop a wireless network to match the reliability and performance of the Rogers network in less than one year.

[341] Mr. Berner's belief in Rogers' technical superiority, which was also Rogers' belief, was based on the three components contained within the explainer or disclaimer in the contentious representation: greater cell density; quality of indoor and underground reception; and seamless call transition when moving out of a Chatr zone.

In addition, it was Mr. Berner's view that Rogers' use of lower frequency 850 MHz spectrum would also lead to fewer dropped calls.

[342] The applicant claims that knowledge or belief in a technological fact cannot constitute an adequate and proper test within the meaning of s. 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act.

[343] In my view, the matter is best given factually specific consideration. Lower frequency 850 MHz spectrum is said to have better propagation qualities, which means that the power of the radio waves decreases less quickly on this lower spectrum than it does on higher spectrum. Wind Mobile and Public Mobile both used higher spectrum than 850 MHz. If the applicant wished to question this principle, then the burden would be on the respondents to provide the applicant with references to the Friis Transmission Formula that was published in 1945, and which established the principle that lower frequency spectrum has better propagation qualities. The Competition Act does not require that the respondents duplicate the test but they must provide it.

[344] The respondents have made the fewer dropped calls comparative performance claim. The applicant has asked for the adequate and proper test of that claim. If the respondents rely upon lower frequency spectrum, they are required to show that they have adequately and properly tested whether their radio wave propagation advantage appears to have actually resulted in fewer dropped calls. The law permits a flexible and contextual analysis when assessing whether a claim has been adequately and properly tested, but there must be a test.

[345] Accepting for a moment that the respondents have greater cell site density, more indoor transmitters and other devices to improve indoor and underground reception and seamless call transition, it is still necessary for the respondents to adequately and properly test whether these technological advantages appear to have actually resulted in fewer dropped calls.

[346] The applicant sought to place in doubt the advantages of lower frequency spectrum in an urban environment. The applicant's position is undercut significantly by statements from the complainants themselves. The benefits of lower radio spectrum were acknowledged explicitly by Wind Mobile and Public Mobile in recent submissions to Industry Canada.

[347] Wind Mobile explicitly acknowledged that lower frequency spectrum is better able to penetrate structures than higher frequencies. It further explicitly admitted that it was at a substantial competitive disadvantage because lower frequency spectrum had superior propagation characteristics.

[348] Public Mobile made similar statements to Industry Canada.

[349] The applicant sought to place in doubt the respondents' assertion that they had greater cell site density than Wind Mobile or Public Mobile. Wind Mobile, through its chairman, explicitly acknowledged Rogers' cell site advantage during the relevant period. Specifically, on December 15, 2010, in an interview with the Globe and Mail, he stated: "[W]e have never made the claim nor will I make the claim today that we have greater coverage than Rogers. They have more sites than us in the greater Toronto area and that leads to better coverage in buildings…" Mr. Armeanca, the former Chief Technology Officer of Wind Mobile, confirmed that three of the four specific causes of dropped calls can be remedied by adding more cell sites.

[350] In addition, it appears that lower frequency spectrum also has to be accounted for when considering cell sites. In October 2010, Wind Mobile had 88 cell sites in Ottawa compared to Rogers' 91 sites. However, it turned out that 63 of the Rogers 91 sites were deployed at 850 MHz. Dr. Ziegler testified that this meant that Wind Mobile would require 3-4 times as many cell sites to match Rogers' signal quality.

[351] Mr. Berner testified that, despite having substantial cell site density, there are many locations inside buildings that are effectively dead zones. The only solution to this problem is to provide customized coverage.

[352] The evidence established that Rogers had invested tens of millions of dollars in purchasing and installing an extensive network of transmitters, signal repeaters and other devices in buildings and underground structures. Rogers deployed dedicated systems within buildings to pick up, amplify and redistribute signals inside the buildings. Rogers built specific cell sites and indoor antenna systems to deal with these coverage problems.

[353] Mr. Berner testified that Rogers also built and installed specific outdoor cell sites to solve specific indoor coverage problems.

[354] Indoor transmission systems have been tested extensively, and had the applicant challenged the effectiveness of those systems, the external testing done by others would have perhaps been a complete answer. However, this begs the question of whether the indoor transmission systems that were in place actually resulted in fewer dropped calls than Wind Mobile and Public Mobile.

[355] To the extent that actual testing of dropped call rates prior to making the fewer dropped calls claim occurred and supported that claim, the technological advantages previously mentioned would have to be capable of confirming the adequacy and propriety of that testing as well as the claims.

[356] The applicant suggested that the respondents' network was congested, and that this reduced or eliminated advantages that the respondents might have otherwise derived from the maturity of their network, their superior spectrum, greater cell site density, superior indoor network and seamless handoffs.

[357] Dr. Nettleton reviewed the respondents' capacity utilization data and offered the opinion that the respondents' network was in fact congested during the relevant period, and that this congestion would have resulted in dropped calls.

[358] I do not accept Dr. Nettleton's evidence in this regard. In my view, Dr. Nettleton's conclusions are not supportable. In his first report, Dr. Nettleton failed to account for the fact that Rogers uses half-rate voice coders that essentially double Rogers' capacity. Dr. Nettleton addressed this in his Reply Report. However, in his Reply Report, Dr. Nettleton identified 300 half-rate congested cells in Toronto. Dr. Nettleton agreed when testifying that he had made a mistake in his capacity analysis, and that only 33 half-rate cells were congested.

[359] Dr. Ziegler undertook a detailed congestion analysis which I accept. Dr. Ziegler demonstrated that in September 2010, of the 33 individually half-rate congested cells, virtually all were co-located with 1900 MHz Rogers' cell sites. These cell sites were not congested. Rogers' network automatically transfers calls to an uncongested co-located or adjacent cell site when a cell site is at capacity.

[360] Dr. Nettleton also suggested that Rogers' 2G network was aging, and that as a result Rogers was dismantling it. I do not accept Dr. Nettleton's evidence in this regard. Instead, I accept the evidence of Mr. Berner that the Rogers 2G network was being demoted as a result of the normal course of Rogers' business. Rogers was gradually moving traffic to its third-generation or "3G" network.

[361] Dr. Nettleton also suggested that Rogers' network was experiencing co-channel interference or radio interference from adjacent cell sites. Dr. Nettleton agreed on cross-examination, however, that a properly designed network will minimize co-channel interference. He conceded that this was a basic principle in the design of cellular systems. I attach no weight to this aspect of Dr. Nettleton's evidence.

[362] I have elsewhere discussed seamless call transitioning or hard and soft handoffs. It is clear that the hard handoff results in actual dropped calls.

[363] I am satisfied that Rogers' network had the technical advantages that the respondents claimed that it had in the fewer dropped calls claim. These advantages, however, do not relieve the respondents of testing the comparative fewer dropped calls claim. The technological advantages are, however, capable of confirming the adequacy and propriety of a test that appears to substantiate the fewer dropped calls claim.

Were the Rogers drive tests conducted too early after the launch of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile?

[364] The applicant suggested that one of the drive tests was conducted immediately after Wind Mobile had launched, and that this was too soon to permit a meaningful comparison. Specifically, Rogers tested Wind Mobile in Vancouver from June 16-23, 2010. Wind Mobile launched in Vancouver on June 3, 2010.

[365] I do not accept this criticism. Wind Mobile was offering wireless services to the public from and after June 3, 2010. Rogers was under no obligation to wait before testing the wireless service that Wind Mobile was offering to the public.

[366] The idea that Wind Mobile's service would have improved over time, and that a later drive test would reflect that improvement does not change the results of the drive tests that were in fact conducted, and whether they provide for a time an adequate and proper basis for the fewer dropped calls claim.

[367] The applicant also argued that the fewer dropped calls claim became misleading because Rogers' advantage, if it had one, changed over time. The applicant used Vancouver as an example.

[368] As indicated, Rogers tested against Wind Mobile in Vancouver in the period June 16-23, 2010. It then tested against Wind Mobile in Vancouver in the period August 10, 2010, to September 3, 2010. During the June drive test, Chatr experienced 6 dropped calls, while Wind Mobile experienced 13 drop calls. During the August/September drive test, Chatr had eight dropped calls, while Wind Mobile experienced seven dropped calls. A third test was conducted in Vancouver during the period of October 1-14, 2010. During the October drive test, Chatr experienced six dropped calls, while Wind Mobile had nine dropped calls.

[369] I have concluded elsewhere that Rogers' decision to filter out hard handoffs after August 9, 2010, resulted in these drive test results understating Wind Mobile's and Public Mobile's dropped calls.

[370] It is the applicant's position that things changed between June and September, and therefore the fewer dropped calls claim had become misleading with the passage of time. In short, it was the applicant's position that the circumstances were changing, and therefore the advertising had to change. I agree in principle, however whether these ads were misleading is a more precise question.

[371] In the June 2010 drive test, Wind Mobile experienced slightly more than two times as many dropped calls as Chatr. In the October drive test, Wind Mobile had one and one half times as many dropped calls as Chatr. When I consider all three Vancouver drive tests, I am not satisfied that they demonstrate any comparative change between Wind Mobile and Chatr in the periods of June 16-23, 2010, and October 1-14, 2010.

[372] Such a conclusion is not inconsistent with statements made by representatives of the complainants. For example, Mr. Anthony Lacavera, Wind Mobile's chairman, said on September 13, 2011, "if there was a knock against us in the beginning it was [the quality of] our networks but the gap between us and the big guys is quickly going away." The events that concern us occurred in the period August to December 2010. It is clear that Mr. Lacavera thought that there was a gap between Wind Mobile and "the big guys" in September 2011, although it was also his view that the gap at that time was narrowing. Accordingly, there must have been a gap between Wind Mobile and "the big guys" during the period we are concerned. There is no reason why Mr. Lacavera would make a statement acknowledging the network superiority of competitors unless his information was that it was true. Mr. Lacavera's statement tends to confirm Rogers' interpretation of its 2010 drive test results against Wind Mobile.

[373] The applicant criticizes the fact that the drive testing conducted September 15-19, 2010, which tested Public Mobile in Montréal, was methodologically unsound because it was an expedited drive test. Specifically, the Public Mobile Montréal drive test was conducted over 4 days for 24 hours each day. Dr. Ziegler testified that the expedited drive test could not by itself be used as a basis for an unqualified comparison between Rogers and Public Mobile, and I accept his evidence in that regard.

[374] I am satisfied that the expedited Montréal drive test was not an adequate and proper test of the fewer dropped calls claim. Additionally, it is clear that Chatr launched in Montréal on September 16, 2010, and that these drive tests could not have substantiated the fewer dropped calls claim made at that time.

[375] There was an expedited drive test that tested Wind Mobile in Toronto from September 26, 2010, to October 2, 2010. This test could not, by itself, be used as a basis for an unqualified comparison between the Rogers and Wind Mobile networks in Toronto. However, this drive test was in addition to a normal drive test conducted August 20, 2010, to September 8, 2010, that compared those two networks in Toronto.

Conclusion concerning adequate and proper testing

[376] It is obvious that on July 28, 2010, when Rogers began making the fewer dropped calls representation on its website, in social media, through public relations channels and on product packaging, Rogers had only conducted drive tests against Wind Mobile in Vancouver, Toronto and Ottawa. However, as of July 28, 2010, Wind Mobile and Chatr offered services in Calgary and Edmonton. Rogers did not conduct tests in either of these markets prior to July 28, 2010.

[377] The idea that comparative performance claims had to be adequately and properly tested was well known to the respondents. Specifically, the advertising agency retained to promote Chatr asked in a November 6, 2009, document: "How do we support our claims?"

[378] Rogers began its extensive advertising campaign on August 9, 2010. By this time it had conducted a drive test in Calgary, but it had lost its 2G network benchmark drive test results.

[379] I accept the respondents' submission that drive testing is capable of adequately and properly testing the fewer dropped calls claim.

[380] I am satisfied that the Rogers drive testing with which we are concerned adequately and properly tested the fewer dropped calls claim when those drive tests were conducted prior to the claim being made.

[381] I am satisfied that the respondents failed to conduct an adequate and proper test in Calgary and Edmonton prior to July 28, 2010, when they began making the fewer dropped calls claim.

[382] The drive test conducted in Calgary on August 6, 2010, is not an adequate and proper test because the results were lost and are therefore not known and cannot be verified.

[383] No adequate and proper test against Public Mobile was conducted in Montréal prior to the respondents making the fewer dropped calls claim at the time of Chatr's launch on September 16, 2010.

[384] No adequate and proper test against Public Mobile was conducted in Toronto prior to July 28, 2010, when Chatr began making the fewer dropped calls claim in Toronto.

[385] I attach no significance to the fact that Rogers did not test against Videotron in Montréal before September 16, 2010, because I have concluded elsewhere in these reasons that a credulous and technically inexperienced wireless services consumer in Québec would not have considered Videotron a new wireless carrier.

Filtering out hard handoffs

[386] The evidence was that prior to August 9, 2010, Rogers' drive test results included dropped calls due to hard handoffs. Rogers' drive test results for Montréal from September 15-19, 2010, included dropped calls due to hard handoffs as well.

[387] Mr. Berner, Rogers' Chief Technology Officer, decided that he wanted to look at the drive test results with and without the hard handoffs. As a result, calls originating in the Wind Mobile, Public Mobile, Mobilicity and Videotron coverage zones or footprints that terminated outside those zones were removed from their dropped call totals.

[388] The applicant submits that when using drive test results to compare networks, the respondents' results should be those with hard handoffs removed.

[389] The applicant relies in part on the fact that Applied Communication Sciences (a.k.a. Telcordia Technologies) filtered out of its drive test audit results calls concluding outside a new wireless carrier's coverage area. Dr. Ziegler's concern was that if vehicles were driving in and out of the new carrier's coverage area, there would not be a proper comparison. While I agree with Dr. Ziegler's expressed concern, I do not agree that there was evidence that Rogers' drive test vehicles were inappropriately driving in and out of new carriers' coverage zones. The evidence of Michael Tiplady is to the contrary.

[390] Telcordia was performing a third-party evaluation of Rogers' use of quality measurements procedures, selected drive test measurements, data collection, processing and reporting procedures to compare Rogers' wireless voice and data services with those of other carriers. Performance of this exercise was obviously not hindered by the systematic removal of hard handoffs and the disclosure of that fact to Telcordia. Finally, both sets of drive test results were available to Applied Communication Sciences.

[391] Dr. Nettleton, in his expert report dated June 14, 2012, stated that filtering out hard handoffs was necessary to avoid "an artificial increase in dropped calls that does not reflect how the service is intended to be used by its subscribers."

[392] I do not accept this aspect of Dr. Nettleton's opinion. Some subscribers of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile will leave their coverage area while engaged in a call, their signal strength will degrade and eventually the Wind Mobile or Public Mobile network will drop the call. Wind Mobile and Public Mobile may not have intended that customers use the service in this way, but it is foreseeable that this type of dropped call would occur. Wind Mobile negotiated a roaming agreement with Rogers to allow customers to use their phones outside the Wind coverage zones.

[393] In somewhat of an about-face, Dr. Nettleton agreed on cross-examination that a fair comparison of the rates at issue in these proceedings would appropriately include hard handoff dropped calls.

[394] Mr. Michael Tiplady testified that he would not have filtered out hard handoffs when comparing the networks using drive test data because this filtering was inconsistent with the customer's experience. Mr. Tiplady testified that, in reviewing Rogers' drive testing, he saw no evidence of oversampling at coverage area borders.

[395] I prefer Mr. Tiplady's approach, although I view the matter somewhat differently.

[396] The fewer dropped calls claim stated that one reason Chatr had fewer dropped calls was because Chatr offered a seamless Canadian network, and therefore there was no need to switch to other networks when "zipping in and out of your Chatr zone." The comparative nature of the fewer dropped calls claim invites consideration of calls dropped when Wind Mobile and Public Mobile customers are "zipping in and out" of their Wind Mobile and Public Mobile zones. Accordingly, filtering out such calls is not helpful for purposes of this Application.

[397] In addition, this Application carries serious reputational risks, as well as a significant administrative monetary penalty should it succeed. Accordingly, the claim should be somewhat strictly construed. The court should try to avoid altering genuine test results when trying to determine whether the representation is false or misleading.

[398] I am satisfied therefore that Rogers' drive test results after August 9, 2010, understated the difference between Rogers dropped call rate and the dropped call rates of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile during the drive tests because dropped calls due to hard handoffs were filtered out of the drive test results. This does not apply to the Montréal results for September 15-19, 2010, that included dropped calls resulting from hard handoffs.

[399] Mr. Berner testified that, if dropped calls attributed to hard handoffs are added back into the results for drive tests conducted after August 9, 2010, the respondents' network had fewer dropped calls than Wind Mobile and Public Mobile in every drive test conducted between June 16, 2010, and December 15, 2010. I accept his evidence in this regard. While the applicant challenged whether certain differences in dropped call rates were statistically significant, the mathematics of the exercise were not challenged.

[400] At the risk of belaboring the obvious, I have not referred to Videotron because, elsewhere in these reasons, I determined that Videotron would not be viewed by a credulous and technically inexperienced wireless services consumer in the Province of Québec as a new wireless carrier. I have not referred to Mobilicity because, elsewhere in these reasons, I have drawn an adverse inference concerning Mobilicity's dropped call rate during the relevant period. This inference is based on Mobilicity's refusal to cooperate with the Competition Bureau in this proceeding.

Are the drive test results statistically significant?

[401] The applicant also maintains that Rogers' drive test results do not show a statistically significant difference between Rogers' wireless network and the networks of the new wireless carriers. It is the applicant's position that, even if the court considers drive testing an adequate and proper test in principle, it is not sufficient for the court to look at raw drive test dropped call rates and determine that Chatr had the lower rate. It is submitted that the court must also determine whether the differences in dropped call rates are statistically significant.

[402] We are dealing with dropped calls in circumstances where there was no price differential among Chatr, Public Mobile and Wind Mobile services. There was also no evidence suggesting that changing wireless carriers meant the loss of one's phone number.

[403] I am satisfied that a credulous and technically inexperienced wireless services consumer would not analyze the problem from a statistical perspective. I am satisfied that such a consumer would not want an important call dropped, and would be influenced in his or her choice of a wireless carrier by the idea that one wireless carrier dropped fewer calls than another, regardless of the statistical significance of the difference. To put the matter differently, if price and cell number are not issues, why choose more dropped calls?

[404] Despite my view that no difference in dropped call rate is sufficiently small to be insignificant or immaterial, I propose to consider the dispute in the evidence about the statistical significance of the differences in dropped call rates of Chatr, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile.

[405] The applicant called Dr. Christian Dippon to testify in part on the statistical significance issue. Dr. Dippon is an economist. He is a Vice-President of National Economic Research Associates, which is a firm of economists. He specializes in the economics and business of telecommunications and other high-tech industries. Dr. Dippon holds a PhD in economics from Curtin University in Perth, Australia. Dr. Dippon has been qualified as an expert many times in the past by courts in the United States and Singapore.

[406] The respondents entered evidence from 16 drive tests. Dr. Dippon considered these drive test results without filtering out hard handoffs. These drive tests were performed in Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto and Montréal. Dr. Dippon used these tests to do hypothesis-testing.

[407] Dr. Ennis was called by the respondents. He was qualified in part to give expert opinion evidence on statistics, and in particular the statistical significance of the Rogers drive test results. Dr. Ennis testified that in hypothesis-testing, there are two hypotheses. A null hypothesis is considered true until proven false, while an alternative hypothesis contradicts the null hypothesis and is only accepted when there is sufficient statistical evidence. The null hypothesis is the hypothesis that the experimenter needs to reject in order to support the alternative hypothesis. The alternative hypothesis is the hypothesis that the experimenter wishes to establish.

[408] Dr. Dippon used as his null hypothesis the proposition that Rogers had statistically the same amount of dropped calls as the new wireless carriers. He used as the alternative hypothesis the proposition that Rogers did not have the same amount of dropped calls as the new wireless carriers. Dr. Dippon worked to a confidence level of 95 per cent, which meant that he wanted only a 5 per cent chance that the drive test was a chance comparison.

[409] Dr. Dippon concluded, after considering these 16 drive test results, that on 8 occasions, the drive test data accepted the null hypothesis, while the drive test data rejected the null hypothesis on 8 occasions.

[410] On the occasions where the drive test data accepted the null hypothesis, Dr. Dippon concluded that Rogers' sampled dropped call rate was not sufficiently lower than the sampled dropped call rate of the new carriers to permit the conclusion that Rogers had fewer dropped calls.

[411] Although not explicitly stated, Dr. Dippon's conclusion with respect to the eight sets of drive test data which rejected the null hypothesis must have been that Rogers' sampled dropped call rate was sufficiently lower than the sampled drop call rate of the new carriers to permit the conclusion that Rogers' dropped call rate was not the same as the new wireless carriers.

[412] Dr. Dippon did not explain what his conclusions would have been if he had chosen a confidence level of less than 95 per cent. Dr. Dippon offered no evidence concerning the confidence level that would equate to rejecting the null hypothesis on a balance of probabilities.

[413] As indicated earlier, eight sets of drive test data rejected the null hypothesis in. Dr. Dippon's analysis, and therefore must have rejected the null hypothesis using Dr. Dippon's confidence level of 95 per cent.

[414] Dr. Ennis has two doctorate degrees, one of which is in mathematical and statistical psychology. Dr. Ennis has published on statistical significance and statistical equivalents. Dr. Ennis also employed hypothesis-testing. Dr. Ennis chose as his null hypothesis the conclusion that Chatr's dropped call rate is equal to the dropped call rate of the new wireless carriers. His alternative hypothesis was that Chatr's dropped call rate was superior to the new wireless carriers' dropped call rates. Dr. Ennis tested these hypotheses using different statistical tools than those used by Dr. Dippon.

[415] Dr. Ennis testified that his review of the Rogers drive test results led him to the conclusion that those results are statistically valid, and establish that Chatr had fewer dropped calls than both Public Mobile and Wind Mobile during the relevant period. Once again I decline to refer to Mobilicity and Videotron.

[416] It was also Dr. Ennis' opinion that Chatr's dropped call rates were significantly better than the new wireless carriers. Dr. Ennis' confidence level in his results was 95 per cent.

[417] Dr. Ennis also created confidence interval charts. Dr. Ennis first calculated each carrier's mean dropped call rate. Next, Dr. Ennis calculated the 95 per cent confidence interval for each of Chatr and the new wireless carriers' mean dropped call rates. A 95 per cent confidence interval means that one can be 95 per cent confident that the carrier's true mean dropped call rate falls within that interval. Dr. Ennis produced a graphic illustration of the confidence intervals for the mean dropped call rates of Chatr and the new wireless carriers. He concluded that this exercise established that Chatr had statistically significant fewer dropped calls than each of the new wireless carriers during the period with which we are concerned.

[418] Dr. Ennis also performed a similar exercise with something he called the "call success rates" of Chatr and the new wireless carriers. This calculation measured calls that did not fail and were not dropped during drive testing. Dr. Ennis calculated mean successful call rates for Chatr and each of the new wireless carriers. Once again Dr. Ennis calculated 95 per cent confidence intervals for these mean successful call rates.

[419] After performing these two exercises, Dr. Ennis concluded that both demonstrated the statistically significant superiority of Chatr in respect of dropped calls and successful calls during the period with which we are concerned.

[420] Dr. Ennis testified that these exercises quantified the degree to which Chatr's mean dropped call rate and mean success rate were superior to the new wireless carriers during the period with which we are concerned.

[421] The second test performed by Dr. Ennis was the Wilcoxon Sign Test. This test assigns a "+" where a drive test recorded that Chatr had a lower dropped call rate than the new wireless carriers. The test assigns a "-" where the drive test recorded that Chatr had a higher dropped call rate. Chatr had a lower dropped call rate than the new wireless carriers in 15 out of 16 drive tests. Dr. Ennis then calculated the odds of Chatr having a lower dropped call rate in 15 out of 16 drive tests as a result of mere chance, and calculated that the likelihood of this happening by chance was less than 0.03 per cent.

[422] Dr. Dippon criticized the fact that in some of his testing, Dr. Ennis aggregated drive test results for the new wireless carriers across the cities in which they operated. The two exercises of Dr. Ennis to which I referred dealt with the drive test results on a disaggregated basis.

[423] Dr. Dippon made no attempt to attack the accuracy or legitimacy of Dr. Ennis' confidence interval calculations. Dr. Dippon did not refer to these confidence interval charts in his initial or reply reports.

[424] I prefer the evidence of Dr. Ennis. Dr. Ennis has a Doctor of Science degree in Mathematical and Statistical Psychology. He taught statistical quality control at the University of Guelph. He has experience designing and analyzing test data to determine whether tests support claims made in advertisements. He has provided advice on a pro bono basis to the National Advertising Division of the Better Business Bureau Division, which conducts proceedings to resolve advertising claim disputes in the United States. Finally, he has published in the area of statistics.

[425] I find Dr. Ennis' dropped call rate and success rate calculations logically compelling and un-assailed.

[426] Finally, although not necessary for resolving a dispute concerning statistical analyses, but helpful when considering what constitutes a significant difference in dropped call rates for purposes of this Application, Public Mobile, in an email to the Competition Bureau dated September 24, 2010, stated that a differential in dropped call rates as small as 10 per cent was significant.

[427] Dr. Dippon and Dr. Ennis both used the 95 per cent confidence level standard in their analyses. As a result, I have not considered the appropriateness of that confidence level in deciding to accept the evidence of Dr. Ennis that Chatr's dropped call rate was superior to the new wireless carriers. However, I do not wish to leave this question without commenting that I am not persuaded that, in deciding whether the respondents have discharged the burden of proving that their fewer dropped calls claim was based upon an adequate and proper testing, a 95 per cent confidence level is consistent with a balance of probabilities standard of proof. The level of confidence required in the result of the test before it can be considered adequate and proper must be consistent with that standard of proof.

How long are the drive test results valid?

[428] The benchmark drive test results were collected and filed as Tab 14 of Exhibit 37A. These test results indicate that consistent with Mr. Berner's evidence, Rogers engaged in ongoing benchmark drive testing.

[429] Full market drive tests occurred in Vancouver in June, August to September and October, 2010. There were partial market drive tests in Vancouver in November 2010.

[430] Full market drive tests occurred in Calgary in September and December, 2010. There were no partial market drive tests in Calgary during the relevant period.

[431] Full market drive tests occurred in Edmonton in August and September, 2010. There were no partial market drive tests in Edmonton during the relevant period.

[432] Full market drive tests occurred in Toronto in June, August to September, September to October and November, 2010. No partial drive tests were conducted in Toronto. Indoor walk testing took place in Toronto in November to December, 2010.

[433] Full market drive tests occurred in Ottawa in July and November, 2010. Indoor walk testing took place in Ottawa in December 2010.

[434] Full market drive tests occurred in Montréal in September 2010. Partial market drive tests occurred in Montréal in October 2010. Three partial market drive tests occurred in different parts of Montréal in November 2010.

[435] It was Mr. Berner's evidence that the deployment of a wireless network is an ongoing iterative process. This means benchmark drive testing must be ongoing. I do not wish to imply that benchmark drive testing should be continuous. Nevertheless, the environment can change and benchmark drive testing must continue to occur to ensure that performance claims are always adequately and properly tested.

[436] Dr. Ziegler testified it was clear that Wind Mobile and Public Mobile operators were building out their networks, and that as a result he would expect changes at least every two months.

[437] Garrick Tiplady testified that removing the fewer dropped calls claim from the market started in October 2010. He testified that television ads, radio spots and print ads can be changed quickly; however, third-party distribution took longer because the respondents did not control the third-party distributors. It was his estimate that, depending on the medium, it would take from 2-6 weeks to remove the fewer dropped calls claim from the market.

[438] The respondents forwarded a timeline to the Competition Bureau that indicated that the fewer dropped calls claim would be showing in television and radio ads until October 11, in digital online ads until November 1, in mini posters until November 8, in brochures until November 11, in third-party retail flyers until November 14, on handset packaging until November 30 and in third-party retailer in-store magazines until November 30, 2010.

[439] Accepting these timelines, as well as Dr. Ziegler's suggestion that two months is about as long as drive test results could be considered current, I am satisfied that the drive tests conducted by the respondents were sufficiently contemporaneous with the fewer dropped calls claim with which we are concerned.

Conclusions concerning hard handoffs, statistical significance and timing of the drive tests

[440] I am satisfied that the Rogers drive test results with which we are concerned should be considered without filtering out hard handoffs.

[441] I am satisfied that the drive tests conducted by the respondents were sufficiently contemporaneous with the fewer dropped calls claim with which we are concerned.

[442] I do not accept the applicant's submission that the Rogers drive testing results support a finding that the fewer dropped calls claim is either false or misleading.

[443] I am satisfied that the Rogers drive testing results are an adequate and proper basis for subsequent claims by Chatr that its network will drop fewer calls than the networks of the new wireless carriers.

[444] I am also satisfied that the Rogers drive testing results that postdate the comparative fewer dropped calls claim are not an adequate and proper test for those claims because s. 74.01(1)(b) has been interpreted as requiring that the adequate and proper testing take place before the performance claim is made.

[445] I am satisfied that the Rogers drive testing results demonstrate that the Rogers 2G network, in a statistically significant way, dropped fewer calls during the relevant period than the networks of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile.

Indoor dropped call rates

[446] The applicant points out that networks may perform differently outdoors than they do indoors. The evidence established that the majority of wireless calls are made indoors. Drive testing is outdoor testing. It is the applicant's position that a claim concerning indoor wireless communications should have been qualified or not made at all.

[447] The applicant submits the fewer dropped calls claim conveyed the general impression that it applied to indoor calls. Having reviewed the ads in question, I agree that the ads with which we are concerned gave the impression to the credulous and technically inexperienced wireless services consumer that the fewer dropped calls claim applied to both indoor and outdoor calls. The applicant maintains that in giving that impression, the fewer dropped calls claim is misleading because Rogers did not conduct tests specifically comparing indoor dropped call rates prior to publicly making the fewer dropped calls claim.

[448] Mr. Michael Tiplady testified that in his experience, the level of radio signal inside a building, although attenuated as it passes through the structure, will generally be in proportion to the level outside. It was his opinion that if one operator had better results than another outdoors, that operator would most certainly have better results indoors at that location.

[449] Nextgen Innovation Labs LLC ("NIL") was retained by Rogers to carry out an independent comparative in-building benchmarking study. The study was meant to determine failed and successful call rates, as well as other key performance indicators on Rogers' 2G network and the networks of Wind Mobile, Public Mobile and others.

[450] The NIL indoor walk testing occurred in Ottawa and Toronto in November and December, 2010. It occurred in Montréal in February and March, 2011.

[451] None of this testing was conducted prior to the launch of Chatr.

[452] Mr. Sushil Chawla, a witness called by the respondents, was qualified to give opinion evidence on comparative in-building and walk testing of wireless network performance, including the testing done for the respondents. Mr. Chawla is Vice President-Innovative Engineering of NIL.

[453] The evidence established that in 2010, indoor testing emerged as a necessary adjunct to drive testing. Mr. Chawla testified that NIL had only begun this type of indoor walk testing in early 2010. He also testified that he was not aware of any other company that offered comparable indoor testing at that time. Michael Tiplady testified that the indoor testing offered by NIL was likely the first of its kind.

[454] The technology to conduct indoor walk testing was not commercially available prior to July 28, 2010, the date of Chatr's launch.

[455] The words adequate and proper have been held to be synonymous with sufficient and appropriate. Traditional or scientific testing is not required. Courts have applied a flexible and contextual analysis when assessing whether a representation is based on an adequate and proper test: see Imperial Brush Co., at para. 122; R.v Big Mac Investments Ltd. (1988), 24 C. P. R. (3d) 39, at p. 45, [1988] M.J. No. 586 (Man. Q.B.).

[456] The evidence established that Rogers had an extensive indoor network in 2010. Mr. Berner testified that Rogers had invested tens of millions of dollars in purchasing, installing and maintaining a network of transmitters, signal repeaters and other such devices in buildings and underground structures to improve coverage. Mr. Berner also testified that for substantial buildings, Rogers deployed an in-building distributed antenna system to transmit signals throughout the building.

[457] Transmitters, signal repeaters and other such devices are not tests but they are capable of confirming an assertion that Rogers' superior outdoor performance, adequately and properly tested by drive tests, was duplicated indoors in the same geographic area. Of course, such confirmation is not possible until drive testing has occurred, because until that time there are no test results from which to extrapolate.

[458] The indoor walk testing results are not capable of being an adequate and proper test of the fewer dropped calls claim because the testing occurred after the performance claims had been made.

[459] The indoor walk testing results are capable of supporting an inference that the 2010 drive test results in Toronto, Ottawa and Montréal adequately and properly tested both outdoor and indoor dropped call performance.

[460] In addition, the evidence is that Wind Mobile and Public Mobile were constantly working to improve their networks. Therefore, any difference in indoor dropped call rates favoring the respondents, and measured in December 2010 or February to March, 2011, was likely to be less than it would have been between July 28 and November 30, 2010. No one suggested that the Wind Mobile or Public Mobile networks worsened over time.

[461] The indoor walk testing results are helpful in deciding whether the respondents' fewer dropped call claim in Ottawa in reference to Wind Mobile was false or misleading. Dr. Nettleton, who was called to give expert evidence by the applicant, testified that the performance of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile at the time of the NIL walk testing was likely better than it was earlier in 2010.

[462] I am satisfied that Rogers made use of indoor walk testing as soon as it was commercially available.

[463] Dr. Nettleton testified that Chatr had superior dropped call rates to Wind Mobile and Public Mobile on those indoor walk tests. I am satisfied that the indoor walk testing results indicated that Chatr had better in-building dropped call rates than Wind Mobile in Toronto and Ottawa, and better in-building dropped call rates than Public Mobile in Toronto and Montréal.

[464] The applicant urged caution with respect to the NIL study. The applicant pointed out that the Toronto study was organized and designed within a few days. The applicant also took the position that NIL did not conform to its methodological criteria.

[465] The applicant also points out that Dr. Ennis did not statistically analyze the NIL results.

[466] It is also clear that NIL used a Blackberry to test Rogers' 2G network in circumstances where Chatr did not offer a Blackberry for sale during the relevant period.

[467] One specific criticism concerns the choice of indoor sites. Prior to retaining NIL, Rogers had conducted its own informal indoor walk testing. NIL indicated that it chose its indoor sites using Google maps. A comparison shows that the sites used by Rogers in its own indoor testing and the sites chosen by NIL for its indoor testing were substantially similar and, in some cases, the sites were listed by both Rogers and NIL in the same order.

[468] Dr. Nettleton, called as an expert by the applicant, offered the opinion that the walk tests were well executed.

[469] I am satisfied that Rogers shared with NIL the locations that it informally tested, and that these locations in Toronto were adopted by NIL. This affects the weight to be given to the indoor testing, because one of the requirements of the indoor walk testing methodology is that the indoor sites be selected randomly. At the same time, a review of the sites indicates that the testing was done in the major indoor locations in Toronto.

[470] The applicant asserts this demonstrates that the NIL indoor walk testing was not independent of the respondents. I do not draw this conclusion. I am satisfied that a shortcut was taken in choosing the locations. I am also satisfied that the appropriate indoor locations in Toronto were tested using well-executed indoor walk tests.

Conclusion concerning indoor walk tests

[471] I am satisfied that the NIL indoor walk tests indicate that Rogers' 2G or GSM network had better dropped call rates than Wind Mobile and Public Mobile in Toronto, Ottawa and Montréal when the indoor walk testing was conducted in December 2010 and early 2011.

[472] The indoor tests were not conducted prior to the fewer dropped calls claim and therefore are not an adequate and proper test of that claim. They do confirm its accuracy with respect to indoor calls at the time of the indoor tests. Because I am satisfied that the networks of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile improved with the passage of time, I am satisfied that the indoor walk tests also confirm that the fewer dropped calls claim was accurate indoors in Toronto, Ottawa and Montréal during the relevant time period.

[473] I do not accept the applicant's contention that the fewer dropped calls claim was misleading because it gave the impression that the claim was true indoors as well as outdoors.

[474] The indoor walk tests cannot be an adequate and proper test within the meaning of s. 74.01(1)(b) because those tests were conducted after the fewer dropped calls claim was published.

Is s. 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act inconsistent with the provisions of the Charter?

[475] The applicant accepts that s. 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act infringes s. 2(b) of the Charter.

[476] The applicant does not concede that s. 74.01(1)(b) infringes s. 11 of the. Charter.

Section 1 and s. 2(b) of the Charter

[477] As a result of the applicant's concession, the only issue to be decided with respect to the infringement of s. 2(b) is whether s. 74.01(1)(b) is a demonstrably justifiable and reasonable limit on the freedom of expression guaranteed by s. 2(b) Charter. The applicant bears the burden of proof concerning this issue.

Does s. 74.01(1)(b) have a pressing and substantial objective?

[478] Sections 74.01(1)(a) and (b) are part of a scheme of protections against false or misleading advertising.

[479] False or misleading claims made intentionally or recklessly are addressed in s. 74.01(1)(a), as well as s. 52, of the Competition Act.

[480] Section 74.01(1)(b) protects against false or misleading performance claims made in the absence of prior adequate and proper testing. These claims may occur because the provider of the good or service is careless about the performance claim, or because the provider of the good or service overconfidently believes that the performance claim is true and therefore has not tested the claim before making it.

[481] The specific aim of s. 74.01(1)(b) is contained in the section itself, namely the prohibition of performance claims in the absence of prior adequate and proper testing. This specific purpose occurs in the context of the purpose of the Competition Act set out in s. 1.1. Section 1.1 provides that the purpose of the Competition Act is as follows:

> [T]o maintain and encourage competition in Canada in order to promote the efficiency and adaptability of the Canadian economy…in order to ensure that small and medium-sized enterprises have an equitable opportunity to participate in the Canadian economy and in order to provide consumers with competitive prices and product choices.

[482] Professor Kenneth Corts, a witness called by the applicant, was qualified as an expert to give opinion evidence on the subject of economics, competition policy, industrial organization economics and business strategy. He discussed the effect of false or misleading performance claims upon the consumer.

[483] Professor Corts explained that the consumer who takes false claims at face value may very well, before discovering that the claim is grossly exaggerated or outright false, misallocate resources by mistakenly purchasing the good or service, by mistakenly buying too much of the product or service or by mistakenly paying too high a price for it. The consumer will, as a result, divert resources from other products that he or she would have been better off buying.

[484] Professor Corts also said that there is harm to competing firms. One type of harm is direct in the sense that consumers divert their demand away from truthful firms providing a higher quality product.

[485] Professor Corts testified that a skeptical consumer will be harmed and will misallocate resources, but not to the same degree as a more naïve consumer. More skeptical consumers also lose confidence in advertising claims in general, which makes it harder for legitimate firms to communicate with them.

[486] In the longer run it becomes very hard for truthful firms to credibly convey the quality of their products, and to be rewarded for producing such products. One consequence of permitting false or misleading claims is that legitimate firms find it more difficult to survive.

[487] Dr. J. Howard Beales III, a witness called by the respondents, was qualified as an expert to give opinion evidence concerning the United States Federal Trade Commission's ("FTC") consumer protection regulation and enforcement. Dr. Beales testified that he had been involved with the FTC for over 25 years, and that during that period he had held a variety of senior positions.

[488] Dr. Beales testified that truthful information in the marketplace promotes market efficiency. It leads to lower prices for consumers. It leads to more product innovation. According to Dr. Beales, "[G]etting truthful information out there is the goal of both the prohibition on deceptive claims and a lot of what the FTC tries to do."

[489] Professor Michael Pearce, a witness called by the respondents, was qualified as an expert to give opinion evidence on marketing to consumers, including the wireless industry in Canada. He agreed that false or misleading representations are harmful to competition, consumers and competitive firms.

[490] Parliament is not required to provide scientific proof based on concrete evidence of the problem that it seeks to address. If the social science evidence relating the harm to Parliament's measures is inconclusive or conflicting, the court may rely on a reasoned apprehension of that harm. In Thomson Newspapers Co. v. Canada, [1998] 1 S.C.R. 877, evidence concerning the influence of polls on voters' choices was uncertain, nevertheless a majority of the Supreme Court of Canada concluded that the possible influence of polls on voters' choices was a legitimate harm that Parliament could seek to remedy, and thus was a pressing and substantial objective: see also Harper v. Canada, 2004 SCC 33, [2004] 1 S.C.R. 827, at paras. 77-78.

[491] No one suggested that the publication of false or misleading claims was a benefit.

[492] I am satisfied that the protection of consumers, competitive firms and competition from the harmful effects of false or misleading performance claims is the ultimate objective to which s. 74.01(1)(b) is directed. I am satisfied that it is a pressing and substantial objective.

The rational connection between s. 74.01(1)(b) and the protection of consumers, competitive firms and competition from the harmful effects of false or misleading performance claims [493] It seems reasonable, and almost intuitive, to suppose that prohibiting the advertising of untested claims will reduce the publication of false or misleading claims and their attendant harmful effects.

[494] It seems reasonable to suppose that it will, for the most part, be impossible to adequately and properly substantiate a false claim.

[495] It is possible that a claim can be adequately and properly substantiated and later turn out to be false due to the availability of more accurate testing. The Competition Act addresses this possibility. It provides that in such a situation, the only remedy available to the applicant is an order that the false representation cease. No administrative monetary penalty can be imposed.

[496] The FTC introduced a substantiation policy in the United States in the mid-1970s. Two academic papers were introduced into evidence that considered the effect of the introduction of the policy on advertising claims. The papers were published in peer-reviewed journals. Both papers concluded that the introduction of a substantiation requirement resulted in an increase in the credibility of advertising. The John Healey and Harold Kassarjian paper, published in 1983, concluded that "[o]n overview it appears that advertisers were more conscientious about claims being made after being asked to provide substantiation."

[497] In Canada, it has been held in Alberta v. Hutterian Brethren of Wilson Colony, 2009 SCC 37, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 567, at para. 48, that to establish a rational connection, "[t]he government must show that it is reasonable to suppose that the limit may further the goal, not that it will do so."

[498] The Supreme Court of Canada has stressed the need for deference when considering the rational connection test. Specifically, in Canada (Attorney General) v. JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007 SCC 30, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 610, at para. 41, the court stated the following:

> Deference may be appropriate in assessing whether the requirement of rational connection is made out. Effective answers to complex social problems… may not be simple or evident. There may be room for debate about what will work and what will not, and the outcome may not be scientifically measurable. Parliament's decision as to what means to adopt should be accorded considerable deference in such cases.

[499] Section 74.01(1)(a), which prohibits false claims, will not deter a firm that overconfidently believes that a false performance claim about its product is true.

However, s. 74.01(1)(b) will prevent the overconfident firm from mistakenly making a false performance claim because it will require testing of the claim before it can be made.

[500] If the Competition Bureau was confronted with a performance claim that it believed to be false, it could demand the testing upon which the claim was based. In the absence of such testing, the Bureau could move to prevent the claim from being made. This would not be possible if only s. 74.01(1)(a) was available. If the only recourse was s. 74.01(1)(a), the Competition Bureau, in order to obtain an injunction, would require evidence proving that the claim was likely false.

[501] I am satisfied that there is a rational connection between s. 74.01(1)(b) and the protection of consumers, competitive firms and competition from the harmful effects of false or misleading performance claims.

Does s. 74.01(1)(b) interfere as little as possible with the right to freedom of expression?

[502] This case concerns the fewer dropped calls claim. There are three significant possibilities: the claim is true; the claim is false; and the applicant cannot prove the claim is false, while the respondents cannot prove the claim is true.

The claim is true

[503] Section 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act interferes with the freedom to express the true claim by first requiring substantiation. If the claim is tested properly, the testing will likely suggest that the claim is true, and the claim can be made publicly.

[504] Section 74.01(1)(b) can also interfere with the expression of this claim despite the fact that it is true. This could occur in circumstances where the cost of testing the claim appears to exceed the likely increase in revenues to be gained by publicizing the claim. Such a situation implies that the market for the product or service is either small or relatively unprofitable.

The claim is false

[505] Section 74.01(1)(b) interferes with the freedom to express the false claim by first requiring substantiation. The applicant is not required to demonstrate in a prima facie way that the claim is false before taking steps to prevent its continued publication.

[506] No one suggested that it was in the public interest to permit the public expression of false claims.

[507] Section 74.01(1)(a) of the Competition Act already prohibits the expression of false claims. Accordingly, s. 74.01(1)(b) does not further interfere with the freedom to express a false claim because such a freedom never existed.

The applicant cannot prove the claim is false and the respondents cannot prove the claim is true (the uncertain claim)

[508] Section 74.01(1)(b) prohibits the publication of the uncertain claim unless it is substantiated.

[509] The respondents urge that the uncertain claim be permitted to enter the marketplace until the applicant can demonstrate that it is false. The respondents argue that this is less impairing of freedom of expression than s. 74.01(1)(b).

[510] In putting this position forward, the respondents are urging a policy choice that is different than the one chosen by Parliament.

[511] The respondents' policy choice is less impairing of freedom of expression because it forces the marketplace to tolerate the risk that the uncertain claim is false. Parliament chose not to tolerate that risk by insisting that the uncertain claim be substantiated before it is made.

[512] Parliament decided not to permit the uncertain claim to enter the marketplace because it might be false. The respondents urge the court to permit the uncertain claim to enter the market place because it might be true.

[513] Professor Corts pointed out that if the law only contains a false claim penalty, a firm will reason that its exposure to that penalty is related to the probability of enforcement and whether they think the claim is false. The firm that is overconfident about the truth of the performance claim will discount a false claims penalty dramatically because it does not believe the claim is false. Such a firm would not discount a substantiation requirement or the penalty for the lack of substantiation because they know that they are subject to that penalty whether the untested claim is true or false.

[514] In RJR-MacDonald v. Canada, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 199, at para. 160, the Supreme Court of Canada made the following statement:

> The impairment must be "minimal", that is, the law must be carefully tailored so that rights are impaired no more than necessary. The tailoring process seldom admits of perfection and the courts must accord some leeway to the legislator. If the law falls within a range of reasonable alternatives, the courts will not find it overbroad merely because they can conceive of an alternative which might better tailor objective to infringement…

[515] Similarly, the choice of a reasonable policy alternative from a range of reasonable policy alternatives is a matter in which the courts must accord some leeway to the legislator.

[516] The minimal impairment test under s. 1 of the Charter should not be used to force Parliament to adopt the policy decision that the marketplace will be better off with a higher tolerance for false performance claims.

[517] Section 74.01(1)(b) applies only to performance claims. In the United States, the FTC substantiation policy applies to "objective claims." The only claims exempted from the FTC substantiation requirement are subjective or immaterial claims. For example, the claim that Rogers used low frequency spectrum is an objective claim for which substantiation would be required in the United States but not in Canada. I refer to this in order to demonstrate that Parliament has narrowed the scope of s. 74.01(1)(b). This is relevant when applying the minimal impairment test.

[518] I recognize that s. 74.01(1)(b) is not restricted to performance claims that are "material," but rather applies to all performance claims, whereas the FTC regulatory regime focuses on material claims. However, this is not a differentiating characteristic because the evidence established that the FTC presumes performance claims to be material. Specifically the FTC presumes that performance claims might affect a consumer's decision in relation to the product. I agree with this presumption. It is impossible to believe that a performance claim would be immaterial to a consumer's decision in relation to a product. Accordingly, I am satisfied that limiting s. 74.01(1)(b) to performance claims incorporates the notion of materiality into the section. I do not view the absence of the word material in s. 74.01(1)(b) as indicative that the section is overbroad.

[519] Evidence was led that established that in the United States, the substantiation of a claim after it has been disseminated may inform the FTC's decision to commence proceedings. Obviously the applicant has the same discretion in Canada. However, the fact that the applicant, like all applicants, may elect not to proceed, is unhelpful as far as the minimal impairment test is concerned.

[520] The courts have applied a flexible and contextual analysis when assessing whether a representation is based on an adequate and proper test.

[521] The applicant has suggested that in order for a test to be proper and adequate, testing must be done to a 95 per cent confidence level. I have not accepted that submission. The burden of proof is upon the respondents to prove adequate and proper testing on a balance of probabilities. No higher standard of proof can logically be required to prove a fact relevant to whether that standard of proof has been met.

[522] The applicant has suggested that the notion of a test requires elimination of the possibility that the result relied upon was a chance occurrence. This is simply consistent with the requirement that a claim be tested. I take the same view of the applicant's suggestion that the sample tested must be a representative one. These suggested requirements of s. 74.01(1)(b) do not additionally impair freedom of expression beyond the impairment flowing from the use of the phrase "an adequate and proper test thereof."

[523] As stated elsewhere, the respondents urge that the uncertain claim be permitted to enter the marketplace until the applicant can demonstrate that it is false. While this may be less impairing, it does not address Parliament's conclusion that the harm resulting from false uncertain claims is so significant that it is better to prohibit all uncertain claims. Parliament is entitled to a measure of deference and I accept its conclusion in this regard.

[524] When I consider all of this, I come to the conclusion that s. 74.01(1)(b) only minimally impairs the fundamental freedom guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Charter.

Do the benefits of s. 74.01(1)(b) outweigh its deleterious effects?

[525] At the risk of stating the obvious, a few preliminary observations are necessary. Section 74.01(1)(b) does not affect a truthful performance claim that can be tested in advance. Prohibiting a false claim from entering the marketplace is not a deleterious effect. Section 74.01(1)(b) requires substantiation of performance claims only. The reference to performance claims incorporates the notion of materiality because performance claims will always affect a consumer's decision with respect to a product or service.

[526] One deleterious effect of s. 74.01(1)(b) is that a truthful performance claim that cannot be proven true, or cannot be substantiated prior to publication, will be withheld from consumers. Related to this effect is the fact that post-publication substantiation is not a complete answer to an allegation of reviewable conduct.

[527] A second proposed deleterious effect is that a performance claim may be ambiguous. As a result, the provider may undertake a number of tests to cover all possible interpretations of the performance claim and pass those costs on to the consumer. Alternatively the provider may guess at the interpretation and face prosecution if the guess is wrong. Finally, the provider might decide to drop the claim.

[528] Professor Moorthy offered the opinion that if the provider chooses to perform all possible tests, this will delay the dissemination of the truthful information and increase the cost of the good or service.

[529] Obviously, guessing at the interpretation exposes the provider to the risk of proceedings and dropping the claim deprives the consumer of truthful information.

[530] Section 74.01(1)(b) is not ambiguous. Language in a performance claim, on the other hand, can always be ambiguous and require interpretation. In addition, disputes can arise about whether a claim is a performance claim. This problem cannot be avoided. This is not a deleterious effect associated with s. 74.01(1)(b); it is a deleterious effect associated with language itself.

[531] One benefit of s. 74.01(1)(b) is that a performance claim that cannot be proven true or false prior to publication, but which is in fact false, will be withheld from the marketplace.

[532] Professor Moorthy expressed the opinion that by restricting the provision of information, the Competition Act makes it difficult for those who provide goods and services to make people aware of their product. In his opinion, it could hinder the ability of those persons to disseminate the truth about the strength of their product.

[533] However, it is also true that when a performance claim that cannot be proven in advance to be true or false, but which turns out to be false, is permitted to enter the marketplace, a negative effect on consumers' confidence in advertising will result. The provider of the good or service may be able to more readily convey information but the consumer is likely to be less willing to accept it. Preventing performance claims that cannot be proven in advance to be true or false will, at a minimum, maintain the current level of consumer confidence in advertising claims and presumably make it easier for providers of goods and services to communicate with consumers. I do not accept Professor Moorthy's opinion in this regard. I prefer the evidence of Dr. Corts.

[534] Dr. Corts testified that in his opinion, lowering the incidence of unsubstantiated claims increases consumer confidence and allows more truthful firms to more credibly and more reliably communicate their information to consumers.

[535] Dr. Beales testified that the FTC believes that an onerous substantiation requirement might deter truthful advertisements.

[536] Section 74.01(1)(b) does not impose an onerous substantiation requirement. The words adequate and proper have been held to be synonymous with sufficient and appropriate. Traditional or scientific testing is not required. I have stated elsewhere in these reasons that I do not accept the applicant's suggestion that 95 per cent testing certainty is required. Courts have applied a flexible and contextual analysis when assessing whether a representation is based on an adequate and proper test.

[537] As a practical matter, this is not a case in which the respondents were prevented from making a truthful claim because they were unable to substantiate it in advance. The respondents did make the fewer dropped calls claim. The respondents claim that in the case of more than one city, they proved the fewer dropped calls claim in advance. This Application arises because the Competition Bureau has a contrary view. Even if s. 74.01(1)(b) was not in the Competition Act, the respondents would still be in court because the Competition Bureau considers the fewer dropped calls claim to be both false and misleading.

[538] Professor Moorthy noted that due to the Internet, modern day consumers have much more product information available at their fingertips. He pointed out that there are many websites where consumers comment on products, and that there are review sites for products that are very easily accessible. Professor Moorthy expressed the opinion that the Internet has increased market efficiency because consumers have better information when making decisions. It was also his opinion that competitors could use the Internet to dispute comparative performance claims.

[539] Professor Corts was of the opinion that a substantiation requirement was necessary despite the advent of the Internet. He referred to a paper entitled: "Market Transparency via the Internet, A New Challenge for Consumer Policy." Professor Corts expressed the opinion that the Internet has provided much more information for consumers, but not necessarily better information. Professor Corts noted that the same problems concerning the source of information arise whether the information is disseminated on the Internet or traditionally. He pointed out that consumer sites on the Internet can be quite extreme, and can be manipulated by firms who have people posing as consumers and posting comments.

[540] It is undoubtedly correct that modern consumers have access to more information, and I am satisfied that this means that fewer people will be deceived by false ads because the false claims will be discovered sooner. I am not satisfied, however, that this addresses the loss of confidence in advertising that results when people realize that they have been duped by or exposed to false advertising claims.

[541] As noted earlier, Professor Moorthy suggested that one effect of s. 74.01(1)(b) and the related sections dealing with administrative monetary penalties might be to cause companies to avoid any risk of contravention of the Competition Act by not making even truthful claims, thereby depriving consumers of helpful information.

[542] It was Dr. Corts' opinion that imposing a penalty for an unsubstantiated claim would not suppress the communication of true information.

[543] Dr. Corts also expressed the opinion that monetary penalties reduce false, misleading and unsubstantiated representations because they raise the cost of making those representations, making such behavior less attractive. It was his opinion that this would also have the effect of making sure that market prices provide appropriate incentives for firms to invest in innovation and new products, and otherwise remain in the market.

[544] When I consider the conflicting social science evidence, as well as the other evidence tendered in this Application, I am satisfied that the benefit from protecting consumers, competitive firms and competition from the harmful effects of false or misleading performance claims outweighs the deleterious effects of preventing a true claim that cannot be tested in advance from entering the marketplace.

[545] Accordingly, I am satisfied by the evidence that s. 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act is a demonstrably justified reasonable limit prescribed by law, to which the fundamental freedom described in paragraph 2(b) of the Charter is subject.

Does the $10 million administrative monetary penalty provided for in the Competition Act engage s. 11 of the Charter?

[546] Section 11 of the Charter provides certain enumerated rights for any person "charged with an offence." The respondents have not received the benefit of all of these rights. Accordingly the question is whether the respondents are "charged with an offence".

[547] In Regina v. Wigglesworth [1987] 2 S.C.R. 541, at pp. 558-559, the Supreme Court of Canada decided that matters which fell within the ambit of s. 11 were "criminal and penal matters." The court also stated more specifically that "criminal and penal matters" meant proceedings that were by their very nature criminal, or when a conviction in respect of the matter could lead to a "true penal consequence." In that same decision, the court stated in part at p. 561, that a "true penal consequence" attracting protection under s. 11 of the Charter could be a fine that, "by its magnitude would appear to be imposed for the purpose of redressing the wrong done to society at large rather than to the maintenance of internal discipline within the limited sphere of activity."

[548] This Application does not carry with it the possibility that the respondents would be imprisoned. It was commenced as an Application pursuant to the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, in the Province of Ontario. These proceedings were regulatory in nature. This Application was initiated to further and encourage public confidence in advertising in the context of the Competition Act's purpose, as set out in s. 1.1 of the Act.

[549] The Competition Act has repeatedly been described as a regulatory statute: see R. v. Wholesale Travel Group, [1991] 3 S.C.R 154, at pp. 222-223. The legislative history of s. 74.01 makes it clear that the 1999 amendments to the Competition Act, which created the provisions in issue, were designed to remove the regulation of deceptive marketing practices from the realm of criminal law.

[550] When I consider the objectives of the Competition Act and the deceptive marketing practices provisions, the provisions of s. 74.1(4) of the Competition Act describing the purpose of the administrative monetary penalties with which this Application is concerned and the civil Application process leading to the imposition in appropriate cases of administrative monetary penalties, I am satisfied that these proceedings are not by their nature "criminal."

[551] This Application does carry with it the possibility of an administrative monetary penalty of $10 million on a first finding of reviewable conduct, and $15 million on subsequent findings.

[552] Accordingly, the question is whether such an administrative monetary penalty is a fine "which by its magnitude would appear to be imposed for the purpose of redressing the wrong done to society at large rather than to the maintenance of internal discipline within the limited sphere of activity."

[553] Professor Corts offered the opinion that an administrative monetary penalty has to be large enough to offset the anticipated gains from making the false, misleading or unsubstantiated representations. Professor Corts was of the view that higher administrative monetary penalties are necessary when dealing with a larger market because a shift in consumer demand in a larger market leads to larger increases in profits.

[554] Professor Corts also considered that part of the incremental profit from false, misleading or unsubstantiated representations is that they induce competing firms to exit the market. This means that the firm making the representations will be more profitable in the long run. Professor Corts offered the opinion that this has to be considered when assessing the appropriate administrative monetary penalty. Professor Corts testified that this was especially true if the competitor firms had undertaken huge investments and were beginning to enter the market; such firms would be trying to pay back some of the capital that they had raised, develop a loyal customer base and establish their brand name. Dr. Corts testified that if demand was inappropriately diverted from them at such a time, they would find it much more difficult to become viable competitors of the offending firm.

[555] Finally, Professor Corts pointed out that firms with more resources will find monetary penalties less deterring because they can withstand the penalty. In this regard, the evidence established that at the time of the Advanced Wireless Spectrum auction, the wireless sector of the Canadian telecommunications industry generated approximately $12.7 billion. At that time, Rogers, Bell Canada and TELUS dominated the wireless market with 94 per cent of the subscribers and 95 per cent of the revenues.

[556] The Competition Act is quite specific concerning the purpose of the administrative monetary penalty. Section 74.1(4) provides that the terms of any order made against a person under paragraph (1)(b), (c) or (d) shall be determined with a view to promoting conduct by that person that is in conformity with the Deceptive Marketing Practices Part of the Act, and not with a view to punishment. This section of the Competition Act clearly informs any Application of the principle of proportionality at the penalty-fixing stage of proceedings under s. 74.01(1)(b). Section 74.1(4) also overrides statements made when this Application was launched which suggested that the quantum of the administrative monetary penalty should reflect the "egregious activity" engaged in by the respondents.

[557] A consideration of these factors and the balance of the evidence satisfies me that the administrative monetary penalties provided for in s. 74.1(1)(c) are not "true penal consequences."

[558] Accordingly, I am satisfied that the $10 million administrative monetary penalty provided for in s. 74.1(1)(c) does not engage s. 11 of the Charter.

Final Conclusions

[559] I am satisfied that it is dangerous, based on the evidence in this Application, to place significant weight on switch generated dropped call rates when determining whether the Chatr fewer dropped calls comparative performance claim was false or misleading.

[560] Because the applicant's assertion that the fewer dropped calls claim is false is based to a significant degree upon switch generated data, I am not satisfied that the applicant has proven on a balance of probabilities that the respondents' fewer dropped calls claim was false in Ottawa with respect to Wind Mobile from July 28, 2010, to November 30, 2010. I would have come to a similar conclusion concerning Videotron in Montréal but for the fact that I have concluded elsewhere in these reasons that a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer in the Province of Québec would not have considered Videotron a new wireless carrier.

[561] I am not satisfied due to the applicant's reliance on switch generated data that the applicant has proven on a balance of probabilities that the respondents' fewer dropped calls claim was misleading in Calgary, Edmonton and Toronto with respect to Wind Mobile from July 28, 2010, to November 30, 2010.

[562] I am satisfied that had Mobilicity produced the data requested by the applicant, it would have demonstrated that the respondents' network dropped fewer calls than Mobilicity's network from July 28, 2010, to November 30, 2010.

[563] I am satisfied that a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer expected that dropped calls would be fewer on the Chatr network, and that he or she would have "no worries about dropped calls" on the Chatr network. I am not satisfied that a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer viewing the Chatr ads expected that the difference between the dropped call experience on the respondents' network and the dropped call experience on the Wind Mobile or Public Mobile networks would be so pronounced that it would be discernible.

[564] Accordingly, I am not satisfied with the applicant's assertion that the fewer dropped calls claim is misleading unless there is a discernible difference in dropped call rates among the respondents, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile.

[565] I do not accept the applicant's contention that the fewer dropped calls claim is misleading because the dropped call rates of Wind Mobile and Chatr in Calgary were, during the relevant period, below what it termed the one per cent threshold for dropped calls.

[566] I do not accept the applicant's contention that the fewer dropped calls claim was misleading because it gave the impression that the claim was true indoors as well as outdoors. I am satisfied that the networks of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile improved with the passage of time. I am therefore satisfied that the indoor walk test results confirmed that the fewer dropped calls claim was accurate in Toronto, Ottawa and Montréal, both indoors as well as outdoors, from July 28, 2010, to November 30, 2010.

[567] I am satisfied that the Rogers benchmark drive testing results provided an adequate and proper basis for the fewer dropped calls claim made subsequent to that drive testing.

[568] I am satisfied that the Rogers drive testing in fact adequately and properly tested the fewer dropped calls claim made subsequent to that drive testing.

[569] I do not accept the applicant's submission that the Rogers drive testing results support a finding that the fewer dropped calls claim is either false or misleading.

[570] I am satisfied that drive tests conducted after the fewer dropped calls claim was made are helpful in deciding whether the claim was true, false or misleading when it was made.

[571] I am satisfied by the evidence that, during the time frame with which we are concerned, Videotron was an established brand in the Province of Québec.

[572] I am satisfied that a credulous and technically inexperienced consumer of unlimited talk and text wireless services in Québec would not view Videotron as captured by the references to "les nouveaux opérateurs sans-fil" in the contentious ads.

[573] I am satisfied that the general impression given by the fewer dropped calls claim is that the advantages of fewer dropped calls and a more reliable network were available to consumers in each Chatr zone (appels illimités sans souci dans ta zone chatr) (emphasis added). I am also satisfied that the literal meaning of the contentious claims is consistent with this general impression.

[574] I am satisfied by the evidence that s. 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act is a demonstrably justified reasonable limit prescribed by law, to which the fundamental freedom described in paragraph 2(b) of the Charter is subject.

[575] The $10 million administrative monetary penalty provided for in s. 74.1(1)(c) does not engage s. 11 of the Charter.

[576] I am satisfied that the respondents failed to conduct an adequate and proper test in Calgary and Edmonton prior to making the fewer dropped calls claim at the time of Chatr's launch in those cities on July 28, 2010, and therefore engaged in reviewable conduct contrary to s. 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act.

[577] I am satisfied that the respondents failed to conduct an adequate and proper test in Toronto against Public Mobile prior making the fewer dropped calls claim at the time of Chatr's launch in Toronto on July 28, 2010, and thereby engaged in reviewable conduct contrary to s. 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act.

[578] I am satisfied that the respondents failed to conduct an adequate and proper test in Montréal against Public Mobile prior to making the fewer dropped calls claim at the time of Chatr's launch in Montréal on September 16, 2010, and thereby engaged in reviewable conduct contrary to s. 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act.

[579] Pursuant to s. 137(2) of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990 c. C. 43, information previously ruled confidential which was referred to during the hearing of the Application will remain confidential.

Marrocco J.

Released: August 19, 2013

CITATION: Canada (Competition Bureau) v. Chatr Wireless Inc., 2013 ONSC 5315
COURT FILE NO.: CV-10-8993-00 CL
DATE: 20130819

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

THE COMMISSIONER OF COMPETITION

Applicant

– and –

CHATR WIRELESS INC. AND ROGERS COMMUNICATIONS INC.

Respondents

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

Marrocco J

Released: August 19, 2013

CITATION: Canada (Commissioner of Competition) v. Chatr Wireless Inc., 2014 ONSC 1146
COURT FILE NO.: CV-10-8993-00 CL
DATE: 20140221

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:	)
	)
THE COMMISSIONER OF COMPETITION	)	J. Thomas Curry, Jaan Lilles, Paul Erik Veel, for the Applicant
	)
Applicant	)
	)
– and –	)
	)	Kent Thomson, Anita Banicevic, James Bunting, Sean Campbell, for the Respondents
CHATR WIRELESS INC. AND ROGERS COMMUNICATIONS INC.	)
	)
Respondents	)
	)
	)
	)
	)	HEARD: January 14, 2014

REASONS FOR PENALTY

MARROCCO A.C.J.S.C.

[1] This court found that the respondents had failed to conduct adequate and proper tests prior to claiming that Chatr Wireless Inc. ("Chatr Wireless") dropped fewer calls than Wind Mobile in Calgary and Edmonton and Public Mobile in Toronto and Montréal.

[2] The "fewer dropped calls" claim appeared on Chatr Wireless' website, in press releases, in media statements, in social media and in the fine print on Chatr handset packaging.

[3] Failure to conduct an adequate and proper test prior to making a performance claim to the public is defined as reviewable conduct in section 74.01(1)(b) of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34 (the "Act"). Section 74.01 is located in Part VII.1 which is entitled Deceptive Marketing Practices.

[4] The applicant also alleged that the fewer dropped calls claim was false and misleading under s. 74.01(1)(a) but they were not successful on this point.

[5] Where a court determines that a person has engaged in reviewable conduct, the court may issue a variety of orders pursuant to s. 74.1(1). In this case the applicant seeks orders that:

- The respondents not engage in similar reviewable conduct for a period of 10 years (s. 74(1)(a))
- The respondents pay a $5-7 million administrative monetary penalty (s. 74(1)(c))

[6] There are three factors which distinguish this case from others referred to me by the parties:

1. The applicant failed to prove that the fewer dropped calls claim was false or misleading.
2. The respondents continued testing the fewer dropped calls claim after publicly making it.
3. The respondents' post-claim testing substantiated the fewer dropped calls claim.

Misrepresentations under the Act

[7] As noted above, s. 74.01(1)(a), which prohibits false claims, was alleged but not made out by the applicant. That section will not deter an overconfident firm that honestly but mistakenly believes a false performance claim about its product.

[8] Permitting untested claims to be made in the marketplace will decrease consumer confidence because some claims will turn out to be false or misleading. Section 74.01(1)(b) is preventative. It prevents untested false or misleading claims because it requires testing prior to publication. The ultimate objective of s. 74.01(1)(b) is the protection of consumers, competitive firms and competition from the harmful effects of untested performance claims.

[9] When the respondents published the untested fewer dropped calls claim, they ran the risk that the claim might be false. In this way they disregarded Parliament's decision that the harm to consumers, competitive firms and competition from this risk outweighed the cost of prior testing. The fact that, in this particular case, post-claim testing substantiated the claim does not address this aspect of the matter.

[10] A court that finds a person has engaged in reviewable conduct can order an administrative monetary penalty under s. 74.1(1)(b) of the Act. An administrative monetary penalty decreases the number of unsubstantiated claims by raising the cost of making them.

[11] It is not sufficient for the respondents to know the claim is true because it was based on technological facts or experience, publicity regarding the matter, or any other basis. Parliament did not create a technological facts or experience exception to s. 74.01(1)(b). Performance claims must have a foundation in adequate and proper testing.

Proportionality

[12] Subsection 74.1(4) declares that the purpose of any remedial order made under Part VII.1 is the promotion of conduct which conforms to the purposes of that Part of the Competition Act. Therefore the amount of any administrative monetary penalty ordered must be proportional with the nature of the person whose conduct one seeks to change.

[13] The evidence established that in early 2008, the wireless telecommunications industry in Canada was dominated by three large national carriers and a number of smaller regional providers. The three national wireless carriers, Rogers Communications Inc. ("Rogers"), Bell Canada Enterprises Inc. ("Bell") and Telus Communications Co. ("Telus"), accounted for 94% of wireless subscribers and 95% of wireless revenues.

[14] Rogers' 2010 Annual Report states that it provided wireless communications service to approximately nine million subscribers, representing 36% of all Canadian wireless subscribers. Rogers' Wireless Division generated operating revenue of $6.968 billion. Its adjusted wireless operating profit margin as a percentage of network revenue was 48.2%.

[15] Proportionality also requires keeping in mind the counterbalancing effects of the respondents' reviewable conduct, such as loss of reputation. Genuine companies like the respondents are loathe to see their reputations damaged and it can be assumed they will take steps to prevent this from happening again in the future. In this way, the counterbalancing effects of reviewable conduct will generally have a conformist effect and thus will reduce the amount of the monetary penalty.

[16] In applying the principle of proportionality the court also has to keep in mind that there is no notion of general deterrence in subsection 74.1(4).

Public Mobile in Toronto and Montreal

[17] The evidence established that the respondents never conducted an adequate and proper test against Public Mobile in Toronto or Montréal.

Toronto

[18] Chatr Wireless launched in Toronto on July 28, 2010. Expedited drive testing, which was not an adequate and proper test, comparing Chatr Wireless and Public Mobile was conducted in Toronto between September 26 and October 2, 2010. The respondents updated their Toronto results on November 2, 2010. The respondents also conducted indoor and outdoor walk testing comparisons between their network and Public Mobile in Toronto between November 29 and December 3, 2010.

[19] The evidence indicated that at that time there was a limited selection of handsets compatible with Public Mobile's network due to the high-frequency wireless spectrum purchased by Public Mobile at the 2008 spectrum auction. The evidence indicated that, when the respondents sought a handset compatible with both the Public Mobile network and their drive testing equipment, the selection was limited to the Samsung R-312. This handset was not readily available and drive testing against Public Mobile was delayed. The respondents knew, however, that this difficulty did not justify disregarding the Competition Act requirement to test the fewer dropped calls performance claim prior to publicly making it.

Montréal

[20] Chatr Wireless launched in Montréal on September 16, 2010. The respondents began making the fewer dropped calls claim on that date. Expedited drive testing, which was not an adequate and proper test, ran from September 15-19, 2010. Even if the expedited drive tests had been adequate and proper, which they were not, the results were not known on September 16, 2010 when the campaign launched.

[21] Partial drive testing comparing Chatr Wireless and Public Mobile in Montréal North, Montréal Centre and Montréal West occurred on October 2, November 1-9 and 26, 2010.

[22] Indoor and outdoor walk testing comparing Chatr Wireless and Public Mobile was conducted in Montréal between February 24 and March 3, 2011 but this was after the period with which we are concerned: July 28, 2010 - November 30, 2010. The indoor and outdoor walk testing could not therefore satisfy section 74.01(1)(b).

[23] The evidence did establish, however, that the Wind Mobile and Public Mobile networks improved over time because it takes time for a new wireless network to establish its operational rhythm. As a result, these indoor and outdoor walk testing results understate the respondents' dropped call advantage during the timeframe of this application.

Wind Mobile in Calgary and Edmonton

[24] The evidence established that the respondents did not conduct adequate and proper testing in Calgary and Edmonton against Wind Mobile before publicly making the fewer dropped calls representation commencing July 28, 2010.

Calgary

Drive testing results from August 6, 2010 comparing the respondents' 2G network in Calgary, which was the network generally available for Chatr Wireless customers, and Wind Mobile's 3G network, which was the network available to Wind customers, were lost at the time of the testing. Drive testing results comparing the respondents' 3G network with Wind Mobile's 3G network were not lost. Those results confirmed that the respondents' 3G network dropped fewer calls than Wind Mobile's 3G network. The respondents claim that, since their 2G network outperformed their 3G network in Calgary in 2010, it can be inferred that their 2G network would have outperformed Wind Mobile's 3G network during the relevant timeframe. However, even if this inference counted as an adequate and proper test, it could not have been made based on annual performance measures because in July, August and September 2010 the yearly performance of the respondents' 2G network versus their 3G network was not yet available.

Edmonton

[25] Drive testing substantiating the respondents' fewer dropped calls claim against Wind Mobile in Edmonton was completed on August 5, 2010.

Due Diligence

[26] Subsection 74.1(3) of the Competition Act provides that if a person against whom a finding of reviewable conduct has been made exercised due diligence to prevent the conduct from occurring, no order can be made against them. Due diligence does not apply to prevent a finding of reviewable conduct. The burden of establishing due diligence rests on the respondents.

[27] In determining whether the respondents have shown due diligence the court must consider whether, despite their failure to perform adequate and proper testing, the respondents: (1) took all reasonable steps appropriate for their business to avoid publicly making the fewer dropped calls claim without adequate and proper testing, or (2) reasonably believed in a mistaken set of facts that, if true, would have meant they had adequately and properly tested the claim: see R. v. Sault Ste. Marie, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299, at 1326.

[28] The respondents knew that it was necessary to test performance claims before making them. The respondents knew months in advance that they were going to launch Chatr Wireless in the summer of 2010 and that its core message was going to be the fewer dropped calls performance claim. The respondents had an ongoing drive test programme, implemented in 2005 at a cost of $20 million, that they used to compare their network's performance with that of their competitors. They could have used this programme to adequately and properly test the claim before making it in the relevant markets but they did not.

[29] To the extent that the respondents did test the claim, they were not relying upon tests conducted by others. The respondents were relying on their own comparative drive testing results. The respondents' experience comparing their network with the Wind Mobile and Public Mobile networks can be an adequate and proper test: see R. v. Big Mac Investments Ltd. (1988), 24 C.P.R. (3d) 39 (Man. Q.B.). In that case the defendant was selling a weight loss machine. A principal of the defendant had used the machine over an extended period of time and had recorded her results. She had also investigated the operations of other clinics using the weight loss machine and recorded the weight loss experienced by hundreds of users. On appeal the court held that this evidence was relevant to the trial court's determination that the performance claim for the weight loss machine had been adequately tested.

[30] In this application the respondents made the performance claim against Wind Mobile in Calgary and Edmonton, and Public Mobile in Toronto and Montréal, before they had their own comparative drive test results. The respondents argue that despite this fact they were duly diligent on several bases.

Technological facts

[31] There was a deliberate decision to make the fewer dropped calls claim against Wind Mobile and Public Mobile based on results inferred from technological facts suggesting the superiority of the respondents' networks, including higher cell site density, indoor transmission systems, low-frequency spectrum and seamless handoffs. In other words, the respondents inferred that certain key facts about their network meant it would perform better than the networks of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile. The respondents deliberately chose to rely upon these technological facts rather than testing.

[32] Mr. Garrick Tiplady testified that, following discussions with Rogers' legal, regulatory and network teams, a decision was made to perform drive testing prior to launch as additional support for the comparative performance claims. When I consider the evidence, I am satisfied that there was no mistaken belief on the part of the respondents' that reliance on these technological facts constituted an adequate and proper test of the fewer dropped calls claim.

[33] Even if I had not made this finding, the belief that inferring fewer dropped calls from higher cell site density, low-frequency spectrum, indoor transmission systems and seamless handoffs is an adequate and proper comparative test is a legal conclusion about the proper interpretation of s. 74.01(b). It is not a belief, mistaken or otherwise, in a fact or set of facts. Rather, it is a mistake of law and cannot serve as a basis for a finding of due diligence: La Souveraine, Compagnie d'assurance générale v. Autorité des marches financiers, 2013 SCC 63, at para. 65.

[34] If the respondents thought that technological facts that were true in Calgary and Edmonton could, when coupled with drive test results from Vancouver, constitute adequate and proper testing of the fewer dropped calls claim, the respondents' view was an erroneous legal conclusion about whether the adequate and proper test requirement in the Competition Act had been met.

Sampling

[35] The respondents argue that the industry practice was to rely on drive test sampling to support performance claims. Sufficient sampling means that testing need not be required in every market. The respondents referred to the 2006 Cingular Wireless Corporation decision of the U.S. National Advertising Division of the Better Business Bureaus: see NAD Case Report #4508 (May 26, 2006). In that case Sprint challenged Cingular's "more bars in more places" national advertising claim. Cingular successfully defended by relying upon drive testing conducted on a sampling basis. The sampling results were held to be sufficient to support Cingular's national performance claim. The drive testing sample consisted of results from drive tests conducted in the top 200 markets in the United States.

[36] Chatr Wireless launched in six top Canadian markets. It failed to test against Wind Mobile in two of those six top markets and against Public Mobile in another two of those six top markets. The respondents could not have reasonably believed that failing to test in several markets altogether amounted to sampling similar to that conducted by Cingular Wireless.

Validity of drive testing

[37] The respondents also relied upon R. v. Envirosoft Water Inc. (1995), 62 C.P.R. (3d) 365 (Alta. Prov. Ct.). The facts of that case are instructive. The product was a water softener. The trial judge observed that the science in the area was complex and the experts were divided on the basic principles. In addition, the validity of the test conducted was the subject of considerable debate, which the trial judge thought would continue after the trial. The trial judge found that the accused had been reasonably diligent in relying upon the research done before making their claims about the product.

[38] Unlike in Envirosoft, here there was a valid and accepted method for testing the respondents' claims. Any debate about the validity of drive testing as a way of comparing wireless networks was resolved in favour of the respondents. The results of the respondents' drive testing were accepted as a valid comparison of the performance of the networks of the respondents, Wind Mobile and Public Mobile. Drive testing done on an expedited basis, however, was not accepted by this court as a valid method of comparison. Even if it was an adequate and proper testing methodology, the expedited drive testing done against Public Mobile's network in Montréal and Toronto came after the campaign launch dates in those cities.

[39] The expedited drive testing in Montréal occurred between September 15 and 19, 2010. As indicated, Chatr Wireless launched in Montréal on September 16, 2010. The respondents began making the fewer dropped calls claim on that date.

[40] In Toronto the respondents conducted expedited drive testing between September 26 and October 2, 2010. This was almost two months after Chatr Wireless began its advertising campaign in that market. The only additional drive test that the respondents conducted against Public Mobile in Toronto during the relevant period occurred on November 2, 2010. The later test updated aspects of the September expedited drive test and was not an adequate and proper test either on its own or in combination with the earlier expedited test.

Publicity regarding Wind Mobile and Public Mobile's network problems

[41] The respondents argue that the publicity surrounding the network problems experienced by Wind Mobile and Public Mobile as they launched their services also factored into their belief that their claims were adequately and properly tested.

[42] Publicity of a competitor's problems does not constitute an adequate and proper test and the respondents could not reasonably have believed that it did. Nor can this publicity, in combination with technological facts known to the respondents, constitute adequate testing. The technological facts and adverse publicity undoubtedly confirmed the respondents' sincere belief that their network dropped fewer calls than the networks of Wind Mobile and Public Mobile but they could not reasonably be viewed as substitutes for adequate and proper testing of the claim.

Inferring results between markets

[43] Contrary to the submission of the respondents, drive testing the performance claim in Toronto in June against Wind Mobile and Mobilicity could not reasonably be viewed as adequately and properly testing that claim against Public Mobile in Toronto.

[44] Drive testing the fewer dropped calls claim against Wind Mobile in Vancouver could not reasonably be viewed, either individually or in combination with technological facts and adverse publicity, as adequately and properly testing that claim against Wind Mobile in Calgary or Edmonton.

Internal policies and training

[45] Rogers has memorialized its business conduct policy in a Policy Manual. The existence of this manual and the continuing education of Rogers employees is evidence relevant to an assessment of due diligence. It is also relevant to an assessment of the appropriate administrative monetary penalty.

[46] Evidence was received that established the policy was intended to reflect Rogers' core values – honesty, integrity and corporate responsibility. All employees are provided with a copy of this policy; employees are educated about this policy through online and in person seminars. Rogers engages in regular compliance training in the marketing group to explain advertising guidelines and Rogers' commitment to truthful and transparent advertising.

[47] The Policy Manual outlines the scope and purpose of competition law in Canada. There is a compliance guide containing practical advice to help employees anticipate and avoid problematic conduct. There is a section on compliance and employee monitoring, training, education and responsibility. There is a statement of "dos and don'ts". One of the principles set out in the guide is that untested claims relating to the performance of a product should not be made.

[48] Despite the existence of these laudable policies, the evidence indicated an intention to make a performance claim based on support points other than adequate and proper testing. A March 10, 2010, PowerPoint presentation contained the following note: "At launch, the claim will be based on results inferred from technological fact. For longer-term, we will leverage the benchmarking that JP Larocque is performing vs. new entrants." On March 10, 2010, it was impossible to reasonably believe that results inferred from technological facts amounted to an adequate and proper test of the comparative performance of the Chatr Wireless and Public Mobile networks because Public Mobile had not yet launched its service. Public Mobile launched in Toronto on May 26, 2010 and in Montréal on June 25, 2010.

Conclusion on due diligence

[49] I am not persuaded by the evidence, including the evidence to which I have made specific reference, that the respondents were duly diligent.

Should the court impose an administrative monetary penalty?

[50] The applicant seeks an order that the respondents pay an administrative monetary penalty in the range of $5-7 million. I did not find this submission helpful because it failed to take into account two key aspects that distinguish this case from others – that the false or misleading advertising portion of the application was not established and that subsequent testing substantiated the fewer dropped calls claim.

[51] As with any order under s. 74.1(4), an administrative monetary penalty must be imposed for the purpose of promoting compliance with the Competition Act. An administrative monetary penalty cannot be imposed with a view to punishment or deterring others who might contemplate making unsubstantiated performance claims.

[52] A monetary penalty in the range of $5-7 million might have been justified on the facts of this case if the fewer dropped calls claim had been false or misleading.

[53] Section 74.1(5) of the Competition Act provides a number of factors to be taken into account in determining the amount of any administrative monetary penalty, many of which are relevant to this case:

(a) the reach of the conduct within the relevant geographic market;

(b) the frequency and duration of the conduct;

(c) the vulnerability of the class of persons likely to be adversely affected by the conduct;

(d) the materiality of any representation;

(e) the likelihood of self-correction in the relevant geographic market;

(f) the effect on competition in the relevant market;

(g) the gross revenue from sales affected by the conduct;

(h) the financial position of the person against whom the order is made;

(i) the history of compliance with this Act by the person against whom the order is made;

…

(j) any other relevant factor.

These criteria are analyzed below.

[54] While post-claim substantiation cannot justify the respondents' decision to expose consumers, competitive firms and competition to the prohibited risk that the untested fewer dropped calls claim might have been false, it does not follow that post-claim substantiation cannot affect the weight attached to the factors in section 74.1(5). The respondents did not make a claim they knew to be false. Rather, they made a claim they suspected to be true without adequately and properly testing that claim and, after testing, the claim proved to be true. This is relevant to determining the quantum of the administrative monetary penalty.

The reach of the conduct within the relevant geographic market and the frequency and duration of that conduct [55] The representations were part of an extensive advertising campaign that ran from July 28, 2010 to November 30, 2010. The reach, frequency and duration of the publication of the performance claim do not aggravate the amount of the administrative monetary penalty in this case because the claim was substantiated.

The vulnerability of the class of persons likely to be adversely affected by the conduct

[56] This criterion is similarly not aggravating because post-claim testing substantiated the claim.

The materiality of the representation

[57] Comparative performance claims are always material. However this factor is not aggravating because the representation was substantiated.

The likelihood of self-correction

[58] The respondents did not immediately self-correct in the face of concern expressed by the applicant, Public Mobile and Wind Mobile, although it should be remembered that the applicant's original concern was that the fewer dropped calls claim was false or misleading.

[59] The respondents withdrew the first set of ads prior to this application. The second version (the "no worries" version) had the same central theme, namely fewer dropped calls and therefore a more reliable network. The respondents did provide the applicant with a draft of the "no worries" version of the fewer dropped calls claim prior to publishing it and asked if it was appropriate. The applicant did not respond.

[60] The respondents knew the extent to which they had tested the fewer dropped calls claim prior to making it. The fact that the respondents had a drive testing programme in place and had ample time to conduct testing between the launch of the new wireless carriers and the July 28, 2010 campaign start date, but did not properly test, does not suggest a likelihood of self-correction. This is somewhat counterbalanced by the desire to avoid a repeat of the reputational risk created by this application which is referred to elsewhere.

The effect on competition

[61] The fewer dropped calls claim may have been harmful to the new wireless carriers but, if that was the case, the harm was not inflicted in a manner which caused harm to consumers because the claim was substantiated. Equally, because the claim was substantiated, any harm inflicted on Wind Mobile and Public Mobile was appropriate. The evidence suggests that Public Mobile probably had the worst performing network of any wireless carrier in Canada during the period with which we are concerned.

[62] However competition was adversely affected because, contrary to Parliament's expressed intention, the market was exposed to the risk that the untested performance claim might be false. This aggravates the amount of the administrative monetary penalty.

Gross revenue from sales affected by the reviewable conduct

[63] This factor has only a marginal effect on the amount of the administrative monetary penalty. Any increase in gross revenue as a result of the fewer dropped calls claim was an increase in gross revenue that occurred as a result of a performance claim which was ultimately substantiated. Members of the public who relied upon the claim and became Chatr Wireless customers ultimately joined a network which dropped fewer calls than Wind Mobile and Public Mobile.

The financial position of the respondents

[64] This is a significant relevant consideration when setting the administrative monetary penalty. There is a need for regulatory sanctions to create economic incentives to foster compliance. An administrative monetary penalty will not foster compliance if the financial position of the noncompliant person is ignored: see Rowan (Re) (2010), 33 O.S.C.B. 91, at para. 74. According to Rogers' 2010 Annual Report, the Wireless Division generated operating revenue of $6.968 billion. Its adjusted wireless operating profit margin as a percentage of network revenue was 48.2%.

[65] I do not accept the submission that the respondents simply determined the benefit of making an unsubstantiated claim outweighed the cost of violating the Competition Act. I reject this submission because the reputational risk to a genuine business, such as Rogers', in an application such as this is so significant that a properly conducted cost-benefit analysis will lead to the conclusion that it is better to comply with the Competition Act.

The respondent's history of compliance

[66] There are no previous findings that the respondents have engaged in reviewable conduct. The applicant referred to an injunction application in the case of the TELUS Communications Co. v. Rogers Communications Inc., 2009 BCCA 1610, 99 B.C.L.R. (4th) 229. This was a case in which the Court of Appeal of British Columbia upheld a motion judge's decision to grant an injunction against Rogers restraining it from publicly representing that it had "Canada's Most Reliable Network". Rogers had made the claim without testing its network against Telus' HSPA/HSPA + network. The court stated that Telus had a very strong case and was entitled to an injunction. While this was not a trial decision, this finding is some evidence that Rogers has been willing to make aggressive representations prior to testing when it believes those untested representations are true. This is precisely what Parliament has forbidden in section 74.01(1)(b). Rogers' previous history is a relevant consideration in this application and it aggravates the amount of the administrative monetary penalty.

Other relevant factors

(1) Penalties given in past cases

[67] In The Commissioner of Competition v. Imperial Brush Co. Ltd. and Kel Kem Ltd. (c.o.b. as Imperial Manufacturing Group) (2008), 65 C.P.R. (4th) 123, the Competition Tribunal was asked to impose an administrative monetary penalty for a breach of section 74.01(1)(b). The Imperial Brush Company claimed that its fire logs reduced the risk of chimney fires in circumstances where the Competition Tribunal could not find evidence of any adequate and proper testing of the claim. The circumstances were inherently dangerous because the unsubstantiated claim gave consumers false comfort about the likelihood of a fire. The representations at issue had persisted for years and were never substantiated. The administrative monetary penalty ordered was $25,000 when the maximum penalty for a corporation was $100,000. The financial position of Imperial Brush Company was not disclosed in the order.

[68] In P.V.I. International Inc. v. Canada (Commissioner of Competition), 2004 FCA 197, 31 C.P.R. (4th) 331, the respondents made fuel saving and emission reduction performance claims about something called a "platinum vapor injector". These claims were found to be false or misleading. The Federal Court of Appeal upheld the Competition Tribunal's award of $75,000 against the corporate respondent and $25,000 each against two individual respondents, when the maximum penalty was $100,000 against a corporation and $50,000 against an individual.

[69] Subsequent to these two decisions, Parliament amended the Competition Act in 2009 to increase the maximum administrative monetary penalty payable by a corporation by a factor of 100, from $100,000 to $10 million. This amendment expressed Parliament's decision that the previous maximum penalty was not sufficient to promote corporate conduct in conformity with the purposes of Part VII.1 of the Competition Act. I agree with the applicant that the increase in the maximum monetary penalty makes cases decided prior to the 2009 amendments less persuasive.

[70] In Commissioner of Competition v. Yellow Page Marketing, 2012 ONSC 927, a judge of this Court ordered an $8 million administrative monetary penalty. This decision was upheld by the Ontario Court of Appeal. The applicant submits that this decision reflects Parliament's intention that deceptive marketing practices should attract more significant administrative monetary penalties. The respondents suggest that this case is not helpful because it is a case of fraud. Yellow Page Marketing had been fined and shut down by regulators in other jurisdictions and countries. The respondents claimed that imposing a similar penalty would unfairly stigmatize them as a similar company.

[71] The applicant also referred to consent agreements to illustrate what market participants have considered appropriate monetary penalties since the 2009 amendments. Most notably, Bell Canada agreed to stop making representations that the Competition Bureau had concluded were misleading about the prices offered for its services and agreed under the terms of a Consent Agreement filed with the Competition Tribunal to pay an administrative monetary penalty of $10 million. While the conduct to which the Competition Bureau objected began in 2007, the settlement agreement was not announced until June 28, 2011, after the 2009 amendments. This particular consent agreement is not helpful, however, because the representations were misleading, a fact not present in this application.

(2) The harm caused to the respondents by the conduct of the complainants

[72] In circumstances where the untested performance claim is later substantiated, the harm caused to the respondents by the conduct of the complainants can be relevant in assessing the quantum of the administrative monetary penalty. Public Mobile took advantage of the fact that the applicant commenced this proceeding by making false statements about the respondents. Alex Krstajic, the President and Chief Executive Officer of Public Mobile, stated at a MobileMonday Toronto Conference in December 2010, attended by more than 500 people, that the Competition Commissioner had determined after its investigation that Public Mobile's network dropped fewer calls than the respondents' network. This statement was false. The applicant gave no such assurance to Public Mobile.

[73] The Chair of the Board of Wind Mobile made a speech to the Toronto Board of Trade in which he stated that the fewer dropped calls claim was so misleading that Wind Mobile had lodged a complaint with the Competition Bureau. His remarks were reported in the media. The fewer dropped calls claim was not misleading or false as far as Wind Mobile was concerned, although the Chair of the Board may have thought so when he spoke to the Toronto Board of Trade.

[74] Mobilicity, to which very little reference was made in these proceedings, publicly complained to the Competition Bureau about the fewer dropped calls claim, publicly celebrated the commencement of this application and then declined to cooperate with the applicant. Mobilicity's conduct suggests that it did not doubt that the claim was true and that it was interested in provoking the initiation of proceedings to gain a short-term public relations advantage.

[75] In addition, material information affecting dropped calls such as the "hard handoff" or the fact that Public Mobile had no roaming agreement with Rogers was not readily provided to consumers by either Wind Mobile or Public Mobile during the relevant timeframe.

[76] The harm caused to the respondents by the conduct of the complainants in this matter mitigates the amount of the administrative monetary penalty.

Conclusions on an administrative monetary penalty

[77] When I consider all of the evidence, including the evidence to which I referred, I am satisfied that an administrative monetary penalty ought to be imposed in this case and that an appropriate administrative monetary penalty is $500,000.

Should the court impose a prohibition order that Rogers not engage in substantially similar reviewable conduct?

[78] Section 74.1(2) of the Competition Act states that a prohibition order lasts for 10 years unless otherwise ordered. The applicant seeks an order that the respondents not engage in substantially similar reviewable conduct for a period of 10 years.

[79] The applicant submitted that a prohibition order is directed at ensuring compliance because it draws the significance of compliance with the Competition Act to the firm's attention. In the applicant's view the prohibition order is a reprimand and a reminder not to engage in the reviewable conduct again. The applicant pointed to decisions such as Commissioner of Competition v. Sears Canada Inc. (2005), 37 C.P.R. (4th) 65, as authority for the proposition that prohibition orders are routinely made even where the reviewable conduct persisted only for a limited duration. The applicant submitted that there was no reason to depart from the normal practice of making such orders following a finding of reviewable conduct.

[80] The respondents maintained that a prohibition order was a mandatory injunction rather than a reprimand. The respondents pointed out that no precedent exists for making such an order where the claim was true but untested prior to publication. The respondents also point out that the Competition Bureau has never previously asked for such a remedy where the representation was truthful. The respondents' view is that a prohibition order is an unfair punishment, in part because it exposes the respondents to a $15 million administrative monetary penalty for subsequent reviewable conduct, as well as damages or fines pursuant to sections 36(1)(b) and 66 of the Competition Act. The respondents argue that such consequences are excessive given the extensive drive testing conducted by Rogers and the fact that the fewer dropped calls claim was ultimately substantiated.

[81] The respondents also point out that they have suffered reputational harm as a result of these proceedings and that a prohibition order would unfairly compound that harm.

[82] The commencement of proceedings harmed the respondents because it contained an allegation of false or misleading advertising. Commencement of these proceedings was covered by at least 63 different broadcast media outlets. A national newspaper erroneously reported that the respondents had been ordered to pay $10 million because they had made misleading wireless claims.

[83] It was also incorrectly reported that the respondents had refused to address the applicant's concerns, forcing the applicant to commence this application. The evidence demonstrated that the respondents voluntarily removed the contentious advertisements, although removal by third party retailers was not immediate.

[84] The respondents were also attacked by the new wireless carriers who used the commencement and existence of this application to try to obtain a competitive advantage.

[85] The respondents were put to considerable expense in responding to this application. While there is no evidence of the actual cost, the court can take notice of its experience with the cost of proceedings generally in reaching this conclusion.

[86] I am satisfied on the evidence that the respondents have suffered reputational harm as a result of this application. While the evidence does not permit me to quantify the respondents' reputational harm, I am satisfied that reputational harm is a relevant consideration when deciding to impose a prohibition order. It is reasonable to think that genuine Canadian corporations, such as the respondents, would not repeatedly risk reputational harm and that therefore the prospect of future proceedings will encourage compliance. This is relevant when considering the need for a prohibition order.

[87] The respondents also argue that the Competition Bureau's practice is to stop pursuing a complaint once testing has resolved the issue with a claim. They referred to the Bureau's Inquiry into Canadian Auto Preservation Inc. and its "Final Coat" electronic anticorrosion device. In that instance the Bureau commenced an Inquiry under section 10 of the Competition Act because it was of the opinion that tests provided by Canadian Auto Preservation Inc. were not sufficient to support its claims regarding the "Final Coat" device. At the Bureau's request the company performed additional tests on the device, which the Bureau concluded were adequate and proper. The Competition Bureau then discontinued its Inquiry. The respondent submitted that this case reflects the Competition Bureau's policy for not proceeding with a complaint when adequate and proper testing occurs after commencement of an Inquiry. The respondents submit they were harshly treated because they were forced to respond to this application despite post-claim testing and substantiation of the fewer dropped calls claim.

[88] The respondents also point out that there was no distortion of the proper functioning market as a result of the fewer dropped calls claim because the claim was substantiated.

[89] Finally the respondents observe that they are multi-division telecommunications and media company and that it would be unreasonable to expose other branches of its organization, which have nothing to do with wireless communication, to such an order. In this regard, I note that prohibition orders can be limited in scope. For example, in the Imperial Brush case, the prohibition order expired once the claim was adequately and properly tested. In P.V.I. International, the false or misleading representation was that the "platinum vapor injector" significantly increased combustion efficiency when installed in a gasoline fueled internal combustion engine. The Competition Tribunal's prohibition order applied only to representations concerning platinum vapor injectors installed in gasoline fueled internal combustion engines.

[90] When I consider all of the evidence, including the evidence to which I have referred, and considering that I am imposing an administrative monetary penalty, I am not satisfied that it is also necessary to make a prohibition order to promote conduct by the respondents that is in conformity with the purposes of Part VII.1 of the Competition Act.

Conclusion

[91] The applicant's request for an administrative monetary penalty is granted. The respondents will pay an administrative monetary penalty of $500,000.

[92] The applicant's request for a prohibition order is denied.

A.C.J.S.C. MARROCCO

Released: 20140221

CITATION: Canada (Commissioner of Competition) v. Chatr Wireless Inc., 2014 ONSC 1146
COURT FILE NO.: CV-10-8993-00 CL
DATE: 20140221

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

THE COMMISSIONER OF COMPETITION

Applicant

– and –

ROGERS COMMUNICATIONS INC. AND CHATR WIRELESS INC.

Respondents

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

A.C.J.S.C. MARROCCO

Released: 20140221

2005 SCC 54
Supreme Court of Canada

Canada Trustco Mortgage Co. v. R.

2005 CarswellNat 3212, 2005 CarswellNat 3213, 2005 SCC 54, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 601, [2005] 5 C.T.C. 215, [2005] S.C.J. No. 56, 142 A.C.W.S. (3d) 1075, 2005 D.T.C. 5523 (Eng.), 2005 D.T.C. 5547 (Fr.), 259 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 340 N.R. 1, J.E. 2005-1901

Her Majesty The Queen, Appellant v. Canada Trustco Mortgage Company, Respondent

McLachlin C.J.C., Major, Bastarache, Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Charron JJ.

Heard: March 8, 2005
Judgment: October 19, 2005
Docket: 30290

Proceedings: affirming (2004), 2004 FCA 67, 2004 CarswellNat 305, [2004] 2 C.T.C. 276, 2004 CAF 67, 2004 CarswellNat 523, *(*sub nom. R. v. Canada Trustco Mortgage Co.) 2004 D.T.C. 6119 (F.C.A.); affirming Canada Trustco Mortgage Co. v. R. (2003), 2003 CCI 215, 2003 CarswellNat 5460, 2003 TCC 215, 2003 CarswellNat 1299, 2003 D.T.C. 587, [2003] 4 C.T.C. 2009 (T.C.C. [General Procedure])

Counsel: Graham Carton, Q.C., Anne-Marie Lévesque, Alexandra K. Brown, for Appellant
Al Meghji, Monica Biringer, Gerald Grenon, for Respondent

Per curiam*:

1. Introduction

1 This appeal and its companion case, Mathew v. R., 2005 SCC 55 (S.C.C.) (hereinafter "Kaulius"), raise the issue of the interplay between the general anti-avoidance rule (the "GAAR") and the application of more specific provisions of the Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c.1 (5th Supp.). The Act continues to permit legitimate tax minimization; traditionally, this has involved determining whether the taxpayer brought itself within the wording of the specific provisions relied on for the tax benefit. Onto this scheme, the GAAR has superimposed a prohibition on abusive tax avoidance, with the effect that the literal application of provisions of the Act may be seen as abusive in light of their context and purpose. The task in this appeal is to unite these two approaches in a framework that reflects the intention of Parliament in enacting the GAAR and achieves consistent, predictable and fair results.

2. Facts

2 The respondent, Canada Trustco Mortgage Company ("CTMC"), carries on business as a mortgage lender. As part of its business operations, CTMC enjoyed large revenues from leased assets. In 1996 it purchased a number of trailers which it then circuitously leased back to the vendor, in order to offset revenue from its leased assets by claiming considerable capital cost allowance ("CCA") on the trailers in the amount of $31,196,700 against $51,787,114 for the 1997 taxation year. The essence of the transaction is explained in the memorandum of Michael Lough, CTMC's officer in charge of the recommendation to proceed: "The transaction provides very attractive returns by generating CCA deductions which can be used to shelter other taxable lease income generated by Canada Trust." This arrangement allowed CTMC to defer paying taxes on the amount of profits reduced by the CCA deductions which would be subject to recapture into income when the trailers were disposed of at a future date and presumably in excess of the amount claimed as CCA.

3 The details of the transaction are complex and described in greater detail in the Appendix. Briefly stated, on December 17, 1996, the respondent, with the use of its own money and a loan of approximately $100 million from the Royal Bank of Canada ("RBC"), purchased trailers from Transamerica Leasing Inc. ("TLI") at fair market value of $120 million. CTMC leased the trailers to Maple Assets Investments Limited ("MAIL") who in turn subleased them to TLI, the original owner. TLI then prepaid all amounts due to MAIL under the sublease. MAIL placed on deposit an amount equal to the loan for purposes of making the lease payments and a bond was pledged as security to guarantee a purchase option payment to CTMC at the end of the lease. These transactions allowed CTMC to substantially minimize its financial risk. They were also accompanied by financial arrangements with various other parties, not relevant to this appeal.

4 On October 18, 2002, the Minister of National Revenue reassessed CTMC on its 1997 taxation year and denied the CCA claim of $31,196,700 on the basis that CTMC had not acquired title to the trailers and, in the alternative, that the GAAR applied to deny the deduction. CTMC appealed to the Tax Court of Canada.

5 The Crown abandoned the argument that CTMC had failed to obtain title to the trailers and the appeal before the Tax Court proceeded solely on the issue of whether the GAAR applied to deny the deduction. A similar reassessment with respect to CTMC's 1996 taxation year was statute-barred. The Tax Court found in favour of CTMC, as did the Federal Court of Appeal. For the reasons that follow, we would dismiss the Crown's appeal.

3. Legislative Provisions

6 This appeal and its companion case Kaulius were brought and argued under s. 245 of the Income Tax Act. The relevant provisions of the Act, as they applied to the parties, read in part:

> 245.(1) [Definitions] In this section,
>
> > "tax benefit" means a reduction, avoidance or deferral of tax or other amount payable under this Act or an increase in a refund of tax or other amount under this Act;
> >
> > . . . . .
> >
> > "transaction" includes an arrangement or event.
>
> (2) [General anti-avoidance provision] Where a transaction is an avoidance transaction, the tax consequences to a person shall be determined as is reasonable in the circumstances in order to deny a tax benefit that, but for this section, would result, directly or indirectly, from that transaction or from a series of transactions that includes that transaction.
>
> (3) [Avoidance transaction] An avoidance transaction means any transaction
>
> > (a) that, but for this section, would result, directly or indirectly, in a tax benefit, unless the transaction may reasonably be considered to have been undertaken or arranged primarily for bona fide purposes other than to obtain the tax benefit; or
> >
> > (b) that is part of a series of transactions, which series, but for this section, would result, directly or indirectly, in a tax benefit, unless the transaction may reasonably be considered to have been undertaken or arranged primarily for bona fide purposes other than to obtain the tax benefit.
>
> (4) [Where s. (2) does not apply] For greater certainty, subsection (2) does not apply to a transaction where it may reasonably be considered that the transaction would not result directly or indirectly in a misuse of the provisions of this Act or an abuse having regard to the provisions of this Act, other than this section, read as a whole.
>
> (5) [Determination of tax consequences] Without restricting the generality of subsection (2),

(a) any deduction in computing income, taxable income, taxable income earned in Canada or tax payable or any part thereof may be allowed or disallowed in whole or in part,

(b) any such deduction, any income, loss or other amount or part thereof may be allocated to any person,

(c) the nature of any payment or other amount may be recharacterized, and

(d) the tax effects that would otherwise result from the application of other provisions of this Act may be ignored, in determining the tax consequences to a person as is reasonable in the circumstances in order to deny a tax benefit that would, but for this section, result, directly or indirectly, from an avoidance transaction.

. . . . .

248.(10) [Series of transactions] For the purposes of this Act, where there is a reference to a series of transactions or events, the series shall be deemed to include any related transactions or events completed in contemplation of the series.

7 A recent amendment to s. 245 (Budget Implementation Act, 2004, No. 2, S.C. 2005, c. 19, s. 52) has no application to the judgments under appeal. Although this amendment was enacted to apply retroactively, it cannot apply at this stage of appellate review, after the parties argued their cases and the Tax Court judge rendered his decision on the basis of the GAAR as it read prior to the amendment. Furthermore, even if this amendment were to apply, it would not warrant a different approach to the issues on appeal. In our view, this amendment to s. 245 serves inter alia to make it clear that the GAAR applies to tax benefits conferred by Regulations enacted under the Income Tax Act. The Tax Court judge in the instant case proceeded on this assumption, which was not challenged by the parties in submissions before us.

4. Judicial Decisions

4.1 Tax Court of Canada, [2003] 4 C.T.C. 20092003 TCC 215(T.C.C. [General Procedure])

8 The Tax Court judge found an avoidance transaction giving rise to a tax benefit under s. 245(1) and (3) of the Act. He inquired into the purpose of the CCA provisions of the Income Tax Act as applied to sale-leaseback arrangements, in order to determine if the transaction was abusive under s. 245(4) of the Act. He held that the purpose of the CCA provisions permitted the deduction of CCA based on the "cost" of the trailers, as defined by the transactions documents. He went on to conduct a detailed analysis of the legal transactions. He found that CTMC had acquired title and became the legal owner of the trailers, and declined to recharacterize the legal nature of the transaction. The transactions in issue, in his view, amounted to an ordinary sale-leaseback. The Tax Court judge found that the transaction fell within the spirit and purpose of the CCA provisions of the Act, and concluded that the GAAR did not apply to disallow the tax benefit.

4.2 Federal Court of Appeal, [2004] 2 C.T.C. 2762004 FCA 67(F.C.A.)

9 The Federal Court of Appeal unanimously dismissed the appeal, relying on the reasons in OSFC Holdings Ltd. v. R. (2001), [2002] 2 F.C. 288, 2001 FCA 260 (Fed. C.A.) ("OSFC"), in which the court had set out a two-stage analysis for abuse under the GAAR, focussed first on interpretation of the specific provisions at issue, second on the overarching policy of the Income Tax Act. Evans J.A., for the court, held that the Tax Court judge had not erred in concluding that, for the purposes of s. 245(4) of the Act, the transactions at issue did not constitute a misuse of a provision of the Act or an abuse of the CCA scheme as a whole. He noted that counsel for the appellant did not seek to recharacterize the transactions and did not allege that they were a sham, but argued instead that the policy underlying s. 20(1)(a) and the CCA provisions as a whole was "to permit taxpayers to claim CCA in respect of the 'real' or 'economic' cost that they incurred in acquiring an asset, and not the 'legal' cost, that is, on the facts of this case, the purchase price paid by the taxpayer" (para. 2). Going on to consider policy, Evans J.A. found that there was no clear and unambiguous policy underlying s. 20(1)(a) or the CCA scheme read as a whole that rendered the transaction a misuse or abuse of those provisions.

5. Analysis

5.1 General Principles of Interpretation

10 It has been long established as a matter of statutory interpretation that "the words of an Act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament": see 65302 British Columbia Ltd. v. R., [1999] 3 S.C.R. 804 (S.C.C.), at para. 50. The interpretation of a statutory provision must be made according to a textual, contextual and purposive analysis to find a meaning that is harmonious with the Act as a whole. When the words of a provision are precise and unequivocal, the ordinary meaning of the words play a dominant role in the interpretive process. On the other hand, where the words can support more than one reasonable meaning, the ordinary meaning of the words plays a lesser role. The relative effects of ordinary meaning, context and purpose on the interpretive process may vary, but in all cases the court must seek to read the provisions of an Act as a harmonious whole.

11 As a result of the Duke of Westminster principle (Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Duke of Westminster (1935), [1936] A.C. 1 (U.K. H.L.)) that taxpayers are entitled to arrange their affairs to minimize the amount of tax payable, Canadian tax legislation received a strict interpretation in an era of more literal statutory interpretation than the present. There is no doubt today that all statutes, including the Act, must be interpreted in a textual, contextual and purposive way. However, the particularity and detail of many tax provisions have often led to an emphasis on textual interpretation. Where Parliament has specified precisely what conditions must be satisfied to achieve a particular result, it is reasonable to assume that Parliament intended that taxpayers would rely on such provisions to achieve the result they prescribe.

12 The provisions of the Income Tax Act must be interpreted in order to achieve consistency, predictability and fairness so that taxpayers may manage their affairs intelligently. As stated at para. 45 of Shell Canada Ltd. v. R., [1999] 3 S.C.R. 622 (S.C.C.):

> [A]bsent a specific provision to the contrary, it is not the courts' role to prevent taxpayers from relying on the sophisticated structure of their transactions, arranged in such a way that the particular provisions of the Act are met, on the basis that it would be inequitable to those taxpayers who have not chosen to structure their transactions that way.
>
> [Emphasis added.]

See also 65302 British Columbia, at para. 51, per Iacobucci J. citing P. W. Hogg and J. E. Magee, Principles of Canadian Income Tax Law (2nd ed. 1997), at pp. 475-76:

> It would introduce intolerable uncertainty into the Income Tax Act if clear language in a detailed provision of the Act were to be qualified by unexpressed exceptions derived from a court's view of the object and purpose of the provision.

13 The Income Tax Act remains an instrument dominated by explicit provisions dictating specific consequences, inviting a largely textual interpretation. Onto this compendium of detailed stipulations, Parliament has engrafted quite a different sort of provision, the GAAR. This is a broadly drafted provision, intended to negate arrangements that would be permissible under a literal interpretation of other provisions of the Income Tax Act, on the basis that they amount to abusive tax avoidance. To the extent that the GAAR constitutes a "provision to the contrary" as discussed in Shell (at para. 45), the Duke of Westminster principle and the emphasis on textual interpretation may be attenuated. Ultimately, as affirmed in Shell, "[t]he courts' role is to interpret and apply the Act as it was adopted by Parliament" (para. 45). The court must to the extent possible contemporaneously give effect to both the GAAR and the other provisions of the Income Tax Act relevant to a particular transaction.

5.2 Interpretation of the GAAR

14 The GAAR was enacted in 1988, principally in response to Stubart Investments Ltd. v. R., [1984] 1 S.C.R. 536(S.C.C.), which rejected a literal approach to interpreting the Act. At the same time, the Court rejected the business purpose test, which would have restricted tax reduction to transactions with a real business purpose. Instead of the business purpose test, the Court proposed guidelines to limit unacceptable tax avoidance arrangements. Parliament deemed the decision in Stubart an inadequate response to the problem and enacted the GAAR.

15 The Explanatory Notes to Legislation Relating to Income Tax issued by the Honourable Michael H. Wilson, Minister of Finance (June 1988) ("Explanatory Notes") are an aid to interpretation. The Explanatory Notes state at the outset that they "are intended for information purposes only and should not be construed as an official interpretation of the provisions they describe". They state the purpose of the GAAR at p. 461:

> New section 245 of the Act is a general anti-avoidance rule which is intended to prevent abusive tax avoidance transactions or arrangements but at the same time is not intended to interfere with legitimate commercial and family transactions. Consequently, the new rule seeks to distinguish between legitimate tax planning and abusive tax avoidance and to establish a reasonable balance between the protection of the tax base and the need for certainty for taxpayers in planning their affairs.

16 The GAAR draws a line between legitimate tax minimization and abusive tax avoidance. The line is far from bright. The GAAR's purpose is to deny the tax benefits of certain arrangements that comply with a literal interpretation of the provisions of the Act, but amount to an abuse of the provisions of the Act. But precisely what constitutes abusive tax avoidance remains the subject of debate. Hence these appeals.

17 The application of the GAAR involves three steps. The first step is to determine whether there is a "tax benefit" arising from a "transaction" under s. 245(1) and (2). The second step is to determine whether the transaction is an avoidance transaction under s. 245(3), in the sense of not being "arranged primarily for bona fide purposes other than to obtain the tax benefit". The third step is to determine whether the avoidance transaction is abusive under s. 245(4). All three requirements must be fulfilled before the GAAR can be applied to deny a tax benefit.

5.3 Tax Benefit

18 The first step in applying the GAAR is to determine whether there is a tax benefit arising from a transaction or series of transactions of which the transaction is part.

19 "Tax benefit" is defined in s. 245(1) as "a reduction, avoidance or deferral of tax" or "an increase in a refund of tax or other amount" paid under the Act. Whether a tax benefit exists is a factual determination, initially by the Minister and on review by the courts, usually the Tax Court. The magnitude of the tax benefit is not relevant at this stage of the analysis.

20 If a deduction against taxable income is claimed, the existence of a tax benefit is clear, since a deduction results in a reduction of tax. In some other instances, it may be that the existence of a tax benefit can only be established by comparison with an alternative arrangement. For example, characterization of an amount as an annuity rather than as a wage, or as a capital gain rather than as business income, will result in differential tax treatment. In such cases, the existence of a tax benefit might only be established upon a comparison between alternative arrangements. In all cases, it must be determined whether the taxpayer reduced, avoided or deferred tax payable under the Act.

5.4 Avoidance Transaction

21 The second requirement for application of the GAAR is that the transaction giving rise to the tax benefit be an avoidance transaction within s. 245(3). The function of this requirement is to remove from the ambit of the GAAR transactions or series of transactions that may reasonably be considered to have been undertaken or arranged primarily for a non-tax purpose. The majority of tax benefits claimed by taxpayers on their annual returns will be immune from the GAAR as a result of s. 245(3). The GAAR was enacted as a provision of last resort in order to address abusive tax avoidance, it was not intended to introduce uncertainty in tax planning.

22 A "transaction" is defined under s. 245(1) to include an arrangement or event. Section 245(3) specifically defines "avoidance transaction" as a transaction that results in a tax benefit, either by itself or as part of a series of transactions, "unless the transaction may reasonably be considered to have been undertaken or arranged primarily for bona fide purposes other than to obtain the tax benefit". These two underlined expressions warrant further discussion.

5.4.1. Series of Transactions

23 Section 245(2) reads:

> (2) [General anti-avoidance provision] Where a transaction is an avoidance transaction, the tax consequences to a person shall be determined as is reasonable in the circumstances in order to deny a tax benefit that, but for this section, would result, directly or indirectly, from that transaction or from a series of transactions that includes that transaction.

24 Section 245(3) reads in part:

> (3) [Avoidance transaction] An avoidance transaction means any transaction
>
> (a) that, but for this section, would result, directly or indirectly, in a tax benefit ... or
>
> (b) that is part of a series of transactions, which series, but for this section, would result, directly or indirectly, in a tax benefit...

25 The meaning of the expression "series of transactions" under s. 245(2) and (3) is not clear on its face. We agree with the majority of the Federal Court of Appeal in OSFC and endorse the test for a series of transactions as adopted by the House of Lords that a series of transactions involves a number of transactions that are "pre-ordained in order to produce a given result" with "no practical likelihood that the pre-planned events would not take place in the order ordained": Craven v. White (1988), [1989] A.C. 398 (U.K. H.L.), at p. 514, per Lord Oliver; see also W.T. Ramsay Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1981] 1 All E.R. 865 (U.K. H.L.).

26 Section 248(10) extends the meaning of "series of transactions" to include "related transactions or events completed in contemplation of the series". The Federal Court of Appeal held, at para. 36 of OSFC, that this occurs where the parties to the transaction "knew of the ... series, such that it could be said that they took it into account when deciding to complete the transaction". We would elaborate that "in contemplation" is read not in the sense of actual knowledge but in the broader sense of "because of" or "in relation to" the series. The phrase can be applied to events either before or after the basic avoidance transaction found under s. 245(3). As has been noted:

> It is highly unlikely that Parliament could have intended to include in the statutory definition of "series of transactions" related transactions completed in contemplation of a subsequent series of transactions, but not related transactions in the contemplation of which taxpayers completed a prior series of transactions.
>
> (D. G. Duff, "Judicial Application of the General Anti-Avoidance Rule in Canada: OSFC Holdings Ltd. v. The Queen", 57 I.B.F.D. Bulletin 278, at p. 287)

5.4.2. Primarily for Bona Fide Purposes

27 According to s. 245(3), the GAAR does not apply to a transaction that "may reasonably be considered to have been undertaken or arranged primarily for bona fide purposes other than to obtain the tax benefit". If there are both tax and non-tax purposes to a transaction, it must be determined whether it was reasonable to conclude that the non-tax purpose was primary. If so, the GAAR cannot be applied to deny the tax benefit.

28 While the inquiry proceeds on the premise that both tax and non-tax purposes can be identified, these can be intertwined in the particular circumstances of the transaction at issue. It is not helpful to speak of the threshold imposed by s. 245(3) as high or low. The words of the section simply contemplate an objective assessment of the relative importance of the driving forces of the transaction.

29 Again, this is a factual inquiry. The taxpayer cannot avoid the application of the GAAR by merely stating that the transaction was undertaken or arranged primarily for a non-tax purpose. The Tax Court judge must weigh the evidence to determine whether it is reasonable to conclude that the transaction was not undertaken or arranged primarily for a non-tax purpose. The determination invokes reasonableness, suggesting that the possibility of different interpretations of the events must be objectively considered.

30 The courts must examine the relationships between the parties and the actual transactions that were executed between them. The facts of the transactions are central to determining whether there was an avoidance transaction. It is useful to consider what will not suffice to establish an avoidance transaction under s. 245(3). The Explanatory Notes state, at p. 464:

> Subsection 245(3) does not permit the "recharacterization" of a transaction for the purposes of determining whether or not it is an avoidance transaction. In other words, it does not permit a transaction to be considered to be an avoidance transaction because some alternative transaction that might have achieved an equivalent result would have resulted in higher taxes.

31 According to the Explanatory Notes, Parliament recognized the Duke of Westminster principle "that tax planning — arranging one's affairs so as to attract the least amount of tax — is a legitimate and accepted part of Canadian tax law" (p. 464). Despite Parliament's intention to address abusive tax avoidance by enacting the GAAR, Parliament nonetheless intended to preserve predictability, certainty and fairness in Canadian tax law. Parliament intends taxpayers to take full advantage of the provisions of the Income Tax Act that confer tax benefits. Indeed, achieving the various policies that the Income Tax Act seeks to promote is dependent on taxpayers doing so.

32 Section 245(3) merely removes from the ambit of the GAAR transactions that may reasonably be considered to have been undertaken or arranged primarily for a non-tax purpose. Parliament did not intend s. 245(3) to operate simply as a business purpose test, which would have considered transactions that lacked an independent bona fide business purpose to be invalid.

33 The expression "non-tax purpose" has a broader scope than the expression "business purpose". For example, transactions that may reasonably be considered to have been undertaken or arranged primarily for family or investment purposes would be immune from the GAAR under s. 245(3). Section 245(3) does not purport to protect only transactions that have a real business purpose. Parliament wanted many schemes that do not have any business purpose to endure. Registered Retirement Savings Plans (RRSPs) are one example. Parliament recognized that many provisions of the Act confer legitimate tax benefits notwithstanding the lack of a real business purpose. This is apparent from the general language used throughout s. 245, as opposed to language which would have adopted a broad anti-avoidance test subject to exemptions for specific schemes like RRSP transactions.

34 If at least one transaction in a series of transactions is an "avoidance transaction", then the tax benefit that results from the series may be denied under the GAAR. This is apparent from the wording of s. 245(3). Conversely, if each transaction in a series was carried out primarily for bona fide non-tax purposes, the GAAR cannot be applied to deny a tax benefit.

35 Even if an avoidance transaction is established under the s. 245(3) inquiry, the GAAR will not apply to deny the tax benefit if it may be reasonable to consider that it did not result from abusive tax avoidance under s. 245(4), as discussed more fully below.

5.5 Abusive Tax Avoidance

36 The third requirement for application of the GAAR is that the avoidance transaction giving rise to a tax benefit be abusive. The mere existence of an avoidance transaction is not enough to permit the GAAR to be applied. The transaction must also be shown to be abusive under s. 245(4).

37 It is this requirement that has given rise to the most difficulty in the interpretation and application of the GAAR. A number of features have provoked judicial debate. The section is cast in terms of a double negative, stating that the GAAR does "not apply to a transaction where it may reasonably be considered that the transaction would not result directly or indirectly in a misuse ... or an abuse". It is tempered by the word "reasonably", suggesting some ministerial and judicial leeway in determining abuse. It does not precisely define abuse or misuse. To further complicate matters, the English and French versions of s. 245(4) differ. Overarching these particular difficulties is the central issue of the relationship between the GAAR and more specific provisions of the Act.

5.5.1 "Misuse and Abuse": Two Different Concepts?

38 We turn first to the debate about "misuse" and "abuse" which has arisen from the different English and French versions of s. 245(4). This arises from the apparently disjunctive version of the subsection in English ("misuse of the provisions of this Act" or "abuse having regard to the provisions of this Act ... read as a whole") and the non-disjunctive French version ("d'abus dans l'application des dispositions de la présente loi lue dans son ensemble"). This discrepancy led the majority of the Federal Court of Appeal to conclude in OSFC that s. 245(4) mandates two different inquiries. The first was whether there was a misuse of the particular provisions of the Act that were relied upon to achieve the tax benefit. The second was whether there was an abuse of any policy of the Act read as a whole. The term policy was used to refer collectively to purpose, object, spirit, scheme or policy (OSFC, at para. 66).

39 With respect, we cannot agree with this interpretation of s. 245(4). Parliament could not have intended this two-step approach, which on its face raises the impossible question of how one can abuse the Act as a whole without misusing any of its provisions. We agree with the Tax Court judge, in the present case, at para. 90, that "[i]n effect, the analysis of the misuse of the provisions and the analysis of the abuse having regard to the provisions of the Act read as a whole are inseparable". As discussed more fully below, the interpretation of specific provisions of the Act cannot be separated from contextual considerations arising from other provisions. The various provisions of the Income Tax Act must be interpreted in their contextual framework, so that the Act functions as a coherent whole, with respect to the particular statutory scheme engaged by the transactions.

40 There is but one principle of interpretation: to determine the intent of the legislator having regard to the text, its context, and other indicators of legislative purpose. The policy analysis proposed as a second step by the Federal Court of Appeal in OSFC is properly incorporated into a unified, textual, contextual, and purposive approach to interpreting the specific provisions that give rise to the tax benefit.

41 The courts cannot search for an overriding policy of the Act that is not based on a unified, textual, contextual and purposive interpretation of the specific provisions in issue. First, such a search is incompatible with the roles of reviewing judges. The Income Tax Act is a compendium of highly detailed and often complex provisions. To send the courts on the search for some overarching policy and then to use such a policy to override the wording of the provisions of the Income Tax Act would inappropriately place the formulation of taxation policy in the hands of the judiciary, requiring judges to perform a task to which they are unaccustomed and for which they are not equipped. Did Parliament intend judges to formulate taxation policies that are not grounded in the provisions of the Act and to apply them to override the specific provisions of the Act? Notwithstanding the interpretative challenges that the GAAR presents, we cannot find a basis for concluding that such a marked departure from judicial and interpretative norms was Parliament's intent.

42 Second, to search for an overriding policy of the Income Tax Act that is not anchored in a textual, contextual and purposive interpretation of the specific provisions that are relied upon for the tax benefit would run counter to the overall policy of Parliament that tax law be certain, predictable and fair, so that taxpayers can intelligently order their affairs. Although Parliament's general purpose in enacting the GAAR was to preserve legitimate tax minimization schemes while prohibiting abusive tax avoidance, Parliament must also be taken to seek consistency, predictability and fairness in tax law. These three latter purposes would be frustrated if the Minister and/or the courts overrode the provisions of the Income Tax Act without any basis in a textual, contextual and purposive interpretation of those provisions.

43 For these reasons we conclude, as did the Tax Court judge, that the determinations of "misuse" and "abuse" under s. 245(4) are not separate inquiries. Section 245(4) requires a single, unified approach to the textual, contextual and purposive interpretation of the specific provisions of the Income Tax Act that are relied upon by the taxpayer in order to determine whether there was abusive tax avoidance.

5.5.2. Abusive Tax Avoidance: A Unified Interpretive Approach

44 The heart of the analysis under s. 245(4) lies in a contextual and purposive interpretation of the provisions of the Act that are relied on by the taxpayer, and the application of the properly interpreted provisions to the facts of a given case. The first task is to interpret the provisions giving rise to the tax benefit to determine their object, spirit and purpose. The next task is to determine whether the transaction falls within or frustrates that purpose. The overall inquiry thus involves a mixed question of fact and law. The textual, contextual and purposive interpretation of specific provisions of the Income Tax Act is essentially a question of law but the application of these provisions to the facts of a case is necessarily fact-intensive.

45 This analysis will lead to a finding of abusive tax avoidance when a taxpayer relies on specific provisions of the Income Tax Act in order to achieve an outcome that those provisions seek to prevent. As well, abusive tax avoidance will occur when a transaction defeats the underlying rationale of the provisions that are relied upon. An abuse may also result from an arrangement that circumvents the application of certain provisions, such as specific anti-avoidance rules, in a manner that frustrates or defeats the object, spirit or purpose of those provisions. By contrast, abuse is not established where it is reasonable to conclude that an avoidance transaction under s. 245(3) was within the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions that confer the tax benefit.

46 Once the provisions of the Income Tax Act are properly interpreted, it is a question of fact for the Tax Court judge whether the Minister, in denying the tax benefit, has established abusive tax avoidance under s. 245(4). Provided the Tax Court judge has proceeded on a proper construction of the provisions of the Act and on findings supported by the evidence, appellate tribunals should not interfere, absent a palpable and overriding error.

47 The first part of the inquiry under s. 245(4) requires the court to look beyond the mere text of the provisions and undertake a contextual and purposive approach to interpretation in order to find meaning that harmonizes the wording, object, spirit and purpose of the provisions of the Income Tax Act. There is nothing novel in this. Even where the meaning of particular provisions may not appear to be ambiguous at first glance, statutory context and purpose may reveal or resolve latent ambiguities. "After all, language can never be interpreted independently of its context, and legislative purpose is part of the context. It would seem to follow that consideration of legislative purpose may not only resolve patent ambiguity, but may, on occasion, reveal ambiguity in apparently plain language." See P.W. Hogg and J.E. Magee, Principles of Canadian Income Tax Law (4th ed. 2002), at p. 563. In order to reveal and resolve any latent ambiguities in the meaning of provisions of the Income Tax Act, the courts must undertake a unified textual, contextual and purposive approach to statutory interpretation.

48 As previously stated, the predominant issue in this and its companion appeal is what constitutes abusive tax avoidance. The Explanatory Notes state in part, at pp. 464-65:

> Subsection 245(4) recognizes that the provisions of the Act are intended to apply to transactions with real economic substance, not to transactions intended to exploit, misuse or frustrate the Act to avoid tax. It also recognizes, however, that a number of provisions of the Act either contemplate or encourage transactions that may seem to be primarily tax-motivated.... It is not intended that section 245 will apply to deny the tax benefits that result from these transactions as long as they are carried out within the object and spirit of the provisions of the Act read as a whole. Nor is it intended that tax incentives expressly provided for in the legislation would be neutralized by this section.
>
> Where a taxpayer carries out transactions primarily in order to obtain, through the application of specific provisions of the Act, a tax benefit that is not intended by such provisions and by the Act read as a whole, section 245 should apply. This would be the case even though the strict words of the relevant specific provisions may support the tax result sought by the taxpayer. Thus, where applicable, section 245 will override other provisions of the Act since, otherwise, its object and purpose would be defeated.
>
> ...Thus, in reading the Act as a whole, specific provisions will be read in the context of and in harmony with the other provisions of the Act in order to achieve a result which is consistent with the general scheme of the Act.
>
> Therefore, the application of new subsection 245 must be determined by reference to the facts in a particular case in the context of the scheme of the Act.... This can be discerned from a review of the scheme of the Act, its relevant provisions and permissible extrinsic aids.

49 In all cases where the applicability of s. 245(4) is at issue, the central question is, having regard to the text, context and purpose of the provisions on which the taxpayer relies, whether the transaction frustrates or defeats the object, spirit or purpose of those provisions. The following points are noteworthy:

> (1) While the Explanatory Notes use the phrase "exploit, misuse or frustrate", we understand these three terms to be synonymous, with their sense most adequately captured by the word "frustrate".
>
> (2) The Explanatory Notes elaborate that the GAAR is intended to apply where under a literal interpretation of the provisions of the Income Tax Act, the object and purpose of those provisions would be defeated.
>
> (3) The Explanatory Notes specify that the application of the GAAR must be determined by reference to the facts of a particular case in the context of the scheme of the Income Tax Act.
>
> (4) The Explanatory Notes also elaborate that the provisions of the Income Tax Act are intended to apply to transactions with real economic substance.

50 As previously discussed, Parliament sought to address abusive tax avoidance while preserving consistency, predictability and fairness in tax law and the GAAR can only be applied to deny a tax benefit when the abusive nature of the transaction is clear.

51 The interpretation of the provisions giving rise to the tax benefit must, in the words of s. 245(4) of the Act, have regard to the Act "read as a whole". This means that the specific provisions at issue must be interpreted in their legislative context, together with other related and relevant provisions, in light of the purposes that are promoted by those provisions and their statutory schemes. In this respect, it should not be forgotten that the GAAR itself is part of the Act.

52 In general, Parliament confers tax benefits under the Income Tax Act to promote purposes related to specific activities. For example, tax benefits associated with business losses, CCA and RRSPs, are conferred for reasons intrinsic to the activities involved. Unless the Minister can establish that the avoidance transaction frustrates or defeats the purpose for which the tax benefit was intended to be conferred, it is not abusive.

53 Care must be taken in assessing the purposes for which the provisions at issue confer a tax benefit. "The [Income Tax Act] is a complex statute through which Parliament seeks to balance a myriad of principles" (Shell, at para. 43). The conferring of particular tax benefits can serve a variety of independent and interlocking purposes. These range from imposing fair business accounting principles and promoting particular kinds of commercial activity, to providing family and social benefits.

54 In interpreting the provisions of the Income Tax Act, the statutory language must be respected and should be interpreted according to its well-established legal meaning. In some cases, a contextual and purposive interpretation may add nuance to the well-established legal meaning of the statutory language. Section 245(4) does not rewrite the provisions of the Income Tax Act; it only requires that a tax benefit be consistent with the object, spirit and purpose of the provisions that are relied upon.

55 In summary, s. 245(4) imposes a two-part inquiry. The first step is to determine the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions of the Income Tax Act that are relied on for the tax benefit, having regard to the scheme of the Act, the relevant provisions and permissible extrinsic aids. The second step is to examine the factual context of a case in order to determine whether the avoidance transaction defeated or frustrated the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions in issue.

56 The Explanatory Notes elaborate that the provisions of the Income Tax Act are intended to apply to transactions with real economic substance. Although the expression "economic substance" may be open to different interpretations, this statement recognizes that the provisions of the Act were intended to apply to transactions that were executed within the object, spirit and purpose of the provisions that are relied upon for the tax benefit. The courts should not turn a blind eye to the underlying facts of a case, and become fixated on compliance with the literal meaning of the wording of the provisions of the Income Tax Act. Rather, the courts should in all cases interpret the provisions in their proper context in light of the purposes they intend to promote.

57 Courts have to be careful not to conclude too hastily that simply because a non-tax purpose is not evident, the avoidance transaction is the result of abusive tax avoidance. Although the Explanatory Notes make reference to the expression "economic substance", s. 245(4) does not consider a transaction to result in abusive tax avoidance merely because an economic or commercial purpose is not evident. As previously stated, the GAAR was not intended to outlaw all tax benefits; Parliament intended for many to endure. The central inquiry is focussed on whether the transaction was consistent with the purpose of the provisions of the Income Tax Act that are relied upon by the taxpayer, when those provisions are properly interpreted in light of their context. Abusive tax avoidance will be established if the transactions frustrate or defeat those purposes.

58 Whether the transactions were motivated by any economic, commercial, family or other non-tax purpose may form part of the factual context that the courts may consider in the analysis of abusive tax avoidance allegations under s. 245(4). However, any finding in this respect would form only one part of the underlying facts of a case, and would be insufficient by itself to establish abusive tax avoidance. The central issue is the proper interpretation of the relevant provisions in light of their context and purpose. When properly interpreted, the statutory provisions at issue in a given case may dictate that a particular tax benefit may apply only to transactions with a certain economic, commercial, family or other non-tax purpose. The absence of such considerations may then become a relevant factor towards the inference that the transactions abused the provisions at issue, but there is no golden rule in this respect.

59 Similarly, courts have on occasion discussed transactions in terms of their "lack of substance" or requiring "recharacterization". However, such terms have no meaning in isolation from the proper interpretation of specific provisions of the Income Tax Act. The analysis under s. 245(4) requires a close examination of the facts in order to determine whether allowing a tax benefit would be within the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions relied upon by the taxpayer, when those provisions are interpreted textually, contextually and purposively. Only after first, properly construing the provisions to determine their scope and second, examining all of the relevant facts, can a proper conclusion regarding abusive tax avoidance under s. 245(4) be reached.

60 A transaction may be considered to be "artificial" or to "lack substance" with respect to specific provisions of the Income Tax Act, if allowing a tax benefit would not be consistent with the object, spirit or purpose of those provisions. We should reject any analysis under s. 245(4) that depends entirely on "substance" viewed in isolation from the proper interpretation of specific provisions of the Income Tax Act or the relevant factual context of a case. However, abusive tax avoidance may be found where the relationships and transactions as expressed in the relevant documentation lack a proper basis relative to the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions that are purported to confer the tax benefit, or where they are wholly dissimilar to the relationships or transactions that are contemplated by the provisions.

61 A proper approach to the wording of the provisions of the Income Tax Act together with the relevant factual context of a given case achieve balance between the need to address abusive tax avoidance while preserving certainty, predictability and fairness in tax law so that taxpayers may manage their affairs accordingly. Parliament intends taxpayers to take full advantage of the provisions of the Act that confer tax benefits. Parliament did not intend the GAAR to undermine this basic tenet of tax law.

62 The GAAR may be applied to deny a tax benefit only after it is determined that it was not reasonable to consider the tax benefit to be within the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions relied upon by the taxpayer. The negative language in which s. 245(4) is cast indicates that the starting point for the analysis is the assumption that a tax benefit that would be conferred by the plain words of the Act is not abusive. This means that a finding of abuse is only warranted where the opposite conclusion — that the avoidance transaction was consistent with the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions of the Act that are relied on by the taxpayer — cannot be reasonably entertained. In other words, the abusive nature of the transaction must be clear. The GAAR will not apply to deny a tax benefit where it may reasonably be considered that the transactions were carried out in a manner consistent with the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions of the Act, as interpreted textually, contextually and purposively.

5.6. Burden of Proof

63 The determination of the existence of a tax benefit and an avoidance transaction under s. 245(1), (2) and (3) involves factual decisions. As such, the burden of proof is the same as in any tax proceeding where the taxpayer disputes the Minister's assessment and its underlying assumptions of facts. The initial obligation is on the taxpayer to "refute" or challenge the Minister's factual assumptions by contesting the existence of a tax benefit or by showing that a bona fide non-tax purpose primarily drove the transaction: see Hickman Motors Ltd. v. R., [1997] 2 S.C.R. 336 (S.C.C.), at para. 92. It is not unfair to impose this burden, as the taxpayer would presumably have knowledge of the factual background of the transaction.

64 By contrast, the inquiry into abusive tax avoidance under s. 245(4) involves a textual, contextual and purposive analysis of the provisions on which the tax benefit is based. We see no reason to maintain the distinction between a theoretical and practical perspective on the burden of proof, adopted by the majority of the Federal Court of Appeal in OSFC. The Federal Court of Appeal held that there is no burden on either party at the stage of interpreting the provisions at issue, since this is a question of law, which is ultimately for the court to decide. It went on to state at para. 68 that "from a practical perspective, ... [t]he Minister should set out the policy with reference to the provisions of the Act or extrinsic aids upon which he relies".

65 For practical purposes, the last statement is the important one. The taxpayer, once he or she has shown compliance with the wording of a provision, should not be required to disprove that he or she has thereby violated the object, spirit or purpose of the provision. It is for the Minister who seeks to rely on the GAAR to identify the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions that are claimed to have been frustrated or defeated, when the provisions of the Act are interpreted in a textual, contextual and purposive manner. The Minister is in a better position than the taxpayer to make submissions on legislative intent with a view to interpreting the provisions harmoniously within the broader statutory scheme that is relevant to the transaction at issue.

5.7. Summary

66 The approach to s. 245 of the Income Tax Act may be summarized as follows.

1. Three requirements must be established to permit application of the GAAR:

   (1) A tax benefit resulting from a transaction or part of a series of transactions (s. 245(1) and (2));

   (2) that the transaction is an avoidance transaction in the sense that it cannot be said to have been reasonably undertaken or arranged primarily for a bona fide purpose other than to obtain a tax benefit; and

   (3) that there was abusive tax avoidance in the sense that it cannot be reasonably concluded that a tax benefit would be consistent with the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions relied upon by the taxpayer.

2. The burden is on the taxpayer to refute (1) and (2), and on the Minister to establish (3).

3. If the existence of abusive tax avoidance is unclear, the benefit of the doubt goes to the taxpayer.

4. The courts proceed by conducting a unified textual, contextual and purposive analysis of the provisions giving rise to the tax benefit in order to determine why they were put in place and why the benefit was conferred. The goal is to arrive at a purposive interpretation that is harmonious with the provisions of the Act that confer the tax benefit, read in the context of the whole Act.

5. Whether the transactions were motivated by any economic, commercial, family or other non-tax purpose may form part of the factual context that the courts may consider in the analysis of abusive tax avoidance allegations under s. 245(4). However, any finding in this respect would form only one part of the underlying facts of a case, and would be insufficient by itself to establish abusive tax avoidance. The central issue is the proper interpretation of the relevant provisions in light of their context and purpose.

6. Abusive tax avoidance may be found where the relationships and transactions as expressed in the relevant documentation lack a proper basis relative to the object, spirit or purpose of the provisions that are purported to confer the tax benefit, or where they are wholly dissimilar to the relationships or transactions that are contemplated by the provisions.

7. Where the Tax Court judge has proceeded on a proper construction of the provisions of the Income Tax Act and on findings supported by the evidence, appellate tribunals should not interfere, absent a palpable and overriding error.

6. Application to the Facts of this Case

67 The appellant Crown agreed with the finding of the Tax Court judge that there was a tax benefit and an avoidance transaction. Therefore, the only issue is whether there was abusive tax avoidance under s. 245(4).

68 The respondent purchased and leased trailers in order to generate CCA deductions, which were then used to shelter other taxable lease income generated by CTMC. It is common ground that on their face, the CCA provisions permit the deductions claimed. It is also common ground that a standard sale-leaseback transaction, involving qualifying assets, where the vendor is also the lessee, is consistent with the object, spirit or purpose of the CCA provisions. However, the appellant submits that the manner in which the respondent structured and financed the purchase, lease and sublease of the trailers contravened the object, spirit or purpose of the CCA regime and resulted in abusive tax avoidance under s. 245(4) of the Income Tax Act.

69 As discussed above, the practical burden of showing that there was abusive tax avoidance lies on the Minister. The abuse of the Act must be clear, with the result that doubts must be resolved in favour of the taxpayer. The analysis focuses on the purpose of the particular provisions that on their face give rise to the benefit, and on whether the transaction frustrates or defeats the object, spirit or purpose of those provisions.

70 The appellant submits that the object and spirit of the CCA provisions are "to provide for the recognition of money spent to acquire qualifying assets to the extent that they are consumed in the income-earning process", relying on the reasons of Noël J.A. in Duncan v. R. (2002), [2003] 2 F.C. 25, 2002 FCA 291 (Fed. C.A.), at para. 44. The appellant submits that the transaction involved no real risk and that CTMC thus did not actually spend $120 million to purchase the trailers from TLI. In the appellant's view, CTMC created a "cost for CCA purposes that is an illusion" without incurring any "real" expense. This, the appellant argues, contravenes the object and spirit of the CCA provisions and constitutes abusive tax avoidance within s. 245(4) of the Act. The appellant summarizes its main submission as follows:

> In this case, the pre-ordained series of transactions misuses and abuses the CCA regime because it manufactures a cost for CCA purposes that does not represent the real economic cost to CTMC of the trailers. CTMC borrowed $97.4 million from the Royal Bank, but ... the loan was effectively repaid in its entirety on the day it was made. The assignment by CTMC to the Bank of MAIL's rent payments under the lease continued the circular flow of money.... There was no risk at all that the rent payments would not be made. Even the $5.9 million that CTMC apparently paid in fees was fully covered as it, along with the rest of CTMC's contribution of $24.9 million in funding, will be reimbursed when the $19 million bond pledged to CTMC matures in December 2005 at $33.5 million.
>
> CTMC incurred no real economic cost, and thus was not entitled to any "recognition for money spent to acquire qualifying assets"....
>
> [Emphasis added; paras. 80-81.]

71 The respondent takes a different view of the purpose of the CCA provisions and the transaction. It relies on the Tax Court judge's conclusion that the transaction was a profitable commercial investment and fully consistent with the object and spirit of the Act. The respondent submits that its deductions were permitted under the "Leasing Property Rules" and the "Specified Leasing Property Rules" of the Act. It argues that the specific rules enacted by Parliament to address CCA on leased assets are plainly a vital part of the statutory scheme, and that the GAAR cannot be utilized to change the scope of those rules. The respondent submits that it is the policy of the Act that "cost" means the price that the taxpayer gave up in order to get the asset, except in specific and precisely prescribed circumstances not here applicable. The respondent argues that the GAAR cannot be used to override Parliament's explicit policy decision to limit the scope of the rules.

72 The respondent argues that the transaction was consistent with the object and spirit of the legislation. The Act's inclusion of specific provisions that take "cost" to mean the amount "at risk" in limited circumstances illustrates the general policy of the Act that the term "cost" outside of those specific provisions means cost as understood at law, namely the amount paid. A cost is not reduced to reflect a mitigation of economic risk. In the result, the respondent argues that on the facts of this case "it may reasonably be considered that the transaction would not result directly or indirectly in a misuse ... or an abuse ..." under s. 245(4).

73 We are of the view that the appellant's arguments do not reflect a proper interpretation of the GAAR and that the respondent's position should prevail. We are led to this conclusion by a textual, contextual and purposive interpretation of the relevant provisions of the Income Tax Act.

74 Textually, the CCA provisions use "cost" in the well-established sense of the amount paid to acquire the assets. Contextually, other provisions of the Act support this interpretation. Finally, the purpose of the CCA provisions of the Act, as applied to sale-leaseback transactions, was, as found by the Tax Court judge, to permit deduction of CCA based on the cost of the assets acquired. This purpose emerges clearly from the scheme of the CCA provisions within the Act as a whole. The appellant's argument was not that the purpose of these provisions was unclear, but rather that the GAAR ought to override their accepted purpose and effect, for reasons external to the provisions themselves.

75 The appellant suggests that the usual result of the CCA provisions of the Act should be overridden in the absence of real financial risk or "economic cost" in the transaction. However, this suggestion distorts the purpose of the CCA provisions by reducing them to apply only when sums of money are at economic risk. The applicable CCA provisions of the Act do not refer to economic risk. They refer only to "cost". Where Parliament wanted to introduce economic risk into the meaning of cost related to CCA provisions, it did so expressly, as, for instance, in s. 13(7.1) and (7.2) of the Act, which makes adjustments to the cost of depreciable property when a taxpayer receives government assistance. "Cost" in the context of CCA is a well-understood legal concept. It has been carefully defined by the Act and the jurisprudence. Like the Tax Court judge, we see nothing in the GAAR or the object of the CCA provisions that permits us to rewrite them to interpret "cost" to mean "amount economically at risk" in the applicable provisions. To do so would be to invite inconsistent results. The result would vary with the degree of risk in each case. This would offend the goal of the Act to provide sufficient certainty and predictability to permit taxpayers to intelligently order their affairs. For all these reasons, we agree with the Tax Court judge's conclusion that the "cost" was $120 million, not zero as argued by the appellant.

76 The appellant's submissions on this point amount to a narrow consideration of the "economic substance" of the transaction, viewed in isolation from a textual, contextual and purposive interpretation of the CCA provisions. It did not focus on the purpose of the CCA provisions read in the context of the Act as a whole, to determine whether the tax benefit fell outside the object, spirit or purpose of the relevant provisions. Instead, it simply argued that since there was (as it alleged) no "real economic cost", the GAAR must apply. As discussed earlier, the application of the GAAR is a complex matter of statutory interpretation in which the object, spirit and purpose of the provisions giving rise to the tax benefit are assessed in light of the requirements and wording of the GAAR. While the "economic substance" of the transaction may be relevant at various stages of the analysis, this expression has little meaning in isolation from the proper interpretation of specific provisions of the Act. Any "economic substance" must be considered in relation to the proper interpretation of the specific provisions that are relied upon for the tax benefit.

77 The appellant originally suggested that the GAAR should be used to override the usual effect of the CCA provisions for a second reason - namely that the relationships and transactions that are expressed in the documents are abusive of the provisions of the Act and should be set aside. It properly abandoned this argument and the submission that the transaction was a sham before the Federal Court of Appeal. Here the documents detailing the transaction left no uncertainty as to the relationships between the parties. CTMC paid $120 million to TLI for the equipment, partly with borrowed funds and partly with its own money. Having become the owner of the equipment, it leased it to MAIL. MAIL then subleased it back to the vendor, TLI. The relationships between the parties as expressed in the relevant documentation were not superfluous elements; they were the very essence of the transaction.

78 As the Tax Court judge concluded, under the CCA scheme, "[l]eases of such [exempt] properties will continue to be viewed as acceptable means of providing lower cost financing" (para. 67). TLI's use of the money ultimately reduced the risk, but a company in the financing business is expected to do what it can to reduce risk. Therefore, the way the borrowed money was used provided no grounds for concluding that there was abusive tax avoidance. The Tax Court judge, after considering all the circumstances, found that the transaction was not so dissimilar from an ordinary sale-leaseback to take it outside the object, spirit or purpose of the relevant CCA provisions of the Act and Regulations.

79 In determining the result in this appeal, the Tax Court judge's conclusions on matters of fact should not be displaced provided that they are based on the correct legal analysis and find support in the evidence.

80 The Tax Court judge's analysis on the issue of abuse under s. 245(4) is largely consistent with the approach to the application of the GAAR we have adopted. He rejected the two-stage overriding-policy approach to abuse and misuse. He went on to inquire into the policy or purpose underlying the CCA treatment in sale-leaseback arrangements. Construing the CCA provisions as a whole, he rejected the submission that "cost" in the relevant provisions of the Act should be reread as "money at risk", and he also rejected the argument that the "economic substance" of the transaction determined that there was abusive tax avoidance. He conducted a detailed analysis of the transactions to determine whether they fell within the object, spirit or purpose of the CCA provisions. In the end, he concluded that a tax benefit was consistent with the object, spirit and purpose of the CCA provisions and held that the GAAR could not apply to disallow the tax benefit. These conclusions were based on a correct view of the law and were grounded in the evidence. They should be confirmed.

7. Conclusion

81 We would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Pourvoi rejeté.

Appendix

I. The following parties weave through the multiple transactions at one point or another:

Canada Trustco Mortgage Company ("CTMC" or "Purchaser" or "Lessor" or "Borrower"), respondent, was a large diversified financial institution carrying on business in Canada.

Royal Bank of Canada (Canadian branch) ("RBC" or "Lender").

Transamerica Leasing Inc. ("TLI" or "Vendor" or "Sublessee"), a corporation in the United States.

Maple Assets Investments Limited ("MAIL" or "Lessee" or "Sublessor"), a limited liability company incorporated under the laws of England.

Maple Assets Charitable Trust ("MACT" or "Trust"), constituted by an instrument of trust dated December 17, 1996, owns 100 percent of the shares in MAIL.

Royal Bank of Canada Trust Company (Jersey) Limited ("RBC Jersey" or "Trustee") is the trustee of MACT and is a wholly owned subsidiary of RBC, incorporated in Jersey.

Royal Bank of Canada Trust Corporation Limited ("RBCTC" or "Manager"), a company incorporated in England, undertook to manage and fulfil the affairs and obligations of MAIL under the relevant transactions and to provide the directors and officers of MAIL.

Transamerica Finance Corporation ("TFC" or "Guarantor"), the parent corporation of TLI, who guaranteed to MAIL the performance of all TLI's obligations under the sublease agreement and to CTMC all TLI's obligations under the "Equipment Purchase Agreement".

Macquarie Corporate Finance (USA) Inc. ("Lease Arranger").

II. CTMC held as part of its ongoing business a portfolio of loans and leases to generally larger corporations and government agencies. CTMC testified that it was looking for a leasing arrangement in the range of $100 million. It specified the type of equipment (long-term assets that were easy to value, such as tractors or trailers), the duration of the lease and the strength of the proposed lessee. The structure of the leasing arrangement was left to the Lease Arranger. The trailers remained in the possession of TLI and CTMC continued to own the trailers, to lease them out, and to earn income from them. CTMC previously entered into similar arrangements to the one implemented in this case. The Lease Arranger arranged the TLI deal which was approved by CTMC's Board of Directors. The key transactions proceeded as follows:

The Purchase and Sale of the Trailers

III. On December 17, 1996, CTMC and TLI entered into an agreement for the purchase and sale of trailers at a fair market value of $120 million. TLI agreed to sell and CTMC agreed to purchase the trailers absolutely and ownership in the trailers passed from TLI to CTMC.

IV. On December 17, 1996, for administrative convenience, CTMC appointed TLI as trustee and agent of CTMC to hold in TLI's name, the certificate of title, certificate of ownership, registration and like documentation in respect of the trailers.

Lease of the Trailers to MAIL and the Option to Purchase

V. The terms of the Lease between CTMC and MAIL included the following:

1. the term was for an initial period ending December 1, 2014;

2. the rent payments under the Lease were based upon an effective interest rate of 8.5 percent;

3. MAIL, as lessee, was required to make semi-annual payments to CTMC; and

4. MAIL was provided with an option to purchase the trailers, $84 million being the First Option Value on December 1, 2005 and another option exercisable at the fair market value on December 1, 2014.

Sublease of the Trailers to TLI

VI. Most of the terms of the Sublease to TLI are similar to those in the Lease to MAIL. The Sublease provided TLI with purchase options similar to those provided to MAIL.

Security for the Sublease

VII. On December 17, 1996, pursuant to the terms of the Sublease, TLI prepaid all amounts due to MAIL under the Sublease (approximately $120 million). As a result of the prepayment, TLI had no ongoing Sublease payment obligations and there was no credit risk to MAIL under the terms of the Sublease. TLI maintained certain obligations with respect to indemnities and early termination. TLI retained a net present value benefit of 3.35 percent of the cost of the trailers being the difference between the payment TLI received from CTMC for the sale of the trailers and the prepayment of rent TLI paid to MAIL.

Security for the Lease

VIII. On December 17, 1996, MAIL applied the prepayment it received from TLI as follows:

1. MAIL placed on deposit with the RBC an amount equal to the Loan (approximately $100 million); and

2. MAIL paid the balance of the prepayment (approximately $20 million) to RBC Jersey on the condition that RBC Jersey use these funds to purchase a Government of Ontario Bond (the "Bond"), maturing on December 1, 2005.

IX. On December 17, 1996, the Bond was pledged to CTMC as security for MAIL's obligation to pay the Purchase Option Payments or the Termination Values under the Lease. The risk of the inability of MAIL to pay the First Option Value was removed by the acquisition of the Bond and the provision to CTMC of a security interest in the Bond.

Security for the Loan

X. On December 17, 1996, CTMC assigned to RBC the rent payments owed to CTMC from MAIL under the Lease. CTMC also provided MAIL with an irrevocable instruction to pay the assigned rent payments to RBC such that RBC would apply the rent payments directly to the installment payments due by CTMC to RBC under the terms of the Loan Agreement. RBC's recourse under the Loan was limited to the rent payments assigned to it by CTMC.

XI. The rent payments under the Lease and a portion of the First Option Value would be applied to pay off the RBC loan and the remainder of the purchase option price would be covered by the Bond.

The Effect of Non-Recourse Debt on Regulatory Capital Requirements

XII. The use of non-recourse debt to finance the purchase of the trailers significantly improved CTMC's management of regulatory capital requirements.

Guarantees

XIII. On December 18, 1996, TFC, the parent corporation of TLI, unconditionally and irrevocably guaranteed to MAIL and to CTMC the performance of TLI's obligations under the relevant transactions.

Reversibility of the Transactions

XIV. The transactions in issue could be unwound if there were adverse changes affecting CTMC.

Return on Investment

XV. CTMC would realize a before-tax return of approximately $8.5 million from the transactions.

IN THE MATTER OF "AN ACT RESPECTING THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY," 44 VICT. CH. 1, AND THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE SUDBURY BRANCH OF THE SAID RAILWAY.

1905

*Mar. 17, 20, 21.

*April 6.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY..... } APPLICANTS.

AND

THE JAMES BAY RAILWAY COMPANY..... } CONTESTANTS.

ON A REFERENCE FROM THE BOARD OF RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS FOR CANADA.

Railways—Branch lines—Canadian Pacific Rway. Co's. charter—44 V. c. 1, (D), and schedules—Construction of contract—Limitation of time—Interpretation of terms—"Lay out", "Construct", "Acquire"—"Territory of Dominion"—Hansard debates—Construction of statute—"The Railway Act, 1903."

The charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, [44 Vict. ch. 1, (D.)] and schedules thereto appended imposes limitations neither as to time nor point of departure in respect of the construction of branch lines;—they may be constructed from any point of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Callender Station and the Pacific Seaboard, subject merely to the existing regulations as to approval of location, plans, etc., and without the necessity of any further legislation.

On a reference concerning an application to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada for the approval of deviations from plans of a proposed branch line, under section 43 of "The Railway Act, 1903", it is competent for objections as to the expiration of limitation of time to be taken by the said Board, of its own motion, or by any interested party.

SPECIAL CASE submitted by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada for hearing and consideration, under the provisions of the forty-third section of The Railway Act, 1903.

*PRESENT:—Sedgewick, Girouard, Davies, Nesbitt and Idington JJ.

The statement of the case was as follows :—

" 1. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company was incorporated in 1881 by Letters Patent issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada pursuant to section 2 of the Act 44 Victoria, chapter 1.

" 2. The said Letters Patent are in the form set forth as schedule A to the said Act and the contract between Her late Majesty and the syndicate whose rights were subsequently acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is also set forth as a schedule to the said Act, which will be found in the statutes of Canada for the year 1881 on pages 3 to 30 both inclusive.

" 3. On 14th November, 1902, the said company deposited in the Department of Railways and Canals at Ottawa a map and plan of a proposed branch line of railway from a point near Sudbury, on the company's main line of railway, to a point near Kleinburg, on the Ontario and Quebec Railway, all in the Province of Ontario, together with profile and book of reference.

" 4. On the 18th day of November, 1902, the said map and plan, profile and book of reference were duly sanctioned by the Minister of Railways as appears by his certificate indorsed thereon.

" 5. Subsequently an application to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada was made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the approval of certain deviations from the said proposed route.

" The James Bay Railway Company was incorporated by statute 58 & 59 Victoria (Canada), chapter 50 and thereby authorized to construct a railway from Parry Sound in the Province of Ontario to French River, thence northerly to the easterly side of Lake Wahnapitae and thence to James Bay, and by statute 60 & 61 Victoria (Canada), chapter 47 the James Bay Railway

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Company was authorized to extend its line from Parry Sound to the City of Toronto or to a point adjacent thereto.

"7. Upon the said application to the Board of Railway Commissioners, the James Bay Railway Company filed a protest with the said Board, and being notified of the hearing of the application by the said Board appeared and objected to the approval of the said deviations upon the ground that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had no power to construct the branch in question for two reasons:—

"(a) That the period within which branch lines of railway could be constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under its statutory and charter authority had expired; and—

"(b) That no such authority empowered the construction, at any time, of branch lines in the Province of Ontario.

"The following questions, being in the opinion of the said Board of Railway Commissioners questions of law, are submitted by the said board for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada:

"I. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the legislation, schedules and charter aforesaid, now power to construct the branch line referred to, or has the time expired within which such branch line might be constructed?

"II. Do such legislation, schedules and charter authorize construction by the said company of the proposed branch line, it being altogether situated in the Province of Ontario?

"III. Is it open to the James Bay Railway Company or to the Board of Railway Commissioners to take the objection that the time within which the said company may build branch lines under its charter has expired?

"8. All statutes and orders-in-council, also the said maps, plans, profiles and books of reference may be referred to on the argument of the case subject to all objections as to their admissibility in evidence.

"9. All the statements in the schedule hereto for the purpose of this reference are admitted by the parties to be correct and may be used on the argument subject to all objections as to their admissibility in evidence.

"SCHEDULE."

"REFERRED TO IN THE FOREGOING STATEMENT OF CASE."

"(1) At the date of the Canadian Pacific Railway Charter (1881) the territory through which its main line was to be constructed was, with the exceptions to be mentioned, almost completely uninhabited and only by its general characteristics had become known to the people of Canada. The exceptions to this statement are:—

"(a) A small settlement existed at Port Arthur and Fort William:

"(b) Southern portions of the Province of Manitoba and as far west at the present western boundary of the Province had been surveyed and were sparsely settled, particularly in the neighborhood of Rat Portage and the Red River District where the Winnipeg settlement was:

"(c) Some portions of the country between such western boundary and British Columbia had been surveyed into blocks of sixteen townships each:

"(d) A small settlement on the British Columbia coast.

"(2) From year to year after the date of the contract the Government of the Dominion of Canada caused portions of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories to be surveyed and set off into townships and sections but it was not until the year 1901 that the last of the townships in the North-West Territories and western part of Manitoba through which the railway runs was surveyed and set off into sections. Some of the territory in the eastern part of Manitoba and the western part of Ontario, and in British Columbia, together with large tracts in Manitoba and the North-West Territories through which branch lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway may at some time run (if the contentions of the Canadian Pacific Railway in in question herein are sustained) have not yet been surveyed even into townships by the Government.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

" (3) At the date of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter the main line of the railway north of Lake Superior had been projected to run some distance north of the Lake and join the line between the Lake and Selkirk. The accompanying sketch marked Plan No. 1, (partial copy of a map attached to the report of the then Engineer-in-Chief of the Department of Railways—Mr. Sandford Fleming—dated 26th April 1878), shows the projected junction of the eastern and Lake Superior sections of the railway and the line to Fort William as then contemplated. After that date the route of the main line was changed. The part of it lying north of Lake Superior was brought more to the south so as to skirt the Lake and the western end of the eastern section was made to join the eastern end of Lake Superior section at or near Fort William as shown in the accompanying sketch marked Plan No. 2 which is a partial copy of a map.

" (4) Prior to 1st May, 1891, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, without any other legislative authority than that contained in the legislation of the Parliament of Canada appearing in the said statute 44 Vict., ch. 1, and the schedules thereto and the charter issued in pursuance thereof, constructed and equipped the branch lines of railway or extensions of branches in List A, in paragraph 5, hereof. Subsequent to said first May, 1891, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have constructed, without any such other authority, the branches or extensions of branches set out in List B in paragraph 5 hereof. In respect of the branches or extensions of branches set out in the said lists, those which are accompanied by the word "(Inspected)" were inspected by a Government Engineer and permission granted to the Company to open such branches respectively for the public conveyance of passengers.

(5) For the information of the court the following lists have been prepared:—

"LIST A"

BRANCHES OF THE COMPANY'S MAIN LINE CONSTRUCTED PRIOR TO MAY 1ST, 1891."

"1. Ontario: The Algoma Branch from Sudbury to Sault Ste. Marie, 182·1 miles. Constructed 1883-6 (Inspected).

"2. Ontario: The Stobie Branch from Sudbury to Copper Mines, 5·6 miles. Constructed 1887.

"3. British Columbia: The New Westminster Branch from New Westminster Junction to New Westminster, 13·7 miles. Constructed 1887. (Inspected).

"4. British Columbia: The Port Moody Branch from Port Moody to Vancouver, 13 miles. Constructed 1887.

"5. Manitoba: The Pembina Mountain Branch from Winnipeg to Manitou, 110·1 miles. Constructed 1882. (Inspected).

"6. Manitoba: The Gretna Branch from Rosenfeld to Gretna, 13·7 miles. Constructed, 1882.

"7. Manitoba: The Selkirk Branch from Winnipeg to West Selkirk, 24 miles. Constructed 1883. (Inspected).

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

"LIST 'B.'"

"BRANCHES CONSTRUCTED SUBSEQUENT TO MAY 1ST, 1891."

"8. Ontario: The Dyment Branch from Dyment to Ottamine, 7 miles. Constructed 1900. (Inspected.)

"9. British Columbia: The Mission Branch from Mission Junction to Mission, 10 miles. Constructed 1895.

"10. British Columbia: The Arrow Lake Branch from Revelstoke to Arrowhead, 27.7 miles. Constructed 1897.

"11. British Columbia: The Coal Harbour Branch from Vancouver to Coal Harbor, 1.2 miles. Constructed 1903.

"12. Manitoba: An extension of the Stonewall Branch, from Stonewall to Teulon, 19 miles. Constructed 1898. (Inspected.)

"13. Manitoba: The Lac du Bonnet Branch from Molson to Lac du Bonnet, 27 miles. Constructed 1900. As to this branch the Dominion Statute 63 & 64 Vict., ch. 55, sec. 3, gives such authority as is contained in that section. (Inspected.)

"14. Manitoba: The McGregor Branch from McGregor to Brookdale, 36 miles. Constructed 1900-02. As to this branch the Dominion Statute 63 & 64 Vict., ch 55, sec. 3, gives such authority as is contained in that section. (Inspected.)

"15. Manitoba: Extension of Souris Branch from Souris to Glenboro, 45.7 miles. Constructed 1891-2. (Inspected.)

"16. Manitoba: Extension of Souris Branch from Napinka to Deloraine, 18.6 miles. Constructed 1892.

"17. Manitoba and North-West Territories: The Pheasant Hills Branch from Kirkella in Manitoba to Haywood in the North-West Territories, 146 miles. Constructed 1903-4. (Inspected.)

"18. Manitoba and North-West Territories: The Souris Branch from Kemnay to Estevan, 156.2 miles. Constructed 1891-2. (Inspected from Kemnay to Melita.)

"19. North West-Territories: The Portal Branch from North Portal to Pasqua, 160.3 miles. Constructed 1893."

The statement then referred to Dominion legislation and action respecting subsidies for branch lines or extensions thereof constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under its charter; and certain Parliamentary references thereto, that is to say;

As to the Algoma Branch, in Ontario:— 47 Vict., ch. 1 (sanctioning a Government loan), sec. 5. (At this time the Algoma Branch Line had been constructed to Algoma on the Georgian Bay.)—48 & 49 Vict., ch. 57, secs. 1, 3 and 10; 49 Vict., ch. 9, secs. 2 and 3; 50 & 51 Vict., ch. 56, sec. 4. The Company enacted by-laws in connection with the issue of the branch bonds, and, on 19th May, 1887, an order-in-council was passed approving of such by-laws.

As to the Dyment Branch, in Ontario, 63 & 64 Vict., ch. 8, authorized a cash subsidy. "The subsidy has been paid by the Dominion Government to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The subsidy agreement between the Crown and the company, dated 28th August, 1902, and signed on behalf of Her Majesty by the Acting Minister of Railways, contains the following recital:—'Whereas the company was incorporated and authorized to build the railway hereinafter mentioned by the Act or Acts following, namely, Canada 1881, chapter 1, section 14.' This section is the clause in the company's original charter authorizing the construction of branch lines."

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

As to the Arrow Lake Branch, in British Columbia. 55 & 56 Vict., ch. 5, sec. 3, authorized a cash subsidy. "The subsidy has been paid by the Dominion Government to the company."

As to the Pheasant Hills Branch, in Manitoba and North-West Territories, by 3 Edw. VII., ch. 57, a cash subsidy was authorized. "Nearly all of this subsidy has been paid by the Dominion Government to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The subsidy agreement is dated 14th January, 1904, and the recital contains a reference to the company's original charter similar to that in the Dyment Branch."

As to the Souris Branch, in Manitoba and North-West Territories, by 53 Vict., ch. 4, sec. 1, "the Governor-in-Council may grant subsidies in land hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:—To the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres per mile for a branch line to be constructed from Glenboro' westerly a distance of about sixty miles, to a point on the proposed branch railway of the said company running from Brandon, south-westerly.—To the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres per mile for a branch line of railway from a point at or near Brandon, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, south-westerly to or near township three, range twenty-seven, west of the first principal meridian, and thence westerly a total distance of one hundred miles; and also a similar grant, at the same rate per mile, for the said company's proposed branch railway from a point on the line just described at or near township three, range twenty-seven, west of the first principal meridian, easterly to Deloraine, a distance of about twenty-five miles,—making the total length of railway to which this grant is applicable one hundred and twenty-five miles."

"The order-in-council of 18th of May, 1899, providing for this grant of land states that: 'It is the intention of the company to build these extensions under the powers conferred upon it in relation to the building of branch lines.' The order-in-council of 7th February, 1891, sets apart the reservation of land required to meet the above grant. Orders-in-council were made in 1890 and in 1891 (after 1st May) extending the time for completing this branch. The order-in-council of 24th August, 1894, provides for a land grant of 6,400 acres per mile, for the extension of the Souris Branch from a point in the vicinity of Souris in a westerly direction, a distance of about 32 miles. The order-in-council of 22nd August, reports that the company has earned 1,408,704 acres of land by the construction of the Souris Branch and provides for grants thereof; 54 & 55 Vict., ch. 10 authorizes the Governor in Council to grant the land subsidies for another branch in Manitoba; 54 and 55 Vict., ch. 71, "authorizes the issue of Consolidated Debenture Stock to use in acquiring or satisfying bonds issued in respect of the Souris Branch and contains the following words in sub-section (a) of section 1; 'The company being at the time of the passing of this Act empowered by its charter to construct the same.' All this stock has been issued and sold by the company and is now outstanding."

The statement continues :—

"The only reference in the statutes to the Sudbury Line is contained in 51 Vict. ch. 51 (1888), which is the Act increasing the company's bonding powers on branch lines from $20,000 to $30,000 a mile. The preamble to this Act is as follows :—"Whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has, by its petition, represented that the branch line, to be known as the Toronto Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which it proposes to construct under its charter from a point at or near Sudbury to a point at or near Claremont, will be unusually expensive; that an issue of twenty thousand dollars of bonds per mile thereon would not constitute a sufficient aid towards the construction thereof; and that a similar state of things will probably occur in respect of other branches to be hereafter built by the said company, and it has prayed that the maximum amount of bonds to be issued on any such branch, be fixed at thirty thousand dollars per mile, and it be authorized to issue debenture stock in the place and stead of such bonds; and it is expedient to grant the prayer of the said petition.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

" 8. The route map of the James Bay Railway Company was duly filed and approved by the Minister of Railways and Canals pursuant to section 122 of the 'Railway Act 1903' on the 2nd day of April 1904. Plans, profiles and books of reference showing the James Bay Railway Company's location through the districts of Nipissing, Parry Sound and Muskoka and the County of York were duly submitted to and sanctioned by the Minister of Railways and Canals prior to the coming in force of the said Act and thereafter by the Board of Railway Commissioners at various dates between January 26th, 1904, and December 14th 1904, and all requirements of the several Railway Acts applicable thereto preliminary to the commencement of construction have been duly complied with.

" 9. The locations of the two railways in the District of Nipissing for some distance occupy identical areas and at other places throughout the locations they overlap and cross each other. By the deviations of the Canadian Pacific Railway in question herein that company is seeking to occupy a line which will cross the line of the James Bay Railway Company.

" 10. At the dates of the passing of the Act 44 Vict. ch. 1, the entering into the agreement and the granting of the charter referred to in the said Act, the North-West Territories were governed by the Parliament of Canada by virtue of The Imperial Act 34 & 35 Vict. ch. 28, sec. 4."

" 11. On or about the 13th day of November, 1897, at the request of the then Minister of the Interior, Sir Oliver Mowat, then Minister of Justice, after hearing counsel for those interested including the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, gave a written opinion which deals with the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to build branches under the statute 44 Vict. ch. 1. The following is the whole of such opinion in so far as it relates to the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to build branches."

" I think, though the point is not free from difficulty, that the time for building branch lines was limited to the time mentioned in clause 4 of the contract. That clause stipulates for the completion, on or before the 1st May, 1891, of the works therein described as the east section and centre sections of the road and the 15th section of the Act provides for the company's constructing " the main line," and an existing branch described in the Act, and also other branches to be located by the company from time to time as provided by the said contract * * * 'the said main line of railways and the said branch lines of railway shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract.' This language is so clear and explicit that it is out of the question to suppose it not to have been intended that there should be a limit of time as regards the branches. Not only does the Act expressly state the contrary, but to give an unlimited time for commencing or completing a railway authorized by any Act would have been contrary to the whole course of railway legislation. It would be contrary also to the policy of the General Railway Act of 1879 s. (6) which Act is referred to in the 22nd clause of the contract as applying to the Canadian Pacific Railway so far as applicable thereto and as not inconsistent with the Act relating to that company.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO

"Now it is true that the 4th section of the contract does not expressly mention branch lines. But it being quite clear from the 15th section of the Act that it was intended there should be a limit of time both for commencing and for completing these, that Parliament interpreted some provision in the contract as containing a limit or as showing a limit when read with the 15th section of the Act, and that the only provision on the subject of such a limit is the 4th clause of the contract, that clause is to be construed accordingly. The words 'the said main line of railway and the said branch lines of railway shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract' may be read as including in the eastern and centre sections named the branch lines which the company should build therefrom under the authority of the Act; or the 15th section may be read as if it said "provided for by the contract in respect of the works therein specified. It was evidently intended by Parliament to put the main line and the branch lines on the same footing in this respect.

"It has been suggested that the 15th section may be read as limiting time for those branch lines only which the company had contracted to build, but these are no more provided for by the words than other branch lines are; and if the 4th clause may in the light of the 15th section be read so as to embrace the branch lines contracted for, these may be read in like manner as embracing the branch lines located by the company from time to time."

The date fixed by the contracts referred to in section six of the agreement in the schedule to 44 Vict. ch. 1 for the completion of the construction of the Lake Superior section, were all prior in time to the first of May, 1891.

The statement then refers, with extracts to the following statutes namely,—33 & 34 Vict. ch. 3 (D), (preamble and sec. 1); 34 & 35 Vict. ch. 28 Insp. (preamble, enacting clause and secs. 1, 3 and 4); 46 Vict. ch. 34 (D), sec. 6; and 47 Vict. ch. 1 (D.) preamble; 44 Vict. ch. 1 (D), with schedules, and "The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879" ch. 9, sec. 28, subsec. 6.

The principal questions referred to upon the arguments at the hearing of the case are discussed in the judgments now reported.

Ewart K.C., Aylesworth K.C. and Creelman K.C., for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As to the meaning of the word "territory" generally:—"From the fundamental doctrine of territorial sovereignty * * flows the corrollary that territory and jurisdiction are co-extensive;" Hannis Taylor, International Law, 206:—"The whole space over which a nation extends its government becomes the seat of its jurisdiction and is called its territory;" Vattel, Droit des Gens, I, c. 18, sec. 205; Hannis Taylor, International Law, 206:—"A dependency is a territory placed under a subordinate government;" Cornewall Lewis, Government of Dependencies, 9:—"The entire territory subject to a supreme government possessing several dependencies (that is to say, a territory formed of a dominant country together with its dependencies) is sometimes styled an Empire;" Cornewall Lewis, Government of Dependencies, 73; "The territorial property of a state consists of all the land and water within its geographical boundaries, including all rivers, lakes, bays, gulfs and straits lying wholly within them * * The non-territorial property of a state consists of such possessions as it may hold in its public capacity beyond its own limits;" Hannis Taylor, International Law, 263: "Territory of the state acquired by prescription;" Ib., 275: "One sovereign power is bound to respect the subjects and rights of all other sovereign powers outside of its own territory;" The Queen v. Jameson (1): "Every state possesses the power of regulating the conditions on which property within its territory may be held or transmitted;" Fœlix, Droit Int. Privé, sec. 9; Hannis Taylor, International Law, 206.: "The jurisdiction of the nation within its own territory is necessarily exclusive and absolute;" per Marshall, C. J. in The Schooner Exchange v. McFaddon, (1812). (2): "It is a principle * * universally recognized that the power of legislation in constituting offences * * is primâ facie local, limited to the territory over which the legislature has jurisdiction;" Re Criminal Code Bigamy sections (1897), (3) at pages 469, 470, 471, 472, 476, 477, 484, 488, 489: "If the legislature of a particular country should think fit by express enactment to render foreigners subject to its laws with reference to offences committed beyond the limits of its territory;" Reg. v. Keyn, (4): 'Straits only, or less than, six miles wide are wholly within the territory of the state or states to which their shores belong;" Hannis Taylor. International Law, 279: "The jurisdiction of colonies is confined within their own territories, and the maxim * * * extra territorium jus dicenti impune non paretur would be applicable to such a case;" Macleod

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

(1) [1896] 2 Q. B. 425.
(2) 7 Cranch 116 at p. 136.
(3) 27 Can. S. C. R., 461.
(4) 2 Ex. D. 63 at p. 160

v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (1): "The laws of a colony cannot extend beyond its territorial limits;" Low v. Rutledge (2); Reg. v. Mount (3); Reg. v. Brierly (4): "But since states are not accustomed to permit another state to enter their territory for the sake of exacting punishment;" Grotius, Bk. II, c. 21, secs. 3, 4; Clarke, Extradition, 2: "Assassins, incendiaries and robbers are seized everywhere at the desire of the sovereign in whose territories the crime was committed;" Vattel, Bk. II, sec. 76; Clarke, Extradition, 3: "He ought to be delivered up to those against whom the crime is committed, that they may punish him within their own territories;" Rutherford, Bk. II, c. 9, sec. 12; Clarke, Extradition, 8: "There ought to be laws on both sides giving power * * * to each government to secure persons who have committed offences in the territory of one and taken refuge in the territory of the other;" Lord Brougham in the House of Lords, 14th Feb. 1842; Clarke, Extradition, 10: "The law of nations embraces no provision for the surrender of persons who are fugitives from the offended laws of one country to the territory of another;" United States v. Rauscher (5); Hannis Taylor, International Law, 255: "Statutes relating to the removal of persons from the territory of the law maker;" Lefroy, Legislative Power in Canada, pp. 322-338: "Territorial waters of Her Majesty's Dominions" does not mean North-West Territory waters, in the Dominion of Canada; see 41 & 42 Vict. (Imp.), ch. 73, sec. 7; Hannis Taylor, International Law, 277: "Charles the Second made a grant to Lord Clarendon and others of the territory lying on the Atlantic ocean;" Story on the Constitution, (ed. 1891,) 93: "A project was formed for the settlement of a colony

(1) 1891) A. C. 455.
(2) 1 Ch. App. 42.
(3) L. R. 6 P. C. 283 at p. 301.
(4) 14 O. R. 525, 534.
(5) 119 U. S. R. 407.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

upon the unoccupied territory between the rivers;" Ibid, 101: "At the time of the first grants of the colonial charters, there was not any possession or occupation of the territory by any British emigrants; Ibid, 107.

The treaty between Great Britain and the United States of 9th August, 1842, is styled "A treaty to settle and define the boundaries between the territories of the United States and the posessions of Her Britannic Majesty in North America * * * and for the giving up of criminals," etc. But the word "territories" here does not apply to Oregon, but to the State of Maine principally. In the recital of the treaty are the words: "The prevention of crime within the territories of the two parties." Section 4 provides for the case of "grants of land heretofore made by either party within the limits of the territory which," etc. And section 5 provides for the "Disputed Territory Fund." So also, in the Treaty of 1846 establishing the boundary west of the Rocky Mountains, the desire is recited for "An amicable compromise of the rights mutually asserted by the two parties over the said territory. And see articles 1 and 3 of the treaty.

As to whether or not the James Bay Railway Company can raise objection as to time of construction see Roy v. La Compagnie du Chemin de Fer Quebec, Montmorency & Charlevoix (1), per Cassault J.; Morawetz on Corporations, secs. 1006, 1015; Re New York Elevated Railway (2); Thompson on Corporations, secs. 6598, 6602; Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. (3), per Buchanan C. J. at page 121; Becher v. Woods (4); McDiarmid v. Hughes (5); Doe d. Hayne v. Redfern (6); Doe d. Evans v. Evans (7).

(1) 11 Legal News, 359.
(2) 70 N. Y. 337.
(3) 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 1.
(4) 16 U. C. C. P. 29.
(5) 16 O. R. 570.
(6) 12 East 96.
(7) 5 B. & C. 584.

The following cases and authorities were also cited: —Am. & Eng. Encycl. vol. XCIII, p. 677; Chicago and Western Indiana Railroad Co. v. Dunbar (1); Rochester H. & L. Railroad Co. v. New York Lake Erie & Western Railroad Co. (2); Trester v. Missouri etc. Railroad Co. (3); New York & Erie Railroad Co. v. Young (4); Williamsport & N. B. Railroad Co. v. Philadelphia & Erie Railroad Co. (5); Major v. The Canadian Pacific Railway Co. (6), per Ritchie C. J. at pages 237-240 and The North Eastern Railway Co. v. Lord Hastings (7) at page 268.

S. H. Blake K. C., Walter Cassels K. C. and W. A. H. Kerr for the James Bay Railway Co. In order to arrive at the rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. in view of the legislation which has been enacted, it becomes essential to consider what rights were granted to the contractors by section 14 of Vict., ch. 1. The company stand in the place of the contractors, they are the contractors, and their right to construct branch lines is a right given them "from time to time." It must be limited to the time within which their contract had to be performed. No right could exist after they had received the consideration for the fulfilment of their contract, within the time limited, after the expiration of their contract and after the time had expired.

No such right can be inferred from the provisions of section 15 of the charter. The opinion of Sir Oliver Mowat, on this question, (8) is obviously correct and we refer to it as part of our argument. It is obvious that if the general powers to build branches, as claimed, existed there could be no necessity for the

(1) 100 Ill., 110.
(2) 44 Hun., 210.
(3) 33 Neb., 171.
(4) 33 Penn., 175.
(5) 141 Penn., 408 at 415.
(6) 13 Can. S. C. R., 233.
(7) [1900] A. C., 260.
(8) Page 53 ante.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

specific powers given as to building branches mentioned in clause 15 of the charter.

It was never contemplated or intended that the Dominion should infringe the rights of the provinces to incorporate railways having their terminal points within the provincial boundaries, in virtue of the British North America Acts, 1867 and 1871. At the time of the contract the powers subsequently taken by the Dominion, by 46 Vict, ch. 24, sec. 6, as to legislation in regard to railways intersecting or crossing railways chartered by the Dominion, did not exist nor was any such right then claimed by the Dominion. The "territory" within which the rights were granted respecting branch lines was, obviously, only that territory over which the Dominion had sole jurisdiction under the British North America Act, 1871. It is impossible to place any construction upon clause 14 of the contract which might extend its meaning so as to include other parts of Canada.

The only other clause which can be relied upon by the company as giving them the powers claimed as to the construction of branch lines is clause 15 of the charter, and this still leaves them subject to the condition that any branches or branch lines, including those specifically named, must be completed within the time limited for the construction of the main line according to the contract. If there was such power conferred as is now claimed by the company as to the construction of branch lines, then there would have been no necessity of giving specific powers as to the branches particularly mentioned. These particular branches were named and power given to construct them for the reason that they would not be covered by section 14 of the contract, their terminal point not being within the territory of the Dominion.

It is obvious that, when the contract was entered into, the contractors were to have the right to lay out and equip, etc., branch lines to any point or points within the territory of the Dominion, what was meant by the word "territory" was what was known by the British North America Act of 1871, as the territory of the Dominion. It would seem an absurd contention that these words should be construed as meaning any point or points within the Dominion of Canada.

The contractors were constructing two sections; quâ contractors they would have the right to build branch lines. The Government were constructing the other sections of the railway, and the words "to any point or points within the territory of the Dominion" cannot be held to mean more than they say, and have reference only to as the territory over which the Dominion had exclusive legislative jurisdiction, and in which the Dominion owned the Crown lands. This is manifest from the provision of the clause 14, providing that the Government shall grant to the company the lands required for the road-bed of such branches, for the stations, etc., in so far as such lands are vested in the Government. How can it reasonably be contended, having regard to this language, that a general power to construct east from Winnipeg to the Atlantic Ocean, or west from Winnipeg to the Pacific Ocean, could be conferred upon these contractors?

We also submit that if, in point of fact, any particular branches have been sanctioned by the Parliament of Canada, although we do not admit that any have been so sanctioned, such a thing as estoppel could only be set up in regard to the particular branches so sanctioned. There is no ambiguity whatever as to the meaning of the statute, 44 Vict., ch. 1. There is no power in the Government to vary or alter the terms of the contract and such a thing as an estoppel against the Crown and the public of Canada, by an acceptance of certain lines constructed even if beyond the powers of the company, could have no possible effect in enlarging the powers conferred by the statute and contract hereinbefore set out.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

As to our rights of contestation, we do not require to bring in the Attorney General for Ontario; we can sustain our position alone as our lands and rights are imperilled. Grahame v. Swan (1), at page 559. As to the interpretation of the words "time to time" see 26 Am. & Eng. Encycl. (2 ed.), and at page 167 as to stare decisis being a wider term than res judicata. This is not a case for scire facias, there is no question of a forfeiture of any kind.

Newcombe K.C., Deputy of the Minister of Justice, and A. S. White K.C. held a watching brief on behalf of the Attorney General for Canada.

Formal answers were rendered by the Supreme Court of Canada, as follows:—

"In the matter of application No. 590 of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for approval of certain deviations from the original plan of the route of the Sudbury Branch of their railway, referred by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada, under the statute of Edward VII., chapter 58, section 45, being 'The Railway Act, 1903,' the following questions were submitted to the court for hearing and consideration:

"I. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the legislation, schedule and charter aforesaid, now power to construct the branch line referred to, or has the time expired within which such branch line might be constructed?

(1) 7 App. Cas. 547.

"II. Do such legislation, schedule and charter authorize construction by the said company of the proposed branch line, it being altogether situated in the Province of Ontario?

"III. Is it open to the James Bay Railway Company or to the Board of Railway Commissioners to take the objection that the time within which the said company may build branch lines under its charter has expired?

"The court, having heard counsel on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as well as on behalf of the James Bay Railway Company (the Attorney General for Canada also represented by counsel who stated that he was taking no part in the argument), and having considered the questions submitted as aforesaid, certifies to the said Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada that, for the reasons contained in the documents hereunto annexed, the following are the answers of the said court:

"To the first question;—Yes, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has now power to construct the said Sudbury branch of its railway, Idington J dissenting.

"To the second question;—Yes, Idington J. dissenting, on ground of time having expired.

"To the third question;—Yes, as to both the James Bay Railway Company and the Board of Railway Commissioners; Girouard and Davies JJ. taking no part in this answer, because the answers to the first and second questions render any answer to the third question unnecessary."

(Signed) "ROBT. SEDGEWICK J."
"D. GIROUARD J."
"L. H. DAVIES J.
"WALLACE NESBITT J."
"JOHN IDINGTON J."

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Reasons for foregoing answers were delivered by Their Lordships, annexed to the formal opinion, as follows:—

SEDGEWICK J.—This is a reference to this court from the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada by virtue of the Dominion Railway Act, 1903. Some years ago the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. had located a branch line from Sudbury in the Province of Ontario to Toronto, and had obtained, before the passing of the Railway Act of 1893, the approval of the Minister of Railways to the location and plans thereof. Subsequently, after the passing of that Act, the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. applied to the Board for approval of certain deviations from the proposed route of this Sudbury branch. The James Bay Railway Co. opposed the application on the ground that the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. had no authority to construct the branch either under its original charter or by any subsequent legislation. These are the questions:

1. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the legislation, schedules and charter aforesaid now power to construct the branch line referred to; or has the time expired within which such branch line might be constructed?

2. Do such legislation, schedules and charter authorize construction by the said Company of the proposed branch line, it being altogether situated in the Province of Ontario?

3. Is it open to the James Bay Railway Company, or to the Board of Railway Commissioners, to take the objection that the time within which the said Company may build branch lines under its charter has expired?

Section 15 of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co's charter is as follows:

15. The Company may lay out, construct, acquire, equip, maintain and work a continuous line of railway, of the gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches, which railway shall extend from the terminus of the Canada Central Railway near Lake Nipissing, known as Callander Station, to Port Moody in the Province of British Columbia; and also, a branch line of railway from some point on the main line of railway to Fort William on Thunder Bay ; and also the existing branch line of railway from Selkirk, in the Province of Manitoba, to Pembina in the said Province ; and also other branches to be located by the Company from time to time as provided by the said contract,—the said branches to be of the gauge aforesaid ; and the said main line of railway, and the said branch lines of railway, shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract ; and together with such other branch lines as shall be hereafter constructed by the said company, and any extension of the said main line of railway that shall hereafter be constructed or acquired by the company, shall constitute the line of railway hereinafter called The Canadian Pacific Railway.

This section contemplates two classes of branch lines, namely, branches such as that from Selkirk to Pembina, and another from a point on the main line of railway to Fort William. These two branches may be called the Government branches to distinguish them from the other branches to be located by the company from time to time, which may be called the company branches.

I take the meaning of this clause to be that the company might "acquire" (it certainly was not intended that they should "lay out" or "construct") the two sections of the main line which the Government were to build and those Government branches which were either in process or in contemplation of being built ; and that they might "construct" the other two sections of the main line and other branches "to be located by the company from time to time."

The first question then is : Has the time expired for the construction of branch lines ? The controlling word is in clause 15 above set out, wherein it is provided that the company may construct other branches to be located by the company from time to time, and that the whole, namely, the said main line of railway and the said branch lines of railway (Government branch lines and company branch lines) shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract. There is a time specified when the main line is to be commenced and also when it is to be completed, but there is no provision in the contract which can with any certainty lead to the conclusion that any time was ever fixed for the commencement or completion of the company's branch lines. The contestants, the James Bay Railway Co., seek to eliminate the words " shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract," and to insert in lieu thereof words which may have, and which I think have as a matter of fact, a different meaning: They propose to read the provision that branch lines must be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract, as if it said that branch lines " shall be commenced and completed within the same time as is provided by the contract for the commencement and completion of the two sections of the main line by the company." I have not sufficient boldness to venture upon such judicial legislation as this. Judicial legislation may be necessary where we have to delve into the common law to obtain some precedent for a state of affairs involving legal rights the like of which is new in the experience of mankind, but I have never yet been able to see any necessity for a resort to that method when we are endeavouring to interpret a written instrument, whether it be a statute, a contract, or any other document. No matter what the intention may have been, unless that intention can be unequivocally drawn from the language which the parties have used in the instrument under consideration, it is all the same as if there had been no intention at all.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Sedgewick J.

The contestants contend that the contract must be construed so as to make the commencement of the branch lines co-incident with those of the two sections of the main line, but one section of the main line is to be commenced by the "first July next" and the other not later than the " first May next." Which of these dates applies to branch lines?

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Sedgewick J.

Several considerations in addition to those arising from a study of the mere words themselves will, I think, lead to the conclusion that it could not have been the intention of Parliament to provide a definite period beyond which the company would lose their power of building branch lines.

Consider the condition of the North West Territories at the time this contract was made. A vast, practically unknown country, the fertile belt of which was in round numbers nearly 1000 miles in length, and nearly 500 miles in width. It was practically unsurveyed. The road was intended to be not only a great international highway extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but a great colonization railway as well, its main object being to open up to the world that magnificent area of wheat growing country, the wealth and potentialities of which we have even yet hardly begun to appreciate.

The Government had entered into an obligation with British Columbia pursuant to the "Carnarvon Terms" to complete the road at the earliest possible moment, and the whole power of Parliament, practically the whole revenues of the country, and every energy the Canadian people possessed, were cheerfully given to attain the end in view, the national honour of Canada being to a certain extent involved. The first great aim of the government, of Parliament and of the company must therefore have been to finish the main line first; branch lines to be built by the company might well afford to wait. They could not be built anyway for any practical purpose, particularly through the fertile belt so called, without previous survey and considerable settlement. What concession would it have been to give the company the right to build branch lines only during the ten years during which the main line was being built ? They could not touch branch lines. It would be an illusory gift at the best. It has been suggested to us that the power contended for by the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. that they have the right in perpetui y to build branch lines from their main line was such a tremendous power, a power so fraught with danger to the state and the exercise of which might prevent the building of other railways by competing companies, that any construction other than that must be resorted to. I have yet to see anything very extraordinary in the grant of this power, especially when we consider the other grants which Parliament in its wisdom was induced to make for the purpose of completing the railway and of thus cementing together the theretofore scattered fragments, the disjecta membra of the Dominion.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Sedgewick J.

Parliament had contributed $25,000,000 in cash and 25 million acres of land. It had given gratuitously to the company the two main sections ready to be operated, at a cost I suppose as great as that of the sections built by the company. It had made them a perpetual corporation, and eliminated from the general Act section after section which might be supposed to interfere more or less with the carrying on of the enterprise and with the borrowing of money for that purpose. It had also, (and this may be deemed to be an extraordinary concession, necessary doubtless in the interests of the enterprise, but still extraordinary,) enacted that the Canadian Pacific Railway, and all stations, station grounds, work shops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company, should be forever free from taxation by the Dominion or by any province thereof to be established or by any municipal corporation therein, and it had as well

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Sedgewick J.

exempted the company's lands from taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown. Thus Parliament had given the company chartered powers to last forever. It had given them the right to operate forever a line of railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, assuming the company took advantage as it has since done of this special provision in the charter for the acquirement of railways east of Sudbury. It had exempted the company's property, so far as it was within the North-West Territories and was used for railway purposes, from taxation forever. Why should it be thought a strange thing, an abnormal thing, a thing so unthinkable that the words of the contract must be twisted out of shape to obviate the difficulty—why should it be thought a strange thing that Parliament should give to the company along with these other perpetual rights, the perpetual right of building branch lines from any part of its main line to any other point within Canadian territory? The whole state of affairs at the time of the charter must have indicated that for many years, perhaps for generations, the Canadian Pacific Railway could be successfully operated only by the opening up of the North-West for settlement and by the building of branch lines by this parent road for the purpose of making the most of the country and developing its innumerable magnificent resources. One can easily imagine that it would have brought a smile to the cheek of those illustrious gentlemen whose daring and patriotism, and whose pluck and fortitude (along with that of others,) accomplished the work, had some law officer of the Crown in treaty with them suggested "Oh, but if you want to build any branch lines you must begin and complete them at the same time as you begin and complete the main line." Short work, one can readily conceive, would be made of such a proposition as that.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Sedgewick J.

I take the liberty of adding here an epitome of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's argument on this branch of the case, as set out in their factum:

1. The contract does not fix any date for completion of branch lines.

2. The dates fixed for the commencement and completion of the main line cannot apply to the company's branches;

(a.) Because there are several such dates, and there is no reason for selecting one rather than the other.

(b.) Because the short periods for the commencement of the main line would be absurdly inadequate for the location of the necessary branches.

(c.) And still more inadequate for the comencement of construction.

(d.) Because the speedy construction of the main line was the paramount object of the contract.

(e.) Because the main line itself (from which branches were to be built) was not itself fixed by the contract and was not definitely settled until the year 1882 or afterwards.

(f.) Because the clause itself speaks of "other branch lines" to be "hereafter constructed by the said company."

I am now come to the second question: Has the Canadian Pacific Railway Company power to build branches in Ontario? The contestants say—"No. That they cannot build branches except to a point within what is known as the North-West Territories," basing their argument upon section 14 of the contract which provides that:

> The company shall have the right from time to time to lay out, construct, equip and maintain and work branch lines of railway from any point or points along their main line of railway, to any point or points within the territory of the Dominion.

They argued that the word "territory" there must mean immovable property owned by the Dominion. This argument appears to me to be so, shall I venture to say, far-fetched, that the very statement of it is its own contradiction.

They also argue that "territory of the Dominion" means "The North-West Territories."

A third argument is that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is empowered to build branches from the eastern and central sections only. To my mind nothing can be more unlikely or inconceivable than this. Even admitting the contention, nothing can be derived from it, for the branch which is under consideration is admitted to commence at a point upon the eastern section.

I simply propose to assert that the territory of the Dominion has no connection whatever with the phrase "The North-West Territories of Canada," except in so far as the North-West Territories are part of that territory. The territory of the Dominion, I take it, is all those lands and lands covered with water which form part of or are under the Parliamentary control of the Dominion. The phrase has no reference whatever to the dominium or ownership of the Crown, but to those British Dominions beyond the seas, known under the constitutional Act by the name of Canada. The point, however, seems to me so insignificant that the elaborate argument given by counsel for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is all that need be referred to.

As to the third question I concur in the judgment of my brother Nesbitt.

GIROUARD J.—This reference—the first from the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada—involves very important questions of construction of the powers of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., to construct branch lines. It has been said that franchises of this character are to be construed most strictly against the corporation and in favour of the public; but it is now well settled both in England and the United States that the powers may be implied as well as expressed, and that their construction must be reasonable, that is, consistent with and following a reasonable view of the general scope and purpose of the legislative grant, viewed in the light of surrounding circumstances. Attorney General v. Great Eastern Railway Co. (1); The Government of Newfoundland v. Newfoundland Railway Co. (2); Jacksonville Railway Company v. Hooper (3). It will not, therefore, be out of place at the outset to give a short history of the Canadian Pacific Railway and inquire into the circumstances which gave rise to the construction and operation of this transcontinental line.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Girouard J.

The Canadian Pacific Railway does not owe its existence to the ambition of individual adventurers, but to the national policy of Canada, as expressed in several Acts of its Parliament. The very preamble of the Act we are now requested to consider, 44 Vict. ch. 1, declares that by the terms and conditions of the admission of British Columbia into the Dominion of Canada > the Government of Canada has assumed the obligation of causing a railway to be constructed, connecting the seaboard of British Columbia with the Railway system of Canada.

The immense western country known as Rupert's Land, which had recently been acquired from the Hudson Bay Company, had not been surveyed; it was very little known and, as stated in the printed case, "was almost completely uninhabited.". The Canadian Government, however, was so satisfied that the obligation assumed in favour of British Columbia would easily be accomplished, that it agreed to do so within ten years from the date of the union, that is in 1881.

The stated case, settled by the Board of Railway Commissioners and agreed to by the parties, refers us to many statutes and other public documents. I think that in a case of public interest, I may say of Government or parliamentary contract or agreement like the present one, we ought to carefully consider not only the parts of the documents quoted, but also the whole, and in fact all the public documentary records which may affect the case, and which, under the Evidence Act of 1893, courts of justice can take official notice of without causing any surprise or injury to any party. In many past cases of this description this court and the Privy Council have even referred to opinions expressed in Parliament as reported in Hansard.

(1) 5 App. Cas. 473.
(2) 13 App. Cas. 199, 206.
(3) 160 U. S. Z. 514; 7 A. & E. Ency. 712.

In 1872 the Parliament of Canada passed the first Canadian Pacific Railway Act and granted a subsidy of 50 million acres of land, and 30 million in cash; 35 Vict. ch. 71. Although two companies were incorporated to carry out the scheme, and one of them was accepted and obtained the contract, nothing came out of this first effort. In 1874 another offer was made, which will be found in 37 Vict. ch. 14. Briefly stated, it provided for a subsidy of 20,000 acres of land, and $10,000 cash per mile, and a Government guarantee of 4 per cent for twenty-five years upon such sum as might be necessary to secure the construction of the road. There was no provision for any branch line except the Georgian Bay and the Pembina branches, which were also generously subsidized. The second scheme also failed, and to keep faith with British Columbia an extension of time had to be demanded and the Government set to work by commencing to build two of the heaviest sections of the entire line, extending over about 644 miles of a mountainous country, namely, the Lake Superior section, from the head of Lake Superior near Fort William to Selkirk, and the western section from Kamloops to Port Moody. While these extensive works were in progress under Government contracts a new project was proposed, and approved of by Parliament, the meaning of which we are called upon to determine, as to branches to be constructed. This statute is 44 Vict. ch. 1, and was passed in 1881, although the contract which led to it was signed in October, 1880. The Government undertook to finish and deliver to the company the two sections commenced, and the company promised to build the eastern section from Callander Station to the Lake Superior section, and also the central section from Selkirk to Kamloops, on or before the first day of May, 1891, the company receiving a cash subsidy of 25 millions of dollars and a land subsidy of 25 millions of acres, valued at that time at about $1.50 per acre. This statute is composed of three parts. 1st. "An Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway;" 2nd. The said contract; and, 3rd. the charter or Act of incorporation. I presume the three documents must be read together, but if there is any discrepancy between them the contract must give way. I believe there is none, at least as to the point before us.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Girouard J.

As it may easily be understood from the past experience most extensive and, in fact, unprecedented powers were demanded and obtained. To do so the whole policy of the country, as expressed in the Railway Act of 1879, had to be set aside and a new and exceptional one adopted. More liberal subsidies and concessions had to be granted. The two Government sections, which were estimated to cost about $28,000,000, but did actually cost a little over $31,000,000, were to be delivered free of charge. The lands required for the road bed, for stations, station grounds, workshops, dock ground and water frontage at the termini on navigable waters, buildings, yards, if vested in the Government, were granted to the company. It was also agreed that all this property and the railway, its rolling stock and the capital stock of the company were to be forever free from taxation by the Dominion or the Territories, or any province or any municipal corporation to be established therein, and that the land grants were also to be free from taxation for 20 years from the date of the Crown patent, unless sooner sold or occupied. The selection of these lands was entirely left with the company instead of the Government. The importation of the rails and all railway and telegraph material to be used in the original construction was declared to be free from customs duty. The company might at any time, whether within ten years or after, operate lines of steamers over seas, lakes and rivers, which it might reach or connect with, although in doing so it might damage or even destroy similar lines already existing. Finally, to come to the matter which is the subject of this reference, unlimited powers to build branch lines were given to the railway company by merely depositing the plan of location, without the sanction of the Governor in Council.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Girouard J.

Notwithstanding these extraordinary concessions and privileges, the company soon almost came to grief, and in 1884 had to come to Parliament for relief. It was granted in the form of a temporary loan for nearly $30,000,000, which was satisfied and settled a few years afterwards, and before maturity, partly in cash or its equivalent, and partly by selling to the Government 6,793,014 acres of its land grants at $1.50 an acre. (47 Vict. ch. 1., 49 Vict. ch. 9.) Ever since the company's success has been constant and on the increase, so much so that it has added 4,785 miles of extensions and branches to its original main line, and has finally become one of the greatest railway corporations in the world, with a paid-up capital of $407,000,000, and nearly $133,000,000 of bonded debt, according to the blue books published by the Government, from which and the Acts of Parliament all the above figures have been collected.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES RY. CO. CAN. PAC.

Girouard J.

Now railway charter holders who are always to be found in every progressive and prosperous country, are quarrelling with it over the power, which it has at all times exercised, of building branch lines anywhere within the Dominion under their charter and without a special Act of Parliament.

At the argument I was very much impressed with the magnitude of the powers claimed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., as it would strike the mind under existing circumstances, but viewed in the light of the above circumstances it is not extraordinary. Parliament and the country, it seems to me — for its action was sanctioned by the people the following year — were prepared to grant almost anything to meet its obligation to British Columbia. But let us go now to the pure legal aspect of the case.

The charter, clause 15, enacts:

> The company may lay out, construct, acquire, equip, maintain and work a continuous line of railway, of the gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches, which railway shall extend from the terminus of the Canada Central Railway, near Lake Nipissing, known as Callander Station, to Port Moody, in the Province of British Columbia; and also a branch line of railway from some point on the main line of railway to Fort William, on Thunder Bay; and also the existing branch line of railway from Selkirk, in the Province of Manitoba, to Pembina, in the said province; and also other branches to be located by the company from time to time, as provided by the said contract –the said branches to be of the gauge aforesaid; and the said main line of railway, and the said branch lines, shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract; and, together with such other branch lines as shall be hereafter constructed by the said company, and any extension of the said main line of railway that shall hereafter be constructed or acquired by the company, shall constitute the line of railway hereinafter called the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Clause 18 of the charter, para. (d), enacts that > the map or plan or book of reference of any part of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway made and deposited in accordance with this section, after approval by the Governor in Council, and of any branch of such railway hereafter to be located by the said company, in respect of which the approval of the Governor shall not be necessary, shall avail, etc.

Clause 31 of the charter also provides for the issue of bonds in place of land grant bonds on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the branches thereof hereinbefore described, but exclusive of such other branches thereof, etc.

Clause 14 of the contract reads as follows :—

14. The company shall have the right, from time to time, to lay out, construct, equip, maintain and work branch lines of railway from any point or points along their main line of railway to any point or points within the tevritory of the Dominion. Provided always, that before commencing any branch, they shall first deposit a map and plan of such branch in the Department of Railways. And the Government shall grant to the company the lands required for the road bed of such branches, and for the stations, station grounds, buildings, workshops, yards and other appurtenances requisite for the efficient construction and working of such branches, in so far as such lands are vested in the Government.

I was first inclined to think that the power to build the branch lines was limited to the North-West Territories, which were the property of the Dominion. After carefully examining all the clauses of the contract I soon became convinced that the word "territory" (without a capital T) in section 14 must be taken in its ordinary sense, that is, jurisdiction. Whenever Parliament intends to use it as indicating the country known as the "Territories," it generally uses that expression, or sometimes that of "Territory," as in section 9 of the charter and the preamble of the Act, or more often that of "North-West Territories," as in sections, 11, 14, 15 and 16 of the contract. Such is, moreover, the name which Parliament had previously given to that country. 32 & 33 Vict. ch. 3, s. 1.

Likewise, as to time, I fail to find any limitation. It is contended that branch lines, like the main line, must "be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract." But the contract does not impose any limitation as to the commencement or completion of their location or construction; it has a limitation in clause 4 as to the main line only and also "the said branch lines of railway" contracted for, namely, the Fort William branch—which was never built in consequence of a deviation of the main line — and the Pembina branch, which, although finished, had to be maintained and worked. As to the other branches to be located, which the company may or may not immediately construct, the charter, section 15, and the contract, clause 14, both provide that they may be constructed from time to time, that is, at any time the company deems it expedient. This is the only reasonable construction which can be placed upon these enactments. It is, in fact, necessary to the working out of the land grant arrangement.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Girouard J.

It is stipulated in the contract, section 11, that these land grants are to extend back 24 miles deep on each side of the main railway from Winnipeg to Jasper House; but if they are not fit for settlement the deficiency is to be made up in the fertile belt or elsewhere "at the option of the company * * * extending back 24 miles deep on each side of any branch line or lines of railway to be located by the company." It would take years, certainly more than ten years, before the company might be called upon to make this option and select its land grants; in fact the parties have admitted in the stated case that it was not till 1901 that the last townships through which the main line of the railway runs were surveyed and set off into sections. They also admit that large tracts of land through which branch lines of the company may run under the charter have not yet been surveyed into townships by the Government. There is no limitation of time as to the option or selection; it could not be commenced before some years, and certainly could not be completed before the necessary surveys were made; parties agree that it cannot be completed even at the present time. How can it be contended that the company could possibly locate or build branch lines necessary to the development of these lands before they are selected and probably patented by the Crown?

Clause 6 of the contract provides for the completion and delivery of the Government sections partly by the 30th of June, 1885, and the whole at the latest by the 1st of May, 1891. I cannot understand how the company could possibly complete all its branch lines from these sections before the latter date, for, as I understand clause 7 of the contract and clause 15 of the charter, these sections form part of the Canadian Pacific Railway from which the company can construct branch lines as well as from the sections constructed by the company. As a matter of fact only seven branches were built prior to the 1st of May, 1891, in order to give railway facilities to distant settlements or to industrial establishments in close proximity, whereas nineteen have been built since that date. In all cases of railway development, especially in an immense and wild country like that traversed by the Canadian Pacific Railway, almost entirely uninhabited on its entire length of about 2,644 miles west of Callander Station, near Sudbury of to-day, the necessity of branch lines is not generally felt till the main line is built and operated, and for many years afterwards.

If any doubt be possible upon the point, which I do not, however, entertain, courts of justice should hesitate before denying a power which has often been recognized by the highest authorities. We have no expression of judicial opinion exactly in point except as to location, but we find, in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. v. Major, (1) decided by this court in 1886, and reported in 13 Can. S. C. R., at page 237, dicta and propositions as to time, which seem to sustain the contention of the company in the present instance.

(1) 13 Can. S. C. R. 233.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Girouard J.

Chief Justice Ritchie, referring to a certain limitation enacted by the Railway Act of 1879, and to section 14 of the contract, said, speaking for the court :—

From which (section 14) it is abundantly clear that the right conferred on the railway company from time to time to lay out, construct, equip, maintain and work branch lines of railway from any point or points along their main line of railway to any point or points within the territory of the Dominion is entirely inconsistent with any such limitation ; and therefore I think the company had a right to construct a branch from any point or points on the railway to English Bay as well as to any other point or points within the territory of the Dominion.

And further on the learned judge adds (at page 240) :—

No court has a right to reject, or refuse to give effect to, the words of the legislature if a reasonable construction can be placed on the language used, and, therefore, I am constrained so to construe this statute as to give effect, if possible, to this, to my mind, very plain language of the legislature, and I can give no effect to it if it was not the intention of the legislature to authorize such branches and such extensions of the main line as might be found expedient to complete and make available this great national undertaking, the construction of a railway connecting the sea-board of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada, a construction not only reasonable but one which, in my opinion, harmonizes with the subject of the enactment and the object which the legislature had in view.

When the contract was under discussion in the House of Commons Mr. Blake, the leader of the Opposition, demanded its rejection upon the ground, among others, that by the contract, power is given to the company forever to build branch lines in various parts of the Dominion. (See Votes and Proceedings, (1881) p. 159).

From the time of its approval by Parliament to the 1st of May, 1891, no less than seven branch lines were constructed within the limits of the old provinces, and after that date to the year 1903 eighteen more were built and operated within the old provinces, two of them extending through the Territories and only one being entirely in the latter country, the whole without any objection being raised by any one, and in almost every case, after due Dominion inspection and authorization.

In 1884 Parliament expressly recognized the Algoma branch, then in course of construction from Sudbury to Sault Ste. Marie, in the province of Ontario, under the general powers of the charter and authorized a large issue of bonds (47 Vict. ch. 1). Parliament has also granted cash and land subsidies to branch lines of the company constructed before and since 1891. A full list of all these branch lines is given in the stated case, and it is not necessary to repeat it here. I will, however, reproduce the preamble of a Canadian statute passed in 1888, 51 Vict. ch. 51, which is the Act increasing the company's bonding power on branch lines generally, and one of the Sudbury branches in particular, from $20,000 to $30,000 per mile, as expressing the views of Parliament both upon the location and time of their construction :

Whereas, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has, by its petition, represented that the branch line, to be known as the Toronto branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which it proposes to construct under its charter from a point at or near Sudbury to a point at or near Claremont, will be unusually expensive ; that an issue of twenty thousand dollars of bonds per mile thereon would not constitute a sufficient aid towards the construction thereof ; and that a similar state of things will probably occur in respect of other branches to be hereafter built by the said company, and it has prayed that the maximum amount of bonds to be issued on any such branch be fixed at thirty thousand dollars per mile, and that it be authorized to issue debenture stock in the place and stead of such bonds ; and it is expedient to grant the prayer of the said petition, etc.

It may be said that implied recognition of power by the legislature is not sufficient to confer that power, although very high American authorities can be quoted to the contrary, which will be found collected in American and English Encyclopœdia, (2 ed.) vol. 7, p. 708 ; I refer especially to the case of Society vs Pawlet, (1)

(1) 4 Peters 501.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Girouard J.

decided by the United States Supreme Court. But it cannot, I submit, be seriously contended that the subsequent action of Parliament is not sufficient to remove any possible doubt in the matter. And finally, when we consider the disastrous consequences which a decision adverse to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would bring upon its millions of bonds and debenture stock distributed all over the world, which would not be binding upon the so-called branch lines, I think we should come to the conclusion that it has at least that effect, unless forced to do otherwise by clear terms of the statute. For the reasons already advanced I think the statute supports this conclusion. Without wishing to add anything to the judgment of the House of Lords in Attorney-General vs. Great Eastern Railway Co. (1) which I believe fully covers the case, I would be inclined, under the special circumstances of the case, to treat the charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in a liberal manner, like any other statute, in accordance with the principle laid down in the Interpretation Act, namely, that every Act of Parliament must receive such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best insure the attainment of the object of the Act, and of every provision or enactment thereof according to its true intent, meaning, and spirit; 31 Vict. ch. 1, s. 7, par. 39; R. S. C., ch. 1, s. 7, par. 56.

With these explanations, I shall now proceed to answer the questions submitted:

To the first question I answer:—Yes, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has now power to construct the branch line referred to, as under section 14 of the contract and section 15 of the charter it may construct any branch line at any time.

To the second question, answer;—Yes.

(1) 5 App. Cas. 473.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

To the third question :—In consequence of the above answers the answer to this question is unnecessary.

Davies J.

DAVIES J —After the fullest consideration and repeated conferences with my colleagues, I have reached the conclusion that the first two questions should be answered in the affirmative These answers render it unnecessary to give any answer to the third question, and I express no opinion with regard to it.

I have read with great care the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Nesbitt and, as I find myself in full accord alike with his reasoning and his conclusions with respect to these two main questions, I will content myself with concurring with his judgment so far as it relates to these two questions and their answers.

NESBITT J.—This is a case submitted by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada under the 43rd section of the Railway Act, 1903. The following are the questions submitted :

1. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the legislation, schedule and charter aforesaid, now power to construct the branch line referred to, or has the time expired within which such branch line might be constructed ?

2. Do such legislation, schedule and charter authorize construction by the said company of the proposed branch line, it being altogether situated in the Province of Ontario ?

3. Is it open to the James Bay Railway Company or to the Board of Railway Commissioners to take the objection that the time within which the said company may build branch lines under its charter has expired ?

In the year 1874 an Act was passed, chapter 14 of 37 Victoria, intituled: "An Act to provide for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway." This Act recites the admission of British Columbia into the union with the Dominion of Canada. It recites the fact that by the terms of the admission the Government of the Dominion were to construct a railway from the Pacific to connect the seaboard of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada. It then provided that a railway to be called the Canadian Pacific Railway should be made from some point near to and south of Lake Nipissing to some point in British Columbia on the Pacific Ocean. It provided for the division of the said railway into four sections. It also provided for certain branches of the railway to be constructed, such branches to form part of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Section 8 of the said statute provided for the construction of the said railway in subsections by contractors, and, after providing for the construction and the consideration to be paid therefor, subsection 10 of the said section 8 provided that in applying the said Railway Act to the Canadian Pacific Railway or any portion thereof the expression "the railway" shall be construed as meaning any section or subsection of the said railway the construction of which has been undertaken by any contractors, and the expression "the company" shall mean the contractors for the same. The said statute sets out further provisions for the construction of the railway.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Nesbitt J.

Subsequent to this statute the Act in question (and upon which mainly this case turns) being chapter 1 of 44 Victoria, assented to on the 15th of February, 1881, was enacted. It recites that by the terms and conditions of the admission of British Columbia into union with the Dominion of Canada the Government of the Dominion has assumed the obligation of causing a railway to be constructed connecting the seaboard of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada. It also recites:

> That whereas certain sections of the said railway have been constructed by the Government and others are in course of construction, but the greater portion of the main line thereof has not yet been commenced or placed under contract, and it is necessary for the development of the North-West Territory and for the preservation of the good faith of the Government in the performance of its obligations, that immediate steps should be taken to complete and operate the whole of the said railway.

It then recites:

And whereas in conformity with the express desire of Parliament a contract has been entered into for the construction of the said portion of the main line of the said railway and for the permanent working of the whole line thereof, which contract with the schedule annexed has been laid before Parliament for its approval, and a copy thereof is appended hereto, and it is expedient to approve and ratify the said contract and to make provision for the carrying out of the same.

The statute then enacts under section 1 as follows:

The said contract, a copy of which with schedule annexed is appended hereto, is hereby approved and ratified, and the Government is hereby authorized to perform and carry out the conditions thereof, according to their purport.

The second section of the said statute provides that for the purpose of incorporating the persons mentioned in the said contract and those who shall be associated with them in the undertaking, and of granting to them the powers necessary to enable them to carry out the said contract according to the terms thereof, the Government may grant to them, in conformity with the said contract, under the corporate name of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a charter conferring upon them the franchises, privileges and powers embodied in the schedule to the said contract and to this Act appended, and such charter being published in the Canada Gazette with an Order in Council relating to it shall have force and effect as if it were an Act of the Parliament of Canada.

The contract by its first clause inter alia provided:

The individual parties hereto are hereinafter described as the company.

I read this clause as a conveyancing description applicable to the contractors until after the necessary steps were taken by them to complete the incorporation authorized by the charter when the rights, franchises and privileges conferred by the contract on the incorporators became vested in the "corporate entity" to be known as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. This was complete as I understand after the 9th April, 1881. See Gazette of that date.

The 13th clause provided that the company should have the right to lay out and locate the line of railway contracted for preserving the terminal points from Callander Station to the point of junction with the Lake Superior section and from Kamloops and from Selkirk to the junction with the western section. The work was divided into four sections and two branches, and the company were to build the central and Eastern sections which were to be commenced respectively by the 1st May and the 1st July, 1881, and to be completed by the 1st May, 1891. See fourth clause of contract. The Government, by the sixth clause of contract, were to complete the Western and Lake Superior sections by the latest by May, 1891. There were also two branch lines, one from Selkirk to Pembina and one from some point on main line to Fort William. These the Government were to construct the Fort William branch as part of the Lake Superior section, as a reference to the first clause of the contract and the map on page 16 of case will shew.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Nesbitt J.

By the 14th clause of the contract it was provided:

The company shall have the right, from time to time, to lay out, construct, equip, maintain and work branch lines of railway from any point or points along their main line of railway, to any point or points within the territory of the Dominion. Provided always, that before commencing any branch they shall first deposit a map and plan of such branch in the Department of Railways. And the Government shall grant to the company the lands required for the road bed of such branches and for the stations, station grounds, buildings, workshops, yards and other appurtenances requisite for the efficient construction and working of such branches, in so far as such lands are vested in the Government.

And by the 15th clause of the charter it was provided:

The company may lay out, construct, acquire, equip, maintain and work a continuous line of railway, of the gauge of four feet eight and one half inches; which railway shall extend from the terminus of the Canada Central Railway near lake Nipissing, known as Callander Station, to Port Moody in the Province of British Columbia; and also a branch line of railway from some point on the main line of the railway to Fort William on Thunder Bay; and also the existing branch line of railway from Selkirk, in the Province of Manitoba, to Pembina in the said province; and also other branches to be located by the company from time to time as provided by the said contract,—the said branches to be of the gauge aforesaid, and the said main line of railway, and the said branch lines of railway, shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract; and together with such other branch lines as shall be hereafter constructed by the said company, and any extension of the main line of railway that shall hereafter be constructed or acquired by the company, shall constitute the line of railway hereinafter called The Canadian Pacific Ralway.

It is upon the construction of these two clauses that the contest mainly turns. Mr. Blake and Mr. Cassels for the James Bay Railway Company argued that the contract was one between the Government and the incorporators described as "The Company" and was only for the Eastern and Central sections and that the incorporators must complete building within ten years, and had only the right contemporaneously with their building of such sections to carry out and locate branches; that the "corporate entity" only became assignee of the privileges and franchises granted to the incorporators and could enjoy no higher rights than granted to the incorporators under the contract, and such rights were only, so far as we are here concerned, to locate branches up to May, 1891, and only from some point on the eastern and central sections to some point on land owned by the Dominion. I think this is a fair statement of the position taken by the counsel for the James Bay Railway Company. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company's counsel, Mr. Ewart and Mr. Aylesworth, contended that the "corporate entity," the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, had the right for all time to lay out and locate branches from time to time from any point on the main line between Callander and the Pacific sea-board subject, at the present time, to the filing of plans and approval required by the Railway Act, 1903; that from Callander eastward the rights of the company were governed by section 25 of the charter with which we are not now concerned. A great deal was said in argument as to the previous railway policy of the Parliament of Canada and the policy since in respect to other railways, and as to the public danger involved if a construction such as contended for by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was adopted. We are not in one sense concerned with that construction. The purpose is expressed by the terms of the statute which are absolutely controlling as to the legislative intent, and while a construction which will produce a consequence so directly opposite to the whole spirit of our legislation ought to be avoided, if it can be avoided without a total disregard of those rules by which courts of justice must be governed, yet if Parliament has explained its own meaning too unequivocally to be mistaken the courts must adopt that meaning. We have only to declare what the law is, not what it ought to be, and I feel relieved from any doubt in this case which I might entertain (though I entertain none whatever) by the fact to which I attach considerable importance that successive Acts of Parliament have been passed by which Parliament itself has assumed as the correct one the construction I adopt. (I shall refer to these later.) The courts too have expressly in one case and by implication in another adopted one phase, viz., the right to build anywhere from the main line from Callander to the Pacific. I will also refer later to these more at length. On the question of the construction contended for by the James Bay Railway Company being likely to place the territory tributory to the main line from Callander to the Pacific in the grasp of a monopoly I would only say that in practice no such result has followed. Numerous railway charters have been obtained and railways actually built in many places where, if my construction of the charter and contract is correct, the fear of the right of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to parallel, &c, would have deterred the application for the charter or the construction of the railway if capital was likely to be deterred by such fear. It is to be borne in mind also that in the United States, in most if not all of the states, the location of the line of its road is entrusted by law to the company alone, and that where a corporation has been organized in compliance with the conditions of the statute and has made a map and profile of the route intended to be adopted by the company, it has acquired a vested and exclusive right to build, construct and operate a road on the line which it has adopted subject to the right of other road companies to cross its route and lands in the way and manner provided by law. It would scarcely be urged that this policy, the very opposite to the one adopted here, has deterred railway building in the United States. It is to be further borne in mind that in this country all branches built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. to develop territory or to acquire traffic as the needs of the country arise, have to be approved as to the general route by the Minister of Railways and as to deviations, etc., by the Railway Committee and the public rights thus fully conserved. This of course has no bearing on the construction of the charter but is, I think, an answer to the argument of future monopoly which has been advanced as a reason for a different construction being the proper one to arrive at.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Nesbitt J.

The general rule which is applicable to the construction of all other documents is equally applicable to statutes and the interpreter should so far put himself in the position of those whose words he is interpreting as to be able to see what those words related to. He may call to his aid all those external or historical facts which are necessary for this purpose and which led to the enactment and for those he may consult contemporary or other authentic works and writings. This, however, does not justify a departure from the plain reasonable meaning of the language of the Act. The best and surest mode of expounding an instrument is by construing its language with reference to the time when and circumstances under which it was made, and next to such method of exposition is the rule that if an Act be fairly susceptible of the construction put upon it by usage, the courts will not disturb that construction. The authorities for these statements are too well known to render lengthy citation necessary. I refer, however, to Read v. The Bishop of Lincoln (1); Herbert v. Purchas (2); Maxwell on Statutes, (3 ed.) pp. 32-39, inclusively, pp. 423 and following; Broom's Legal Maxims (7 ed.) pp. 516-579. As to reference to House of Commons records for purposes of historical exposition, see The Attorney General of British Columbia v. The Attorney General of Canada (3); The Fisheries Case (4); pages 456-465 et seq.; In re Representation in the House of Commons (5), pages 497, 581-593. To apply, then, contemporaneous historical reference and legislative and judicial exposition, the recital in the Act under consideration establishes that the Government of Canada was under obligation to construct a railway connecting the sea-board of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada. The stated case contains the following admissions:—

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Nesbitt J.

(1) At the date of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter (1881) the territory through which its main line was to be constructed was, with the exceptions to be mentioned, almost completely uninhabited, and only by its general characteristics had become known to the people of Canada. The exceptions to this statement are:

(a) A small settlement existed at Port Arthur and Fort William;

(1) (1892) A. C. 644.
(2) L. R. 3 P. C. 605 at p. 648.
(3) 14 Can. S. C. R. 345, pages 361-369; 14 App. Cas. 295, page 305.
(4) 26 Can. S. C. R. 444.
(5) 33 Can. S. C. R. 475.

(b) Southern portions of the Province of Manitoba and as far west as the present western boundary of the province had been surveyed and were sparsely settled, particularly in the neighbourhood of Rat Portage and the Red River district, where the Winnipeg settlement was;

(c) Some portions of the country between such western boundary and British Columbia had been surveyed into blocks of sixteen townships each;

(d) A small settlement on the British Columbia coast.

(2) From year to year after the date of the contract the Government of the Dominion of Canada caused portions of Manitoba and the North-west Territories to be surveyed and set off into townships and sections, but it was not until the year 1901 that the last of the townships in the North-West Territories and western part of Manitoba through which the railway runs was surveyed and set off into sections. Some of the territory in the eastern part of Manitoba and the western part of Ontario and in British Columbia, together with large tracts in Manitoba and the North-West Territories through which branch lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway may at some time run if the contentions of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in question herein are sustained, have not yet been surveyed, even into townships, by the Government.

(3) At the date of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter the main line of the railway north of Lake Superior had been projected to run some distance north of the lake and join the line between the lake and Selkirk. The accompanying sketch marked plan No. 1 (partial copy of a map attached to the report of the then Engineer-in-chief of the Department of Railways—Mr. Sandford Fleming—dated 26th April, 1878) shows the projected junction of the eastern and Lake Superior sections of the railway and the line to Fort William as then contemplated. After that date the route of the main line was changed. The part of it lying north of Lake Superior was brought more to the south so as to skirt the lake, and the western end of the eastern section was made to join the eastern end of Lake Superior section at or near Fort William, as shown in the accompanying sketch marked plan No. 2, which is a partial copy of a map.

(4) Prior to the 1st May, 1891, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, without any other legislative authority than that contained in the legistion of the Parliament of Canada appearing in the said statute 44 Vict. ch. 1, and the schedules thereto and the charter issued in pursuance thereof, constructed and equipped the branch lines of railway or extensions of branches in list A in paragraph 5 hereof. Subsequent to said 1st May, 1891, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have constructed without any such other authority the branches or extensions of branches set out in list B in paragraph 5 hereof. In respect of the branches or extensions of branches set out in the said lists, those which are accompanied by the word "inspected" were inspected by a Government engineer and permission granted to the company to open such branches respectively for the public conveyance of passengers.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Nesbitt J.

LIST "A."

BRANCHES OF THE COMPANY'S MAIN LINE CONSTRUCTED PRIOR TO MAY 1ST, 1891.

1. Ontario: The Algoma Branch from Sudbury to Sault Ste. Marie, 182·1 miles. Constructed 1883 and 6. (Inspected.)

2. Ontario: The Stobie Branch from Sudbury to Copper Mines, 5·6 miles. Constructed 1887.

3. British Columbia: The New Westminster Branch from New Westminster Junction to New Westminster, 13·7 miles. Constructed 1887. (Inspected.)

4. British Columbia: The Port Moody Branch from Port Moody to Vancouver, 13 miles. Constructed 1887.

5. Manitoba: The Pembina Mountain Branch from Winnipeg to Manitou, 110·1 miles. Constructed 1882. (Inspected.)

6. Manitoba: The Gretna Branch from Rosenfeld to Gretna, 13·7 miles. Constructed 1888.

7. Manitoba: The Selkirk Branch from Winnipeg to West Selkirk, 24 miles. Constructed 1883. (Inspected.)

LIST "B."

BRANCHES CONSTRUCTED SUBSEQUENT TO FIRST MAY, 1891.

8. Ontario: The Dyment Branch from Dyment to Ottamine, 7 miles. Constructed 1900. (Inspected.)

9. British Columbia: The Mission Branch from Mission Junction to Mission, 10 miles. Constructed 1895.

10. British Columbia: The Arrow Lake Branch from Revelstoke to Arrowhead, 27·7 miles. Constructed 1897.

11. British Columbia: The Coal Harbour Branch from Vancouver to Coal Harbour, 1·2 miles. Constructed, 1903.

12. Manitoba: An extension of the Stonewall Branch from Stonewall to Teulon, 19 miles. Constructed 1898. (Inspected.)

13. Manitoba: The Lac du Bonnet Branch from Molson to Lac du Bonnet, 27 miles. Constructed 1900. As to this branch the Dominion statute 63 & 64 Vict. c. 55, sec. 3, gives such authority as is contained in that section. (Inspected.)

14. Manitoba: The McGregor Branch from McGregor to Brookdale, 36 miles. Constructed 1900-02. As to this branch the Dominion statute 63 & 64 Vict. c. 55, sec. 3, gives such authority as is contained in that section. (Inspected.)

15. Manitoba: Extension of Souris Branch from Souris to Glenboro, 45·7 miles. Constructed 1891-2. (Inspected.)

16. Manitoba: Extension of Souris Branch from Napinka to Deloraine, 18·6 miles. Constructed 1892.

17. Manitoba and North-West Territories: The Pheasant Hills Branch from Kirkella in Manitoba to Haywood in the North-West Territories, 146 miles. Constructed 1903-4. (Inspected.)

18. Manitoba and North-West Territories: The Souris Branch from Kemnay to Estevan, 156. 2 miles. Constructed 1891-2. (Inspected from Kemnay to Melita.)

19. North-West Territories: The Portal Branch from North Portal to Pasqua, 160·3 miles. Constructed 1893.

The undertaking was of a very exceptional speculative character and in turning to the Act, contract and charter we find unprecedented clauses. The Government bound itself to complete two sections, the Fort William Branch and the Selkirk and Pembina Branch, and hand same over to the contractors, to pay a cash subsidy of twenty-five million dollars and to give a land grant of twenty-five million acres to be fit for settlement and to be in alternate sections; the land grant to be free from taxation for twenty years from the grant from the Crown; the capital stock of the company and its stations, station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards, rolling stock, etc., to be exempt from taxation forever. There are other marked benefits conferred, a masterly summation of which may be found in Hansard, 1881, vol. 5, p. 517. I refer to this latter only to show that the undertaking was thought to be so hazardous that exceptional privileges were deemed necessary to induce the contractors to enter upon the undertaking and to give point to the consideration that it was extremely unlikely any person contemplated that branches would be required prior to May 1891; that the road was a colonization road and branches would be built as the country developed and the future revealed along what lines trade developed making the location and construction of branch lines feasible and practicable. This being the situation of the parties the contract was made with the incorporators and a charter was granted creating the corporate entity which, after the incorporators had performed the initial requirements, came into existence on the 9th April, 1881. As I have before indicated, in my view after that date it was such corporate entity which is described by the word company when that word is used in the contract and charter. This is apparent when section after section is examined.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO

Nesbitt J.

Section 7. The railway constructed under the terms hereof shall be the property of the company.

(This must mean the corporate entity not the incorporators who are also as I have said referred to as the company). The same section provides "and the company shall thereafter and forever efficiently maintain, work and run the Canadian Pacific Railway."

Section 9 The Government agree to grant to the company a subsidy in money of twenty-five million dollars and in land of twenty-five million acres.

Section 10 grants the road-bed to the "company."

Section 11 grants the land to the company, and further on the grant of land is to be on each side of any branch line or lines of railway to be located by the company.

Section 16 exempts forever from taxation the capital stock of the company and the lands of the company for twenty years from the Crown grant. As I have stated, according to Mr. Blake's argument, the word "company" meant incorporators, and the incorporators' obligations ceased in May, 1891, and the rights acquired by the contract by them were by the Act and charter at that date and then only vested in the corporate entity. In sections 17, 18 and 20 the word "company" is also used in a sense wholly inappropriate to the incorporators described as such as it would scarcely be argued that when the company may issue land grant bonds, etc., the incorporators as contractors were meant and not the corporate entity. If then the corporate entity is intended to be described when the word "company" is used in the contract when section 14 says a sensible construction can be placed on the language. If the argument is acceded to that the contractors (the incorporators) are thus described the result follows that as the gentlemen named were only to build and own the eastern and central sections "their" line of railway is only the eastern and central part of the railway, and branch lines can only be built from such sections. Mr. Blake and Mr. Cassels urged this most strenuously pointing to section 13 which says:

The company shall have the right from time to time to lay out, construct, equip, maintain and work branch lines of railway from any point or points along their main line of railway to any point or points within the territory of the Dominion

The Company shall have the right * * * to lay out and locate the line of railway hereby contracted for and as the only line contracted for was that part comprised in the eastern and central section, the language used in section 14 must be construed as I have indicated, and further that the words "within the territory of the Dominion" meant within land owned by the Dominion and not the area over which the Dominion Parliament exercised legislative jurisdiction. I may describe this as the argument of "place" as opposed to that of "time" with which I will deal later. To deal with "place" first. In my view the contract means that the company, the corporate entity at any rate up to May, 1891, could built branches anywhere from the main line of railway between Callander and the Pacific sea-board, and in using the words "territory of the Dominion" Parliament meant within the area over which the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada extended as to the whole main line of railway from Callander to the Pacific. If the construction argued for is to be placed on these sections it would lead to such obviously absurd results that some other construction must be sought for. In pointing to these results I cannot do better than adopt some of the arguments of the counsel for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company upon this point:—

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Nesbitt J.

(1) A branch may commence at "any point or points along their main line of railway"—anywhere in any province—but it must end in the North-West Territory.

(2) For example, a branch may (indisputably) commence at Portage la Prairie in Manitoba and run south-west; but it cannot stop until it gets beyond the boundary of the province. It must finish in the Territories.

(3) Conversely a branch may (indisputably) commence at Regina in the North-West Territories and run north-east; but it must stop before crossing the Manitoba line. It must finish in the Territories.

(4) What more absurd provision than that a branch line may start anywhere along a 2,500 mile line of railway, but must always run towards its centre, and must finish there within a fixed limit of a few hundred miles.

Objection: Points "within the territory of the Dominion" means points upon land owned by the Dominion.

Pursuing the line or reasoning just submitted, it would appear that the effect given by the present objection to the clause under consideration is that although a branch may begin anywhere on the main line it must always finish upon Government property. It must not stop a mile short on Jones's land, or go a mile beyond to Smith's land. Some Government property must always be picked out for one of the termini.

So that if the Government did not happen to own a lot or two in a certain town, no branch could have its terminus there. And if in the town the Government did own a lot, the railway would have to lay the last rail upon it however inaccessible it might be—or stay away altogether.

And what if the Government sold the lot before the railway reached it ?

I would also add, I find in the contract the draftsman there describing the North-West Territories says :

> The company may, with the consent of the Government, select in the North-West Territories any tract or tracts of land. (Contract, sec. 11).
>
> In the establishment of any new province in the North-West Territories. (Contract, sec. 15).
>
> The lands of the company in the North-West Territories shall be free from taxation. (Contract, sec. 16).

Mr. Cassels also argued that if the company already possessed the power to construct branches in Ontario, why was it necessary to get special provision inserted in clause 15 of the charter in reference to the branch line from Fort William to the main line ? This branch was to be built by the Government and acquired by the company, so that argument fails.

These considerations would be sufficient in my view to determine that the argument as to the places from which branch lines would be built could not be limited as to point of commencement to the eastern and central sections and, as to terminals, to land owned by the Dominion. But, when one sees how the court and Parliament have dealt with the subject, it makes the conclusion to be now arrived at irresistible.

This court has already held in The Canadian Pacific Railway Co. v. Major (1) that the company had power to build a branch from Port Moody to Vancouver, and this branch was on the western section and in the area of the Province of British Columbia, but within the legislative jurisdiction for the purposes of railway authorization of the Dominion Parliament. It is true the present argument was not advanced to the court but it must be assumed that the

(1) 13 Can. S. C. R. 233.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Nesbitt J.

court would not overlook so obvious a want of legislative authority as is contended for here. In the case of Ontario etc. Railway Co. v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co. (1) the point urged as to the meaning of "within the territory of the Dominion" was, if correct, so complete an answer that one can scarcely understand if it was tenable if the court could say, at page 443, > no question was raised as to the authority of the defendants (the Canadian Pacific Railway Co.) to construct a line of railway to the Sault Ste-Marie, and it is to be observed that the counsel now raising the question were engaged for the plaintiff in that case. For the action of Parliament, I refer also on this point to the list "A" before referred to, and to the list "B," 8 to 16 inclusive, as to the points from or to which branches could be built, all of which acts are opposed to the construction contended for.

I have therefore come to the conclusion I have above indicated that as to section 14, the line of railway referred to is the line from Callander to the Pacific seaboard, and that the words "territory of the Dominion" mean the area along such line or railway over which the Dominion Parliament had legislative jurisdiction.

I come now to deal with the time within which the right to build branches so authorized must be exercised. The clause pointed to under which it is claimed no branch could be built after May, 1891, is 15 of the charter before set out. The clause used the words "lay out, construct and acquire" and these have to be divided and made applicable to the subject matter. The company was not to "lay out or construct" either of the branches nor two sections of the main line, but was to "acquire" these. That is the Government were under obligation to build two sections of the railway or two branches for the company and, as to these, the words "lay out" or "construct" are inapplicable to the company. There were other branches to be located from time to time by the company as provided by the contract. (Clause 14). When the draftsman says in clause 15 of the Act (schedule A), > the said main line of railway and the said branch lines of railway shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract

(1) 14 O. R. 432.

I take it he is referring to the various sections and described branches for the completion of which an obligation existed both on the part of the Government and the company under the contract, and when he refers to other branches to be located from time to time he refers to the branches under clause 14 which the company have the privilege of building but as to which no contractual or other obligation existed. No time was fixed by the contract either for the commencement or completion of such branches and it is a misdescription to refer to them as having a time limit under the contract. The express right to lay out, locate and build from time to time given by the contract cannot be cut down by mere surmise that a power to build from time to time could not be contemplated because it would be out of harmony with existing railway policy. The contract was very keenly debated; the effect of this provision was drawn in the most marked manner to the public attention and denounced as mischievous. See Hansard vol. 5, p. 503. I refer to this not as throwing any light upon the meaning of the clause but as shewing the attention of Parliament was drawn to the existence of such a clause and that it was open to the construction claimed for it. The clause was passed and the list I have referred to shews the branches built since 1891 and the action of Parliament thereon from that date until the present time.

In a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 183), in a court in which both those great jurists Chief Justice Marshall and Justice Story sat, and the opinion of the court was delivered by Mr. Justice Story, it was held that the naming of a society in a royal charter was a plain recognition by the Crown of the existence of a corporation and of its capacity to take the land in controversy and further that such a recognition would confer the power to take the land even if it had not previously existed. See 4 Peters, 480, at p 502, where the argument of Mr. Daniel Webster is given effect to by the court. I cite this case not as an authority but as entitled to great weight on account of the eminence of the counsel and Bench concerned in it. It seems to me to be on the same principle as the cases referred to by me before collected in Maxwell on Statutes, (3 ed.) pp. 428-429, and as Parliament has over and over again recognized the right to build branches after 1891, that great importance is to be attached to such Parliamentary interpretation or recognition. It is to be borne in mind also that on the faith of the contract being ample authority to build at any time branches within the limits described, large sums of money it was stated had been borrowed solely on the security of such branch lines and Parliament must have known that such would have been the inevitable result. It is said that Sir Oliver Mowat, in 1897, when Minister of Justice, advised that no such power existed, but, it seems to me, that the fact of Parliament subsequently disregarding and ignoring his advice and again recognizing the right to build both as to time and place, strengthens the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in appealing to the doctrine of recognition embodied in the case in 4 Peters before referred to. It appears to me, therefore, that the time limit in clause 15 is only as to branches contracted for and has no application whatever to such branches as the company was privileged to build at its option.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Nesbitt J.

The third question it is perhaps unnecessary to answer in view of the opinion I have formed of the proper answers to the first two.

Assuming that ten years was the limit within which branch lines were to be built, I am of opinion nevertheless that as there are no words in the Act, charter or contract expressly providing that at the end of the ten years all power to built shall cease such as were used in Montreal Park and Island Railway Co. v. The Chateauguay and Northern Railway Co. (1), that the power still exists until a forfeiture of such power is declared in properly constituted judicial proceedings. This is the rule in the United States. See Morawetz on Corporations. ss. 1006-1015; Thompson on Corporations, Vol. 5, ss. 6598-6602. In England I find no direct authority but if I am correct that the power still exists it would seem to follow that only in a suit to which the Attorney General is a party plaintiff (or if he refuses he may be made a party defendant) can the question be successfully raised. I do not decide this, however, as it is very doubtful where, as in this case, the James Bay Railway Company will be crossed and otherwise interfered with by the building of the branch and it has, therefore, a special and peculiar interest, whether it cannot raise the question. Hinckley v. Gildersleeve (2); Town of Guelph v. Canada Co. (3); Stockport District Waterworks Co. v. Mayor of Manchester (4); Pudsey Coal Gas Co. v. Corporation of Bradford (5), would seem to indicate that in such case the James Bay Railway Company would be entitled to be heard in a suit brought by it to restrain the Canadian Pacific Railway Company entering upon its lands. In this proceeding, however, ss. 3 and 5 of the gen-

(1) 35 Can. S.C.R. 48 at p. 60.
(2) 19 Gr., 212.
(3) 4 Gr., 632.
(4) 9 Jur. N.S., 266.
(5) L. R. 15 Eq,, 167.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Nesbitt J.

eral Railway Act, 1903, should be read in with clause 14 of the contract and as additional to it, and as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have to file plans and obtain approval of them, the James Bay Railway Company would have a right to appear and appeal to the discretion of the Minister of Board on such application. It is doubtful if the court could compel the Minister or the Board to act if in his or its bonâ fide discretion approval of plans was declined Attorney General v. Toronto Junction Recreation Club (1); In re Massey Manufacturing Co. (2) shew when the court can interfere and compel executive action.

I think the Minister or Board has more than ministerial powers and represent the Crown, and it seems to me that this distinguishes the case from a mere action by a private party when, even with his special interest, he might be precluded from raising the question as to which I do not think we are called upon to decide. I think, in this application to the special tribunal created by the Act, the James Bay Railway Co. may be heard.

I would therefore answer to the first question :

The Canadian Pacific Railway has power to construct the branch referred to and the time within which such branch ought to be constructed has not expired.

To the second question ; Yes.

To the third question ; Yes

IDINGTON J.—Under the Railway Act of 1903 the Board of Railway Commissioners submit for the opinion of this court the following questions :

1. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the legislation, schedules and charter aforesaid, now power to construct the branch line referred to, or has the time expired within which such branch line might be constructed ?

(1) 7 Ont. L. R. 248. (2) 11 O. R. 444 ; 13 Ont. A.R. 446.

2. Do such legislation, schedules and charter authorise construction by the said company of the proposed branch line, it being altogether situated in the Province of Ontario?

3. Is it open to the James Bay Railway Company or to the Board of Railway Commissioners to take the objection that the time within which the said company may build branch lines under its charter has expired.

The legislation, schedules and charter aforesaid consist of 44 Vict. ch. 1, and the schedules annexed thereto, of which latter the first is a copy of the contract between Her Majesty and certain gentlemen who undertook thereby to build parts of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the second is a copy of the legislation that became the authority for the issue of the letters patent creating the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

It is the extent of the corporate powers of this company as to building branch lines that is now called in question. The questions asked must be answered by the meaning given to sec. 14 of the contract schedule just referred to.

To interpret it properly regard must be had not only to the rest of the contract and the enactment that gives it vitality, but also to the history leading up to it and the conditions immediately surrounding it.

Whilst all must be looked at and the whole considered together, we must bear in mind that the one schedule contains a temporary contract and the other the foundation for a chartered corporation that was to have a perpetual existence.

The contract was with certain parties who could not, save by the creation of the corporation, transfer their rights to any one else.

The corporation was to consist not only of such parties, but also of such others as they might associate with them as shareholders. The contract was only to be binding in the event of the Act of Incorporation being granted to the company in the form of schedule "A."

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Idington J.

Section 21 of said contract that shews this, is as follows :—

21. The company to be incorporated, with sufficient powers to enable them to carry out the foregoing contract, and this contract shall only be binding in the event of an Act of incorporation being granted to the company in the form hereto appended as schedule "A."

This legislation having been passed providing the Act of incorporation, the contract became thereupon immediately binding and the contractors then might or not as they saw fit seek for the immediate issue of the letters patent creating the corporation. They were not bound to do so. No part of this contract expressly rendered it necessary to do so.

Whatever may have been the design of this cumbrous method and the hiatus that was to exist between the legislation providing for, and the incorporation of, the company, it is important to mark the existence of this hiatus for it enables one more clearly to observe by the actual segregation of the contract from the incorporation and incorporating enactments that there may, and perhaps must, be attached to each of the provisions of the contract a meaning quite independent of anything else in schedule A which might never have been called into active existence.

I have no doubt that the parties who provided this condition of things had some real purpose in view and that it did not come about as mere accident.

Its resultant effect on the meaning we must give to the provisions of the contract is not to be waived off by saying that the promoters, though contractors, never intended or were intended to construct the railway. Their legal position by virtue of this contract was that they must, and that there was no other means of escape from its obligations than by and through the creation of a corporate body which the contract did not render by its express terms at all obligatory on them to bring into being.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Idington J.

Let us, therefore, interpret this contract as we can, and as far as we can, by itself as an independent document, but of course to be interpreted in light of what had gone before and the then surrounding conditions.

The first clause thereof interprets "The Canadian Pacific Railway" to mean the entire railway as described in 37 Vict. ch. 14, and the individual parties thereto as described by the words "The Company."

The words "The Company" being a term that might appropriately be applied to the corporation to be formed, when formed may have been used in anticipation thereof and designed to bear a reference as occasion called for it to the syndicate body or the corporate body, but this possible double use or meaning in no way ought to be permitted to confuse us.

The primary meaning of the term "The Company" in this contract, and particularly in every place where present contractual obligation or present privilege or franchise is designed to be expressed, must mean the individuals as contractors.

When those privileges and franchises have been transferred to and those obligations imposed on the corporate body by the occurrence of certain events, and the operation of the enactments that anticipated such events, and the Parliamentary assignment resultant therefrom has taken effect, the term "The Company" may be read then and thereafter in the same clauses or some of them as descriptive of or meaning the corporation.

Meanwhile the term "The Company" designates contractors who have undertaken certain work. It means no one else.

The Canadian Pacific Railway which is in question in this contract and interpreted therein as I have pointed out by reference to 37 Vict. ch. 14, is by sec. 1 thereof defined as follows:

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Idington J.

1. A railway, to be called "The Canadian Pacific Railway," shall be made from some point near and south of Lake Nipissing to some point in British Columbia, on the Pacific Ocean, both the said points to be determined and the course and line of the said railway to be approved of by the Governor in Council.

3. Branches of the said railway shall also be constructed as follows, that is to say:

First. A branch from the point indicated as the proposed eastern terminus of the said railway to some point on the Georgian Bay, both the points to be determined by the Governor in Council.

Secondly. A branch from the main line near Fort Garry, in the Province of Manitoba, to some point near Pembina, on the southern boundary thereof.

And by sec. 4 thereof it is enacted that the branch railways above mentioned shall, for all intents and purposes, be considered as forming part of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

This railway was in process of construction by the Government when this contract was entered into.

The road to be built has been divided into four sections, of which the terminal points were in this contract more accurately defined than in 37 Vict. ch. 14. Two of these sections had been partially constructed and were by this contract allotted to the Government to complete, and the other two, called respectively the eastern and central sections, were by the contract assigned to the company for construction.

The Selkirk branch, from Selkirk to Pembina, was then completed. Sections 13 and 14 of the contract are as follows:

13. The company shall have the right, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, to lay out and locate the line of the railway hereby contracted for, as they may see fit, preserving the following terminal points, namely: from Callander station to the point of junction with the Lake Superior section; and from Selkirk to the junction with the western section at Kamloops by way of the Yellow Head Pass.

14. The company shall have the right, from time to time, to lay out, construct, equip, maintain and work branch lines of railway from any point or points along their main line of railway to any point or points within the territory of the Dominion. Provided always, that before commencing any branch they shall first deposit a map and plan of such branch in the Department of Railways. And the Government shall grant to the company the lands required for the road bed of such branches, and for the stations, station grounds, buildings, workshops, yards and other appurtenances requisite for the efficient construction and working of such branches, in so far as such lands are vested in the Government.

It is this right from time to time to lay out, etc., branch lines of railway, etc., that is now said by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company here to continue for all time as theirs.

The question has been approached and argued as if the company had always existed, and as if it had been owner or in some way master of the main line from end to end of the original project, and as if the words "their main line" in sec. 14 meant the whole main line.

Had that been the case, and the corporate company had an existence when this contract was entered into, one could understand the reason for asserting that the term "their main line" means what is now claimed by that company.

Not only, as I have pointed out, is this not the case, but it was certain contractors only who were given the rights there and now in question. These contractors had by said sec. 13 only the right, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, to lay out and locate two sections of the main line, and the subsidies of $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land that they were to get by sec. 9 of the contract were mainly given for that work, and were to be paid and granted as the work of construction proceeded. The subsidies were by subsec. (a) of sec. 9 appropriated in relation to said central and eastern sections on the respective bases as to land and money as therein appears.

What concerns us here is to observe that those subsidies were to be paid or granted as the work of construction of those two sections progressed and became in twenty mile sections completed, so as to admit of the running of regular trains thereon. These subsidies would by this process be exhausted by the time of the completion of these two sections, which time was fixed at 1st May, 1891.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Idington J.

If we remember the limited authority given the company by sec. 13 and that their contract for construction had nothing to do with what was beyond their two sections, and that, though by sec 7 they became entitled to running rights over the other sections being constructed and to be constructed by the Government as same were completed, they were not to have any right of property therein until the eastern and central sections had been completed by them, and then only as Government had completed its parts, which need not be until 1st May, 1891, we will be able to understand the very peculiar words "their main line" in this sec. 14. We see thus why what at first blush seems a strangely inapt expression is used. "Their main line" were the central and eastern sections built by them.

Its true meaning being thus seized, it is plain that their rights to build branch lines were limited to that part of which they were in a limited sense masters. This also furnishes obvious common sense reasons for giving powers to build branches from their main line, when one reflects on the probable needs of construction and the anticipated colonization of the country that the contractors were becoming so deeply interested in.

Without giving to these words "their main line" a meaning that they will not bear in light of what I have adverted to or attributing to the man who drafted this contract a poverty of language or ignorance of its precise meaning that he nowhere else indicates as one of his failings, I think these words must be held to refer only to the two sections that were then, as they were constructed, to become the property of the company of contractors.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Idington J.

We find on turning to sec. 11 provision for selecting lands along and for 24 miles deep "on each side of any branch line or lines of railway to be located by the company and to be shown on a map or plan to be deposited with the Minister of Railways."

This indicates nothing beyond a plain intimation that at least some branch lines of the nature indicated were expected to be built during and within the time when the company had to have their contract finished and be in a position to select their lands.

It is said, however, that all this does not, and that the contract does not, in express terms put a limit of time or place upon the expected construction of branch lines. I have indicated why I think the part or place was limited. If I am right in that limitation, I am unable to comprehend why it should exist in that limited way only unless we are to construe the grant of this power as one to be exercised only as incident to and during and not beyond the period fixed for the construction of those two sections in relation to which the parties were speaking and contracting, to be known as the eastern and central sections. Within such limits one could understand such a grant being made. Time and the existing condition of things would keep its exercise within reasonable bounds. If it were intended as a general power for all time I can see many more reasons for its creation or existence in relation to the other sections after construction than I can in relation to those to which my interpretation confines it.

And why, if intended in the sense now contended for, should the extension of the then existing Selkirk and Pembina branch and branches from such an important branch have been omitted?

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Idington J.

We thus find the probable limitation of time, without imputing absurdity either in language, intention or construction.

Without formulating any rule or pushing any canon of construction too far for this complex matter of a grant, a contract and a Parliamentary concession rolled into one to bear, I think I am safe in saying that we need to seek for a reasonable meaning or intention and to avoid, if possible, that which would be repugnant to the then mode of thought and strangely inconsistent with the remainder of the contract.

That which I now suggest would not be unreasonable.

We find it by considering the contract as a whole, and the legislation before and with it, including Schedule A as a whole. We are forbidden by considering the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, which was the deliverance of this same Parliament as to the general policy, of that time, in regard to railways and especially as to their branch lines, and the time within which main lines should be constructed, and in the application of that Act to the undertaking in question, to give this paragraph the meaning now contended for by the Canadian Pacific Rly. Co.

The lines upon which this contract was framed had been laid down by 37 Vict. ch. 14, in every essential feature.

Except in regard to the extent of the subsidies and the financial arrangements based thereon, speaking in a comprehensive and general sense, there was no material departure from those lines unless we are to interpret this contract as conferring upon the contractors the right (as now asserted) forever to build branch lines.

Why should we suppose such a radical change of purpose or of policy? Why when decided upon, if ever decided upon, should we find it conferred by a grant of a personal and non-assignable franchise and not expressly given to the perpetual corporation as such?

I think we should be slow to attribute to Parliament an assignment forever of all right of control over the power of a railway company, building a line of such magnitude as this one, to build when, where and how it saw fit such branch lines as the company should decide to build. The aspect of national importance, from both the political and commercial points of view, seems also to forbid such a purpose, and especially such a sudden change of purpose.

Of course, even if the purpose, so repugnant to all this, and the thought of that time, were yet plainly expressed we must give effect to it. It has not been so expressed unless we impute to the words "from time to time" as used here the meaning of "forever." The contrary to my mind was intended, if not expressed in words, and the power of building branches was limited to those sections that the contractors undertook personally to build, and to the time of limitation for that building, and incidental thereto, as part of the whole, that whole being the completion and delivery over of the parts and branches so built to the future controlling power that from the 1st May, 1891, if not earlier, was to use the whole road.

It would seem from all this not only that the intention of the parties to the contract is discovered by reading it with regard to these limitations of time and space for the operation of the powers given by sec. 14 but also that full effect is given to the words "from time to time" when read to mean so long as the constructive period that these contractors might possibly have something to say in regard to the subject matter, and not to mean from time to time forever.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Idington J.

A remarkable feature of this matter is that in so far as affecting the then present and soon or immediately to become operative contractual obligations, privileges or franchises this contract and the Parliamentary transfer thereof are implicitly relied upon to execute the purpose of the parties, but when it comes to the exercise of a right that would come into or might only come into being, or rather that the parties intended should have a right to exist and become at a later period a perpetual right, vested in the corporate company, the parties to this contract do not rely upon this contract, ample as are its powers, but in regard to its accruing future rights of paramount and permanent importance they are careful to repeat the provisions therefor in the legislation.

See for example the repetition in sec. 3 of the Act, of the contract conditions in regard to the perpetual and efficient operation of the railway and the money and land grants, and in sec. 5 of the Act of the future running rights over the road and ownership of same as completed, and of the whole when completed.

The deposit, the standard of construction, the times for completion, the grants of land for road bed &c, the extinction of Indian title, the restriction of competitive lines, some of the bonding provisions, and the right to build branch lines, are all treated alike as of a temporary character and permitted to rest upon the contract, also temporary, and are not repeated elsewhere. That which is not necessarily legislative in its character but merely contractual is governed by the contract. That which is to abide for all time is as one would expect treated as needing direct legislation.

I recognize that this line of distinction is not adhered to in every respect and literally, but when we look at the contract and the legislation I think there exists a clear line of demarcation such as I have indicated between what was temporary in character and that which was to be permanent, and we find such an important matter as the construction of branch lines omitted entirely from the permanent side of the line of demarcation. Why should it from its importance and permanency not find its place there?

All the Syndicate had acquired by this contract was transferred by the operation of secs. 3 and 4 of schedule "A," as soon as the letters patent were issued and the provisions of that schedule became operative, but that transfer did not enlarge the power to build branches beyond what had been possessed by the contractors. It transferred a right which at best could not have extended beyond the lives or surviving life of those to whom it was granted as a personal right, license, or franchise. I have to repeat that it could never extend by this contract to their assigns, for they were not named in the instrument framing the personal grant.

This being the only alternative limitation of the grant indicates again in another way the intention of the contracting parties that the right to build such branch lines should exist only in relation to and during the process of construction of what they had respectively undertaken should be done by each.

Now, coming to the consideration of sec. 15 of schedule "A," which is as it were a summing up of the whole matter, and seems conclusive upon close analysis thereof as binding us to adopt a temporary and not a perpetual time for the existence of the right to build those branch lines, sec. 15 is as follows:—

15. The company may lay out, construct, acquire, equip, maintain and work a continuous line of railway, of the gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches; which railway shall extend from the terminus of the Canada Central Railway near lake Nipissing, known as Callander Station, to Port Moody in the Province of British Columbia; and also a branch line of railway from some point on the main line of railway to Fort William on

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Idington J.

Thunder Bay; and also the existing branch line of railway from Selkirk, in the Province of Manitoba, to Pembina in the said province; and also other branches to be located by the company from time to time as provided by the said contract,—the said branches to be of the gauge aforesaid; and the said main line of railway and the said branch lines of railway, shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract; and together with such other branch lines as shall be hereafter constructed by the said company, and any extension of the said main line of railway that shall hereafter be constructed or acquired by the company, shall constitute the line of railway hereinafter called The Canadian Pacific Railway.

This, analysed, provides as follows:

(1.) "A continuous line of railway" &c.

(2.) "A branch line of railway from some point on the main line of railway to Fort William on Thunder Bay."

(3.) The existing branch line of railway from Selkirk in the Province of Manitoba to Pembina in the said province.

(4) And also "other branches to be located by the Company from time to time as provided by the contract."

4a. "The said branches to be of the gauge aforesaid."

(5) "And the said main line of railway and the said branch lines of railway shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract.

(6) "And together with such other branch lines as shall be hereafter constructed by the said Company, and any extensions, &c..... shall constitute the line of railway hereinafter called the Canadian Pacific."

Observe that there are only two specific branches named, of which one is already existing and not needing "to be located" or built.

When we ask the meaning of the 5th paragraph of this analysis we find the plural—"branch lines of railway"—used. It cannot, therefore, only refer to the specified branches preceding it, as there is only one "to be commenced and completed." It must, therefore, of necessity include another or others.

What other or others? Those that "shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract, is the only possible reply, to begin with. And they can, in the next place, only be those (in the 4th paragraph of analysis) "other branches to be located by the Company from time to time as provided by the contract."

Whether I have made my meaning clear or not, this seems to me as simple as the simplest mathematical problem. It is said, however, that though this be taken as the correct rendering of the language used, the words "commenced and completed as provided by the said contract", do not refer to branches, or at all events to those "to be located" branches. It cannot refer to any branches unless it be those branches to be located, for the contract does not name or refer by name to the branch here specified to Fort William at all.

Moreover, the Fort William branch was not off or from the eastern or central section at all, and if what is now contended for by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company ever was supposed to have a foundation in fact, there was no necessity for referring in this incidental way to the Fort William branch. If the company had a right by the terms of the contract to build any branches they saw fit, there was no necessity for specially describing or apparently thus enabling them to build the Fort William branch.

No other branch is, or I submit can be, in question if those here referred to as "to be located" do not answer the description.

Are we then, not being able to find something to which to apply those words (in paragraph 5 of this analysis) to read the paragraph as if the words "and the said branch lines of railway" had no existence or meaning?

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Idington J.

Is it to escape, as the only way of escape, from the imperative words "shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract" that we are to resort to that alternative?

I think that they should be read in light of what I have adverted to as applicable to what may or shall have been done within sec. 14 of the contract, and that only. We thus, and only thus, can give effect in a reasonable and natural way to every word in this sec. 15.

And when we have done so, we look back to the contract to find what is meant by these words "completed as provided by the said contract," which plainly imply a period of completion.

I think the 6th paragraph of this analysis relates to the branch lines which the Railway Act gives power to construct, and such other lines as might lawfully be constructed by or acquired by the corporate company.

Such anticipatory words are in such legislation useful and were appropriately used here.

I am in this view not troubled about the Algoma branch legislation, the Sudbury branch legislation, or any other legislation relating to those branches built or partly built within the time limit I have suggested, nor am I in this result troubled about small branches within the powers given by the Railway Act of 1879.

What is relied upon as happening since May, 1891, as confirmatory of the pretentions now put forward by the company, is for the most part thus disposed of, and what remains is of an administrative character that ought not to influence any court in the interpretation of an Act of Parliament. I am unable to understand why some of these incidents have been allowed to trouble us at all. The branches running off the branch lines, as, for example, the Souris Branch, surely cannot help us to interpret the powers of the company in regard to branch lines running from a point on their main line.

What was done in relation to these subsidiary branches illustrates when closely examined a variety of cases such as a parliamentary beginning within the time, a carelessness or audacity as to whether powers had or had not existed after the time expired, and finally a statute expressly granting the power by 63 & 64 Vict., ch. 55, to build just the same sort of branch lines if not the same as are here expressly put before us as exemplifying alleged parliamentary recognition, or extensions thereof.

The company petitioned Parliament for this grant of new powers, and in this same Act there is provided, expressly as it seems to me, that two lines off and from the main line shall be built by virtue of the powers therein given.

It looks very much as if in 1900 the company had abandoned, if indeed it ever seriously had before then put forward, the contention here in question.

The Arrow Lake branch is apparently part of the Kootenay railway scheme, for which there was independent legislation, and by 54 & 55 Vict. ch. 71, s. 2, as well as a preceding section, this company is empowered and protected

The Pheasant Hills Branch grant was to be commenced within two years from 1st August, 1903, completed before the end of four years from that date, or as fixed by the Governor in Council, and to be constructed according to the description, conditions, and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in a contract with the Minister, who is empowered, with approval of the Governor in Council, to make it, and the location of the line is to be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and by sec. 6, the Governor in Council may at all times secure to other companies running powers and reasonable facilities for enjoying same equally, etc. And the Governor in Council is to have control over all tolls, etc.

1905

In re BRANCH LINES CAN. PAC. RY. CO.

Idington J.

Indeed much time spent on this branch of the case following up the data given, so far as given, leads me to the conclusion that all the grants relied upon as some recognition of the existence of the powers now claimed were conditional upon terms to be imposed by the Governor in Council. And where the branch line involved a bonding power, as in the case of the Kootenay and other companies, no reliance was placed upon the powers now claimed and existing, but parliamentary sanction or confirmation was sought and got for what was to be done.

I am quite aware that much of the reasoning I have adopted in reaching the conclusions I have is not in accord with that by which some of the former members of this Court arrived at their conclusions in the case of Canadian Pacific Railway Co. v. Major (1), which might have been supported on other grounds, and also does not necessarily govern us in this case.

With great respect and regard for those who decided that case, I take the liberty of thinking here that in some respects the arguments presented to us now were not presented then. It was admitted by counsel that if the time had elapsed within which the power to build branches was given, the question of the extent of that power need not be answered.

I therefore confine myself on this point, without concealing my opinion, to saying in reply to question No. 1, that the time has expired within which such branch line might have been constructed.

(1) 13 Can. S. C. R. 233.

And as to the third question, I think in view of the great length of time that has elapsed, in my judgment, since any such power existed in the company and nothing as to the work in question here done under it, or asserting it, save filing of plans in question here, that it became the duty of the Board of Railway Commissioners to consider and determine the question of right, or extent of right, existing in the company when they applied to that Board and within their exercise of powers to determine, and that the Board could hear any one interested as the James Bay Railway Co. seemed to be here; and that Company as well as the Board had the right to take the objection taken.

This is a case of the limitation of the company's powers by time and space that were as I find defined.

It raises none of the questions that might have arisen in regard to work that had been only partly done when the time expired.

Solicitor for the Canadian Pacific Railway Co.:

A. R. Creelman.

Solicitors for the James Bay Railway Co.:

Blake, Lash & Cassels.

CAN. PERFORMING RIGHT SOC., Ltd. v. FAMOUS PLAYERS CAN. CORP., Ltd.

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, Hailsham, L.C., Lord Buckmaster, Viscount Sumner and Lords Blanesburgh and Warrington. February 1, 1929.

W. Greene, K.C., and S. O. H. Collins, for appellants.

W. N. Tilley, K.C., and H. Douglas, for respondents.

The judgment of the Board was delivered by LORD WARRINGTON:—The appellants, the plaintiffs in the action, are the owners by assignment of the performing rights in Canada of a very large number of musical works, the copyright in which is still subsisting.

The action in which the present appeal arises was an action under the Copyright Act, 1921 (Can.), c. 24, against the respondents for an injunction and damages in respect of the infringement by the respondents of the exclusive performing rights in Canada of two of the said musical pieces.

The respondents, amongst other grounds of defence, alleged that the appellants could not maintain the action because of their failure to register the grants under which they claimed title as required by s. 39 of the above-mentioned Act.

The action was tried before Rose, J., [1927] 2 D.L.R. 928, who delivered judgment over-ruling the various grounds of defence other than that of failure to register, but allowing the latter ground. He therefore dismissed the action with costs.

Imp.
P.C.
1929.
CAN. PERFORMING RIGHT SOC. v. FAMOUS PLAYERS CAN. CORP.
Lord Warrington.

The appellants thereupon appealed to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario which, by a unanimous judgment, [1927] 3 D.L.R. 931, dismissed the appeal with costs.

By an order of His Majesty in Council dated November 3, 1927, special leave was given to enter and prosecute the present appeal. The facts are not in dispute.

At the date of the assignment next hereinafter mentioned, the exclusive right of performing in public in all parts of the world the musical pieces, the subject of the action, was by virtue of certain prior assignments vested in the Performing Right Society, Ltd. (hereinafter called the British Society).

By an indenture dated February 15, 1926, and made between the British Society, thereinafter called the assignor of the one part and the appellants thereinafter called the assignee of the other part, the assignor assigned to the assignee the right of performance in Canada of the music of (amongst a large number of other musical works) the musical works, the subject of this action.

At the date of the said indenture the British company by virtue of s. 41(1) of the Copyright Act was entitled to the sole right to perform the said musical works in public, and such right was by virtue of s. 11(2) of the same Act effectually transferred to the appellants by the said indenture.

The infringement of the appellants' right by the respondents is admitted, and but for the several grounds of defence above referred to the appellants' right to maintain the action is clear.

Inasmuch as their Lordships agree with the view of the Courts below on the point on which the case was decided in Canada, it is unnecessary to consider any of the other grounds of defence set up by the respondents.

The questions turns entirely on the construction of s. 39(2) of the Copyright Act. Section 39 of that Act is as follows:—

"(1) Any grant of an interest in a copyright, either by assignment or license, may be registered, if made in duplicate, upon production of both duplicates to the Copyright Office and payment of the prescribed fee. One duplicate shall be retained at the Copyright Office and the other shall be returned to the person depositing it, with a certificate of registration.

"(2) Any grant of an interest in a copyright, either by assignment or license, shall be adjudged void against any subsequent assignee or licensee for valuable consideration without actual notice, unless such assignment or license is registered in the manner directed by this Act before the registering of the instrument under which a subsequent assignee or licensee claims, and no grantee shall maintain any action under this Act, unless his and each such prior grant has been registered."

The appellants are indisputably "grantees," their "grant," viz., the assignment to them executed by the British company, has not been registered, the action is an action under the Act; therefore, reading the words literally, they are precluded from maintaining the action. The above is the effect of the several judgments in Canada, and their Lordships can see no answer to the respondents' case as thus stated.

Strenuous efforts, however, have been made by counsel for the appellants to induce their Lordships to accept a construction other than the literal one, and it is necessary therefore to consider whether such a construction is the correct one.

Great stress is laid by the appellants on the extreme inconvenience of a literal construction. It may, it is said, be practically impossible, when occasion arises to register an assignment, to obtain a duplicate without which, as it would appear, registration is impossible.

One answer to this argument is that it ought to be addressed to the legislature and not to the tribunal of construction, whose duty it is to say what the words mean, not what they should be made to mean in order to avoid inconvenience or hardship. On this point it may be pointed out that though the Act received the Royal Assent on June 4, 1921, it did not come into operation until January 1, 1924, and there was ample time for persons interested to point out defects and endeavour to obtain their removal.

Of course, if it could be established that the provision in question is capable of two meanings, one of which would produce a reasonable and the other an unreasonable and unjust result much might be said in favour of adopting the former. But it is here that the appellants' difficulty arises. The main endeavour on the part of counsel for the appellants was to show that the concluding words are a complement to the earlier part of the subsection, and are to be confined to cases where the action is one between competing grantees, and stress was laid on the words "each such prior grant" as referring, they maintained, to the grant to which that of the "subsequent assignee" mentioned in the section, is subsequent in point of date. But in the first place "each such prior grant" suggests that there may be more than one, and in the second, there is a sensible meaning for the words which fits in with the wider construction adopted by the Courts in Canada. The words to be construed are "his," i.e., the grantee's, "and each such prior grant," viz., "his grant

Imp.
P.C.
1929.
CAN. PERFORMING RIGHT SOC. v. FAMOUS PLAYERS CAN. CORP.
Lord Warrington.

and each such prior grant." The natural meaning of these words is, in their Lordships' opinion, "his grant and each grant such as his own and prior in date thereto." The statute would then require him to register his own grant and every prior grant of the same nature, comprising the same subject-matter and conferring the same interest therein as that made to himself. So construed, the words would distinctly point to grants forming part of the chain of title as those to be registered. If the words are construed, as the appellants say they ought to be, they might require the grantee, who has registered his grant and as against whom therefore the prior grant is void, to register that grant before he could bring an action against the holder of it—surely, a most unreasonable requirement.

The first part of the subsection it is true left open the question what, if any, right of action would be in the holder of either grant if neither was registered, but the legislature by the general words it has used has covered this point by making registration an essential condition to the maintenance of any action.

For these reasons, their Lordships are of opinion that the order appealed from ought to be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.

2009 CarswellOnt 3736
Ontario Superior Court of Justice

Clitheroe v. Hydro One Inc.

2009 CarswellOnt 3736, [2009] O.J. No. 2689, 178 A.C.W.S. (3d) 1047, 2009 C.E.B. & P.G.R. 8349 (headnote only), 76 C.C.P.B. 195, 96 O.R. (3d) 203

Eleanor R. Clitheroe (Plaintiff) and Hydro One Inc. (Defendant)

Mesbur J.

Heard: May 19-22, 2009
Judgment: June 26, 2009 *
Docket: 06-CV-307811PD1

Proceedings: additional reasons at Clitheroe v. Hydro One Inc. (2009), 2009 CarswellOnt 3881 (Ont. S.C.J.)

Counsel: Alan J. Lenczner, Q.C., for Plaintiff
Benjamin Zarnett, Peter Kolla for Defendant
Robin Basu, Robert Donato for Intervenor, Attorney General for Ontario

Subject: Corporate and Commercial; Constitutional; Public; Contracts; Employment; Human Rights
Related Abridgment Classifications
Constitutional law
XI Charter of Rights and Freedoms
XI.3 Nature of rights and freedoms
XI.3.f Life, liberty and security
XI.3.f.ii Economic, commercial and proprietary rights Pensions
I Private pension plans
I.2 Payment of pension
I.2.h Determination of benefits payable
I.2.h.ii Credited service
Public law
I Crown
I.1 Contractual principles regarding Crown
I.1.d Breach of individual covenants by Crown
Public law
IV Public utilities
IV.3 Actions by and against public utilities
IV.3.d Miscellaneous
Public law
IV Public utilities
IV.4 Termination, valuation and privatization
IV.4.e Privatization and deregulation
Statutes
III Retroactive and retrospective operation
III.3 Vested rights

Headnote

Pensions --- Payment of pension — Determination of benefits payable — Credited service

Plaintiff based career decisions, including latest position with public utility, in part on transferability of defined benefit pension plan to new employers and enhanced benefit of "two for one" credit for years of service — In 1999, utility was reorganized into multiple companies, including HO Inc., of which plaintiff became director and CEO — HO Inc. assumed utility's pension obligations, and plaintiff's and others' pensions were rolled into HO Inc.'s registered and supplementary plans — Plaintiff was only member of HO Inc. supplementary plan to receive special additional benefit of "three for one" credit for years of service and bonuses included in earnings for purpose of calculating eventual pension benefits — In 2002, provincial government passed Bill 80 ("Bill") terminating plaintiff's positions and prohibiting payment of benefits in excess of amounts authorized by s. 12 of Bill, thereby effectively capping plaintiff's credited service at maximum, which actuarial calculations indicated was 14.74 years — Plaintiff brought action for declaration that Bill was inapplicable to her pension rights and for declaration credited service was 21.75 years — Action dismissed — Bill clearly and without ambiguity deprived plaintiff of any pension benefits calculated other than by provisions of Bill — Commencing January 1, 1999, plaintiff had no other pension rights than those set out in HO Inc. plans — Bill retroactively changed and limited amounts that could be paid out after January 1, 1999 under plans — Limiting language and calculations were clear — Entitlement was first limited to amount payable under registered plan, and there was no dispute as to what sum was — There was no question plaintiff was only one with special arrangement under supplementary plan, and no question that amount under enhanced benefit provisions exceeded amounts payable under supplementary plan's calculations for all members of plan, so plaintiff's additional enhanced benefits could not be paid out — Maximum pension and retirement income plaintiff was entitled to receive under s. 12 of Bill was amount calculated pursuant to terms of registered plan and supplementary plans applicable to all members — While plaintiff had contractual entitlement to use 21.75 years of credited service in calculating pension, legislation's clear wording, when read in conjunction with other sections, indicated that legislature intended to cancel plaintiff's contractual pension entitlements in excess of maximum — Plaintiff's pension entitlement, which was purely economic contractual right, was afforded no protection under s. 7 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Statutes --- Retroactive and retrospective operation — Vested rights — General principles

Plaintiff based career decisions, including latest position with public utility, in part on transferability of defined benefit pension plan to new employers and enhanced benefit of "two for one" credit for years of service — In 1999, utility was reorganized into multiple companies, including HO Inc., of which plaintiff became director and CEO — HO Inc. assumed utility's pension obligations, and plaintiff's and others' pensions were rolled into HO Inc.'s registered and supplementary plans — Plaintiff was only member of HO Inc. supplementary plan to receive special additional benefit of "three for one" credit for years of service and bonuses included in earnings for purpose of calculating eventual pension benefits — In 2002, provincial government passed Bill 80 ("Bill") terminating plaintiff's positions and prohibiting payment of benefits in excess of amounts authorized by s. 12 of Bill, thereby effectively capping plaintiff's credited service at maximum, which actuarial calculations indicated was 14.74 years — Plaintiff brought action for declaration that Bill was inapplicable to her pension rights and for declaration credited service was 21.75 years — Action dismissed — Bill clearly and without ambiguity deprived plaintiff of any pension benefits calculated other than by provisions of Bill — Commencing January 1, 1999, plaintiff had no other pension rights than those set out in HO Inc. plans — Bill retroactively changed and limited amounts that could be paid out after January 1, 1999 under plans — Limiting language and calculations were clear — Entitlement was first limited to amount payable under registered plan, and there was no dispute as to what sum was — There was no question plaintiff was only one with special arrangement under supplementary plan, and no question that amount under enhanced benefit provisions exceeded amounts payable under supplementary plan's calculations for all members of plan, so plaintiff's additional enhanced benefits could not be paid out — Maximum pension and retirement income plaintiff was entitled to receive under s. 12 of Bill was amount calculated pursuant to terms of registered plan and supplementary plans applicable to all members — While plaintiff had contractual entitlement to use 21.75 years of credited service in calculating pension, legislation's clear wording, when read in conjunction with other sections, indicated that legislature intended to cancel plaintiff's contractual pension entitlements in excess of maximum — Plaintiff's pension entitlement, which was purely economic contractual right, was afforded no protection under s. 7 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Public law --- Crown — Contractual principles regarding Crown — Breach of individual covenants by Crown

Plaintiff based career decisions, including latest position with public utility, in part on transferability of defined benefit pension plan to new employers and enhanced benefit of "two for one" credit for years of service — In 1999, utility was reorganized into multiple companies, including HO Inc., of which plaintiff became director and CEO — HO Inc. assumed utility's pension obligations, and plaintiff's and others' pensions were rolled into HO Inc.'s registered and supplementary plans — Plaintiff was only member of HO Inc. supplementary plan to receive special additional benefit of "three for one" credit for years of service and bonuses included in earnings for purpose of calculating eventual pension benefits — In 2002, provincial government passed Bill 80 ("Bill") terminating plaintiff's positions and prohibiting payment of benefits in excess of amounts authorized by s. 12 of Bill, thereby effectively capping plaintiff's credited service at maximum, which actuarial calculations indicated was 14.74 years — Plaintiff brought action for declaration that Bill was inapplicable to her pension rights and for declaration credited service was 21.75 years — Action dismissed — Bill clearly and without ambiguity deprived plaintiff of any pension benefits calculated other than by provisions of Bill — Commencing January 1, 1999, plaintiff had no other pension rights than those set out in HO Inc. plans — Bill retroactively changed and limited amounts that could be paid out after January 1, 1999 under plans — Limiting language and calculations were clear — Entitlement was first limited to amount payable under registered plan, and there was no dispute as to what sum was — There was no question plaintiff was only one with special arrangement under supplementary plan, and no question that amount under enhanced benefit provisions exceeded amounts payable under supplementary plan's calculations for all members of plan, so plaintiff's additional enhanced benefits could not be paid out — Maximum pension and retirement income plaintiff was entitled to receive under s. 12 of Bill was amount calculated pursuant to terms of registered plan and supplementary plans applicable to all members — While plaintiff had contractual entitlement to use 21.75 years of credited service in calculating pension, legislation's clear wording, when read in conjunction with other sections, indicated that legislature intended to cancel plaintiff's contractual pension entitlements in excess of maximum — Plaintiff's pension entitlement, which was purely economic contractual right, was afforded no protection under s. 7 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Constitutional law --- Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Nature of rights and freedoms — Life, liberty and security — Economic, commercial and proprietary rights

Plaintiff based career decisions, including latest position with public utility, in part on transferability of defined benefit pension plan to new employers and enhanced benefit of "two for one" credit for years of service — In 1999, utility was reorganized into multiple companies, including HO Inc., of which plaintiff became director and CEO — HO Inc. assumed utility's pension obligations, and plaintiff's and others' pensions were rolled into HO Inc.'s registered and supplementary plans — Plaintiff was only member of HO Inc. supplementary plan to receive special additional benefit of "three for one" credit for years of service and bonuses included in earnings for purpose of calculating eventual pension benefits — In 2002, provincial government passed Bill 80 ("Bill") terminating plaintiff's positions and prohibiting payment of benefits in excess of amounts authorized by s. 12 of Bill, thereby effectively capping plaintiff's credited service at maximum, which actuarial calculations indicated was 14.74 years — Plaintiff brought action for declaration that Bill was unconstitutional in that it infringed her rights under s. 7 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Action dismissed — Plaintiff's pension entitlement was purely economic contractual right that was afforded no protection under s. 7 of Charter — Right to pension was simply deferred compensation — Salary or compensation, whichever form they might take, were purely economic rights and were not protected by s. 7 — Plaintiff's decision to work for HO Inc. and negotiate pension entitlement could hardly be equated with circumstances in prominent Supreme Court of Canada decision involving abortion rights, as plaintiff's situation could hardly be considered "profound social and ethical decision" on same level as woman's decision to terminate pregnancy — Attorney general's position and decision cited by attorney general wherein interest in pension plan was characterized as economic, was to be accepted.

Public law --- Public utilities — Termination, valuation and privatization — Privatization and deregulation

Plaintiff based career decisions, including latest position with public utility, in part on transferability of defined benefit pension plan to new employers and enhanced benefit of "two for one" credit for years of service — In 1999, utility was reorganized into multiple companies, including HO Inc., of which plaintiff became director and CEO — HO Inc. assumed utility's pension obligations, and plaintiff's and others' pensions were rolled into HO Inc.'s registered and supplementary plans — Plaintiff was only member of HO Inc. supplementary plan to receive special additional benefit of "three for one" credit for years of service and bonuses included in earnings for purpose of calculating eventual pension benefits — In 2002, provincial government passed Bill 80 ("Bill") terminating plaintiff's positions and prohibiting payment of benefits in excess of amounts authorized by s. 12 of Bill, thereby effectively capping plaintiff's credited service at maximum, which actuarial calculations indicated was 14.74

years — Plaintiff brought action for declaration that Bill was inapplicable to her, and for declarations credited service was 21.75 years and that Bill infringed rights under s. 7 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Action dismissed — Bill clearly and without ambiguity deprived plaintiff of any pension benefits calculated other than by provisions of Bill, and plaintiff's pension entitlement, which was purely economic contractual right, was afforded no protection under s. 7 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Commencing January 1, 1999, plaintiff had no other pension rights than those set out in HO Inc. plans — Bill retroactively changed and limited amounts that could be paid out after January 1, 1999 under plans — Entitlement was first limited to amount payable under registered plan, and there was no dispute as to what sum was — There was no question plaintiff was only one with special arrangement under supplementary plan, and no question that amount under enhanced benefit provisions exceeded amounts payable under supplementary plan's calculations for all members of plan, so plaintiff's additional enhanced benefits could not be paid out — Maximum pension and retirement income plaintiff was entitled to receive under s. 12 of Bill was amount calculated pursuant to terms of registered plan and supplementary plans applicable to all members — While plaintiff had contractual entitlement to use 21.75 years of credited service in calculating pension, legislation's clear wording, when read in conjunction with other sections, indicated that legislature intended to cancel plaintiff's contractual pension entitlements in excess of maximum.

Public law --- Public utilities — Actions by and against public utilities — Miscellaneous

Plaintiff based career decisions, including latest position with public utility, in part on transferability of defined benefit pension plan to new employers and enhanced benefit of "two for one" credit for years of service — In 1999, utility was reorganized into multiple companies, including HO Inc., of which plaintiff became director and CEO — HO Inc. assumed utility's pension obligations, and plaintiff's and others' pensions were rolled into HO Inc.'s registered and supplementary plans — Plaintiff was only member of HO Inc. supplementary plan to receive special additional benefit of "three for one" credit for years of service and bonuses included in earnings for purpose of calculating eventual pension benefits — In 2002, provincial government passed Bill 80 ("Bill") terminating plaintiff's positions and prohibiting payment of benefits in excess of amounts authorized by s. 12 of Bill, thereby effectively capping plaintiff's credited service at maximum, which actuarial calculations indicated was 14.74 years — Plaintiff brought action for declaration that Bill was inapplicable to her, and for declarations credited service was 21.75 years and that Bill infringed rights under s. 7 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Action dismissed — Bill clearly and without ambiguity deprived plaintiff of any pension benefits calculated other than by provisions of Bill, and plaintiff's pension entitlement, which was purely economic contractual right, was afforded no protection under s. 7 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Commencing January 1, 1999, plaintiff had no other pension rights than those set out in HO Inc. plans — Bill retroactively changed and limited amounts that could be paid out after January 1, 1999 under plans — Entitlement was first limited to amount payable under registered plan, and there was no dispute as to what sum was — There was no question plaintiff was only one with special arrangement under supplementary plan, and no question that amount under enhanced benefit provisions exceeded amounts payable under supplementary plan's calculations for all members of plan, so plaintiff's additional enhanced benefits could not be paid out — Maximum pension and retirement income plaintiff was entitled to receive under s. 12 of Bill was amount calculated pursuant to terms of registered plan and supplementary plans applicable to all members — While plaintiff had contractual entitlement to use 21.75 years of credited service in calculating pension, legislation's clear wording, when read in conjunction with other sections, indicated that legislature intended to cancel plaintiff's contractual pension entitlements in excess of maximum.

Table of Authorities

Cases considered by Mesbur J.:

Attorney General v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel Ltd. (1920), [1920] All E.R. Rep. 80, [1920] A.C. 508 (U.K. H.L.) — referred to

Authorson (Litigation Guardian of) v. Canada (Attorney General) (2003), (sub nom. Authorson v. Canada (Attorney General)) 2003 C.E.B. & P.G.R. 8051, (sub nom. Authorson v. Canada (Attorney General)) 227 D.L.R. (4th) 385, (sub nom. Authorson v. Canada (Attorney General)) 109 C.R.R. (2d) 220, (sub nom. Authorson v. Canada (Attorney General)) 306 N.R. 335, (sub nom. Authorson v. Canada (Attorney General)) 66 O.R. (3d) 734 (note), (sub nom. Authorson v. Canada (Attorney General)) [2003] 2 S.C.R. 40, 2003 CarswellOnt 2773, 2003 CarswellOnt 2774, 2003 SCC 39, 36 C.C.P.B. 29, (sub nom. Authorson v. Canada (Attorney General)) 175 O.A.C. 363, 4 Admin. L.R. (4th) 167 (S.C.C.) — considered

B. (R.) v. Children's Aid Society of Metropolitan Toronto (1995), 9 R.F.L. (4th) 157, 21 O.R. (3d) 479 (note), 122 D.L.R. (4th) 1, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 315, 26 C.R.R. (2d) 202, (sub nom. Sheena B., Re) 176 N.R. 161, (sub nom. Sheena B., Re) 78 O.A.C. 1, 1995 CarswellOnt 105, 1995 CarswellOnt 515 (S.C.C.) — considered

Blencoe v. British Columbia (Human Rights Commission) (2000), 2000 SCC 44, 2000 CarswellBC 1860, 2000 CarswellBC 1861, 3 C.C.E.L. (3d) 165, (sub nom. British Columbia (Human Rights Commission) v. Blencoe) 38 C.H.R.R. D/153, 81 B.C.L.R. (3d) 1, 190 D.L.R. (4th) 513, [2000] 10 W.W.R. 567, 23 Admin. L.R. (3d) 175, 2000 C.L.L.C. 230-040, 260 N.R. 1, (sub nom. British Columbia (Human Rights Commission) v. Blencoe) 77 C.R.R. (2d) 189, 141 B.C.A.C. 161, 231 W.A.C. 161, [2000] 2 S.C.R. 307 (S.C.C.) — considered

Charles v. Canada (Attorney General) (1996), 1996 CarswellOnt 871, 134 D.L.R. (4th) 452, 35 C.R.R. (2d) 301, 14 C.C.P.B. 98 (Ont. Gen. Div.) — considered

Charles v. Canada (Attorney General) (1998), 158 D.L.R. (4th) 192, 1998 CarswellOnt 1297 (Ont. C.A.) — referred to

Dikranian c. Québec (Procureur général) (2005), 2005 SCC 73, 2005 CarswellQue 10752, 2005 CarswellQue 10753, (sub nom. Dikranian v. Québec (Procureur Général)) 260 D.L.R. (4th) 17, (sub nom. Dikranian v. Quebec (Attorney General)) 342 N.R. 1, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 530 (S.C.C.) — referred to

Florence Mining Co. v. Cobalt Lake Mining Co. (1908), 12 O.W.R. 297, 1908 CarswellOnt 398, 18 O.L.R. 275, C.R. [1911] 2 A.C. 412 (Ont. K.B.) — considered

Godbout c. Longueuil (Ville) (1997), (sub nom. Godbout v. Longueuil (City)) 152 D.L.R. (4th) 577, 1997 CarswellQue 883, 1997 CarswellQue 884, (sub nom. Godbout v. Longueuil (Ville)) 219 N.R. 1, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 844, (sub nom. Godbout v. Longueuil (City)) 47 C.R.R. (2d) 1, 43 M.P.L.R. (2d) 1, (sub nom. Longueuil (City) v. Godbout) 97 C.L.L.C. 210-031 (S.C.C.) — considered

New Brunswick (Minister of Health & Community Services) v. G. (J.) (1999), 66 C.R.R. (2d) 267, 50 R.F.L. (4th) 63, 216 N.B.R. (2d) 25, 552 A.P.R. 25, [1999] 3 S.C.R. 46, 7 B.H.R.C. 615, 1999 CarswellNB 305, 1999 CarswellNB 306, 244 N.R. 276, 177 D.L.R. (4th) 124, 26 C.R. (5th) 203 (S.C.C.) — considered

R. v. Morgentaler (1988), 63 O.R. (2d) 281 (note), (sub nom. R. v. Morgentaler (No. 2)) [1988] 1 S.C.R. 30, 44 D.L.R. (4th) 385, 26 O.A.C. 1, 37 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 62 C.R. (3d) 1, 31 C.R.R. 1, 82 N.R. 1, 1988 CarswellOnt 954, 1988 CarswellOnt 45 (S.C.C.) — considered

Siemens v. Manitoba (Attorney General) (2002), 34 M.P.L.R. (3d) 163, 299 N.R. 267, [2003] 4 W.W.R. 1, 102 C.R.R. (2d) 345, 2002 CarswellMan 574, 2002 CarswellMan 575, 2003 SCC 3, 47 Admin. L.R. (3d) 205, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 6, 173 Man. R. (2d) 1, 293 W.A.C. 1, 221 D.L.R. (4th) 90 (S.C.C.) — considered

Walker v. Prince Edward Island (1995), 181 N.R. 158, 124 D.L.R. (4th) 127, 28 C.R.R. (2d) 63, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 407, 130 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 181, 405 A.P.R. 181, 1995 CarswellPEI 38, 1995 CarswellPEI 38F (S.C.C.) — considered

Wells v. Newfoundland (1999), 99 C.L.L.C. 210-047, 180 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 269, 548 A.P.R. 269, 46 C.C.E.L. (2d) 165, [1999] 3 S.C.R. 199, 15 Admin. L.R. (3d) 268, 1999 CarswellNfld 214, 1999 CarswellNfld 215, 177 D.L.R. (4th) 73, 245 N.R. 275 (S.C.C.) — considered

Statutes considered:

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Part I of the Constitution Act, 1982, being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (U.K.), 1982, c. 11

Generally — referred to

s. 7 — considered

s. 32(1) — considered

Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43

s. 109 — referred to

Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46

s. 251 — referred to

Hydro One Inc. Directors and Officers Act, 2002, S.O. 2002, c. 3

Generally — referred to

s. 1 — referred to

ss. 9-11 — referred to

s. 12 — considered

s. 12(1) — considered

s. 12(2) — considered

s. 13 — considered

s. 14 — considered

s. 16 — considered

Income Tax Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (5th Supp.)

Generally — referred to

ACTION by former director and CEO of privatized public utility company for declaration that Bill retroactively limiting pension benefit rights was inapplicable and/or contrary to rights under s. 7 of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mesbur J.*:

In short, the Legislature within its jurisdiction can do everything that is not naturally impossible, and is restrained by no rule human or divine ... The prohibition "Thou shalt not steal," has no legal force upon the sovereign body. And there would be no necessity for compensation to be given.

Florence Mining Co. v. Cobalt Lake Mining Co. [1]

Introduction:

1 In 2002 Eleanor Clitheroe's long and successful career in business, the Ontario Government, Ontario Hydro and Hydro One came to an abrupt halt with the Ontario government's passage of what is commonly called "Bill 80" [2]. That legislation, among other things, terminated her positions as a director and the Chief Executive Officer of Hydro One Inc. with effect on June 4, 2002, and also purported to eliminate a significant portion of her contractual rights to pension benefits from Hydro One.

2 There is no question the legislative branch has the power to enact such legislation. Riddell J. in the Florence Mining decision made that eloquently clear. What is equally clear, however, is that the legislature can divest a person of vested rights if and only if it does so in clear, unequivocal and unambiguous terms, and does not infringe a person's Charter [3] rights in doing so.

3 Ms. Clitheroe takes the position that Bill 80 fails on both bases, and therefore its attempt to limit or reduce her pension entitlement is of no effect. She says Bill 80 is neither clear nor unequivocal. Even if it is, she says it has improperly infringed her liberty rights under section 7 of the Charter and is therefore unconstitutional. Because Ms. Clitheroe has raised a constitutional issue in relation to Bill 80, the Attorney General for Ontario has intervened in these proceedings. [4]

4 Not surprisingly, both Hydro One and the Attorney General for Ontario take a contrary position to Ms. Clitheroe's.

Factual background:

5 Eleanor Clitheroe is now fifty-five years old. She holds a bachelor of laws degree from the University of Western Ontario, a civil law degree from McGill University, as well as a Masters of Business Administration degree from the University of Western Ontario. Since the passage of Bill 80 and the loss of her job with Hydro One, she has become ordained as an Anglican priest, and is currently training to become a military chaplain. She has had a successful, varied and demanding career.

6 Upon her graduation from law school, Ms. Clitheroe was articled to the Tory's law firm in Toronto, and then joined the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, where she worked while completing her Bar Admission Course requirements. She continued with CIBC after her call to the bar in 1982, and remained there until 1989, eventually rising to the position of Vice President, foreign exchange and money market trading.

7 In 1989 Ms. Clitheroe left CIBC in order to join the Ontario government. She testified that she made the choice because she had been approached to do so, and was interested in pubic policy matters which she could pursue in government. She described the proposed salary as "OK", but with a potential for upward mobility. Her CIBC pension was transferable into the government plan, and she viewed the government pension as a good one. It was a defined benefit plan, with what she saw as significant security, since it was backed by the government of Ontario, which enjoyed a Triple A credit rating.

8 Ms. Clitheroe began her work with the government as an assistant deputy minister in the finance ministry. She remained with the government until October of 1993 when she was asked to join Ontario Hydro. At the time she left the government, Ms. Clitheroe held the position of Deputy Minister of Finance. As a deputy minister, Ms. Clitheroe enjoyed enhanced pension benefits, along with all other deputy ministers. For the purpose of calculating their eventual pension benefits, deputy ministers were entitled to what is called a "two for one" credit of their years of service. In other words, in calculating their pension benefits pursuant to the government pension formula, when multiplying their requisite earnings by the number of years of credited service, deputy ministers are entitled to have two years of credited service calculated for each year of credited service they actually work.

9 In 1993, the Chairman of Ontario Hydro approached Ms. Clitheroe to join the company, which was in need of a Chief Financial Officer. As she explained it, the position was of interest to her because she had a significant interest in energy policy, the proposed remuneration was good, and she could transfer her government pension to a plan that she viewed as a "bit better" than the government's. She felt the Ontario Hydro plan was just as secure as the Ontario government pension. Like the government plan, it also was a defined benefit plan. Ontario Hydro also offered her the same "two for one" credited service calculation as she had enjoyed as a deputy minister.

10 Ms. Clitheroe joined Ontario Hydro in 1993 as Senior Vice President and Chief Financial Officer, reporting to the president, Mr. Maurice Strong. Her starting salary was $270,000. Ms. Clitheroe transferred her pension entitlements from the Ontario government pension plan to the Ontario Hydro pension plan. Her salary and benefits at Hydro One (including pension benefits) were governed by contracts with her employer. The terms of these contracts were changed from time to time as her responsibilities within the corporation changed.

11 In 1996 Ms. Clitheroe's role was enlarged include the position of chief development officer, as well as CFO. As chief development officer she was also responsible for Hydro's research labs and developing new products and options, in addition to her responsibilities as chief financial officer. Her additional role and responsibilities as chief development officer marked the beginning of the eventual restructuring of Ontario Hydro.

12 She next added the responsibilities of chief transition officer for Ontario Hydro to her other roles, with an increase in her salary to $360,000. As chief transition officer she was responsible for the potential break up of Ontario Hydro into its component parts, and to look at competition for electricity and privatization of parts of it.

13 On January 1, 1999 Ontario Hydro was reorganized into a number of different companies, of which the defendant, Hydro One Inc. was one. Hydro One was the corporation that was to be responsible for the distribution of electricity throughout the Province of Ontario. Ms. Clitheroe became the CEO of Hydro One, at a salary of $575,000 together with the opportunity to earn performance bonuses. Performance bonuses were matters of contract as well, and were payable at certain percentages of Ms. Clitheroe's salary, depending on the extent, if any, that her performance exceeded set performance targets in her contracts. In each year of her employment with Hydro One, Ms. Clitheroe earned significant performance bonuses in addition to her salary.

14 Hydro One took over all the obligations under the Ontario Hydro pension plan for those Ontario Hydro employees who joined Hydro One. Those employees then became members of the Hydro One pension plan. Ms. Clitheroe was one of those employees. Ms. Clitheroe had had significant pension rights under the Ontario Hydro plan, and these were rolled into the Hydro One pension plan. Ms. Clitheroe continued to have regular pension benefits pursuant to Hydro One's registered pension plan, and also obtained significant additional benefits under the Hydro One supplementary pension plan. These additional benefits arose in an additional segment of the supplementary plan that provided special arrangements for Ms. Clitheroe.

15 Effective January 1, 1999 Ms. Clitheroe became a member of the Hydro One Pension Plan, namely the registered pension plan. Effective the same date, Hydro One established the supplementary pension plan.

16 All Hydro One employees, including Ms. Clitheroe, were members of the Hydro One registered pension plan, or RPP. Employers and employees who make contributions to RPPs are entitled, up to certain limits, to deduct those contributions from their income in computing taxable income for tax purposes under the Income Tax Act.[5] This tax deductibility creates a tax incentive for employers to create pension plans for their employees. The contributions an employer or employee makes to a pension plan on an annual basis are usually expressed as a percentage of the employee's annual income or compensation. Tax deductibility for these pension contributions, however, is not unlimited. The Income Tax Act sets a limit on the level of income or level of contribution that will be allowed as a tax deduction each year.

17 Since many employees earn income above the Income Tax Act limit for deductibility, some employers create what are called supplementary plans, to allow the development of pension credits above the tax limit. Since the tax limit is set at a relatively low level (until fairly recently the income limit for tax deductibility into registered plans was about $60,000), companies set up supplementary plans so that employees can earn the pension benefits they would have earned, but for the limits imposed by the Income Tax Act. For example, if an employee were earning $80,000 per year, and the income limits were set at $60,000 per year, and the RPP provided for contributions of n% of income to be contributed into the plan, the employer and employee could only contribute to the limit to the registered plan on a tax deductible basis, and the excess (often referred to as a "top up") would be contributed to the supplementary plan, but without tax deductibility for either the employer or employee.

18 The Hydro One pension, like many others, is a defined benefit plan. A defined benefit pension plan funds an employer's promise to pay a particular income stream to an employee on that employee's retirement. With a defined benefit plan, that particular income stream is usually calculated on the basis of a formula that uses some aspect of the employee's earnings, takes a specified percentage of that sum, and then multiplies it by the number of years the employee has worked for the employer.

19 The figure the formula uses for earnings is dependent on the terms of the plan, as is the percentage that will be used, as well as the calculation of the years of service. For example, "earnings" may or may not include bonuses, or may include only a fixed percentage of them. Earnings may be defined as average earnings, or the average of the last few years of earnings, or the average of the "best three" years, or some other formula. Similarly, years of service may be actual years worked, or may be a formula that credits more years than those the employee has actually worked. The terms of the pension plan itself, coupled with any additional contractual terms an employee may have will determine how the pension will eventually be calculated. The plan will also generally set out how many years of service, and what age an employee must be before he or she is entitled to receive an unreduced pension. Whether a pension plan is a defined benefit plan, or a defined contribution plan, it is a form of deferred compensation for an employee.

20 Debra Vines, the manager of compensation and benefits at Hydro One, explained the workings of the Hydro One registered pension plan quite simply. She said the basic formula under the registered plan is 2% of the average of an employee's highest three years of earnings, multiplied by the number of years of credited service the employee has accumulated. The RPP counts credited service on a "one to one" basis, that is, credited service is calculated as actual years worked. In calculating income, the RPP defines it as base salary plus half of any bonus earned.

21 Because many employees earn more than the amount that the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) allows for deductibility of pension contributions, many employers have supplementary pension plans by which they "top up" the employees' pensions to the level they would be at but for the Income Tax Act restrictions on deductibility. That is to say, the formula to calculate pension entitlement under the registered plan is applied to the employee's excess earnings that do not qualify for tax deductibility in relation to contributions to the registered plan. These payments are often referred to as a "top up". Hydro One has a supplementary plan of this nature.

22 The primary objective of the supplementary plan is stated in section 8.01 of the Plan. It says:

> The primary objective of the Supplementary Plan is to provide a benefit that, together with the amount of the benefit actually paid under the Registered Plan, would have been payable from the Registered Plan if the amount of such benefit were not restricted by the limitations contained in the Registered Plan in respect of the maximum pension payable thereunder (as is required by the I.T.A.) and taking into account for a DSPS Eligible Employee, those exceptions, if any, that are specified in the Special Arrangement applicable to the DSPS Eligible Employee.

23 DSPS is defined as a "Designated Supplementary Payment Schedule", which is the component of the supplementary plan governed by Part III of the supplementary plan. Simply put, the Hydro One supplementary plan also has additional benefits, called special arrangements, for particular employees. These are contained in Part III of the supplementary plan. The only particular employee of Hydro One who had such a special arrangement was Ms. Clitheroe. Ms. Clitheroe's special arrangements under the supplementary plan were set out in her employment contracts with Hydro One.

24 The salient features of Ms. Clitheroe's supplementary pension was that it was a "special arrangement" as defined under the supplementary plan, and that it created higher additional benefits for Ms. Clitheroe than were available to other employees who were part of the general supplementary plan. In Ms. Clitheroe's case, her years of credited service were to be calculated on the basis of two years of credited service for each actual year of credited service she worked. On April 17, 2001 the terms of Ms. Clitheroe's employment contract [6] changed to give her three years of credit for each year worked. This contract also provided that Ms. Clitheroe's years of credited service under the Deputy Minister Order-in-Council would be recognized as credited service under the Hydro One supplementary plan. The contract specified that on January 29, 2001 her credited service under the supplementary plan was 29 years and four months, on January 29, 2002 her credited service would be 32 years and four months. After December 31, 2002 her credited service would be capped at 35 years.

25 Ms. Clitheroe's employment contracts also had varying provisions regarding the inclusion of her bonuses in the calculation of her income for the purposes of determining her eventual pension entitlement. By the end of her time with Hydro One, Ms. Clitheroe was entitled to have 100% of her bonuses included in her earnings for the purpose of calculating her eventual pension benefits.

26 But for Bill 80, Ms. Clitheroe's years of credited service would have been roughly 33 years and four months. For the purposes of this action, Ms. Clitheroe seeks a declaration that Bill 80 does not affect her pension benefit rights, including credited service, prior to April 1, 1999. She seeks a declaration that her credited service pursuant to the pension plans in 21.75 years. She also seeks a declaration that section 12 of Bill 80 is inapplicable to her pension rights including credited service, before January 1, 1999.

27 Scott Clausen, the actuary retained by Hydro One to provide expert evidence in this action, prepared a number of scenarios setting out the total monthly or annual pension Ms. Clitheroe would be entitled to, depending on the years of credited service she was assumed to have at retirement. For his calculations, Mr. Clausen first used 14.4167 years of credited service. This figure represents the actual number of years Ms. Clitheroe worked for Hydro One, including the time she worked for Ontario Hydro and the government of Ontario. It does not reflect either the "two for one" credit she earned both as a Deputy Minister and then pursuant to her contracts with Ontario Hydro and then Hydro One. It also does not reflect her last contract with Hydro One, which provided a "three for one" calculation of credited service. Assuming Ms. Clitheroe's termination on June 4, 2002, this scenario based on 14.4167 years of credited service would provide her with a monthly pension of $25,637.08, or yearly pension income of $307,644.96 on her retirement.

28 Mr. Clausen did a similar calculation, assuming 21.75 years of credited service. This is the figure Ms. Clitheroe seeks to use in the calculation of her eventual pension entitlement. On this scenario, Ms. Clitheroe's monthly pension at age 65 would be $33,644.21 or $464,133.84 per year.

29 Mr. Clausen also made calculations of the pension payable if Ms. Clitheroe were to take early retirement benefits at age 55. The general provisions of the pension plan contain formulae setting out reductions in pension benefits if an employee takes early retirement. In Ms. Clitheroe's case, her special arrangements under the supplementary plan provided that she could take early retirement without any actuarial reduction in her pension entitlement.

30 I turn now to discuss the legal framework of this action, and the positions of all of the parties within that overall framework.

The legal framework:

31 The parties are all in agreement that the overarching principle embodied in this lawsuit is that a government can do as it pleases in terms of divesting a person of rights, either prospectively or retrospectively, subject only to the safeguards guaranteed to that person under the Charter and provided also that if a government takes away a person's vested property rights it can do so only in legislation expressed in the clearest and most unambiguous terms.

32 The Supreme Court of Canada has expressed this notion in a number of cases, but perhaps put it best in Wells v. Newfoundland [7] when Major J, speaking for the court said:

> While the legislature may have the extraordinary power of passing a law to specifically deny compensation to an aggrieved individual with whom it has broken an agreement, clear and explicit statutory language would be required to extinguish existing rights previously conferred on that party. ...
>
> In a nation governed by the rule of law, we assume that the government will honour its obligations unless it explicitly exercises its power not to. In the absence of a clear express intent to abrogate rights and obligations - rights of the highest importance to the individual - those rights remain in force. To argue the opposite is to say that the government is bound only by its whim, not its word. In Canada this is unacceptable, and does not accord with the nation's understanding of the relationship between the state and its citizens.

33 The government's power is very broad, indeed. Its power has even extended to taking a "property claim from a vulnerable group, in disregard of the crown's fiduciary duty" to that vulnerable group. [8]

34 As to the overriding power of the Charter, section 32.(1) makes the governments of Canada the provinces and territories subject to the Charter. Section 32.(1) says:

> This Charter applies
>
> > (a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and
> >
> > (b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province.

35 Ms. Clitheroe's position is simple. She says Bill 80 does not meet the necessary requirement of being clear and unambiguous in its effort to strip her of vested pension rights, and to do so retroactively. She says that even if Bill 80 does meet that threshold, it has still impermissibly breached her section 7 liberty rights under the Charter. As a result, Ms. Clitheroe says that in calculating her pension entitlement the provisions of her special arrangement under the supplemental plan, with all its enhanced benefits, must prevail.

36 Hydro One takes the position that the legislation is clear and unambiguous. It says the clear wording of Bill 80 retroactively changes Ms. Clitheroe's pension entitlement and limits it. Hydro One says there is nothing unclear or ambiguous in the legislation. On that basis, it says, Ms. Clitheroe's pension entitlement must be calculated on the basis of the terms of the registered pension plan, and the provisions of the supplementary plan that are applicable to all employees. It says Bill 80 limits her pension to these amounts and therefore clearly and unequivocally deprives her of any pension benefits calculated otherwise.

37 Ontario intervened in this action because Ms. Clitheroe raised the issue of the constitutionality of section 12 of Bill 80. She alleges that this provision of Bill 80 impermissibly breaches her Charter rights, namely her rights under section 7 of the Charter which guarantees her liberty rights. Ontario takes the position that the liberty rights protected under the Charter are not broad enough to include purely economic rights, and says that Ms. Clitheroe's contractual pension rights are nothing more or less than such purely economic rights. Ontario says Ms. Clitheroe's pension rights are therefore not protected under section 7, and the legislature has the power to extinguish these proprietary and contractual rights. Ontario says Ms. Clitheroe's constitutional challenge must therefore fail.

38 Clearly, the provisions of Bill 80 are critical to, and inform the discussion. For ease of reference I have reproduced the entire statute in Schedule A attached to these reasons.

Discussion:

39 As I have said, there are two aspects to Ms. Clitheroe's attack on Bill 80. The first relates to whether its provisions purporting to retroactively reduce her pension rights have been articulated in clear and unambiguous language. The second relates to whether the legislation has improperly infringed her liberty rights under section 7 of the Charter.

Is the legislation clear and unambiguous?

40 Ms. Clitheroe begins by pointing to the fact that she is essentially a blameless victim. There is no question she was a hard-working, dedicated employee of Hydro One. She fulfilled the requirements of her job and earned performance bonuses in accordance with the provisions of her contracts of employment. She says Bill 80 does not clearly take away the "two for one" pension credit rights she earned as a Deputy Minister with the Government of Ontario. She says it does not clearly take away the two for one credits she had earned prior to 1999 in the six years she worked at Ontario Hydro. She says that in going forward from 1999 Bill 80 does not clearly abrogate her contractual rights. Ms. Clitheroe's position, therefore, is that due to this lack of precision, her contractual pension rights are and must be unaltered by Bill 80.

41 In assessing Ms. Clitheroe's position, it is helpful to look at the specific wording of section 12 itself:

> 12. (1) A designated officer is not entitled on or after January 1, 1999 to a pension or retirement income that exceeds the amount described in subsection (2).
>
> Amount
>
> (2) The maximum amount of pension and other retirement income payable to or in respect of a designated officer is the amount of his or her pension, if any, provided by the Hydro One Pension Plan and retirement income, if any, provided by the unregistered supplementary plan,
>
> (a) that provides benefits equal to the difference between the maximum pension benefits allowed under the Income Tax Act (Canada) and the benefits determined in accordance with the formula set out in the Hydro One Pension Plan; and
>
> (b) that provides those benefits in respect of all members of the Hydro One Pension Plan whose level of earnings results in such a difference.

42 First, there is no question Ms. Clitheroe is a "designated officer", since she held the position of Chief Executive Officer, one of those defined as a designated officer pursuant to section 1 of Bill 80 and to whom section 12 would apply.

43 There is also no question that Ms. Clitheroe's pension rights were contractual vested rights, and not contingent on the happening of any event, other than her reaching retirement age. In looking at whether Bill 80 has succeeded in divesting her of these rights, the court must follow some well established principles.

44 First, a fundamental rule is that statutes are prospective in nature unless their language clearly and unambiguously makes them retrospective. Clear and explicit statutory language is required to extinguish existing rights previously conferred on a party [9]. Second, if a statute's provisions are clearly aimed at one person, the legislature's obligation to make the provisions specific and unambiguous must be scrupulously followed. As the Supreme Court said in Wells, "the use of legislation to strip a specific individual of a legal right to compensation ... is a harsh and extraordinary use of governmental authority which, because it should not be done lightly, requires specific and unambiguous language."

45 The real question then is what is the scope of section subsection 12(1) when it says Ms. Clitheroe, as a designated officer, is not entitled "after January 1, 1999" to receive a pension that exceeds the amount set out in subsection (2). Ms. Clitheroe says it is not clear if this means her pension rights acquired and accumulated prior to that date are affected or not. She says the legislation on its face is unclear because it requires an understanding of the Hydro One pension plan in order to give it meaning. She suggests the words of the statute itself are not sufficiently clear to give it the effect Hydro One and Ontario propound. Given what she says are these kinds of ambiguities, she says the legislation must fail.

46 Hydro One says first, whether Ms. Clitheroe is blameless is immaterial. Hydro One points to the fact that in Authorson the war veterans in question were not only blameless, but also disabled, and were clearly a disadvantaged group. There, the Court also found the federal government had breached its fiduciary duty to the veterans in failing to invest their pension funds and earn interest on the money. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court of Canada held the legislation that retroactively absolved the government from any responsibility for this failure was valid, even though it harmed a blameless and vulnerable group.

47 Hydro One comes at the question by looking at both the wording of section 12 of Bill 80 and the case as Ms. Clitheroe has pleaded it. Hydro One points out that Ms. Clitheroe seeks a declaration that her years of credited service are 21.75 years. It says that if she seeks such a declaration, she must have interpreted the section in this fashion; if so, she cannot say the section is ambiguous.

48 Hydro One first asks what is the correct interpretation of the maximum amount set out in section 12. It then asks whether counting Ms. Clitheroe's years of credited service at 21.75 years, as she suggests, would result in her receiving pension or retirement income that exceeds that maximum. Last, Hydro One asks whether any entitlements to pension benefits survive beyond the section 12 maximum, and does the legislature have, and has it exercised a power to cancel any entitlements beyond the maximum it has set out.

49 Hydro One says section 12 is clear and unambiguous. The maximum amount of pension and retirement income set out in the section for a designated officer, such as Ms. Clitheroe, is the pension provided by the Hydro One pension plan, and the retirement income, if any, provided by the unregistered supplementary plan. The parties have admitted that the "Hydro One Pension Plan" referred to in section 12 is the registered plan found at tab 8 of Exhibit 3, and that "the unregistered supplementary plan" referred to in s. 12 is that found at Tab 10 of Exhibit 3.

50 January 1, 1999 was the date Hydro One was established. It is also the effective date that the Hydro One pension plans were established, and took over all the pension rights and obligations its employees had enjoyed under their Ontario Hydro pensions. Hydro One argues that from January 1, 1999 onward, Ms. Clitheroe had no pension rights under the Ontario Hydro pension plan, the Government of Ontario pension plan, or indeed the CIBC pension plan. All of her pension rights, past and future crystallized on that date in the Hydro One plans. Hydro One says one therefore looks at that date, and only at the Hydro One plans to determine Ms. Clitheroe's pension and retirement income entitlements.

51 Commencing January 1, 1999 Ms. Clitheroe had no other pension rights than those set out in the Hydro One plans, namely the registered plan and the supplementary plan. Bill 80 limits the amounts that can be paid out after January 1, 1999 under those two plans. The limiting language is clear. The calculation is clear. The entitlement is first limited to the amount payable under the RPP. There is no dispute as to what this sum is.

52 The second limit is on what can be paid out of the supplementary plan. Bill 80 limits what can be paid out of the supplementary plan to what is payable to all members of the supplementary plan. What is payable to all members of the supplementary plan, including Ms. Clitheroe? All are entitled to the top up payment, calculated according to the terms of the supplementary plan. This is clear and unambiguous.

53 There is also no question that under the terms of the supplementary plan only Ms. Clitheroe has a special arrangement under that plan. Her special arrangement includes both the general top up available to all supplementary plan members, as well as significant, additional enhanced benefits. Since her additional enhanced benefits are available only to her, and exceed the amounts payable under the supplementary plan's calculations for all members of the supplementary plan, they cannot be paid out pursuant to the legislation.

54 It therefore follows, clearly and unequivocally, that the maximum pension and retirement income Ms. Clitheroe may receive under section 12 is the amount calculated pursuant to the terms RPP and the terms of the supplementary plan that apply to all its members.

55 Hydro One then asks whether accepting Ms. Clitheroe's position and using 21.75 years of credited service for the purpose of calculating her entitlement under the supplementary plan would yield an amount greater than the maximum calculated under section 12. Clearly it would. Ms. Vines explained that tab 16 of Exhibit 3 sets out the total of the amounts that would have been paid under the registered plan if there had been no limit under the Income Tax Act. The component of the total that relates to the supplementary plan is described as the difference between the pension payable under the plan, and what would have been payable if there were no Income Tax Act limit. That calculation has been made on the basis of 14.74 years, because the registered plan counts only one year of credited service for each year worked.

56 As Ms. Vines said, and as Mr. Clausen's calculations show, if the formula used more years of credited service than 14.74 years, it would result in a benefit that exceeded simply the top up amount under the supplementary plan, and would thus exceed the maximum described in section 12 of Bill 80.

57 Since using 21.75 years of credited service would exceed the maximum set out in section 12 of Bill 80, the next question is whether Ms. Clitheroe had a contractual entitlement to use 21.75 years of credited service in the calculation of her pension, and if so, has Bill 80 effectively cancelled that contractual entitlement. As the parties acknowledge, the legislature has the power to do so, but if and only if it does so in clear unambiguous terms.

Has the legislation cancelled Ms. Clitheroe's contractual rights?

58 Hydro One says first Bill 80 delineates a maximum payment of pension and retirement income for designated officers. By expressly authorizing a maximum, it excludes amounts exceeding that maximum. Beginning on January 1, 1999, and on every date after that date, no designated officer has a right to, or may claim any amount more than the maximum. January 1, 1999 is the first date Ms. Clitheroe had any rights against Hydro One, and therefore one looks only at that date forward, in terms of her rights with Hydro One. All of her prior pension rights were assumed by Hydro One as of that date, and it is only from that date forward she has any contractual rights with Hydro One. When I consider the clear wording of the maximum calculated in s. 12, and look at that provision in conjunction with sections 13, 14, and 16 of Bill 80 I must conclude the legislature clearly intended Ms. Clitheroe's contractual pension entitlements in excess of the maximum to be cancelled.

59 I say this because section 13 prohibits any person from paying an amount exceeding the amount authorized by Bill 80. The only amount that is authorized is the maximum under s. 12. This is clear.

60 Similarly, section 14 provides that if any person receives an amount in excess of the authorized amount, it must be repaid. Lastly, section 16 prohibits any proceedings being commenced in relation to the restrictions to compensation set out in section 12 (in addition to sections 9-11) of Bill 80. These provisions make it clear that the legislature intended that no person should receive or be permitted to claim any amount in excess of the maximum authorized under section 12.

61 I therefore agree with Hydro One's interpretation, and find the statute is clear and unambiguous. The provisions of the statute must therefore govern, unless Ms. Clitheroe can show that her constitutional rights have been infringed.

Does the legislation infringe Ms. Clitheroe's Charter rights?

62 Section 7 of the Charter says:

> Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

63 Ms. Clitheroe frames her position on the Charter in fairly simple terms. She characterizes the s. 7 liberty interest as separate from the security interest. She says the courts have held that the liberty interest protected by the Charter is more than simply freedom from restraint. She suggests that the right to liberty has and must be construed broadly and says the liberty interest is broad enough to protect what she describes as the right to make fundamental life choices. She suggests her choices to work to Hydro One, Ontario Hydro and the Province of Ontario before that, with their particular pension entitlements, constitute such a fundamental life choice. She relies on a number of cases that she says frame the liberty interest in such broad terms.

64 For example, in Morgentaler [10] , Wilson J (though speaking for herself alone) held section 251 of the Criminal Code, which limited a pregnant woman's access to abortion, violated her right to life, liberty and security of the person within the meaning of section 7 of the Charter, in a way that does not accord with the principles of fundamental justice. She interpreted the right to liberty to guarantee every individual a degree of personal autonomy over important decisions intimately affecting his or her private life. Wilson J. held that a woman's decision to terminate her pregnancy falls within this class of protected decisions. She described it as one that will have profound psychological, economic and social consequences for her. She characterized the decision to have an abortion is more than a medical decision; it is a profound social and ethical one as well.

65 The majority in Morgentaler did not embrace Wilson J's liberty analysis. Instead, they decided the case on the basis that section 251 infringes the right to security of the person, and not on the basis of an infringement of any liberty interest. Even accepting Wilson J's reasoning in the context of this case, I would be hard pressed to characterize Ms. Clitheroe's decision to work for Hydro One and negotiate her pension entitlement as a "profound social and ethical decision" on the same level as a woman's decision to terminate a pregnancy.

66 Ms. Clitheroe also relies on New Brunswick (Minister of Health & Community Services) v. G. (J.) [11] . It dealt with the issue of whether legal aid must be provided to parents in the context of a child welfare case where the parents faced the prospect of their children becoming crown wards. The case addressed whether the denial of legal aid in such circumstances breached the parents' guaranteed security of the person and liberty rights. There, the Supreme Court majority decided the parents' security of the person rights had been infringed and required the province to provide legal aid.

67 L'Heureux-Dube J, writing for the minority came to the same conclusion, but went further and found the parents' liberty interests had been infringed as well. She interpreted the s. 7 liberty interest more broadly and cited with approval the dissenting judgment of LaForest J in B. (R.) v. Children's Aid Society of Metropolitan Toronto, [12] which said:

> Liberty does not mean mere freedom from physical restraint. In a free and democratic society, the individual must be left room for personal autonomy to live his or her own life and to make decisions that are of fundamental personal importance.

68 The minority held that wardship proceedings also implicated these fundamental liberty interests of parents, and ordered the state to provide legal aid funding. They stated that "the principles of fundamental justice require that a parent be able to participate in the hearing adequately and effectively." [13] It is noteworthy, however, that the majority was not prepared to extend the liberty analysis this far.

69 Ms. Clitheroe also relies on the Blencoe [14] decision to support her position that her pension rights are liberty rights that are protected by the Charter. There, the Supreme Court quoted its earlier decisions in which it held that "liberty" is engaged "where state compulsions or prohibitions affect important and fundamental life choices." The court's comments, however, are obiter, since the case was decided on the basis of an infringement of the right to security of the person, and not the liberty right.

70 Ms. Clitheroe also points to the comments of LaForest J in Godbout c. Longueuil (Ville) [15] in which he said that the right to life, liberty and security of the person encompassed fundamental life choices. He said, at paragraph 66:

> ... the autonomy protected by the s. 7 right to liberty encompasses only those matters that can properly be characterized as fundamentally or inherently personal such that, by their very nature, they implicate basic choices going to the core of what it means to enjoy individual dignity and independence.

71 Ms. Clitheroe says that what Bill 80 purports to do is nothing more than punishment, spite and vengeance, directed solely at her and no one else. She suggests that the legislation interferes with her personal autonomy and fundamental choices she made about where to work, and how to structure her life. She says she made a choice to leave private industry and join the public service. Part of her remuneration was paid in cash, and some was deferred in the form of a pension. She said the pension rights were an important component of her decision to join the government, and then Ontario Hydro and Hydro One. She characterizes these choices as going to the core of what it means to her to enjoy individual dignity and independence.

72 Ms. Clitheroe suggests that these choices she made are fundamental to her liberty in a free and democratic society, much like the protected freedoms to choose where to live, to have union meetings, and the like. Ms. Clitheroe says the government's attempts to divest her of this fundamental right to choose where to work, and for what form of remuneration infringes her liberty rights without doing so in accordance with principles of fundamental justice.

73 Ontario takes the position Ms. Clitheroe's contractual rights to a pension are purely economic property rights. It says these property rights were deliberately excluded from protection under the Charter. Unlike the United States, whose constitution protects "life, liberty and property" our Canadian Charter protects only "life, liberty and security of the person". In addressing the exclusion of "property", Ontario relies on the work of constitutional expert Professor Hogg, who explains:

> The omission of property rights from s. 7 greatly reduces its scope. It means that s. 7 affords no guarantee of compensation or even of a fair procedure for the taking of property by government. It means that s. 7 affords no guarantee of fair treatment by courts, tribunals or officials with power over the purely economic interests of individuals or corporations. It also requires, as we have noticed in the earlier discussions of "liberty" and "security of the person", that those terms be interpreted as excluding economic liberty and economic security; otherwise, property, having been shut out of the front door, would enter by the back. [16]

74 Ontario points to various cases that support this interpretation. For example, in Siemens v. Manitoba (Attorney General) [17] the Supreme Court of Canada held that while section 7 protects certain fundamental life choices, those choices do not encompass purely economic interests, including the ability to generate business revenue by one's chosen means. The court refused to characterize an alleged right to operate video lottery terminals as such a fundamental life choice.

75 Similarly, in Walker v. Prince Edward Island [18] the Supreme Court of Canada upheld a ruling that section 7 does not extend to the right to exercise a chosen profession.

76 The most compelling case Ontario has referred to is Charles v. Canada (Attorney General) [19] There, the plaintiff, a judge of what was then called the Provincial Court, challenged legislation that would deprive him of previous pension contributions made to the Public Service Superannuation Plan upon the transfer of his pension to a new plan specifically established for Provincial Judges. There, the court held that section 7 was not engaged. The court characterized the interest in the pension plan as economic, and held that the liberty interest protected by section 7 does not include liberty or freedom of contract.

77 I agree with Ontario's position. I see Ms. Clitheroe's pension entitlement as a purely economic contractual right that is afforded no protection under section 7 of the Charter. Her right to a pension is simply deferred compensation. Salary or compensation (in whatever form they may take), are in my view a purely economic rights, and are not protected by section 7.

78 Having come to that conclusion, I need not address the question of whether any principles of fundamental justice have been infringed. As the court put it in Blencoe:

> before it is even possible to address the issue of whether ... s. 7 rights were infringed in a manner not in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice, on must first establish that the interest in respect of which the respondent asserted his claim falls within the ambit of s. 7 ... if no interest in ... life, liberty or security of the person is implicated, the s. 7 analysis stops there. [20]

79 Thus, having found Ms. Clitheroe's section 7 liberty rights have not been infringed, I need go no further in my analysis.

Disposition:

80 For these reasons, the action is dismissed. If Ms. Clitheroe and Hydro One [21] are unable to agree on the issue of their costs, they may make brief written submissions to me. Hydro One's are to be delivered within 14 days of the release of these reasons, and Ms. Clitheroe's within 14 days following.

Schedule "A" to Reasons for Decision in
Clitheroe v. Hydro One Inc.
Hydro One Inc. Directors and Officers Act, 2002 S.O. 2002, Chapter 3

Interpretation

Definitions

1. In this Act,

"designated officer" means a person employed by Hydro One Inc. who holds one of the following offices with Hydro One Inc. on June 4, 2002:

1. President and Chief Executive Officer.
2. Executive Vice President, Planning and Development.
3. Executive Vice President, Wires Operations.
4. Executive Vice President and General Counsel and Secretary.
5. Chief Financial Officer and Senior Vice President, Finance; ("dirigeant désigné")

"Minister" means the Minister of Environment and Energy or such other member of the Executive Council as may be assigned the administration of this Act under the Executive Council Act; ("ministre")

"subsidiary" has the same meaning as in the Business Corporations Act. ("filiale") 2002, c. 3, s. 1.

Board of Directors

Termination re directors of Hydro One Inc.

2. (1) This section applies to every person who holds office on June 3, 2002 as a member of the board of directors of Hydro One Inc. 2002, c. 3, s. 2 (1).

Termination of term of office

(2) The term of office of each member of the board of directors of Hydro One Inc. is hereby terminated, and the termination shall be deemed to have taken effect on June 4, 2002. 2002, c. 3, s. 2 (2).

Same, subsidiaries

(3) If a member of the board of directors of Hydro One Inc. is also a member of the board of directors of any subsidiary of Hydro One Inc. on June 3, 2002, his or her term of office as a member of the board of directors of the subsidiary is hereby terminated, and the termination shall be deemed to have taken effect on June 4, 2002. 2002, c. 3, s. 2 (3).

Payments

(4) A person is not entitled to any payment in respect of the termination of his or her term of office by subsection (2) or (3). 2002, c. 3, s. 2 (4).

Appointments to fill vacancies

3. (1) The Minister may make appointments to fill the vacancies created by subsections 2 (2) and (3), and may do so despite the articles and by-laws of the applicable corporation and despite any unanimous shareholders' agreement. 2002, c. 3, s. 3 (1).

Same

(2) The persons appointed by the Minister to fill those vacancies shall be deemed to have been appointed on June 4, 2002 to replace the persons whose term of office was terminated by subsections 2 (2) and (3). 2002, c. 3, s. 3 (2).

Term of office

(3) The persons appointed by the Minister hold office at the pleasure of the Minister, but their term of office expires no later than the end of the first annual meeting of shareholders of Hydro One Inc. or the subsidiary, as the case may be, that occurs after this Act receives Royal Assent. 2002, c. 3, s. 3 (3).

Other appointments to boards of directors

4. (1) The Minister may make appointments to the board of directors of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries, and may do so despite the articles and by-laws of the applicable corporation and despite any unanimous shareholders' agreement. 2002, c. 3, s. 4 (1).

Restrictions

(2) The Minister is not entitled to make appointments that would result in the membership of the board being greater than the number of members authorized by the articles and by-laws of the applicable corporation and by any unanimous shareholders' agreement. 2002, c. 3, s. 4 (2).

Filling other vacancies

(3) The Minister may make appointments to fill any vacancy on the board of directors of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries, and may do so despite the articles and by-laws of the applicable corporation and despite any unanimous shareholders' agreement. 2002, c. 3, s. 4 (3).

Term of office

(4) Subsection 3 (3) applies with respect to persons appointed under this section. 2002, c. 3, s. 4 (4).

Expiry of authority

(5) The Minister's authority to make appointments under this section expires at the end of the first annual meeting of shareholders of the applicable corporation that occurs after this Act receives Royal Assent. 2002, c. 3, s. 4 (5).

Additional power re board members

5. (1) The Minister may terminate the term of office of any member of a board of directors of a subsidiary of Hydro One Inc., and may do so despite the articles and by-laws of the subsidiary and despite any unanimous shareholders' agreement. 2002, c. 3, s. 5 (1).

Same

(2) The Minister may make appointments to fill vacancies created under subsection (1), and may do so despite the articles and by-laws of the applicable subsidiary and despite any unanimous shareholders' agreement. 2002, c. 3, s. 5 (2).

Term of office

(3) Subsection 3 (3) applies with respect to persons appointed under this section. 2002, c. 3, s. 5 (3).

Payment

(4) A person is not entitled to any payment in respect of the termination of his or her term of office under subsection (1). 2002, c. 3, s. 5 (4).

Expiry of authority

(5) The Minister's authority to make appointments under this section expires at the end of the first annual meeting of shareholders of the applicable subsidiary that occurs after this Act receives Royal Assent. 2002, c. 3, s. 5 (5).

Indemnification of board members

6. (1) Hydro One Inc. shall indemnify the members of its board of directors with respect to the matters described in section 136 of the Business Corporations Act. 2002, c. 3, s. 6 (1).

Same, subsidiaries

(2) Each subsidiary of Hydro One Inc. shall indemnify the board members appointed by the Minister in the same manner and to the same extent as it indemnifies other board members with respect to the matters described in section 136 of the Business Corporations Act. 2002, c. 3, s. 6 (2).

Application of Business Corporations Act

7. (1) Subsection 119 (9) of the Business Corporations Act does not apply with respect to persons appointed to a board of directors by the Minister under this Act. 2002, c. 3, s. 7 (1).

Vacancies on the board

(2) Section 124 of the Business Corporations Act does not apply with respect to Hydro One Inc. or a subsidiary of Hydro One Inc., as the case may be, until the end of the first annual meeting of shareholders of Hydro One Inc. or the subsidiary that occurs after this Act receives Royal Assent. 2002, c. 3, s. 7 (2).

Conflict

(3) This Act prevails over the Business Corporations Act. 2002, c. 3, s. 7 (3).

Designated Officers

Negotiations for new employment contracts

8. (1) The board of directors of Hydro One Inc. shall negotiate with each of the designated officers for a new employment contract that, in the opinion of the board, provides for a substantial reduction in the officer's remuneration and benefits. 2002, c. 3, s. 8 (1).

Restrictions replaced

(2) The restrictions imposed by sections 9 to 12 with respect to a designated officer cease to apply when Hydro One Inc. publishes a notice in The Ontario Gazette that it has entered into a new employment contract with the officer. 2002, c. 3, s. 8 (2).

Review of remuneration and benefits

(3) The board of directors of Hydro One Inc. shall conduct a review of the remuneration and benefits of its officers and shall ensure that the board of directors of each of its subsidiaries conducts a review of the remuneration and benefits of the officers of the subsidiary. 2002, c. 3, s. 8 (3).

Payments upon termination of office

9. (1) A designated officer is not entitled on or after January 1, 1999 to any payment in respect of the termination of his or her office as an officer. 2002, c. 3, s. 9 (1).

Same

(2) A designated officer who is a director of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries is not entitled on or after January 1, 1999 to any payment in respect of the termination of his or her term of office as a director. 2002, c. 3, s. 9 (2).

Payments upon termination of employment

10. (1) A designated officer is not entitled on or after January 1, 1999 to be paid compensation that exceeds the amount authorized by subsection (2) relating to the termination of his or her employment. 2002, c. 3, s. 10 (1).

Amount

(2) Until the designated officer enters into a new employment agreement and the notice required by section 8 is published, the amount of compensation is the amount determined in accordance with the employment standards legislation applicable to the officer. 2002, c. 3, s. 10 (2).

Payments upon resignation

11. A designated officer is not entitled on or after January 1, 1999 to any payment in respect of his or her resignation from office, from the board of directors of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries or from employment. 2002, c. 3, s. 11.

Pension and retirement income

12. (1) A designated officer is not entitled on or after January 1, 1999 to a pension or retirement income that exceeds the amount described in subsection (2). 2002, c. 3, s. 12 (1).

Amount

(2) The maximum amount of pension and other retirement income payable to or in respect of a designated officer is the amount of his or her pension, if any, provided by the Hydro One Pension Plan and retirement income, if any, provided by the unregistered supplementary plan,

(a) that provides benefits equal to the difference between the maximum pension benefits allowed under the Income Tax Act (Canada) and the benefits determined in accordance with the formula set out in the Hydro One Pension Plan; and

(b) that provides those benefits in respect of all members of the Hydro One Pension Plan whose level of earnings results in such a difference. 2002, c. 3, s. 12 (2).

Repayment of Excess Amounts

Prohibition re excess payments

13. (1) No person or entity shall pay an amount in respect of the termination of a person's term of office by subsection 2 (2) or (3). 2002, c. 3, s. 13 (1).

Same, designated officers

(2) No person or entity shall pay any amount to or in respect of a designated officer that exceeds the amount, if any, authorized by this Act,

(a) relating to the termination of his or her employment;

(b) in respect of his or her resignation from office, from the board of directors of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries or from employment;

(c) as pension or retirement income. 2002, c. 3, s. 13 (2).

Duty to repay

14. (1) If a person receives an amount after this Act receives Royal Assent that exceeds the amount, if any, authorized by this Act, the person shall repay the excess amount within six months after receiving it. 2002, c. 3, s. 14 (1).

Duty to repay amounts received before Royal Assent

(2) If a person received an amount on or after January 1, 1999 and before this Act receives Royal Assent that exceeds the amount, if any, authorized by this Act, the person shall repay the excess amount within six months after this Act receives Royal Assent. 2002, c. 3, s. 14 (2).

Debt owing to the Crown

(3) If the person does not repay the excess amount within the period specified by subsection (1) or (2), as the case may be, the excess amount shall be deemed to be a debt owing to the Crown. 2002, c. 3, s. 14 (3).

Rights, Claims and Immunity

Rights terminated

15. (1) Any contractual or other right of a person to receive compensation or any other payment relating to the termination of his or her term of office as a director of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries shall be deemed to have expired on June 4, 2002. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (1).

Same, designated officers who are directors

(2) Despite subsection (1), any contractual or other right of a person to receive compensation or any other payment relating to the termination of the term of office of a designated officer as a director of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries shall be deemed to have expired on January 1, 1999. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (2).

Same, designated officers as officers

(3) Any contractual or other right of a person to receive compensation or any other payment relating to the termination of a designated officer's office as officer shall be deemed to have expired on January 1, 1999. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (3).

Same, designated officers as employees

(4) Any contractual or other right of a person to receive compensation or any other payment relating to the termination of the employment of a designated officer shall be deemed to have expired on January 1, 1999. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (4).

Same, letter of credit

(5) Any obligation or requirement under a letter of credit or other financial instrument to make any payment to or on behalf of a director of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries whose term of office is terminated under this Act relating to the termination of his or her term of office shall be deemed to have expired on June 4, 2002. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (5).

Same, designated officers who are directors

(6) Despite subsection (5), any obligation or requirement under a letter of credit or other financial instrument to make any payment to or on behalf of a designated officer relating to the termination of his or her term of office as a director of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries shall be deemed to have expired on January 1, 1999. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (6).

Same, designated officers as officers

(7) Any obligation or requirement under a letter of credit or other financial instrument to make any payment to or on behalf of a designated officer relating to the termination of his or her office as officer shall be deemed to have expired on January 1, 1999. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (7).

Same, designated officers as employees

(8) Any obligation or requirement under a letter of credit or other financial instrument to make any payment to or on behalf of a designated officer relating to the termination of his or her employment shall be deemed to have expired on January 1, 1999. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (8).

Same

(9) Any obligation or requirement under a letter of credit or other financial instrument to make any payment to or on behalf of a designated officer relating to a pension or retirement income, other than pension and retirement income authorized by section 12, shall be deemed to have expired on January 1, 1999. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (9).

Claims, etc., nullified

(10) No person has any claim, demand or cause of action for compensation or any other payment relating to the termination of the term of office of a director of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (10).

Same

(11) No person has any claim, demand or cause of action for compensation or any other payment relating to the termination of employment of a designated officer or the termination of his or her office as an officer. 2002, c. 3, s. 15 (11).

Immunity

16. (1) No proceeding shall be commenced against the Crown, Hydro One Inc., a subsidiary of Hydro One Inc. or any other person relating to or resulting from any of the following matters:

1. The termination under this Act of the term of office of a member of the board of directors of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries.

2. The appointment of members of the board of directors of Hydro One Inc. or any of its subsidiaries by the Minister under this Act.

3. The restrictions imposed by sections 9 to 12 on compensation and other payments to or in respect of designated officers.

4. The prohibitions imposed by section 13.

5. The creation of the duty to repay an excess amount imposed by subsection 14 (1) or (2) or the deeming by subsection 14 (3) of an excess amount to be a debt owing to the Crown.

6. The termination of rights and obligations and other requirements and the nullification of a claim, demand or cause of action by section 15. 2002, c. 3, s. 16 (1).

Same

(2) Without limiting the generality of subsection (1), no application may be made for an order under section 248 of the Business Corporations Act in connection with any of the matters described in subsection (1). 2002, c. 3, s. 16 (2).

Same

(3) No damages, amount in lieu of damages or other amount is payable by the Crown, Hydro One Inc., a subsidiary of Hydro One Inc. or any other person for the termination of rights or of obligations and requirements by section 15. 2002, c. 3, s. 16 (3).

Collection of Debts Owing to the Crown

Lien, etc., on property

17. (1) Any amount that is a debt owing to the Crown under this Act by any person is, upon registration by the Minister in the proper land registry office of a notice claiming a lien and charge conferred by this section, a lien and charge on any interest the person has in the real property described in the notice. 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (1).

Lien on personal property

(2) Any amount that is a debt owing to the Crown under this Act by any person is, upon registration by the Minister with the registrar under the Personal Property Security Act of a notice claiming a lien and charge under this section, a lien and charge on any interest in personal property in Ontario owned or held at the time of registration or acquired afterwards by the person. 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (2).

Amounts included and priority

(3) The lien and charge conferred by subsection (1) or (2) is in respect of all amounts owing to the Crown under this Act by the person at the time of registration of the notice or any renewal of it and all amounts that afterwards become debts owing to the Crown under this Act by the person while the notice remains registered and, upon registration of a notice of lien and charge, the lien and charge has priority over,

(a) any perfected security interest registered after the notice is registered;

(b) any security interest perfected by possession after the notice is registered; and

(c) any encumbrance or other claim that is registered against or that otherwise arises and affects the person's property after the notice is registered. 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (3).

Lien effective

(4) A notice of lien and charge under subsection (2) is effective from the time assigned to its registration by the registrar or branch registrar and expires on the fifth anniversary of its registration unless a renewal notice of lien and charge is registered under this section before the end of the five-year period, in which case the lien and charge remains in effect for a further five-year period from the date the renewal notice is registered. 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (4).

Same

(5) Where any amount that is a debt owing to the Crown under this Act remains outstanding and unpaid at the end of the period, or its renewal, referred to in subsection (4), the Minister may register a renewal notice of lien and charge; the lien and charge remains in effect for a five-year period from the date the renewal notice is registered, until the amount is fully paid, and shall be deemed to be continuously registered since the initial notice of lien and charge was registered under subsection (2). 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (5).

Where person not registered owner

(6) Where a person has an interest in real property but is not shown as its registered owner in the proper land registry office,

(a) the notice to be registered under subsection (1) shall recite the interest of the person in the real property; and

(b) a copy of the notice shall be sent to the registered owner at the owner's address to which the latest notice of assessment under the Assessment Act has been sent. 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (6).

Secured party

(7) In addition to any other rights and remedies, if any amount owing to the Crown under this Act remains outstanding and unpaid, the Minister has, in respect of a lien and charge under subsection (2),

(a) all the rights, remedies and duties of a secured party under sections 17, 59, 61, 62, 63 and 64, subsections 65 (4), (5), (6) and (7) and section 66 of the Personal Property Security Act;

(b) a security interest in the collateral for the purpose of clause 63 (4) (c) of that Act; and

(c) a security interest in the personal property for the purposes of sections 15 and 16 of the Repair and Storage Liens Act, if it is an article as defined in that Act. 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (7).

Registration of documents

(8) A notice of lien and charge under subsection (2) or any renewal of it shall be in the form of a financing statement or a financing change statement as prescribed under the Personal Property Security Act and may be tendered for registration at a branch office established under Part IV of that Act, or by mail addressed to an address prescribed under that Act. 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (8).

Errors in documents

(9) A notice of lien and charge or any renewal thereof is not invalidated nor is its effect impaired by reason only of an error or omission in the notice or in its execution or registration, unless a reasonable person is likely to be materially misled by the error or omission. 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (9).

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (Canada) unaffected

(10) Subject to Crown rights provided under section 87 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (Canada), nothing in this section affects or purports to affect the rights and obligations of any person under that Act. 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (10).

Definition

(11) In this section,

"real property" includes fixtures and any interest of a person as lessee of real property. 2002, c. 3, s. 17 (11).

Recovery of amounts payable

18. (1) Upon default of payment by a person of any amount owing to the Crown under this Act,

(a) the Minister may bring an action for the recovery thereof in any court in which a debt or money demand of a similar amount may be collected, and every such action shall be brought and executed in and by the name of the Minister or his or her name of office and may be continued by his or her successor in office as if no change had occurred, and shall be tried without a jury; and

(b) the Minister may issue a warrant, directed to the sheriff for any area in which any property of the person is located or situate, for any amount that is a debt owing to the Crown under this Act by the person, together with interest thereon from the date of the issue of the warrant and the costs, expenses and poundage of the sheriff, and such warrant has the same force and effect as a writ of execution issued out of the Superior Court of Justice. 2002, c. 3, s. 18 (1).

Compliance of Minister to be proved by affidavit

(2) For the purpose of any proceeding taken under this Act, the facts necessary to establish compliance on the part of the Minister with sections 17 to 21 as well as the failure of any person to comply with the requirements of sections 17 to 21 shall, unless evidence to the contrary satisfactory to the court is adduced, be sufficiently proven in any court of law by affidavit of the Minister or of any officer of the Ministry of the Minister. 2002, c. 3, s. 18 (2).

Security

19. The Minister may, if he or she considers it advisable, accept security for the payment of a debt owing to the Crown under this Act by way of a mortgage or other charge of any kind upon the property of the person or of any other person, or by way of a guarantee of payment by another person. 2002, c. 3, s. 19.

Costs of enforcement

20. Where the Minister, in the course of obtaining payment of any amount that is a debt owing to the Crown under this Act, incurs reasonable costs and charges upon,

(a) registration of a notice of lien and charge under section 17;

(b) the bringing of an action for payment under clause 18 (1) (a); and

(c) the issuance and execution of a warrant referred to in clause 18 (1) (b) to the extent not recovered by the sheriff upon execution thereof, the costs and charges may be recovered from the person who owes the debt. 2002, c. 3, s. 20.

Costs of purchasing property

21. For the purpose of collecting a debt owing to the Crown under this Act by a person, the Minister may purchase or otherwise acquire any interest in the person's property that the Minister is given a right to acquire in legal proceedings or under a court order or that is offered for sale or redemption and may dispose of any interest so acquired in such manner as he or she considers reasonable. 2002, c. 3, s. 21.

Other remedies

22. The use of any of the remedies provided by sections 17 and 18 does not bar or affect any of the other remedies therein provided, and the remedies provided by this Act for the recovery or enforcement of the payment of any debt owing to the Crown under this Act are in addition to any other remedies existing by law, and no action or other proceeding taken in any way prejudices, limits or affects any lien, charge or priority existing under this Act or otherwise. 2002, c. 3, s. 22.

General

Information and reports

23. (1) The Minister may request Hydro One Inc., any of its subsidiaries and such other persons and entities the Minister considers appropriate to give him or her such information, including personal information, and reports as he or she considers necessary for the purpose of collecting debts owed to the Crown under this Act. 2002, c. 3, s. 23 (1).

Compliance

(2) A person or entity who receives a request from the Minister for information or a report shall comply with the request. 2002, c. 3, s. 23 (2).

Authorization

(3) The Minister may directly or indirectly collect personal information and use it for the purpose of collecting debts owed to the Crown under this Act. 2002, c. 3, s. 23 (3).

24. Omitted (provides for repeal of this Act). 2002, c. 3, s. 24.

25. Omitted (provides for coming into force of provisions of this Act). 2002, c. 3, s. 25.

26. Omitted (enacts short title of this Act). 2002, c. 3, s. 26.

Action dismissed.

Footnotes

* Additional reasons at Clitheroe v. Hydro One Inc. (2009), 2009 CarswellOnt 3881 (Ont. S.C.J.).

1 (1908), 18 O.L.R. 275 (Ont. K.B.) at 279, per Riddell J.

2 Hydro One Inc. Directors and Officers Act, 2002, S.O. 2002 c.3 [attached as Schedule A]

3 Constitution Act, 1982, Being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (U.K.), 1982, c. 11, Part I, Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

4 Pursuant to section 109 of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43

5 R.S.C. 1985 c.1 (5th Supp.) as amended

6 Exhibit 3, "Defendant's Brief of Admitted Documents" tab 12

7 [1999] 3 S.C.R. 199 (S.C.C.) at paragraphs 41 and 46

8 Authorson (Litigation Guardian of) v. Canada (Attorney General), [2003] 2 S.C.R. 40 (S.C.C.). There, the vulnerable group was a group of disabled war veterans.

9 Wells v Newfoundland op cit.; see also Attorney General v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel Ltd., [1920] A.C. 508 (U.K. H.L.); Dikranian c. Québec (Procureur général), [2005] 3 S.C.R. 530 (S.C.C.)

10 R. v. Morgentaler, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 30 (S.C.C.)

11 New Brunswick (Minister of Health & Community Services) v. G. (J.), [1999] 3 S.C.R. 46 (S.C.C.)

12 [1995] 1 S.C.R. 315 (S.C.C.)

13 Op cit, paragraph 119

14 Blencoe v. British Columbia (Human Rights Commission), [2000] 2 S.C.R. 307 (S.C.C.)

15 [1997] 3 S.C.R. 844 (S.C.C.)

16 Peter Hogg, Constitutional law of Canada, 5th ed. Supplemented (loose-leaf ed.) Scarborough:Carswell, 2007) at 47-17 to 47-18 and note 84

17 (2002), [2003] 1 S.C.R. 6 (S.C.C.)

18 [1995] 2 S.C.R. 407 (S.C.C.)

19 (Ont. Gen. Div.), affirmed (Ont. C.A.)

20 Blencoe, op cit. paragraph 47

21 As intervenor, the Attorney General for Ontario advises it seeks no costs.

Competition Tribunal Tribunal de la Concurrence

Reference: The Commissioner of Competition v. Premier Career Management Group et al., 2008 Comp. Trib. 18
File No.: CT-2007-006
Registry Document No.: 0152

IN THE MATTER of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34, as amended;

AND IN THE MATTER of an inquiry pursuant to subparagraph 10(1)(b)(ii) of the Competition Act relating to certain marketing practices of Premier Career Management Group Corp. and Minto Roy;

AND IN THE MATTER of an application by the Commissioner of Competition for an order under section 74.1 of the Competition Act.

B E T W E E N:

The Commissioner of Competition
(applicant)

and

Premier Career Management Group Corp. and Minto Roy
(respondents)

Dates of hearing: 20080414 to 20080418, 20080421 to 20080423, 20080429 and 20080501
Presiding Judicial Member: Simpson J. (Chairperson)
Date of Reasons and Order: July 15, 2008
Reasons and Order signed by: Madam Justice Sandra J. Simpson

REASONS FOR ORDER AND ORDER DISMISSING THE APPLICATION UNDER SECTION 74.1 OF THE COMPETITION ACT

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. A BRIEF SUMMARY

[1] The Commissioner of Competition (the "Commissioner") alleges that the Respondents, Premier Career Management Group ("PCMG") and Minto Roy have engaged in reviewable conduct pursuant to paragraph 74.01(1)(a) of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34 (the "Act") by making oral representations to the public that are false or misleading in a material respect.

[2] By way of remedy, the Commissioner asks for a cease-and-desist order. She also asks the Tribunal to issue an order requiring:

(i) PCMG and Minto Roy to pay administrative monetary penalties of $100,000.00 and $50,000.00 respectively;
(ii) PCMG to publish a correction notice in both the Vancouver Sun and on the PCMG website; and
(iii) Minto Roy to read the correction notice at the beginning of his radio show.

[3] For the reasons described below, the Tribunal has concluded that Minto Roy and PCMG have made material misrepresentations as alleged. However, because those representations were not made to the public as required by the Act, no order was made.

II. THE PROCEDURAL HISTORY

[4] See Schedule A.

III. THE PARTIES

[5] The applicant is the Commissioner of Competition. She is appointed by the Governor in Council under section 7 of the Act and is responsible for its enforcement and administration.

[6] The Respondent, PCMG, is incorporated pursuant to the laws of British Columbia and commenced operations in October of 2004. It is engaged primarily in the business of providing individuals with career management services and career counselling. PCMG was not represented by counsel at the hearing.

[7] The Respondent, Minto Roy, is the sole shareholder and only director of PCMG. He was self-represented throughout the hearing but retained counsel to assist him and later PCMG with the preparation of final written argument. They also had counsel at the time they filed their Response, made disclosure and filed their witness statements.

IV. THE REPRESENTATIONS

[8] The representations at issue were allegedly made orally by Minto Roy and certain PCMG Senior Career Consultants during meetings with prospective clients. The Commissioner says that the representations were false or misleading in that they conveyed the general impression that:

> (1) The Respondents screened prospective clients and accepted only those whom they considered to be highly qualified (the "Screening Representation").
>
> (2) The Respondents had an extensive network of personal contacts with senior executives at companies that were hiring. PCMG clients could use the contacts to arrange interviews or PCMG would arrange interviews on the clients' behalf (the "Contacts Representation").
>
> (3) Prospective PCMG clients would almost certainly find work quickly with its help, typically within 90 days, and their new positions would have salaries and benefits equal to or better than those associated with their previous positions (the "90-day/Good Job Representation").

[9] These representations will be described collectively as the "Representations".

V. THE EVIDENCE

[10] The parties agreed to introduce their evidence in chief in written statements. Eleven witnesses gave evidence on behalf of the Commissioner. They included nine former PCMG clients, one former PCMG Senior Career Consultant and a Senior Competition Law Officer employed by the Competition Bureau.

[11] Six witnesses testified on behalf of the Respondents including four former PCMG clients, one PCMG Senior Career Consultant (who is now a Career Coach) and the Respondent, Minto Roy.

VI. THE RESPONDENTS' BUSINESS

[12] PCMG has three divisions. PCMG Canada is the career coaching and career management division. Its clients are provided with customized career management services. They include an analysis of the client's skills, personality and aptitudes; assistance with the preparation of a high quality résumé focusing on the client's achievements; preparation of a distinctive cover letter; and help with networking, preparation for interviews and negotiating compensation packages. It is alleged that the Representations were made by Senior Career Consultants who worked for this division of PCMG.

[13] PCMG also has a recruitment division called "Careers Today". It functions as a headhunter and operates a website on which it posts job openings. The third division, "PCMG Executive", is a human resources consulting division which provides leadership management training.

[14] Approximately 60-70% of PCMG's revenue is earned by PCMG Canada, 25% of its revenue comes from Careers Today and 5% is generated by PCMG Executive.

[15] Minto Roy and PCMG's Senior Career Consultants were responsible for marketing PCMG Canada's services and securing contracts. Career Coaches (also described as Strategists) worked with clients after contracts were signed.

[16] The following Senior Career Consultants were mentioned in evidence:

- Ted Paxton – testified for the Respondents
- Joe Lapushinsky – did not testify
- Ravi Puri – did not testify
- Sean Hamilton – did not testify
- Steve Wills – testified for the Commissioner

[17] The following Career Coaches were mentioned in evidence:

- Ted Paxton – testified for the Respondents
- Tom Locke – did not testify
- Irene Mitchelson – did not testify
- Norma Axford-Couch – did not testify
- Alana Fero – did not testify
- Karen Cunningham – did not testify
- Karen Shankey – did not testify

[18] PCMG used a variety of techniques to recruit prospective clients. They included newspaper advertisements, articles and advertisements in the Canadian Immigrant magazine, Minto Roy's weekly radio show and postings on the Careers Today website. However, it is noteworthy that none of these media were the source of the Representations.

[19] PCMG also attracted many prospective clients by inviting unsuccessful applicants for positions posted by Careers Today to meet with a Senior Career Consultant.

[20] Once prospective clients were recruited, the marketing of PCMG's services usually involved two meetings with a Senior Career Consultant. The initial meeting (the "First Meeting") was typically an hour long discussion about the prospective client's career history, current status, current job search activities and career objectives. Clients were then provided with an overview of PCMG's career management services. Towards the end of the First Meeting, potential clients were invited to return for a second meeting (the "Second Meeting"). They were encouraged to bring their spouses or "significant others" to the Second Meeting.

[21] During that meeting, which also lasted approximately one hour, the Senior Career Consultant provided a step-by-step description of PCMG's services. The fees and payment options including financing were discussed and the prospective client was presented with PCMG's contract for signature.

[22] Both the First and the Second Meetings were held in private in the offices of Minto Roy or a Senior Career Consultant. Those offices were initially located on the 29th floor of the TD Bank Tower in downtown Vancouver. They were luxurious and had a beautiful view. PCMG then moved to 1199 West Hastings. Those offices were described as average but they still had the beautiful view.

PCMG's Program

[23] PCMG clients were guided through the PCMG career management process (the "Program"). It involved three phases which are described as follows in PCMG's contract:

Phase I - Preparation

1. Conduct Functional Self-Analysis and Objective Setting;
2. Assess Client's personality type indicators and help Client evaluate workplace cultures where Client will best succeed;
3. Establish realistic short-term goals and identify suitable positions;
4. Explore career options and define target markets and industries;
5. Develop effective resume presentation and other collateral materials;
6. Instruct and activate Client in utilizing PCMG online database resources;
7. Develop a marketing plan between Client and Strategist to generate appropriate referral and job interviews;
8. Prepare Client to strategically interact in networking events, referral meetings, interviews and salary negotiations.

[my emphasis]

Phase II – Managing the Market Campaign

1. Provide one-on-one consultation with Client's Professional Development Strategist to evaluate and monitor the Client's overall marketing plan, strategy and progress;
2. Review and assess job offers;
3. Advise Client on effective negotiation of salary and benefits.

Phase III – Plan for the Future

1. Conduct follow-up review approximately 90 days after starting new position to develop intra-company advancement toward long-range goals;
2. Provide consultation, as needed, concerning intra-company development, promotions and salary review related to career advancement;
3. Re-activate the marketing campaign in the event of a job loss or need to change employers, career fields or industries.

[24] This description of the Program is from the most recent version of the PCMG contract. However, Ms. McClean, Ms. Threatful and Messrs. de Vaal, Nickson, Turenne and Warren, who all testified for the Commissioner, signed earlier versions of the contract in which Phase I, point 6 read:

> 6. Distribute your confidential profile in PCMG's Sourcebook to companies and recruiters in the local market area [Minto Roy acknowledged in his testimony that a confidential profile was a résumé.]

[25] When queried by the Chairperson as to whether or not there was an "s" missing at the end of the word referral found in Phase I, point 7 of the PCMG contract, Mr. Roy indicated that it could be read with or without the "s". This meant that Point 7 could have been understood to say that PCMG would work with a client to "generate appropriate referrals and job interviews".

VII. THE COMMISSIONER'S WITNESSES

[26] The evidence of the nine former PCMG clients who testified for the Commissioner will be described under the following headings:

(a) Backgrounds
(b) Encountering PCMG
(c) The Screening Representation
(d) The Contacts Representation
(e) The 90-day/Good Job Representation
(f) Signing PCMG's Contracts
(g) The Confidential Plan and
(h) The PCMG Program.

[27] The Commissioner also called Steve Wills, who was formerly a Senior Career Consultant with PCMG. His evidence will be considered separately. The evidence of the Senior Competition Law Officer dealt with Minto Roy's radio show transcripts and PCMG's corporate history. It is not further discussed.

(a) Backgrounds

[28] William Warren holds a master's degree in economics from McMaster University. He testified that he was born in 1957 and that, at the time of the hearing, he worked as a management consultant.

[29] Tanya Threatful holds a business administration diploma from Barkel Business College in British Columbia. At the time of the hearing, she was 37 years old and was employed as a customer service representative for Speedy Glass in Burnaby, British Columbia.

[30] Marc Turenne has a certification in electronics from Red River Community College and has also studied business management and human resources management at the British Columbia Institute of Technology. When he testified, he was working as a sales representative for Precision Sound.

[31] Bruce Nickson testified that he had studied at the University of Dalhousie for four years but had not obtained his bachelor of arts degree because he "didn't pick it up". When he gave evidence, he was working as a program manager and was 56 years of age.

[32] Johan de Vaal is a Professional Engineer. He obtained a master's degree in engineering from the Cranfield Institute of Technology in the United Kingdom. At the time of the hearing, Mr. de Vaal was sixty-one years old and was employed as a senior project manager for Sandwell Engineering Inc.

[33] Malia McClean obtained a bachelor's degree from Simon Fraser University with a major in psychology. At the time of the hearing, she was 31 years old and worked as a residential support worker with the Children's Foundation of British Columbia.

[34] René Navarro-Gonzalez was born in Bolivia in 1951 and immigrated to Canada in 2004. He has an MBA from the University of Santiago de Chile, a post graduate degree in human resources management from Yale University and a juris doctorate degree in international labour law from the University of San Andres in La Paz, Bolivia. At the time of the hearing, he was working in Iceland for a B.C. company which manufactured airport equipment.

[35] Christopher Graham holds a two-year golf management diploma from the Professional Golfers Career College in Murrieta, California and a business diploma from Lethbridge Community College. At the time of the hearing, Mr. Graham was 37 years old and was employed as a special events coordinator for a children's charity. He had previously worked as a golf professional.

[36] Raffaele Rocca is Irish and came to Canada in November of 2006. At the time of the hearing, he was 28 years old and unemployed. He has a degree in marketing from the University of Limerick, and diplomas in business studies, computer applications and communications from HSI College in Ireland.

(b) Encountering PCMG

[37] William Warren submitted his cover letter and résumé in response to a PCMG internet advertisement. He was then contacted by PCMG to schedule a meeting to discuss the material he had submitted. At that time, he was working as an independent consultant. He had a First Meeting with Mr. Roy on December 15, 2004.

[38] Tanya Threatful was told in November 2004 that the cosmetic clinic where she was employed would be downsized and that she would be terminated at the end of the year. After she posted her résumé on several websites, she received a phone call from Joe Lapushinsky asking whether she was interested in PCMG's services. She had a First Meeting with him in late November 2004.

[39] Marc Turenne was contacted by PCMG in October of 2004 after he had posted his résumé on a website. Mr. Turenne indicated that he was unemployed and that his funds were running out.

[40] Bruce Nickson testified that he received a call from PCMG after having submitted his résumé and had a First Meeting with Sean Hamilton on December 13, 2004. At the time, he was unemployed. He stated that finding a job was an urgent matter.

[41] Johan de Vaal submitted his résumé to PCMG in response to a PCMG advertisement in the Vancouver Sun. He was subsequently called by PCMG to set up a First Meeting. Although he had been unemployed for approximately 7 months, he did not start his job search until September because he had received a severance payment from his former employer.

[42] Malia McClean submitted her résumé in response to an internet job posting on Monster in early June 2005. Thereafter, a PCMG employee contacted her and advised her that she had not made the short list for the position and indicated that PCMG was interested in speaking with her regarding other opportunities. At that time, Ms. McClean urgently needed employment.

[43] René Navarro-Gonzalez became interested in PCMG after he read an advertisement in the December 2005 issue of The Canadian Immigrant magazine. He called PCMG at a time when he was anxious to secure a position. The entries in PCMG's client file show that Mr. Navarro-Gonzalez sent his résumé to PCMG before his First Meeting.

[44] Christopher Graham contacted PCMG at the end of May 2007 in response to a job posting on the PCMG website. Mr. Graham submitted his résumé and was contacted by PCMG several days later. By then, his employment insurance payments were about to stop and he needed a job.

[45] Raffaele Rocca submitted his résumé to PCMG after seeing its website on the internet. Thereafter, he was contacted by Ravi Puri to schedule a First Meeting. At that time, Mr. Rocca was looking for assistance because he had found that, without previous employment in Canada, it was difficult to find a position. His First Meeting with Ravi Puri took place in December 2006.

(c) The Screening Representation

[46] William Warren testified that Minto Roy said during their First Meeting that "PCMG doesn't just take anybody and they only take high-calibre candidates that they can work with."

[47] Tanya Threatful testified that during her First Meeting, Mr. Lapushinsky told her that "PCMG doesn't take on just anyone as a client" and that "they look for people with certain credentials and a certain level of professionalism and accomplishment". She also testified that Mr. Lapushinsky indicated that he had seen her résumé on the Monster website and felt that she might be a good candidate for the Program. According to Ms. Threatful, the First Meeting was all about whether or not she qualified for PCMG's Program. Her background, skills and education were all discussed.

[48] Ms. Threatful and her boyfriend then attended a Second Meeting with Minto Roy in his office. She was impressed with his corner suite which she described as "huge" and "glamorous" and decorated with pictures of Mr. Roy and well-known people in the city. During the Second Meeting, Mr. Roy told her that she "had been carefully selected and screened" and that this was why she was meeting with him.

[49] Marc Turenne indicated that Minto Roy told him that part of the reason for the First Meeting was to "see how presentable he was". Mr. Roy said that, if he did not feel that he could get him a job in 8 to 10 weeks, he would not accept him as a client.

[50] Bruce Nickson indicated that after the First Meeting, Minto Roy called him to congratulate him about being selected to enter the Program. Mr. Nickson's impression was that not everyone was eligible to become a PCMG client.

[51] Johan de Vaal said that Minto Roy told him that PCMG personnel were "selective about who they took on as clients". Mr. Roy also indicated that he was well qualified for the types of positions PCMG was "looking to fill". Mr. de Vaal testified that he was flattered by Mr. Roy's comments.

[52] Malia McClean - The Commissioner does not allege that the Respondents made the Screening Representation to Ms. McClean.

[53] René Navarro-Gonzalez indicated that Minto Roy told him that PCMG was very selective about its clients and that PCMG was accepting him because of his qualifications. Mr. Navarro-Gonzalez further testified that Mr. Roy stated that PCMG only allowed professional and serious people to become clients.

[54] Christopher Graham – The Commissioner does not allege that the Respondents made the Screening Representation to Mr. Graham.

[55] Raffaele Rocca stated that, during the First Meeting, Ravi Puri told him that PCMG only selected people it found suitable as to do otherwise would reflect poorly on PCMG. Mr. Rocca further indicated that he felt that he was going through some sort of screening process, given the nature of the questions asked by Mr. Puri.

(d) The Contacts Representation

[56] William Warren stated that, during his Second Meeting on December 20, 2004, Minto Roy used his arm to gesture toward his office window with its view of downtown Vancouver (the "Sweeping Gesture") and said that he was well connected to the business community in British Columbia and that PCMG had "many links to top decision makers and leading employers". Mr. Roy specifically indicated he had a strong relationship with Bell Canada and a contact at London Drugs.

[57] Tanya Threatful testified that she was informed of Minto Roy's contacts during her Second Meeting with him on November 26, 2004. He told her that PCMG was unlike other career management businesses because of his personal ties and contacts in the corporate world. He stated that he had relationships with people in the city who didn't advertise job openings and who relied on his recommendations.

[58] She also testified that Minto Roy made the Sweeping Gesture and said: "Do you ever wonder how anyone – there's so many places in all these buildings – how any of these people get their positions? All of those types of places come through people like me and my hard work in building relationships with a lot of these people."

[59] Marc Turenne said that Minto Roy told him that he "could pick up the phone and call any number of companies around the city and speak to decision – key decision makers" and that "those were the people that [they] had to get me in front of". He also testified that Mr. Roy told him that he would set up interviews for him with those decision makers.

[60] Bruce Nickson testified that Minto Roy assured him that PCMG had many contacts and that they would lead to job interviews.

[61] Johan de Vaal stated that during his First Meeting on December 15, 2004, Minto Roy indicated that PCMG had "links to the business community" and that PCMG's services would include providing him with "contact to senior officials in companies looking for key people" just like him. Mr. de Vaal expected recommendations. He further testified that in the Second Meeting, Mr. Roy repeated that PCMG had links with senior level contacts in companies that were hiring.

[62] Malia McClean stated that Ted Paxton indicated that PCMG had a purchased database. He said that it listed thousands of jobs to which she would have access as a PCMG client. Mr. Paxton also told Ms. McClean that he could set up so many interviews in her field of interest that she would be in a position to pick and choose the jobs she wanted. It was Ms. McClean's understanding that the database was the main source of PCMG's contacts.

[63] René Navarro-Gonzalez testified that during the First Meeting he was told by Minto Roy that PCMG had an extensive network of contacts with profitable companies across Canada. He was also told that PCMG would arrange interviews for him. He further stated that, during the First Meeting, Mr. Roy picked up the phone and called the Vice President of Bombardier to set up a date for an interview. Mr. Navarro-Gonzalez said that Mr. Roy made similar representations about his contacts during the Second Meeting.

[64] Christopher Graham stated that, during the First Meeting, Minto Roy told him that PCMG "talked, knew and worked with a lot of high ranking executives". He understood that PCMG would market his name to these high-ranking executives and that he would be provided with their names so that he could arrange interviews.

[65] Raffaele Rocca indicated that during the First Meeting, Ravi Puri told him that jobs advertised on the internet and in print media actually represented only 20% of the jobs available in Canada. He also said that PCMG had access to the remaining 80% unadvertised job market through its network of contacts in industries in B.C. and Canada. Mr. Puri used the expression "hidden job market" to describe the unadvertised market. He said that PCMG would put him in contact with the decision makers in hiring companies and would set up interviews.

(e) The 90-day/Good Job Representation

[66] William Warren testified that Minto Roy said that he believed that PCMG's senior level contacts would lead Mr. Warren to a new job within 90 days. Mr. Roy also told Mr. Warren that he would have no problem finding a position for him with a salary of approximately $100,000.00.

[67] Tanya Threatful stated that Minto Roy advised her that "he felt that there would be no problem finding [her] a position paying $20,000 to $30,000 more than any of [her] previous jobs, with benefits and stock options, within 90 days". He also indicated that, in the past, she had been underpaid.

[68] Marc Turenne said that Minto Roy told him that he should have no problem finding a position that paid as much or more than his previous job within 8 to 10 weeks from the start of the Program.

[69] Bruce Nickson testifed that, during the Second Meeting, Minto Roy told him that "he would have no problem finding [him] a job within 6-10 weeks" and that "the new position would offer a salary of at least $60,000 per year".

[70] Johan de Vaal stated that, during the First Meeting, Minto Roy told him that through PCMG contacts, he could expect to find a senior position, at a competitive salary, within 90 days. Mr. Roy also indicated that it would not be difficult for Mr. de Vaal to find a position at his previous salary.

[71] Malia McClean said that, during the First Meeting, Ted Paxton assured her that she would have a job within three months. During the Second Meeting, he repeated that she would have no problem getting a job within three months and added that she could expect to earn between $35,000 and $40,000 annually.

[72] René Navarro-Gonzalez stated that, during both the First and the Second Meetings, Minto Roy guaranteed that he would have a job within 90 days with a minimum salary of $75,000.

[73] Christopher Graham testified that Minto Roy said that "most of their clients were successful in finding work after 60 to 90 days into [the] program". Mr. Graham further testified that he expected to be such a client.

[74] Raffaele Rocca indicated that Ravi Puri advised him that the Program was a 60 to 90 day process and that he could expect to find a job in that period that paid $60,000 per year.

(f) Signing PCMG's Contracts

[75] William Warren was provided with a copy of PCMG's contract at the Second Meeting. He indicated that he wanted to discuss it with his wife and Mr. Roy gave it to him to take home. Mr. Warren signed the contract on December 22, 2004 and paid $6,377.20.

[76] Tanya Threatful testified that during the Second Meeting she told Minto Roy that she could not afford the Program. He therefore suggested that she pay a retainer of $2,160.00 and the balance when she became employed. He estimated that she would have a new position in 30-60 days.

[77] Mr. Roy then presented her with a contract to read and sign. She read the contract but understood it to be only an outline of the structure of the Program.

[78] Marc Turenne stated that Minto Roy insisted that he sign the contract immediately following the First Meeting because the job market was going to wind down after Christmas. Mr. Turenne said that, although he felt Mr. Roy was creating a sense of urgency to motivate him to act quickly, he was deterred by the cost. However, after searching for a job on his own, he returned to PCMG, paid $5,200.00 and signed a contract on December 7, 2004.

[79] During his cross-examination, Mr. Turenne said the following about Mr. Roy's marketing approach "[…] your presentation is full of vagaries; you talk about the companies out there, the contacts out there, the salary similar or higher than what you are earning. Everything that you presented to me was vagaries but very tempting vagaries […]".

[80] Bruce Nickson entered into an agreement with PCMG on December 15, 2004. He had an opportunity to review the contract before signing it. He was charged $5,300.00.

[81] Johan de Vaal was presented with the contract during the Second Meeting on December 20, 2004. Mr. de Vaal felt pushed to enter into an agreement with PCMG. He advised Mr. Roy that he would like to think about it over the Christmas break but Mr. Roy insisted that time was of the essence since many companies were interviewing over the holiday period.

[82] Mr. de Vaal read the contract and signed it at the end of the Second Meeting. He paid $6,377.20.

[83] When asked during the hearing if there was anything in the contract that could be interpreted as meaning that PCMG would provide him with referrals to people who were hiring, Mr. de Vaal stated that points 6 and 7 in Phase I of his contract could be interpreted in that manner. They read:

> 6. Distribute your confidential profile in PCMG's Sourcebook to companies and recruiters in the local market area;
> 7. Develop a marketing plan between you and the advisor to generate appropriate referral and job interviews;

[84] Malia McClean testified that she told Mr. Paxton at her Second Meeting that she wanted to think about PCMG's services before signing a contract. Mr. Paxton responded that the deal would be off if she left the office without signing. Ms. McClean and her mother then read the contract. Ms. McClean recalled telling Ted Paxton that the contract was "fairly skeleton" in that it did not embrace all the things they had talked about during the First and Second Meetings. Ms. McClean said that Ted Paxton described the contract as merely a "basic understanding" of the services offered.

[85] René Navarro-Gonzalez was presented with the contract at the end of his Second Meeting on January 12, 2006. He read the contract before signing it and was concerned with the following terms:

> Client acknowledges and agrees that neither PCMG, nor any representative of PCMG, has represented or implied to Client that PCMG is an employment or placement agency.
>
> Further, Client acknowledges and agrees that PCMG has not, nor has any representative of PCMG, induced Client to enter into this engagement by implication, representation or guaranteeing to Client:
> […]
> (b) any verbal promises that are not part of the written agreement.

[86] Mr. Navarro-Gonzalez asked Minto Roy why these provisions were in the contract and was told they were there to protect PCMG from tax liability. Mr. Navarro-Gonzalez also stated that Mr. Roy advised him that PCMG normally charged between $15,000 and $20,000 for its services but was willing to charge him less because of his financial situation. Mr. Navarro-Gonzalez paid PCMG $6,377.20.

[87] Christopher Graham signed a contract with PCMG during his Second Meeting on May 31, 2007. He felt pressured to enter into an agreement because Minto Roy indicated to him that senior level executives would be away for the months of July and August and that, if he did not sign immediately, it would take him longer to find a suitable position.

[88] Mr. Graham did not read the contract. He signed it based on what he was told during the First and Second Meetings. Minto Roy handed the contract to Mr. Graham with the first page flipped back. This meant that the second page was open to sign. The fee was $5,151.20.

[89] Raffaele Rocca did not sign the contract at the end of the Second Meeting in December of 2006 because he could not pay the fee. Ravi Puri said that he could come back to PCMG at a later date. Mr. Rocca returned and signed a contract on June 18, 2007.

(g) The Confidential Plan

[90] Shortly after signing PCMG contracts, clients were asked to answer questions posed in a PCMG document entitled "Confidential Plan for Achievement" (the "Confidential Plan"). Of the ten questions listed, only two are relevant for present purposes. They are:

> Question 8
>
> Were you guaranteed any specific interviews with specific companies, salary, or time frame to obtain a new position or promotion?
>
> Question 10
>
> Were any verbal promises made to you that are not part of the written agreement?

[91] William Warren answered Question 8 and Question 10 in the negative. In cross-examination, he stated that he had not been promised specific interviews.

[92] Tanya Threatful answered "No" to Question 8. In cross-examination, she stated that she had answered no because she had completed this form after meeting with Ms. Axford-Couch and her answers meant that Ms. Axford-Couch had never made promises to her about specific interviews, salaries or timeframes to obtain a new position.

[93] Ms. Threatful also testified that, after she complained about PCMG's services, she received a letter from Mr. Roy's lawyer pointing to the Confidential Plan to justify PCMG's rejection of her complaints.

[94] Marc Turenne gave no evidence on this issue.

[95] Bruce Nickson answered "No" to Questions 8 and 10. He admitted that no promises were made regarding specific companies or specific interviews.

[96] Johan de Vaal completed his Confidential Plan and answered "No" to Questions 8 and 10. He was of the opinion that there were no inconsistencies between the verbal promises and PCMG's contract.

[97] Malia McClean answered both Question 8 and Question 10 in the negative. However, in her comments on the Confidential Plan, Ms. McClean stated as follows:

> No guarantees were made about specific interviews or salaries, but I was assured that job interviews in a salary range of $38,000 to $45,000 could be expected within the timeframe of 1-100 days.

[98] When queried as to why she answered Question 10 in the negative, Ms. McClean testified that she did not recall answering no and that if she were asked at this point, she would change her answer.

[99] René Navarro-Gonzalez answered "Yes" to Question 8 and "No" to Question 10. Mr. Navarro-Gonzalez further testified that Mr. Roy guaranteed him a job within 90 days.

[100] Raffaele Rocca answered Question 10 in the negative and provided the following answer for Question 8:

> I was made no guarantees but I was advised that with my qualifications and experience that I should be successful in getting a suitable position to best reflect my talents and experience.

[101] Christopher Graham answered "no" to Question 8 because no specific company names, names of executives, salary or timeframes were provided to him. He also answered "no" to Question 10.

[102] Steve Wills testified that PCMG's clients were routinely encouraged to answer questions 8 and 10 in the negative because, if problems later arose, the answers on the Confidential Plan would be used as a basis for rejecting clients' complaints. PCMG would question how a client could be dissatisfied with its services if he or she had provided positive feedback.

(h) The PCMG Program

[103] William Warren worked with Ms. Fero as his Career Coach. He met with her in December 2004 and January 2005. These meetings were devoted to strengthening his résumé, writing cover letters, networking and homework assignments. When Mr. Warren asked Ms. Fero about the promised contacts, she provided only vague responses and said that she would talk about them with Mr. Roy.

[104] At one point, Mr. Warren asked Ms. Fero about PCMG's contacts at Bell Canada because he wished to apply for a position with that company. After some discussion, he received an email from Minto Roy providing him with a name of a Bell Canada employee and an indication that she was a senior decision maker. However, when contacted, the employee advised Mr. Warren that she could not help him and he was later referred to another Bell employee. That individual, a manager, advised Mr. Warren that his initial contact had been a low-level employee in the Human Resources Department and that the position he sought had been filled.

[105] In January 2005, Mr. Warren attended a group networking meeting with several other PCMG clients (the "Networking Seminar"). Clients were encouraged to exchange contact information and share leads. Mr. Warren stated that the clients who attended the Networking Seminar later met to discuss their job search progress and eventually their dissatisfaction with PCMG's services.

[106] On March 27, 2005, in a letter to Minto Roy, several PCMG clients asked for a meeting to discuss their dissatisfaction (the "March Letter"). William Waren, Tanya Threatful, Marc Turenne, Bruce Nickson, and Johan de Vaal were among the signatories to the letter. It read, in part, as follows:

> We, the undersigned, request a meeting to discuss our dissatisfaction with the services of PCMG. When each of us initially met with you to set up career counselling, you indicated very strongly that PCMG had extensive 'links to the corporate world', and could provide inside contacts at senior levels to most of the key companies in Vancouver. We recognize that you made no promises of actually securing positions for us, but for every one of us, it was your claim to these 'corporate links' that was the key factor in our decision to hand over several thousand dollars. PCMG has completely failed to deliver on these claims, thereby negating any benefit to us as clients.

[107] A meeting between the signatories and Minto Roy took place on April 7, 2005 (the "April Meeting"). However, Mr. Roy refused to negotiate with them collectively and said that he would respond to each client individually.

[108] Mr. Warren filed a claim against PCMG in the Small Claims Court of British Columbia ("Small Claims Court") and a complaint with the Better Business Bureau. The Small Claims Court decision in William Warren v. Premier Career Management Group Corp. and Minto Roy was issued on March 8, 2007 (the "Warren Decision"). Justice Pendleton ordered PCMG to pay Mr. Warren $5,377.20 plus certain fees. The Court held that Mr. Warren was not entitled to a full refund because he had received a benefit worth $1,000.00 from PCMG's Program.

[109] Tanya Threatful started the Program in December 2004. She met with her Career Coach, Norma Axford-Couch, five times in December 2004 and early January 2005. Each time she was asked to complete a personality test.

[110] In December 2004, Ms. Threatful was approached about a position as regional manager of a company called Mega Hair. She said that Ms. Axford-Couch and Minto Roy told her not to respond to the offer until she had completed the Program. Mr. Roy told her that "he knew the owner and his daughter and that he could call on [her] behalf at a later stage to negotiate on [her] behalf". He also said that he knew that the salary would be in the range they had discussed.

[111] Later in January 2005, Ms. Threatful contacted Mega Hair directly and accepted the position. By that time, no introductions or interviews had been arranged through PCMG.

[112] Ms. Threatful attended the Networking Seminar and the April Meeting.

[113] Ms. Threatful later filed a claim against PCMG in Small Claims Court. The claim was settled out of court based on the Warren Decision.

[114] Marc Turenne began working with Alana Fero and was given assignments which consisted of profile and personality assessments. A résumé was then created and submitted to a variety of companies. Mr. Turenne stated that Ms. Fero provided little help and that he felt that she was not working on his behalf. He also said that the meetings were often short and totally unproductive.

[115] PCMG provided Mr. Turenne with only one contact and, after 10 weeks, he was still not employed. Mr. Turenne testified that he eventually became frustrated with the Program because of the lack of contacts. However, Ms. Fero would not address his concerns. Mr. Turenne signed the March Letter.

[116] In November of 2005, Mr. Turenne filed a claim in Small Claims Court. In April of 2007, he received an out-of-court settlement based on the Warren Decision.

[117] Bruce Nickson said that he and Alana Fero worked to improve his résumé. However, after two or three meetings, Ms. Fero apparently became disinterested. He was not provided with a single contact and, after approximately 6 weeks, he abandoned the Program.

[118] Mr. Nickson signed the March Letter and attended the April Meeting. In November of 2005, Mr. Nickson filed a claim in Small Claims Court. In April of 2007, he received a settlement based on the Warren Decision.

[119] Johan de Vaal had seven or eight meetings with Alano Fero. He acknowledged that she had a gift for writing and admitted that he did see some value in the Program.

[120] On January 14, 2005, Mr. de Vaal attended the Networking Seminar. He described the event as upbeat and said that the clients in attendance were not unhappy with PCMG.

[121] However, towards the end of February 2005, approximately 2 months after signing PCMG's contract, Mr. de Vaal became dissatisfied with the Program because no contacts had been made on his behalf.

[122] Mr. de Vaal also signed the March Letter and attended the April Meeting. On May 6, 2005, he filed a claim in Small Claims Court. Based on the Warren Decision, he received an out-of-court settlement of $5,900.00.

[123] Malia McClean became somewhat dissatisfied with PCMG's services after several meetings with Alana Fero. She stated that the meetings lasted about 20 minutes and that they basically consisted of taking in the previous week's homework and assigning new homework.

[124] Ms. McClean became completely dissatisfied with PCMG 5 or 6 weeks into the Program when she discovered that the database, which had been described by Ted Paxton, did not list employment opportunities.

[125] Ted Paxton and Alana Fero met with her to discuss her concerns but they were not resolved. Thereafter, Ms. McClean left the Program.

[126] René Navarro-Gonzalez's first Career Coach was Irene Mitchelson. He enjoyed working with her. However, after five or six meetings, he was assigned to Alana Fero and meetings with her lasted no more than 15 minutes.

[127] Mr. Navarro-Gonzalez was concerned about the work assigned to him by Ms. Fero. He was asked to send letters to companies asking them for information. He was instructed to write that he was not looking for a job but that he was simply doing research on an industry. Mr. Navarro-Gonzalez refused to write such letters because he was of the opinion that it was dishonest to pretend that he was not seeking employment.

[128] Mr. Navarro-Gonzalez stated that he became more and more concerned about the services provided by PCMG as time passed. After 90 days he had not been provided with any contacts or interviews so he asked for a refund. When he told Minto Roy that he had misrepresented his services to him, Mr. Roy responded that he should read his contract more carefully.

[129] Christopher Graham began attending weekly meetings with Ted Paxton shortly after signing a contract. During the initial meetings, Mr. Graham worked on setting personal goals and providing background information. He then began developing a new résumé and cover letter. He said that he started asking for contacts approximately one month into the Program.

[130] Mr. Graham testified that PCMG gave him names of contacts at Big Brothers of Greater Vancouver, Tourism British Columbia, Junior Achievement, Canadian Tourism Corporation and the B.C. Sports Hall of Fame. However, after meeting with all the contacts, he discovered that only Junior Achievement was hiring and that he was overqualified for the position.

[131] Mr. Graham said that in early September of 2007 Minto Roy told him that the Chilliwack Golf and Country Club (the "Club") was looking for a general manager. Mr. Graham indicated that he was interested and Mr. Roy advised him that he would send his résumé to the Club. However, Mr. Graham testified that his résumé never arrived.

[132] Mr. Graham stated that on October 25, 2007, he met with Ted Paxton and Minto Roy to discuss PCMG's failure to provide the Club with his résumé and its failure to provide him with referrals to employers who were hiring. During the meeting, Mr. Graham asked what PCMG had done to market his name. Neither Mr. Paxton nor Mr. Roy answered his question. Mr. Graham asked for a refund and was refused.

[133] Raffaele Rocca worked with Karen Cunningham on his résumé for approximately one month. He also prepared cover letters, discussed interview skills and participated in mock interviews.

[134] Mr. Rocca stated that he was provided with two contacts during the Program. The first failed to reply to his overture and the second was his Career Coach's niece. Neither of these contacts led to employment. He became frustrated approximately 6 weeks into the Program and quit.

(i) Steve Wills' Testimony

[135] Steve Wills worked as a Senior Career Consultant with PCMG from September 2005 to December 2005. He explained that PCMG's typical prospective clients were individuals who had sent in résumés in response to job openings posted on the Careers Today website but had not been hired. After being advised that they had been unsuccessful, they would then be asked whether they would like an opportunity to meet with a Senior Career Consultant at PCMG.

[136] With respect to PCMG's sales strategy, Mr. Wills stated that Minto Roy "stressed that [one of] the key objectives of the first meeting was first to find the money, i.e. to determine the prospect's ability to pay and, if they did not have the money, where they could turn to get it." Mr. Wills testified that another objective of the First Meeting was to ensure that the prospective client would bring their spouse to the Second Meeting. He stated that the spouse's presence was required to facilitate closing the deal. The concern was that, if the client was told the price of the Program and had a chance to discuss it with a spouse who had not been exposed to the sales pitch, there would be little likelihood that a contract would be signed. Mr. Wills stated that it was part of the script to instill a sense of urgency.

[137] Regarding the Screening Representation, Mr. Wills said that he had not seen any assessment criteria used to qualify prospects for a Second Meeting. He noted, however, that during the First Meeting, the Senior Career Consultant would tell the prospective client that PCMG worked only with highly qualified candidates and that the purpose of that meeting was to enable PCMG to get to know the person a little better in order to decide if they were the type of person PCMG would want to "partner" with. In cross-examination, Mr. Wills stated that it "was very, very rare that [Mr. Roy] didn't offer a prospect the second meeting" and that "pretty much everybody got offered the second meeting".

[138] Mr. Wills gave the following evidence about the Contacts Representation:

> Minto Roy, PCMG's director, was very insistent that myself and other consultants follow the script provided by PCMG […] In this script, PCMG was to be characterized as the prospective client's friend and a powerful potential partner in helping them to find a new job. The script included statements to the effect that because every PCMG client becomes part of the PCMG network, PCMG has therefore built a vast network of contacts at the management and supervisory level, in every industry. The script indicated that upon signing on with PCMG, each new client gets access to PCMG's network of decision-makers. I was never shown any document that listed or described that network. The script did not promise that PCMG would put the client in touch with specific individuals or specific companies, but implied that PCMG had contacts and would arrange introductions to executives who could put the client in touch with decision-makers, people who could help the client get ahead.

[139] He added the following in response to the Tribunal's questions:

> The Chairperson: …You've told me that the script doesn't say that PCMG was offering to put them in touch with people who were hiring. And you said the script doesn't say that PCMG said they would set up interviews with those people who were hiring, and yet you say those promises were routinely made?
> Mr. Wills: Yeah. I think there's a disconnect between what's on paper and what's said. I mean in the same way as the contract that people sign spells out in legalese what their expectations are and puts in a statement that PCMG never promised you this, never promised you that and were offering you this. In the same way that's in the contract, well the legalese and the appropriate claims are, on the written materials, script and otherwise. But in effect, you are there to say what you need to say to move that prospect towards signing that contract, and I …
> The Chairperson: And if that includes making promises, you make them?
> Mr. Wills: That's correct.
> The Chairperson: And was that a direction from Mr. Roy?
> Mr. Wills: Well that was an example set by Mr. Roy.

VIII. THE RESPONDENTS' EVIDENCE

[140] Neil Belenkie was self-employed as an occupation consultant at the time of the hearing. However, when he met PCMG, he was a manager in the marketing department of a pharmaceutical company. He has a diploma from Mount Royal College in Calgary and an arts degree from the University of Calgary. Mr. Belenkie signed a contract with PCMG on January 19, 2007. He stated that he was given an opportunity to read the contract and that it was consistent with the services he received from PCMG. He testified that Minto Roy did not promise him access to his network of contacts or a new job within 90 days.

[141] Mr. Belenkie testified that it took him three months to complete the Program and that he had approximately 12 meetings with his Career Coach. Mr. Belenkie stated that using his own contacts, he found a job approximately seven weeks after completing the Program.

[142] Jagdish Ruprell is an operations manager. He has a bachelor's degree in business administration, a diploma in computer systems management and, he is currently pursuing his Facilities Management Administrator Designation. Mr. Ruprell immigrated to Canada from India in February of 2006 and met with Minto Roy in March 2006 after submitting his résumé to PCMG. At that time, Mr. Ruprell was employed as a customer service representative for a janitorial service. Mr. Ruprell stated that Mr. Roy advised him that PCMG only partnered with clients who were prepared to work very hard. He signed a contract with PCMG on March 17, 2006. Mr. Ruprell stated that Mr. Roy did not put pressure on him to sign and that PCMG worked out a payment structure that accommodated his financial situation. He further stated that Mr. Roy and the staff of PCMG did not make any misleading promises or guarantees. The services he was promised were those described in his contract. However, Mr. Ruprell did not provide the Tribunal with a copy of his contract.

[143] Douglas Wicks is an engineering technologist and is employed as a project manager. He graduated from the Saskatchewan Technical Institute in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan. Mr. Wicks stated that Minto Roy did not promise him a job within 90 days and he did not promise to provide him with referrals or interviews. Mr. Wicks was employed when he signed a PCMG contract on September 7, 2007, but was looking for a career change. Mr. Wicks stated that he would highly recommend PCMG to anyone in his position.

[144] Loretta James is a project manager for an asset management software company. She testified that, after her education, she stayed home with her children for many years. She said that Mr. Roy did not promise her a job within 90 days and did not say that he would provide her with senior level contacts.

[145] Minto Roy testified that he is the sole shareholder and director of PCMG and described himself as an entrepreneur. His duties at PCMG include the marketing of PCMG's services. He also testified that he coaches the Senior Career Consultants and that he attends several networking events per week.

[146] Mr. Roy described PCMG's network of contacts as being comprised mainly of former clients who worked at all levels in many types of businesses.

[147] Mr. Roy denied making the Representations and denied the existence of a written script for the First and Second Meetings. However, he did acknowledge that a certain "protocol" was to be followed by the Senior Career Consultants.

[148] Mr. Roy explained that the Better Business Bureau of British Columbia falsely affiliated PCMG with a company known as Bernard Haldane Associates and that this was a major reason why PCMG clients lost faith in the Program. He also stated that the nine former PCMG clients who testified on behalf of the Commissioner were not representative of PCMG's 501 clients.

[149] Mr. Roy pointed out that he has taped over 200 radio shows, that the show is not scripted, that the host, Mannie Buzunis, is not paid by PCMG and that he has no control over the editing before the show is broadcast.

[150] Ted Paxton stated that he joined PCMG in March of 2005. He first worked as a Senior Career Consultant and then became a Career Coach. He is a certified professional coach and received his designation from the Coaching Technical Institute in California, in 2003. Mr. Paxton testified that he sat in on approximately 100 sales meetings and that he never witnessed anyone guarantee a client a job within 90 days or promise interviews with senior level contacts. He said, however, that clients typically do find jobs within 90 days. He further stated that PCMG does select clients who are committed to their careers and prepared for hard work.

[151] Mr. Paxton denied pressuring Malia McClean to sign a contract and denied telling her that PCMG had a database showing job openings that were not advertised to the public. However, Mr. Paxton admitted telling Ms. McClean that a salary between $38,000.00 and $42,000.00 was an appropriate target for her.

IX. THE RELEVANT PROVISIONS OF THE ACT

[152]

74.01 (1) A person engages in reviewable conduct who, for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, the supply or use of a product or for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, any business interest, by any means whatever,

(a) makes a representation to the public that is false or misleading in a material respect;

(b) makes a representation to the public in the form of a statement, warranty or guarantee of the performance, efficacy or length of life of a product that is not based on an adequate and proper test thereof, the proof of which lies on the person making the representation; or

(c) makes a representation to the public in a form that purports to be

(i) a warranty or guarantee of a product, or

(ii) a promise to replace, maintain or repair an article or any part thereof or to repeat or continue a service until it has achieved a specified result,

if the form of purported warranty or guarantee or promise is materially misleading or if there is no reasonable prospect that it will be carried out.

[…]

74.03 (1) For the purposes of sections 74.01 and 74.02, a representation that is

(a) expressed on an article offered or displayed for sale or its wrapper or container,

74.01 (1) Est susceptible d'examen le comportement de quiconque donne au public, de quelque manière que ce soit, aux fins de promouvoir directement ou indirectement soit la fourniture ou l'usage d'un produit, soit des intérêts commerciaux quelconques :

a) ou bien des indications fausses ou trompeuses sur un point important;

b) ou bien, sous la forme d'une déclaration ou d'une garantie visant le rendement, l'efficacité ou la durée utile d'un produit, des indications qui ne se fondent pas sur une épreuve suffisante et appropriée, dont la preuve incombe à la personne qui donne les indications;

c) ou bien des indications sous une forme qui fait croire qu'il s'agit :

(i) soit d'une garantie de produit,

(ii) soit d'une promesse de remplacer, entretenir ou réparer tout ou partie d'un article ou de fournir de nouveau ou continuer à fournir un service jusqu'à l'obtention du résultat spécifié, si cette forme de prétendue garantie ou promesse est trompeuse d'une façon importante ou s'il n'y a aucun espoir raisonnable qu'elle sera respectée.

[…]

74.03 (1) Pour l'application des articles 74.01 et 74.02, sous réserve du paragraphe (2), sont réputées n'être données au public que par la personne de qui elles proviennent les indications qui, selon le cas :

a) apparaissent sur un article mis en vente ou exposé pour la vente, ou sur son

(b) expressed on anything attached to, inserted in or accompanying an article offered or displayed for sale, its wrapper or container, or anything on which the article is mounted for display or sale,

(c) expressed on an in-store or other point-of-purchase display,

(d) made in the course of in-store, door-to-door or telephone selling to a person as ultimate user, or

(e) contained in or on anything that is sold, sent, delivered, transmitted or made available in any other manner to a member of the public, is deemed to be made to the public by and only by the person who causes the representation to be so expressed, made or contained, subject to subsection (2).

[…]

emballage;

b) apparaissent soit sur quelque chose qui est fixé à un article mis en vente ou exposé pour la vente ou à son emballage ou qui y est inséré ou joint, soit sur quelque chose qui sert de support à l'article pour l'étalage ou la vente;

c) apparaissent à un étalage d'un magasin ou d'un autre point de vente;

d) sont données, au cours d'opérations de vente en magasin, par démarchage ou par téléphone, à un usager éventuel;

e) se trouvent dans ou sur quelque chose qui est vendu, envoyé, livré ou transmis au public ou mis à sa disposition de quelque manière que ce soit.

[…]

[153] Subsection 74.03(1) and its predecessor subsection 36(2) of the Combines Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-23, as amended by An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 76 will be referred to as the Deeming Provision.

X. THE LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

[154] In 1914, a provision was added to the Criminal Code which prohibited the publication of misleading advertisements (See: An Act to amend the Criminal Code, S.C. 1914, c. 24). It was amended several times and, in 1969, it was transferred from the Criminal Code to the Combines Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 314.

[155] After the transfer, a number of unsuccessful attempts were made to substantially alter the provision by removing its limited focus on the publication of advertisements and expanding it to deal with false and misleading representations made "to the public" by any means. The Bills implementing this change included language proposed for a new section 36 of the Combines Investigation Act which, although a criminal provision, was almost identical to the present paragraph 74.01(1)(a) and subsection 74.03(1) of the Act. The only material difference was that the proposed Deeming Provision (paragraphs 36(2)(d) and (e)) initially referred in the plural to "persons" and "members" of the public. The proposals, in this form, first appeared in Bill C-256 (on June 29, 1971; An Act to promote competition, to provide for the general regulation of trade and commerce, to promote honest and fair dealing, to establish a Competitive Practices Tribunal and the Office of Commissioner, to repeal the Combines Investigation Act and to make consequential amendments to the Bank Act, 3rd Sess., 28th Parl.) but the Bill did not proceed past first reading.

[156] The next attempt at reform came with Bill C-227 (An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code,1st Sess., 29th Parl.) which was introduced on November 5, 1973. Again, it was identical to the present subsections 74.01(1) and 74.03(1) except that the plural was used in paragraphs (d) and (e) of the proposed Deeming Provision. This Bill also failed to proceed beyond first reading.

[157] Bill C-7 (An Act to amend the Combines Investigation and the Bank Act and to repeal an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, 2nd Sess., 29th Parl.) followed with similar provisions. The Bill passed second reading and was sent to the House of Commons Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs (the "Committee") for a clause-by-clause examination. The Consumers' Association of Canada submitted to the Committee that the words "to the public" in what is now paragraph 74.01(1)(a) (then paragraph 36(1)(a)) should be deleted. Such a deletion would have allowed the provision to cover representations which were not made to the public. However, the suggested change was not made. In my view, this indicates that Parliament did not intend the Act to apply to all deceptions. See: Canada, House of Commons, Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, Issue no. 30, March 21, 1975, 1st Sess., 30th Parl., p. 30:44. The Committee's deliberations were terminated on May 8, 1974 when Parliament was dissolved.

[158] On October 2, 1974, Bill C-7 was re-introduced as Bill C-2 (An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, 1st Sess., 30th Parl.). Bill C-2 was ultimately enacted and came into force on January 1, 1976. As in the earlier Bills, Bill C-2 initially used the plural in the proposed Deeming Provision. However, amendments made during Committee deliberations resulted in the use of the singular so "persons" became "person" in 36(2)(d) and "members" of the public became "a member" of the public in 36(2)(e) (the "Amendments").

[159] André Ouellet, then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, introduced the Amendments before the Committee. At that time, he presented a document which set out the proposed amendments and his comments thereon. See Appendix J – Amendments and Comments to Bill C-2, an Act to Amend the Combines Investigation Act in Canada, House of Commons, Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Committee, Issue no. 15, December 3, 1974, 1st Session, 30th Parl. pp. 15:70-71.

[160] Below, with my emphasis, I have reproduced paragraphs 36(2)(d) and (e) of the Deeming Provision as first proposed in which the plural was used:

> 36(2) For the purpose of this section and section 36.1, a representation that is
>
> […]

> (d) made in the course of in-store, door-to-door or telephone selling to persons as ultimate users, or > (e) contained in or on anything that is sold, sent, delivered, transmitted or made available to members of the public, > shall be deemed to be made to the public by the person who caused the representation to be made […]
>

[161] Next I have reproduced 36(2)(d) and (e) of the Deeming Provision as amended after second reading to change the plural to the singular. Again I have added emphasis.

> 36(2) For the purpose of this section and section 36.1, a representation that is
>
> […]
>
> (d) made in the course of in-store, door-to-door or telephone selling to a person as ultimate user, or
>
> (e) contained in or on anything that is sold, sent, delivered, transmitted or in any other manner whatever made available to a member of the public.
>
> shall be deemed to be made to the public only by the person who caused the representation to be so expressed, made or contained […]

[162] Finally, I have reproduced the Minister's comment on the amendment of the proposed Deeming Provision which shows that a misrepresentation to an individual is sufficient to bring the situations described in paragraphs 36(2)(d) and (e) within the ambit of subsection 36(1).

> The words in 36(2)(d) are changed from "to persons as ultimate users" to "a person as ultimate user" because concern has been expressed that the plural words "persons", "users" and "members" used in sub-paragraphs (d) and (e) as they now stand in Bill C-2 might be construed to mean a plurality of persons, whereas a misrepresentation to a single person should be enough to attract the application of the section.

[163] However, despite these Amendments shifting from the plural to the singular, no change was made to "to the public" in 36(1)(a). In other words, the section was not amended to read to "a member of the public". This suggests that Parliament intended that "to the public" was and would remain plural.

XI. THE ISSUES

[164] Based on the Act, it is necessary to address the following questions to determine whether the Respondents have engaged in reviewable conduct under paragraph 74.01(1)(a) of the Act:

1. Were the Representations made?
2. If so, what was the purpose for which the Representations were made?
3. Were the Representations made to the public?
4. Were the Representations false or misleading?
5. If they were misrepresentations, were they material?

XII. DISCUSSION AND CONCLUSIONS

Issue 1 Were the Representations Made?

[165] I find that the evidence given by the Commissioner's witnesses was both credible and compelling. I am satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, that a significant number of prospective PCMG clients heard the Representations during their First and Second Meetings with Minto Roy and PCMG's Senior Career Consultants.

[166] I reached this conclusion despite Mr. Roy's submissions. Mr. Roy argued that based (i) on the answers given by the Commissioner's witnesses to Questions 8 and 10 of the Confidential Plan and (ii) on the disclaimer in PCMG's contracts and (iii) on the evidence of his witnesses, I should have concluded that the Representations were not made. I will deal with his submissions in turn.

(i) The Confidential Plan – Questions 8 and 10

[167] In my view, the negative answers to Question 8 given by the Commissioner's witnesses do not assist the Respondents because the question includes the word "specific". The witnesses acknowledged that they were not guaranteed specific interviews with specific companies, specific salaries or specific timeframes for obtaining a new position or a promotion so it is understandable that they answered "no" to Question 8. However, that answer does not mean that the Contacts and 90-day/Good Job Representations were not made in the First and Second Meetings. In most cases, the language used when those representations were made was not specific. Indeed, in my view, it was intentionally vague. The people who were to serve as contacts were not named and the 90-day period was often described as "typical" and was sometimes expressed in weeks rather than days. Most of the witnesses agreed that there were no guarantees, just timeframes and salary ranges.

[168] The negative answers to Question 10 are also understandable because, as Mr. de Vaal testified, there was no inconsistency between PCMG's contracts and the Contacts Representation. In Phase I point 7, PCMG undertook to work with the client to "Develop a marketing plan between client and strategist [i.e. career coach] to generate appropriate referral and job interviews." Mr. Roy acknowledged in his evidence that "referral" could reasonably be read as referrals.

[169] In my view, this provision, which appeared in the contracts signed by all the Commissioner's witnesses, could reasonably be read as a promise by PCMG to use its contacts both to refer clients to those who were hiring and to arrange job interviews.

[170] Further, the six witnesses who signed the older version of PCMG's contract also received the benefit of Phase I point 6 which bound PCMG to distribute clients' résumés to companies and recruiters in the local market. This provision could also reasonably be interpreted to include a responsibility on the part of PCMG to follow up on the contacts by booking or assisting with the booking of interviews. For these reasons, the answers to Question 10 cannot be used to suggest that the Contacts Representation was not made.

(ii) The Disclaimer

[171] The disclaimer appeared in all versions of the contract signed by the Commissioner's witnesses. It read:

> Client acknowledges and agrees that neither PCMG, nor any representative of PCMG has represented or implied to Client that PCMG is an employment or placement agency. Client understands that PCMG provides a full program of career counselling, career development, and contact development, which the client implements. Further, Client acknowledges and agrees that PCMG has not, nor has any representative of PCMG, induced Client to enter into this engagement by implication, representation or guaranteeing to Client (a) specific interviews with specific companies or individuals, salary or time frame to obtain a new position or promotion, (b) any verbal promises that are not part of the written agreement (c) salary or wages increase, bonus programs or other increased remuneration,
>
> [my emphasis]

[172] In my view, the disclaimer does not support Mr. Roy's argument that by signing PCMG's contract, the Commissioner's witnesses acknowledged that the Contacts and 90-day/Good Job Representations were not made.

[173] My reasoning is similar to that dealing with the answers to the questions in the Confidential Plan. The disclaimer does not apply because the Commissioner's witnesses were not guaranteed specific interviews, salaries or timeframes and because the Contacts Representation, as discussed above, is in the PCMG contract.

[174] The Screening Representation deserves separate attention because it was neither a promise nor a specific commitment. In my view, it was flattery used to make clients feel that they were special because they met PCMG's high standards. Neither the answers to Questions 8 and 10 in the Confidential Plan nor the disclaimer address whether flattery was used to market PCMG's services so the Respondents' arguments do not impact the Screening Representation.

(iii) The Respondents' Witnesses

[175] As noted earlier, Minto Roy called four former clients who appeared voluntarily. Three denied that they heard the Contacts and 90-day/Good Job Representations and the fourth denied being misled. However, even if I accept their evidence, it does not mean that the Commissioner's witnesses lied when they said they heard the Representations. It only means that the Representations were not made to all prospective clients. I have therefore accepted the Commissioner's evidence in spite of the testimony offered on behalf of the Respondents.

[176] Further, neither Minto Roy nor Ted Paxton were credible witnesses. I am satisfied, on the balance of probabilities, that Minto Roy encouraged PCMG's Senior Career Consultants to make the Representations and say whatever else they thought would convince prospective clients to sign a PCMG contract. In my view, Mr. Roy behaved in this manner because he believed that the answers to Questions 8 and 10 in the Confidential Plan and the disclaimer in the PCMG contracts would make it impossible for clients to complain when the Program failed to meet their expectations.

[177] This dishonest approach to marketing was reinforced by the fact that Senior Career Consultants received no salary from PCMG. Their remuneration was based entirely on commission. This meant that they had a huge incentive to say whatever was required to persuade clients to purchase PCMG's services.

Issue 2 What was the Purpose of the Representations?

[178] The Representations were made for the purpose of persuading prospective clients to purchase PCMG's services. All the Representations were made during the First and Second Meetings which were conducted by Mr. Roy and PCMG's Senior Career Consultants. They were the PCMG personnel who were responsible for marketing.

Issue 3 Were the Representations made "to the public"?

[179] Counsel for the Commissioner acknowledged that there is no precedent in the case law for the application of paragraph 74.01(1)(a) when oral representations are made during private discussions of personal matters.

[180] The Commissioner submitted that because there is no definition of "public" or "to the public" in the Act and because the evidence shows that the Representations were repeated to a number of prospective clients, I should conclude that they became Representations "to the public" within the meaning of 74.01(1)(a) of the Act.

[181] This submission was based, in part, on the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in CCH Canadian Ltd. v. Law Society of Upper Canada, 2004 SCC 13, [2004] 1 S.C.R. 339. It was a case of alleged copyright infringement under paragraph 3(1)(f) of the Copyright Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-42 which protects communications of works "to the public" by telecommunication. One aspect of the decision concerned the Law Society's custom photocopying service which, on request, faxed copies of judicial decisions and other published works to members of the legal profession and researchers.

[182] Although the Court concluded that single faxes were not communications to the public, the Commissioner relied on a statement made by the Chief Justice in obiter when she said that a series of fax transmissions of the same work to different recipients might constitute communication to the public (paragraph 78).

[183] The Commissioner argued that over time, as different prospective clients heard the Representations, they become the Respondents' "public". However, I have not been persuaded by this submission. In my view there is an important distinction between the facts in CCH and those in this case. In CCH, the Law Society's service was available to the public in the sense that members of the Law Society, the judiciary and authorized researchers were entitled to request the service and receive copies of the works. Further, each user understood that others had similar access and there was no personal content in the exchange of information between the Law Society and its customers. In contrast, in the present case no one had access to the discussions of personal matters which occurred during the First and Second Meetings.

[184] The Commissioner also relied on Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association et al v. Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada, 2008 FCA 6, 290 D.L.R. (4^{th}) 753. It concerned the transmission of a selection of ring tones to mobile phone customers of Bell and Telus. The transmissions went directly from company to customer whenever customers requested access for the purpose of selecting a tone. The Federal Court of Appeal held that such transmissions were made "to the public" within the meaning of 3(1)(f) of the Copyright Act.

[185] Again, however I distinguish this decision from the case before me because the ring tone transmissions were accessible to the public and intended for public use. All that was required was a subscription to a mobile phone service. Further, the recipients were aware that others had the same choice of tones and there was no personal content in the communication. In contrast, in this case, there was no access on any basis to the Respondents' First and Second Meetings with prospective clients in which private matters were discussed.

[186] The Commissioner also says that the Tribunal should conclude that the Respondents' prospective customers to whom the Representations were made were a segment of the public because the Act is for the protection of the public.

[187] However, section 74.01 has been more precisely described as being for the protection of the marketplace composed of both consumers and merchants. False or misleading representations distort the information available in the market and lead to decisions by purchasers and competitors which are based on inaccurate information. This injures competition.

[188] This fact is acknowledged in a quotation taken from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Stage 1, Competition Policy, Background Paper of April 1976 at p. 38 (the "Background Paper"):

> …where there is a lack of complete information or where distorted information in relation to a product is fed into the marketplace, its functioning will be seriously affected and the distortion will be injurious to honest competitors.
>
> [my emphasis]

[189] In my view, the fact that paragraph 74.01(1)(a) is for the protection of consumers and competitors in the marketplace is consistent with a finding in this case that, because the alleged misrepresentations were not accessible to the marketplace, the Act does not apply.

[190] I have also had regard for the purpose of the Act as a whole. Its purpose clause reads as follows:

Purpose	Objet
1.1 The purpose of this Act is to maintain and encourage competition in Canada in order to promote the efficiency and adaptability of the Canadian economy, in order to expand opportunities for Canadian participation in world markets while at the same time recognizing the role of foreign competition in Canada, in order to ensure that small and medium-sized enterprises have an equitable opportunity to participate in the Canadian economy and in order to provide consumers with competitive prices and product choices.	1.1 La présente loi a pour objet de préserver et de favoriser la concurrence au Canada dans le but de stimuler l'adaptabilité et l'efficience de l'économie canadienne, d'améliorer les chances de participation canadienne aux marchés mondiaux tout en tenant simultanément compte du rôle de la concurrence étrangère au Canada, d'assurer à la petite et à la moyenne entreprise une chance honnête de participer à l'économie canadienne, de même que dans le but d'assurer aux consommateurs des prix compétitifs et un choix dans les produits.

[191] In my view, there is nothing in this provision which suggests that paragraph 74.01(1)(a) should apply in a situation in which the alleged misrepresentations could have had no impact on competition because they were not fed into the marketplace.

[192] Finally, in dealing with this aspect of the Commissioner's submissions, I have considered section 12 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21 which provides as follows:

12. Every enactment is deemed remedial, and shall be given such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as best ensures the attainment of its objects.	12. Tout texte est censé apporter une solution de droit et s'interprète de la manière la plus équitable et la plus large qui soit compatible avec la réalisation de son objet.

[193] Again, there is nothing in this section which requires me to give "to the public" in paragraph 74.01(1)(a) a meaning other than the one that makes sense in the context of both the section and the Act. They indicate that Parliament intended "to the public" to mean "to the marketplace".

[194] I have applied the current approach to statutory interpretation which provides that the words of an act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the act, the object of the act, and the intention of Parliament. (See: Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27 at para. 21, and AstraZeneca Canada Inc. v. Canada (Minister of Health), 2006 SCC 49, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 560, at para. 26.)

[195] With this approach in mind, I have concluded that there is no reason to suppose that the Act was intended to apply to all deceptions including misrepresentations made to individuals in private during discussions of personal matters. There is other relief available in such cases under tort or criminal law. Indeed, as a result of the Warren Decision, many of the Commissioner's witnesses have received refunds of part of the money they paid to PCMG.

[196] I have also accepted the Respondents' submission that because paragraphs 74.03(1)(d) and (e) of the Deeming Provision contain language which clearly describes an individual, it is reasonable to read "to the public" in paragraph 74.01(1)(a) as having a broader meaning which describes more than one person. Paragraphs 74.01(d) and (e) read as follows:

74.03 (1) For the purposes of sections 74.01 and 74.02, a representation that is	74.03 (1) Pour l'application des articles 74.01 et 74.02, sous réserve du paragraphe (2), sont réputées n'être données au public que par la personne de qui elles proviennent les indications qui, selon le cas :
[…]	[…]
(d) made in the course of in-store, door-to-door or telephone selling to a person as ultimate user, or	d) sont données, au cours d'opérations de vente en magasin, par démarchage ou par téléphone, à un usager éventuel;
(e) contained in or on anything that is sold, sent, delivered, transmitted or made available in any other manner to a member of the public,	e) se trouvent dans ou sur quelque chose qui est vendu, envoyé, livré ou transmis au public ou mis à sa disposition de quelque manière que ce soit.
is deemed to be made to the public by and only by the person who causes the representation to be so expressed, made or contained, subject to subsection (2).
[my emphasis]	[je souligne]

[197] In my view, if Parliament had meant to use the singular in 74.01(1)(a), it would have used descriptions in the singular similar to those in the Deeming Provision. In reaching this conclusion, I have rejected the Commissioner's submission that the Deeming Provision is a "stand alone" provision which should not be relied on to assist in the interpretation of "to the public" in paragraph 74.01(1)(a).

[198] In the alternative, the Commissioner suggests that if the Deeming Provision is relevant to the interpretation of 74.01(1)(a) then, because "to the public" in 74.01(1)(a) is written as "au public" in the French language version of 74.01(1)(a) and because "au public" appears again in paragraph (e) of the Deeming Provision which is in the singular in English, it is possible that "to the public" in 74.01(1)(a) is capable of referring to one person. This would mean that paragraph 74.01(1)(a) would apply to the Representations if made to only one prospective PCMG client.

[199] However, because of the legislative history which shows a clear intention to use the singular in the Deeming Provision, I have determined that it is not safe to base any conclusions on the use of "au public" in paragraph (e) of the Deeming Provision.

[200] The Commissioner also relies on the Deeming Provision in paragraph 74.03(1)(d) of the Act to submit that a single individual can constitute the "public" in this case.

[201] I accept that under paragraph 74.03(1)(d), one person could constitute the public for the purposes of 74.01(1)(a). The legislative history of the subsection makes it clear that that was Parliament's intent when it made the Amendments. The next question is whether the Deeming Provision is operative in this case.

[202] The Commissioner says that I should extend the meaning of paragraph (d) of the Deeming Provision to include the Representations made at PCMG. However, I can see no language such as the word "includes" which indicates that paragraph (d) was intended to be illustrative and applied in situations analogous to those listed.

[203] Further even if an analogy were appropriate, I do not see one that is apt. PCMG is nothing like a shop – which is a public place. Rather, it is a private place where people attend by invitation or under contract. It also seems to me that misrepresentations or false statements made during door to door and telephone sales were deemed to be "to the public" under paragraph (d) because both were seen as methods of mass marketing. PCMG did not function as a mass marketer.

[204] The Commissioner relied on R. v. Simpsons Ltd. (1988), 25 C.P.R. (3d) 34 (Ont. Dist. Ct.). Part of the case involved a criminal charge against Simpsons Ltd. under paragraph 36(1)(a) of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-23. Simpsons ran a promotion in which it distributed 1,031,000 cards by mail and by hand in its stores. The cards falsely represented that cardholders could save 10% to 25% on practically everything in the store. In reality, 90% of the cardholders had no chance of obtaining anything more than the 10% discount.

In paragraph 10, the Judge said:

> To make out the offence, it would be sufficient if a false or misleading representation had been made to one member of the public. Here, on the acknowledged facts, the misleading representation was made to 927,000 people, or 90 % of the recipients. Of those, most were among the 750,000 Simpsons credit card holders who were the addresses of the mailing.
>
> [my emphasis]

[205] This statement does not assist the Commissioner for two reasons. First it is obiter dicta. Second, it is probably based on the Deeming Provision in 36(2)(e) which would have made Simpsons' conduct an offence if only one person saw the card. As discussed above, the Deeming Provision does not apply in this case.

[206] In conclusion on this issue, I find that the Commissioner has not met the onus of showing that the Representations were made to the public for the following reasons:

- Based on the Background Paper "to the public" means to the marketplace.
- The Deeming Provision in paragraph 74.03(1)(d) of the Act does not apply on the facts of this case.
- Personal matters were discussed: at the First Meeting, prospective clients reviewed personal matters including their employment histories, their expectations and their ability to pay PCMG's fees. In some situations, a partner or relative was invited to the Second Meeting in which similar personal topics were addressed.
- There was an expectation of privacy: both prospective clients and PCMG's Senior Career Consultants intended their discussions to be private. This mutual expectation of privacy was evidenced by the fact that the First and Second Meetings were held in offices behind closed doors.
- There was no public access: Mr. Wills confirmed that PCMG's practice was to invite candidates to First Meetings. They would usually be individuals who had not obtained positions after they had made their résumés available to PCMG via the internet. The First and Second Meetings were not accessible to the public. No one could pay a fee to receive, subscribe to overhear or in any way listen in on the conversations between the prospective clients and PCMG's Senior Career Consultants. In my view without accessibility, it cannot be said that misinformation was "fed into the marketplace".

[207] In view of this conclusion, the application will be dismissed. However, to provide a complete analysis, I will consider the remaining issues.

Issue 4 Were the Representations False or Misleading?

[208] The Commissioner's allegation is that the Representations were false and misleading. In considering this issue, I have focussed on what could reasonably have been understood by the average prospective PCMG client who heard the Representations during the First and Second Meetings. See: Canada (Commissioner of Competition) v. P.V.I. International Inc., 2002 Comp. Trib. 24, 9 C.P.R. (4th) 129; aff'd (2004), 31 C.P.R. (4th) 331 (F.C.A.), at para. 24. The attributes of the intended audience are an important aspect of this consideration.

[209] The evidence from several of the Commissioner's witnesses discloses that prospective PCMG clients may urgently require employment. On the other hand, the Respondents' witnesses were all working when they approached PCMG. It therefore appears that PCMG has two categories of prospective clients – those who are unemployed and in need of work and those who are employed and want a change.

[210] In my view, it is reasonable to assume that urgency could exist in either situation.

[211] The evidence suggests that the prospective clients are likely to have some post-secondary education, some work experience and access to the funds necessary to pay PCMG's fees. Often, they will have experienced unsuccessful job searches before they encounter PCMG.

[212] Accordingly, although average members of the intended audience in this case were not normally gullible they were likely to accept what was reasonably implied without critical analysis because, to varying degrees, they were needy.

[213] In my view, against this background, the Contacts Representation was misleading. The references to contacts during the First and Second Meetings created the misleading impression that they would be used for the benefit of PCMG's clients in practical ways. In other words, PCMG's clients would be told about relevant positions and recommended for job interviews with senior decision-makers who were hiring.

[214] The 90-day/Good Job Representation was also misleading. Clients were flattered about their excellent qualifications during the First and Second Meetings and in those circumstances when they were told that PCMG clients "typically" secured comparable or improved positions in approximately 90 days they were led to believe that they were typical and would have the same experience as the typical client.

[215] The Screening Representation was also misleading in that it gave the prospective clients the impression that they had been measured against high standards. However, Mr. Wills' evidence showed that there were no such standards and that if you were presentable and could pay, you were encouraged to sign a contract.

Issue 5 Were the Misrepresentations Material?

[216] Misrepresentations are material if they are so pertinent, germane or essential that they could affect the prospective customer's decision to purchase PCMG's services (See: Apotex Inc. v. Hoffman La-Roche Ltd. (2000), 195 D.L.R. (4th) 244 (Ont. C.A.) at para. 16).

[217] All the Commissioner's witnesses who were former PCMG clients testified that the Contacts Representation was an important factor in their decision to retain PCMG. For example:

- Marc Turenne stated that he signed the PCMG contract to obtain access to key decision-makers.
- Johan de Vaal stated that he signed with PCMG on the understanding that Minto Roy would provide him with contacts which would give him a "foot in the door" and put him on shortlists for job interviews.

[218] As well, the March Letter emphasized that the signatories had relied on the Contacts Representation.

[219] This evidence suggests and I conclude that the Contacts Representation would be material for the average person who was looking for employment.

[220] The 90-day/Good Job Representation was also important for some of the Commissioner's witnesses. For example:

- Tanya Threatful indicated that she was both excited and relieved when she was approved for a Second Meeting. She further indicated that she "was impressed with the promises that [she] would be getting another job within 90 days, at a higher salary, with stock options and benefits."

[221] Again, based on this evidence and my assessment of the impact of this representation on an average person seeking employment, I have concluded that it is material.

[222] Lastly, in my view, the Screening Representation is not material because, on the evidence, it did not motivate any of the Commissioner's witnesses to engage the services of PCMG. I therefore find that it would be unlikely to motivate an average prospective client.

XIII. ORDER DISMISSING THE APPLICATION

[223] Upon reviewing the material filed and hearing the testimony of the witnesses and the submissions of counsel for the Commissioner and of Minto Roy on his own behalf, no one appearing for PCMG, in a 10 day hearing in Vancouver, B.C. in April and May 2008;

[224] Now this Tribunal orders that, for the reasons given above, this application is hereby dismissed.

[225] The issue of costs remains under reserve in the hope that a settlement can be achieved.

DATED at Ottawa, this 15th day of July 2008.

SIGNED on behalf of the Tribunal by the Chairperson

(s) Sandra J. Simpson

COUNSEL:

For the applicant:

The Commissioner of Competition

Stéphane Lilkoff
Stéphane Lamoureux

For the respondents:

Premier Career Management Group Corp.

Not represented

Minto Roy

Self-represented

[226] SCHEDULE A: THE PROCEDURAL HISTORY

1. On May 8, 2007, the Commissioner filed her Notice of Application with the Tribunal. Shortly thereafter, the Tribunal granted the Commissioner's Motion for Alternative Service of the Notice.

2. PCMG and Mr. Roy failed to respond within the time period set out in the Competition Tribunal Rules, SOR/94-290, and, on July 23, 2007, the Commissioner moved for an ex parte order in default of response. The Commissioner sought, in particular, directions about what evidence the Tribunal wanted to hear concerning the merits of her application.

3. On July 31, 2007, the Tribunal ordered the Commissioner to prepare a revised motion record containing submissions and affidavit evidence. The Tribunal ordered that the revised motion record be served. The Respondents were given 20 days to respond failing which the motion would proceed without further notice.

4. On September 14, 2007, the Commissioner filed her revised motion record. One day before the expiry of the 20-day period, newly retained counsel for PCMG and Mr. Roy wrote to the Tribunal seeking an extension of the time to serve a responding motion record.

5. The request was granted and after some discussion, the Commissioner agreed to abandon her Motion for an Order in Default of Response. Counsel for the Respondents served and filed a response and attended case management conferences on behalf of the Respondents in the fall of 2007.

6. However, on February 14, 2008, the solicitors for the Respondents moved to be removed as solicitors of record. It is not disputed that the solicitors had advised Mr. Roy in December 2007 of the fact that they would withdraw unless their fees were paid.

7. Since the Respondents' witness statements were due on February 25, 2008, Respondents' counsel was ordered to stay on the record until the statements were prepared. Mr. Roy was informed that he could not represent the corporate respondent without leave from the Tribunal and that he could retain counsel to act on behalf of PCMG and himself.

8. Seven days before the commencement of the hearing, Mr. Michael Osborne of Affleck, Greene, McMurtry wrote to the Tribunal indicating that he had been asked to represent PCMG and Mr. Roy at the hearing. He asked that it be rescheduled because he was not available in April.

9. The Tribunal denied the request the same day and noted, in particular, that Mr. Roy had known for many months that the hearing had been scheduled for the month of April 2008.

10. The Respondents did not retain counsel who could attend the hearing so Mr. Roy was self-represented and PCMG was unrepresented.

11. Minto Roy's final written argument, which was filed on May 1, 2008, showed that, although Mr. Osborne did not appear at the hearing, he reviewed the transcripts and assisted Mr. Roy with the preparation of his initial final argument. Mr. Osborne then acted for both Respondents when he prepared Minto Roy's Supplementary Argument dated May 9, 2008.

PUBLIC

Reference: Commissioner of Competition v. Sears Canada Inc., 2005 Comp. Trib. 2
File no.: CT2002004
Registry document no.: 0158b

IN THE MATTER OF the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34;

AND IN THE MATTER OF an inquiry pursuant to subparagraph 10(1)(b)(ii) of the Competition Act relating to certain marketing practices of Sears Canada Inc.;

AND IN THE MATTER OF an application by the Commissioner of Competition for an order pursuant to section 74.01 of the Competition Act.

B E T W E E N :

The Commissioner of Competition
(applicant)

and

Sears Canada Inc.
(respondent)

Dates of hearing: 20031020 to 20031024, 20031027 to 20031031, 20031103 to 20031107, 20031112 to 20031114, 20040116, 20040119 to 20040122, 20040202 to 20040203, 20040628 to 20040629, 20040819 to 20040820
Final written submissions filed: September 10, 2004; September 24, 2004 and October 1, 2004
Judicial Member: Dawson J. (presiding)
Date of Reasons: January 11, 2005

REASONS FOR ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

[1] The Commissioner of Competition ("Commissioner") alleges that, during three sales events held in November and December of 1999, Sears Canada Inc. ("Sears") employed deceptive marketing practices in connection with price representations Sears made concerning five kinds, or lines, of all-season tires that Sears promoted and sold to the public. The Commissioner asserts that this constituted reviewable conduct contrary to subsection 74.01(3) of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34 ("Act").

[2] Specifically at issue are representations made in advertisements about the regular selling price of the five lines of tires. The advertisements contained "save" and "percentage off" statements. For example, Sears advertised "Save 45% Our lowest prices of the year on Response RST Touring '2000' tires", and advertised comparisons between Sears' regular prices and its sale prices. The Commissioner asserts that the prices referred to by Sears as being its regular prices were inflated because: i) Sears did not sell a substantial volume of these tires at the regular price featured in the advertisements within a reasonable period of time before making the representations; and, ii) Sears did not offer these tires in good faith at the regular price featured in the advertisements for a substantial period of time recently before making the representations.

[3] The Commissioner states that Sears did not offer the tires at its regular prices in good faith because Sears had no expectation that it would sell a substantial volume of the tires at its regular prices, and because Sears' regular prices for the tires were not comparable to, and were much higher than, the regular prices for comparable tires offered by Sears competitors. The Commissioner says that the regular prices were set by Sears at inflated levels with the ulterior motive of attracting customers and generating sales by creating the impression that, when promoted as being "on sale", the tires represented a greater value than was really the case.

[4] The remedies sought by the Commissioner include an order prohibiting such reviewable conduct for a period of 10 years, the publication of corrective notices, and the payment of an administrative monetary penalty in the amount of $500,000.00.

[5] Sears contests the Commissioner's application with vigour. Sears asserts that the representations contained in its advertisements with respect to its regular or ordinary selling prices were not misleading in any, or in any material, respect. Sears says that the regular prices referred to in the advertisements were reasonably comparable to the prices being offered by many, if not most, of the principal tire retail outlets in each individual trade area where Sears competed. As well, Sears argues that the remedies sought by the Commissioner are unavailable at law and inappropriate. Finally, Sears says that subsection 74.01(3) of the Act is an unjustifiable infringement of Sears' fundamental freedom of commercial expression guaranteed by subsection 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter"). Sears seeks a determination that subsection 74.01(3) of the Act is inconsistent with the Charter and, therefore, of no force or effect.

[6] The Commissioner has conceded that subsection 74.01(3) of the Act ("impugned legislation") infringes Sears' constitutionally guaranteed right of commercial speech. The Commissioner submits, however, that this infringement is justified under section 1 of the Charter as a reasonable limit prescribed by law that is demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

[7] These reasons are lengthy. In them I find that: (i) subsection 74.01(3) of the Act is a reasonable limit prescribed by law that is demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society; (ii) Sears conceded that it failed to comply with the volume test ; (iii) Sears' regular prices for the Tires were not offered in good faith as required by the time test; (iv) Sears did not meet the frequency requirement of the time test for 4 of the 5 lines of tires; (v) Sears failed to establish that its OSP representations were not false or misleading in a material respect; (vi) a prohibition order should issue; and (vii) no order should issue requiring publication of a corrective notice. The issues of payment of an administrative monetary penalty and costs are reserved pending further submissions. The following is an index of the headings and sub-headings pursuant to which these reasons are organized, and the paragraph numbers where each section begins.

Index

II. BACKGROUND FACTS

[8] The parties agree that Sears is one of Canada's largest and most trusted retailers. It sells general merchandise to the public through various business channels, including retail outlets located across Canada. In 1999, Sears supplied 28 lines of tires to the public through 67 Retail Automotive Centres located across Canada.

(i) The Tires

[9] At issue are the following five tire lines (together the "Tires"):

i) RoadHandler "T" Plus (manufactured by Michelin)

ii) BF Goodrich Plus (manufactured by BF Goodrich)

iii) Weatherwise R H Sport (manufactured by Michelin)

iv) Response RST Touring '2000' (manufactured by Cooper)

v) Silverguard Ultra IV (manufactured by Bridgestone)

[10] The Tires are all-season passenger tires. Together they represented approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] % of the all-season passenger tire sold by Sears in 1999 and about [CONFIDENTIAL] % of the passenger vehicle tires sold by Sears in 1999. In dollar terms, the Tires represented approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] % of the total sales generated by Sears with respect to the sale of all of its tires. No other retailer in Canada promoted the Tires or supplied the Tires to the public in 1999. Each line was exclusive to Sears.

(ii) Sears' pricing strategy

[11] Sears is an "off-price" (also called a "high-low") retailer, which means that Sears relies on discounting and promotions to build in-store traffic and generate sales. An off-price or high-low retailer typically charges a higher "regular" price for its merchandise and then, from time to time, offers merchandise "on-sale" at event-driven discount sales.

[12] During 1999, Sears offered the Tires for sale at the following four price points:

a) Sears' "regular" price was the price of a single unit of any Tire offered by Sears, when that particular tire was not promoted as being "on sale". This was the price used as the reference price in advertisements when the Tires were promoted as being "on sale" by Sears.

b) Sears' "2For" price was the price at which Sears would sell two or more of a given tire to consumers when that tire was not being offered at a "sale" price. In 1999, Sears' "2For" price for a given tire was always lower than its regular price for a single unit. Sears did not use its "2For" price as a reference price in any of the sales representations at issue and did not advertise its "2For" price when promoting retail sales. The "2For" price came into effect when a customer bought more than one tire and the customer was only informed of the discount on a purchase of multiple tires by the sales associate at the store.

c) Sears' "normal promotional" price was the usual sale price advertised by Sears, which was a set percentage off the "regular" price for each tire. The amount of the discount depended on the line of tire. When "normal promotional" prices were advertised in 1999, they were always compared to the "regular" price for the relevant tire, and not to the "2For" price. These discounts were referred to by Sears as "Save Stories".

d) Sears' "Great Item", "Big News", "Lowest Prices of the Year" or other similar expressions refer to a further discounted promotional price where the discount consumers received was greater than the discount obtained with the "normal promotional" price. When "Great Item" style promotional prices were advertised in 1999, they were always compared to the "regular" price for a single relevant tire and not the "2For" price.

[13] The following illustrates the relationship between the four price levels. For the Response RST Touring '2000' tire (size P215/70R14), Sears' pricing in 1999 was as follows:

i) Regular (single unit) price - $133.99;

ii) 2For price - $87.99 (each);

iii) Normal promotional price - $79.99 (each, representing a 40 % discount off the regular single unit price);

iv) Great Item price - $72.99 (each, representing a 45 % discount off the regular single unit price).

[14] Sears' regular single unit prices for tires in 1999 were set in the Fall of 1998 and were not altered in 1999. Sears' 2For, normal promotional, and Great Item prices were also set in the Fall of 1998 and those prices remained largely unchanged in 1999. As a general rule, Sears' prices were set nationally so that the Tires sold for the same price at each Sears Retail Automotive Centre.

(iii) The promotion of the Tires

[15] Throughout 1999, Sears advertised the Tires through various media, including flyers (or "pre-prints"), newspapers, in-store leaflets, and corporate-wide, national events, which were advertised in various newspapers across Canada. Sears' advertisements contained representations of the price at which the Tires were ordinarily sold by Sears, compared with the sale prices on the Tires being promoted. The advertisements were placed in newspapers published across the country including, for example, the Vancouver Sun, the Montreal Gazette and the Calgary Sun.

[16] This application puts in issue the ordinary selling price representations made during three different national sales events in 1999, the first in effect between November 8 and November 14, the second in effect between November 22 and November 28, and the final event in effect on December 18 and 19.

[17] For the first sales event, Sears distributed nationally a flyer entitled "SEARS Shop Wish and Win" that advertised sale prices on the Response RST Touring '2000' and the Michelin RoadHandler "T" Plus tires. The following is an example of the advertisement found in the flyer promoting the sale:

> MICHELIN®
>
> RoadHandler T Plus Tires
>
> | Size | Sears reg. | Sale, each |
> |---|---|---|
> | P175/70R13 | 153.99 | 91.99 |
> | P185/70R14 | 168.99 | 99.99 |
> | P205/70R14 | 190.99 | 113.99 |
> | P205/70R15 | 203.99 | 121.99 |
> | P185/65R14 | 179.99 | 107.99 |
> | P195/65R15 | 188.99 | 112.99 |
> | P205/65R15 | 199.99 | 119.99 |
> | P225/60R16 | 219.99 | 131.99 |
>
> Other sizes also on sale
>
> save 40%
> ALL MICHELIN ALL-SEASON PASSENGER TIRES
> Shown: RoadHandler® T Plus tire is made for Sears by Michelin.
> Backed by a 6-year unlimited mileage Tread Wearout Warranty;
> details in store. #51000 series

[18] In support of the first sales event, Sears also published newspaper advertisements promoting the Michelin RoadHandler "T" Plus and/or the Response RST Touring '2000' in a number of large circulation newspapers across the country (including, for example, the Vancouver Sun and the Montreal Gazette). These newspaper advertisements were 5.625" x 9.625" in size or larger.

[19] The second sales event ran between November 22 and November 28, 1999. The event promoted a sale on Silverguard Ultra IV tires which was advertised in a weekly flyer, in newspaper advertisements and in leaflets distributed in-store at all Sears Retail Automotive Centres. The weekly flyer contained the following advertisement:

Silverguard Ultra IV Tires

Size	Sears reg.	Sale, each
P185/75R14	109.99	54.99
P195/75R14	116.99	58.49
P235/75R15XL	149.99	74.49
P175/70R13	99.99	49.99
P185/70R14	113.99	56.99
P195/70R14	119.99	59.99
P205/70R14	123.99	61.99
P215/70R14	129.99	64.99
P205/70R15	133.99	66.99
P205/65R15	139.99	69.99

Other sizes also on sale

½ PRICE

SILVERGUARD 'ULTRA IV' ALL-SEASON TIRES

Made for Sears by Bridgestone and backed by a 110,000 km Tread Wearout Warranty: details in store. #68000 ser. From 45[49] each. P155/80R13. Sears reg. 90.99

[20] The third sales event was held on December 18 and 19, 1999. The BF Goodrich Plus and Weatherwise tires were promoted during this event. The event was advertised in a weekend flyer which was distributed nationally. The BF Goodrich Plus tire was advertised as "save 25%" while the flyer described the Weatherwise tire price as "save 40%".

(iv) Tire sales

[21] The parties agree that the following table represents the sales numbers and percentages of the Tires sold at Sears' regular selling price in the 12 month period preceding the relevant regular selling price representations:

Table 1: Summary of Sales volumes

		1	2	3	4	5
Line	Time-frame	Total number of the Tires sold by Sears in the year before the relevant Representation	Tires sold as "singles", that is, not as a part of a bundle of two or more	Percentage of the total number of Tires sold, which were sold singly (col. 2 as a % of col. 1)	Of all singles sold, the number sold at the Regular, Single Unit Selling Price	Percentage of the total Tires sold at the Regular, Single Unit Selling Price (col. 4 as a % of col. 1)
BF Goodrich Plus	12/18/98 - 12/18/99	[CONFIDENTIAL]	[CONFIDENTIAL]	6.53%	[CONFIDENTIAL]	2.29%
Michelin Roadhandler 'T' Plus	11/08/98 - 11/08/99	[CONFIDENTIAL]	[CONFIDENTIAL]	3.84%	[CONFIDENTIAL]	1.30%
Michelin Weatherwise RH Sport	12/18/98 - 12/18/99	[CONFIDENTIAL]	[CONFIDENTIAL]	3.81%	[CONFIDENTIAL]	0.82%
Response RST Touring 2000	11/08/98 - 11/08/99	[CONFIDENTIAL]	[CONFIDENTIAL]	2.19%	[CONFIDENTIAL]	0.51%
Silverguard Ultra IV	11/22/98 - 11/22/99	[CONFIDENTIAL]	[CONFIDENTIAL]	3.22%	[CONFIDENTIAL]	1.21%
Totals		[CONFIDENTIAL]	[CONFIDENTIAL]	4.03%	[CONFIDENTIAL]	1.28%

[22] The following two tables show the number of days that the Tires were offered by Sears at Sears' regular price, compared to the number of days the Tires were offered at a price below Sears' regular price. The first table reflects the six month period that preceded the representations, the second table reflects the prior twelve month period.

Table 2: Summary of Time Analysis
(For the Six Month Period Preceding the Relevant Representations)

	BF Goodrich Plus	RoadHandler "T" Plus	Weatherwise /RH Sport	Response RST Touring '2000'	Silverguard Ultra IV
Date of Representation	Dec. 18, 1999	Nov. 8, 1999	Dec. 18, 1999	Nov. 8, 1999	Nov. 22, 1999
Start and End of 6 month period	June 18 to Dec. 17, 1999	May 9 to Nov.7, 1999	June 18 to Dec. 17, 1999	May 9 to Nov. 7, 1999	May 23 to Nov. 21, 1999
Total of Days	183	183	183	183	183
Number of days at reduced prices	100	113	148	99	73
% of days at reduced prices	55%	62%	81%	54%* or 50.35%	40%
Number of days at Regular Prices	83	70	35	84	110
% of Time at Regular Prices	45%	38%	19%	46%* or 49.65%	60%

* Sears argues that the correct figures are the second ones shown with respect to the Response RST Touring '2000'.

Table 3: Summary of Time Analysis
(For the Twelve Month Period Preceding the Relevant Representations)

	BF Goodrich	RoadHandler "T" Plus	Weatherwise /RH Sport	Response RST Touring 2000	Silverguard Ultra IV
Date of Representation	Dec. 18, 1999	Nov. 8, 1999	Dec. 18, 1999	Nov. 8, 1999	Nov. 22, 1999
Start and End of 12 month period	Dec. 19, 1998 to Dec. 17, 1999	Nov. 9, 1998 to Nov.7, 1999	Dec. 19, 1998 to Dec. 17, 1999	Nov. 9, 1998 to Nov. 7, 1999	Nov. 23, 1998 to Nov. 21, 1999
Total of Days	365	365	365	365	365
Number of days at reduced prices	181	246	283	121	184
% of days at reduced prices	49.59%	67.40%	77.53%	33.15%	50.41%
Number of days at Regular Prices	184	119	82	244	181
% of Time at Regular Prices	50.41%	32.60%	22.47%	66.85%	49.59%

III. THE APPLICABLE LEGISLATION

[23] Subsection 74.01(3) of the Act is found in Part VII.1 of the Act which is entitled "Deceptive Marketing Practices". Part VII.1 of the Act permits the Commissioner to pursue administrative remedies, rather than criminal prosecution, in relation to deceptive marketing practices including misleading advertising.

[24] Under section 74.01 of the Act, a person engages in reviewable conduct where the person, for the purpose of promoting any product or business interest, makes a representation to the public that is false or misleading in a material respect. The general impression conveyed by a representation as well as its literal meaning is to be taken into account when determining whether or not the representation is false or misleading in a material respect.

[25] Subsection 74.01(3) of the Act deals with misleading representations with respect to a seller's own ordinary selling price. Subsection 74.01(3) reads as follows:

74.01(3) A person engages in reviewable conduct who, for the purpose of promoting, directly or	74.01(3) Est susceptible d'examen le comportement de quiconque donne, de quelque manière que ce soit, indirectly, the supply or use of a product or for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, any business interest, by any means whatever, makes a representation to the public as to price that is clearly specified to be the price at which a product or like products have been, are or will be ordinarily supplied by the person making the representation where that person, having regard to the nature of the product and the relevant geographic market,

(a) has not sold a substantial volume of the product at that price or a higher price within a reasonable period of time before or after the making of the representation, as the case may be; and aux fins de promouvoir directement ou indirectement soit la fourniture ou l'usage d'un produit, soit des intérêts commerciaux quelconques, des indications au public relativement au prix auquel elle a fourni, fournit ou fournira habituellement un produit ou des produits similaires, si, compte tenu de la nature du produit et du marché géographique pertinent, cette personne n'a pas, à la fois :
(b) has not offered the product at that price or a higher price in good faith for a substantial period of time recently before or immediately after the making of the representation, as the case may be.

a) vendu une quantité importante du produit à ce prix ou à un prix plus élevé pendant une période raisonnable antérieure ou postérieure à la communication des indications;
b) offert de bonne foi le produit à ce prix ou à un prix plus élevé pendant une période importante précédant de peu ou suivant de peu la communication des indications.

[26] An ordinary selling price (“OSP”) representation will not constitute reviewable conduct under subsection 74.01(3) if either one of the following tests is satisfied:

(a) a substantial volume of the product was sold at that price or a higher price within a reasonable period of time before or after the making of the representation (“volume test”); or

(b) the product was offered for sale, in good faith, at that price or a higher price for a substantial period of time recently before or immediately after the making of the representation (“time test”).

In the present case, the period of time to be considered is the period before the making of the representations at issue because the representations relate to the price at which the Tires were previously sold (subsection 74.01(4) of the Act).

[27] The requirement that any false or misleading representation must be material is found in subsection 74.01(5) of the Act which provides:

74.01(5) Subsections (2) and (3) do not apply to a person who establishes that, in the circumstances, a representation as to price is not false or misleading in a material respect.

74.01(5) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) ne s'appliquent pas à la personne qui établit que, dans les circonstances, les indications sur le prix ne sont pas fausses ou trompeuses sur un point important.

[28] The remedies available for a breach of subsection 74.01(3) of the Act are prescribed in section 74.1 of the Act. Subsection 74.1(1) provides that a court (defined to include the Competition Tribunal ("Tribunal")) may, where it has determined that a person has engaged in reviewable conduct, order the person:

(a) not to engage in the conduct or substantially similar reviewable conduct;

(b) to publish a corrective notice describing the reviewable conduct; and

(c) to pay an administrative monetary penalty.

[29] No order requiring the publication of a corrective notice or the payment of an administrative monetary penalty may be made where the person in question establishes that they exercised due diligence to prevent the reviewable conduct from occurring (subsection 74.1(3) of the Act).

[30] Sections 74.01, 74.09 and 74.1 are set out in their entirety in the appendix to these reasons.

IV. THE CONSTITUTIONAL CHALLENGE

[31] As noted above, Sears alleges, and the Commissioner concedes, that subsection 74.01(3) of the Act infringes Sears' fundamental right of freedom of expression guaranteed under subsection 2(b) of the Charter. In my view, this is an appropriate concession.

[32] The Supreme Court of Canada has held with respect to the analysis of freedom of expression and its infringement that:

(i) The first step is to discover whether the activity which the affected entity wishes to pursue properly falls within "freedom of expression". Activity is expressive, and protected, if it attempts to convey meaning. If an activity conveys or attempts to convey a meaning, it has expressive content and prima facie falls within the scope of the Charter guarantee (unless meaning is conveyed through a violent form of expression).

(ii) The second step in the inquiry is to determine whether the purpose or effect of the government action in question is to restrict freedom of expression.

See: Irwin Toy Ltd. v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 927, particularly at pages 967-979.

[33] Applying this analysis, the Supreme Court has previously held that prohibitions against engaging in commercial expression by advertising infringe subsection 2(b) of the Charter. See: RJR Macdonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), [1995] 3 S.C.R. 199 at paragraph 58.

[34] In the present case, Sears' OSP representations convey or attempt to convey meaning.

Those representations therefore have expressive content so as to fall, prima facie, within the sphere of conduct protected by subsection 2(b) of the Charter. The purpose of subsection 74.01(3) of the Act is to restrict or control attempts by Sears and others to convey a meaning by proscribing reviewable conduct and by imposing restrictions and controls in relation to OSP representations.

[35] It follows, as the Commissioner has conceded, that the impugned legislation limits the freedom of expression guaranteed to Sears by subsection 2(b) of the Charter. The next inquiry therefore becomes whether the impugned legislation is justified under section 1 of the Charter.

(i) Applicable principles of law

[36] To be justified under section 1 of the Charter, a limit on freedom of expression must be "prescribed by law". A limit is not prescribed by law within section 1 if it does not provide "an adequate basis for legal debate". See: R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 606 at page 639. The onus of establishing that a limit is prescribed by law is on the state actor who claims that the limit is justified.

[37] The assessment of whether a limit prescribed by law is reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society is to be conducted in accordance with the principles enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103. There are two central criteria to be met:

1. The objective of the impugned measure must be of sufficient importance to warrant overriding a constitutionally protected right or freedom. To be characterized as sufficiently important, the objective must relate to concerns which are pressing and substantial in a free and democratic society.

2. Assuming that a sufficiently important objective is established, the means chosen to achieve the objective must pass a proportionality test. To do so, the means must:

    a. Be rationally connected to the objective. This requires that the means chosen promote the asserted objective. The means must not be arbitrary, unfair or based on irrational considerations.

    b. Impair the right or freedom in question as little as possible. This requires that the measure goes no further than reasonably necessary in order to achieve the objective.

    c. Be such that the effects of the measure on the limitation of rights and freedoms are proportional to the objective. This requires that the overall benefits of the measure must outweigh the measure's negative impact.

See also: Sauvé v. Canada (Chief Electoral Officer), [2002] 3 S.C.R. 519.

[38] Relevant considerations when conducting the analysis articulated in Oakes, supra are that:

1. The onus of proving that a limit on a right or freedom protected by the Charter is reasonable and demonstrably justified is borne by the party seeking to uphold the limitation. See: Oakes at page 137.

2. The standard of proof is the civil standard. Where evidence is required in order to prove the constituent elements of the section 1 analysis, the test for the existence of a balance of probabilities must be applied rigorously, recognizing, however, that within the civil standard of proof there exist different degrees of probability depending upon the case. See: Oakes at page 137.

3. The analysis taught in Oakes is not to be applied in a rigid or mechanical fashion. It is to be applied flexibly. See: RJR Macdonald, supra, at paragraph 63.

4. The analysis must be undertaken with close attention to the contextual factors. This is because the objective of the impugned measure can only be established by canvassing the nature of the problem it addresses, and the proportionality of the means used can only be evaluated in the context of the entire factual setting. See: Thomson Newspapers Co. v. Canada (Attorney General), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 877 at paragraph 87.

5. The context will also impact upon the nature of the proof required to justify the measure. While some matters are capable of empirical proof, others (for example, matters involving philosophical or social considerations) are not. In those latter cases, "it is sufficient to satisfy the reasonable person looking at all of the evidence and relevant considerations, that the state is justified in infringing the right at stake to the degree it has". Common sense and inferential reasoning may be applied to supplement the evidence. See: Sauvé, supra, at paragraph 18.

6. With respect to the minimal impairment test, where a legislative provision is challenged, the Supreme Court of Canada has held that Parliament need not choose the absolutely least intrusive means to attain its objectives, but rather must come within a range of means which impair guaranteed rights as little as reasonably possible.

(ii) A limit prescribed by law

[39] Turning to the application of these principles to the evidence which is before the Tribunal, I begin by considering whether the impugned legislation is a limit prescribed by law.

[40] Sears argues that the words used in subsection 74.01(3) of the Act are: i) excessively vague, uncertain and imprecise; ii) subject to unintelligible standards; and iii) subject to arbitrary application by the Commissioner. Particular reliance is placed on the fact that the Act provides no definition of the terms "substantial volume", "reasonable period of time", "substantial period of time" or "recently", which are all used in the impugned legislation. While subsection 74.01(3) provides that the nature of the product and the relevant geographic market are factors to be considered in determining whether a person engages in reviewable conduct, Sears argues that the Act does not define these factors, nor does the Act provide any assistance or direction as to what weight should be given to each of these factors, nor is guidance offered about how these factors affect the determination of whether a person has complied with the volume and time tests. In the result, Sears submits that it is not possible for the Tribunal to determine Parliament's intent by interpreting the words at issue using the ordinary tools of statutory interpretation.

[41] With respect to the Information Bulletin entitled "Ordinary Price Claims", published by the Commissioner to outline her approach to the enforcement of the ordinary price claims provisions of the Act ("Guidelines"), Sears states that, as non-legal and non-binding administrative guidelines, they may be amended or replaced at will by the Commissioner. As such, they are not criteria prescribed by law which can justify any limitation on expression. Indeed, Sears says that the existence and purpose of the Guidelines support Sears' contention that the impugned legislation is unconstitutionally vague and reflect the fact that subsection 74.01(3), standing alone, provides insufficient guidance.

[42] In short, Sears says that what is in issue is clarity; how much clarity should a statutory provision have and at what stage in the life of a statutory provision should clarity be evident?

[43] Two decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada provide significant assistance in dealing with Sears' submissions.

[44] In Irwin Toy, supra, at page 983, Chief Justice Dickson, writing for the majority, observed that absolute precision in the law exists rarely, "if at all". He said that the question to be asked is whether the legislation at issue provides an "intelligible standard according to which the judiciary must do its work. The task of interpreting how that standard applies in particular instances might always be characterized as having a discretionary element, because the standard can never specify all the instances in which it applies". However, where there is "no intelligible standard" and a "plenary discretion" has been given to do what "seems best", there is no limit prescribed by law.

[45] Subsequently, in Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, supra, the Supreme Court reviewed its jurisprudence on this point and, at pages 626 and 627, Mr. Justice Gonthier, for the Court, set out the following propositions with respect to vagueness and its relevance to the Charter:

1. Vagueness can be raised under s. 7 of the Charter, since it is a principle of fundamental justice that laws may not be too vague. It can also be raised under s. 1 of the Charter in limine, on the basis that an enactment is so vague as not to satisfy the requirement that a limitation on Charter rights be "prescribed by law". Furthermore, vagueness is also relevant to the "minimal impairment" stage of the Oakes test (Morgentaler, Irwin Toy and the Prostitution Reference).

2. The "doctrine of vagueness" is founded on the rule of law, particularly on the principles of fair notice to citizens and limitation of enforcement discretion (Prostitution Reference and Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada).

3. Factors to be considered in determining whether a law is too vague include (a) the need for flexibility and the interpretative role of the courts, (b) the impossibility of achieving absolute certainty, a standard of intelligibility being more appropriate and (c) the possibility that many varying judicial interpretations of a given disposition may exist and perhaps coexist (Morgentaler, Irwin Toy, Prostitution Reference, Taylor and Osborne).

4. Vagueness, when raised under s. 7 or under s. 1 in limine, involves similar considerations (Prostitution Reference and Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada). On the other hand, vagueness as it relates to the "minimal impairment" branch of s. 1 merges with the related concept of over breadth (Committee for the Commonwealth of Canada and Osborne).

5. The Court will be reluctant to find a disposition so vague as not to qualify as "law" under s. 1 in limine, and will rather consider the scope of the disposition under the "minimal impairment" test (Taylor and Osborne).

[46] Justice Gonthier went on to confirm that the threshold for finding a law to be so vague that it does not qualify as a "law" is relatively high.

[47] With respect to the principles of fair notice to citizens and limitation of enforcement discretion referred to above at point 2, Justice Gonthier observed that fair notice comprises an understanding that certain conduct is the subject of legal restrictions (pages 633-635) and that limitation of enforcement discretion requires that a law must not be so devoid of precision that a conviction automatically follows from a decision to prosecute (pages 635-636).

[48] The Court concluded its comments about vagueness in the following terms at pages 638-640:

> Legal rules only provide a framework, a guide as to how one may behave, but certainty is > only reached in instant cases, where law is actualized by a competent authority. In the meanwhile, conduct is guided by approximation. The process of approximation sometimes results in quite a narrow set of options, sometimes in a broader one. Legal dispositions therefore delineate a risk zone, and cannot hope to do more, unless they are directed at individual instances.

>
> By setting out the boundaries of permissible and non-permissible conduct, these norms give rise to legal debate. They bear substance, and they allow for a discussion as to their actualization. They therefore limit enforcement discretion by introducing boundaries, and they also sufficiently delineate an area of risk to allow for substantive notice to citizens.
>
> Indeed no higher requirement as to certainty can be imposed on law in our modern State. Semantic arguments, based on a perception of language as an unequivocal medium, are unrealistic. Language is not the exact tool some may think it is. It cannot be argued that an enactment can and must provide enough guidance to predict the legal consequences of any given course of conduct in advance. All it can do is enunciate some boundaries, which create an area of risk. But it is inherent to our legal system that some conduct will fall along the boundaries of the area of risk; no definite prediction can then be made. Guidance, not direction, of conduct is a more realistic objective. The ECHR has repeatedly warned against a quest for certainty and adopted this "area of risk" approach in Sunday Times, supra, and especially the case of Silver and others, judgment of 25 March 1983, Series A No. 61, at pp. 33-34, and Malone, supra, at pp.32-33.
>
> A vague provision does not provide an adequate basis for legal debate, that is for reaching a conclusion as to its meaning by reasoned analysis applying legal criteria. It does not sufficiently delineate any area of risk, and thus can provide neither fair notice to the citizen nor a limitation of enforcement discretion. Such a provision is not intelligible, to use the terminology of previous decisions of this Court, and therefore it fails to give sufficient indications that could fuel a legal debate. It offers no grasp to the judiciary. This is an exacting standard, going beyond semantics. The term "legal debate" is used here not to express a new standard or one departing from that previously outlined by this Court. It is rather intended to reflect and encompass the same standard and criteria of fair notice and limitation of enforcement discretion viewed in the fuller context of an analysis of the quality and limits of human knowledge and understanding in the operation of the law. [underlining added]

[49] With that direction, I now consider whether subsection 74.01(3) of the Act gives sufficient guidance for legal debate, bearing in mind the caution of the Supreme Court that a relatively high standard must be applied in order to find legislation to be impermissibly vague, and the stated reluctance of the Supreme Court to find a provision so vague as not to qualify as a "law". Rather, the Court will consider vagueness as it relates to minimal impairment and over breadth.

[50] As noted above, the main challenge to subsection 74.01(3) is based on the use of the undefined terms "substantial volume", "reasonable period of time", "substantial period of time" and "recently". While these terms are not defined in the Act, and they defy precise measurement, they are terms of common usage with a commonly understood meaning. The word "substantial" has been held in another context under the Act to carry its ordinary meaning so as to mean something more than just de minimus. (See: Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Chrysler Canada Ltd. (1989), 27 C.P.R. (3d) 1 (Competition Tribunal); aff'd (1991) 38 C.P.R. (3d) 25 (F.C.A.)). As the Commissioner argues, there is no reason to conclude that the Tribunal is not equally capable of interpreting and applying the meaning of "substantial" in the context of subsection 74.01.(3). The word "reasonable" is widely used in Canadian statutes and has an understood meaning at common law. Similarly, the word "recently" has, in the words of Mr. Justice Muldoon in 74712 Alberta Ltd. v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue) (1994), 78 F.T.R. 259 at paragraph 12 "an inherently present tense connotation". It is defined in the Oxford English Dictionary to mean "at a recent date; not long before or ago; lately, newly". Thus, the terms about which Sears complains do carry commonly understood meanings.

[51] Further, the interpretation of subsection 74.01(3) is not constrained by a semantic inquiry into the meaning of each word used. In Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, supra, the Supreme Court considered whether paragraph 32(1)(c) of the Combines Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-23 (predecessor legislation to the Act) was a limit prescribed by law. That provision prohibited agreements to "prevent, or lessen, unduly, competition". The unanimous Court noted, at pages 647-648, that the interpretation of the provision was conditioned by the purposes of the legislation, by the rest of the section and the mode of inquiry adopted by the courts which had considered this provision.

[52] In the present case, the purpose of the impugned legislation is to prohibit deceptive ordinary price representations. This is a purpose within the general purpose of the Act. That general purpose, as stated in section 1.1 of the Act, is "to maintain and encourage competition in Canada" in order, among other things, "to provide consumers with competitive prices and product choices". Those policy objectives contribute to an understanding of whether, under the impugned legislation, a price qualifies as a legitimate OSP price.

[53] Subsection 74.01(3) also specifies two factors to be considered when applying the volume and time tests. Those factors are the nature of the product and the relevant geographic market. By providing factors which must be considered in applying the volume and time tests, the legislation provides further indication as to how the discretion it gives is to be exercised. Those two factors also provide needed flexibility. For example, the seasonal or perishable nature of a product may well require that a shorter time or smaller volume test be applied. Those factors ensure that the discretion contained in the impugned legislation is not unfettered with respect to application of the time and volume test.

[54] While Sears argues that neither the term "nature of the product" nor the term "relevant geographic market" are defined, and no guidance is given as to their application, it is my view that neither term could be defined too precisely because their meanings could vary depending upon the particular circumstances. I am confident, in the context of determining the reasonableness of an OSP representation, that the regard to be given to the nature of the product and the relevant geographic market contributes significantly to the adequacy of the basis for legal debate. It should be remembered that both the nature of a product and a geographic market are concepts which are commonly explored in the application of the Act.

[55] It follows, in my view, that the words used in the impugned legislation, when considered in the context of the purpose of the impugned legislation and the purpose of the Act, are sufficiently precise as to constitute a limit prescribed by law. The Act provides a framework and an intelligible standard for legal debate and judicial interpretation. It does this by setting out, to paraphrase the words of the Supreme Court in Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, supra, boundaries of permissible and non-permissible conduct which allow for discussion of their actualization. The boundaries limit enforcement discretion and sufficiently delineate an area of risk so as to give notice to potentially affected citizens. While providing a standard for legal debate, the legislation also provides flexibility in order to deal with the variety of circumstances which may arise (eg. seasonal goods, perishable goods) and evolving market practices.

[56] Confirmatory evidence that the impugned legislation provides an intelligible standard is, in my view, found in the "Report of the Consultative Panel on Amendments to the Competition Act" ("Consultative Panel") and in the legislation from other jurisdictions, put in evidence before the Tribunal.

[57] On June 28, 1995, the Minister of Industry announced the start of public consultations aimed at updating the Competition Act. As part of the consultation process, the Competition Bureau released a discussion paper which sought comments from interested parties on a number of potential amendments to the Act. Comment was specifically requested on misleading advertising and deceptive marketing practices, including the appropriate definition of an OSP for the purpose of assessing representations. A Consultative Panel, composed of eminent Canadian competition lawyers and academics, as well as representatives of Canadian consumer and retail associations, was established to review responses to the discussion paper. The recommendations of the Consultative Panel were set out in its report released on March 6, 1996 ("report").

[58] The report acknowledged that regular or ordinary price claims are common in the marketplace and that they can be a powerful and legitimate marketing tool because many consumers are attracted to promotions that promise a saving from the ordinary or regular price of a product. The Consultative Panel noted that the then current legislation prohibited materially misleading representations, but that most of those who commented on the discussion paper felt that the volume test applied by the Competition Bureau and the Attorney General under the existing legislation did not adequately reflect the reality of the marketplace. The Consultative Panel summarized the result of the public consultations on this point as follows at page 25 of its report:

> Some [commentators] asserted that the test should be based on the price at which a product is offered for sale for at least half of a relevant time period. It was asserted by both consumer and business commentators that consumers are most likely to interpret regular price claims as referring to the price at which the product is normally offered for sale. Such a test would be easy for retailers to meet since they can control the length of time at which they offer a product at a certain price.
>
> However, those supporting a time test generally were concerned that the offered price be bona fide. They believe a retailer should be required to demonstrate that it made bona fide efforts to generate some sales at the represented regular price to avoid artificially inflated regular prices for a > product.

>
> Other commentators felt that the volume test was appropriate. Still others felt that both tests should be available, as alternatives.

[59] After discussion and consideration of several alternative proposals, the Consultative Panel concluded that revised legislative provisions "should explicitly identify two alternative tests. A price comparison that complied with either test would not raise a question. By clearly identifying the circumstances under which a challenge could take place, the revised provision would provide greater certainty". In its report, the Consultative Panel went on to say at page 26:

> Specifically, to comply with the law in the case of a representation of a former selling price, the represented price would have to reflect either the price of sellers generally in the relevant market at which a substantial volume of recent sales of the product took place, or the price of sellers generally in the relevant market at which the product was recently offered for sale in good faith for a substantial period of time prior to the sale.
>
> Where the comparison price is clearly specified to be the price of the advertiser, these tests would apply with reference to the price of that person alone, rather than in relation to the price of sellers generally in the relevant market.
>
> [...]
>
> The Panel discussed the desirability of defining for greater certainty several terms contained in the revised provision. Such terms included "substantial volume", "good faith", "like products", "substantial time", "nature of the product" and "relevant market". Some Panel members cautioned against defining these terms too precisely, since their meanings could vary depending on the circumstances of each case. The consensus was that existing and future jurisprudence could provide sufficient guidance regarding the meaning of some of these terms. [underlining added]

[60] The following model provision was recommended by the Consultative Panel at page 28 of its report:

> (ii) a representation to the public concerning the price at which a product or like products have been, are or will be ordinarily supplied which is clearly specified to be the price of the person by whom or on whose behalf the representation is made is not misleading if the person making the representation establishes that it is the price at which that person:
>
> > (A) recently sold a substantial volume of the product, or
> >
> > (B) recently offered the product for sale in good faith for a substantial period of time prior to the sale. [underlining added]

The model provided that, in making a determination under this test, regard should be had to the nature of the product and the relevant market.

[61] In the view of the expert Consultative Panel, salient terms, including the terms about which Sears now complains, could not be defined too precisely because their meaning could vary depending on the circumstances of each case. Clearly, the Consultative Panel was of the view that the use of terms such as “recently”, “substantial volume”, and “substantial period of time” provided an intelligible standard for the exercise of discretion. It was the consensus of the Consultative Panel that existing and future jurisprudence could provide sufficient guidance regarding the meaning of the terms used. I take this to be recognition of: i) the need for flexibility and the interpretive role of the courts; and, ii) the impossibility of achieving absolute certainty. These are the factors to be considered in determining whether a law is too vague (Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, supra at pages 626-627).

[62] With respect to comparable legislation from other jurisdictions, Sears called Mr. Stephen Mahinka, as an expert witness. Mr. Mahinka is a lawyer who is a partner in the law firm of Morgan, Lewis & Bockius LLP. There he manages the Antitrust Practice Group of the Washington, D.C. office. Mr. Mahinka has 28 years of experience advising clients with respect to pricing, marketing, advertising and consumer protection matters involving the U.S. Federal Trade Commission. He has advised clients regarding compliance with price comparison requirements under U.S. and state laws. He has defended clients whose pricing and advertising activities have been under investigation and he has acted as counsel in litigation asserting violations of state comparative pricing requirements. As well, he has published in the order of 60 articles concerning U.S. antitrust law and consumer protection issues.

[63] Over the Commissioner’s objection, the Tribunal ruled that Mr. Mahinka was qualified to opine upon comparative price advertising, consumer protection and antitrust law at the state level. The Tribunal also concluded that he was qualified to opine on U.S. federal comparative price advertising, consumer protection and antitrust law. The Commissioner conceded Mr. Mahinka’s expertise within the federal sphere.

[64] Mr. Mahinka testified as to his review of U.S. federal and state laws relating to the advertising of comparison prices. Included in his testimony was evidence that a number of U.S. jurisdictions have enacted legislation that contains broad general terms. For example, Florida’s Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Law generally prohibits unfair methods of competition, unconscionable acts or practices, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce. Mr. Mahinka testified that regulations implementing these provisions were “repealed on the basis that it was neither possible nor necessary to codify every conceivable deceptive and unfair trade practice prohibited by the statute”.

[65] New York’s General Business Law makes false advertising in the conduct of any business unlawful. “False advertising” is defined as advertising that is misleading in a material respect.

[66] Under Virginia law, a former price may not be advertised unless: (1) it is the price at or above which a “substantial number of sales” were made in the “recent regular course of business”; (2) the former price was the price at which such goods or services or “substantially similar” goods or services were openly and actively offered for sale for a “reasonably substantial period of time” in the “recent regular course of business” honestly, in good faith and not for the purpose of establishing a fictitious higher price on which a deceptive comparison might be based; (3) the former price is based on a markup that does not exceed the supplier's cost plus the usual and customary markup used by the supplier in the actual sale of such goods or services in the recent, regular course of business; or (4) the date on which "substantial sales" were made or the goods were openly and actively offered for sale is advertised in a clear and conspicuous manner. Mr. Mahinka testified that the term "substantial sales" is further defined in Virginia's statute as "a substantial aggregate volume of sales of identical or comparable goods or services at or above the advertised comparison in the supplier's trade area" but that the other terms used are not further defined.

[67] I find this evidence to confirm that other legislators have recognized the need for flexibility in regulating deceptive trade practices in general and OSP representations in particular. This less specific legislation establishes general boundaries of non-permissible conduct which is adequate for enforcement purposes. The existence of such general legislation in my view supports the view that the impugned legislation is capable of adequately giving rise to legal debate.

[68] It is true that Mr. Mahinka's evidence included examples of very specific state legislation. However, the fact that some legislation attaches consequences to more precisely-defined acts does not lead to the conclusion that more general provisions are not capable of constituting a limit prescribed by law.

[69] In rejecting Sears' position that the legislation is not a limit prescribed by law, I have also considered its submission based on the existence of the Guidelines. In Irwin Toy, supra at page 983, the majority of the Supreme Court noted that one could not infer from the existence of guidelines, (in that case, promulgated by the Quebec Office of Consumer Protection in order to help advertisers comply with advertising restrictions) that there was no intelligible standard to apply. In the view of the majority, one could only infer that the Office of Consumer Protection found it reasonable, as part of its mandate, to provide a voluntary pre-clearance mechanism. Similarly, I do not infer from the existence of the Guidelines that there are no intelligible standards for a court or the Tribunal to apply. I note that the report of the Consultative Panel included a recommendation that the Competition Bureau issue enforcement guidelines in draft form at the same time as the new legislation was introduced. One can infer that the Commissioner considered this recommendation to be reasonable and the Guidelines helpful.

(iii) Is the infringement reasonable and demonstrably justified?

[70] Having found the impugned legislation to be a limit prescribed by law, the next step is to apply the principles articulated in Oakes to the evidence before the Tribunal.

(a) Contextual considerations

[71] As already noted, in Oakes, the Supreme Court noted that the analysis is to be conducted with close attention to the contextual factors. The contextual factors are relevant to establishing the objective of the impugned legislation and to evaluating the proportionality of the means used to fulfil the pressing and substantial objectives of the legislation. Characterizing the context of the impugned provision also touches upon the nature of the evidence required at each stage of the analysis in order to establish demonstrable justification.

[72] I believe that the relevant contextual considerations are as follows.

[73] First, it is relevant to consider the nature of the activity which is infringed. This is necessary because, where the right to expression is violated, the value of the expression that is limited affects the degree of constitutional protection (Thomson Newspapers, supra at paragraph 91).

[74] Here, what is restricted are representations by a seller of the seller's own ordinary selling prices where the representations do not satisfy either the volume or the time test, and where any false or misleading representation is material.

[75] The core values of freedom of expression include the search for political, artistic and scientific truth, the protection of individual autonomy and self-development, and the promotion of public participation in the democratic process: RJR Macdonald, supra at paragraph 72. A lower standard of justification is required where the form of expression which is limited lies further from these core values.

[76] In my view, the expression limited by the impugned legislation does not fall within the core protected values. The limited expression is expression that is deceptive in a material way. This is far removed from the values subsection 2(b) of the Charter is intended to protect. In the result, a lower a standard of justification is required.

[77] Second, it is a relevant contextual factor to consider the vulnerability of the group the legislation seeks to protect: Thomson Newspapers, at paragraphs 90 and 112.

[78] Both the Consultative Panel and the Guidelines recognize that OSP claims are a powerful and legitimate marketing tool. Sears, in its own document entitled "Guidelines for Savings Claims", notes that "[s]avings claims, properly used, are a powerful selling tool".

[79] Dr. Donald Lichtenstein testified as an expert for the Commissioner. He is a Professor of Marketing at the Leeds School of Business at the University of Colorado in Boulder. He holds a Ph. D. with a major in Marketing obtained in 1984 from the University of South Carolina. Dr. Lichtenstein has lectured extensively about Marketing at the graduate and undergraduate level. He has served on the Editorial Review Board of the Journal of Marketing, the Journal of Consumer Research, and the Journal of Business Research. He is a member of the Editorial Review Board for the Journal of Public Policy and Marketing. In 2001, he received the Outstanding Reviewer Award from the Journal of Consumer Research. Dr. Lichtenstein continues to be an ad hoc reviewer for the Journal of Marketing and other publications. As well, has presented numerous papers relating to marketing at conferences, has applied research experience, and has been published extensively in refereed publications and nationally refereed proceedings.

[80] The Tribunal ruled that Dr. Lichtenstein was qualified to provide opinion evidence on two topics. The first was marketing matters, and particularly consumer behaviour as it relates to pricing and other stimuli. The second topic was research design and methodology within the social sciences. Dr. Lichtenstein provided two separate written opinions, one pertaining to the constitutional question, the other pertaining to the Commissioner's deceptive marketing allegations. He testified with respect to both issues.

[81] I was impressed by Dr. Lichtenstein's expertise. Much of his testimony with respect to marketing matters was unchallenged and I accept his testimony given with respect to the constitutional issue. Relevant to the contextual factors at issue was his evidence that:

- OSPs have a powerful influence on consumers.

- OSP advertising creates a general impression of savings for the average consumer, positively affects intentions to purchase from the advertiser and negatively affects intentions to search competitors for a lower price.

- The average consumer has low levels of price knowledge and engages in very little pre-purchase search to gain this knowledge, even for expensive items. Thus, the average consumer is vulnerable to deceptive OSP advertising.

- By signalling a temporary bargain, a seller's own OSP advertising affects not only consumers who are currently contemplating the purchase of a given product but, particularly for products where wear-out occurs on a visible continuum, may also pull some customers into the market sooner than otherwise would be the case.

- Misleading OSP advertising can lead consumers to believe that, by purchasing the advertised product, they will receive a quality level that is commensurate with the higher reference price, while only having to pay the lower sale price.

- The average consumer who purchases a product advertised with an inflated seller's own OSP is unlikely to become aware that he or she was mislead, and thus, he or she remains susceptible to subsequent reference price deceptions.

- Receiving a "good deal" in and of itself is a significant motivation for purchase for many consumers who purchase OSP advertised items. This is referred to as "transaction utility".

- Retailers who misuse OSPs as a marketing tool capitalize on consumers who view OSP claims as "proxies" for a good deal.

- The deceptive OSP advertisements from one retailer can result in negative goodwill to competitors who advertise in a non-deceptive manner. In Dr. Lichtenstein's words:

> For consumers who do patronize a competitor and then encounter and encode a deceptive OSP from a high credibility source, they will be more prone to question the value from the retailer they patronized. They will be likely to experience cognitive dissonance and a loss of goodwill and future purchase intentions toward the retailer from [whom] they purchased.

- A retailer who uses inflated OSP advertising not only benefits from deceptive advertising on the products that are promoted in this manner, but the beneficial effect also extends to other non-promoted product/service categories. When the nature of the promoted price is misrepresented to consumers, for example, with an inflated seller's own OSP, retailers not only capture sales on the item that attracted consumers to the store, but also on other items consumers purchase once in the store. Thus, competitors operating in good faith lose the opportunity to compete on a level playing field not only for the promoted item, but for all items that the consumer purchases.

- When advertiser behaviour results in consumers purchasing products that provide less value for money, it motivates manufacturers to allocate factors of production to those items instead of to items that would otherwise be produced (i.e., those that "truly" provide higher value for money). This harms competition and distorts price signals which interfere with the optimal allocation of productive resources, so that total consumer welfare is decreased.

[82] A third related contextual factor, conceded in oral argument by Sears to be relevant, is the objective of the impugned legislation and the nature of the problem it seeks to address. The Act seeks to encourage and maintain competition and the objective of the impugned legislation is to do this by improving the quality and accuracy of marketplace information and by discouraging deceptive marketing practices.

[83] Sears argues that a centrally important contextual factor is that, prior to the enactment of the impugned legislation, stakeholders had "explicitly and forcefully lamented the vagueness and lack of precision, certainty and understanding relating to the ordinary selling price legislation". I agree that clarity of legislation is relevant to considerations of vagueness (as that relates both to the "prescribed by law" and minimal impairment requirements) and, in that sense, clarity touches on the proportionality of the legislation. I am not satisfied on the evidence that clarity and certainty are otherwise relevant contextual factors, or that clarity is an over-arching contextual factor.

(b) Does the infringement achieve a constitutionally valid purpose or objective?

[84] Having set out the relevant contextual considerations, I move to the first step of the Oakes analysis. The question to be answered at this stage is whether the objective of the impugned legislation is sufficiently important that it is, in principle, capable of justifying a limitation on Sears' freedom of expression.

[85] Sears concedes that the objective is sufficiently important. Notwithstanding that concession, it is important at this stage to properly state, and not over-state, the objective of the impugned legislation. Improperly stating the objective of the legislation will compromise the analysis.

[86] Sears describes the objectives of the impugned legislation as follows:

> The evidence before the Tribunal in this proceeding has confirmed that the objectives of the Act include, inter alia, setting and making known the rules or parameters governing competition in Canada and, importantly, having the Act judicially enforced in a manner that is fair to all and in accordance with the rules previously established. Other objectives include the improvement of the quality and accuracy of marketplace information and discouraging deceptive marketing practices.

[87] In my view, the evidence of the legislative history of the provisions of the Act relating to ordinary price representations is relevant to determining the objectives of the impugned legislation. It is described below.

[88] In 1960, a criminal prohibition on the making of misleading ordinary price representations was added to what was then the Combines Investigation Act. The initial provision read as follows:

33C(1) Every one who, for the purpose of promoting the sale or use of an article, makes any materially misleading representation to the public, by any means whatever, concerning the price at which such or like articles have been, are, or will be, ordinarily sold, is guilty of an offence.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a person who publishes an advertisement that he accepts in good faith for publication in the ordinary course of his business.

33c.(1) Quiconque, afin de favoriser la vente ou l'emploi d'un article fait au public un exposé essentiellement trompeur, de quelque façon que ce soit, en ce qui concerne le prix auquel ledit article ou des articles, semblables ont été, sont ou seront ordinairement vendus, est coupable d'une infraction punissable sur déclaration sommaire de culpabilité.

(2) Le paragraphe (1) ne s'applique pas à une personne qui fait paraître une annonce publicitaire qu'elle accepte de bonne foi en vue de la publication dans le cours de son entreprise.

[89] An explanation of the purpose of the criminal prohibition is found in remarks made to the House of Commons by the then Minister of Justice when he moved the second reading of the bill to amend the Combines Investigation Act to add the criminal prohibition. He said:

> The fourth and last amendment to which I wish to refer in this group is a new section forbidding anyone, for the purpose of promoting the sale or use of an article, to make a materially misleading representation to the public concerning the price at which the article is ordinarily sold. Quite a few instances have come to the attention of the combines branch, some of them occurring in the catalogues of so-called catalogue houses, but occurring in other places as well, where a merchant, in order to make it appear that the price at which he was offering an article was more favourable than was actually the case, misrepresented to the public the price at which such article was ordinarily sold elsewhere. Besides being deceptive as far as the buying public is concerned this practice also constitutes an unfair method of competition with respect to other merchants.
>
> In summary, these amendments relating to discriminatory and predatory pricing and deceptive price advertising have a multiple purpose and effect. In all instances they directly or indirectly protect the consumer and will bring greater honesty into all branches of trade. In some instances they also protect, or give a chance for protection, to merchants, usually the smaller merchants, against unfair competition which does not relate to competitive efficiency; they confirm to a manufacturer some right to prevent his product from being abused or used as a come-on device; and finally, but not least, they are in the long term direction of maintaining competition by cutting down practices or assisting in the prevention of practices which may serve to eliminate competitors and therefore competition through means other than straightforward and real competition itself. [underlining added]

House of Commons Debates, Vol. IV (30 May 1960) at 4349 (Mr. Fulton).

[90] In 1976, the criminal prohibition was amended to read as follows:

36(1) No person shall, for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, the supply or use of a product or for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, any business interest, by any means whatever,

36.(1) Nul ne doit, de quelque manière que ce soit, aux fins de promouvoir directement ou indirectement soit la fourniture ou l'utilisation d'un produit, soit des intérêts commerciaux quelconques.

[...]	[...]
(d) make a materially misleading representation to the public concerning the price at which a product or like products have been, are or will be ordinarily sold; and for the purposes of this paragraph a representation as to price is deemed to refer to the price at which the product has been sold by sellers generally in a relevant market unless it is clearly specified to be the price at which the product has been sold by that person by whom or on whose behalf the representation is made.	(d) donner au public des indications notablement trompeuses sur le prix auquel un produit, ou des produits similaires ont été, sont ou seront habituellement vendus; aux fins du présent alinéa, les indications relatives au prix sont censées se référer au prix que les vendeurs ont généralement obtenu sur le marché correspondant, à moins qu'il ne soit nettement précisé qu'il s'agit du prix obtenu par la personne qui donne les indications ou au nom de laquelle elles sont données.

It was subsequently re-enacted as paragraph 52(1)(d) of the Act.

[91] As described in detail above, a discussion paper was released in 1995 seeking comments from interested persons with respect to amendments to the Act, including the appropriate definition of OSP. The Consultative Panel which was created to review the responses to the discussion paper made recommendations. Those recommendations are largely reflected in subsection 74.01(3) of the Act, which was originally contained in Bill C-20, An Act to amend the Competition Act and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, 1st Sess., 36th Parl., 1997, (1st reading 20 November 1997). A dual track regime of civil and criminal enforcement procedures and remedies was created.

[92] The summary to Bill C-20 specifically provided that "[t]he enactment ... revises the treatment of claims made about regular selling prices to provide greater flexibility and clarity". The then Minister of Industry described the amendments in more detail in the following terms when he moved second reading to the bill:

> The regular price claims provisions of the Act will be amended for greater clarity and to better reflect what consumers and retailers understand by them. The legitimacy of regular price claims would be determined by an objective standard, a test based either on sales volume or the pricing of an article over time.
>
> Consumers will benefit from this clarification of the rules and merchants will have more freedom of choice in selecting pricing strategies and will be encouraged to innovate in ways beneficial to consumers and retailers alike.

House of Commons Debates, Edited Hansard, No. 074 (16 March 1998) (Hon. John Manley).

[93] On the basis of the legislative history and the evidence before the Tribunal, I am satisfied that the Commissioner has established, on a balance of probabilities, that the objectives of subsection 74.01(3) of the Act are to: i) protect consumers from deceptive ordinary selling price representations; ii) protect businesses from the anti-competitive effects of deceptive ordinary selling price representations; and, iii) protect competition from the anti-competitive effects and inefficiencies that result from deceptive ordinary price representations. These were the expressed objectives of the original criminal prohibitions and I am satisfied that the original purpose remained pressing when the civil remedy was enacted. As Sears noted in its written argument, since the 1970's concerns were expressed about the inefficiencies associated with the criminal prosecution of misleading advertising. The Consultative Panel recommended that misleading advertising should normally be addressed through a civil regime but that a criminal regime should exist for egregious cases. Both regimes were directed at the same purpose.

[94] These legislative objectives are to be viewed in light of the evidence before the Tribunal concerning the significant harm caused to consumers, business and competition by deceptive OSP advertising (particularly the evidence of Dr. Lichtenstein described above).

[95] I conclude, on the totality of the evidence before the Tribunal, that Sears has fairly and properly conceded that the objectives of the impugned legislation are of sufficient importance that, in principle, they are capable of justifying a limitation on Sears' freedom of expression.

(c) The rational connection

[96] The next step in the inquiry is to question the proportionality of the measure. This analysis begins with consideration of the rationality of the measure at issue. The issue is whether there is a causal relationship between the objective of the impugned legislation and the measures enacted by the law. Direct proof of such causal relationship is not always required. In RJR Macdonald, supra at paragraphs 86, 156-158, and 184, the Supreme Court held that a causal relationship between advertising and tobacco consumption could be established based upon common sense, reason or logic.

[97] In Irwin Toy, supra at page 991, Chief Justice Dickson found that there could be no doubt that a ban on advertising directed to children was rationally connected to the objective of protecting children from advertising because the "governmental measure aims precisely at the problem identified". I am similarly satisfied on the basis of common sense and logic that the impugned legislation, by sanctioning OSP representations that are materially misleading, aims directly at the objectives of the impugned legislation. Put another way, sanctioning materially false or misleading OSP representations promotes the protection of consumers from deceptive OSP representations, protects businesses from their anti-competitive effects, and protects competition from their anti-competitive effects and inefficiencies.

[98] In finding the impugned legislation to be rationally connected to the objectives of the legislation, I also rely upon the opinion of Dr. Lichtenstein. As noted above, I generally accept his testimony. I found him to be extremely knowledgeable on the subject of marketing and particularly consumer behaviour as it relates to pricing and other stimuli. I also found that he gave his testimony is an unhesitating, candid, clear and even-handed manner. His obvious enthusiasm for the subject matter left no suggestion of partisanship. His opinion, as it related to marketing in the context of the constitutional question, was not, in my view, effectively challenged or limited on cross-examination.

[99] Sears' expert, Mr. Mahinka, dealt with a review of the scope of U.S. legislation and the factors to be considered at law by sellers when making OSP representations. However, since Mr. Mahinka was not qualified to opine, and did not opine, on marketing matters, his evidence did not contradict that of Dr. Lichtenstein.

[100] The following evidence, taken from Dr. Lichtenstein's written expert report, is relevant to the issue of rational connection:

> 62. The heart of the problem with seller's own OSP advertising is that consumers believe that the OSP relates to the seller's own "ordinary" selling price. Consumer perceptions of what a seller's ordinary price [is] relate to two factors: (1) how long the product [has] been offered at the price (consistency over time), and (2) how many other consumers have purchased the product at that price (consensus). Consequently, in my opinion, there is definitely a rational [connection] between these two factors and consumer perceptions of a price as a bona fide OSP. Thus, any legislation that has the goal of addressing the potential for consumer deception with respect to OSP advertising necessarily must address time and volume considerations.
>
> 63. When thinking in terms of deception, it is helpful to ask the question, "what would consumers believe if they had full information?" If there is no difference between consumer perceptions with and without the full information, there is no problem with deception. In this case, consumer inferences from a seller's own OSPs would accurately reflect missing information. However, if consumers would respond differently if they had full information, then consumer inferences would not be accurate, and there would be a problem of deception. Consider the example of a consumer who encounters an OSP. If the consumers were provided with (a) the time schedule for when that product has been offered for sale at the OSP (time test criterion), and (b) the number of consumers who have purchased the product at the OSP (volume test criterion), would the consumer accept the encountered OSP as the real bona fide "ordinary" selling price? If the answer to this question is "no," then there is an issue of deception.
>
> 64. Because consumers will not have this information, legislation is required to institute time and volume standards to bring them in line with consumer expectations so that consumers will not be deceived. In essence, the legislation fills the consumer information void in that with the legislation, consumers will be better able to rely on OSPs as bona fide selling prices. That is, instituted in a good faith manner, meeting time or volume tests will bring retailer practices more in line with consumer expectations such that where retailers offer products at OSPs, consumers will be able to rely on the OSPs as representing either the ordinary price from a time or volume perspective. [footnotes omitted]

[101] In finding there to be a rational connection between the impugned legislation and its objectives, I reject Sears' submission that the impugned legislation fails the rational connection test because it is excessively vague, uncertain and imprecise, and has application to an unnecessary broad range of activity. In my view, those arguments are better considered when determining whether the legislation is over broad so that it does not minimally impair Sears' rights. Indeed, in oral argument, counsel for Sears dealt with the evidence that supported his submission that unclear legislation defeats the objective of accurate marketplace information (and so was not rationally connected to the legislative purpose) in the context of his submission on minimal impairment.

[102] I am satisfied that the impugned legislation, on its face, cannot be viewed as being so vague or arbitrary that it is not rationally connected to its objectives.

(d) Minimal impairment

[103] The next stage of the Oakes analysis requires consideration of whether the impugned legislation, while rationally connected to its objectives, impairs Sears' freedom of expression as little as reasonably possible in order to achieve the legislative objectives.

[104] The Supreme Court has recognized that legislative drafting is a difficult art and that Parliament cannot be held to a standard of perfection. See: R. v. Sharpe, [2001] 1 S.C.R. 45 at paragraph 95. In Sharpe, the majority of the Court described the required analysis in the following terms:

> 96 The Court has held that to establish justification it is not necessary to show that Parliament has adopted the least restrictive means of achieving its end. It suffices if the means adopted fall within a range of reasonable solutions to the problem confronted. The law must be reasonably tailored to its objectives; it must impair the right no more than reasonably necessary, having regard to the practical difficulties and conflicting tensions that must be taken into account: see [...].
>
> 97 This approach to minimal impairment is confirmed by the existence of the third branch of the proportionality test, requiring that the impairment of the right be proportionate to the benefit in terms of achieving Parliament's goal. If the only question were whether the impugned law limits the right as little as possible, there would be little need for the third stage of weighing the costs resulting from the infringement of the right against the benefits gained in terms of achieving Parliament's goal. It was argued after Oakes, supra, that anything short of absolutely minimal impairment was fatal. This Court has rejected that notion. The language of the third branch of the Oakes test is consistent with a more nuanced approach to the minimal impairment inquiry – one that takes into account the difficulty of drafting laws that accomplish Parliament's goals, achieve certainty and only minimally intrude on rights. At its heart, s. 1 is a matter of balancing: see [...]. [emphasis in original] [jurisprudence and citations omitted]

[105] Sears argues that the impugned legislation fails the minimal impairment test in two respects. First, Sears says that the legislation is over broad because it uses excessively vague, imprecise and broad terms (including "substantial volume", "reasonable period of time", "substantial period of time" and "recently"). Further, the legislation fails to include specific guidelines, standards, criteria or definitions concerning the volume of product sold or offered for sale, and the periods of time to be considered for the volume and time tests. The scope of the impugned legislation will, it is said, therefore frustrate or defeat its objectives. Second, Sears says that subsection 74.01(3) of the Act does not minimally impair its freedom of expression because there are practical legislative alternatives to the impugned legislation as it is now drafted. Those alternatives would, Sears argues, give greater clarity, advance the objectives of the legislation more effectively, and interfere less with Sears' right to commercial free speech.

[106] Turning to the first ground advanced by Sears in support of its argument that the impugned legislation will frustrate or defeat the objectives sought to be achieved, Sears points to the evidence of the Commissioner's expert, Dr. Lichtenstein, that:

a) Placing the percentage requirement for sales and time tests at 51 % or higher (as the Guidelines do) is objectionable as a per se or equivalent per se rule;

b) Placing the percentage requirement high enough to be sure that all deception is routed out will preclude some customers from receiving non-deceptive information that they may, in fact, value in making decisions. In turn, retailing efficiency would be adversely affected because retailers may be constrained in making temporary price reductions or could not communicate them as effectively to their customers;

c) Requiring products to stay at a mistakenly high price for substantial periods of time before the retailer can let customers know of its mistake through reference to the price may deprive some customers of important information about both the product and the retailer;

d) If consumers believed that there was a time test at 51 % or higher, that test is objectionable;

e) Uncertain or unclear OSP advertising rules hinder OSP price advertising;

f) If the regulations are not clear, some retailers may choose not to engage in OSP advertising as much or at all;

g) If retailers chose not to engage in OSP advertising as much or at all, that could hinder price reduction;

h) If price reduction is hindered, that could result in competitors not having any pressure to lower their prices; and

i) If competitors do not lower their prices, the consumer will be harmed by higher prices.

[107] One legislative option available to deal with OSP claims is legislation that imposes specific per se standards, for example, the number of days a product must be on sale at a regular price, or the percentage of sales accepted as "substantial" for the volume test. Mr. Mahinka identified a number of state enactments in the U.S. which contained per se standards. It was Dr. Lichtenstein's opinion that such per se rules are not effective in addressing deception. He endorsed the following statement:

> "Per se rules relating to high-low pricing are not likely to detect all true deception nor exculpate all > non-deceptive challenged pricing behavior. In the case of percentage of sales tests, few would argue with the presumption that if a retailer had 50% of its sales at the referenced price, that price had been set in good faith... A higher percentage test will certainly prevent deception, but at what cost? Placing the percentage requirement high enough to be sure that all deception is routed out will preclude some consumers from receiving non-deceptive information that they may, in fact, value in making decisions. Retailing efficiency, in turn, would be affected adversely in that retailers may be constrained in making temporary price reductions or could not communicate them as effectively to their customers... Similarly, percent of time tests can be thwarted easily by the manipulation of the pricing calendars of comparable brands within a store. If compliance with a set time at the regular price (even relatively long periods of time) demonstrates good faith, some deception will escape further scrutiny. On the other hand, requiring products to stay at a mistakenly high price for substantial periods of time before the retailer can let customers know of its mistake through reference to that price again may deprive some consumers of important information about both the product and the retailer. In either case, these per se tests seem to offer much more in terms of financial savings for the litigants (on both sides) than they do in terms of ensuring a balance between the direct consumer interest in good price information and the indirect consumer interest in efficient retail practice."

[108] Dr. Lichtenstein advanced a "Rule of Reason" analysis of a retailer's prices and advertising and effect on consumers, described as follows:

> "Such an approach requires the court to explore issues relating not only to the retailer's activities and consumer perceptions, but also to industry and product characteristics. It is informed by generic and case specific research in consumer behavior. Most important, it seeks to strike a balance between the direct interests of consumers in receiving clear, truthful information and the indirect interest in the lower prices derived from permitting retailers to operate efficiently. Evidentiary shortcuts such as percentage of sales made at the reference price or length of time the reference price was in effect are relevant but not dispositive".

[109] Dr. Lichtenstein went on to state:

> The situation at hand has direct correspondence to measurement issues that behavioral researchers deal with on a continual basis. From a measurement theory perspective, it is generally recognized to be poor measurement practice to equate a concept that is not directly observable (e.g., deception) with a single observable behavior (e.g., "if a seller does X, it is deception; if the seller does Y, it is not deception") (see Lichtenstein, Netemeyer, and Burton 1990). That is, when the concept construct of "deception" is reduced to terms of a per se time or volume test, the validity of just what is "deception" is sacrificed. As a result, there may be many situations where the following [of] per se rules leads to incorrect outcomes regarding determinations of deception that if the subjective factors (consistent with the "rule of reason" approach) were applied with its multiple criteria, this would not occur.

[110] Noting that, under the impugned legislation, the volume and time tests are not determined in a vacuum, but rather recognize both the market-based attributes of the product and the geographic market, Dr. Lichtenstein concluded that, in his opinion, subsection 74.01(3) of the Act could not be less burdensome and still be effective.

[111] In this context, I do not find that the portions of Dr. Lichtenstein's testimony relied upon by Sears fundamentally undermine his expert opinion that the legislation could not be less burdensome and still be effective, or his opinion that clearer per se rules will neither detect all deception nor exculpate all non-deceptive OSP advertising. Because the impugned legislation is not per se legislation but rather requires consideration of good faith and materiality, I believe the impugned legislation meets the concerns of Dr. Lichtenstein articulated at points (a) through (d) in paragraph 106 above.

[112] Put another way, Sears relied on the portions of Dr. Lichtenstein's evidence which criticised the enactment of per se rules. However, his views do not support the conclusion that the impugned legislation, which is not per se legislation, is over broad.

[113] To the extent that Dr. Lichtenstein agreed that uncertain or unclear OSP advertising regulations hinder and discourage OSP advertising, the evidence before the Tribunal does not in my view establish that the impugned legislation has prevented or discouraged accurate OSP advertising.

[114] Turning to Sears' argument that there are other, more effective legislative options, Sears points to the legislation of 12 American states and argues orally as follows:

> Now, in terms of the 12 states that are highlighted here, it is set out, Your Honour - - I can tell you that, in terms of the criteria that are set out here, it really is a menu of alternative ways to enact a provision like the impugned legislation and, from that menu, Your Honour will note that there are various tests that are enunciated here, set out, which involve different volume tests, different time tests.
>
> You have got percentages that vary. You have got "reasonable" set at 5 per cent. You have got "reasonably substantial" set at 10 per cent. You have got time periods and volume periods anywhere from more than 10 per cent to - - well, it runs to 31.1 per cent, which is 28 out of 90 days in a few cases that is required to have it at that regular price.
>
> And you have got 51.6 per cent in the case of Ohio, which is 31 out of 60 days, and you have got South Dakota, for example, 7 out of 60 days, 11.6 per cent.
>
> The point of it is, is that I am not suggesting you have to pick a percentage here or a criteria that you feel should be imposed here. That is not your job and, frankly, it is not my job either.
>
> What the point here is is that there are other legislative alternatives which do provide for that certainty and clarity and that also provide for that flexibility that we are looking for here, in that there are also exceptions to these fixed criteria.
>
> There are exceptions for clearance sales, for example. There are exceptions for providing for rebuttable presumptions and that, therefore, Your Honour has before you clear evidence that Parliament could have done the same and that, had it done the same, Sears' rights would not have infringed as much as they have been.

[115] However, there was no evidence before the Tribunal that such legislation was either less intrusive or more effective in targeting OSP representations. With respect to whether more precise legislation is less intrusive, it was Mr. Mahinka's evidence that it has been his experience (which has formed the basis of his advice to clients) that, where sellers carry on business in more than one jurisdiction, sellers will "commonly seek to comply with a more specific, relevant state statute or regulation governing price comparisons as this practice can be expected to result in compliance with more general state statutes". This evidence leads me to conclude that either the general and specific legislation are co-extensive, or the specific legislation is more intrusive. Otherwise, compliance with the specific legislation would not result in compliance with the more general legislation. Mr. Mahinka's evidence does not support Sears' contention that more specific legislation is less intrusive.

[116] With respect to the effectiveness of legislation regulating OSP claims, the following exchange in oral argument is illustrative. In response to a question from the Tribunal as to how the evidence of Mr. Mahinka, and particularly the state legislation he referenced, supports the submission that more precise legislation is more effective, counsel for Sears ultimately acknowledged that Mr. Mahinka's evidence did not say that precise legislation was more effective. The transcript on this point is as follows:

> MR. M.J. HUBERMAN: Well, if you are asking: Is that the approach he uses when he is dealing with a general statute only? He did not address that but, again, the general approach is illustrative and, I think, helpful in the sense that he is using precise standards and criteria to shape his advice to sellers who want to know what to do.
>
> The idea is that, if they know what to do, if they are going to comply with the specific standards, they are likely going to comply with the more general ones also.
>
> So to the extent that that advice would be appropriate in those circumstances, I take it that that is what the advice would be as well.
>
> THE CHAIRPERSON: But I don't recall his evidence to say that specific legislation is more effective than general legislation.
>
> MR. M.J. HUBERMAN: Well, it's more effective in letting the sellers know what to do in the sense of advertising. It is more effective in that sense.
>
> THE CHAIRPERSON: But he doesn't touch on whether it is more effective in discouraging objectionable advertising that is misleading with respect to ordinary selling price.
>
> MR. M.J. HUBERMAN: No.
> His point was a different point. His point was, I would suggest, the first branch of the unintelligible standard rationale, which is the fair notice part that we talked about yesterday.
>
> His point was, by looking at the more specific standards criteria tests, the citizen, i.e. the seller, would have greater guidance and knowledge of the law so that it could comply better with it. That was the gist of what he was saying and, in fact, that would, in my submission, show its effectiveness in accomplishing some of the objectives, certainly, of the Act that we talked about. [underlining added]

[117] Sears also complains that the Commissioner failed to explain why the model provision recommended by the Consultative Panel was not enacted. It is said by Sears to have been less intrusive and equally effective because of its "clarity and brevity".

[118] The model proposed by the Consultative Panel is set out at paragraph 60 above. The model provision proposed the use of terms such as "recently sold a substantial volume", "recently" and "substantial period of time". Regard was to be had to the nature of the product and the relevant market. I am not satisfied that the "clarity and brevity" of this model provision shows it to be less intrusive or more effective than the impugned legislation.

[119] Returning to the dicta of the Supreme Court of Canada in Sharpe quoted above, Parliament need not adopt the least restrictive measure. It is sufficient that the means adopted fall within a range of reasonable solutions, and the law must be reasonably tailored to its objectives.

[120] The evidence of Dr. Lichtenstein and the wording of the impugned legislation persuade me that the impugned legislation is reasonably tailored to its objectives. The legislation sets out time and volume tests which relate to consumer perceptions of a seller's ordinary price. An affirmative defence is provided whereby any representation that is not false or misleading in a material respect does not constitute reviewable conduct. There is a due diligence defence to most of the remedial measures.

[121] I am satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, that the impugned legislation falls within a range of reasonable alternatives. While the Act does not establish with precision whether any particular OSP representation will satisfy the time and volume test, the impugned legislation provides the necessary flexibility to ensure that it neither captures non-deceptive OSP advertising nor fails to capture deceptive OSP advertising.

(e) Proportionality of effects

[122] The final stage of the Oakes analysis requires:

> ... there must be a proportionality between the deleterious effects of the measures which are responsible for limiting the rights or freedoms in question and the objective, and there must be a proportionality between the deleterious and the salutary effects of the measures. [Emphasis in original.]

See: Dagenais v. CBC, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835 at page 889; and Thomson Newspapers, supra at paragraph 59.

[123] I accept, based upon the report of the Consultative Panel, the evidence of Dr. Lichtenstein, and the existence of legislation in numerous American jurisdictions restricting OSP advertising, that subsection 74.01(3) of the Act addresses the pressing and substantial objective preventing of harm caused by deceptive ordinary price claims. False OSP claims, on the evidence of Dr. Lichtenstein, (unchallenged on this point) can harm consumers, business competitors and competition in general.

[124] In comparison, the negative effects of the restrictions which result from subsection 74.01(3) of the Act are not great. The speech that is restricted is commercial speech that is materially false or misleading.

[125] Sears points to its experience when it eliminated its "2-For" price as evidence of the deleterious effect of the impugned legislation. At that time, when Sears lowered and set its regular single unit price at the "2-For" price, sales declined. When Sears then increased its regular prices, its promotional sales substantially increased. I do not understand this to be evidence of a chill caused by the regulation of OSP claims, as Sears argues, particularly since Sears continued to use OSP claims.

[126] I therefore conclude that the negative effects of the restriction on commercial speech are outweighed by the benefits that ensue from sanctioning deceptive OSP representations.

(f) Conclusion

[127] For the reasons set out above, I have concluded that subsection 74.01(3) of the Act is: i) a limit "prescribed by law"; ii) addresses pressing and substantial objectives; iii) is rationally connected to its objectives; iv) restricts freedom of expression as little as is reasonably possible; and, v) carries salutary benefits that outweigh the restriction on freedom of expression.

[128] It follows that, while it is conceded that subsection 74.01(3) does infringe subsection 2(b) of the Charter, the infringement is a reasonable limit that is demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

[129] Sears' request for constitutional remedies will, therefore, be dismissed.

V. THE ALLEGATION OF REVIEWABLE CONDUCT

(i) Standard of proof

[130] Having dismissed Sears' request for constitutional remedies, I now turn to consider whether the Commissioner has met the onus upon her to establish that Sears employed deceptive marketing practises which constitute reviewable conduct under subsection 74.01(3) of the Act.

[131] Neither party, in their written arguments, addressed submissions to the Tribunal with respect to the standard of proof. In oral argument, counsel agreed that the Commissioner must prove her case on a balance of probabilities, and acknowledged that within the civil standard of proof there exist different degrees of probability, depending upon the nature of the case. See also: Oakes, supra, at page 137. Counsel for the Commissioner agreed that, within the civil standard, the Commissioner would be obliged to prove her case at the higher end of the balance of probabilities.

[132] In light of the serious nature of the conduct alleged against Sears I am satisfied that, within the balance of probabilities, I should scrutinize the evidence with greater care and consider carefully the cogency of the evidence. See: Continental Insurance Co. v. Dalton Cartage Co., [1982] 1 S.C.R. 164 at page 170.

(ii) The elements of reviewable conduct and the issues to be determined

[133] For ease of reference, I repeat subsections 74.01(3) and 74.01(5) here :

74.01(3) A person engages in reviewable conduct who, for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, the supply or use of a product or for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, any business interest, by any means whatever, makes a representation to the public as to price that is clearly specified to be the price at which a product or like products have been, are or will be ordinarily supplied by the person making the representation where that person, having regard to the nature of the product and the relevant geographic market,	74.01(3) Est susceptible d'examen le comportement de quiconque donne, de quelque manière que ce soit, aux fins de promouvoir directement ou indirectement soit la fourniture ou l'usage d'un produit, soit des intérêts commerciaux quelconques, des indications au public relativement au prix auquel elle a fourni, fournit ou fournira habituellement un produit ou des produits similaires, si, compte tenu de la nature du produit et du marché géographique pertinent, cette personne n'a pas, à la fois:
(a) has not sold a substantial volume of the product at that price or a higher price within a reasonable period of time before or after the making of the representation, as the case may be; and	a) vendu une quantité importante du produit à ce prix ou à un prix plus élevé pendant une période raisonnable antérieure ou postérieure à la communication des indications;
(b) has not offered the product at that price or a higher price in good faith for a substantial period of	b) offert de bonne foi le produit à ce prix ou à un prix plus élevé pendant une période importante

time recently before or immediately after the making of the representation, as the case may be.	précédant de peu ou suivant de peu la communication des indications.
[...]	[...]
74.01(5) Subsections (2) and (3) do not apply to a person who establishes that, in the circumstances, a representation as to price is not false or misleading in a material respect.	74.01(5) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) ne s'appliquent pas à la personne qui établit que, dans les circonstances, les indications sur le prix ne sont pas fausses ou trompeuses sur un point important.

[134] Sears acknowledges that the evidence before the Tribunal establishes Sears to be: (i) a person; (ii) who, for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, the supply or use of tires and for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, its business interests generally; (iii) in 1999, made representations to the public as to tire prices that were clearly specified to be the prices at which the Tires were ordinarily supplied.

[135] Sears also acknowledges that the evidence establishes that Sears did not comply with the volume test contained in paragraph 74.01(3)(a) of the Act.

[136] Accordingly, the issues to be determined are:

i) Were Sears' regular prices for the Tires offered in good faith as required by the time test?

ii) Did Sears meet the frequency requirement of the time test?

iii) If Sears did not meet the good faith or frequency requirements of the time test, has Sears established that the representations were not false or misleading in a material respect?

iv) If Sears engaged in reviewable conduct, what administrative remedies should be ordered?

(iii) The witnesses

[137] Before turning to the substance of the deceptive marketing case, it will be helpful to introduce and describe briefly the witnesses who testified before the Tribunal.

(a) The expert witnesses

[138] Seven individuals testified as experts before the Tribunal, three on behalf of the Commissioner and four on behalf of Sears. The Commissioner's experts were Dr. Donald Lichtenstein, Dr. Sridhar Moorthy and Mr. Donald Gauthier.

[139] Dr. Lichtenstein's qualifications and area of expertise have already been described.

When Dr. Lichtenstein re-attended to give his opinion with respect to the deceptive marketing case, Sears agreed that he need not be re-qualified and that he could provide expert testimony with respect to "marketing and consumer behaviour and response to pricing advertised stimuli" and "research design and methodology within social sciences".

[140] Dr. Moorthy is the Manny Rotman Professor of Marketing at the Rotman School of Management, University of Toronto, and is a Research Associate at the Institute for Policy Analysis, University of Toronto. Sears did not challenge Dr. Moorthy's expertise to testify about "marketing and the use of economic principles and/or theory to understand marketing", "consumer response to marketing stimuli" and "marketing study design and implementation".

[141] Mr. Gauthier has worked in the tire industry in Canada since 1984 when he joined a company that was the predecessor corporation of Uniroyal Goodrich Canada Inc. He worked from 1984 to 1990 as its National Advertising Manager. In his later years with the company, he took on the additional role of Sales Manager for Atlantic Canada. From 1990 through 1995, Mr. Gauthier was with Michelin Tires Canada Inc. (after it acquired Uniroyal Goodrich), initially as National Advertising and Promotions Manager, then as Ontario Sales Manager for the Uniroyal Goodrich sales team, and finally as a Sales Manager in Ontario for the merged Michelin, Uniroyal and Goodrich lines. From 1995 to 2000, Mr. Gauthier was with Bridgestone/Firestone Canada Inc. successively as Director of Sales and Marketing, Vice-President Sales and Marketing, and Senior Vice-President Sales. From 2001, and at the time he testified before the Tribunal, Mr. Gauthier worked as the Sales and Marketing Manager/Vice-President of Retread Division of Al's Tire Service. Mr. Gauthier was found by the Tribunal to be qualified to provide opinion evidence touching upon "the practical application of marketing and retail strategies in the Canadian tire industry and Canadian tire market", "the marketing and sale of original equipment and replacement tires in Canada" and "the structure of the tire market in general in Canada", such expertise being recognized as being in existence as of 1999.

[142] While Sears did not challenge Mr. Gauthier's knowledge or expertise, it did object that Mr. Gauthier lacked the necessary independence because he now works for a company that sells tires in Ontario where Sears also sells tires.

[143] Without doubt, expert evidence must be seen as the independent product of an expert who is uninfluenced by the litigation, and an expert should provide independent assistance by objective, unbiased opinion. While Mr. Gauthier's employer does sell tires, Mr. Gauthier testified that he is paid a straight salary without performance bonuses, that he did not know where Sears Auto Centres were located, that, in his time with Al's Tires, no operator of any of its stores cited Sears as a competitor, and that, while he had dealt with some competitive situations (one example being competition from a Canadian Tire store), none of the competitive situations he had dealt with involved Sears.

[144] On that evidence, and on the basis of observing how Mr. Gauthier gave his evidence touching on his qualifications, I concluded that Mr. Gauthier had the required independence in order to provide expert testimony. It was, and remains, my view that it is too tenuous for Sears to argue that Mr. Gauthier's testimony would be or was biased or coloured by the potential benefit to his employer of having Sears restricted in the content of its OSP advertising. My assessment of Mr. Gauthier's objectivity did not change, and was reinforced, as I observed his testimony in chief and his later testimony as a rebuttal witness.

[145] Sears' expert witnesses were Denis DesRosiers, John Winter, Dr. Kenneth Deal and Professor Michael Trebilcock.

[146] Mr. DesRosiers is the President of DesRosiers Automotive Consultants Inc. ("DAC"), an automotive market research and consulting group. The Commissioner argued that Mr. DesRosiers was not qualified to provide expert testimony. After hearing the examination and cross-examination of Mr. DesRosiers upon his qualifications, the Tribunal ordered that Mr. DesRosiers could testify and give opinion evidence touching upon "survey methodology and analysis relating to the Canadian after tire market", but that the Tribunal would reserve its decision as to whether he was properly qualified to give such testimony.

[147] In this regard, Mr. DesRosiers worked from 1974 to 1976 doing economic analysis for the Ontario Government related to the automotive sector. From 1976 to 1979, Mr. DesRosiers was the Senior Automotive Industry Analyst with the Economic Policy Branch of the Ministry of Treasury and Economics in Ontario. From 1979 to 1986, he was the Director of Research at the Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association of Canada. In 1985, Mr. DesRosiers started DAC. Since 1989, DAC has conducted annually a "Light Vehicle Study" in which 2,500 people across Canada are surveyed with respect to their automotive maintenance practices. Mr. DesRosiers wrote the original questionnaire used in this survey, with some professional advice as to how to properly ask a question for the purpose of a survey. Mr. DesRosiers testified that he understands the automotive industry "cold" so that he is able to design the "Light Vehicle Survey" and other surveys and to interpret the information collected. The interpretation he personally provides may include complex, strategic reports as to how a client company should respond to the market. Since its inception, DAC has conducted upwards of 200 surveys relating to the automotive sector, and every year, or second year, 3 or 4 tire companies buy tire survey data collected by DAC.

[148] Mr. DesRosiers initially provided an expert opinion for the Commissioner in this proceeding but, when the Commissioner decided not to call Mr. DesRosiers, Sears subpoenaed him and later commissioned a second expert report from him.

[149] I am satisfied that Mr. DesRosiers' involvement in the automotive sector, and specifically his involvement in the creation of surveys relevant to the automotive market and the interpretation of the results generated, allows Mr. DesRosiers to provide expert advice to the Tribunal based upon his own knowledge of Canadian consumers' buying habits and preferences, relating primarily to the Canadian after market for tires. I am satisfied that Mr. DesRosiers is, on the basis of his experience, a properly qualified expert to opine upon survey methodology and analysis relating to the Canadian automotive industry, and specifically the after market for tires.

[150] John Winter is a retail consultant with expertise in advising retailers, institutions and governmental bodies on retail, development and commercial strategies. He has been previously qualified as an expert in these areas and has testified on at least 50 occasions before numerous tribunals, regulatory bodies and the Ontario Court of Justice. The Commissioner conceded that Mr. Winter's qualifications enabled him to provide expert evidence on "issues relating to retailing in Canada, including pricing strategies employed by retailers".

[151] Dr. Kenneth Deal is the Chairman of Marketing, Business Policy and International Business in the Michael G. DeGroote School of Business at McMaster University. He is also the President of marketPOWER research inc., a market research company. The Commissioner accepted the qualifications of Dr. Deal to provide expert testimony in the area of "the methodology and conduct of market research surveys and the analysis of data resulting from such surveys".

[152] Professor Michael Trebilcock is the Director of the Law and Economics Program, Professor of Law and cross-appointed to the Department of Economics at the University of Toronto. He has written extensively on competition policy, trade and economic regulation during his career. For the past 20 years, he has consulted widely to government and the private sector on matters of competition policy and economic and social regulations. The Commissioner accepted Professor Trebilcock to be qualified to give testimony as an expert on competition policy and economic regulation.

(b) The lay witnesses

[153] Each party called 3 lay witnesses. The Commissioner's lay witnesses were Mr. Christian Warren, Mr. Jim King and Mr. William Merkley. Sears called Mr. Paul Cathcart, Mr. Harry McKenna and Mr. William McMahon.

[154] Mr. Warren is a Competition Bureau Officer, through whom the Commissioner tendered documents gathered in her investigation.

[155] Mr. King was first employed by Bridgestone/Firestone Canada Inc. in October of 1997 as its Sales Manager for associate brands. In August of 1999, he became the Sales Manager for Corporate Accounts and Original Equipment. The corporate accounts he was responsible for were mass merchandisers such as Sears, Canadian Tire, Costco and Wal-Mart. Mr. King had provided an affidavit in response to an order obtained by the Commissioner under section 11 of the Act which was directed to Bridgestone/Firestone Canada Inc.

[156] Mr. Merkley has been employed by Michelin Canada since 1977, and in 1999, he was its National Director of Sales for the Corporate Accounts Group. Mr. Merkley provided an affidavit in response to a section 11 order obtained by the Commissioner directed to Michelin North America (Canada) Inc.

[157] Mr. Cathcart has been employed by Sears since 1973. From 1997 through 2000, he served as the Retail Marketing Manager and 190 Service Operations Manager. As such, he was responsible for building a marketing plan for the Tires. At the time he testified, Mr. Cathcart was the Group Operations Manager and Process Improvement Manager for Sears Canada Home and Hardline.

[158] Mr. McKenna has been employed by Sears since 1981. From 1998 through to 2000, he was the Category Logistics Manager/Inventory Analyst for the Automotive Department. As such, he was responsible for supporting the buyer in visits to tire manufacturers and other vendors, and was responsible for ensuring the flow of merchandise to Sears Automotive Centres and the maintenance of proper inventory levels. When he testified, he was the Manager of Sales and Promotions for the off-mall channel of Sears.

[159] Mr. McMahon has been employed by Sears since 1977. In 1999, he was the Group Retail Marketing Manager of Group 700 - 2 at Sears. As such, he worked with the Corporate Marketing and Advertising Department and the Business Team in order to develop marketing strategies and events for merchandise which included the Tires at issue. At the time he testified, Mr. McMahon was the General Manager of Sears Automotive.

[160] Having introduced the witnesses, this may be the most convenient point to provide the Tribunal's reasons for its oral order, given during the course of the hearing, with respect to the Commissioner's request to adduce certain rebuttal evidence.

VI. RULING WITH RESPECT TO NON-EXPERT REBUTTAL EVIDENCE

[161] Near the conclusion of the evidence adduced by Sears in response to the Commissioner's allegations, the Commissioner advised Sears that, upon the close of Sears' case, she intended to introduce non-expert rebuttal evidence through Mr. Warren. Sears responded that it objected to such evidence being given and the Tribunal was advised of this dispute. In consequence, the Tribunal directed that the Commissioner serve Sears with a rebuttal will-say statement before Sears closed its case and advised that the Tribunal would hear argument on the issue of the admissibility of the proposed non-expert rebuttal evidence after Sears closed its case when the Commissioner endeavoured to call such evidence.

[162] The rebuttal will-say statement was served on Sears on January 27, 2004. On Monday, February 2, 2004 Sears closed its case and the Tribunal then heard submissions as to whether the proposed rebuttal evidence should be received. For reasons to be delivered later in writing, the Tribunal ruled during the hearing that a portion of the proposed rebuttal evidence could be admitted and a portion could not. What follows are the reasons for that ruling.

(i) The proposed rebuttal evidence

[163] The Commissioner sought to respond to two portions of the testimony of Mr. Cathcart.

[164] The first portion of Mr. Cathcart's testimony which the Commissioner sought to rebut was as follows ("the timing explanation"):

> MR. McNAMARA: Turning back to the checkerboards, there has been evidence before the Tribunal that some of the five tires that we are talking about were offered at regular prices for less than 50 per cent of the time, or were offered at sales prices for more than 50 per cent of the time.
>
> I am referring specifically to the RoadHandler T Plus and the Weatherwise tire.
>
> Can you offer any explanation as to why that would have been the case?
>
> And I am talking about 1999, of course.
>
> MR. CATHCART: Yes, I can.
>
> About mid-year of 1999 I began to receive communication from the field that when we advertised the Michelin T Plus it was not available in an 80 aspect ratio size. So beginning in about the third quarter, I chose to advertise the Weatherwise, not necessarily at the same price but at the same time as the T Plus.
>
> There were a number of customers who were coming in. We would advertise the Michelin tire, and in our advertising we could not indicate every size that was available in those tires. So they would come into our auto centres expecting to buy a Michelin tire, although if they had an 80 aspect ratio size requirement we were unable to sell them the AT Plus. It just was not available in that size.
>
> In a response to that, I offered the Weatherwise as a "go to" in the 80 aspect size for our sales associates and our customers.
>
> I knew very well that I would sell some. It certainly wasn't going to be the driving number of tires. Our T Plus would historically outsell the Weatherwise.
>
> What it did was it responded to the customer's request to have a Michelin tire in an 80 aspect ratio when we advertised it. That was my choice, and I did that for that reason.
>
> Second, there was in the fourth quarter of 1999 a situation around service and supply. What I mean by that is on snow tires we would place our orders and stagger our shipments, because on the Bridgestone snow tires they were made in the Orient. So we would have the first shipment arrive in August-September, a second shipment in October and a third shipment in November.
>
> In the fourth quarter of 1999 there were some labour issues in the Orient where we were unable to receive our third shipment, our promotional shipment -- because the deeper you get into that year obviously that is when the promotions start to happen of these snow tires.
>
> We found out very late in the year that we were not going to be able to get them because of labour issues in the Orient.

The problem was I had already booked space, newspaper space, preprint space. These were all completed programs in essence. So even in the preprints, if we were to pull out of there we would in essence be running a company-wide vehicle with a blank page.

What we did was I approached Stan and asked if he would approach Michelin, because they were the only other supplier that could give us a quantity of tires. That was our hope. They did respond and were able to switch the tires, the snow tire ads to Michelin.

What I mean when I say switch, when we advertise tires we would have a feature item on the page and then we would have sub-features. Historically the feature item, the lion's share of sales were created from that.

But because we had some snow tires in stock from our first and second shipment, we moved the feature item to a sub-feature, being the snow tire, and then featured the Michelin tires. That ran us over frequency in that fourth quarter.

It was purely in response to an offshore issue.

[165] The Commissioner proposed to rebut the timing explanation through testimony that the RoadHandler T Plus and the Weatherwise tires were on sale over 50 per cent of the time in each six-month period which preceded every day from July 3, 1999 to December 31, 1999. The Commissioner also sought to introduce into evidence a table entitled “Time Analysis-1999-Substantial Period” which illustrated this.

[166] The second portion of Mr. Cathcart’s testimony the Commissioner sought to rebut was as follows (“the third week of May advertising and promotions testimony”):

MR. McNAMARA: I would ask you to turn to Tab 9, to the checkerboard for the month of May.

MR. CATHCART: I am there, sir.

MR. McNAMARA: I would ask you to look at the Michelin T Plus tire and the Week 3 time column.

MR. CATHCART: Yes, sir.

MR. McNAMARA: Can you tell us what is going on there.

MR. CATHCART: In Week 3 the Michelin T Plus –

MR. McNAMARA: There is a reference there that says "NP" and then "ALB/BC" and the same thing for the Weatherwise.

MR. CATHCART: Yes. That was referring to a newspaper ad in Alberta and B.C. for those two lines of tires. But it was a newspaper ad only for those two provinces during that week.

MR. McNAMARA: Why was that?

MR. CATHCART: We would have promotions that would differ coast to coast > depending on the market and the seasons.

>
> We would have snow tires running in Quebec in a newspaper ad in the fall, where we would have passenger tires in B.C. We wouldn't advertise snow tires in the Lower Mainland of B.C., although in northern B.C. and in Prince George we would have snow tires.
>
> We called them alts. We would alt our advertising, depending on the geographics of the product and of the country, weather and that.
>
> In this time frame we advertised these two tires only in Alberta and B.C. at these prices.

[167] The Commissioner proposed to rebut the third week of May advertising and promotions testimony by tendering, through the competition law officer, newspaper proofs and Sears pre-prints and flyers, all relating to the advertising and promotion of tires by Sears during the third week of May, 1999.

(ii) The objection to the rebuttal evidence

[168] Sears argued that the proposed rebuttal evidence should not be permitted because:

1. The Commissioner had failed to follow the procedure mandated by the rules of the Tribunal.

2. The proposed evidence was not proper rebuttal evidence.

3. The Commissioner had failed to cross-examine Mr. Cathcart upon that portion of his evidence which the Commissioner sought to rebut.

(iii) The ruling

[169] After hearing argument, the Tribunal ruled that the Commissioner would not be permitted to lead rebuttal evidence with respect to the timing explanation, but would be entitled to lead as rebuttal evidence Sears' newspaper proofs, pre-prints and flyers in order to rebut the third week of May advertising and promotions testimony.

(iv) The procedural objection

[170] Sears argued that before delivering the rebuttal will-say statement, which was in substance an amended will-say statement of the competition law officer, the Commissioner was obliged to bring a motion for leave to amend her disclosure statement. It was argued that, as the respondent, Sears puts in its case on the basis of the evidence adduced by the Commissioner as disclosed in her disclosure statement and in her rebuttal expert reports. Sears had adduced the bulk of its lay and expert evidence before it learned that the Commissioner sought to adduce rebuttal fact evidence. Requiring the Commissioner to move to amend her disclosure statement in this circumstance was said to be in accordance with the regulatory objectives of the Tribunal's rules, particularly the objective that the Commissioner's investigation be completed and her case be in final form at the time her application is filed with the Tribunal and the objective that the issues be clearly defined at the outset by having them set out in the parties' respective disclosure statements.

[171] In my view, the Commissioner was not obliged to move to amend her disclosure statement in order to adduce non-expert rebuttal evidence. The obligation of the Commissioner to file a disclosure statement is contained in section 4.1 of the Competition Tribunal Rules, SOR/94-290 which is as follows:

4.1 (1) The Commissioner shall, within 14 days after the notice of application other than an application for an interim order is filed, serve on each person against whom an order is sought the disclosure statement referred to in subsection (2).

(2) The disclosure statement shall set out

(a) a list of the records on which the Commissioner intends to rely;

(b) the will-say statements of non-expert witnesses; and

(c) a concise statement of the economic theory in support of the application, except with respect to applications made under Part VII.1 of the Act.

(3) If new information that is relevant to the issues raised in the application arises before the hearing, the Commissioner may by motion request authorization from the Tribunal to amend the disclosure statement referred to in subsection (2).

(4) The Commissioner shall allow a person who wishes to oppose the application to inspect and make

4.1 (1) Dans les quatorze jours suivant le dépôt de l'avis de demande autre qu'une demande d'ordonnance provisoire, le commissaire signifie la déclaration visée au paragraphe (2) à chacune des personnes contre lesquelles l'ordonnance est demandée.

(2) La déclaration relative à la communication de renseignements comporte :

a) la liste des documents sur lesquels le commissaire entend se fonder;

b) un sommaire de la déposition des témoins non experts;

c) un exposé concis de la théorie économique à l'appui de la demande, sauf dans le cas d'une demande présentée aux termes de la partie VII.1 de la Loi.

(3) Le commissaire peut, par voie de requête, demander au Tribunal l'autorisation de modifier la déclaration visée au paragraphe (2) en cas de découverte, avant l'audition, de nouveaux renseignements se rapportant aux questions soulevées dans la demande.

copies of the records listed in the disclosure statement referred to in subsection (2) and the transcript of information for which the authorization referred to in section 22.1 has been obtained.

(4) Le commissaire doit permettre à la personne qui entend contester la demande d'examiner et de reproduire les documents mentionnés dans la déclaration visée au paragraphe (2) ainsi que la transcription des renseignements pour lesquels l'autorisation visée à l'article 22.1 a été obtenue.

[172] The obligation to apply for leave to amend the Commissioner's disclosure statement is contained in subsection 4.1(3) of the Competition Tribunal Rules which provides that leave shall be sought where "new information that is relevant to the issues in the application arises before the hearing" [underlining added].

[173] The parallel obligation upon a respondent to file a disclosure statement is contained in section 5.1 of the Competition Tribunal Rules, which similarly provides that the obligation to apply for leave to amend the disclosure statement arises when new information arises before the hearing.

[174] Together, these rules function to ensure that, prior to the commencement of the hearing, each side knows both the documents and the factual, non-expert testimony upon which the opposite side intends to rely. Section 47 of the Competition Tribunal Rules operates to ensure that, prior to the commencement of the hearing, each side knows the expert testimony the opposite party intends to rely upon, including any expert rebuttal evidence.

[175] With respect to non-expert rebuttal evidence, as discussed in more detail below, as a matter of law an applicant may only call rebuttal evidence after completion of the respondent's case where the respondent has raised some new matter which the applicant had no opportunity to deal with and which the applicant could not reasonably have anticipated. The fact that the need for rebuttal evidence becomes apparent only after the Commissioner has closed her case makes it inappropriate, in my view, to require amendment of the applicant Commissioner's disclosure statement.

[176] Instead, in my view, the right of the Commissioner to adduce rebuttal evidence is properly governed by application of the common-law rules governing rebuttal evidence.

[177] Further, in the present case the Tribunal's direction that the Commissioner serve Sears with a rebuttal will-say statement prior to Sears closing its case prevented any element of improper surprise or prejudice to Sears. In my view it does not follow, however, that in another case the failure to provide such a will-say statement on a timely basis would, by itself, preclude calling what would otherwise be proper rebuttal evidence.

(v) Applicable principles of law with respect to rebuttal evidence

[178] The general principles applicable to rebuttal evidence were set out by Mr. Justice McIntyre for the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Krause, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 466 at paragraphs 15, 16 and 17. There, Mr. Justice McIntyre wrote:

> 15 At the outset, it may be observed that the law relating to the calling of rebuttal evidence in criminal cases derived originally from, and remains generally consistent with, the rules of law and practice governing the procedures followed in civil and criminal trials. The general rule is that the Crown, or in civil matters the plaintiff, will not be allowed to split its case. The Crown or the plaintiff must produce and enter in its own case all the clearly relevant evidence it has, or that it intends to rely upon, to establish its case with respect to all the issues raised in the pleadings; in a criminal case the indictment and any particulars: see R. v. Bruno (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 318 (Ont. C.A.), per Mackinnon J.A., at p. 320, and for a civil case see: Allcock Laight & Westwood Ltd. v. Patten, Bernard and Dynamic Displays Ltd., [1967] 1 O.R. 18 (Ont. C.A.), per Schroeder J.A., at pp. 21-22. This rule prevents unfair surprise, prejudice and confusion which could result if the Crown or the plaintiff were allowed to split its case, that is, to put in part of its evidence -- as much as it deemed necessary at the outset -- then to close the case and after the defence is complete to add further evidence to bolster the position originally advanced. The underlying reason for this rule is that the defendant or the accused is entitled at the close of the Crown's case to have before it [page 74] the full case for the Crown so that it is known from the outset what must be met in response.
>
> 16 The plaintiff or the Crown may be allowed to call evidence in rebuttal after completion of the defence case, where the defence has raised some new matter or defence which the Crown has had no opportunity to deal with and which the Crown or the plaintiff could not reasonably have anticipated. But rebuttal will not be permitted regarding matters which merely confirm or reinforce earlier evidence adduced in the Crown's case which could have been brought before the defence was made. It will be permitted only when it is necessary to insure that at the end of the day each party will have had an equal opportunity to hear and respond to the full submissions of the other.
>
> 17 In the cross-examination of witnesses essentially the same principles apply. Crown counsel in cross-examining an accused are not limited to subjects which are strictly relevant to the essential issues in a case. Counsel are accorded a wide freedom in cross-examination which enable them to test and question the testimony of the witnesses and their credibility. Where something new emerges in cross-examination, which is new in the sense that the Crown had no chance to deal with it in its case-in-chief (i.e., there was no reason for the Crown to anticipate that the matter would arise), and where the matter is concerned with the merits of the case (i.e. it concerns an issue essential for the determination of the case) then the Crown may be allowed to call evidence in rebuttal. Where, however, the new matter is collateral, that is, not determinative of an issue arising in the pleadings or indictment or not relevant to matters which must be proved for the determination of the case, no rebuttal will be allowed. [underlining added]

[179] In Halford v. Seed Hawk Inc., 2003 FCT 141; 24 C.P.R. (4th) 220 Mr. Justice Pelletier, then sitting in what was the Trial Division of the Federal Court, re-stated the principles governing the admissibility of rebuttal evidence. At paragraph 16, Mr. Justice Pelletier noted that evidence, which otherwise would be excluded because it should have been led as part of a plaintiff's case in chief, would nonetheless be examined in order to determine if it should be admitted in the exercise of the judge's discretion.

[180] Similarly, in DRG v. Datafile Ltd. (1987), 16 C.P.R. (3d) 155 (F.C.T.) Mr. Justice McNair observed that a judge has discretion to admit further confirmatory evidence in rebuttal either for the judge's own enlightenment or where the interests of justice require it.

(vi) Proposed rebuttal of the timing explanation

[181] Turning to the application of these principles to the proposed evidence, the nature of the proposed rebuttal evidence with respect to the timing explanation did not purport to contradict Mr. Cathcart's evidence that there was an issue in the last half of 1999 with respect to the availability of Michelin tires in an 80 aspect ratio size. Nor did it directly contradict his evidence that in the last quarter of 1999 there were labour issues which prevented Sears from receiving a promotional shipment. Rather, the Commissioner sought to adduce evidence with respect to the frequency with which RoadHandler T Plus and Weatherwise tires were on sale in the first two quarters of 1999 in order to attack Mr. Cathcart's conclusion that, in the last half of 1999, those tires were offered at sale prices for more than 50 per cent of the time because of the 80 aspect ratio size issue and the labour issues.

[182] With respect to the length of time tires were offered at sale prices, it is an essential element of the Commissioner's case to establish that Sears did not offer the Tires at the regular single unit price in good faith for substantial period of time recently before or immediately after making the representations in issue. The parties substantially agreed about the volume of tires sold by Sears both in the six months preceding the representations and in the 12 months preceding the representations. As part of her case the Commissioner adduced evidence (see for example Exhibits A-97 and CA98 - 102) with respect to the period of time each relevant tire was on sale.

[183] The evidence which the Commissioner wished to adduce in rebuttal was described by counsel for the Commissioner as an analysis of that data. Counsel further advised that there was "admittedly some overlap between what is on the record" and the proposed evidence, but stated that there "is added value [in the rebuttal evidence] in the sense that it explains and articulates in greater detail, significantly greater detail, what is, in a sense, beneath the documents that are now [in evidence]". Counsel for the Commissioner also noted that more evidence had not been adduced by the Commissioner in chief because of the agreement between the parties as to the volume of tires sold and the times the Tires were on promotion.

[184] In my view, the nature of the evidence which the Commissioner proposed to call to rebut the timing explanation is the type of evidence which should not be permitted as rebuttal evidence. When calling evidence in chief, the Commissioner was obliged to exhaust her evidence with respect to the length of time that the Tires were offered at sale prices. She ought not split her case by relying on some evidence with respect to when the Tires were on sale and closing her case, and then after Sears adduces evidence, seek to introduce further evidence confirming the time the Tires were offered for sale at sale prices.

[185] To the extent that there is, or may be, a discretion to allow confirmatory evidence in rebuttal, there is one significant factor which militates against the exercise of such discretion. That factor is the failure of the Commissioner to cross-examine Mr. Cathcart upon the evidence which the Commissioner sought to rebut. If the Commissioner sought to contradict Mr. Cathcart's testimony, fairness required that he be cross-examined on his testimony so that he could provide any available explanation.

(vii) Proposed rebuttal of the third week of May advertising and promotions testimony

[186] The representations at issue in this application were made in November and December of 1999. Whether two lines of tires were promoted as being on sale only in Alberta and British Columbia in the third week of May of 1999 is relevant to the issue of the appropriate geographic market. As noted below, the Commissioner asserts that Sears marketed its tires nationally, while Sears asserts that it marketed tires in local, geographic markets.

[187] In its pleading, Sears asserts that:

> 56. Sears Automotive distributed various advertising and promotional material to its customers with respect to the supply of the Tires in the local geographic market areas in which Sears Automotive Retail Centres competed during the Relevant Period.
>
> 57. Generally, there were no regional variations in the advertisements that Sears Automotive disseminated in both national and local newspapers across Canada during the Relevant Period with respect to the Tires.
>
> [...]
>
> 59. Sears Automotive offered the Tires for sale at the same prices in each specific market area in which a Retail Automotive Centre competed.

[188] I am satisfied that, on the state of its pleading where Sears admitted that generally there were no regional variations in its advertisements, it was not incumbent upon the Commissioner to lead evidence as part of her own case with respect to the advertisement and promotion of two specific lines of tires in the third week of May, 1999. Further, the Commissioner argued, and Sears did not dispute, that there was nothing in the will-say statement of Mr. Cathcart to suggest that the Commissioner ought to have reasonably anticipated that the advertising and promotion of two lines of tires in the third week of May would be disputatious. Thus, subject to one concern addressed in the next paragraph, I was satisfied that rebuttal evidence ought to be received on this issue in order to ensure that, at the end of the hearing, each party would have the same opportunity to hear and respond to the full case of the other.

[189] The one remaining concern arose from the failure of the Commissioner to cross-examine Mr. Cathcart upon his evidence that the two specific tire lines were only advertised on sale in Alberta and British Columbia and that different promotions were offered during that week. This concern arose because the rule in Browne v. Dunn (1893), 6 R 67 at pages 70-71 requires that where a party intends to contradict an opponent's witness by presenting contradictory evidence, such evidence should be put to the witness. It is unfair to a witness for a court or tribunal to receive evidence that casts doubt on his or her veracity when the witness has not been given an opportunity to deal with the contradictory evidence and offer any explanation. Requiring that a witness be challenged with contradictory evidence also assists the trier of fact in the process of weighing the evidence.

[190] I have no doubt that the Commissioner ought to have put the newspaper proofs, pre-prints and flyers she sought leave to adduce as rebuttal evidence to Mr. Cathcart when he was cross-examined.

[191] Notwithstanding, the failure to comply with the rule in Browne v. Dunn is not necessarily determinative of the right to tender contradictory evidence. The extent and manner to which the rule is applied is to be determined by the trier of fact in light of all of the circumstances. See, for example, Palmer v. R., [1980] 1 S.C.R. 759 at pp. 781-72.

[192] In the present case, the circumstances which I considered to be significant with respect to this rebuttal evidence are the nature of the rebuttal evidence (Sears' own advertising material) and the fact that the documents were disclosed in both parties' disclosure statements. In my view allowing Sears' own advertising documents, previously disclosed in this proceeding, to be tendered would not be prejudicial to Sears, would clarify testimony which was somewhat unclear, and would be in the interests of justice.

[193] For these reasons, the Commissioner was permitted to introduce into evidence the newspaper proofs, pre-prints and flyers relating to the third week of May, 1999.

VII. ANALYSIS OF THE ISSUES

[194] As discussed above, subsection 74.01(3) of the Act specifies two factors to be considered when applying the volume and the time tests. Therefore, before considering whether Sears' regular prices for the Tires were offered in good faith as required by the time test, one must consider the nature of the product and the relevant geographic market.

VIII. THE NATURE OF THE PRODUCT

[195] The Commissioner argues that the Tires have certain characteristics that are relevant to the analysis under subsection 74.01(3). Those characteristics are said to be:

i) Almost all tires are sold in multiples.

ii) Tire sales are fairly stable over time.

iii) Consumers do not spend much time searching for tires or evaluating alternative products.

iv) Consumers have a limited ability to evaluate the intrinsic qualities of tires.

v) Consumers engage in a passive search over time for tires.

[196] Each factor will be considered in turn.

(i) How tires are sold

[197] Tires are complementary goods in the sense that, for passenger cars, one tire must be used with three others. The following, in my view uncontroversial, facts flow from this:

- Tires are typically purchased in pairs, either one pair or two pairs at a time.
  Mr. DesRosiers expert report, paragraph 13
  Mr. Gauthier expert report, paragraph 38

- Survey data showed that in 1999, 89% of consumers purchased either two or four tires at the same time.
  Mr. DesRosiers expert report, paragraph 13

- Within the tire industry, at most, between 5% and 10% of tires are sold singly.
  Mr. Gauthier expert report, paragraph 38

- In 1999, Sears knew that it would sell between 5% and 10% of the Tires as single units.
  Mr. Cathcart, volume 14 at page 2486

- Consumers purchase a single tire for reasons that include tire failure (due to blow out, road hazard or defect) and the replacement of a space saver (or dummy) spare tire.
  Mr. DesRosiers expert report, paragraph 15
  Mr. McKenna, volume 19 page 3055
  Mr. Merkley, volume 10 page 1713

- Consumers who purchase single tires are typically constrained to purchase a model of tire that matches the tire which is on the same axle because, for safe handling, it is important to maintain the same traction capability on the axle.
  Dr. Lichtenstein expert report, paragraph 17
  Mr. Gauthier expert report, paragraph 38

- Where a tire is to be replaced due to a blow out or other damage, there may be a sense of urgency about replacing the tire.
  Mr. McKenna, volume 19, page 3055
  Dr. Lichtenstein expert report, paragraph 17.

(ii) Are tire sales stable over time?

[198] Dr. Lichtenstein testified that:

- by their nature, sales of "all-season" tires (such as those at issue) are less sensitive to seasonal variation.
  expert report paragraph 21

- tires are not a product category which people typically buy in advance to stockpile.
  expert report paragraphs 18 and 19

- while a sale price may pull a consumer into the market sooner than they would otherwise enter the market, a sale price will not lead to increased tire consumption.
  expert report paragraphs 18 and 19.

[199] This evidence was essentially unchallenged and I accept it.

[200] At the same time, as Dr. Lichtenstein acknowledged, there is an increase in tire sales in the Spring and Fall seasons. Mr. McKenna described this as a moderate increase in March, April and May, and a more dramatic shift in October and November.

[201] Mr. Winter also described a distinctive seasonal pattern based upon his analysis of Sears' retail daily tire sales data and from an analysis of a monthly retail trade survey conducted by Statistics Canada. It is important to note, however, that Mr. Winter's analysis of Sears' daily tire sales data included data with respect to the sale of winter tires, and that the Statistics Canada survey was based upon sales of tires, batteries, parts and accessories. Mr. Winter agreed that the sale of winter tires is more seasonal and he did not know if batteries exhibit a seasonal selling pattern. In consequence, while I accept Mr. Winter's evidence generally that tire sales increase in the Spring and Fall, I am concerned that his conclusion as to the magnitude of the fluctuation is flawed because it included data related to winter tires and non-tire products.

[202] On the whole, from all of this, I find that the sales of all-season tires are relatively stable and predictable, with some predictable seasonal pattern.

(iii) Do consumers spend much time searching for tires or evaluating alternate products?

[203] In asserting that consumers do not spend much time searching for tires or evaluating alternatives, the Commissioner relies upon the evidence of Dr. Lichtenstein. Dr. Lichtenstein testified that consumers spend different amounts of time and effort searching for products, considering brand alternatives and comparing prices, depending on the nature of the item to be purchased. He said that items described as "convenience goods" are found at one end of a continuum and their purchases involve relatively little investigation. The purchase of "specialty goods", which are found at the other end of the continuum, involves a great deal of investigation. He describes tires as "shopping goods" and says that they fall at the mid-point of the continuum. This means, in his opinion, that many consumers of "shopping goods" have a pre-disposition for low levels of search and effort which means that a large number of consumers are not vigilant shoppers even when the shopping goods are expensive.

[204] Sears rejects this opinion and asserts that the best evidence on this point is that of Mr. DesRosiers and Dr. Deal. In Mr. DesRosiers' opinion, there is a significant opportunity for consumers to shop around for tire replacements. From August 27, 2003 to September 3, 2003, Dr. Deal surveyed Sears' customers who bought new replacement tires from Sears in 1999 in order to: survey their behaviour when buying tires in 1999 from Sears and when buying tires in general; determine their attitude toward purchasing tires; and, assess their perception of value of the 1999 tire purchases, their satisfaction with their purchases and their intention to consider Sears for future tire purchases. Dr. Deal's survey found that 57% of survey respondents said that they compared tire prices prior to purchasing their tires at Sears.

[205] I do not find Mr. DesRosiers' evidence to be of assistance on this point because the research he relied upon did not examine whether consumers actually exercised any opportunity available to them to shop around.

[206] When I compare the evidence of Drs. Lichtenstein and Deal, I am not satisfied that their evidence is that divergent. Dr. Lichtenstein does not quantify the proportion of consumers who, in his view, engage in a low level of search effort for goods such as tires. Dr. Deal's study would suggest that 42% of Sears' customers did not compare tire prices prior to buying their tires from Sears.

[207] Dr. Deal's study results must, in my view, be approached with some caution for the following reasons. At the time Dr. Deal conducted his survey and swore his first expert affidavit, he believed that the persons surveyed were selected from among all the persons who bought the Tires in 1999. Put another way, the target population intended to be surveyed was consumers from all 67 Sears Retail Automotive Centres and Dr. Deal assumed that he had received data from all or almost all of the centres. By "all or almost all" of the centres, Dr. Deal believed he had received data from 90 to 95% of the Sears stores that sold the Tires. Dr. Deal later became aware that he had only received data from the 28 stores that kept electronic records. Thus, the survey was not based upon a random probability sample of purchasers from all 67 Retail Automotive Centres.

[208] Dr. Deal agreed that results based upon non-probability sampling were less generalizable to the parent population but observed that sometimes one does obtain an accurate representation of the target population even when one does not abide by the strict rules of statistical inference and takes a non-random sample.

[209] In the present case, Dr. Deal did not undertake a formal analysis to determine whether the customers from the 28 stores were similar to or different from the customers of the other 39 stores (although such an analysis could have been performed). In his view, based upon a large number of other surveys he has done, there would not likely be significant differences between the customers. Thus, while, pursuant to principles of statistics, his survey would have to be limited to be representative of Sears' customers who bought tires in 1999 from the 28 stores for which he received records, in Dr. Deal's view, the findings between the 28 stores and the other 39 stores would not be significantly different.

[210] Obviously, the fact that the data provided to Dr. Deal emanated from only 28 of the 67 stores (and not from all or almost all of the stores) impairs the ability of Dr. Deal to scientifically generalize the survey results. I accept, however, his general expertise to provide an opinion as to whether it was more or less likely that the survey results would have been different had consumers from all, or almost all, of the Sears stores that sold the Tires been included as part of the target sample.

[211] Thus, while I approach Dr. Deal's survey results with caution, and am prepared to accept that the overall accuracy of the survey's findings may not be accurate within plus or minus four percentage points in 19 out of 20 samples, I do generally accept Dr. Deal's conclusions.

[212] I am therefore satisfied by the evidence of Drs. Lichtenstein and Deal that a very significant percentage of consumers, in the order of 42% (plus or minus at least 4%), do not spend time searching for tires, considering alternatives, or comparing prices from a variety of different stores.

(iv) Do consumers have a limited ability to evaluate the intrinsic qualities of tires?

[213] The intrinsic attributes of tires are their physical attributes such as tread pattern and tire construction. It was Dr. Lichtenstein's opinion that most consumers do not have the ability to evaluate the quality of tires based on their intrinsic attributes. His opinion was based upon his experience with consumers in their evaluation of attributes for many categories of infrequently purchased shopping goods. He believed that he could reasonably generalize that experience to tires. His opinion was also supported, in his view, by reference to the evidence of both

Mr. Cathcart (given during his examination conducted under section 12 of the Act) and Mr. McMahon (given in his affidavit filed pursuant to section 11 of the Act).

[214] Mr. McMahon explained in his affidavit how Sears set its prices for its private label and flag brand tires. Flag brand tires are tires made by a manufacturer whose name appears on the sidewall of the tire (for example, the BF Goodrich Plus). A private label tire does not show the name of the manufacturer, but only shows the trade name owned by the retailer (for example, Silverguard Ultra IV and Response RST Touring). A tire is dual branded when it bears both the name of the manufacturer and the retailer's private name (for example, Michelin Weatherwise and Michelin RoadHandler T Plus). In the context of describing how private label prices were set, Mr. McMahon swore that:

> 251. For example, Sears Automotive compared its "BF Goodrich Plus" Relevant Product with [CONFIDENTIAL] "[CONFIDENTIAL]" tire. The BF Goodrich Plus tire was superior to the [CONFIDENTIAL] tire, however, consumers tended not to perceive the inherent value of the BF Goodrich Plus tire when Sears Automotive's opening price point was more than [CONFIDENTIAL] for the inferior [CONFIDENTIAL] tire. As a result, Sears Automotive set the price for its BF Goodrich tire in such a manner that consumers would compare the value of that tire against the value of [CONFIDENTIAL] tire.

[215] During Mr. Cathcart's examination, he confirmed that what had happened with the BF Goodrich Plus was that, even though Sears perceived, and he believed, the tire to be a superior tire to the comparable Canadian Tire offering, consumers were unable to perceive the qualities that justified the greater price for the superior tire.

[216] Mr. Cathcart also diminished the importance of needing to refresh Sears' tire product line, stating that people would not stop shopping because Sears was selling the same lines of tires. In Mr. Cathcart's words, "In tires, it – – you know, they are black and they are round, and there is not a lot of exciting tires". This is consistent with the view that consumers have a limited ability to evaluate tire's intrinsic qualities.

[217] In my view, Sears did not seriously impeach Dr. Lichtenstein's opinion as to the ability of consumers to evaluate tire quality for money based on the intrinsic qualities of the tire. Supported as it was by the evidence of Messrs. McMahon and Cathcart where they referred to Sears' own experience that consumers were unable to appreciate the intrinsic qualities of a specific tire and therefore compare true value for money, I accept Dr. Lichtenstein's opinion that consumers have a limited ability to evaluate the intrinsic attributes of tires.

[218] Before leaving this point, I also note that Sears tendered as an exhibit its Fall 2000 Automotive Review. When describing Sears' private label or brand structure, the Review described the assortment as "A quality private Brand structure that is totally Sears, allowing little comparison with competitor product". For this to be true, Sears must have been of the view that consumers lack the ability to assess the intrinsic qualities of non-identical tires.

(v) Do consumers engage in a passive search over time for tires?

[219] Dr. Lichtenstein opined that tires are usually replaced only when a consumer's existing tires become worn so that, except for the case of the purchase of a single tire, the timing of new tire purchases occurs on a continuum based on when the benefit of new tires exceeds the cost of obtaining them. Dr. Lichtenstein further opined that as consumers notice that their tires are becoming worn, they would likely go into a passive search mode during which they more readily perceive tire advertisements and are on the lookout for a good deal on tires.

[220] This opinion was not challenged and I accept it.

IX. RELEVANT GEOGRAPHIC MARKET

[221] Subsection 74.01(3) requires the Tribunal to have regard to the relevant geographic market when applying the time and volume tests. While the Commissioner asserts that the relevant geographic market for assessing the representation is Canada, Sears argues that, in the retail tire business, competition occurs at the local level so that the geographic market should be defined on no more than a regional basis.

[222] In support of this argument, Sears relies upon the evidence of a number of witnesses that, in 1999, the Canadian after tire market was highly competitive, with various channels of distribution, and the competitive nature of the after tire market varied across the country. Sears also relies upon the expert opinion of Professor Trebilcock to the effect that markets are more appropriately determined by considering the alternatives available to consumers, or by adopting a demand-side perspective. By asking what range of choices any given consumer would consider he or she had available to them, Professor Trebilcock concluded that the relevant geographic market for tires is a local, regional market. The analysis that led to this conclusion was based upon: a review of regional newspaper advertising that showed that the list of tire retailers is very different from one city to the next; a review of yellow pages listings for tire retailers in different regions which showed that retailers differed radically from one market to another; the DesRosiers' tire market study which showed that independent tire retailers are the most common source of tires and those retailers varied dramatically from one local market to the next; and information from Bridgestone/Firestone and Michelin that shows that the top dealers to vary significantly from one region to the next. Thus, the question of "where can I go to buy tires" is answered differently from one local market to the next.

[223] In considering the interpretation to be given to the term "relevant geographic market", I begin from the premise that "the words of an Act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act and the intention of Parliament" (Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27 at paragraph 21).

[224] I have previously found, at paragraph 93, that the objectives of subsection 74.01(3) are:

to protect consumers from deceptive OSP representations; to protect businesses from the anti-competitive effects of such misrepresentations; and to protect competition from the anti-competitive effects and inefficiencies that result from such misrepresentations. The provision is designed to effect those objectives on the basis that, if acting in good faith, meeting the time or volume test will bring retailer practices in line with consumer expectations that an advertised OSP would relate to the seller's own ordinary selling price. The time and volume tests are to be applied having regard to the relevant geographic market.

[225] In light of the objectives of the provision, it is relevant to look at where Sears marketed the Tires and how Sears marketed the Tires in that geographic area so as to inform the view of whether an advertised OSP was really Sears' ordinary selling price. Because this is a misleading advertising case in which it is Sears' conduct that is at issue, I do not find, with respect, that Professor Trebilcock's traditional competition law approach to the definition of geographic market is relevant.

[226] In the traditional competition law context, geographic markets are defined as part of a determination about whether there has been a substantial lessening of competition. Dr. Trebilcock agreed, on cross-examination, that the concept of substantial lessening of competition is not relevant to the assessment of whether a representation is misleading.

[227] Turning to Sears' own conduct, I find the following to be relevant to the determination of the relevant geographic market:

- Sears' regular and promotional prices were set on a national basis without regional variation;

- Sears' internal documents, particularly its Spring and Fall Automotive Reviews, contained no discussion relating to local markets. These reviews were produced twice a year in order to present Sears' marketing strategy and tire product line to Sears' Chief Executive Officer and other executive officers;

- Sears did not produce or distribute separate marketing and promotional material for each region (with the exception of material relating to snow tires);

- The representations in issue were contained in flyers that were distributed nationally, without regional variation;

- Sears published advertisements in newspapers and there was no regional variation in the advertisements, except with respect to snow tires. The advertisements were distributed nationally through different newspapers;

- Sears tracked its pre-print distribution rates on a national basis; it could not track pre-prints on a regional basis;

- Sears determined what tires to offer for sale in a Sears' pre-print based upon factors which included "the current market trends and consumer preferences in Canada with respect to the sale of tires" [underlining added];

- Mr. Cathcart created "checkerboards" to, among other things, monitor the frequency with which tires were on promotion. Those checkerboards tracked sales volumes and promotional periods on a national basis only.

[228] In light of that evidence as to how Sears priced and marketed the Tires, and, in particular, that the regular prices for the Tires were set and advertised on a national basis, I find that it is most appropriate to consider Sears' compliance with the time test in the context of a geographic market that is Canada.

[229] This was also the conclusion reached by Drs. Lichtenstein and Moorthy.

[230] Having considered the nature of the product and the relevant geographic market, I turn to consider whether Sears' regular prices for the Tires were offered in good faith as required by the time test.

X. GOOD FAITH AS REQUIRED BY THE TIME TEST

[231] The Commissioner observes that the Act does not define "good faith", there are no other provisions in the Act that use the phrase, and there is no Canadian jurisprudence that has considered the concept of "good faith" in the context of OSP representations. There is, however, Canadian jurisprudence, which the Commissioner relies upon, which has considered the meaning of "good faith" in other legislative contexts.

(i) The subjective nature of "good faith"

[232] In Dorman Timber Ltd. v. British Columbia (1997), 152 D.L.R. (4th) 271, the British Columbia Court of Appeal considered whether a Crown employee was exempt from civil liability by virtue of legislation which exempted liability "for anything done or omitted to be done by a person acting reasonably and in good faith" while discharging certain responsibilities. The British Columbia Court of Appeal noted that the leading Supreme Court of Canada authority was Chaput v. Romain, [1955] S.C.R. 834 where the Supreme Court considered a provision that immunized police officers from liability where the officer exceeds his powers or jurisdiction but acts "in good faith in the execution of his duty". Mr. Justice Taschereau defined "good faith" to be "a state of mind consisting of the false belief that one's actions are in accordance with the law". Six judges of the Court adopted this definition. Mr. Justice Kellock, with Mr. Justice Rand concurring, wrote at page 856 that:

> What is required in order to bring a defendant within the terms of such a statute as this is a bona fide belief in the existence of a state of facts which, had they existed, would have justified him in > acting as he did.

[233] Having reviewed this jurisprudence, the British Columbia Court of Appeal concluded, at paragraph 69, that:

> 69 Kellock J.'s formulation clearly tends towards a subjective understanding of honest belief, but Taschereau J.'s formulation removes all doubt. There is good faith when there is "a state of mind" that the acts are authorized. Kellock J.'s reasons give content to what this "state of mind" is: a "belief in the existence of a state of facts which, had they existed, would have justified him in acting as he did." As was noted in Hermann, the reasonableness of the belief is a factor to consider in determining whether the belief was honestly held, but reasonableness is not the issue.

[234] To similar effect is the recent decision of the Saskatchewan Court of Queen's Bench in Nelson v. Saskatchewan (2003), 235 Sask. R. 250 at paragraphs 102-109.

[235] The principle that good faith is inherently subjective is consistent with its dictionary definition. Blacks Law Dictionary, 7th edition (St. Paul, Minn.: West Pub. Co., 1979) defines good faith as follows:

> good faith, n. A state of mind consisting in (1) honesty in belief or purpose, (2) faithfulness to one's duty or obligation, (3) observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing in a given trade or business, or (4) absence of intent to defraud or to seek unconscionable advantage. - Also termed bona fides. - good-faith, adj. Cf. BAD FAITH.

[236] A subjective view of good faith is also consistent with American jurisprudence that has considered legislative provisions similar to subsection 74.01(3) of the Act. In B. Sanfield, Inc. v. Finlay Fine Jewelry Corp., 76 F. Supp. 2d 868 (N.D. Ill. 1999) the U.S. District Court had before it a regulatory provision that provided:

> It is an unfair or deceptive act for a seller to compare current price with its former (regular) price for any product or service, [...] unless one of the following criteria is met:
>
> > (a) the former (regular) price is equal to or below the price(s) at which the seller made a substantial number of sales of such products in the recent regular course of its business; or
> >
> > (b) the former (regular) price is equal to or below the price(s) at which the seller offered the product for a reasonably substantial period of time in the recent regular course of its business, openly and actively and in good faith, with an intent to sell the product at that price(s). [underlining added]

[237] The Court found that the defendant Finlay did not, in good faith, intend to sell the relevant products at the regular price because:

> Finlay made little if any sales of the items at regular price over the course of several years at its Rockford stores. Finlay was obviously not concerned with the lack of sales at regular price, and in > fact, intentionally chose not to monitor information of the number of gold jewelry items sold on a given day and at what price. Finlay calculates the regular and sale prices of its gold jewelry simultaneously with the objective that when an item is sold at a 50% discount it will yield the desired gross margin. Finlay monitors only whether a store is meeting its gross margin goal.

[238] Implicit in that finding is that the existence of a good faith intent to sell product is determined subjectively.

[239] I conclude therefore that good faith is to be determined on a subjective basis. In this case, the question to be asked is whether Sears truly believed that its regular prices were genuine and bona fide prices, set with the expectation that the market would validate those regular prices. As noted by the Court in Dorman, supra, the reasonableness of a belief is a factor to be considered in determining whether a belief is honestly held. I therefore also accept that other external, objective factors such as whether the reference price was comparable to prices offered by other competitors, and whether sales occurred at the reference price, may provide evidence that is relevant to assessing whether Sears truly believed its regular prices were genuine and bona fide.

[240] I believe this conclusion to be consistent with the description found in the Commissioner's Guidelines concerning the assessment of good faith in the context of the time test.

[241] I also understand Sears generally to accept that good faith is subjective. In oral argument, counsel for Sears observed that:

> The bottom line is that the Competition Bureau's Guidelines, the Commissioner's Guidelines, tell us that the analysis of good faith is going to be broadly based and will have regard for market conditions, not only those things perhaps, but those things will certainly be part of the mix. And the reason for that, in my submission, is - - the reason for that approach, I think, is obvious. If there is no direct evidence of a subjective belief or ambivalent evidence of a subjective belief, or unclear evidence of a subjective belief, the Court will obviously refer to objective factors, or extrinsic factors which constitute evidence or can constitute evidence of the reasonableness of a subjective belief. [volume 30, page 4811 line 23 to page 4812 line 10, underlining added]

[242] Counsel for Sears framed the question to be determined as follows:

> The only issue, in our submission, for Your Honour to decide is whether Sears reasonably expected to sell single tires at its regular single tire price and whether [it set] those prices in an intelligent manner, having regard to the regular prices of similar tires in the marketplace.

[243] However, the latter part of counsel's formulation is more objective. Shortly thereafter, counsel for Sears argued:

> In our submission, at the end of the day a good faith regular price is one which is reasonably credible and by that I mean looked at through the eyes of a reasonable person, is credible given market conditions and is recognized as such by the market. And we submit that the Sears regular price clearly meets this definition.

[244] Sears cited no jurisprudence relevant to determining the nature of good faith.

[245] I remain satisfied, however, inspite of Sears' submissions about the reasonable person, that good faith is to be assessed on a subjective basis. I now move to consider the relevant evidence.

(ii) Sears' internal documents

[246] The Commissioner placed into evidence a number of documents provided by Sears to the Commissioner in response to a section 11 order. Documents that are particularly relevant to the assessment of good faith are:

a) Sears' competitive profiles for each of the Tires in issue; and

b) Sears' Automotive Reviews for the Spring and Fall of 1999.

[247] Section 69 of the Act provides that:

69(1) In this section, "agent of a participant" means a person who by a record admitted in evidence under this section appears to be or is otherwise proven to be an officer, agent, servant, employee or representative of a participant;

69(1) "participant" means any person against whom proceedings have been instituted under this Act and in the case of a prosecution means any accused and any person who, although not accused, is alleged in the charge or indictment to have been a co-conspirator or otherwise party or privy to the offence charged.

69(2) In any proceedings before the Tribunal or in any prosecution or proceedings before a court under or pursuant to this Act,

(a) anything done, said or agreed on by an agent of a participant shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be deemed to have been done, said or agreed on, as the case may be, with the authority of that participant;
(b) a record written or received by an agent of a participant shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be deemed to have been written or received,

69(1) Les définitions qui suivent s'appliquent au présent article. «agent d'un participant» Personne qui, selon un document admis en preuve en application du présent article, paraît être, ou qui, aux termes d'une preuve dont elle fait autrement l'objet, est identifiée comme étant un fonctionnaire, un agent, un préposé, un employé ou un représentant d'un participant.
69(1) «participant» Toute personne contre laquelle des procédures ont été intentées en vertu de la présente loi et, dans le cas d'une poursuite, un accusé et toute personne qui, bien que non accusée, aurait, selon les termes de l'inculpation ou de l'acte d'accusation, été l'une des parties au complot ayant donné lieu à l'infraction imputée ou aurait autrement pris part ou concouru à cette infraction.
69(2) Dans toute procédure engagée devant le Tribunal ou dans toute poursuite ou procédure engagée devant un tribunal en vertu ou en application de la présente loi :
a) toute chose accomplie, dite ou convenue par un agent d'un participant est, sauf preuve contraire, censée avoir été accomplie, dite ou convenue, selon le cas, avec l'autorisation de ce participant;

b) un document écrit ou reçu par un agent d'un participant est, sauf preuve contraire, tenu pour avoir été écrit ou reçu, selon le cas, avec l'autorisation de ce as the case may be, with the authority of that participant; and

(c) a record proved to have been in the possession of a participant or on premises used or occupied by a participant or in the possession of an agent of a participant shall be admitted in evidence without further proof thereof and is prima facie proof
(i) that the participant had knowledge of the record and its contents,
(ii) that anything recorded in or by the record as having been done, said or agreed on by any participant or by an agent of a participant was done, said or agreed on as recorded and, where anything is recorded in or by the record as having been done, said or agreed on by an agent of a participant, that it was done, said or agreed on with the authority of that participant, and
(iii) that the record, where it appears to have been written by any participant or by an agent of a participant, was so written and, where it appears to have been written by an agent of a participant, that it was written with the authority of that participant. [underlining added] participant;

c) s'il est prouvé qu'un document a été en la possession d'un participant, ou dans un lieu utilisé ou occupé par un participant, ou en la possession d'un agent d'un participant, il fait foi sans autre preuve et atteste :
(i) que le participant connaissait le document et son contenu,
(ii) que toute chose inscrite dans le document ou par celui-ci enregistrée comme ayant été accomplie, dite ou convenue par un participant ou par l'agent d'un participant, l'a été ainsi que le document le mentionne, et, si une chose est inscrite dans le document ou par celui-ci enregistrée comme ayant été accomplie, dite ou convenue par l'agent d'un participant, qu'elle l'a été avec l'autorisation de ce participant,
(iii) que le document, s'il paraît avoir été écrit par un participant ou par l'agent d'un participant, l'a ainsi été, et, s'il paraît avoir été écrit par l'agent d'un participant, qu'il a été écrit avec l'autorisation de ce participant. [Le souligné est de moi.]

[248] Sears concedes that all of the elements of subsection 69(2) of the Act are met but argues, correctly, that section 69 creates a limited, and rebuttable presumption to be applied to its documents and, in the case of paragraph 69(2)(c), the reference to prima facie proof speaks to proof absent credible evidence to the contrary.

[249] I accept that, as submitted by Sears, it is for the Tribunal to interpret Sears' documents and to determine what "facts" documents are evidence of and to consider whether those facts, when viewed in the context of the entire body of evidence, establish reviewable conduct. The meaning, weight and the conclusions to be drawn from any document must be assessed by the Tribunal.

[250] This means, I believe, that Sears' documents tendered in evidence are properly before the Tribunal and are prima facie proof that Sears said, did and agreed to the matters set out in the documents. For example, to the extent the automotive review sets out marketing strategies prepared by Mr. Cathcart and Sears' tire buyer, Mr. Keith, to be presented to Sears' chief executive officer for approval or ratification, the document is prima facie proof that such strategies were agreed upon to be presented to Sears' chief executive officer and that the Spring and Fall 1999 automotive reviews set out Sears' assessment of its significant competition and its responsive marketing strategy.

[251] To further illustrate, the Commissioner relies upon the buying plans prepared by the late Stan Keith, Sears' tire buyer, for the relevant period. The Commissioner argues that the year 2000 buying plans, created on June 19, 2000, and based on 1999 data for the Tires, did not forecast any sales at Sears' regular prices.

[252] It is true that the documents appear to be premised on the assumption that (based upon 1999 sales data) 10% of the Tires in each tire line would be sold at the 2For price and 90% would be sold on promotion. However, the Tribunal received credible evidence from Mr. McKenna that touched upon the interpretation to be given to the buying plans.

[253] Mr. McKenna identified "R & P Reports" which reported upon the regular and promotional sales of each line of a tire by month for 1999. The documents were tendered and received as exhibit CR-133 without objection. Mr. McKenna advised that he would receive this type of report on a monthly basis, as would Mr. Keith. Reviewing exhibit CR-133, Mr. McKenna testified that the breakdown between regular sales and 2For sales on the one hand, and promotional sales on the other, was as follows:

Tire Line	Regular and 2For Sales	Promotional Sales
BF Goodrich Plus	20-25%	75-80%
Michelin RoadHandler T Plus	25%	75%

The R & P Reports (to the extent they are wholly legible) reflect the following percentages for the remaining three tire lines:

Tire Line	Regular and 2For Sales	Promotional Sales
Michelin Weatherwise	13%	87%
Response RST Touring	20%	80%
Silverguard Ultra IV	23%	77%

[254] Turning then to the buying plans relied upon by the Commissioner, Mr. McKenna testified that he considered the buying plans with Mr. Keith in 2000 and that they were prepared in June 2000 as Mr. Keith prepared for the Fall presentation to Sears' chief executive officer. The buying plans, according to Mr. McKenna, were used to generate a conservative estimate of margin because "Stanley certainly was not one to want to position himself on being unable to deliver so he wouldn't [...] pigeon-hole himself on promising or committing to a margin that he wouldn't be able to deliver".

[255] Considering Mr. McKenna's explanation of the purpose of the buying plans, supported by the "R & P Reports" that showed the buying plans not to be based upon actual prior sales data, I am satisfied that Sears has provided credible evidence to displace any prima facie proof based upon the buying plans that Sears was not forecasting sales at its regular, single unit, prices.

(iii) The competitive profiles

[256] Mr. Keith was acknowledged within Sears as "the expert" with respect to the tire market in Canada and tire pricing. Mr. Cathcart acknowledged that Mr. Keith "most certainly" knew the tire market better than he did and that, arguably, Mr. Keith knew the tire market better than the manufacturer's representatives from whom he bought tires. As the tire buyer, Mr. Keith was responsible for building Sears' tire line structure and for, in the first instance, setting Sears' tire prices.

[257] One document prepared for each tire line was a "competitive profile" which compared, for each tire, Sears' pricing at the 2For, normal promotional and great item prices, with a competitive tire offering identified by Mr. Keith. No comparison was made in these competitive profiles to Sears regular prices. To illustrate, the competitive profile for the Silverguard Ultra IV compared it with Canadian Tire's Motomaster Touring LXR tire. For tire size P185/75R14, Canadian Tire's every day low price was $67.99. Sears' prices and the percentage comparisons with the competitive offering were as follows for this tire size:

Price		Percentage price comparison to competitive tire
Regular	$109.99	no comparison
2For	$ 72.99	107.35%
Promotional	$ 65.99	97.06%
Great Item	$ 59.99	88.23%

[258] The Commissioner argues that Mr. Keith created these competitive profiles as he built Sears' tire line structure and that they evinced Sears' competitive response to what it identified as its major competitor. Because Sears' regular, single unit, price formed no part of the competitive response, the Commissioner submits that Sears could not have in good faith believed that the market would validate its regular, single unit, prices.

[259] In response, Sears argues that the competitive profiles are contained in a document entitled "1999 Automotive Training Program" and that the program and the competitive profiles contained therein were prepared by Mr. Keith to explain to Sears' field associates Sears' tire lines and its pricing strategies. The competitive profiles were not intended to show how the regular price stood up against the broad range of retailers, but rather to show how Sears would respond to competition from both EDLP and hi-low retailers.

[260] I do not accept Sears' submission that the competitive profiles were simply training tools on the basis of this excerpt from the cross-examination of Mr. Cathcart wherein he was speaking about the competitive profiles:

> We have some comparisons where he has shown the AW+ to a Sears brand, and he would compare. The comparison was built to inform the associates how to respond to the Canadian Tire pricing.

So he would pick a Canadian Tire tire - - he could use one of their tires - - as a compare to say we are at this price in our tire, with a far better warranty package. And this is what Canadian Tire will be offering for the tire that closely resembles our tire.

These documents were his documents that he used as a response to our field people to inform them on how to respond to the competition, be it Canadian Tire, be it dealers, whomever.

He would never reference regular price in them, because they already knew the regular prices. They would have that information.

2:30 p.m.

MR. SYME: So is it your evidence, sir, that these were prepared solely to take on training missions, these cross-Canada training missions?

MR. CATHCART: Well, they are his documents, Mr. Syme. I recall them being in this cross-country package, but Stan - - Stan would create these documents as part of his own comparer during his line structure building and he would use these documents as part of the training package.

He would take those - - he would build these documents as he would build his lines because we would have to have - - he would have to have some sort of strategy in response to what the competition is doing. Canadian Tire, by sheer volumes, was our largest competitor - -

MR. SYME: Right.

MR. CATHCART: - - so he would build them for that. He would take them on the training mission, but I can't for sure say - - no, I would say he didn't build them specifically just for that reason.

MR. SYME: He built them as a competitive analysis to position Sears pricing and Sears product opposite the comparable Canadian Tire product. I think you have just said it.

MR. CATHCART: Right. He would build it to compare our product to Canadian Tire's product, but we know the pricing - - and the pricing would reflect that.

MR. SYME: Right. And he would come to you with a proposal with respect to a tire and he would show you these profiles, wouldn't he?

MR. CATHCART: Not usually. He would just provide me with the buying plan.

[underlining added]

[261] From this, I conclude that the competitive profiles were used by Mr. Keith when building Sears' tire line structure. At the least, the competitive profiles indicate Sears' knowledge that:

i) With respect to the BF Goodrich Plus, Silverguard Ultra IV, and RST Touring 2000 (which were compared with competitive Canadian Tire offerings), the regular price was not competitive with the prices of Sears' largest competitor; and

ii) With respect to the Weatherwise and RoadHandler T Plus, the regular price was not competitive with the comparable competitive offerings selected by Mr. Keith.

[262] I also note, in passing, that the competitive profiles for the two tires manufactured by Michelin were in its possession and were produced in response to a section 11 order. The competitive profiles were produced as being documentation exchanged with Sears in relation to the development and establishment of retail prices. This, in my view, lends credence to the conclusion that the competitive profiles were strategic, competitive documents.

[263] Sears' beliefs about the nature of its competition and its competitive response are more clearly found in the Spring and Fall Automotive Reviews for 1999.

(iv) Automotive reviews

[264] The 1999 automotive reviews were prepared by Mr. Keith and Mr. Vince Power, the national business manager, for the purpose of presenting, twice yearly, Sears' strategies and product line to Sears' chief executive officer. In Mr. Cathcart's words:

> "Basically this whole communication to the CEO was to detail [...] what we were going to introduce as new commodities possibly and how we were going to address the competition".

[265] Contained in the Spring 1999 review were separate strategies for private label tires and national brand tires. Identical wording is found in the Fall 1999 review with respect to the strategies. Oral evidence confirmed that the reviews were presented to Sears' executives. There was no evidence that the strategies contained in the reviews were rejected.

[266] Sears argues that the Commissioner's reliance upon the 1999 automotive reviews is misplaced and points to Mr. Cathcart's evidence that he found more than one portion of the reviews to be confusing, and that, in places, he could not understand why Mr. Keith wrote what he did.

[267] I found such testimony to be incredible and unpersuasive when it was given, and remain unpersuaded by Mr. Cathcart's testimony as it touched on the automotive reviews for 1999. I so conclude because it is to be remembered that the automotive reviews formed part of a large and important presentation to Sears' chief executive officer (and others) about how Sears was to address the competition. In the past, some who had made presentations to the chief executive officer were summarily reassigned or let go if their presentations were found wanting. Mr. Keith was acknowledged to have a compendious knowledge of the tire market. Language contained in the Spring 1999 automotive review was repeated in the Fall 1999 automotive review. Weighing those facts against Mr. Cathcart's testimony that certain aspects of the automotive reviews were confusing or incomprehensible, I reject Mr. Cathcart's testimony. I accept, as discussed below, that the 1999 automotive reviews set out Sears' assessment of its significant competition in the tire market and Sears' responsive marketing strategies for private label tires and national brand tires.

[268] I will deal first with Sears' strategy with respect to private label tires.

(a) Private label strategy

[269] Sears' strategy was expressed to be:

> "To increase our market share in Private Brand tires which represents almost 50% of the replacement tires sales in Canada. To differentiate our product from our competitors which affords the opportunity to maximize our profitability."

[270] Among the tactics listed to implement this strategy was the following:

> "Index our every day pricing to [CONFIDENTIAL] ([CONFIDENTIAL] Private Brand retailer) to be equal to or within [CONFIDENTIAL] % of their every day low price with a better warranty package. On sale we will be lower than the equivalent tire at [CONFIDENTIAL]."

[271] [CONFIDENTIAL], the competitive profiles built by Mr. Keith for the Silverguard Ultra IV and Response RST Touring compared each with Canadian Tire's comparable competitive offering. So too did the competitive profile for the BF Goodrich Plus. This was an entry-level tire, exclusive to Sears, that Mr. Keith compared to the Motomaster AW+. I accept, therefore, that while the BF Goodrich Plus was a flag brand tire, Sears chose internally to market it as if it were a private label tire.

[272] Mr. Cathcart admitted that Sears' "every day" strategy ([CONFIDENTIAL]) involved its 2For price, and not its regular price, because Sears' regular price was not competitive with Canadian Tire. Sears' 2For price was generally within 10% of Canadian Tire's pricing. Mr. Cathcart also confirmed that the "plan to sell price" referred to in the automotive review (for example at pages 1485-1488 and at page 1493) was the 2For price.

(b) National brand strategy

[273] The national brand strategy was expressed as follows:

> "To increase our market share in National Brands which represents over 50% of the Canadian replacement tire sales.
>
> To differentiate our product from our competitors which affords the opportunity to maximize our profitability."

[274] The tactics to implement this strategy included:

> "Continue to index our every day pricing to be 90 to 95% of the equivalent National Brand normal discounted price. When on sale indexed to be [CONFIDENTIAL] to [CONFIDENTIAL] % of the National Brand price. In the case of [CONFIDENTIAL] [[CONFIDENTIAL]] equivalent items we will match price".

[275] Mr. Cathcart admitted that:

- Sears' dual branded tires (including the Weatherwise and RoadHandler T Plus) were marketed under the national brand strategy;
- the competitive profiles for each of these tires reflect the national brand strategy in terms of pricing;
- Sears' regular prices were close to or lower than the relevant manufacturer's suggested list price ("MSLP");
- with respect to the competitive profile for the Weatherwise that referenced the competitive offering to be the Michelin RainForce MXA and that showed a comparison price described as "35% off list 9/1/97": Sears' regular prices for tire size P155/80R13 would be in the order of 147.92% of the comparison price; and
- the 2For price was 95.53% of the comparison price. Thus the 2For price was how Sears responded to a dealer who was selling at 35% off the MSLP.

(c) Sears' view of the pricing structure of its competitors

[276] Mr. Keith, in the automotive review, described the pricing structure of Canadian Tire and the independent tire stores as follows:

Canadian Tire:	"Value priced every day with occasional off price promos"
Tire Stores:	"Value priced off list with off price promo and gimmick promos"

[277] Sears' pricing strategy was described in the same document to be "[CONFIDENTIAL]".

(d) The MSLP

[278] Sears relies heavily upon the existence of MSLPs as constituting an objective, independent mechanism to verify the bona fides of its regular prices for the Michelin Weatherwise, Michelin RoadHandler T Plus, and the BF Goodrich Plus tire. However, on the basis of the following evidence, I find as a fact that, in 1999, MSLPs were not widely or commonly used by tire dealers as their regular selling price.

[279] First, Mr. Gauthier testified that:

- tire retailers set their own prices in the marketplace and, based on his experience, they tended to establish this price as a percentage of the MSLP;
- dealer prices so set represented a typical everyday selling price;
- tire retail selling prices in 1999 were not at the list price level;
- MSLPs were used to establish the tire dealer's acquisition price from the manufacturer and then by the dealer to set the dealer's retail price;
- in his experience, transactions did not occur at or close to MSLP.

[280] Second, Mr. King testified that:

- the MSLP would serve as the starting point, or the starting price, that independent tire retailers would use in selling tires to individual consumers;
- in 1999, dealers typically sold for 35% off list;
- that 35% discount was arrived at either because it was the dealer's offering price or because it was the finally negotiated price;
- to his knowledge, tires were not sold to consumers at MSLP.

[281] Third, Mr. Merkley testified that:

- various dealers would use the MSLP in different ways;
- in 1999 the norm, within Michelin's dealer channel, was to sell tires 30% to 35% off Michelin's list price.

[282] Fourth, as noted above, in the Spring Automotive Review Mr. Keith described the pricing strategy of "Tire Stores" to be "Value priced off list with off price promo and gimmick promotions". The competitive profile for the Weatherwise tire compared that tire with the Michelin RainForce at a price described to be "35% off list 9/1/97" and the competitive profile for the RoadHandler T Plus compared that tire with the Michelin X One at a price described to be "New List less disc 40%". Mr. Cathcart confirmed these references to "list" in the competitive profiles to be to Michelin's MSLP. I take the Spring Automotive Review to evidence Mr. Keith's knowledge or belief that tire stores generally sold tires at a percentage off the MSLP. For the two Michelin tires it would appear that Sears' pricing, to be competitive, must compete with pricing 35% and 40% off Michelin's MSLP.

[283] Professor Trebilcock's expert report sheds some light on the use of the MSLP by tire dealers as well. At paragraph 37, he notes that:

> The Toronto Star article also suggests that discounting off the manufacturers' suggested retail prices was common practice in tire retailing. The retailers referred to in the Toronto Star article discounted off manufacturers' suggested retail prices by about 30-35%.

[284] Professor Trebilcock also appends to his expert report an article dated January 17, 2000 written by Chris Collins and published in "Tire Business". The article quoted the following statement by John Goodwin, the Executive Director of the Ontario Tire Dealers Association ("OTDA"):

> Mr. Goodwin said the OTDA has a committee investigating the ads auto makers and mass merchandisers are running. Some ads claim to sell tires at 50 percent off list price, but he asks rhetorically, "Who sells at list?"

[285] In my view, the weight of the evidence leads to the conclusion that MSLPs were not commonly used by tire dealers as a selling price, and that in 1999, tire dealers typically sold national brand tires at a price in the order of 35% off the MSLP.

[286] Sears argues that Mr. King's evidence should be discounted because neither he nor his employer sold tires at the retail level so that his evidence is "anecdotal at best". Mr. Gauthier's evidence is also discounted by Sears as being "anecdotal, overly broad, unsubstantiated and [...] not credible". Sears also argues that Mr. Gauthier is not truly an independent expert and, in oral argument, took great exception to his evidence, on cross-examination, that he disagreed with Mr. Winter when Mr. Winter concluded that Canadian Tire did not dominate the marketplace. In Mr. Gauthier's view, Canadian Tire is the dominant influence in the tire market in Canada.

[287] I have previously described, generally, the background of these gentlemen in the tire industry. Mr. Gauthier has extensive experience dating since 1984 with respect to the promotion and wholesale sale of tires to tire retailers and I reject the suggestion that his testimony was partial or biased. Mr. King has two years of experience as Bridgestone's sales manager for associate brands and, since 1999, he has worked as its sales manager for Corporate Accounts and Original Equipment. He was responsible for the sale of tires to merchandisers such as Sears, Canadian Tire and Costco. In my view, their knowledge of the use dealers make of an MSLP can not be dismissed as anecdotal. Their evidence is confirmed to a significant extent by Mr. Merkley, and by Mr. Keith's description of the manner in which tire dealers priced tires and by the use he made of the MSLP in the two competitive profiles referred to above.

[288] To the extent it was argued that Mr. Gauthier's view that Canadian Tire was the dominant influence in the tire market was not credible, I note that, at paragraph 83 of Sears' responding statement of grounds and material facts, Sears asserted that "Canadian Tire was a dominant tire retailer in Canada (enjoying approximately a twenty-two per cent share of tire sales in Canada during the Relevant Period)".

(v) Conclusion: Good faith - private label tires

[289] Did Sears truly believe that its regular price for the Silverguard Ultra IV, Response RST Touring and BF Goodrich tires were genuine and bona fide prices set with the expectation that the market would validate them? The following evidence touches on Sears' belief:

i) Mr. Cathcart admitted that, going into 1999, Sears would have expected that it would only sell between 5 and 10% of the Tires at their regular price. This was because between 90 to 95% of the Tires would be sold as multiples. This made the regular price irrelevant to 90 to 95% of the Tires Sears expected to sell because, when a tire was not on promotion, a purchaser would be offered, without requesting it, the 2For price.

ii) Sears viewed Canadian Tire as its main competitor in the private label segment. The competitive profiles prepared for these three tires only compared Sears' 2For, normal promotional and great item pricing to the Canadian Tire pricing. Sears' regular price was known not to be competitive with Canadian Tire and fell well outside the range of price which Sears believed to be competitive with its main competitor in the private label market.

iii) Sears' 2For prices were described as its "every day pricing" in Sears' private label strategy. The Sears regular price was not.

iv) Sears did not and could not track the number of tires it sold at the regular price.

v) With respect to the 5 to 10% of tires that Sears expected to sell singly, if the distribution of single unit tire sales was constant over time, Sears could expect to sell a percentage of single tires on promotion equal to the percentage of time the Tires were offered on promotion. For example, if a tire was on sale 25% of the time, Sears could expect 25% of the single tires to be sold at a promotional price.

For the six month period preceding the representations at issue, the following tires were offered for sale at regular single unit prices for the indicated percentage of time:

Response RST Touring	46%
Silverguard Ultra IV	60%
BF Goodrich Plus	45%

Thus, Sears could only have expected to sell the following:

Response RST Touring	between 2.3 and 4.6% at its regular price
Silverguard Ultra IV	between 3 and 6% at its regular price
BF Goodrich Plus	between 2.25 and 4.5% at its regular price.

[290] On the basis of that evidence, I find that Sears could not have truly believed that its regular prices for the Response RST Touring, Silverguard Ultra IV, and BF Goodrich Plus tires were genuine and bona fide prices that the market would validate.

[291] Turning to the objective factor of actual sales at their regular prices, for each of these three tires respectively, for the 12 month period preceding the representations at issue, only 0.51%, 1.21% and 2.29% of the Tires sold were sold at their regular prices.

[292] On the whole of the evidence, I find that Sears' private label tires were not offered for sale at Sears' regular prices in good faith.

(vi) Conclusion: Good faith - national brands

[293] Did Sears truly believe that the regular prices for the Michelin Weatherwise and RoadHandler T Plus were genuine bona fide prices set with the expectation that the market would validate them? The following is relevant evidence:

i) Again, 90 to 95% of these tires were expected to be sold as multiples and so the regular price would be expected to be irrelevant to 90 to 95% of these tires sold by Sears.

ii) I have found that, in 1999, flag brand tires were typically being sold by tire dealers at 35% off the MSLP and were not generally being sold at list price. Sears knew this, as evidenced by Mr. Keith's description of tire store pricing. Sears' competitive pricing was its 2For price which was referred to as its "every day pricing" in its national brand strategy. Sears' regular prices were greatly in excess of what it knew to be the competitive price range.

iii) Sears did not and could not track the number of tires it sold at the regular price.

iv) In the six month period preceding the representations at issue, the Weatherwise and RoadHandler T Plus tires were offered for sale at their regular prices respectively at 19% and 38% of the time. It follows that, knowing that only 5 to 10% of the Tires would be sold singly, Sears could only have expected to sell (if single tire sales were constant over time)

- between 0.95 and 1.9% of the Weatherwise tire at its regular price
- between 1.9% and 3.8% of the RoadHandler T Plus at its regular price.

[294] On the basis of that evidence, I similarly find that Sears could not have truly believed that its regular prices for the Weatherwise and RoadHandler T Plus were genuine and bona fide prices that the market would validate.

[295] Turning again to actual sales, in the 12 month period preceding the representations, only 1.3% and 0.82% respectively of sales by Sears of the RoadHandler T Plus and the Weatherwise tire were made at their regular price.

[296] On the whole of the evidence I find that Sears' national brand tires were not offered for sale at Sears' regular prices in good faith.

(vii) The opposing view

[297] In concluding that neither Sears' private label nor national brand tires were offered for sale at Sears' regular prices in good faith, I have had regard to the expert evidence of Professor Trebilcock, noting that he was not qualified as an expert in marketing. It was his opinion that:

> The information available on regular prices in 1999 indicates that Sears' regular prices were similar to or less than the regular prices of some [not all] of its competitors for comparable tires. At least some of Sears' regular prices were also similar to or less than manufacturers' suggested retail prices for comparable tires. Such observations are not consistent with a claim that Sears' regular prices did not make economic sense.

[298] In Professor Trebilcock's view, comparison between Sears' regular prices and those of its competitors should include Sears' regular 2For prices. This is because the 2For price was always available on all multiple sales of regular priced tires; it was not a sale price.

[299] For the following reasons, I have not found Professor Trebilcock's opinion to be of assistance.

[300] To the extent Professor Trebilcock opined that Sears' regular prices were similar to or less than the regular prices of some, not all, of its competitors, he acknowledged that limited data was available. No data was available to him for either the Response RST Touring or the Michelin RoadHandler Plus tires. For the other three tire lines at issue, for only one tire (the BF Goodrich Plus) was Sears' regular single unit price lower than that of its competitors. For both the Michelin Weatherwise and Silverguard Ultra IV, Sears' regular single unit prices were significantly higher than its competitors' prices for comparable tires (eg. for the Weatherwise, Sears' regular price of $181.99 compared to competitive offerings of $110, $98 and $99; for the Silverguard Ultra IV, Sears' regular price of $133.99 compared with a competitive offering of $105). The reference prices quoted by Professor Trebilcock were all prices that were discounted off the MSLP by 30% or more.

[301] Professor Trebilcock acknowledged that Canadian Tire's regular prices were consistently lower than Sears' regular prices, but referred to add-ons that Sears' included in its prices. However, he did not have any information that would allow him to quantify how much consumers might be prepared to pay for those add-ons.

[302] Professor Trebilcock concluded that Sears' regular prices were genuine in that approximately 21% of all of its tire sales took place at regular prices; such calculation included sales at both Sears' regular and 2For prices. However, subsection 74.01(3) of the Act is concerned only with the reference price. In this case, the reference price was Sears' regular single unit price.

[303] With respect to the absence of consumer harm referred to by Professor Trebilcock, as noted below, consumer harm is not relevant to the consideration of the materiality of any misrepresentations and hence is not relevant to the existence of reviewable conduct.

XI. DID SEARS MEET THE FREQUENCY REQUIREMENTS OF THE TIME TEST?

[304] There are two elements contained in the time test: the goods must be offered at the alleged OSP (or a higher price) in "good faith" for "a substantial period of time recently before" the making of the representation as to price. Both elements of the test must be met.

[305] My finding that the Tires were not offered at Sears' regular single unit price in good faith is, therefore, dispositive of the time test. However, for completeness, and in the event that I am in error in my conclusion as to good faith, I will deal briefly with the frequency requirements of the time test.

[306] The parties agree, I believe, that the first step in the application of the time test is to select the time frame within which to examine Sears' conduct. Sears says that the appropriate time frame is 12 months. The Commissioner argues that the appropriate period is six months. Once the appropriate time frame is selected, the next step is to determine within that time frame whether Sears offered the Tires at their regular prices for a substantial period of time.

(i) The reference period

[307] For the following reasons, I accept the submission of the Commissioner that the appropriate reference period is six months.

[308] First, paragraph 74.01(3)(b) of the Act requires the good faith offering to have occurred "recently" before the representation at issue. This means that there must be, as the Commissioner argues, reasonable temporal proximity between the impugned representations and the offering of the Tires at regular prices.

[309] The word "recent" is commonly understood to mean "that has lately happened or taken place" (The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, 3rd ed. vol. II) or "not long passed" (The Concise Oxford Dictionary, 7th ed.). A 12 month time frame would not, in my view, be in accordance with the requirement that the reference period be in reasonable temporal proximity to the making of the representation.

[310] Second, after subsection 74.01(3) of the Act came into effect, Sears' legal department circulated a memorandum dated May 11, 1999 to all Sears vice presidents which described amendments to the Act. The memorandum advised that, with respect to the time test, in general "the time period to be considered will be the six months prior to [...] the making of the representation (this time period can be shorter if the product is seasonal in nature)". Thus, Sears did not posit internally the need for a 12 month reference period. Further, Mr. McMahon confirmed that, when he applied the policy set out in the May 11, 1999 memorandum, he looked to see whether the Tires were on sale at or above the comparison price more than 50% of the time in the six month period that pre-dated the representations at issue. While Sears now argues that a 12 month reference period is more appropriate in order to capture the seasonal nature of tire sales, in my view, its own internal practice of monitoring sale frequency over a six month period belies this argument.

[311] Finally, I accept the opinion of Dr. Lichtenstein that six months is an appropriate reference period as it provides an accurate picture of Sears' OSP behaviour. In his view, the substantial period of time provision relates to the amount of time a product should be offered at an OSP such that it has the opportunity to be verified by the market as the "regular price". A six month period would provide such opportunity, in Dr. Lichtenstein's view, because:

i) there is not much seasonal variation with respect to all-season tires;

ii) to the extent there are sales increases in the Spring and the Fall, any contiguous six month period would capture some of the higher and lower periods; and

iii) there is little reason to expect month-to-month variation in the percentage of tires sold at the OSP.

[312] I do not find Dr. Lichtenstein's opinion on this point to have been impaired in cross-examination.

(ii) The frequency with which the Tires were not on promotion.

[313] Having concluded that a six month reference period is appropriate, Table 2, which follows paragraph 22 above, depicts that, for the six month period preceding the relevant representations, the Tires were offered for sale at their regular single unit price as follows:

Tire	Percentage of time offered at Regular Prices
BF Goodrich Plus	45%
RoadHandler T Plus	38%
Weatherwise RH Sport	19%
Response RST Touring	46 or 49.65%
Silverguard Ultra IV	60%

[314] With respect to the Response RST Touring tire and the dispute with respect to the percentage of time that the tire was not on promotion, Sears' planning documents (that is the checkerboard and monthly pocket planners) show that the Response RST Touring tire was offered at regular prices 49.65% of the time. However, Sears' actual sales reports show that the Response RST Touring tire was sold at sale prices for one additional week. This would reduce the time the tire was offered at its regular price to 46% of the time. Mr. McKenna was unable to explain the discrepancy in these Sears' documents. Given his testimony that if Sears sold the product at promotional prices the product was on promotion, I find the information contained in the sales reports to provide the most accurate evidence as to when the Tires were actually on sale. It follows that the Response RST Touring tire was offered at regular prices 46% of the time.

(iii) "Substantial Period of Time"

[315] In order to determine what is meant by the phrase "substantial period of time", regard must be had to the statutory context. The time test functions to assess whether a specified price actually constitutes a price at which a product was "ordinarily supplied" by the person making the representation for a "substantial period of time".

[316] In this context, it seems to me that if a product is on sale half, or more than half, of the time, it can not be said that the product has been offered at its regular price for a substantial period of time. This conclusion is consistent with the decision of the Ontario County Court in Regina v. T. Eaton Co. Ltd. (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 74. In the context of a prosecution under paragraph 33(C)(1) of the Combines Investigation Act, the Court there observed that, if a product was on sale 50% of the time, or thereabouts, the product could not be said to be ordinarily sold for a regular, or any other price.

[317] In the present case, the following four lines of tires were on sale more than 50% of the time in the 6 month period pre-dating the relevant representations:

Tire	Percentage of time on sale
Weatherwise RH Sport	81%
RoadHandler T Plus	62%
BF Goodrich Plus	55%
Response RST Touring	54%

[318] I find, therefore, that Sears failed to offer those tires to the public at the regular price for a substantial period of time recently before making the representations.

[319] Having found that Sears did not meet the good faith requirement for all of the Tires, and did not meet the frequency requirements of the time test for four of the five tire lines, it is necessary to consider whether Sears has established that the representations were not false or misleading in a material respect.

XII. WERE THE REPRESENTATIONS FALSE OR MISLEADING IN A MATERIAL RESPECT?

[320] As an alternative to its position that it complied with the time test, Sears relies upon subsection 74.01(5) of the Act which relieves a person from liability under subsection 74.01(3) where the person establishes, in the circumstances, that a representation as to price is not false or misleading in a material respect. Subsection 74.01(5) must be read in conjunction with subsection 74.01(6) which requires that "the general impression conveyed by a representation as well as its literal meaning shall be taken into account in determining whether or not the representation is false or misleading in a material respect".

(i) What were the representations?

[321] Sears argues that subsection 74.01(3) deals only with a representation as to price so that the general impression conveyed by a representation must be confined to a representation as to price. I agree. This means that any aspect of the advertisements at issue not related to price, for example warranty information, is not relevant.

[322] Sears argues as well that the savings messages, or save stories, are also irrelevant because they are not representations as to price. I disagree. In my view, representations such as "save 40%" and "½ price" are properly characterized as representations as to price.

(ii) Were the representations false or misleading?

[323] Sears asserts that the representations as to price were neither false nor misleading. Therefore, it is necessary to first determine what impression the representations at issue created. This is consistent with the approach taken by the Court in R. v. Kenitex Canada Ltd. et al. (1980), 51 C.P.R. (2d) 103 (Ontario County Court). In Kenitex, the accused was charged under paragraph 36(1)(a) of the Combines Investigation Act which made it an offence to make any representation to the public that was false or misleading in a material respect. Subsection 36(4) of the Combines Investigation Act provided that:

36(4) In any prosecution for a violation of this section, the general impression conveyed by a representation as well as the literal meaning thereof shall be taken into account in determining whether or not the representation is false or misleading in a material respect.	36(4) Dans toute poursuite pour violation du présent article, pour déterminer si les indications sont fausses ou trompeuses sur un point important il faut tenir compte de l'impression générale qu'elles donnent ainsi que de leur sens littéral.

[324] Thus, the legislation considered by the Court in Kenitex is substantially the same as that now before the Tribunal.

[325] At page 107 of Kenitex, the Court considered the elements of the offence and wrote:

> In my view [...] the representation will be false or misleading in a material respect if, in the context in which it is made, it readily conveys an impression to the ordinary citizen which is, in fact, false or misleading and if that ordinary citizen would likely be influenced by that impression in deciding whether or not he would purchase the product being offered.

[326] As to the concept of "ordinary citizen", the Court wrote:

> The ordinary citizen is, by definition, a fictional cross-section of the public lacking any relevant expertise, but as well possessing the ordinary reason and intelligence and common sense that such a cross-section of the public would inevitably reveal. In the last analysis, therefore, it is for the trier of fact to determine what impression any such representation would create, not by applying his own reason, intelligence and common sense, but rather by defining the impression that that fictional ordinary citizen would gain from hearing or reading the representation.

[327] Turning to the representations in this case, I find that the general impression conveyed by them to an ordinary citizen is that consumers who purchased the Tires at Sears' promotional prices would realize substantial savings over what they would have paid for the Tires had they not been on promotion. This impression is consistent with the literal meaning conveyed by the representations. For example, turning to the advertisement set out at paragraph 17 above, the advertisement stated that one could "save 40%" on Michelin RoadHandler T Plus tires. For the smallest size shown, Sears' regular price of $153.99 was compared with the promotional price of $91.99. For the largest size, the regular price of $219.99 was compared with the promotional price of $131.99.

[328] As to whether that impression was false or misleading, it is necessary to remember that:

- when the Tires were not on promotion, Sears' 2For price was always available if more than one tire was purchased;

- Sears' 2For price was always substantially lower than the regular (single unit) price;

- 90% to 95% of tires were sold in multiples; and

- Sears' regular (single unit) price would never have applied to sales of multiple tires.

[329] It follows, as conceded by Mr. Cathcart in cross-examination, that for tires purchased in multiples at Sears' promotional events, the savings realized by customers would not have been the difference between Sears' regular price and the promotional price. Rather, the savings would be the difference between the 2For price and the promotional price.

[330] Sears bears the onus under subsection 74.01(5) of the Act. It says that its representations as to price were not false or misleading because:

1. The representations accurately set out Sears' prices for a single unit of the Tires, and those were prices at which genuine sales took place.

2. The representations as to price were available to, and benefited, customers who purchased a single tire.

3. Averaged over the five Tires, 11% of purchasers would buy only one tire.

4. Any tire consumer to whom the representations were directed might choose to buy a single tire, so that the representations were true for 100% of the intended readers of the representations.

5. The representations as to price reflected prices that Sears used as a basis for calculating warranty adjustments and refunds.

[331] All of these points are literally correct. However, the general impression conveyed by the representations is that consumers (not just 11% of consumers) who purchased the Tires at Sears at promotional prices would realize substantial savings. For 89% of consumers and 90 to 95% of the Tires sold, this was not correct. I find, therefore, that representations as to price contained in both the regular/promotional price comparison and in the save stories were false or misleading.

[332] Before leaving this point, I note that a similar conclusion was reached in somewhat similar circumstances in R. v. Simpsons Ltd. (1988), 25 C.P.R. (3d) 34 (Ontario District Court).

There, Simpsons caused a number of "mini casino" cards to be printed and distributed. The cards advertised "you could save 10% to 25%" on practically everything in the store, and that the possible discounts were 10%, 15%, 20% or 25%. The mini casino cards each contained four tabs, under each tab was printed a symbol. When a tab was lifted, the symbol was revealed. There were four symbols, corresponding to each of the four percentage discounts available. Each card instructed a customer to lift one tab only in order to reveal the discount level available to them. Of the cards printed, 90% had the 10% discount symbol printed under all four tabs. The remaining 10% of the cards each contained all four symbols. On those facts, the Court found that the representation "you could save 10% to 25% on practically everything in the store" was manifestly false and misleading. The Court wrote at pages 37-38:

> The cards had been printed in such a way as to ensure that 9 out of 10 of the recipients of the cards had no chance to obtain other than the minimum discount of 10%. Each card displayed all four discount symbols, and it is obvious from the get-up of the card that it was designed to leave the impression that a different symbol lay concealed under each of the four tabs. As a consequence of the design of the promotion, the representation that "you could save 10% to 25%" was false as to nine tenths of the cards. The recipients of those cards were misled and intentionally so.
>
> To make out the offence, it would be sufficient if a false or misleading representation had been made to one member of the public. Here, on the acknowledged facts, the misleading representation was made to 927,000 people, or 90% of the recipients. Of those, most were among the 750,000 Simpsons credit card holders who were the addressees of the mailing.
>
> The fact that the representation was true as to one-tenth of the recipients of the randomly distributed cards does nothing more than reduce the magnitude of the deception.

(iii) Were the representations as to price false or misleading in a material respect?

[333] Prior jurisprudence in the context of criminal prosecutions under the Act or its predecessor has interpreted what is meant by "misleading in a material respect". As noted above, in Kenitex, the Court found that a materially false or misleading impression would be conveyed if the "ordinary citizen would likely be influenced by that impression in deciding whether or not he would purchase the product being offered."

[334] In R. v. Tege Investments Ltd. (1978), 51 C.P.R. (2d) 216 (Alberta Provincial Court), the Court applied the dictionary meaning of "material" which was "much consequence or important or pertinent or germane or essential to the matter". The Court noted that it was not necessary to establish that any person was actually mislead by a representation. It was sufficient to establish that an advertisement was published for public view and that it was untrue or misleading in a material respect.

[335] Finally, in R. v. Kellys on Seymour Ltd. (1969), 60 C.P.R. 24 (Vancouver Magistrate's Court, B.C.), the Court concluded that the word "material" refers to the degree to which the purchaser is affected by the words used in coming to a conclusion as to whether or not he should make a purchase. Whether or not a consumer in fact obtained a bargain and may have paid less than he would ordinarily have paid was not the relevant criteria.

[336] The question to be determined, therefore, is whether the impression created by the price comparisons and/or the save stories would constitute a material influence in the mind of a consumer. Put another way, I accept the submission of Sears that the relevant inquiry is not whether the type of representation is a material one, but whether the element of misrepresentation is material.

[337] I believe that the following are relevant considerations.

[338] First, the magnitude of the exaggerated savings. Returning to the Michelin RoadHandler T Plus advertisement set out at paragraph 17 above, for the smallest tire size advertised, an ordinary citizen considering the purchase of four tires would reasonably believe, in my view, their savings to be $248.00 or ($153.99 - $91.99) x 4. In fact, the 2For price for each tire was $94.99. Accordingly, the actual savings would be $12.00 or ($94.99 - $91.99) x 4. In this example, the savings were substantially exaggerated. Because Sears' 2For price was always substantially lower than its regular price, it follows that the savings were similarly substantially overstated in every OSP representation made concerning the Tires.

[339] In my view, that magnitude of advertised savings would be a material influence or consideration upon a consumer.

[340] Second, I look to Sears' experience when it eliminated its 2For pricing on January 1, 2001 and lowered its regular prices for tires. Sears' Great Item and normal promotional prices remained unchanged. Following the reduction of its regular prices, Sears' sales volumes at promotional prices decreased. Mr. McMahon acknowledged in cross-examination that it was probably true that promotional sales decreased because Sears could not use as favourable save stories. As Sears argued, if savings are represented at all, consumers expect them to be of a certain magnitude and if the represented savings are incongruous with consumers' expectations concerning the deals typically offered, or typically offered by the particular retailer, the promotion will be less effective. In the circumstances where Sears was recognized to be a high-low retailer, where tires were sold in a competitive market, and where national brand tires were typically sold by tire dealers at a price 35% off the MSLP, I find that Sears' misrepresentation of the extent of the savings to be realized by purchasing the Tires on promotion was, more probably than not, likely to influence a consumer. This means that Sears' misrepresentation of the extent of the savings to be realized was misleading in a material respect.

[341] Finally, I have found that consumers have a limited ability to evaluate the intrinsic attributes of tires, and it is admitted that the five lines of Tires were exclusive to Sears. In those circumstances, the following evidence from Dr. Lichtenstein's expert report is germane:

45. The Tires are private label brands in a product category where several intrinsic attributes are difficult for the average consumer to evaluate. Consumers seek to maximize value (i.e., the quality they get for the price they pay) in purchase situations. When consumers need a product where there are several brand alternatives, there are various purchase strategies they may employ to maximize value. First, for product categories where intrinsic attributes are easy for the consumer to evaluate (i.e., those physical attributes that comprise the brand), consumers can simply evaluate brand alternatives within and across merchants on a "quality for the money" criterion and select that brand from that merchant that offers the best value.

46. However, where intrinsic product attributes are difficult for consumes to evaluate, consumers can at least turn to a second strategy that encompasses comparing prices for like brands across merchants. By doing so, they can at least purchase a brand that represents the lowest price for that brand across merchants. In this manner, while consumers would not explicitly know how much quality they received for their dollar, they would at least know that they received the most for their dollar for that particular brand. However, when consumers lack the ability to evaluate products on intrinsic attributes and competing retailers carry brands unique to them, neither of these strategies is open to consumers.

47. What strategy is left for consumers? Research shows that in cases where consumers cannot evaluate product quality based on intrinsic attributes, they will take "shortcuts", i.e., rely on "decision heuristics" in making quality assessments. Most commonly, they will rely on "extrinsic cues" to signal product quality and a good deal (e.g., OSP claim, store name, brand name). Thus, the likelihood increases that they would respond to a merchant advertising "exceptional values," and especially if the merchant is perceived to be credible. As noted by Kaufmann et al. (1994), there is widespread recognition that OSP representations are likely to be more impactful for product categories where intrinsic attributes are hard for consumers to assess.

[342] Having regard to those circumstances, as required by subsection 74.01(5) of the Act, I accept that Sears' OSP representations are more likely to be relied upon to reflect quality or value so misrepresentation of the OSP is more likely to impact upon or influence a consumer.

[343] Similarly, I have found that a very significant percentage of consumers do not spend time searching for tires, considering alternatives, or comparing prices from a variety of different stores. Dr. Deal's study suggested that approximately 42% of Sears' customers did not compare tire prices prior to buying their tires from Sears. This evidence also supports the conclusion that Sears' OSP representations and save stories were more likely to influence consumers.

[344] Thus, on the whole of the evidence, Sears has failed to establish that its OSP representations were not false or misleading in a material respect.

(iv) Sears' arguments about materiality

[345] In so concluding, I have had regard to Sears' submissions that the representations as to price were not false or misleading in a material respect because:

a) consumers are recognized to consistently discount OSP representations by about

25%;

b) Sears is a promotional retailer, and because its reference price is identified as "Sears reg.", consumers would interpret the reference price differently than OSP representations made by an EDLP marketer or suppliers generally;

c) Sears' ads that did not feature Sears' regular price representations produced more of an uplift in sales levels from non-promotional periods;

d) Mr. Winter testified that, in 1999, tires were sold in a highly competitive and highly promotional context which included a variety of pricing frameworks in which no single pricing framework or competitor dominated the market. Further, Dr. Deal found approximately 63% of consumers comparison shop even where they see ads that indicate reduced tire prices;

e) factors such as warranties, roadside assistance and the provision of a "satisfaction guaranteed or your money refunded" guarantee could enhance a consumer's perception of value and positively impact the decision to purchase a tire; and

f) Dr. Deal found that 78% of survey respondents were satisfied with the value they received and 93% were satisfied with their tire purchase.

[346] I will deal with each item in turn.

(a) Consumers consistently discount OSP representation by about 25%

[347] It is correct that it was Dr. Lichtenstein's opinion that consumers mentally discount advertised reference prices and that one study found that consumers consistently discount OSP offerings by about 25%. However, it remained Dr. Lichtenstein's opinion that:

> 33. However, even though knowledgeable/skeptical consumers appear to "discount the discount" more than the average consumer, they tend to perceive that some portion of advertised discount may be bona fide. That is, research findings show that even for consumer populations that are more knowledgeable about the product category (see Grewal et al. 1998), and even for consumers who are more skeptical of OSP claims (see Blair and Landon 1981; Urbany et al. 1988; Urbany and Bearden 1989), they are still influenced by OSP claims. For example, based on their findings, Urbany and Bearden (1989, p. 48) conclude "Our subject's perceptions were influenced significantly by the exaggerated reference price ... even though, on the whole, they were skeptical of its validity... Even though it is discounted, the reference price still apparently increases subject estimates of (the advertiser's normal selling price) over those who are presented with no reference price." Also, Urbany et al. (1988) found that although consumers mentally discount higher advertised reference prices at higher rates, the positive impact of the higher absolute level of the advertised reference price on consumer perceptions more than offsets the higher rate of mental discounting such that the outcome is that consumers perceive more savings for higher levels of advertised reference prices.

> 34. Moreover, given the value consumers place on their time, "if the advertised sale represents a large enough reduction from the retailer's regular price, the consumer might infer that another similar retailer...could not afford to put the item on sale with a noticeably greater discount" (Kaufmann et al. 1994, p. 121). From the consumer's point of view, the "worst case" is that although the reference price may not be a bona fide price, "it does assure that the consumer has not paid too much... and (thus) the consumer may use the limited information contained in high-low (reference price) sale advertising in an informed effort to find a satisfactory price for the product" (Kaufmann et al. 1994, p. 122). But even in cases where this occurs, a non-advertising competitor retailer offering the same product at the same purchase price would be injured in that a deceptive reference price was used to attract the customer to the advertiser's store. Moreover, the consumer's perceptions of transaction utility, which may actually be a significant influence in the decision to purchase, would not be based on bona fide perceptions. [underlining added]

[348] Moreover, on cross-examination it was Dr. Lichtenstein's evidence that there would be less discounting of a reference price where the OSP representation is made by a credible retailer such as Sears.

[349] Thus, I do not find Dr. Lichtenstein's evidence with respect to discounting of OSP representations establishes that Sears' OSP representations were not material.

(b) Sears' regular price representations must be seen in the context of consumers' knowledge that Sears is a promotional retailer

[350] Sears says that because it is known to be a promotional retailer, its customers would interpret its OSP representations in a different fashion from their interpretation of OSP representations made by ordinary suppliers or EDLP retailers. No evidence was cited to support this submission.

[351] It would seem to be equally likely that if influenced by Sears' reputation as a promotional retailer, a consumer would be influenced by its OSP representations and find them to be very material as signalling an appropriate time to purchase in order to obtain substantial savings from the price consumers would ordinarily pay at Sears if the Tires were not on promotion.

(c) Sears' ads that did not feature OSP representations

[352] Sears argues that:

> 172. Moreover, with respect to the relative regard paid by consumers to the advertised savings and the final transaction price, Mr. McKenna's evidence demonstrated the comparative success of Sears' tire advertisements, published during the Relevant Period, that did not feature "Sears reg." representations; that is, which informed the potential consumer of the selling price only. These advertisements produced more of an uplift in sales levels from non-promotional periods than did the "Sears reg." advertisements, even though the tires featured in them were not the lowest-priced tires offered by Sears.
>
> 173. Mr. McKenna's reasonable conclusion was:
>
> > That the consumer or the customer recognized value when it was shown them. They recognized value without a price point or a comparative regular and certainly without a save story.
>
> 174. The same or a similar point can be made from the "Tireland" advertisement that was the focus of an exchange between Sears and Michelin in 1999. As Mr. Merkley acknowledged in cross-examination, this advertisement relied on consumers' ability to discern value, without reference to a "save story" or a "percentage off".

[353] Mr. McKenna testified that, with respect to the Michelin Weatherwise and the Silverguard ST (not one of the tires at issue), he compared sales for those tires when they were not on promotion to their sales during a period when they were on promotion. The Silverguard ST had no regular price, it was simply priced based on rim size, starting at $44.99. Thus, the Silverguard ST was advertised with no regular comparison price or save story. The Michelin Weatherwise was advertised with its regular price shown together with a 40% save story.

[354] When the Michelin Weatherwise was advertised, its unit sales increased by approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] times over sales when it was not advertised. Sales volumes of the Silverguard ST, when advertised, increased by [CONFIDENTIAL] times over sales when not advertised. In this context, Mr. McKenna concluded that customers recognized value.

[355] This evidence is anecdotal, relating to a tire that had no regular price, and is in conflict with Mr. McMahon's evidence and Mr. Cathcart's evidence about Sears' experience with the BF Goodrich Plus tire set out at paragraphs 214 and 215 above.

[356] For this reason, I do not find the evidence relating to the Silverguard ST establishes that Sears' OSP representations were not material.

[357] To the extent that Sears relies on Mr. Merkley's acknowledgement in cross-examination that a "Tireland" advertisement relied upon a consumer's ability to discern value without reference to a save story, Mr. Merkley simply responded "I guess, yes" to the suggestion that the retailer in question assumed that his potential customers would recognize value. Further, the particular price advertised by Tireland was sufficiently low that it caused Sears to write to Michelin expressing its concern and caused Michelin to respond to Sears that it shared Sears' concern at the pricing. However, Michelin said that it found this to be an isolated case where the dealer intended to have a weekend sale for the fifth consecutive year.

[358] This evidence does not establish that Sears' OSP representations were immaterial.

(d) Mr. Winter's and Dr. Deal's evidence

[359] Sears relies upon Mr. Winter's evidence that, in 1999, tires were sold in a highly competitive and promotional context and Dr. Deal's evidence that his survey found that 63% of consumers comparison shop even when they see ads that show reduced tire prices.

[360] However, comparison shopping would seem to be directed to final transaction prices, and not necessarily the materiality of OSP representations. For those consumers who say they comparison shop, the OSP representations could nonetheless have: drawn the consumer into the market; attracted the consumer to Sears; and caused the consumer to purchase from Sears if no lower final transaction price was located in the consumer's search.

(e) The consumers' perception of value based upon factors such as warranties and the guarantee of satisfaction

[361] Sears relies upon Dr. Lichtenstein's acknowledgement that factors such as warranties, roadside assistance programs, and Sears' guarantee could enhance consumers' perception of value and positively impact upon the decision to purchase a tire. This is said to reduce the effect of Sears' OSP representations because response to price is context dependent.

[362] Given Professor Trebilcock's acknowledgement that he did not have information that would allow him to quantify how much consumers might be willing to pay for add-ons provided by Sears relative to add-ons provided by Canadian Tire, and the rather amorphous nature of Dr. Lichtenstein's acknowledgement, I am not persuaded that the value consumers attach to add-ons is sufficient to make Sears' OSP representations immaterial. Even with add-ons, the extent of the savings misrepresentation could still be influential to the consumer's decision to purchase.

(f) Sears' consumer satisfaction

[363] Sears says that even if consumers purchased their tires from Sears solely upon the strength of the representations at issue, 78% of respondents to Dr. Deal's survey indicated that they had received good value for their money.

[364] There are, I believe, two responses to this.

[365] First, harm is not a necessary element of reviewable conduct. As the Court noted in Kellys on Seymour, supra, at page 26, the "criteria is, did in fact the person think that what he was buying was, to the ordinary purchaser, in the ordinary market, worth the price it is purported to be worth, and from which it is reduced". Whether or not a consumer in fact got a bargain or paid less than what the consumer would ordinarily have paid is not the criteria. See also: R. v. J. Pascal Hardware Co. Ltd. (1972), 8 C.P.R. (2d) 155 at page 159 (Ont. Co. Crt).

[366] Second, I accept Dr. Lichtenstein's evidence, which I find was not substantially challenged on the point, that:

> 39. When consumers are deceived by an inflated OSP, the level of harm could be limited if they became aware of the deception. With a liberal return policy, the injury may be limited to the time, effort, and aggravation of returning the product to the store (assuming the store would accept the used product on return). However, in my opinion, most consumers are unlikely to recognize that they were deceived by an OSP representation. The reason for this is that for them to become aware of deception, they must become aware that the OSP price is, in the case of a seller's own OSP representation, not in truth the seller's own bona fide OSP.
>
> 40. Several factors work against consumers becoming price aware. First, as the research evidence (cited above in paragraph 29) strongly suggests that consumers are not willing to engage in much pre-purchase search, it is reasonable to conclude that most consumers are unwilling to expend time/effort necessary to engage in post-purchase price search. Thus, they are unlikely to monitor that seller's prices after the fact. Second, consumers have a built-in desire to maintain "cognitive consistency" and thus, they avoid encountering price information that indicates that they were duped, thereby creating cognitive inconsistency (called "cognitive dissonance," or "buyer's remorse/regret" in this specific domain). Since this mental state creates discomfort for the consumer, they are motivated to engage in "selective exposure to information" by actively avoiding information that would suggest that they did not receive the value represented by the OSP (Eagly and Chaiken 1993, p. 478; Engel, Blackwell, Miniard, 1995). [underlining added]

[367] Thus, for all these reasons, Sears failed to establish that its OSP representations were not false or misleading to a material extent.

(v) Conclusion

[368] Sears admitted that it did not meet the requirements of the volume test and I have found that the Tires were not offered at Sears' regular price in good faith and that Sears failed to meet requirements of the time test for four of the five tire lines. I have also found that Sears failed to establish that the representations at issue were not false or misleading in a material respect. It follows that the allegations of reviewable conduct have been made out and the Tribunal finds Sears to have engaged in reviewable conduct. It is therefore necessary to consider what administrative remedies should be ordered.

XIII. WHAT ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES SHOULD BE ORDERED?

[369] Section 74.1 of the Act sets out the range of remedies available and the circumstances in which the remedies may be ordered. Section 74.1 of the Act is as follows:

74.1 (1) Where, on application by the Commissioner, a court determines that a person is engaging in or has engaged in reviewable conduct under this Part, the court may order the person
(a) not to engage in the conduct or substantially similar reviewable conduct;
(b) to publish or otherwise disseminate a notice, in such manner and at such times as the court may specify, to bring to the attention of the class of persons likely to have been reached or affected by the conduct, the name under which the person carries on business and the determination made under this section, including
(i) a description of the reviewable conduct,

(ii) the time period and geographical area to which the conduct relates, and
(iii) a description of the manner in which any representation or advertisement was disseminated, including, where applicable, the name of the publication or other medium employed; and
(c) to pay an administrative monetary penalty, in such manner as the court may specify, in an amount not exceeding
(i) in the case of an individual, $50,000 and, for each subsequent order, $100,000, or

(ii) in the case of a corporation, $100,000 and, for each subsequent order, $200,000.

74.1(2) An order made under paragraph (1)(a) applies for a period of ten years unless the court specifies a shorter period.
74.1(3) No order may be made against a person under paragraph (1)(b) or (c) where the person establishes that the person exercised due diligence to prevent the reviewable conduct from occurring.
74.1(4) The terms of an order made against a person under paragraph (1)(b) or (c) shall be determined with a view to promoting conduct by that person that is in conformity with the purposes of this Part and not with a view to punishment.
74.1(5) Any evidence of the following shall be taken into account in determining the amount of an administrative monetary penalty under paragraph (1)(c):

74.1 (1) Le tribunal qui conclut, à la demande du commissaire, qu'une personne a ou a eu un comportement susceptible d'examen en application de la présente partie peut ordonner à celle-ci :
a) de ne pas se comporter ainsi ou d'une manière essentiellement semblable;
b) de diffuser, notamment par publication, un avis, selon les modalités de forme et de temps qu'il détermine, visant à informer les personnes d'une catégorie donnée, susceptibles d'avoir été touchées par le comportement, du nom de l'entreprise que le contrevenant exploite et de la décision prise en vertu du présent article, notamment :
(i) l'énoncé des éléments du comportement susceptible d'examen,
(ii) la période et le secteur géographique auxquels le comportement est afférent,
(iii) l'énoncé des modalités de diffusion utilisées pour donner les indications ou faire la publicité, notamment, le cas échéant, le nom des médias — notamment de la publication — utilisés;
c) de payer, selon les modalités que le tribunal peut préciser, une sanction administrative pécuniaire maximale :
(i) dans le cas d'une personne physique, de 50 000 $ pour la première ordonnance et de 100 000 $ pour toute ordonnance subséquente,
(ii) dans le cas d'une personne morale, de 100 000 $ pour la première ordonnance et de 200 000 $ pour toute ordonnance subséquente.
74.1(2) Les ordonnances rendues en vertu de l'alinéa (1)a) s'appliquent pendant une période de dix ans, ou pendant la période plus courte fixée par le tribunal.
74.1(3) L'ordonnance prévue aux alinéas (1)b) ou c) ne peut être rendue si la personne visée établit qu'elle a fait preuve de toute la diligence voulue pour empêcher un tel comportement.
74.1(4) Les conditions de l'ordonnance rendue en vertu des alinéas (1)b) ou c) sont fixées de façon à encourager le contrevenant à adopter un comportement compatible avec les objectifs de la présente partie et non à le punir.
74.1(5) Pour la détermination du montant de la sanction administrative pécuniaire prévue à l'alinéa (1)c), il est tenu compte des éléments suivants :

(a) the reach of the conduct within the relevant geographic market;
(b) the frequency and duration of the conduct;
(c) the vulnerability of the class of persons likely to be adversely affected by the conduct;
(d) the materiality of any representation;
(e) the likelihood of self-correction in the relevant geographic market;
(f) injury to competition in the relevant geographic market;
(g) the history of compliance with this Act by the person who engaged in the reviewable conduct; and

(h) any other relevant factor.
74.1(6) For the purposes of paragraph (1)(c), an order made against a person in respect of conduct that is reviewable under paragraph 74.01(1)(a), (b) or (c), subsection 74.01(2) or (3) or section 74.02, 74.04, 74.05 or 74.06 is a subsequent order if

(a) an order was previously made against the person under this section in respect of conduct reviewable under the same provision;

(b) the person was previously convicted of an offence under the provision of Part VI, as that Part read immediately before the coming into force of this Part, that corresponded to the provision of this Part;

(c) in the case of an order in respect of conduct reviewable under paragraph 74.01(1)(a), the person was previously convicted of an offence under section 52, or under paragraph 52(1)(a) as it read immediately before the coming into force of this Part; or
(d) in the case of an order in respect of conduct reviewable under subsection 74.01(2) or (3), the person was previously convicted of an offence under paragraph 52(1)(d) as it read immediately before the coming into force of this Part. [underlining added]

a) la portée du comportement sur le marché géographique pertinent;
b) la fréquence et la durée du comportement;
c) la vulnérabilité des catégories de personnes susceptibles de souffrir du comportement;
d) l'importance des indications;
e) la possibilité d'un redressement de la situation sur le marché géographique pertinent;
f) le tort causé à la concurrence sur le marché géographique pertinent;
g) le comportement antérieur, dans le cadre de la présente loi, de la personne qui a eu un comportement susceptible d'examen;
h) toute autre circonstance pertinente.
74.1(6) Pour l'application de l'alinéa (1)c), l'ordonnance rendue contre une personne à l'égard d'un comportement susceptible d'examen en application des alinéas 74.01(1)a), b) ou c), des paragraphes 74.01(2) ou (3) ou des articles 74.02, 74.04, 74.05 ou 74.06 constitue une ordonnance subséquente dans les cas suivants :
a) une ordonnance a été rendue antérieurement en vertu du présent article contre la personne à l'égard d'un comportement susceptible d'examen visé par la même disposition;
b) la personne a déjà été déclarée coupable d'une infraction prévue par une disposition de la partie VI, dans sa version antérieure à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, qui correspond à la disposition de la présente partie;
c) dans le cas d'une ordonnance rendue à l'égard du comportement susceptible d'examen visé à l'alinéa 74.01(1)a), la personne a déjà été déclarée coupable d'une infraction à l'article 52, ou à l'alinéa 52(1)a) dans sa version antérieure à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;
d) dans le cas d'une ordonnance rendue à l'égard du comportement susceptible d'examen visé aux paragraphes 74.01(2) ou (3), la personne a déjà été déclarée coupable d'une infraction à l'alinéa 52(1)d) dans sa version antérieure à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie. [Le souligné est de moi.]

[370] Each of the three available remedies shall be considered in turn.

(i) An order not to engage in the conduct or substantially similar reviewable conduct

[371] The Commissioner seeks an order prohibiting Sears and any person acting on its behalf or for its benefit, including all directors, officers, employees, agents or assigns, or any other person or corporation acting on its behalf, from engaging in conduct contrary to subsection 74.01(3) of the Act for a period of 10 years.

[372] In support of this submission, the Commissioner relies upon:

- Sears' admission that it is primarily a hi-low retailer which relies extensively on OSP representations in its advertising;

- Sears used hi-low marketing for 27 of the 28 lines of tires it sold in 1999 and continues to use hi-low marketing techniques to sell automotive products;

- Sears continues to use hi-low marketing techniques generally throughout its business;

- Sears has engaged in deceptive marketing behaviour in the past as reflected in the following decisions:

  R. v. Simpsons-Sears Ltd. (1969), 58 C.P.R. 56 (Ont. Prov. Ct. (Crim. Div.));
  R. v. Simpsons-Sears Ltd. (1976), 28 C.P.R. (2d) 249 (Ont. County Ct. (Crim. Div.)); and
  R. v. Simpsons-Sears Limited and H. Forth and Co. Limited (1983), unreported (Ont. County Ct.).

[373] Sears argues that no administrative remedy is warranted. It points to the following:

- The representations at issue were made in November and December of 1999. Section 74.01 of the Act came into force in March of that year. The Guidelines were not published until late September, 1999, and there was no interpretive jurisprudence relating to the time and volume tests.

- OSP advertising is a legitimate practice and Sears should not be punished for depending upon promotional events to market its products.

- Sears turned its mind to complying with subsection 74.01(3) of the Act. It created and distributed a written policy and Mr. Cathcart maintained a checkerboard for planning and promoting the sale of the Tires.

- The convictions the Commissioner relies upon are old, going back 21, 28 and 35 years. The last two mentioned convictions relate to a catalogue advertisement for multi-vitamins and to the advertisement of a particular refrigerator in Ottawa.

- It is reasonable to assume that there have been significant changes in Sears' ownership, management and control since the early 1980's when the most recent conviction was entered.

[374] In the alternative, Sears says that any cease and desist order should relate only to tires. Sears points to the Tribunal's decision in Canada (Commissioner of Competition) v. P.V.I. International Inc. (2002), 19 C.P.R. (4th) 129; aff'd (2004), 31 C.P.R. (4th) 331 (F.C.A.) wherein the order prohibited the making of misrepresentations related to "PVI or any similar allegedly gas-saving, emission-reducing and/or performance-enhancing device".

[375] In light of the false or misleading impression given by Sears in its advertisements with respect to the OSP representations at issue concerning the Tires, I have concluded that it is appropriate to issue an order pursuant to paragraph 74.1(1)(a) of the Act. Such an order will address the harm subsection 74.01(3) was created to address. As the order will be directed only to OSP representations which do not conform with the Act, and will not be directed to all OSP representations, it cannot be said that such an order "punishes" Sears for depending upon promotional events.

[376] I am satisfied by virtue of Sears' internal memorandum of May 11, 1999 to its vice-presidents concerning the amendments to the Act that the timing of the enactment of the relevant statutory provision and the issuance of the Guidelines gave sufficient notice to Sears' employees of the requirements of the Act. Therefore, it is not inappropriate to make an order under paragraph 74.1(1)(a).

[377] As to the duration of the order, I see no reason to depart from the general provision found in subsection 74.1(2) of the Act that an order under paragraph 74.1(1)(a) applies for a period of 10 years unless otherwise specified. That 10 year period will commence when an order is issued. In this regard see paragraph 389 of these reasons.

[378] As to the scope of the order, I believe that it construes the intent of the Act too narrowly to limit any order so as to apply only to Sears' promotion of tires. The scope of the order issued by the Tribunal in P.V.I., supra, is distinguishable, in my view, because there misrepresentations as to the performance of a product relating to fuel savings, emission reduction and government approval were at issue. There was no basis on which the order should have applied to any other product other than an allegedly similar gas-saving, emission-reducing and/or performance-enhancing device (as the orders provided).

[379] Equally, however, I have not been persuaded that it is necessary that the order to apply to all goods marketed by Sears through its various business channels. In this regard, I note the relatively long period of time that has elapsed since Sears was last convicted of deceptive marketing behaviour.

[380] Here Sears has stated in its responding statement of grounds and material facts, at paragraph 39, that Sears automotive is the business division of Sears responsible for the supply of the Tires and other automotive-related products and services and for the operation of Sears' retail automotive centres. From this I conclude that it is appropriate for the order to be directed to the business division which was responsible for the misrepresentations at issue. Therefore, the order will apply only to tires and other automotive-related products and services.

(ii) A corrective notice

[381] The Commissioner requests an order requiring Sears to publish or otherwise disseminate a corrective notice or notices that shall:

a. bring to the attention of the class of persons likely to have been reached or affected by the conduct, the name under which the Respondent carries on business and the determination made by the Tribunal with respect to the Application, including:

   i. a description of the reviewable conduct,
   ii. the time period and geographical area to which it relates, and
   iii. a description of the manner in which the Representations were disseminated, including the names of the publications or mediums employed.

b. be published in the following media:

   i. in flyers ("pre-prints") by the Respondent as follows:

      (1) in two weekly ("core") flyers as ordinarily distributed by the Respondent and in one weekend flyer as ordinarily distributed by the Respondent.

   (2) the flyers shall be distributed across Canada with a circulation of no fewer than 4,200,000, and shall be distributed in a manner as normally distributed by the Respondent, including the same linguistic distribution, and shall be distributed in the following proportions:
      (a) 84% to be distributed through newspapers;
      (b) 15% to be distributed door-to-door; and
      (c) 1% to be distributed in-store.

   (3) the notices shall fill the entire third page of the flyer, and in any event be no less than 9.5 inches X 9.5 inches in size.

   ii. in newspapers by the Respondent as follows:

      (1) in the language appropriate to the newspaper;
      (2) within the first nine pages of the Wednesday edition of each of the newspapers listed in paras. 26 and 27 of Exhibit CA-9, or in the case of a newspaper that is not published on Wednesdays, within the first nine pages of an edition of said newspaper;

(3) the newsprint advertisements shall be no less than 5.625 inches X 9.625 inches in size.

[382] Sears submits that temporal concerns alone mitigate against the publication of a written notice. Sears also points to the evidence of Dr. Trebilcock that consumers who purchased the Tires at Sears during the sales events at issue received very good deals. Finally, Sears submits that it exercised due diligence in order to prevent the reviewable conduct from occurring.

[383] In PVI, supra, the Federal Court of Appeal, at paragraph 26, considered that the time elapsed from the making of false or misleading representations was a relevant factor to consider when assessing the appropriateness of a corrective notice.

[384] In the present case, five years have elapsed since the representations at issue were made. In my view, that length of time alone militates against the issuance of a corrective notice.

[385] The report of the Consultative Panel contemplated that the purpose of a corrective notice was to inform marketplace participants about deceptive practices where those practices may have left residual mistaken impressions in the marketplace. I do not accept that, after 5 years, any residual mistaken impression exists which arises from the representations at issue. To require a corrective notice in that circumstance would, in my view, be punitive and not remedial.

[386] In view of this conclusion, it is not necessary for me to consider, and I do not consider, whether Sears has established that it exercised due diligence in order to prevent the reviewable conduct from occurring.

(iii) An administrative monetary penalty

[387] By its reasons for order and order dated August 5, 2004, the Tribunal ordered that, if it determined that Sears had engaged in reviewable conduct within the meaning of subsection 74.01(3) of the Act, Sears was given leave to present evidence and make submissions at a future hearing relating to the factors to be taken into account pursuant to subsection 74.1(5) of the Act. Accordingly, the issues of whether an administrative monetary penalty should be imposed, and if so, its amount are reserved. See in this regard, paragraph 390 of these reasons.

XIV. COSTS

[388] The issue of costs is also reserved.

XV. ORDER

[389] Once the issues of administrative monetary penalty and costs are finally decided by the Tribunal, an order will issue reflecting these reasons together with the Tribunal's rulings with respect to an administrative monetary penalty and costs.

XVI. DIRECTIONS TO THE PARTIES

[390] In light of these confidential reasons for order, the parties are directed as follows:

1) To enable the Tribunal to issue a public version of these reasons, the parties shall meet and endeavour to reach agreement upon the redactions to be made to these confidential reasons in order to properly protect information that should be kept confidential. The parties are to jointly correspond with the Tribunal by no later than the close of the Registry on Wednesday, January 19, 2005, setting out their agreement and any areas of disagreement concerning the redaction of these confidential reasons. (The Tribunal does not anticipate there will be any significant disagreement.)

2) If there is any disagreement, the parties shall separately correspond with the Tribunal setting out their respective submissions with respect to any proposed, but contested, redactions from the reasons. Such submissions are to be served and filed by the close of the Registry on Friday, January 21, 2005.

3) Following the issuance of these reasons the Registry will contact counsel to set a date for a case management conference to address the following:

   i) The time required for the further hearing concerning the factors relevant to subsection 74.1(5) of the Act.

   ii) The number of any proposed witnesses to be called.

   iii) The provision of any required will-say statements and or expert reports.

   iv) The extent of the Commissioner's participation in this further hearing.

   v) Potential dates for such hearing.

   vi) The manner, nature and timing of the submissions as to costs.

   DATED at Edmonton, this 11th day of January 2005.

   SIGNED on behalf of the Tribunal by the presiding judicial member.

Public

XVII. APPENDIX

[391] Sections 74.01, 74.09 and 74.1 are as follows:

74.01 (1) A person engages in reviewable conduct who, for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, the supply or use of a product or for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, any business interest, by any means whatever,
(a) makes a representation to the public that is false or misleading in a material respect;
(b) makes a representation to the public in the form of a statement, warranty or guarantee of the performance, efficacy or length of life of a product that is not based on an adequate and proper test thereof, the proof of which lies on the person making the representation; or
(c) makes a representation to the public in a form that purports to be
(i) a warranty or guarantee of a product, or
(ii) a promise to replace, maintain or repair an article or any part thereof or to repeat or continue a service until it has achieved a specified result,
if the form of purported warranty or guarantee or promise is materially misleading or if there is no reasonable prospect that it will be carried out.

74.01(2) Subject to subsection (3), a person engages in reviewable conduct who, for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, the supply or use of a product or for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, any business interest, by any means whatever, makes a representation to the public concerning the price at which a product or like products have been, are or will be ordinarily supplied where suppliers generally in the relevant geographic market, having regard to the nature of the product,

(a) have not sold a substantial volume of the product at that price or a higher price within a reasonable period of time before or after the making of the representation, as the case may be; and
(b) have not offered the product at that price or a higher price in good faith for a substantial period of time recently before or immediately after the making of the representation, as the case may be.
74.01(3) A person engages in reviewable conduct who, for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, the supply or use of a product or for the purpose of promoting, directly or indirectly, any business interest, by any means whatever, makes a

74.01 (1) Est susceptible d'examen le comportement de quiconque donne au public, de quelque manière que ce soit, aux fins de promouvoir directement ou indirectement soit la fourniture ou l'usage d'un produit, soit des intérêts commerciaux quelconques :
a) ou bien des indications fausses ou trompeuses sur un point important;
b) ou bien, sous la forme d'une déclaration ou d'une garantie visant le rendement, l'efficacité ou la durée utile d'un produit, des indications qui ne se fondent pas sur une épreuve suffisante et appropriée, don’t la preuve incombe à la personne qui donne les indications;
c) ou bien des indications sous une forme qui fait croire qu'il s'agit :
(i) soit d'une garantie de produit,
(ii) soit d'une promesse de remplacer, entretenir ou réparer tout ou partie d'un article ou de fournir de nouveau ou continuer à fournir un service jusqu'à l'obtention du résultat spécifié, si cette forme de prétendue garantie ou promesse est trompeuse d'une façon importante ou s'il n'y a aucun espoir raisonnable qu'elle sera respectée.
74.01(2) Sous réserve du paragraphe (3), est susceptible d'examen le comportement de quiconque donne, de quelque manière que ce soit, aux fins de promouvoir directement ou indirectement soit la fourniture ou l'usage d'un produit, soit des intérêts commerciaux quelconques, des indications au public relativement au prix auquel un ou des produits similaires ont été, sont ou seront habituellement fournis, si, compte tenu de la nature du produit, l'ensemble des fournisseurs du marché géographique pertinent n'ont pas, à la fois :
a) vendu une quantité importante du produit à ce prix ou à un prix plus élevé pendant une période raisonnable antérieure ou postérieure à la communication des indications;
b) offert de bonne foi le produit à ce prix ou à un prix plus élevé pendant une période importante précédant de peu ou suivant de peu la communication des indications.
74.01(3) Est susceptible d'examen le comportement de quiconque donne, de quelque manière que ce soit, aux fins de promouvoir directement ou indirectement soit la fourniture ou l'usage d'un produit, soit des intérêts commerciaux quelconques, des indications au representation to the public as to price that is clearly specified to be the price at which a product or like products have been, are or will be ordinarily supplied by the person making the representation where that person, having regard to the nature of the product and the relevant geographic market,

(a) has not sold a substantial volume of the product at that price or a higher price within a reasonable period of time before or after the making of the representation, as the case may be; and
(b) has not offered the product at that price or a higher price in good faith for a substantial period of time recently before or immediately after the making of the representation, as the case may be.
74.01(4) For greater certainty, whether the period of time to be considered in paragraphs (2)(a) and (b) and (3)(a) and (b) is before or after the making of the representation depends on whether the representation relates to
(a) the price at which products have been or are supplied; or
(b) the price at which products will be supplied.
74.01(5) Subsections (2) and (3) do not apply to a person who establishes that, in the circumstances, a representation as to price is not false or misleading in a material respect.
74.01(6) In proceedings under this section, the general impression conveyed by a representation as well as its literal meaning shall be taken into account in determining whether or not the representation is false or misleading in a material respect.

[...]

74.09 In sections 74.1 to 74.14 and 74.18, "court" means the Tribunal, the Federal Court or the superior court of a province.

74.1(1) Where, on application by the Commissioner, a court determines that a person is engaging in or has engaged in reviewable conduct under this Part, the court may order the person
(a) not to engage in the conduct or substantially similar reviewable conduct;
(b) to publish or otherwise disseminate a notice, in such manner and at such times as the court may specify, to bring to the attention of the class of persons likely to have been reached or affected by the conduct, the name under which the person carries on business and the determination made under this section, including
(i) a description of the reviewable conduct, public relativement au prix auquel elle a fourni, fournit ou fournira habituellement un produit ou des produits similaires, si, compte tenu de la nature du produit et du marché géographique pertinent, cette personne n'a pas, à la fois :

a) vendu une quantité importante du produit à ce prix ou à un prix plus élevé pendant une période raisonnable antérieure ou postérieure à la communication des indications;
b) offert de bonne foi le produit à ce prix ou à un prix plus élevé pendant une période importante précédant de peu ou suivant de peu la communication des indications.
74.01(4) Il est entendu que la période à prendre en compte pour l'application des alinéas (2)a) et b) et (3)a) et b) est antérieure ou postérieure à la communication des indications selon que les indications sont liées au prix auquel les produits ont été ou sont fournis ou au prix auquel ils seront fournis.

74.01(5) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) ne s'appliquent pas à la personne qui établit que, dans les circonstances, les indications sur le prix ne sont pas fausses ou trompeuses sur un point important.
74.01(6) Dans toute poursuite intentée en vertu du présent article, pour déterminer si les indications sont fausses ou trompeuses sur un point important, il est tenu compte de l'impression générale qu'elles donnent ainsi que de leur sens littéral.

[...]

74.09 Dans les articles 74.1 à 74.14 et 74.18, « tribunal » s'entend du Tribunal, de la Cour fédérale ou de la cour supérieure d'une province.

74.1(1) Le tribunal qui conclut, à la demande du commissaire, qu'une personne a ou a eu un comportement susceptible d'examen en application de la présente partie peut ordonner à celle-ci :
a) de ne pas se comporter ainsi ou d'une manière essentiellement semblable;
b) de diffuser, notamment par publication, un avis, selon les modalités de forme et de temps qu'il détermine, visant à informer les personnes d'une catégorie donnée, susceptibles d'avoir été touchées par le comportement, du nom de l'entreprise que le contrevenant exploite et de la décision prise en vertu du présent article, notamment :
(i) l'énoncé des éléments du comportement

(ii) the time period and geographical area to which the conduct relates, and

(iii) a description of the manner in which any representation or advertisement was disseminated, including, where applicable, the name of the publication or other medium employed; and

(c) to pay an administrative monetary penalty, in such manner as the court may specify, in an amount not exceeding

(i) in the case of an individual, $50,000 and, for each subsequent order, $100,000, or

(ii) in the case of a corporation, $100,000 and, for each subsequent order, $200,000.

74.1(2) An order made under paragraph (1)(a) applies for a period of ten years unless the court specifies a shorter period.

74.1(3) No order may be made against a person under paragraph (1)(b) or (c) where the person establishes that the person exercised due diligence to prevent the reviewable conduct from occurring.

74.1(4) The terms of an order made against a person under paragraph (1)(b) or (c) shall be determined with a view to promoting conduct by that person that is in conformity with the purposes of this Part and not with a view to punishment.

74.1(5) Any evidence of the following shall be taken into account in determining the amount of an administrative monetary penalty under paragraph (1)(c):

(a) the reach of the conduct within the relevant geographic market;

(b) the frequency and duration of the conduct;

(c) the vulnerability of the class of persons likely to be adversely affected by the conduct;

(d) the materiality of any representation;

(e) the likelihood of self-correction in the relevant geographic market;

(f) injury to competition in the relevant geographic market;

(g) the history of compliance with this Act by the person who engaged in the reviewable conduct; and

(h) any other relevant factor.

74.1(6) For the purposes of paragraph (1)(c), an order made against a person in respect of conduct that is reviewable under paragraph 74.01(1)(a), (b) or (c), subsection 74.01(2) or (3) or section 74.02, 74.04, 74.05 or 74.06 is a subsequent order if susceptible d'examen,

(ii) la période et le secteur géographique auxquels le comportement est afférent,

(iii) l'énoncé des modalités de diffusion utilisées pour donner les indications ou faire la publicité, notamment, le cas échéant, le nom des médias — notamment de la publication — utilisés;

c) de payer, selon les modalités que le tribunal peut préciser, une sanction administrative pécuniaire maximale :

(i) dans le cas d'une personne physique, de 50 000 $ pour la première ordonnance et de 100 000 $ pour toute ordonnance subséquente,

(ii) dans le cas d'une personne morale, de 100 000 $ pour la première ordonnance et de 200 000 $ pour toute ordonnance subséquente.

74.1(2) Les ordonnances rendues en vertu de l'alinéa (1)a) s'appliquent pendant une période de dix ans, ou pendant la période plus courte fixée par le tribunal.

74.1(3) L'ordonnance prévue aux alinéas (1)b) ou c) ne peut être rendue si la personne visée établit qu'elle a fait preuve de toute la diligence voulue pour empêcher un tel comportement.

74.1(4) Les conditions de l'ordonnance rendue en vertu des alinéas (1)b) ou c) sont fixées de façon à encourager le contrevenant à adopter un comportement compatible avec les objectifs de la présente partie et non à le punir.

74.1(5) Pour la détermination du montant de la sanction administrative pécuniaire prévue à l'alinéa (1)c), il est tenu compte des éléments suivants :

a) la portée du comportement sur le marché géographique pertinent;

b) la fréquence et la durée du comportement;

c) la vulnérabilité des catégories de personnes susceptibles de souffrir du comportement;

d) l'importance des indications;

e) la possibilité d'un redressement de la situation sur le marché géographique pertinent;

f) le tort causé à la concurrence sur le marché géographique pertinent;

g) le comportement antérieur, dans le cadre de la présente loi, de la personne qui a eu un comportement susceptible d'examen;

h) toute autre circonstance pertinente.

74.1(6) Pour l'application de l'alinéa (1)c), l'ordonnance rendue contre une personne à l'égard d'un comportement susceptible d'examen en application des alinéas 74.01(1)a), b) ou c), des paragraphes 74.01(2) ou (3) ou des articles 74.02,

(a) an order was previously made against the person under this section in respect of conduct reviewable under the same provision;

(b) the person was previously convicted of an offence under the provision of Part VI, as that Part read immediately before the coming into force of this Part, that corresponded to the provision of this Part;

(c) in the case of an order in respect of conduct reviewable under paragraph 74.01(1)(a), the person was previously convicted of an offence under section 52, or under paragraph 52(1)(a) as it read immediately before the coming into force of this Part; or

(d) in the case of an order in respect of conduct reviewable under subsection 74.01(2) or (3), the person was previously convicted of an offence under paragraph 52(1)(d) as it read immediately before the coming into force of this Part.

74.04, 74.05 ou 74.06 constitue une ordonnance subséquente dans les cas suivants :

a) une ordonnance a été rendue antérieurement en vertu du présent article contre la personne à l'égard d'un comportement susceptible d'examen visé par la même disposition;

b) la personne a déjà été déclarée coupable d'une infraction prévue par une disposition de la partie VI, dans sa version antérieure à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, qui correspond à la disposition de la présente partie;

c) dans le cas d'une ordonnance rendue à l'égard du comportement susceptible d'examen visé à l'alinéa 74.01(1)a), la personne a déjà été déclarée coupable d'une infraction à l'article 52, ou à l'alinéa 52(1)a) dans sa version antérieure à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

d) dans le cas d'une ordonnance rendue à l'égard du comportement susceptible d'examen visé aux paragraphes 74.01(2) ou (3), la personne a déjà été déclarée coupable d'une infraction à l'alinéa 52(1)d) dans sa version antérieure à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie.

APPEARANCES:

For the applicant:

The Commissioner of Competition

John L. Syme
Leslie Milton
Arsalaan Hyder
Geneviève Léveillée

For the respondent:

Sears Canada Inc.

William W. McNamara
Philip J. Kennedy
Martin J. Huberman
Teresa J. Walsh
Stephen A. Scholtz
Martha A. Healey
Susan Rothfels

1910 CarswellOnt 258
Ontario Divisional Court

Dale v. Blanchard (Township)

1910 CarswellOnt 258, 16 O.W.R. 349, 21 O.L.R. 497 at 502

Re Dale and Blanchard

Meredith, C.J.

Judgment: June 29, 1910

Proceedings: reversed Dale v. Blanchard (Township) ((1910)), 1910 CarswellOnt 205, 21 O.L.R. 497, 16 O.W.R. 86 ((Ont. Ex. Ct.))

Counsel: C. C. Robinson, for the appellant.
J. S. Fullerton, K.C., and J. W. Graham, for the respondent municipality.

Subject: Public
Related Abridgment Classifications
Municipal law
VIII By-laws
VIII.4 Enactment
VIII.4.b By plebiscite
VIII.4.b.ii Practice and procedure
VIII.4.b.ii.A Voters' lists
Statutes
II Interpretation
II.4 Construction
II.4.a Liberal
Headnote
Municipal Election — Voting on Money By-law — Revision of Voters' List — Assessment Act s. 62 — Voters' List Act — Quashing By-law.
An application to quash a money by-law of the Township of Blanchard, granting $20,000 aid to the St. Mary's and Western Ontario Rw. Co. At trial the objections in substance resolved themselves into two: (1) that the by-law did not receive a majority of the votes of persons qualified to vote thereon; (2) that the voting was not conducted in accordance with the principles laid down in the Municipal Act. The majority for the by-law was 4.
Mulock, C.J.Ex.D., held, that whether the Court omits to hold a legal meeting, or holding a legal meeting omits to try all complaints as required by s. 62 of the Assessment Act, in either case an appeal lies to the County Judge, and if no appeal is taken, the Voters' List Act applies. In this case no appeal was taken, therefore the objection to use of 1909 list failed. That it is not competent to the application to call in question the findings of the County Court Judge as to the qualifications of the persons whose names he placed upon the voters' list. This objection therefore failed; the evidence shewed that the election was conducted substantially in accordance with the principles laid down in the statute, and that the result of the election was not affected by any non-compliance, mistake, or irregularities. Motion dismissed, but, under the circumstances, without costs.
Divisional Court held, that it was unnecessary to express an opinion upon any of the grounds urged against the by-law except whether (1) the voters' list upon which the voting took place was by force of s. 24 of the Voters' Lists Act, or for any other reason, conclusive as to the right of the persons named in it to vote on the by-law; and whether (2), if it was not conclusive as to their right to vote, the appellant had succeeded in establishing that a sufficient number of unqualified persons voted to overcome the majority which was cast in favour of the by-law.

Their Lordships answered the first question in the negative and on finding that five votes had been cast which were bad, they quashed the by-law, respondents to pay costs throughout.

This is an appeal by the applicant, William Dale, the younger, from an order of Sir Wm. Mulock, C.J.Ex.D. (1910), 16 O. W. R. 86, dated 5th May, 1910, dismissing his motion to quash By-law No. 8 of the township of Blanchard, entitled "A by-law to authorize the issue of debentures of the township of Blanchard to the amount of $20,000 for the purpose of granting aid to the extent of $20,000 to the St. Mary's and Western Ontario Railway Co."

The appeal to Divisional Court was heard by Sir Wm. Meredith, C.J.C.P., Hon. Mr. Justice Teetzel and Hon. Mr. Justice Middleton.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir Wm. Meredith, C.J.C.P.:

1 In the view we take, it is unnecessary to express an opinion upon any of the grounds urged against the by-law, except two, viz., whether (1) the voters' list upon which the voting took place is by force of sec. 24 of the Voters' Lists Act or for any other reason conclusive as to the right of the persons named in it to vote on the by-law; and whether (2) if it is not conclusive as to their right to vote, the appellant has succeeded in establishing that a sufficient number of unqualified persons voted to overcome the majority which was cast in favour of the by-law.

2 The voters' list which sec. 24 makes upon a scrutiny, final and conclusive evidence that all persons named therein and no others were qualified to vote, is the voters' list which was, or was the proper list to be, used at the election.

3 The voters' list with which the Act deals is made up in three parts, the first containing the names of all male persons entitled to vote at both Provincial and municipal elections; the second, the names of all other male persons and of all widows and unmarried women appearing by the assessment roll to be voters at municipal elections, but not at provincial elections; and the third, the names of all other male persons appearing by the assessment roll to be voters at provincial but not at municipal elections.

4 The voters' list to be used when a vote is being taken on a money by-law is provided for by secs. 348 and 349 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, and this list the clerk of the municipality is to prepare from the last revised assessment roll, and the only use he is required to make of the voters' list prepared under the Voters' List Act is to see that every person entered on his list is named or intended to be named on the voters' list.

5 All the municipal electors are not entitled to vote on a money by-law, but only those of them who are mentioned in sec. 353, which deals with freeholders, and sec. 354, which deals with leaseholders, and it is not, as has been seen, from the last certified voters' list but from the last revised assessment roll that the clerk is to prepare a list of those entitled to vote.

6 Section 348 was amended 8 Edw. VII., ch. 48, sec. 4, by striking out the reference to Schedule C., and sec. 354 was amended by 9 Edw. VII., ch. 73, sec. 10, by adding the following proviso: "and provided further that he has at least ten days next preceding the day of polling filed in the office of the clerk of the municipality a statutory declaration stating that his lease meets the above requirements, and the clerk shall insert or otherwise designate the names of such tenants in the voters' list prepared in accordance with the provisions of sec. 348 of this Act, and the notice required by sub-sec. 3 of sec. 338 of this Act shall also contain a statement that the names of leaseholders neglecting to file such a declaration shall not be placed on the voters' list for such voting."

7 The certified list mentioned in sec. 24 of the Voters' List Act was not the list used or proper to be used in taking the vote on the by-law, but the list to be used was that prepared by the clerk from the assessment roll, and the first question must therefore be answered in the negative.

8 As to the second question, we are bound by the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Flatt (1890), 18 A. R. 1, to hold that B. F. Doupe, Wesley Shier and Richard Selves were not qualified voters.

9 Assuming everything in favour of the respondent, their highest position was that of persons who were in possession of the land, as freeholders of whoch they voted, under parol agreements with the owners entitling them on doing something which had not yet been done to a conveyance of the land, and such persons were held by the Court of Appeal not to be freeholders within the meaning of sec. 9 of the then Municipal Act, R. S. O. 1887, ch. 184.

10 Street, J., had decided after inquiry that the persons whose right to petition as freeholders was questioned were in a position to compel specific performance by their vendors and were therefore equitable freeholders and entitled to petition, so that the decision of the Court of Appeal reversing his decision is conclusive against the right of the three persons I have named to vote unless the case can be distinguished on the ground that in the enactment which was then under consideration the term "freeholder" is used in a sense different from that in which it is used in sec. 353, and I can find no reason for coming to that conclusion. The purpose of the petition in that case was to obtain the incorporation of a village, and the purpose of the by-law in question is to impose an indebtedness upon the municipality, in the one case on the initiative, and in the other by the vote of a part only of the ratepayers and against the will of a minority.

11 It is perhaps to be regretted that the Court was unable to put a more liberal construction on the statute, but that is now a matter for the legislature, if the construction given to it does not accord with the intention of the legislature in passing it.

12 The vote of R. C. Hunter is clearly bad. He had no estate in the land in respect of which he voted. It belonged to a company in which he was a shareholder, and that was his only interest in it; and Homer Doupe's vote was admittedly bad.

13 The by-law was carried by a majority of four only, and these five votes being bad, it follows that it did not receive the assent of the majority of the voters and must be quashed.

14 The appeal will therefore be allowed and there will be substituted for the order of the learned Chief Justice an order quashing the by-law with costs, and the respondents must pay the costs throughout.

113 S.Ct. 2786
Supreme Court of the United States

William DAUBERT, et ux., etc., et al., Petitioners,
v.
MERRELL DOW PHARMACEUTICALS, INC.

No. 92–102
|
Argued March 30, 1993
|
Decided June 28, 1993.

Synopsis

Infants and their guardians ad litem sued pharmaceutical company to recover for limb reduction birth defects allegedly sustained as result of mothers' ingestion of antinausea drug Bendectin. The United States District Court for the Southern District of California, 727 F.Supp. 570, granted company's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiffs appealed. The Court of Appeals, 951 F.2d 1128, affirmed. Plaintiffs filed petition for writ of certiorari, which was granted. The Supreme Court, Justice Blackmun, held that: (1) "general acceptance" is not necessary precondition to admissibility of scientific evidence under Federal Rules of Evidence, and (2) Rules assign to trial judge the task of ensuring that expert's testimony both rests on reliable foundation and is relevant to task at hand.

Vacated and remanded.

Chief Justice Rehnquist filed opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part in which Justice Stevens joined.

*2789 Syllabus[*]

Petitioners, two minor children and their parents, alleged in their suit against respondent that the children's serious birth defects had been caused by the mothers' prenatal ingestion of Bendectin, a prescription drug marketed by respondent. The District Court granted respondent summary judgment based on a well-credentialed expert's affidavit concluding, upon reviewing the extensive published scientific literature on the subject, that maternal use of Bendectin has not been shown to be a risk factor for human birth defects. Although petitioners had responded with the testimony of eight other well-credentialed experts, who based their conclusion *2790 that Bendectin can cause birth defects on animal studies, chemical structure analyses, and the unpublished "reanalysis" of previously published human statistical studies, the court determined that this evidence did not meet the applicable "general acceptance" standard for the admission of expert testimony. The Court of Appeals agreed and affirmed, citing Frye v. United States, 54 App.D.C. 46, 47, 293 F. 1013, 1014, for the rule that expert opinion based on a scientific technique is inadmissible unless the technique is "generally accepted" as reliable in the relevant scientific community.

Held: The Federal Rules of Evidence, not Frye, provide the standard for admitting expert scientific testimony in a federal trial. Pp. 2792–99.

(a) Frye's "general acceptance" test was superseded by the Rules' adoption. The Rules occupy the field, United States v. Abel, 469 U.S. 45, 49, 105 S.Ct. 465, 467, 83 L.Ed.2d 450, and, although the common law of evidence may serve as an aid to their application, id., at 51–52, 105 S.Ct., at 468–469, respondent's assertion that they somehow assimilated Frye is unconvincing. Nothing in the Rules as a whole or in the text and drafting history of Rule 702, which specifically governs expert testimony, gives any indication that "general acceptance" is a necessary precondition to the admissibility of scientific evidence. Moreover, such a rigid standard would be at odds with the Rules' liberal thrust and their general approach of relaxing the traditional barriers to "opinion" testimony. Pp. 2792–94.

(b) The Rules—especially Rule 702—place appropriate limits on the admissibility of purportedly scientific evidence by assigning to the trial 580 judge the task of ensuring that an expert's testimony both rests on a reliable foundation and is relevant to the task at hand. The reliability standard is established by Rule 702's requirement that an expert's testimony pertain to "scientific ... knowledge," since the adjective "scientific" implies a grounding in science's methods and procedures, while the word " knowledge" connotes a body of known facts or of ideas inferred from such facts or accepted as true on good grounds. The Rule's requirement that the testimony "assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue" goes primarily to relevance by demanding a valid scientific connection to the pertinent inquiry as a precondition to admissibility. Pp. 2794–96.

(c) Faced with a proffer of expert scientific testimony under Rule 702, the trial judge, pursuant to Rule 104(a), must make a preliminary assessment of whether the testimony's underlying reasoning or methodology is scientifically valid and properly can be applied to the facts at issue. Many considerations will bear on the inquiry, including whether the theory or technique in question can be (and has been) tested, whether it has been subjected to peer review and publication, its known or potential error rate and the existence and maintenance of standards controlling its operation, and whether it has attracted widespread acceptance within a relevant scientific community. The inquiry is a flexible one, and its focus must be solely on principles and methodology, not on the conclusions that they generate. Throughout, the judge should also be mindful of other applicable Rules. Pp. 2796–98.

(d) Cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof, rather than wholesale exclusion under an uncompromising "general acceptance" standard, is the appropriate means by which evidence based on valid principles may be challenged. That even limited screening by the trial judge, on occasion, will prevent the jury from hearing of authentic scientific breakthroughs is simply a consequence of the fact that the Rules are not designed to seek cosmic understanding but, rather, to resolve legal disputes. Pp. 2798–99.

951 F.2d 1128 (CA9 1991), vacated and remanded.

*2791 BLACKMUN, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court with respect to Parts I and II–A, and the opinion of the Court with respect to Parts II–B, II–C, III, and IV, in which WHITE, O'CONNOR, SCALIA, KENNEDY, SOUTER, and THOMAS, JJ., joined. REHNQUIST, C.J., filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, in which STEVENS, J., joined, post, p. ——.

Attorneys and Law Firms

581 Michael H. Gottesman, Washington, DC, for petitioners.

Charles Fried, Cambridge, MA, for respondent.

Opinion

582 Justice BLACKMUN delivered the opinion of the Court.

In this case we are called upon to determine the standard for admitting expert scientific testimony in a federal trial.

I

Petitioners Jason Daubert and Eric Schuller are minor children born with serious birth defects. They and their parents sued respondent in California state court, alleging that the birth defects had been caused by the mothers' ingestion of Bendectin, a prescription antinausea drug marketed by respondent. Respondent removed the suits to federal court on diversity grounds.

After extensive discovery, respondent moved for summary judgment, contending that Bendectin does not cause birth defects in humans and that petitioners would be unable to come forward with any admissible evidence that it does. In support of its motion, respondent submitted an affidavit of Steven H. Lamm, physician and epidemiologist, who is a well-credentialed expert on the risks from exposure to various chemical substances.[1] Doctor Lamm stated that he had reviewed all the literature on Bendectin and human birth defects—more than 30 published studies involving over 130,000 patients. No study had found Bendectin to be a human teratogen (i.e., a substance capable of causing malformations in fetuses). On the basis of this review, Doctor Lamm concluded that maternal use of Bendectin during the first trimester of pregnancy has not been shown to be a risk factor for human birth defects.

583 Petitioners did not (and do not) contest this characterization of the published record regarding Bendectin. Instead, they responded to respondent's motion with the testimony of eight experts of their own, each of whom also possessed impressive credentials.[2] These experts had concluded that Bendectin can cause birth defects. Their conclusions were based upon "in vitro" (test tube) and "in vivo" (live) animal studies that found a link between Bendectin and malformations; pharmacological studies of the chemical structure of Bendectin that purported to show similarities between the structure of the drug and that of other substances known to cause birth defects; and the "reanalysis" of previously 2792 published epidemiological (human statistical) studies.

The District Court granted respondent's motion for summary judgment. The court stated that scientific evidence is admissible only if the principle upon which it is based is " 'sufficiently established to have general acceptance in the field to which it belongs.' " 727 F.Supp. 570, 572 (S.D.Cal.1989), quoting United States v. Kilgus, 571 F.2d 508, 510 (CA9 1978). The court concluded that petitioners' evidence did not meet this standard. Given the vast body of epidemiological data concerning Bendectin, the court held, expert opinion which is not based on epidemiological evidence *584 is not admissible to establish causation. 727 F.Supp., at 575. Thus, the animal-cell studies, live-animal studies, and chemical-structure analyses on which petitioners had relied could not raise by themselves a reasonably disputable jury issue regarding causation. Ibid. Petitioners' epidemiological analyses, based as they were on recalculations of data in previously published studies that had found no causal link between the drug and birth defects, were ruled to be inadmissible because they had not been published or subjected to peer review. Ibid.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed. 951 F.2d 1128 (1991). Citing Frye v. United States, 54 App.D.C. 46, 47, 293 F. 1013, 1014 (1923), the court stated that expert opinion based on a scientific technique is inadmissible unless the technique is "generally accepted" as reliable in the relevant scientific community. 951 F.2d, at 1129–1130. The court declared that expert opinion based on a methodology that diverges "significantly from the procedures accepted by recognized authorities in the field ... cannot be shown to be 'generally accepted as a reliable technique.' " Id., at 1130, quoting United States v. Solomon, 753 F.2d 1522, 1526 (CA9 1985).

The court emphasized that other Courts of Appeals considering the risks of Bendectin had refused to admit reanalyses of epidemiological studies that had been neither published nor subjected to peer review. 951 F.2d, at 1130–1131. Those courts had found unpublished reanalyses "particularly problematic in light of the massive weight of the original published studies supporting [respondent's] position, all of which had undergone full scrutiny from the scientific community." Id., at 1130. Contending that reanalysis is generally accepted by the scientific community only when it is subjected to verification and scrutiny by others in the field, the Court of Appeals rejected petitioners' reanalyses as "unpublished, not subjected to the normal peer review process and generated solely for use in litigation." Id., at 1131. The *585 court concluded that petitioners' evidence provided an insufficient foundation to allow admission of expert testimony that Bendectin caused their injuries and, accordingly, that petitioners could not satisfy their burden of proving causation at trial.

We granted certiorari, 506 U.S. 914, 113 S.Ct. 320, 121 L.Ed.2d 240 (1992), in light of sharp divisions among the courts regarding the proper standard for the admission of expert testimony. Compare, e.g., United States v. Shorter, 257 U.S.App.D.C. 358, 363–364, 809 F.2d 54, 59–60 (applying the "general acceptance" standard), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 817, 108 S.Ct. 71, 98 L.Ed.2d 35 (1987), with DeLuca v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 911 F.2d 941, 955 (CA3 1990) (rejecting the "general acceptance" standard).

II

A

In the 70 years since its formulation in the Frye case, the "general acceptance" test has been the dominant standard for determining the admissibility of novel scientific evidence at trial. See E. Green & C. Nesson, Problems, Cases, and Materials on Evidence 649 (1983). Although under increasing attack of late, the rule continues to be followed by a 2793 majority of courts, including the Ninth Circuit.[3]

The Frye test has its origin in a short and citation-free 1923 decision concerning the admissibility of evidence derived from a systolic blood pressure deception test, a crude precursor to the polygraph machine. In what has become a famous (perhaps infamous) passage, the then Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia described the device and its operation and declared:

> "Just when a scientific principle or discovery crosses the line between the experimental and demonstrable stages *586 is difficult to define. Somewhere in this twilight zone the evidential force of the principle must be recognized, and while courts will go a long way in admitting expert testimony deduced from a well-recognized scientific principle or discovery, the thing from which the deduction is made must be sufficiently established to have gained general acceptance in the particular field in which it belongs." 54 App.D.C., at 47, 293 F., at 1014 (emphasis added).

Because the deception test had "not yet gained such standing and scientific recognition among physiological and psychological authorities as would justify the courts in admitting expert testimony deduced from the discovery, development, and experiments thus far made," evidence of its results was ruled inadmissible. Ibid.

The merits of the Frye test have been much debated, and scholarship on its proper scope and application is legion.[4] 587 Petitioners' primary attack, however, is not on the content but on the continuing authority of the rule. They contend that the Frye test was superseded by the adoption of the Federal Rules of Evidence.[5] We agree.

We interpret the legislatively enacted Federal Rules of Evidence as we would any statute. Beech Aircraft Corp. v. Rainey, 488 U.S. 153, 163, 109 S.Ct. 439, 446, 102 L.Ed.2d 445 (1988). Rule 402 provides the baseline:

> "All relevant evidence is admissible, except as otherwise provided by the Constitution of the United States, by Act of Congress, *2794 by these rules, or by other rules prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority. Evidence which is not relevant is not admissible."

"Relevant evidence" is defined as that which has "any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence." Rule 401. The Rule's basic standard of relevance thus is a liberal one.

Frye, of course, predated the Rules by half a century. In United States v. Abel, 469 U.S. 45, 105 S.Ct. 465, 83 L.Ed.2d 450 (1984), we considered the pertinence of background common law in interpreting the Rules of Evidence. We noted that the Rules occupy the field, id., at 49, 105 S.Ct., at 467, but, quoting Professor Cleary, the Reporter, 588 explained that the common law nevertheless could serve as an aid to their application:

> " 'In principle, under the Federal Rules no common law of evidence remains. "All relevant evidence is admissible, except as otherwise provided...." In reality, of course, the body of common law knowledge continues to exist, though in the somewhat altered form of a source of guidance in the exercise of delegated powers.' " Id., at 51–52, 105 S.Ct., at 469.

We found the common-law precept at issue in the Abel case entirely consistent with Rule 402's general requirement of admissibility, and considered it unlikely that the drafters had intended to change the rule. Id., at 50–51, 105 S.Ct., at 468–469. In Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 107 S.Ct. 2775, 97 L.Ed.2d 144 (1987), on the other hand, the Court was unable to find a particular common-law doctrine in the Rules, and so held it superseded.

Here there is a specific Rule that speaks to the contested issue. Rule 702, governing expert testimony, provides:

> "If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise."

Nothing in the text of this Rule establishes "general acceptance" as an absolute prerequisite to admissibility. Nor does respondent present any clear indication that Rule 702 or the Rules as a whole were intended to incorporate a "general acceptance" standard. The drafting history makes no mention of Frye, and a rigid "general acceptance" requirement would be at odds with the "liberal thrust" of the Federal Rules and their "general approach of relaxing the traditional barriers to 'opinion' testimony." Beech Aircraft Corp. v. Rainey, 488 U.S., at 169, 109 S.Ct., at 450 (citing Rules 701 to 705). See also Weinstein, 589 Rule 702 of the Federal Rules of Evidence is Sound; It Should Not Be Amended, 138 F.R.D. 631 (1991) ("The Rules were designed to depend primarily upon lawyer-adversaries and sensible triers of fact to evaluate conflicts"). Given the Rules' permissive backdrop and their inclusion of a specific rule on expert testimony that does not mention " 'general acceptance,' " the assertion that the Rules somehow assimilated Frye is unconvincing. Frye made "general acceptance" the exclusive test for admitting expert scientific testimony. That austere standard, absent from, and incompatible with, the Federal Rules of Evidence, should not be applied in federal trials.[6]

B

That the Frye test was displaced by the Rules of Evidence does not mean, *2795 however, that the Rules themselves place no limits on the admissibility of purportedly scientific evidence.[7] Nor is the trial judge disabled from screening such evidence. To the contrary, under the Rules the trial judge must ensure that any and all scientific testimony or evidence admitted is not only relevant, but reliable.

The primary locus of this obligation is Rule 702, which clearly contemplates some degree of regulation of the subjects and theories about which an expert may testify. "If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue" an expert "may testify thereto." (Emphasis added.) The subject of an expert's testimony must 590 be "scientific ... knowledge."[8] The adjective " scientific" implies a grounding in the methods and procedures of science. Similarly, the word "knowledge" connotes more than subjective belief or unsupported speculation. The term "applies to any body of known facts or to any body of ideas inferred from such facts or accepted as truths on good grounds." Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1252 (1986). Of course, it would be unreasonable to conclude that the subject of scientific testimony must be "known" to a certainty; arguably, there are no certainties in science. See, e.g., Brief for Nicolaas Bloembergen et al. as Amici Curiae 9 ("Indeed, scientists do not assert that they know what is immutably 'true'—they are committed to searching for new, temporary, theories to explain, as best they can, phenomena"); Brief for American Association for the Advancement of Science et al. as Amici Curiae 7–8 ("Science is not an encyclopedic body of knowledge about the universe. Instead, it represents a process for proposing and refining theoretical explanations about the world that are subject to further testing and refinement" (emphasis in original)). But, in order to qualify as "scientific knowledge," an inference or assertion must be derived by the scientific method. Proposed testimony must be supported by appropriate validation—i.e., "good grounds," based on what is known. In short, the requirement that an expert's testimony pertain to " scientific knowledge" establishes a standard of evidentiary reliability.[9]

591 Rule 702 further requires that the evidence or testimony "assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue." This condition goes primarily to relevance. " Expert testimony which does not relate to any issue in the case is not relevant and, ergo, non-helpful." 3 Weinstein & Berger ¶ 702[02], p. 702–18. See also United States v. Downing, 753 F.2d 1224, 1242 (CA3 1985) ("An additional consideration *2796 under Rule 702—and another aspect of relevancy—is whether expert testimony proffered in the case is sufficiently tied to the facts of the case that it will aid the jury in resolving a factual dispute"). The consideration has been aptly described by Judge Becker as one of "fit." Ibid. "Fit" is not always obvious, and scientific validity for one purpose is not necessarily scientific validity for other, unrelated purposes. See Starrs, Frye v. United States Restructured and Revitalized: A Proposal to Amend Federal Evidence Rule 702, 26 Jurimetrics J. 249, 258 (1986). The study of the phases of the moon, for example, may provide valid scientific "knowledge" about whether a certain night was dark, and if darkness is a fact in issue, the knowledge will assist the trier of fact. However (absent creditable grounds supporting such a link), evidence that the moon was full on a certain night will not assist the trier of fact in determining whether an individual was unusually likely to have behaved irrationally on that night. Rule 702's "helpfulness" 592 standard requires a valid scientific connection to the pertinent inquiry as a precondition to admissibility.

That these requirements are embodied in Rule 702 is not surprising. Unlike an ordinary witness, see Rule 701, an expert is permitted wide latitude to offer opinions, including those that are not based on firsthand knowledge or observation. See Rules 702 and 703. Presumably, this relaxation of the usual requirement of firsthand knowledge—a rule which represents "a 'most pervasive manifestation' of the common law insistence upon 'the most reliable sources of information,' " Advisory Committee's Notes on Fed.Rule Evid. 602, 28 U.S.C.App., p. 755 (citation omitted)—is premised on an assumption that the expert's opinion will have a reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of his discipline.

Faced with a proffer of expert scientific testimony, then, the trial judge must determine at the outset, pursuant to Rule 104(a),[10] whether the expert is proposing to testify to (1) scientific knowledge that (2) will assist the trier of fact to understand or determine a fact in issue.[11] This entails a preliminary assessment of whether the reasoning or methodology 593 underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and of whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts in issue. We are confident that federal judges possess the capacity to undertake this review. Many factors will bear on the inquiry, and we do not presume to set out a definitive checklist or test. But some general observations are appropriate.

Ordinarily, a key question to be answered in determining whether a theory or technique is scientific knowledge that will assist the trier of fact will be whether it can be (and has been) tested. "Scientific methodology today is based on generating hypotheses and testing them to see if they can be falsified; indeed, this methodology is what distinguishes science from other fields of human inquiry." Green 645. See also C. Hempel, Philosophy of Natural Science 49 (1966) *2797 ("[T]he statements constituting a scientific explanation must be capable of empirical test"); K. Popper, Conjectures and Refutations: The Growth of Scientific Knowledge 37 (5th ed. 1989) ("[T]he criterion of the scientific status of a theory is its falsifiability, or refutability, or testability") (emphasis deleted).

Another pertinent consideration is whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review and publication. Publication (which is but one element of peer review) is not a sine qua non of admissibility; it does not necessarily correlate with reliability, see S. Jasanoff, The Fifth Branch: Science Advisors as Policymakers 61–76 (1990), and in some instances well-grounded but innovative theories will not have been published, see Horrobin, The Philosophical Basis of Peer Review and the Suppression of Innovation, 263 JAMA 1438 (1990). Some propositions, moreover, are too particular, too new, or of too limited interest to be published. But submission to the scrutiny of the scientific community is a component of "good science," in part because it increases the likelihood that substantive flaws in methodology will be detected. See J. Ziman, Reliable Knowledge: An Exploration 594 of the Grounds for Belief in Science 130–133 (1978); Relman & Angell, How Good Is Peer Review?, 321 New Eng.J.Med. 827 (1989). The fact of publication (or lack thereof) in a peer reviewed journal thus will be a relevant, though not dispositive, consideration in assessing the scientific validity of a particular technique or methodology on which an opinion is premised.

Additionally, in the case of a particular scientific technique, the court ordinarily should consider the known or potential rate of error, see, e.g., United States v. Smith, 869 F.2d 348, 353–354 (CA7 1989) (surveying studies of the error rate of spectrographic voice identification technique), and the existence and maintenance of standards controlling the technique's operation, see United States v. Williams, 583 F.2d 1194, 1198 (CA2 1978) (noting professional organization's standard governing spectrographic analysis), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1117, 99 S.Ct. 1025, 59 L.Ed.2d 77 (1979).

Finally, "general acceptance" can yet have a bearing on the inquiry. A "reliability assessment does not require, although it does permit, explicit identification of a relevant scientific community and an express determination of a particular degree of acceptance within that community." United States v. Downing, 753 F.2d, at 1238. See also 3 Weinstein & Berger ¶ 702[03], pp. 702–41 to 702–42. Widespread acceptance can be an important factor in ruling particular evidence admissible, and "a known technique which has been able to attract only minimal support within the community," Downing, 753 F.2d, at 1238, may properly be viewed with skepticism.

The inquiry envisioned by Rule 702 is, we emphasize, a flexible one.[12] Its overarching subject is the scientific validity 595 and thus the evidentiary relevance and reliability—of the principles that underlie a proposed submission. The focus, of course, must be solely on principles and methodology, not on the conclusions that they generate.

Throughout, a judge assessing a proffer of expert scientific testimony under Rule 702 should also be mindful of other applicable rules. Rule 703 provides that expert opinions based on otherwise inadmissible *2798 hearsay are to be admitted only if the facts or data are "of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject." Rule 706 allows the court at its discretion to procure the assistance of an expert of its own choosing. Finally, Rule 403 permits the exclusion of relevant evidence "if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury...." Judge Weinstein has explained: "Expert evidence can be both powerful and quite misleading because of the difficulty in evaluating it. Because of this risk, the judge in weighing possible prejudice against probative force under Rule 403 of the present rules exercises more control over experts than over lay witnesses." Weinstein, 138 F.R.D., at 632.

III

We conclude by briefly addressing what appear to be two underlying concerns of the parties and amici in this case. Respondent expresses apprehension that abandonment of "general acceptance" as the exclusive requirement for admission will result in a "free-for-all" in which befuddled juries are confounded by absurd and irrational pseudoscientific assertions. 596 In this regard respondent seems to us to be overly pessimistic about the capabilities of the jury and of the adversary system generally. Vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence. See Rock v. Arkansas, 483 U.S. 44, 61, 107 S.Ct. 2704, 2714, 97 L.Ed.2d 37 (1987). Additionally, in the event the trial court concludes that the scintilla of evidence presented supporting a position is insufficient to allow a reasonable juror to conclude that the position more likely than not is true, the court remains free to direct a judgment, Fed.Rule Civ.Proc. 50(a), and likewise to grant summary judgment, Fed.Rule Civ.Proc. 56. Cf., e.g., Turpin v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 959 F.2d 1349 (CA6) (holding that scientific evidence that provided foundation for expert testimony, viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, was not sufficient to allow a jury to find it more probable than not that defendant caused plaintiff's injury), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 826, 113 S.Ct. 84, 121 L.Ed.2d 47 (1992); Brock v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 874 F.2d 307 (CA5 1989) (reversing judgment entered on jury verdict for plaintiffs because evidence regarding causation was insufficient), modified, 884 F.2d 166 (CA5 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1046, 110 S.Ct. 1511, 108 L.Ed.2d 646 (1990); Green 680–681. These conventional devices, rather than wholesale exclusion under an uncompromising "general acceptance" test, are the appropriate safeguards where the basis of scientific testimony meets the standards of Rule 702.

Petitioners and, to a greater extent, their amici exhibit a different concern. They suggest that recognition of a screening role for the judge that allows for the exclusion of "invalid" evidence will sanction a stifling and repressive scientific orthodoxy and will be inimical to the search for truth. See, e.g., Brief for Ronald Bayer et al. as Amici Curiae. It is true that open debate is an essential part of both legal and scientific analyses. Yet there are important differences between the quest for truth in the courtroom and the quest 597 for truth in the laboratory. Scientific conclusions are subject to perpetual revision. Law, on the other hand, must resolve disputes finally and quickly. The scientific project is advanced by broad and wide-ranging consideration of a multitude of hypotheses, for those that are incorrect will eventually be shown to be so, and that in itself is an advance. Conjectures that are probably wrong are of little use, however, in the project of reaching a quick, final, and binding legal judgment—often of great consequence—about a particular set of events in the past. We recognize that, in practice, a gatekeeping role for the judge, no matter how flexible, inevitably on occasion will prevent the jury from learning of authentic *2799 insights and innovations. That, nevertheless, is the balance that is struck by Rules of Evidence designed not for the exhaustive search for cosmic understanding but for the particularized resolution of legal disputes.[13]

IV

To summarize: "General acceptance" is not a necessary precondition to the admissibility of scientific evidence under the Federal Rules of Evidence, but the Rules of Evidence—especially Rule 702—do assign to the trial judge the task of ensuring that an expert's testimony both rests on a reliable foundation and is relevant to the task at hand. Pertinent evidence based on scientifically valid principles will satisfy those demands.

The inquiries of the District Court and the Court of Appeals focused almost exclusively on "general acceptance," as gauged by publication and the decisions of other courts. Accordingly, 598 the judgment of the Court of Appeals is vacated, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Chief Justice REHNQUIST, with whom Justice STEVENS joins, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

The petition for certiorari in this case presents two questions: first, whether the rule of Frye v. United States, 54 App.D.C. 46, 293 F. 1013 (1923), remains good law after the enactment of the Federal Rules of Evidence; and second, if Frye remains valid, whether it requires expert scientific testimony to have been subjected to a peer review process in order to be admissible. The Court concludes, correctly in my view, that the Frye rule did not survive the enactment of the Federal Rules of Evidence, and I therefore join Parts I and II–A of its opinion. The second question presented in the petition for certiorari necessarily is mooted by this holding, but the Court nonetheless proceeds to construe Rules 702 and 703 very much in the abstract, and then offers some "general observations." Ante, at 2796.

"General observations" by this Court customarily carry great weight with lower federal courts, but the ones offered here suffer from the flaw common to most such observations—they are not applied to deciding whether particular testimony was or was not admissible, and therefore they tend to be not only general, but vague and abstract. This is particularly unfortunate in a case such as this, where the ultimate legal question depends on an appreciation of one or more bodies of knowledge not judicially noticeable, and subject to different interpretations in the briefs of the parties and their amici. Twenty-two amicus briefs have been filed in the case, and indeed the Court's opinion contains no fewer than 37 citations to amicus briefs and other secondary sources.

599 The various briefs filed in this case are markedly different from typical briefs, in that large parts of them do not deal with decided cases or statutory language—the sort of material we customarily interpret. Instead, they deal with definitions of scientific knowledge, scientific method, scientific validity, and peer review—in short, matters far afield from the expertise of judges. This is not to say that such materials are not useful or even necessary in deciding how Rule 703 should be applied; but it is to say that the unusual subject matter should cause us to proceed with great caution in deciding more than we have to, because our reach can so easily exceed our grasp.

But even if it were desirable to make "general observations" not necessary to decide *2800 the questions presented, I cannot subscribe to some of the observations made by the Court. In Part II–B, the Court concludes that reliability and relevancy are the touchstones of the admissibility of expert testimony. Ante, at 2794–95. Federal Rule of Evidence 402 provides, as the Court points out, that "[e]vidence which is not relevant is not admissible." But there is no similar reference in the Rule to "reliability." The Court constructs its argument by parsing the language "[i]f scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, ... an expert ... may testify thereto...." Fed.Rule Evid. 702. It stresses that the subject of the expert's testimony must be "scientific ... knowledge," and points out that "scientific" "implies a grounding in the methods and procedures of science" and that the word "knowledge" "connotes more than subjective belief or unsupported speculation." Ante, at 2794–95. From this it concludes that "scientific knowledge" must be "derived by the scientific method." Ante, at 2795. Proposed testimony, we are told, must be supported by "appropriate validation." Ante, at 2795. Indeed, in footnote 9, the Court decides that "[i]n a case involving scientific evidence, evidentiaryreliability 600 will be based upon scientific validity." Ante, at 2795, n. 9 (emphasis inoriginal).

Questions arise simply from reading this part of the Court's opinion, and countless more questions will surely arise when hundreds of district judges try to apply its teaching to particular offers of expert testimony. Does all of this dicta apply to an expert seeking to testify on the basis of "technical or other specialized knowledge"—the other types of expert knowledge to which Rule 702 applies—or are the "general observations" limited only to "scientific knowledge"? What is the difference between scientific knowledge and technical knowledge; does Rule 702 actually contemplate that the phrase "scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge" be broken down into numerous subspecies of expertise, or did its authors simply pick general descriptive language covering the sort of expert testimony which courts have customarily received? The Court speaks of its confidence that federal judges can make a "preliminary assessment of whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and of whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts in issue." Ante, at 2796. The Court then states that a "key question" to be answered in deciding whether something is "scientific knowledge" "will be whether it can be (and has been) tested." Ante, at 2796. Following this sentence are three quotations from treatises, which not only speak of empirical testing, but one of which states that the " 'criterion of the scientific status of a theory is its falsifiability, or refutability, or testability,' " Ante, at 2796–97.

I defer to no one in my confidence in federal judges; but I am at a loss to know what is meant when it is said that the scientific status of a theory depends on its "falsifiability," and I suspect some of them will be, too.

I do not doubt that Rule 702 confides to the judge some gatekeeping responsibility in deciding questions of the admissibility of proffered expert testimony. But I do not think 601 it imposes on them either the obligation or the authority to become amateur scientists in order to perform that role. I think the Court would be far better advised in this case to decide only the questions presented, and to leave the further development of this important area of the law to future cases.

All Citations

509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786, 125 L.Ed.2d 469, 61 USLW 4805, 27 U.S.P.Q.2d 1200, 23 Envtl. L. Rep. 20,979, 37 Fed. R. Evid. Serv. 1, Prod.Liab.Rep. (CCH) P 13,494

Footnotes

* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

1 Doctor Lamm received his master's and doctor of medicine degrees from the University of Southern California. He has served as a consultant in birth-defect epidemiology for the National Center for Health Statistics and has published numerous articles on the magnitude of risk from exposure to various chemical and biological substances. App. 34–44.

2 For example, Shanna Helen Swan, who received a master's degree in biostatistics from Columbia University and a doctorate in statistics from the University of California at Berkeley, is chief of the section of the California Department of Health and Services that determines causes of birth defects and has served as a consultant to the World Health Organization, the Food and Drug Administration, and the National Institutes of Health. Id., at 113–114, 131–132. Stuart A. Newman, who received his bachelor's degree in chemistry from Columbia University and his master's and doctorate in chemistry from the University of Chicago, is a professor at New York Medical College and has spent over a decade studying the effect of chemicals on limb development. Id., at 54–56. The credentials of the others are similarly impressive. See Id., at 61–66, 73–80, 148–153, 187–192, and Attachments 12, 20, 21, 26, 31, and 32 to Petitioners' Opposition to Summary Judgment in No. 84–2013–G(I) (SD Cal.).

3 For a catalog of the many cases on either side of this controversy, see P. Giannelli & E. Imwinkelried, Scientific Evidence § 1–5, pp. 10–14 (1986 and Supp.1991).

4 See, e.g., Green, Expert Witnesses and Sufficiency of Evidence in Toxic Substances Litigation: The Legacy of Agent Orange and Bendectin Litigation, 86 Nw.U.L.Rev. 643 (1992) (hereinafter Green); Becker & Orenstein, The Federal Rules of Evidence After Sixteen Years—the Effect of "Plain Meaning" Jurisprudence, the Need for an Advisory Committee on the Rules of Evidence, and Suggestions for Selective Revision of the Rules, 60 Geo.Wash.L.Rev. 857, 876–885 (1992); Hanson, James Alphonzo Frye is Sixty–Five Years Old; Should He Retire?," 16 West.St.U.L.Rev. 357 (1989); Black, A Unified Theory of Scientific Evidence, 56 Ford.L.Rev. 595 (1988); Imwinkelried, The "Bases" of Expert Testimony: The Syllogistic Structure of Scientific Testimony, 67 N.C.L.Rev. 1 (1988); Proposals for a Model Rule on the Admissibility of Scientific Evidence, 26 Jurimetrics J. 235 (1986); Giannelli, The Admissibility of Novel Scientific Evidence: Frye v. United States, a Half–Century Later, 80 Colum.L.Rev. 1197 (1980); The Supreme Court, 1986 Term, 101 Harv.L.Rev. 7, 119, 125–127 (1987).

Indeed, the debates over Frye are such a well-established part of the academic landscape that a distinct term—"Frye–ologist"—has been advanced to describe those who take part. See Behringer, Introduction, Proposals for a Model Rule on the Admissibility of Scientific Evidence, 26 Jurimetrics J. 237, 239 (1986), quoting Lacey, Scientific Evidence, 24 Jurimetrics J. 254, 264 (1984).

5 Like the question of Frye' s merit, the dispute over its survival has divided courts and commentators. Compare, e.g., United States v. Williams, 583 F.2d 1194 (CA2 1978) (Frye is superseded by the Rules of Evidence), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1117, 99 S.Ct. 1025, 59 L.Ed.2d 77 (1979) with Christophersen v. Allied–Signal Corp., 939 F.2d 1106, 1111, 1115–1116 (CA5 1991) (en banc) (Frye and the Rules coexist), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 912, 112 S.Ct. 1280, 117 L.Ed.2d 506 (1992), 3 J. Weinstein & M. Berger, Weinstein's Evidence ¶ 702[03], pp. 702–36 to 702–37 (1988) (hereinafter Weinstein & Berger) (Frye is dead), and M. Graham, Handbook of Federal Evidence § 703.2 (3d ed. 1991) (Frye lives). See generally P. Giannelli & E. Imwinkelried, Scientific Evidence § 1–5, at 28–29 (citing authorities).

6 Because we hold that Frye has been superseded and base the discussion that follows on the content of the congressionally enacted Federal Rules of Evidence, we do not address petitioners' argument that application of the Frye rule in this diversity case, as the application of a judge-made rule affecting substantive rights, would violate the doctrine of Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188 (1938).

7 THE CHIEF JUSTICE "do[es] not doubt that Rule 702 confides to the judge some gatekeeping responsibility," post, at 2800, but would neither say how it does so nor explain what that role entails. We believe the better course is to note the nature and source of the duty.

8 Rule 702 also applies to "technical, or other specialized knowledge." Our discussion is limited to the scientific context because that is the nature of the expertise offered here.

9 We note that scientists typically distinguish between "validity" (does the principle support what it purports to show?) and "reliability" (does application of the principle produce consistent results?). See Black, 56 Ford.L.Rev., at 599. Although "the difference between accuracy, validity, and reliability may be such that each is distinct from the other by no more than a hen's kick," Starrs, Frye v. United States Restructured and Revitalized: A Proposal to Amend Federal Evidence Rule 702, 26 Jurimetrics J. 249, 256 (1986), our reference here is to evidentiary reliability—that is, trustworthiness. Cf., e.g., Advisory Committee's Notes on Fed.Rule Evid. 602, 28 U.S.C.App., p. 755 (" '[T]he rule requiring that a witness who testifies to a fact which can be perceived by the senses must have had an opportunity to observe, and must have actually observed the fact' is a 'most pervasive manifestation' of the common law insistence upon 'the most reliable sources of information' " (citation omitted)); Advisory Committee's Notes on Art. VIII of Rules of Evidence, 28 U.S.C.App., p. 770 (hearsay exceptions will be recognized only "under circumstances supposed to furnish guarantees of trustworthiness"). In a case involving scientific evidence, evidentiary reliability will be based upon scientific validity.

10 Rule 104(a) provides:

"Preliminary questions concerning the qualification of a person to be a witness, the existence of a privilege, or the admissibility of evidence shall be determined by the court, subject to the provisions of subdivision (b) [pertaining to conditional admissions]. In making its determination it is not bound by the rules of evidence except those with respect to privileges." These matters should be established by a preponderance of proof. See Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 175–176, 107 S.Ct. 2775, 2778–2779, 97 L.Ed.2d 144 (1987).

11 Although the Frye decision itself focused exclusively on "novel" scientific techniques, we do not read the requirements of Rule 702 to apply specially or exclusively to unconventional evidence. Of course, well-established propositions are less likely to be challenged than those that are novel, and they are more handily defended. Indeed, theories that are so firmly established as to have attained the status of scientific law, such as the laws of thermodynamics, properly are subject to judicial notice under Federal Rule of Evidence 201.

12 A number of authorities have presented variations on the reliability approach, each with its own slightly different set of factors. See, e.g., Downing, 753 F.2d, at 1238–1239 (on which our discussion draws in part); 3 Weinstein & Berger ¶ 702[03], pp. 702–41 to 702–42 (on which the Downing court in turn partially relied); McCormick, Scientific Evidence: Defining a New Approach to Admissibility, 67 Iowa L.Rev. 879, 911–912 (1982); and Symposium on Science and the Rules of Evidence, 99 F.R.D. 187, 231 (1983) (statement by Margaret Berger). To the extent that they focus on the reliability of evidence as ensured by the scientific validity of its underlying principles, all these versions may well have merit, although we express no opinion regarding any of their particular details.

13 This is not to say that judicial interpretation, as opposed to adjudicative factfinding, does not share basic characteristics of the scientific endeavor: "The work of a judge is in one sense enduring and in another ephemeral.... In the endless process of testing and retesting, there is a constant rejection of the dross and a constant retention of whatever is pure and sound and fine." B. Cardozo, The Nature of the Judicial Process 178, 179 (1921).

1943 CarswellOnt 219
Ontario Seventh Division Court of the County of Essex

Doyle Clinic Ltd. v. Newton

1943 CarswellOnt 219, [1943] O.W.N. 411

Doyle Clinic Limited v. Newton

Gordon Co. Ct. J.

Judgment: May 27, 1943

Counsel: Don Brown, for the plaintiff.
L.H. Swartz, for the defendant.

Subject: Public
Related Abridgment Classifications
Health law
III Provincial matters
III.3 Regulation of health professionals
III.3.f Physicians
III.3.f.i Relationship with patient
Health law
III Provincial matters
III.3 Regulation of health professionals
III.3.f Physicians
III.3.f.ii Right to practice
Statutes
II Interpretation
II.1 General principles
II.1.b Ambiguity
Headnote
Health Law --- Physicians and surgeons — Organization of profession — Right to practice — Unlawful practice — Corporations
Health Law --- Physicians and surgeons — Relationship with patient — Fees — Right to sue Statutes --- Interpretation — Role of court — Language clear Medicine and Surgery — Right to Recover Professional Fees — Registration — Incorporated Clinic — The Medical Act, R.S.O. 1937, c. 225, s. 50 — The Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1937, c. 1, s. 32(ze).

An action for "the amount owing on account of professional and medical services rendered".

The plaintiff was an incorporated company, and the defendant pleaded s. 50 of The Medical Act, R.S.O. 1937, c. 225, which reads in part as follows:

> 50. No person shall be entitled to recover any charge in any court for any medical or surgical advice, or for attendance, or for the performance of any operation, or for any medicine which he may have prescribed or supplied, unless he produces to the court a certificate that he was registered under the Act at the time the services were rendered.

Gordon Co. Ct. J. [after quoting s. 50, supra]:

1 The Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1937, c. 1, provides, in s. 32(ze) that the word "person" shall include any body corporate.

2 No evidence was offered at the trial, but the plaintiff produced a certificate from the assistant secretary of the Ontario Medical Association, to the effect that "Drs. W.C. Doyle and John Weinstock were duly qualified medical practitioners, licensed to practise in the Province of Ontario in the year 1939". The alleged services were rendered during the year 1939.

3 There is no evidence to show any connection between Dr. Doyle and Dr. Weinstock and Doyle Clinic Limited, but that fact does not affect my judgment. I am assuming that both doctors are shareholders in the plaintiff corporation and that either or both of them rendered the services in question.

4 In my opinion the plaintiff cannot succeed, because it has not shown it was registered under the Act when the alleged services were rendered. Impossibility of such registration may be apparent, but that does not assist the plaintiff.

5 The plaintiff relies on Calgary Associate Clinic v. Johnston, 25 Alta. L.R. 470, [1931] 2 W.W.R. 716, [1931] 4 D.L.R. 247, but I feel that that case is clearly distinguishable. In that case the statement of claim alleged that the plaintiff was a partnership consisting of seven named doctors, "all of whom are members in good standing of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of the Province of Alberta, carrying on business as physicians and surgeons in the city of Calgary." It further alleged that the claim was for an account due the plaintiff for professional services rendered by one of the named doctors, at the defendant's request.

6 In my opinion the Alberta case simply reaffirms the right of partners to sue in the firm name. The defence in this connection seems to have been that the individual partners should have been named as plaintiffs, probably with this addition: "carrying on business in partnership under the firm name of Calgary Associate Clinic". The point is that in the above case the doctor who rendered the services was in fact a plaintiff regardless of which style of cause was employed. But it is entirely different where the plaintiff is a body corporate, not a partnership.

7 In his judgment in the Alberta case, Harvey C.J.A. says:

> But I am of opinion that the section does not mean that only a registered doctor can be plaintiff in an action for medical services. If it did, no assignee and no personal representative of a deceased doctor, unless himself a doctor, could recover for services performed by the assignor or the deceased.

8 I agree that an assignee of a doctor's account cannot successfully sue thereon, unless, of course, the doctor be a party to the action. But, with great respect, I cannot agree that the section (the corresponding section in the Alberta statute, The Medical Profession Act, R.S.A. 1922, c. 209, s. 63, is very similar to our s. 50) would prevent the executor or administrator of a doctor's estate from recovering books debts of the deceased doctor, although he might be required to show that the doctor was in good standing, etc., when he rendered the services. The personal representative of a deceased person is not in the same class as an assignee; in law he is the deceased.

9 In the present case I feel that the doctor who rendered the services should have been a party to the action, or should have sued in his own name.

10 Johnston v. Pepler (1932), 41 O.W.N. 207, is not in point but I refer to it because it involved s. 50, and the Court held that it was not at liberty to disregard the plain and unambiguous words of the section. I, too, feel that way. The words of the section are decidedly clear; if it was not intended that it should affect a case like this, then I think it might well be amended.

11 Action dismissed with costs.

MANITOBA HYDRO v. DVORAK et al.

Manitoba Court of Appeal, Freedman C.J.M., Monnin and Matas JJ.A.

Heard — December 10, 1980.
Judgment — December 31, 1980.

A. J. Sato, for Manitoba Hydro.

T. G. Haque, as amicus curiae for Attorney General of Manitoba.

FREEDMAN C.J.M. (MATAS J.A. concurring):—I have read the judgment of my brother Monnin. I think there may be cases in which we will be called upon to consider whether the principle set forth by Shaw L.J. in Food Controller v. Cork, [1923] A.C. 647 (H.L.), should be applied. That principle declares that an ordinary commercial claim of an agent of the Crown does not attract the protection of the royal prerogative so as to give it priority over other commercial debts similarly arising.

But here we have an express provision of a statute, namely, s. 189(2)(a)(i) of the Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. B-3, in the following words:

"(3) Notwithstanding subsection (1), this Part does not apply to the following classes of debts:

"(a) a debt due, owing or payable

"(i) to Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province".

The learned trial judge, P. D. Ferg Co. Ct. J., directed that the debt due to Manitoba Hydro be included in the consolidation order under Pt. X of the Bankruptcy Act. Part X deals with orderly payment of debts, and s. 189 is part thereof. Since Manitoba Hydro is an agent of Her Majesty in right of Manitoba, the debt due to it could not be so included. The statute does not leave room for examining whether the debt arose from a commercial transaction or otherwise. The exclusion under s. 189 is total.

I would allow the appeal and dispose of the matter as Monnin J.A. has directed.

MONNIN J.A.:—Pursuant to s. 191(2) of the Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. B-3, the deputy clerk of the County Court of Winnipeg issued a notice to creditors, to the effect that Mr. and Mrs. Dvorak had applied for a consolidation order under Pt. X of the Act providing for orderly payment of debts.

Manitoba Hydro, a creditor to the extent of $174.40, objected to this consolidation and so informed the court. Its objection was based upon s. 189(2)(a)(i), which is to the effect that Pt. X does not apply to a debt due, owing or payable to Her Majesty in right of Manitoba. The clerk referred the matter to the court. P.D. Ferg Co. Ct. J. rejected Hydro's argument and ordered that the debt be included in the consolidation order.

The question is one of priority and whether a debt due to Hydro for the purpose of consumption of electricity is a debt due, owing or payable to Her Majesty in right of Manitoba. The point is important and not free from doubt, as there appear to be two judicial opinions on the matter. It has raised such interest that the Attorney General of Manitoba applied for and obtained the status of amicus curiae in order to argue the opposite of Hydro. Hydro alleges that it is, for all purposes, an agent of Her Majesty. The Attorney General of Manitoba replies not so. The wording "a debt due, owing or payable to Her Majesty" is not wide enough to cover commercial debts and sale of hydro-electric power.

There are numerous decisions on this subject, with two patterns clearly established. There is even one case, namely, Kawneer Co. v. Bank of Can. (1975), 9 O.R. (2d) 468, 60 D.L.R. (3d) 636, which holds that the Bank of Canada is not the servant or agent of the Crown, whilst other courts have held that the Industrial Development Bank, another creature of Parliament doing similar business, is an agent of the Crown. I have difficulty, in all these cases, to find a clear rationale for these various findings.

Under Pt. V of the Bankruptcy Act, s. 107 sets out the priorities of the scheme of distribution in the event of bankruptcy and, subject to the rights of secured creditors, it states in s. 107(1):

"(j) claims of the Crown not previously mentioned in this section, in right of Canada or of any province, pari passu notwithstanding any statutory preference to the contrary."

In that section, it speaks of the "claims of the Crown", whilst in s. 189(2)(a) it speaks of "a debt due, owing or payable. . . to Her Majesty in right of . . . a province". The language is obviously different, but basically it means the same thing, namely, that moneys owing to the federal or provincial Crown have, under certain circumstances, a priority; whether this priority arises by prerogative of the Crown or by statute is of little effect.

I hasten to state that in Manitoba we do not have a Government Companies Operation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. G-7, such as Parliament has passed, or a Crown Agency Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 100, such as the Ontario legislature has passed. We must therefore look only at the Act incorporating Manitoba Hydro and the established jurisprudence on the subject.

Section 4(3) of the Manitoba Hydro Act, C.C.S.M., c. H190, reads as follows:

"4(3) The corporation is an agent of Her Majesty; but, subject to subsection (5), may sue and be sued, contract and be contracted with, in and by its corporate name as in the case of any other corporation."

Subsection (5) has no bearing on this issue.

The wording of s. 4(3) is clear. Hydro is an agent of Her Majesty, although it does not specify that it is, so for all purposes whatsoever I do not see any limitation in the wording.

Let us now look at the authorities referred to us and others which have come to my attention. In Re Spartan Air Services Ltd., 1 C.B.R. (N.S.) 33, [1960] O.W.N. 431, affirmed 1 C.B.R. (N.S.) 149, [1960] O.W.N. 471, F.G. Cook, Registrar, and subsequently Smily J., held that Eldorado Aviation Limited and Northern Transportation Company Limited, two companies incorporated by the federal Crown, in the ordinary course of business, under the Government Companies Operation Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 133, by letters patent and not by special legislation, were agents of the Crown and, as such, moneys owing to them were owed to their principal, namely, the Crown, and that both companies were therefore entitled to the priority established under s. 95(1)(j), now s. 107(1)(j), of the Act. Smily J. did not accept the argument that the claims of these two companies related solely to commercial transactions taking place between them and the debtor Spartan Air Services Limited.

In Re Sure Brake & Muffler Ltd. (1972), 17 C.B.R. (N.S.) 103 (Ont.), Houlden J., following the Spartan case, held that a claim of the Manitoba Telephone System was a claim of the Crown in right of Manitoba and entitled to preference. Section 52 of the Manitoba Telephone Act, R.S.M. 1970, c. T40 (also C.C.S.M., c. T40), simply stated that:

"52 The Commission is an agent of Her Majesty in right of the province."

He reiterated what Smily J. had said in Spartan, that moneys owing as a result of a transaction with an agent may be claimed by the principal, and that since the principal is the Crown, the Manitoba Telephone System was entitled to the priority given to the Crown's claim.

A similar result followed in Re McGruer & Clark Ltd. (1976), 13 O.R. (2d) 385, 22 C.B.R. (N.S.) 164, 71 D.L.R. (3d) 175 (Ont. H.C.); Re Titeley; Alta. Opportunity Co. v. Cuthbertson (1977), 24 C.B.R. (N.S.) 224, 2 Alta. L.R. (2d) 369, affirmed 27 C.B.R. (N.S.) 174, 5 Alta. L.R. (2d) 193, 11 A.R. 469 (T.D.). The registrar stated the issue thus at (C.B.R.) p. 226:

"The consideration, in my opinion, becomes whether or not the claim of the Alberta Opportunity Company is of a commercial nature and for that reason not subject to priority over the other creditors in the estate."

On appeal, Cavanagh J. held that the right to priority sprung from s. 107(1)(j) of the Bankruptcy Act, which does not differentiate between claims that are of a commercial nature and claims of any other nature.

This court in Radych v. Man. Power Commn., 50 Man. R. 54, [1942] 1 W.W.R. 89, [1942] 1 D.L.R. 445, affirmed 50 Man. R. at 60, [1942] 1 W.W.R. 866, [1942] 2 D.L.R. 776, affirming a decision of McPherson C.J.K.B., wherein the commission, relying on the prerogative of the Crown, refused to submit to examination for discovery and took the position that it was the Crown. On the Manitoba Power Commission Act, R.S.M. 1940, c. 166, as it then stood, McPherson C.J.K.B. held that the commission was not the Crown. In the 1940 text, there is no mention whatsoever that the commission acted as agent of the Crown; therefore, the Radych case has no application to the present issue, as I must examine the legislation as it now stands.

The views expressed by McPherson C.J.K.B. were followed by Trueman J.A. in a dissenting judgment in Oatway v. Can. Wheat Bd., 52 Man. R. 283, [1944] 3 W.W.R. 337 at 356, [1944] 4 D.L.R. 381, affirmed without disposing of that issue at [1945] S.C.R. 204, [1945] 2 D.L.R. 145.

A different view was taken by the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Re Sask. Govt. Ins. Office and Saskatoon, [1947] 2 W.W.R. 1028, [1948] 2 D.L.R. 30, wherein the court unanimously held that the Saskatchewan Government Insurance Office, functioning through a manager, created as a corporation sole and subject to the control of the Crown, either exercised through the Lieutenant-Governor in Council or by the minister responsible, was an agent of the Crown and not assessable for business tax purposes. In a situation very similar, with nearly identical powers, the Manitoba Court of Appeal held on the wording of the Act, as it then stood, that the Manitoba Power Commission was not an agent of the Crown whilst the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal held the opposite view with respect to the Saskatchewan Government Insurance Office. These two decisions and others of similar nature cannot be reconciled and no principle can be readily obtained from a reading of them.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in St. Catherines v. H.E.P.C., 61 O.L.R. 465, affirmed 62 O.L.R. 301, which was affirmed [1930] 1 D.L.R. 409, held that the Ontario Power Commission was a statutory corporation created by the legislature of Ontario with limited powers and that it could not be regarded as a government department, so that an agreement with the commission can be treated as an agreement with the Crown. This case also requires a careful examination of the wording of the Hydro-Electric Act, 1924 (Ont.), c. 26. Again, though binding, this decision does not give much light on the subject because the Manitoba legislation is differently worded.

The other view, namely, that the Crown's prerogative cannot be claimed in ordinary commercial transactions, has found favour in the following decisions: R. v. Workmen's Comp. Bd. and Edmonton (1963), 39 W.W.R. 291, 36 D.L.R. (2d) 166, varied 42 W.W.R. 226, 40 D.L.R. (2d) 243 (Alta. C.A.); Alta. Govt. Telephones v. Selk, [1974] 4 W.W.R. 205 (Alta.).

The basis of these decisions is a dicta of Shaw L.J. in Food Controller v. Cork, [1923] A.C. 647 (H.L.), which reads as follows [p. 667]:

"My opinion is now delivered with the most complete reservation of the point whether facts of such a nature could ever permit of the debt which has arisen being treated as a Crown debt within the scope of the royal prerogative.

"How is this a Crown debt? It springs out of no power vested in the Crown by way of the imposition of a duty or a tax. It is not in the ordinary enumeration of debts incurred for the service of the country. It is an instance simply of a debt arising under ordinary transactions of principal and agent. A Government Department, in the course of realizing Government property, appointed an agent to conduct a transaction. That agent defaulted to the extent of nearly £10,000 and then became bankrupt. The debt arises purely in commercio.

"It is unnecessary in this case to commit oneself to the proposition that when Departments of Government enter into the commercial or industrial sphere they do so with such an enormous leverage against all competitors or subjects of the Crown.

"As at present advised, I can imagine nothing more damaging to the royal prerogative. As time proceeds, the Government does no doubt increasingly enter into the commercial or industrial sphere; but if the argument suggested be sound, it would further appear as a consequence that as spheres of Government action widen, the prerogative of the Crown grows larger and larger and the escape from obligations or the use of preference over the rights of the ordinary citizens would in a greater and greater measure extend. These questions are enormously important; they will have, unless Parliament itself interposes to clarify the situation, to be decided some day."

In the Food Controller case, the insolvent company was employed by the controller acting under some war emergency measures during World War I. The now insolvent company agreed to sell on commission and to distribute large quantities of frozen rabbits which the board of trade, to meet threatening shortages of food, had purchased in Australia and had imported into the United Kingdom. The bankrupt company, acting on behalf of the food controller, sold and delivered these rabbits to the purchasers and collected the purchase moneys, which it was bound to pay over, less its commission, to the controller. When the company went into liquidation it owed a large sum of money to the controller which it ought to have paid regularly from the sale price of the rabbits. This, therefore, was the type of debt for which the Crown then claimed priority by virtue of the royal prerogative. The insolvent company, it is obvious, was never an agent of the Crown as, at best, it was transacting business with the controller, a creation of the United Kingdom Parliament. It is on that factual underpinning that the Privy Council held that this debt was not one for which the Crown could claim priority. I find very little resemblance between that situation and the situation of Hydro. The dicta of Shaw L.J. is very appealing no doubt, and it provided the basis for Buchanan C.J.D.C. in R. v. Workmen's Comp. Bd. and Edmonton, supra, to hold that the debt owing to the Provincial Treasurer of Alberta was a debt arising out of an ordinary commercial contract entered into by a government department in the course of carrying on business.

Smith C.J.A. in R. v. Workmen's Comp. Bd. and Edmonton stated, at (W.W.R.) pp. 227-28, as follows:

"I am in agreement with the learned trial judge and for the reasons stated by him, that Her Majesty the Queen in the right of the province of Alberta, represented by the provincial treasurer, is not entitled to succeed by virtue of the royal prerogative.

"Upon the authority of the decisions referred to by the trial judge and Fox v. Nfld., [1898] A.C. 667, 67 L.J.P.C. 77; Metro. Meat Indust. Bd. v. Sheedy, [1927] A.C. 899, 97 L.J.P.C. 1; and St. Catherines v. H.E.P.C. [supra], I agree with his conclusion that the nature, powers and administrative procedures of the workmen's compensation board as established by its incorporating Act lead to the conclusion that it cannot be described as a servant or agent of the crown and therefore has no priority by virtue of the royal prerogative."

Thereafter Smith C.J.A. concluded that none of the three parties therein involved had priority over any of the others and held that all three parties shared the funds pro rata.

Crossley D.C.J., relying on the aforesaid decision of the Alberta Court of Appeal, also ruled against Alberta Government Telephones in Selk, supra. He quoted the pertaining provincial legislation, which was then as follows:

"39.(1) The commission is for all purposes of this Act an agent of the Crown in right of the Province and its powers under this Act may be exercised only as an agent of the Crown.

"(2) An action, suit or other legal proceeding in respect of any right or obligation acquired or incurred by the commission on behalf of the Crown in right of the Province, whether in its name or in the name of the Crown, may be brought or taken by or against the commission, in the name of the commission, in any court that would have jurisdiction if the commission were not an agent of the Crown."

He concluded from that that the lien was to the effect that the telephone commission was an agent of the Crown in right of the province, but since the section did not specifically state that the commission has no prerogative whatsoever, that it was necessary for him to look at the existing authorities on the subject. He quoted large portions of R. v. Workmen's Comp. Bd. and Edmonton, supra, and Food Controller v. Cork, supra, and concluded using the opening phrase of Shaw L.J., "now is this a Crown debt", and held that the claim of the telephone company was not a debt of the Crown, but a claim of a government agency arising from an ordinary mercantile transaction. He therefore ruled that the telephone company had no priority.

In Westeel-Rosco Ltd. v. Bd. of Governors of South Sask. Hospital Centre, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 238, [1976] 5 W.W.R. 688, 69 D.L.R. (3d) 334, 11 N.R. 514, Ritchie J., speaking for the court, held that the hospital board was not an agent of the Crown, since, in the Act incorporating the board, nothing stated that it was an agent of the Crown. Under such circumstances, Ritchie J. continued that whether or not a particular body was an agent of the Crown depends upon the nature and control which the Crown exercises over it. I accept that principle, but it cannot be applied here since the Manitoba legislature has spelled out that Hydro is an agent of Her Majesty. I do not need to go behind such precise language to find the nature of the body created and the control which the Crown exercises over it.

Under Pt. X of the Bankruptcy Act, it is specifically stated that the part does not apply to certain classes of debts, namely, "a debt due, owing or payable . . . to Her Majesty in right of . . . a province". Section 4(3) of the Manitoba Hydro Act specifically states that the corporation is an agent of Her Majesty. I take that to mean that for all purposes whatsoever, the Crown is an agent of Her Majesty and there is no limitation upon this agency. Therefore, reading these two sections, I can only conclude that Hydro, being an agent of Her Majesty in right of Manitoba, is entitled to the exemption granted to it by s. 189(2)(a)(i), namely, that Pt. X does not apply to Hydro since it is an agent of Her Majesty.

To do otherwise would be to import into the plain language of these sections the notion that if the transaction is merely a commercial one, then it is unfair that the Crown would have a priority over other creditors who also had commercial transactions with the debtors. The rhetorical question "how is this a Crown debt" offers to judges the possibility of many solutions. Attractive as that proposition may be, it cannot be accepted as laying a foundation for a new principle that ordinary commerce and debts due to the Crown are not to benefit from the exemption provided to whoever carries the status of agent of the Crown.

The language of the section provides no leeway. Parliament, in its wisdom, and if it is so minded, can decide that moneys owing to the Crown in commercial transactions should not attract the priority normally reserved to moneys which are the property of the public, but Parliament will have to legislate in that manner. It has not done so. In a case such as this I must apply the test of strict interpretation of the language.

I therefore conclude that Manitoba Hydro is an agent of Her Majesty for all purposes whatsoever including that of selling hydro-electric power. As a result, it is entitled to the benefit of s. 189(2)(a)(i) of the Bankruptcy Act and the debt of $174.40 owing to it by Mr. and Mrs. Dvorak is not to be included in the consolidation order.

The appeal is allowed. Since both counsel are representatives of the Crown, this is not a case for costs.

Appeal allowed.

Robert Stewart Pierre Marcotte Appellant;

and

The Deputy Attorney General for Canada

and

The Warden of Joyceville Federal Institution Respondents.

1974: November 13; 1974: November 27.

Present: Laskin C.J. and Martland, Judson, Ritchie, Spence, Pigeon, Dickson, Beetz and de Grandpré JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

Statutes—Interpretation—Ambiguity—Legislative history—Forfeiture of remission on revocation of parole—Penitentiary Act, 1960-61 (Can.), ss. 22, 25—Parole Act, 1958 (Can), ss. 2, 16, 18.

The appellant was serving sentences totalling 15 years imposed on February 28, 1962. He was released on parole but the parole was suspended 45 days later and later revoked. There were 582 days of statutory remission to his credit at the time of his release but upon revocation this accumulated statutory remission was taken by the authorities to have been forfeited. An application for habeas corpus with certiorari in aid was granted but later set aside by the Court of Appeal.

Held (Martland, Judson, Ritchie and de Grandpré JJ. dissenting): The appeal should be allowed.

Per Laskin C.J. and Spence, Dickson and Beetz JJ.: Whether a paroled inmate whose parole is revoked thereby loses his entitlement to statutory remission standing to his credit at the time of his release on parole depends on the proper construction of the Penitentiary Act, as of the date of parole revocation. Section 22 of the Act contains an entire code governing grant and forfeiture of statutory remission. The credit of statutory remission is not a deferred credit but a real and immediate entitlement. Subsections (3) and (4) of s. 22 alone provide for forfeiture of such remission, but then only for conviction in a disciplinary court for a disciplinary offence or conviction in a criminal court for escape or attempted escape. Even in these cases the extent of the forfeiture is subject to certain limitations and controls. Thus a recommitted parolee is required to serve the term that remained unexpired at the time of parole but is

Robert Stewart Pierre Marcotte Appelant;

c.

Le sous-procureur général du Canada

et

Le Directeur de l'Institution fédérale de Joyceville Intimés.

1974: le 13 novembre; 1974: le 27 novembre.

Présents: Le juge en chef Laskin et les juges Martland, Judson, Ritchie, Spence, Pigeon, Dickson, Beetz et de Grandpré.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE L'ONTARIO

Lois—Interprétation—Ambiguïté—Historique de la législation—Annulation de réduction de peine par révocation de libération conditionnelle—Loi sur les pénitenciers, 1960-61 (Can.), art. 22, 25—Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus, 1958 (Can.), art. 2, 16, 18.

L'appelant purgeait une peine cumulative de 15 ans qui lui avait été infligée le 28 février 1962. Il a été mis en liberté conditionnelle mais celle-ci a été suspendue 45 jours plus tard et ensuite révoquée. Il y avait 582 jours de réduction statutaire de peine inscrits à son crédit au moment de sa mise en liberté, mais lorsque sa libération conditionnelle a été révoquée, cette réduction statutaire accumulée a été considérée par les autorités comme ayant été annulée. Une demande d'habeas corpus accompagnée d'un certiorari a été accordée, mais par la suite la Cour d'appel l'a écartée.

Arrêt (les juges Martland, Judson, Ritchie et de Grandpré étant dissidents): le pourvoi doit être accueilli.

Le juge en chef Laskin et les juges Spence, Dickson et Beetz: la solution du litige, à savoir si un libéré conditionnel dont la libération a été révoquée a ainsi perdu son droit à la réduction statutaire de peine inscrite à son crédit au moment de sa mise en liberté conditionnelle, dépend de la juste interprétation de la Loi sur les pénitenciers telle qu'elle existait à l'époque de la révocation de la libération conditionnelle. L'article 22 de la Loi constitue un code complet régissant l'octroi et le retrait de la réduction statutaire. Le crédit de réduction statutaire n'est pas un crédit différé mais un droit véritable et immédiat. Seuls les par. (3) et (4) de l'art. 22 prévoient le retrait d'une telle réduction mais uniquement dans le cas de déclaration de culpabilité prononcée par un tribunal disciplinaire en raison d'une infraction à la discipline ou de déclaration de culpabilité prononcée par un tribunal criminel en raison d'une infraction relative à l'éva-entitled to the statutory remission standing to his credit unless forfeited in whole or in part pursuant to s. 22(3) or (4) of the Penitentiary Act. Section 25 of the Penitentiary Act does not apply to s. 16(1) of the Parole Act. Its purpose is only to define the term of imprisonment while the parolee is at large. The legislative history supports this conclusion. There was a provision for forfeiture of remission which was not carried forward when the Ticket of Leave Act was replaced by the Parole Act.

Per Pigeon J.: Under the law in force when appellant's parole was revoked the revocation did not involve forfeiture of statutory remission standing to his credit.

Per Martland, Judson, Ritchie and de Grandpré JJ., dissenting: For the reasons given by Martin J.A. in the Court of Appeal, with which Gale C.J.O. agreed, the appeal should be dismissed.

[Re Morin (1968), 66 W.W.R. 566; R. v. Howden [1974] 2 W.W.R. 461; Ex parte Hilson (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 343; Re Abbott (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 147; Ex parte Kolot (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 417; Ex parte Rae (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 5, referred to.]

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario[1] allowing an appeal pursuant to s. 719 of the Criminal Code from a judgment of Henderson J.[2] releasing the appellant on a habeas corpus application. Appeal allowed, Martland, Judson, Ritchie and de Grandpré JJ. dissenting.

R. R. Price, and A. D. Gold, for the appellant.

A. C. Pennington, and P. Evraine, for the respondents.

[1] (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 114.
[2] (1973), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 441.

sion ou à la tentative d'évasion. Même dans ces cas, le retrait demeure sujet à certaines réserves et à certains contrôles quant à sa portée. Un détenu dont la libération conditionnelle octroyée a été révoquée doit donc purger la partie de sa peine qui n'était pas encore expirée au moment de l'octroi de sa libération mais il a droit à la réduction statutaire de peine inscrite à son crédit au moment de sa réception à un pénitencier, à moins qu'il n'y ait eu déchéance en tout ou en partie conformément aux par. (3) et (4) de l'art. 22 de la Loi sur les pénitenciers. L'article 25 de cette même loi ne s'applique pas au par. (1) de l'art. 16 de la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus. L'article 25 traite seulement des fins de la loi relative à la libération conditionnelle alors que le libéré conditionnel est en liberté. L'historique de la législation appuie la conclusion ci-dessus. Lorsque la loi antérieure a été remplacée par la loi actuelle sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus, on n'a pas reproduit une disposition qui prévoyait l'annulation de toute remise de peine antérieurement gagnée.

Le juge Pigeon: Suivant le droit en vigueur lorsque la libération conditionnelle de l'appelant a été révoquée, la révocation n'a pas entraîné la déchéance de la réduction statutaire de peine inscrite à son crédit.

Les juges Martland, Judson, Ritchie et de Grandpré, dissidents: Pour les motifs énoncés par le juge d'appel Martin en Cour d'appel, motifs auxquels le juge en chef de l'Ontario, le juge Gale, a souscrit, le pourvoi devrait être rejeté.

[Arrêts mentionnés: Re Morin (1968), 66 W.W.R. 566; R. v. Howden, [1974] 2 W.W.R. 461; Ex parte Hilson (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 343; Re Abbott (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 147; Ex parte Kolot (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 417; Ex parte Rae (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 5.]

POURVOI interjeté à l'encontre d'un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario[1] qui a accueilli un appel interjeté en conformité des dispositions de l'art. 719 du Code criminel à l'encontre d'un jugement du juge Henderson[2] libérant l'appelant à la suite de sa demande d'habeas corpus. Pourvoi accueilli, les juges Martland, Judson, Ritchie et de Grandpré étant dissidents.

R. R. Price et A. D. Gold, pour l'appelant.

A. C. Pennington et P. Evraine, pour les intimés.

[1] (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 114.
[2] (1973), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 441.

The judgment of The Chief Justice and Spence, Dickson and Beetz JJ. was delivered by DICKSON J.—In my view this appeal should succeed. The issue is whether a paroled inmate whose parole was revoked on August 29, 1968, thereby lost his entitlement to statutory remission standing to his credit at the time of his release on parole. The resolution of the issue depends on the proper construction, as of that date (the legislation having since been amended), of s. 22(1), (3), (4), s. 24 and s. 25 of the Penitentiary Act, 1960-61 (Can.), c. 53, reading:

22. (1) Every person who is sentenced or committed to penitentiary for a fixed term shall, upon being received into a penitentiary, be credited with statutory remission amounting to one-quarter of the period for which he has been sentenced or committed as time off subject to good conduct.

. . .

(3) Every inmate who, having been credited with remission pursuant to subsection (1) or (2), is convicted in disciplinary court of any disciplinary offence is liable to forfeit, in whole or in part, the statutory remission that remains to his credit, but no such forfeiture of more than thirty days shall be valid without the concurrence of the Commissioner, nor more than ninety days without the concurrence of the Minister.

(4) Every inmate who is convicted by a criminal court of the offence of escape or attempt to escape forthwith forfeits three-quarters of the statutory remission standing to his credit at the time that offence was committed.

24. Every inmate may, in accordance with the regulations, be credited with three days' remission of his sentence in respect of each calendar month during which he has applied himself industriously to his work, and any remission so earned is not subject to forfeiture for any reason.

25. Where, under the Parole Act, authority is granted to an inmate to be at large during his term of imprisonment, the term of imprisonment, for all purposes of that Act, includes any period of statutory remission standing to his credit when he is released but does not include any period of earned remission standing to his credit at that time.

Le jugement du Juge en chef et des juges Spence, Dickson et Beetz a été rendu par

LE JUGE DICKSON—A mon avis, le présent appel devrait être accueilli favorablement. La question en litige est de savoir si un libéré conditionnel dont la libération a été révoquée le 29 août 1968, a ainsi perdu son droit à la réduction statutaire de peine inscrite à son crédit au moment de sa mise en liberté conditionnelle. La solution du litige dépend de la juste interprétation des par. (1), (3) et (4) de l'art. 22, de l'art. 24 et de l'art. 25 de la Loi sur les pénitenciers, 1960-61, (Can.) c. 53, tels qu'ils existaient alors (la loi ayant été depuis modifiée),et qui se lisent comme suit:

22. (1) Quiconque est condamné ou envoyé au pénitencier pour une période déterminée doit, dès sa réception à un pénitencier, bénéficier d'une réduction statutaire de peine équivalant au quart de la période pour laquelle il a été condamné ou envoyé au pénitencier, à titre de remise de peine sous réserve de bonne conduite.

. . .

(3) Chaque détenu qui, ayant bénéficié d'une réduction de peine conformément au paragraphe (1) ou (2), est déclaré coupable devant un tribunal disciplinaire d'une infraction à la discipline encourt la déchéance, en tout ou en partie, de son droit à la réduction statutaire de peine inscrite à son crédit, mais une telle déchéance ne peut être valide à l'égard de plus de trente jours sans l'assentiment du commissaire, ni à l'égard de plus de quatre-vingt-dix jours sans l'assentiment du Ministre.

(4) Chaque détenu déclaré coupable par un tribunal criminel de l'infraction d'évasion ou de tentative d'évasion est immédiatement déchu de son droit aux trois quarts de la réduction statutaire de peine, inscrite à son crédit au moment où l'infraction a été commise.

24. Chaque détenu peut, en conformité avec les règlements, bénéficier d'une réduction de peine de trois jours pour chaque mois civil durant lequel il s'est adonné assidûment à son travail et toute semblable réduction de peine ainsi méritée n'est pas susceptible d'annulation pour quelque motif que ce soit.

25. Lorsque, en vertu de la Loi sur les libérations conditionnelles, il est accordé à un détenu l'autorisation d'être en liberté pendant la période de son emprisonnement, la durée de l'emprisonnement comprend, à toutes les fins de cette loi, les périodes de réduction statutaire de peine inscrites à son crédit lorsqu'il est mis en liberté mais ne comprend pas une période quelconque de réduction de peine méritée alors inscrite à son crédit.

and of s. 16(1) of the Parole Act, 1958 (Can.), c. 38, reading:

16. (1) Where the parole granted to an inmate has been revoked, he shall be recommitted to the place of confinement to which he was originally committed to serve the sentence in respect of which he was granted parole, to serve the portion of his original term of imprisonment that remained unexpired at the time his parole was granted.

This Court has had the benefit, if I may say so, of two excellent judgments delivered in the Court of Appeal for Ontario, one by Mr. Justice Martin with whom Chief Justice Gale agreed, the other by Mr. Justice Estey. Mr. Justice Martin concluded that the appellant, upon revocation of his parole, was not entitled to the benefit of statutory remission standing to his credit at the time of his release on parole. Mr. Justice Estey, for reasons which I find persuasive, reached the opposite conclusion.

Section 22 of the Penitentiary Act contains, in my opinion, an entire code governing the grant and the forfeiture of statutory remission. Every person sentenced to penitentiary for a fixed term is entitled as of right to be credited with statutory remission, "upon being received into a penitentiary". With great respect for those holding the contrary view, I cannot find in the language of s. 22 any substantial support for the contention that the statutory remission assured by s. 22(1) is a deferred credit which does not accrue to the inmate until such time as statutory remission, earned remission and time served equal the length of the sentence. It seems to me from s. 22(3) and (4) that the credit of statutory remission upon entering penitentiary is a real and immediate entitlement and not an elusive expectation, for one cannot forfeit what one does not have. It is true that the time off for which s. 22(1) provides is subject to good conduct but the conduct giving rise to forfeiture of remission credited, indeed the only conduct which the Penitentiary Act recognizes expressly as giving rise to forfeiture, is that spelled out in s. 22(3), conviction in a disciplinary court for a disciplinary offence, and in s. 22(4), escape or attempted escape. Parenthetically it may be observed that no forfeiture under s. 22(3) of more ainsi que du par. (1) de l'art. 16 de la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus, 1958 (Can.) c. 38, et qui se lit comme suit:

16. (1) Lorsque la libération conditionnelle octroyée à un détenu a été révoquée, celui-ci doit être envoyé de nouveau au lieu d'incarcération où il a été originairement condamné à purger la sentence à l'égard de laquelle il s'est vu octroyer la libération conditionnelle, afin qu'il y purge la partie de sa période originaire d'emprisonnement qui n'était pas encore expirée au moment de l'octroi de cette libération.

Cette Cour a pu profiter, si je puis m'exprimer ainsi, de deux excellents jugements rendus en Cour d'appel de l'Ontario, l'un par M. le juge Martin, auquel le juge en chef Gale a souscrit, l'autre par M. le juge Estey. M. le juge Martin a conclu que l'appelant, lorsque sa libération conditionnelle a été révoquée, n'avait pas le droit de bénéficier de la réduction statutaire inscrite à son crédit au moment de sa mise en liberté conditionnelle. M. le juge Estey, se fondant sur des motifs que je trouve convaincants, en est arrivé à la conclusion opposée.

A mon avis, l'art. 22 de la Loi sur les pénitenciers constitue un code complet régissant l'octroi et le retrait de la réduction statutaire. Quiconque est condamné au pénitencier pour une période déterminée a le droit de bénéficier d'une réduction statutaire, «dès sa réception à un pénitencier». Avec le plus grand respect pour ceux qui soutiennent le point de vue opposé, je ne puis trouver dans le texte de l'art. 22 aucun fondement réel à la prétention que la réduction statutaire garantie par le par. (1) de l'art. 22 est un crédit différé qui ne peut profiter au détenu avant que la période de réduction statutaire, la période de réduction de peine méritée et la période de la sentence purgée, n'équivalent à la durée de la sentence. Il me semble qu'il découle des par. (3) et (4) de l'art. 22 que le crédit de réduction statutaire, dès l'admission au pénitencier, est un droit véritable et immédiat et non une probabilité, car on ne peut retirer à quelqu'un ce qu'il n'a pas. Il est vrai que la réduction de peine prévue par le par. (1) de l'art. 22 est subordonnée à la bonne conduite, mais la conduite qui peut entraîner le retrait de la réduction de peine créditée, la seule conduite que la Loi sur les pénitenciers reconnaît de façon expresse comme pouvant entraîner la déchéance, est celle énoncée au par. (3) de l'art. 22, soit être déclaré than thirty days is valid without the concurrence of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries, nor more than ninety days without the concurrence of the Minister of Justice, and that an escape or attempt to escape results in forfeiture of three-quarters of the statutory remission standing to the credit of the inmate; yet if the contentions of the respondent are correct, a person whose parole has been revoked loses the entire statutory remission to his credit at the time of revocation. Parole may be suspended whenever a member of the Board or any person designated by the Board is satisfied that the arrest of the inmate is necessary or desirable in order to prevent a breach of any term or condition of the parole, and may be revoked in the untrammelled discretion of the Board.

Turning to s. 16 of the Parole Act, where parole has been revoked the inmate is recommitted to serve the portion of his original term of imprisonment that remained unexpired at the time his parole was granted. If, as I conceive it, the statutory remission is truly credited upon the person being received into a penitentiary, then, unless forfeited in whole or in part pursuant to s. 22(3) or (4) of the Penitentiary Act, that credit must be taken into account in computing the unexpired portion of the original term of imprisonment.

The difficulty to which the legislation has given rise would seem to originate in s. 25 of the Penitentiary Act and more particularly in the words "for all purposes of that Act", i.e., the Parole Act. The argument briefly is that for all purposes of the Parole Act the term of imprisonment of an inmate released on parole includes any period of statutory remission standing to his credit when he is released. In my opinion s. 25 of the Penitentiary coupable devant un tribunal disciplinaire d'une infraction à la discipline, et au par. (4) de l'art. 22, soit l'évasion ou la tentative d'évasion. On peut remarquer entre parenthèses qu'en vertu du par. (3) de l'art. 22, aucune déchéance n'est valide à l'égard de plus de trente jours sans l'assentiment du commissaire des pénitenciers ni à l'égard de plus de quatre-vingt-dix jours sans l'assentiment du ministre de la Justice et qu'une évasion ou une tentative d'évasion entraîne la déchéance du droit aux trois quarts de la réduction statutaire de peine inscrite au crédit du détenu; malgré cela, si les prétentions de l'intimé sont justifiées, une personne dont la libération conditionnelle est révoquée perd la totalité de la réduction statutaire de peine inscrite à son crédit au moment de la révocation. La libération conditionnelle peut être suspendue toutes les fois qu'un membre de la Commission, ou une personne désignée par celle-ci, est convaincu que l'arrestation du détenu est nécessaire ou souhaitable en vue d'empêcher la violation d'une modalité de la libération conditionnelle et elle peut être révoquée à la discrétion absolue de la Commission.

Passons à l'art. 16 de la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus, selon lequel lorsque la libération conditionnelle octroyée à un détenu a été révoquée, celui-ci doit purger la partie de sa période originaire d'emprisonnement qui n'était pas encore expirée au moment de l'octroi de sa libération. Si, comme je le conçois, la réduction statutaire est véritablement créditée au détenu dès sa réception à un pénitencier, alors, à moins qu'il n'y ait eu déchéance en tout ou en partie conformément aux par. (3) et (4) de l'art. 22 de la Loi sur les pénitenciers, on doit tenir compte de ce crédit en calculant la partie de la période originaire d'emprisonnement qui n'est pas expirée.

Les problèmes qu'ont suscités les textes législatifs semblent découler de l'art. 25 de la Loi sur les pénitenciers et plus particulièrement des mots «à toutes les fins de cette loi», c.-à-d., la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus. Brièvement, la prétention est qu'à toutes les fins de la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus, la durée de l'emprisonnement d'un détenu en liberté conditionnelle comprend toute période de réduction statu-

Act does not apply to s. 16(1) of the Parole Act. The Parole Act empowers the Board to review the cases of inmates, grant parole where the Board considers that reform and rehabilitation will be aided by the grant of parole, and revoke parole where necessary. The length of the remaining term on the recommitment is a consequence of the revocation; it does not appear to be a purpose of the enactment. It should be noted also that the only section of the Parole Act purporting to touch upon sentence is s. 18 (whipping) which is significantly found under a different heading "Additional Jurisdiction". It is not one of the purposes of the Parole Act to effect changes in sentences. Mr. Justice Martin finds that revocation generally is the partial purpose of the Act and that the additional loss of statutory remission is further incentive to abide by the parole conditions. But as intimated by Mr. Justice Estey, the loss of liberty and the necessity of re-serving parole time are sufficient incentives to the parolee without the added burden of loss of statutory remission. Mr. Justice Estey also draws attention to the disincentive to parole which would be created if the potential parolee were faced with the prospect of losing all statutory remission referable to time served in the event his parole is revoked.

In determining whether s. 25 of the Penitentiary Act affects s. 16(1) of the Parole Act, the words "where ... authority is granted ... to be at large ...." must be given effect. Section 25 is confined to the purposes of the parole legislation while the parolee is at large. This is understandable. The purpose is to ensure an extended period of supervision while at large and also, when the authorities taire de peine inscrite à son crédit lorsqu'il est mis en liberté. A mon avis, l'art. 25 de la Loi sur les pénitenciers ne s'applique pas au par. (1) de l'art. 16 de la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus. La Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus donne à la Commission le pouvoir d'examiner les cas des détenus, d'accorder la liberté conditionnelle si la Commission considère que l'octroi de la libération conditionnelle facilitera le redressement et la réhabilitation, et de révoquer la libération conditionnelle si nécessaire. La durée de la période d'emprisonnement que le détenu a à purger lorsqu'il est incarcéré de nouveau est une conséquence de la révocation; elle n'apparaît pas être une des fins visées par la loi. Il faudrait également remarquer que le seul article de la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus visant la question de la sentence est l'art. 18 (peine de fouet) qui, de façon significative, se retrouve sous un en-tête différent «Juridiction additionnelle». Ce n'est pas l'une des fins de la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus de modifier les sentences. M. le juge Martin conclut que généralement la révocation est partiellement la fin de la Loi et que la perte additionnelle de la réduction statutaire est une incitation supplémentaire à se conformer aux conditions de la libération. Mais comme le donne à entendre M. le juge Estey, la perte de liberté et l'obligation de purger à nouveau la partie de la peine passée en libération conditionnelle sont des incitations suffisantes pour le libéré conditionnel sans qu'il soit nécessaire d'y ajouter le fardeau de la perte de réduction statutaire. M. le juge Estey a également fait remarquer qu'on pourrait créer un désintéressement pour la libération conditionnelle si les libérés conditionnels éventuels étaient placés dans la perspective de perdre tous leurs droits à la réduction statutaire acquise pour la période purgée en prison au cas où leur libération conditionnelle est révoquée.

Pour déterminer si l'art. 25 de la Loi sur les pénitenciers touche le par. (1) de l'art. 16 de la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus, il faut donner un effet aux mots «lorsque ... il est accordé ... l'autorisation d'être en liberté ...». L'article 25 traite seulement des fins de la loi relative à la libération conditionnelle alors que le libéré conditionnel est en liberté. Ceci est compré-contemplate revocation of a parole, they must know the date on which the sentence expires (vide ss. 11 and 12 of the Parole Act). The relevant sections speak in terms of "inmate", defined by s. 2 as a person under "sentence of imprisonment". Section 25 of the Penitentiary Act supplies the required definition of this "term of imprisonment". I conclude that s. 16(1) is quite independent of and unaffected by s. 25.

The legislative history supports the foregoing conclusion. If one examines the Penitentiary Act R.S.C. 1952, c. 206, s. 69, it will be seen that provision was made there for a convict earning remission not exceeding six days for every month of good conduct and in addition, when the convict had at his credit seventy-two days of remission, he might be allowed, for every subsequent month during which his conduct and industry were satisfactory, ten days' remission per month. Subsection (4) of s. 69 then provided:

(4) Every convict who escapes, attempts to escape, breaks prison, attempts to break prison, breaks out of his cell, or makes any breach therein with intent to escape, or assaults any officer or servant of the penitentiary, or being the holder of a licence under the Ticket of Leave Act, forfeits such licence, shall forfeit the whole of the remission which he has earned. (Emphasis added)

A licence under the Ticket of Leave Act was the equivalent of parole, 1958 (Can.), c. 38, s. 24. The significance of the earlier legislation, in my opinion, lies in the fact that under that legislation there was express provision for forfeiture of remission on forfeiture of a licence under the Ticket of Leave Act, but when the legislation was changed and the present ss. 22 to 25 of the Penitentiary Act were enacted, the provision was not carried forward into the new legislation. It is, therefore, I think, fair to conclude that Parliament did not intend any forfeiture by ss. 22 to 25 of the new legislation and that nothing in these sections affects the plain and hensible. L'article vise à étendre la période de surveillance du détenu pendant qu'il est en liberté et aussi, lorsque les autorités envisagent la révocation d'une libération conditionnelle, ils doivent connaître la date de l'expiration de la sentence (vide art. 11 et 12 de la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus). Les articles pertinents traitent du «détenu», tel que défini à l'art. 2, désignant une personne «condamnée à une peine d'emprisonnement». L'article 25 de la Loi sur les pénitenciers fournit la définition requise de cette «période d'emprisonnement». J'en conclus que le par. (1) de l'art. 16 est tout à fait indépendant de l'art. 25 et qu'il n'est pas visé par ce dernier.

L'historique de la législation appuie la conclusion ci-dessus. Si l'on examine la Loi sur les pénitenciers, S.R.C. 1952, c. 206, art. 69, on verra qu'on y dispose qu'un détenu peut gagner une remise de peine n'excédant pas six jours pour chaque mois de bonne conduite et qu'en plus, lorsque le détenu a à son crédit une remise de peine de soixante-douze jours, il peut obtenir pour chaque mois subséquent durant lequel il continue à donner satisfaction par sa conduite et son application une remise de dix jours pour chaque mois qui suit. Le par. (4) de l'art. 69 prescrit ensuite:

(4) Tout détenu qui s'évade, tente de s'évader, effectue ou tente un bris de prison, s'échappe par bris de sa cellule, ou fait à sa cellule quelque dégradation dans le but de s'échapper, ou qu'il se livre à des voies de fait sur un fonctionnaire ou préposé du pénitencier, ou qui, étant porteur d'un permis prévu par la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle, est déchu de ce permis, perd toute la remise de peine par lui gagnée. (Les soulignés sont de moi)

Un permis octroyé selon la Loi sur les libérations conditionnelles équivalait à une libération conditionnelle, 1958 (Can.), c. 38, art. 24. L'importance du texte législatif antérieur réside, à mon avis, dans le fait que dans ce texte législatif il y avait une disposition expresse relative à la perte de remise de peine dans le cas de déchéance du permis octroyé en vertu de la Loi sur les libérations conditionnelles mais lorsque la loi a été modifiée et que les présents art. 22 à 25 de la Loi sur les pénitenciers ont été adoptés, la disposition n'a pas été reproduite dans la nouvelle loi. Par conséquent, je pense qu'il est juste de conclure que ordinary meaning of the words used in s. 16(1) of the Parole Act (the earlier counterpart of which was s. 9(1) of the Ticket of Leave Act).

Even if I were to conclude that the relevant statutory provisions were ambiguous and equivocal—a conclusion one could reach without difficulty on reading Re Morin[3], R. v. Howden[4], Ex Parte Hilson[5], Re Abbott[6], and then reading Ex Parte Kolot[7] and Ex Parte Rae[8]—I would have to find for the appellant in this case. It is unnecessary to emphasize the importance of clarity and certainty when freedom is at stake. No authority is needed for the proposition that if real ambiguities are found, or doubts of substance arise, in the construction and application of a statute affecting the liberty of a subject, then that statute should be applied in such a manner as to favour the person against whom it is sought to be enforced. If one is to be incarcerated, one should at least know that some Act of Parliament requires it in express terms, and not, at most, by implication.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal and reinstate the judgment of Henderson J.

The judgment of Martland, Judson, Ritchie and de Grandpré JJ. was delivered by MARTLAND J. (dissenting)—I agree with the reasons given by Martin J.A. in the Court of Appeal, with which Gale C.J.O. agreed. I would dismiss this appeal.

PIGEON J.—I agree with Dickson J.'s conclusion on his view that under the law in force when appellant's parole was revoked this did not involve

[3] (1968), 66 W.W.R. 566.
[4] [1974] 2 W.W.R. 461.
[5] (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 343.
[6] (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 147.
[7] (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 417.
[8] (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 5.

le Parlement n'a pas voulu inclure aucune mesure de déchéance dans les art. 22 à 25 de la nouvelle loi et que rien dans ces articles ne peut toucher le sens clair et ordinaire des mots employés au par. (1) de l'art. 16 de la Loi sur la libération conditionnelle de détenus (dont le par. (1) de l'art. 9 de la Loi sur les libérations conditionnelles était antérieurement l'équivalent).

Même si je devais conclure que les dispositions pertinentes sont ambiguës et équivoques—une conclusion à laquelle on peut arriver sans difficulté en lisant les arrêts Re Morin[3], R. v. Howden[4], Ex Parte Hilson[5], Re Abbott[6], et en lisant ensuite Ex Parte Kolot[7], et Ex Parte Rae[8]—je devrais conclure en faveur de l'appelant en l'espèce. Il n'est pas nécessaire d'insister sur l'importance de la clarté et de la certitude lorsque la liberté est en jeu. Il n'est pas besoin de précédent pour soutenir la proposition qu'en présence de réelles ambiguïtés ou de doutes sérieux dans l'interprétation et l'application d'une loi visant la liberté d'un individu, l'application de la loi devrait alors être favorable à la personne contre laquelle on veut exécuter ses dispositions. Si quelqu'un doit être incarcéré, il devrait au moins savoir qu'une loi du Parlement le requiert en des termes explicites, et non pas, tout au plus, par voie de conséquence.

Je serais d'avis d'accueillir l'appel, d'infirmer l'arrêt de la Cour d'appel et de rétablir le jugement du juge Henderson.

Le jugement des juges Martland, Judson, Ritchie et de Grandpré a été rendu par

LE JUGE MARTLAND (dissident)—Je souscris aux motifs énoncés par le juge d'appel Martin en Cour d'appel, motifs auxquels le juge en chef de l'Ontario, le juge Gale, a souscrit. Je suis d'avis de rejeter cet appel.

LE JUGE PIGEON—Je souscris à la conclusion du juge Dickson en adoptant son avis que, suivant le droit en vigueur lorsque la libération condition-

[3] (1968), 66 W.W.R. 566.
[4] [1974] 2 W.W.R. 461.
[5] (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 343.
[6] (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 147.
[7] (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 417.
[8] (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 5.

forfeiture of statutory remission standing to his credit.

Appeal allowed, MARTLAND, JUDSON, RITCHIE and DE GRANDPRÉ JJ. dissenting.

Solicitors for the appellant: Pomerant, Pomerant & Greenspan, Toronto and R. R. Price, Kingston.

Solicitor for the respondent: The Deputy Attorney General, Ottawa.

nelle de l'appelant a été révoquée, la révocation n'a pas entraîné la déchéance de la réduction statutaire de peine inscrite à son crédit.

Appel accueilli, les JUGES MARTLAND, JUDSON, RITCHIE et DE GRANDPRÉ étaient dissidents.

Procureurs de l'appelant: Pomerant, Pomerant & Greenspan, Toronto; R. R. Price, Kingston.

Procureur des intimés: Le sous-procureur général, Ottawa.

Re McINTYRE PORCUPINE MINES Ltd. and MORGAN.

Ontario Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Meredith, C.J.O., Magee, Hodgins, and Ferguson, JJ.A. January 31, 1921.

Ont.

App. Div.

McINTYRE PORCUPINE MINES LIMITED AND MORGAN.

Meredith,C.J.O.

McGregor Young, K.C., for appellants.
R. S. Robertson and J. Y. Murdoch, for respondents.

MEREDITH, C.J.O.:—The main question for decision is as to the meaning of sub-sec. 4 of sec. 40 of the Assessment Act, R.S.O. 1914, ch. 195, and there is a subsidiary question as to the liability of the respondents to business assessment in respect of part of their operations. Sub-section 4 provides that:—

"(4) The buildings, plant and machinery in, on or under mineral land, and used mainly for obtaining minerals from the ground, or storing the same, and concentrators and sampling plant, and, subject to sub-section 8, the minerals in, on or under such land, shall not be assessable."

Sub-section 8 does not affect the question: it relates only to cases in which petroleum mineral rights have been reserved.

The policy of the Legislature, as indicated by its enactments, is to impose a provincial tax on the profits of mines in excess of a stated sum: The Mining Tax Act, R.S.O. 1914, ch. 26, sec. 5. These profits are ascertained and fixed in the following manner, "that is to say: The gross receipts from the year's output of the mine, or in case the ore, mineral or mineral-bearing substance or any part thereof is not sold, but is treated by or for the owner, tenant, holder, lessee, occupier, or operator of the mine upon the premises or elsewhere, then the actual market value of the output, at the pit's mouth, or if there is no means of ascertaining the market value, or if there is no established market price or value, the value of the same as appraised by the Mine Assessor, shall be ascertained . . . " (sub-sec. 3).

From the value thus ascertained, certain deductions, which it is not necessary to mention, are to be made.

Section 14 provides that where the mine-owner has to pay a municipal tax on income derived from the mine it is to be deducted from the amount of the provincial tax payable by him.

By the provisions of the Assessment Act, sec. 40 (6), "the income from a mine or mineral work shall be assessed by, and the tax leviable thereon shall be paid to the municipality in which such mine or mineral work is situate;" but "no income tax shall be payable to any municipality upon a mine or mineral work liable to taxation under section 5 of the Mining Tax Act, in excess of . . . one-third . . . of the tax payable in respect of annual profits from such mine or mineral work under the provisions of the said section and amendments thereto" (sec. 40 (9)).

I see no reason for confining the operation of these sub-sections to income derived from the mineral according to its value when brought to the surface. In my opinion, they extend to the income derived from the mining operations, including the crushing, reducing, smelting, refining, and treating of the ore. See the Mining Tax Act, sec. 5 (3), and the Mining Act of Ontario, R.S.O. 1914, ch. 32, sec. 2 (k).

If I am right in this view, the mining business is not subject to a business tax. The business tax was substituted for a tax on income, as to the businesses in respect of which that tax is imposed, but in the case of mines the Legislature had left them to be taxed on the income from them. This is clear, I think—otherwise a person engaged in the mining business would be doubly taxed for the same thing.

It is true that the annual profits of a mine for the purposes of sec. 5 of the Mining Tax Act are the value of the output at the pit's mouth, subject to certain deductions for the expenses incurred in winning the ore; but there is no such provision in the Assessment Act, and what is taxable under it is "the income from" the "mine."

This has no bearing on the main question for decision; it applies only to the contention that the respondents are liable for business tax in respect of a part of their operations. The solution of the main question depends upon the meaning to be attached to the word "concentrators" as used in sub-sec. 4.

The proper conclusion upon the evidence is, I think, that the Ont.

App. Div.
RE McINTYRE PORCUPINE MINES LIMITED AND MORGAN.
Meredith, C.J.O

word has no scientific or technical meaning, but is a colloquial expression signifying a process for separating metal from the rock or dross in which it is found. I see no reason for confining it to a mechanical process. All the processes in use by the respondents are designed to produce the same result—the separation of the valuable mineral from the dross—and the concentration that takes place is the concentration of this valuable mineral by the separation of it from the dross. It is rather a process of separation than of concentration, though the latter is the name that has been given to it.

To give effect to the contention of the appellants would mean the penalising of the operators of mines producing low grade ore. With that class of ore, as I understood the evidence, it is necessary for commercial success to combine chemical with mechanical means for the separation of the valuable mineral from the dross, and the result would be that the buildings and plant used for that purpose would be liable to municipal taxation, from which, in the case of richer ore where the mechanical process sufficed, the buildings and plant would be exempt.

I rest my judgment upon this branch of the case on the ground that any process the purpose of which is the separation of the valuable mineral from the dross is a concentrating process, and that the building and plant used for that purpose is, within the meaning of sub-sec. 4, a concentrator.

I would dismiss the appeals with costs.

MAGEE and FERGUSON, JJ.A., agreed with MEREDITH, C.J.O.

HODGINS, J.A.:—The Ontario Railway and Municipal Board have reached a conclusion in this case that should not be disturbed. Their finding that the buildings, machinery, and appliances which had been assessed both by the local assessor and by the District Court Judge, under the designation of "concentrators," are not subject to taxation, is the view taken by the Court of Revision, and is in accord with what I take to be the true meaning of the statute.

The sole point of difference seems to be that the Board gave a wider meaning to the descriptive term "Concentrators" than does the District Court Judge, who limits its scope to mechanical means of concentration. Undoubtedly the word in question was originally sometimes confined, as evidenced by what I mention below, to the meaning adopted by the learned Judge. But it does not in itself involve any such limited idea, and must therefore be construed so as to include that which, in the march of progress, falls properly within its ordinary meaning. In Murray's New English Dictionary, vol. 2, published in 1893, "Concentrator" is defined as "an apparatus for concentrating solutions or other products of manufacture . . . An apparatus by which mechanical concentration of ores is performed." In the Encyclopædia Britannica, 11th ed., 1910-1911, vol. 20, at p. 238, "Ore-dressing" is defined thus: "The province of the ore-dresser is to separate the 'values' from the waste—for example, quartz, felspar, calcite—by mechanical means, obtaining thereby 'concentrates' and 'tailings.' The province of the metallurgist is to extract the pure metal from the concentrates by chemical means, with or without the aid of heat." But in similar and later works and in some of the earlier publications a more extended meaning is found. Thus in "The Americana" (a Universal Reference Library), last edition, 1911, "Concentration," in chemistry, is defined as "the act of increasing the strength of solutions. This is effected in different ways: by evaporating off the solvent, as is done in the separation of salt from sea-water; by distilling off the more volatile liquid, as in the rectification of spirit of wine; by the use of low temperatures, as in the purification of benzol; by difference of fusibility, as in Pattinson's process for desilverizing lead." In a "Thesaurus Dictionary of the English Language," by Francis A. March, published about 1902, under the head of "Chemistry," "Concentration forces" is defined as "Chemical forces or actions which reduce to one bulk or mass."

In Funk & Wagnall's New Standard Dictionary, 1913, "Concentrator" is said to mean, in mining, "a machine or device used to concentrate or separate ore;" while in the Century Dictionary, last edition (1913), "Concentrator" is thus spoken of: "In mining, the name frequently given, especially in the United States, to any complicated form of machine used in ore-dressing, or in separating the particles of ore or metal from the gangue or rock with which they are associated."

The rule laid down in the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1914,

Ont.

App. Div.

RE McINTYRE PORCUPINE MINES LIMITED AND MORGAN.

Hodgins, J.A.

ch. 1, sec. 10, is that statutes shall "receive such fair, large, and liberal construction and interpretation as will best ensure the attainment of the object of the Act, and of the provision or enactment, according to the true intent, meaning and spirit thereof." It is therefore open to the Court to adopt the larger or later meaning of the word in question, if it be true, as I think it is, that the Assessment Act in this particular aims at exempting such means as may be adopted at the mining location to aid in the concentration of the ore-mass, even if that progresses to the point of using chemical means as well as those mechanical, and in so doing draws within its scope some part of what may be alternatively described as amalgamation or reduction: see Attorney-General v. Salt Union Limited, [1917] 2 K.B. 488, per Lush, J. In this connection I refer to the language of Cozens-Hardy, M.R., in Camden (Marquis) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1914] 1 K.B. 641, at pp. 647 and 648: "The duty of this Court is to interpret and give full effect to the words used by the Legislature, and it seems to me really not revelant to consider what a particular branch of the public may or may not understand to be the meaning of those words. It is for the Court to interpret the statute as best they can. In so doing the Court may no doubt assist themselves in the discharge of their duty by any literary help which they can find, including of course the consultation of standard authors and reference to well-known and authoritative dictionaries, which refer to the sources in which the interpretation which they give to the words of the English language is to be found. But to say we ought to allow evidence to be given as to whether there is any such technical meaning, to be followed up, of course, by evidence as to what that special meaning is, would I think be going entirely contrary to that which seems to be the settled rule of interpretation."

There is one point, however, in the judgment of the Board to which attention should be drawn so as to avoid misconception in the future. It is that which treats the whole question as one of fact and as not embracing any question of law. It is only upon questions of law that an appeal lies to this Court; and, while care should be taken not to trench upon the final authority of the Board upon questions of fact, it is equally important that the limited right of review should not be ignored or diminished.

The construction of the words of any statutory enactment is a question of law, while the question of whether the particular matter or thing is of such a nature or kind as to fall within the legal definition of its terms is a question of fact: Elliott v. South Devon R.W. Co. (1848), 2 Ex. 725; Attorney-General for Canada v. Ritchie Contracting and Supply Co., [1919] A.C. 999, 48 D.L.R. 147. This distinction clearly runs through the decision of this Court in Re Hiram Walker & Sons Limited and Town of Walkerville (1917), 40 O.L.R. 154 where it is said (p. 156): "The case was argued by Mr. Anglin as if the legislation imposed taxation in respect of a 'distillery.' The question in such a case would be a very different one from that which arises when the taxation is in respect of 'the business of a distiller.' The Court cannot, I think, know judicially what such a business is, and the question of what it is must therefore be a question of fact."

The case just quoted is in line with the decision, upon somewhat similar words, in Re S. H. Knox & Co. Assessment (1909), 18 O.L.R 645. It is no doubt difficult to separate questions of law and fact in a case of this kind, where evidence which enables the Court to put itself in a position to construe the words of the Act is very often the same or practically the same as that which determines whether the statute covers the particular thing in question. But that is no reason for confusing two separate matters, in one of which an appeal lies and in the other the decision of the Board is final. See Re Bruce Mines Limited and Town of Bruce Mines, 20 O.L.R. 315, and the dissenting judgment of Meredith, J.A., in Re S. H. Knox & Co. Assessment, supra.

I would dismiss the appeals.

Appeals dismissed with costs.

Re Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and Paul Magder Furs Ltd. et al.

Indexed as: Metropolitan Toronto (Municipality) v. Paul Magder Furs Ltd.
(C.A.)

72 O.R. (2d) 155
[1990] O.J. No. 351
Action No. 804/89

ONTARIO
Court of Appeal
Morden, Grange and Carthy JJ.A.
March 8, 1990.

Statutes -- Interpretation -- Rules of interpretation -- Penal statutes -- Amendments to statute prohibiting opening of retail businesses on holidays but permitting municipal council to provide otherwise by by-law -- Providing for penalty for contravention of by-law -- Statute permitting Attorney-General or municipality to make application for order that businesses close on holidays to ensure compliance with Act or by-law -- Municipality entitled to seek order in absence of by-law -- Retail Business Holidays Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 453, ss. 2(1), 4(1), 7(2), 8(1), (2).

The Retail Business Holidays Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 453, was amended by S.O. 1989, c. 3. Of the amendments, s. 2(1) provides that no retail business may be open on a holiday; s. 4(1) allows a municipal council to enact a by-law to permit retail businesses to be open or closed on holidays; and s. 7(2) provides a penalty for contravention of such a by-law. The applicant municipality had not enacted a by-law, but applied under s. 8(1) of the Act for an order that the respondents close on Sundays. The section provides that the Attorney-General or a municipality may apply for such an order to ensure compliance with the Act or a by-law. Section 8(2) provides that the order is in addition to any other penalty that may be imposed. The application was dismissed at first instance on the ground that s. 8(1) was ambiguous and punitive.

On appeal, held, the appeal should be allowed.

By its plain wording, s. 8(1) permits either the Attorney-General or a municipality to make application for an order to enforce the Act. The fact that the municipality had not passed a by-law under s. 4(1) was irrelevant. A municipality does not need to enact a by-law in order to have the right accorded by s. 8(1).

Statutes referred to

Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 302, s. 103(1)
Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 314, s. 3(1)
Retail Business Holidays Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 453, ss. 2(1) [rep. & sub. 1989, c. 3, s. 2], 3 [am. 1986, c. 64, s. 62(12); 1987, c. 36, s. 1; 1989, c. 3, s. 3], 4(1) to (3) [rep. & sub. idem, s. 4], 7(1), (2) [rep. & sub. idem, s. 6], 8(1), (2) [rep. & sub. idem]

APPEAL from a judgment of Potts J., 71 O.R. (2d) 1, dismissing an application for an order that certain retail businesses close on Sundays.

George S. Monteith and Robert O. Avinoam, for appellant.

Timothy S.B. Danson and Julian N. Falconer, for respondent, Paul Magder Furs Ltd.

Hart Schwartz, for intervener, Attorney-General of Ontario.

BY THE COURT:-- The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto appeals from an order of Mr. Justice Potts dismissing its application under s. 8(1) of the Retail Business Holidays Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 453, as amended, for an order against the respondents that they close their retail business establishments operating in Metropolitan Toronto on Sundays, and for other similar relief. Section 8(1) reads:

> 8(1) Upon the application of counsel for the Attorney General or of a municipality to the Supreme Court, the court may order that a retail business establishment close on a holiday to ensure compliance with this Act or a by-law or regulation under this Act.

Potts J.'s reasons are reported at 71 O.R. (2d) 1. In dismissing the application he gave effect to a preliminary objection raised by the respondent Paul Magder Furs Limited that the municipality had no authority to bring the application since it had not passed a by-law under s. 4(1) of the Act with respect to closing on holidays.

In general terms, the scheme of the Act is as follows. Section 2(1) provides:

> 2(1) No person carrying on a retail business in a retail business establishment shall,
>
> (a) sell or offer for sale any goods or services therein by retail; or
>
> (b) admit members of the public thereto,
>
> on a holiday.

Section 3 then provides for several exemptions from the application of s. 2.

Section 4(1) provides:

> 4(1) Despite sections 2 and 3, the council of a municipality may by by-law permit retail business establishments to be open on any holiday or may require that retail business establishments be closed on any holiday.

Section 4(2) sets forth the procedural requirements relating to a by-law passed under s. 4(1).

Section 4(3) relates to territories without municipal organization. It provides:

> 4(3) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may by regulation, in respect of retail business establishments in territory without municipal organization, exercise the same powers that a council of a municipality may by by-law exercise under subsection (1).

Section 7(1) and (2) relate to offences under the legislation. They read:

> 7(1) Every person who contravenes section 2 or a regulation under section 4 is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable to a fine of not more than the greater of,
>
> (a) $50,000; or
>
> (b) the gross sales in the retail business establishment on the holiday on which the contravention occurred.
>
> (2) A by-law under subsection 4(1) requiring a retail business establishment to be closed on a holiday shall provide that any person who contravenes the by-law is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable to a fine of not more than the greater of,
>
> (a) $50,000; or
>
> (b) the gross sales in the retail business establishment on the holiday on which the contravention occurred.

Finally, s. 8(2) which relates to an order made under s. 8(1), provides:

> 8(2) An order under subsection (1) is in addition to any other penalty that may be imposed and may be made whether or not proceedings have been commenced in the Provincial Offences Court for a contravention of section 2 or of a by-law or regulation under this Act.

Potts J. was of the view that s. 8(1) was ambiguous and vague and, since it was punitive, he resolved the preliminary issue against the municipality.

With respect, we do not agree with his interpretation. In our view, in so far as it bears on the matters to be resolved in this proceeding, s. 8(1), in its own terms and in the context of the scheme of the Act, is not ambiguous or vague. By its plain wording s. 8(1) enables either the Attorney-General or a municipality to make an application for an order to ensure compliance with the Act, a by-law, or a regulation. Accepting this, we have no doubt that Metropolitan Toronto in the present case has the authority to make an application for an order that the Act be complied with within the confines of Metropolitan Toronto.

We need not consider what the power of the municipality might be with respect to ensuring compliance with the Act, or a regulation, outside the municipality. This would involve a consideration of the effect of s. 3(1) of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 314, which provides that "[e]xcept where otherwise provided, the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Council is confined to the municipality that it represents". Section 103(1) of the Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 302, is to the same effect with respect to municipalities generally. This question does not bear on the plain meaning of s. 8(1) with respect to its application in this case, nor does it incline us to the view that s. 8(1) should be read as confining the power of municipalities to that of ensuring compliance with its by-laws.

In coming to this conclusion we have taken into account the consideration referred to in Potts J.'s reasons that "traditionally" municipalities enforce only their own by-laws. It is clear that they are not confined to this if a statute confers additional powers on them.

The legal regime contemplated by ss. 2, 3 and 4 of the Act is such that we do not think it can be called exclusively provincial or exclusively municipal. Municipalities which do not enact by-laws under s. 4(1) may be taken to have accepted, within their confines, the regime of the Act. If they enact by-laws these may have the effect of modifying the Act to some extent but not completely supplanting it. With these considerations in mind we can appreciate the sense of conferring jurisdiction on each of the Attorney-General and the municipality to enforce both the Act and by-laws made under it.

We think there is much force in the submission that, if it were intended that municipalities enforce only their own by-laws, the grammatical structure of s. 8(1) would have been different and reflected this intention -- probably in the form of separate clauses for the Attorney-General's and municipalities' powers.

For these reasons, we allow the appeal, set aside the order of Potts J. and direct that the application be remitted for hearing by a judge of the Supreme Court. The costs of the application and of this appeal will be paid by the respondent Paul Magder Furs Limited to the appellant.

Appeal allowed.

2022 CAF 145, 2022 FCA 145
Federal Court of Appeal

Mohr v. National Hockey League

2022 CarswellNat 3155, 2022 CarswellNat 5078, 2022 CAF 145, 2022 FCA 145, 2022 A.C.W.S. 2108, 472 D.L.R. (4th) 431

KOBE MOHR (Appellant) and NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE, AMERICAN HOCKEY LEAGUE INC., ECHL INC., CANADIAN HOCKEY LEAGUE, QUEBEC MAJOR JUNIOR HOCKEY LEAGUE INC., ONTARIO HOCKEY LEAGUE, WESTERN CANADA HOCKEY LEAGUE AND HOCKEY CANADA (Respondents)

David Stratas, Donald J. Rennie, Anne L. Mactavish JJ.A.

Heard: January 12, 2022
Judgment: August 17, 2022
Docket: A-182-21

Proceedings: affirming Mohr v. National Hockey League (2021), 2021 CF 488, 2021 FC 488, 2021 CarswellNat 2810, 2021 CarswellNat 2809, Paul S. Crampton C.J. (F.C.)

Counsel: Edward J. Babin, Brendan Monahan for Appellant
Stephen J. Shamie, John C. Field, Sean M. Sells, Gabrielle Lemoine, Linda Plumpton for Respondent, National Hockey League
Jean-Michel Boudreau for Respondent, American Hockey League Inc.
Karine Chênevert, Alexander L. De Zordo for Respondent, ECHL Inc.
Eric C. Lefebvre, Christopher A. Guerreiro, Erika Woolgar for Respondents, Canadian Hockey League, Quebec Major Junior Hockey League Inc., Ontario Hockey League, Western Canada Hockey League
Casey Halladay, Akiva Stern for Respondent, Hockey Canada

Donald J. Rennie J.A.*:

Background

1 The Court is seized with two questions of statutory interpretation. The provisions in question are sections 45 and 48 of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34, the full text of which is found in Annex A to these reasons.

2 In broad terms, section 45 of the Competition Act prohibits conspiracies, agreements or arrangements between competitors to fix or maintain prices, allocate markets or customers, or restrict markets for the production or supply of a product. If established, the anti-competitive effect of the agreement is presumed, giving rise to both criminal sanctions and civil remedies.

3 Section 48 addresses conspiracies or arrangements in the context of professional sport. Again, in broad terms, section 48 prohibits agreements or arrangements which unreasonably limit the opportunities of a player to participate in professional sport, impose unreasonable terms on players, or unreasonably limit the ability of players to negotiate with and play with a team of their choice. The purpose of section 48 is to protect freedom of employment for players (John Barnes, The Law of Hockey (LexisNexis, 2010) at p. 322 [Barnes]). Like section 45, a breach of section 48 gives rise to criminal sanctions and civil remedies.

4 There are two key differences between conspiracies under sections 45 and 48. If established, a conspiracy under section 45 is deemed anti-competitive. In contrast, under section 48, a court must take certain matters into account before determining that a conspiracy has been established. This includes the desirability of maintaining a balance among teams competing in the same league. In effect, section 48 exempts certain agreements or arrangements made in the context of professional sport from the general prohibition against anti-competitive agreements in section 45 of the Competition Act.

5 The scope of these two provisions and their interrelationship lies at the heart of the interpretive questions before us.

6 The appellant commenced a class proceeding alleging that the respondents conspired, contrary to paragraphs 48(1)(a) and (b), to limit the opportunities of hockey players to play in Canadian major junior and professional hockey leagues. The appellant sought damages under paragraph 36(1)(a) of the Competition Act for economic losses suffered as a result of the alleged conspiracy.

7 The respondents moved to strike the appellant's statement of claim on the basis that it disclosed no reasonable cause of action. They argued that section 48 of the Act did not, and could not, apply to the facts as framed in the statement of claim.

8 In response to the motion to strike, the appellant moved to amend the statement of claim, adding an allegation of a conspiracy under section 45 of the Act. The notice of motion seeking leave to amend referred to "both intra- and interleague ... [conspiracies that] ... may perhaps be governed by one or the other of sections 45 and 48."

9 The Federal Court (per Crampton C.J., 2021 FC 488) found that it was plain and obvious that the appellant's claim did not disclose a cause of action under section 48. The Court also dismissed the motion for leave to amend to advance the claim under section 45 on the ground that the amendments did not plead a conspiracy within the scope of section 45.

10 In this context, questions of statutory interpretation are subject to a correctness standard of review, and I agree with the appellant that the Federal Court made errors (Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235; Hospira Healthcare Corporation v. Kennedy Institute of Rheumatology, 2016 FCA 215, [2017] 1 F.C.R. 331 at para. 72). The Court misunderstood its role on a motion to strike. There were also errors in the method of statutory interpretation; to be precise, in the use of extrinsic evidence on a motion to strike and the role of ambiguity in statutory interpretation. The Court also erred in its understanding of a component of subsection 48(3).

11 I will discuss these errors later. However, it is sufficient to note at this point that they are of no consequence. The result reached by the Federal Court was nevertheless correct and so I would dismiss the appeal.

12 The statement of claim, alleging as it does a conspiracy between leagues and between leagues and other organizations, has no reasonable prospect of success. The prohibition on anti-competitive arrangements in section 48 is limited to arrangements or agreements between clubs or teams in the same league. The proposed amended statement of claim, asserting as it does a conspiracy with respect to the purchase or acquisition of players' services, also has no reasonable prospect of success. The prohibition in section 45 is restricted to agreements or arrangements with respect to the supply or sale of products.

The interpretation of section 48

13 A statute is to be read in its entire context, in its grammatical and ordinary sense, harmonious with the scheme and object of the statute. Sometimes legislative history can shed light on the matter. When the words of a statute are unequivocal, the ordinary meaning plays a dominant role in the interpretative process (Canada Trustco Mortgage Co. v. Canada, 2005 SCC 54, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 601 at para. 10; Orphan Well Association v. Grant Thornton Ltd., 2019 SCC 5, [2019] 1 S.C.R. 150 at para. 88).

14 The Court's task is to discern the meaning of the words used by Parliament when it chose to enact its policy preferences. There is no room for the Court to inject its own policy preferences into the analysis. In this case, it is not for this Court to say whether section 48 is or is not a good thing. Our task is just to discern what Parliament chose to enact (TELUS Communications Inc. v. Wellman, 2019 SCC 19, [2019] 2 S.C.R. 144).

15 Section 48 cannot be read, consistent with these principles, to mean that the prohibitions against anti-competitive arrangements in subsection 48(1) apply to interleague conspiracies as pleaded in the statement of claim. To properly understand the scope of subsection 48(1) we must look to plain text of subsection 48(3) which reads as follows:

> (3) This section applies, and section 45 does not apply, to agreements and arrangements and to provisions of agreements and arrangements between or among teams and clubs engaged in professional sport as members of the same league and between or among directors, officers or employees of those teams and clubs where the agreements, arrangements and provisions relate exclusively to matters described in subsection (1) or to the granting and operation of franchises in the league, and section 45 applies and this section does not apply to all other agreements, arrangements and provisions thereof between or among those teams, clubs and persons.

(3) Le présent article s'applique et l'article 45 ne s'applique pas aux accords et arrangements et aux dispositions des accords et arrangements conclus entre des équipes et clubs qui pratiquent le sport professionnel à titre de membres de la même ligue et entre les administrateurs, les dirigeants ou les employés de ces équipes et clubs, lorsque ces accords, arrangements et dispositions se rapportent exclusivement à des sujets visés au paragraphe (1) ou à l'octroi et l'exploitation de franchises dans la ligue; toutefois, c'est l'article 45 et non le présent article qui s'applique à tous les autres accords, arrangements et dispositions d'accords ou d'arrangements conclus entre ces équipes, clubs et personnes.

16 The phrase "as members of the same league" must be given its plain, ordinary and otherwise clear meaning. The subsection also refers to "the granting and operation of franchises in the league ...". Coherence within the subsection is reinforced by understanding the phrase in its plain and ordinary sense. While there could be some discussion around the boundaries of what constitutes a "league", this point was not argued before us (Barnes at p. 322).

17 Subsection 48(3) allocates agreements and provisions "between or among teams and clubs...of the same league" that "relate exclusively to matters described in subsection 48" to "appl[y]" under section 48 only. Conversely, it allocates "all other agreements, arrangements and provisions thereof between or among those teams, clubs and persons" to section 45 only. Thus, subsection 48(3) evidences a clear parliamentary intention to avoid overlapping or conflicting applications of section 45 and 48. Every agreement or provisions must "appl[y]" under either section 45 or 48.

18 interleague agreements are not "between or among teams and clubs engaged in professional sport as members of the same league." Parliament clearly did not intend to apply two contradicting penal standards to interleague conspiracies. But if interleague agreements were caught by section 48, this is exactly what could happen. This demonstrates that Parliament did not intend to apply section 48 to interleague agreements.

19 Parliament was also consistent in the language and design of section 48. Paragraphs 48(2)(a) and (b) describe criteria to be considered in determining whether the prohibition against anti-competitive arrangements in subsection 48(1) has been violated. This includes, in paragraph 2(b) "the desirability of maintaining a reasonable balance among the teams or clubs participating in the same league" (emphasis added).

20 Two points may be said about this. First, consistent with subsection (3), the focus of paragraph (2)(b) is on teams "in the same league". The second is that paragraph (2)(b) would be redundant, if not nonsensical, if the scope of subsection 48(3) were widened to include other leagues and umbrella organizations such as the respondent Hockey Canada, as argued by the appellant. The rule against tautological interpretations would be breached (Ruth Sullivan, Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes, 6th ed. (Markham: LexisNexis, 2014) at § 8.23 [Sullivan]).

21 Other provisions in the Act support the conclusion that subsection 48(3) means what it says. Section 6 of the Competition Act addresses amateur sport. Subsection 6(1) states: "This Act does not apply in respect of agreements or arrangements between or among teams, clubs and leagues pertaining to participation in amateur sport."

22 By its terms, subsection 6(1) applies to both intra-league and interleague agreements, whereas subsection 48(3) references only intra-league agreements. By the choice of words "between or among" teams, clubs and leagues in subsection 6(1), Parliament demonstrated an understanding of the distinction between intra-league and interleague agreements. It chose in subsection 6(1) to reference both, and in subsection 48(3) to reference only intraleague agreements. The principle of implied exclusion or expressio unius est exclusio alterius is engaged: the legislature's failure to mention something can be a ground for inferring it was deliberately excluded (Sullivan at § 8.89-8.91).

23 To conclude, where the words are precise and unequivocal, as they are here, the ordinary meaning plays a dominant role in the interpretation. As I will explain, the arguments advanced by the appellant do not shake the conclusion that the conspiracy provisions of section 48, when given their ordinary meaning, are confined to intraleague agreements.

The appellant's arguments on the interpretation of section 48

24 The appellant contends that subsection 48(3) does not limit subsection 48(1) to intraleague conspiracies; rather, subsection 48(3) simply removes those types of conspiracies from the general conspiracy prohibition in section 45 and makes them subject to the mitigating considerations outlined in subsection 48(2). Consequently, "what has not been removed from section 45, namely conspiracies that are not confined to teams within a single league, remains within the purview of subsection 48(1)" (Reasons at para. 71).

25 This argument fails. I agree with the Federal Court when it concluded that to interpret subsection 48(1) in this manner would defeat the ordinary meaning of the language of subsection 48(3) which explicitly limits the application of section 48 to teams that are members of the same league. I also agree with the Federal Court that this interpretation would lead to an absurd bifurcation of the conspiracy provisions in the context of professional sport (Reasons at para. 74).

26 Next, the appellant argues that the Federal Court erred in its understanding of the requirement in subsection 48(3) that the agreement, arrangement or provision "relate exclusively to matters described in subsection (1)" (Competition Act, s. 48(3)). Here, I agree with the appellant that the Federal Court erred in striking the claim on the basis that allegations did not relate exclusively to the matters in subsection 48(1).

27 The general prohibition against conspiracies in subsection 48(1) is subject to a caveat in subsection 48(3), which requires that intraleague agreements, arrangements and provisions "relate exclusively to matters described in subsection (1)."

28 The aim of section 48 is to protect the economic freedom of hockey players (Barnes at pp. 322-24). To this end, section 48 identifies three behaviours that are anti-competitive: unreasonable limits on opportunities to participate (para. 48(1)(a)), unreasonable terms and conditions imposed on participants (para. 48(1)(a)), and unreasonable limits on the opportunity to negotiate with and play for the team of choice (para. 48(1)(b)). These are the anti-competitive practices to which the agreements or arrangements must relate exclusively.

29 The Federal Court referenced allegations in the statement of claim which, in its view, were beyond the remit of paragraphs 48(1)(a) and (b) and in so doing erred (Reasons at paras. 68, 70-75, 85).

30 A description of how the conspiracy works does not offend the requirement that the allegations "relate exclusively". The means are not to be confused with the effect. A description of the corporate, partnership and other organizations and the arrangements put in place by which the anti-competitive terms and conditions are imposed on the players does not fall within the scope of what must "relate exclusively". What must "relate exclusively" pertains to the asserted anti-competitive allegations. Concerns relating to the terms and conditions of the standard player agreement, including provisions for equipment, scholarships, travel (proposed amended statement of claim at para. 28.4), for training and development (at para. 47.5), provisions relating to trading of players, and consequences of non-performance all fall within the ambit of paragraphs 48(1)(a) or (b).

31 There remains a final argument raised by the appellant. He contends that the introductory words of subsection 48(1), which make it an offence for "[e]very one" to unlawfully conspire to limit the opportunities of players, demonstrate that Parliament intended to cast a wide net, including persons and corporations not part of the same league, but who or which have agreements with a league.

32 I do not agree. In the specific context of the Competition Act, "[e]very one" reflects Parliament's intention to make corporations, partnerships, individuals, leagues, clubs, teams, governing bodies, and umbrella organizations subject to the civil and criminal sanctions of the sports conspiracy provision. But the breadth of that word does not override subsection 48(3), where, by its plain terms, Parliament deliberately limited the sports conspiracy provision to intraleague agreements.

The interpretation of section 45

33 Section 45 applies where the anti-competitive agreement is between teams of different leagues or between umbrella organizations and teams or leagues. There is, however, an important caveat to the sweep of this provision. Section 45 is limited to agreements between competitors to fix prices or allocate markets relating to "the production or supply" of a product or a service — otherwise known as "sell-side" conspiracies.

34 The plain meaning of production or supply leads to the conclusion that section 45 is limited to conspiracies relating to the provision, sale and distribution of products or services. It stands in contrast to purchase and acquire. While, as noted by the Federal Court, there may be circumstances in which section 45 could capture purchasers, that is not in issue before us (Reasons at para. 43). As the proposed amended statement of claim describes a conspiracy relating to the terms and conditions under which the leagues and teams purchased or acquired services of the players, the allegation under section 45 has no hope of success (see, e.g., proposed amended statement of claim at para. 2.7).

35 This understanding of section 45 is confirmed by its legislative history. (Later in these reasons I will explain how legislative history informs the statutory interpretation exercise.)

36 In March 2010, paragraph 45(1)(c) of the Competition Act was amended. The provision, prior to amendment, read:

> Conspiracy
>
> 45(1) Every one who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with another person
>
> (a) to limit unduly the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any product,
>
> (b) to prevent, limit or lessen, unduly, the manufacture or production of a product or to enhance unreasonably the price thereof,
>
> (c) to prevent or lessen, unduly, competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale, storage, rental, transportation or supply of a product, or in the price of insurance on persons or property, or
>
> (d) to otherwise restrain or injure competition unduly,
>
> is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or to a fine not exceeding ten million dollars or to both.
>
> Complot
>
> 45(1) Commet un acte criminel et encourt un emprisonnement maximal de cinq ans et une amende maximale de dix millions de dollars, ou l'une de ces peines, quiconque complote, se coalise ou conclut un accord ou arrangement avec une autre personne:
>
> a) soit pour limiter, indûment, les facilités de transport, de production, de fabrication, de fourniture, d'emmagasinage ou de négoce d'un produit quelconque;
>
> b) soit pour empêcher, limiter ou réduire, indûment, la fabrication ou production d'un produit ou pour en élever déraisonnablement le prix;
>
> c) soit pour empêcher ou réduire, indûment, la concurrence dans la production, la fabrication, l'achat, le troc, la vente, l'entreposage, la location, le transport ou la fourniture d'un produit, ou dans le prix d'assurances sur les personnes ou les biens;

d) soit, de toute autre façon, pour restreindre, indûment, la concurrence ou lui causer un préjudice indu.

37 Section 45, post amendment, reads:

Conspiracies, agreements or arrangements between competitors

45(1) Every person commits an offence who, with a competitor of that person with respect to a product, conspires, agrees or arranges

(a) to fix, maintain, increase or control the price for the supply of the product;

(b) to allocate sales, territories, customers or markets for the production or supply of the product; or

(c) to fix, maintain, control, prevent, lessen or eliminate the production or supply of the product.

. . .

Definitions

(8) The following definitions apply in this section.

competitor includes a person who it is reasonable to believe would be likely to compete with respect to a product in the absence of a conspiracy, agreement or arrangement to do anything referred to in paragraphs (1)(a) to (c). (concurrent)

price includes any discount, rebate, allowance, price concession or other advantage in relation to the supply of a product. (prix)

Complot, accord ou arrangement entre concurrents

45(1) Commet une infraction quiconque, avec une personne qui est son concurrent à l'égard d'un produit, complote ou conclut un accord ou un arrangement:

a) soit pour fixer, maintenir, augmenter ou contrôler le prix de la fourniture du produit;

b) soit pour attribuer des ventes, des territoires, des clients ou des marchés pour la production ou la fourniture du produit;

c) soit pour fixer, maintenir, contrôler, empêcher, réduire ou éliminer la production ou la fourniture du produit.

Définitions

(8) Les définitions qui suivent s'appliquent au présent article.

concurrent S'entend notamment de toute personne qui, en toute raison, ferait vraisemblablement concurrence à une autre personne à l'égard d'un produit en l'absence d'un complot, d'un accord ou d'un arrangement visant à faire l'une des choses prévues aux alinéas (1)a) à c). (competitor) prix S'entend notamment de tout escompte, rabais, remise, concession de prix ou autre avantage relatif à la fourniture du produit. (price)

38 Gone from the current version is the requirement that the agreement "unduly" affect competition. It is no longer necessary to establish that these agreements have anti-competitive effects. Agreement alone is now sufficient — the anti-competitive effect is presumed. Gone too is the word "purchase" from paragraph 45(1)(c), confining the scope of section 45 to supply or sell-side conspiracies. Lest there be any doubt, the words "for the supply of the product" were added to the new paragraph 45(1)(a) (price-fixing) and the words "production or supply of the product" to paragraphs 45(1)(b) and (c) offences (market and supply restrictions).

39 Contemporaneous with the amendments to section 45, section 90.1 was added to provide civil recourse, at the instance of the Competition Bureau, for any arrangements or agreements which have anti-competitive effects. While section 90.1 is generic in scope, it could encompass buy-side conspiracies, such as those that are founded on the purchase and acquisition of goods and services.

40 Section 45 has been considered by two courts: Dow Chemical Canada ULC v. NOVA Chemicals Corporation, 2018 ABQB 482, 17 Alta. L.R. (7th) 83 [Dow Chemical] and Latifi v. The TDL Group Corp.,2021 BCSC 2183, 2021 CarswellBC 3523 at paras. 72 and 73 [. In both cases the courts also reached the conclusion that section 45 only prohibits arrangements between suppliers and not buy-side or purchaser agreements.

The appellant's arguments with respect to section 45

41 The appellant does not mount a credible argument in response to either the language of the section or its legislative history. In his memorandum of fact and law, the appellant argues that the legislative history is inconclusive on the point (para. 24), the language itself is not conclusive (paras. 25 and 134) and "it is not plain and obvious that Parliament intended that section 90.1, but not section 45, would apply to Buy-Side Conspiracies" (para. 133).

42 These arguments are not persuasive. When given its plain meaning, section 45 does not apply to the agreements which form the foundation of the conspiracy pleaded in the proposed amended statement of claim. In light of this conclusion, it is unnecessary to deal with the subsidiary arguments concerning whether the Federal Court erred in its findings concerning the particularity of the pleading. It is also unnecessary to deal with the Federal Court's finding that the duplication in the statement of claim of two allegations also advanced in class actions in other courts constituted an abuse of process.

43 During oral argument, the Court asked questions about whether the appellant, also a class member in those other class proceedings, could bring his own class proceeding — effectively opting out of those proceedings or affecting its potential finality — after the opt-out period in those proceedings had expired. This concern, effectively another variant of abuse of process, was not considered by the Federal Court and the parties were not prepared to argue it and so the Court will not discuss it further. In the future, on similar facts, the parties may well wish to address it. In making this observation I note that the claim in this case was for statutory damage under section 36 of the Competition Act, a claim not advanced in the other courts.

44 I now turn to the errors in the reasons of the Federal Court.

The role of a judge on a motion to strike

45 The appellant contends that the judge conflated the role of the court on a motion to strike with the role of the court on the merits. He argues that the judge reached his own conclusion on a contested point of statutory interpretation rather than answering the question of whether the plaintiff's proposed interpretation had a reasonable chance of success. The point is reflected in paragraph 72 of the Reasons:

> I acknowledge that the language in subsection 48(3) is capable of being interpreted in the manner advanced by the Responding Defendants as well as in the manner asserted by the plaintiff. However, for the following reasons, I agree with the interpretation advanced by the Responding Defendants.

46 I agree with the appellant. This is an incorrect analytical approach to a motion to strike. The error in paragraph 72 is continued in paragraph 73 where the Federal Court concludes that "the interpretation advanced by the Responding Defendants fits more comfortably with the overall scheme of section 48 ...".

47 Once a judge finds that legislation is capable of being interpreted in at least two different ways, it is not open to the judge to conclude that it is plain and obvious that the action has no reasonable chance of success.

48 Courts must be careful not to inhibit the development of the law by applying too strict an approach to motions to strike. The law must be allowed to evolve to respond to new issues and factual matrices. Therefore, statements of claim are to be read generously with a view to accommodating any inadequacies in the allegations. The fact that the law has not yet recognized a particular claim, interpretation, or cause of action is not determinative of the outcome of the motion. Novel but arguable claims must be allowed to proceed to trial as new developments in the law often find their provenance in surviving motions to strike (R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd.,2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45 at para. 21 [). As an example of how restraint in the application of motions to strike contributes to the evolution of the law, see the treatment of the plea of non-infringing alternative in patent litigation: Merck & Co., Inc. v. Apotex Inc., 2012 FC 454, 408 F.T.R. 139 (Eng.); Apotex Inc. v. Merck & Co., 2015 FCA 171, 387 D.L.R. (4th) 552.

49 There is, however, a countervailing principle. Motions to strike serve an important screening or gatekeeping function. They are essential to effective and fair litigation and prevent unnecessary effort and expense being devoted to cases that have no reasonable prospect of success. This is particularly true in the context of class actions, where plaintiffs may have fundraised to cover their expenses and where they are relieved from paying costs when they are unsuccessful on interlocutory matters along the way.

50 There is also a broad cost to access to justice. The diversion of scarce judicial resources to cases which have no substance diverts time away from cases that require attention. The point was well made by Stratas J.A. in Coote v. Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Company, 2013 FCA 143, 229 A.C.W.S. (3d) 935 at paragraph 13 when he wrote that "[d]evoting resources to one case for no good reason deprives the others for no good reason."

51 The appellant contends that as the interpretive questions before the Federal Court had not been previously considered, they could not be conclusively considered to be bereft of success. The appellant presses the proposition further and, relying on the decision of this Court in Arsenault v. Canada, 2008 FC 299, 330 F.T.R. 8 at para. 27, aff'd., 2009 FCA 242, 395 N.R. 377 [Arsenault], says that to succeed on a motion to strike, there must be a binding decision which has definitively determined the point in question. In this case there has been no judicial consideration of section 48 and limited tangential consideration of section 45. This, he contends, required that the motion to strike be dismissed.

52 As a general proposition, definitive legal pronouncements on the meaning of legislation should not be made on a motion to strike where there are competing, credible interpretations. A motions judge should not reach a conclusion on an honestly disputed point of statutory interpretation — there is no "correct" or preferred interpretation on a motion to strike. The only task is to determine whether there is a conflicting interpretation worth considering or that has a reasonable prospect of success. The low bar for determining whether a claim has a reasonable prospect of success applies equally where a question of statutory interpretation is at the heart of the motion to strike (Apotex Inc. v. Laboratoires Servier, 2007 FCA 350, 286 D.L.R. (4th) 1 at para. 34).

53 That said, a cause of action is not presumptively "reasonable" simply because it has no antecedence in jurisprudence. Some legal analysis may be needed to determine if a claim has any reasonable prospect of success (McCain Foods Limited v. J.R. Simplot Company, 2021 FCA 4, [2021] F.C.J. No. 37 (QL) at para. 21; Das v. George Weston Limited, 2018 ONCA 1053, 43 E.T.R. (4th) 173 at para. 75; Merck & Co. Inc. v. Apotex Inc., 2014 FC 883, 128 C.P.R. (4th) 410 at para. 38). There is a duty to assess the reasonableness or viability of a plea and separate the wheat from the chaff. This aligns with the obligation of courts to improve the affordable, timely and just adjudication of civil claims (Hryniak v. Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 87 at paras. 2, 28-29, 31-33).

54 Therefore to insist, as does the appellant, that the absence of a definitive precedent on the meaning of sections 45 and 48 would significantly reduce the utility of motions to strike in cases of statutory interpretation. It would mean that every case which raised a point of interpretation for the first time, no matter how futile the argument, would survive a motion to strike, as there would never be a precedent, let alone a binding precedent. Although the judge used incorrect terminology, he did not err in conducting some legal analysis to determine whether the claim had any reasonable prospect of success, and that analysis supported his conclusion that the claim had no reasonable prospect of success.

Evidence on motions to strike

55 The Federal Court concluded that section 45 only prohibited supply-side conspiracies. It reached this conclusion after a review of the text of section 45, its legislative history, Parliamentary committee reports and policy statements by the Competition Bureau (Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Proposals for a New Competition Policy for Canada (November, 1973) and Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, Issue No. 61 (19 November 1975) at 18-19).

56 Rule 221(2) of the Federal Courts Rules, S.O.R./98-106, provides that no evidence shall be heard on a motion to strike for an order under paragraph (1)(a).

57 This legislative prohibition against the use of evidence on a motion to strike is underlined by solid policy considerations. There are no affidavits or cross-examinations. The Court has neither the assurance that it has the complete picture nor that the "evidence" that it does have is credible. Relying on extrinsic evidence on a motion to strike makes it unclear as to whether the result was reached as a matter of law following the application of the principles of statutory interpretation, or whether it was reached based on the extrinsic evidence. The line between jurisprudence and evidence blurs. The waters become muddy. That is the case before us.

58 A motion to strike pleadings is different from other creatures under the Rules: a ruling on a question of law or a summary judgment motion. Each of these motions has its proper place and for good reasons they should not be smudged together.

59 To allow evidence in a pleadings motion would quickly make it just an early summary judgment motion, but stripped of the requirements for summary judgment motions (i.e. leading the best case, filing the motion only after defence). The parties would be filing evidence before all of the issues are on the table (no defence has been filed). The evidence could be wrong or incomplete.

60 The error of the Federal Court was to treat the extrinsic evidence as relevant to the statutory interpretation issue before us. Policy statements of the regulator do not tell us what a statute means. Our focus is the statute, not how people have been using it. The Federal Court used the debates and proceedings not as context to inform the statutory interpretation analysis but instead as corroboration of its interpretation.

61 As noted, section 45 has been previously considered (Dow Chemical and Latifi). In both cases the court reached the conclusion that section 45 only applied to prohibit arrangements between suppliers, and in both cases the court reached that conclusion without regard to the extrinsic evidence. In fact, in Latifi, the Court questioned the appropriateness of the Federal Court's reliance on extrinsic evidence to understand the meaning of section 45, and concluded that "even if ... admissible" it was of little weight (Latifi at paras. 73-74).

62 In other words, the Federal Court could have reached the same result without relying on the extrinsic evidence.

63 I accept that legislative history may be used on a motion to strike as it may inform the purpose of the legislation (Alberta (Attorney General) v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2021 FCA 84, 41 C.E.L.R. (4th) 157 at para. 127). But even here, care must be taken not to confuse the evolution of the legislation, which is law, with what individual politicians or regulators think or hope the legislation says. There is a substantive difference between committee proceedings that shed light on the evolution and legislative history of a law on the one hand and on the other hand the testimony of academics and public servants which may be aspirational, disputable or of arguable relevance. While perhaps self-evident, if it is necessary to resort to Hansard to discern the meaning of a statute, it is difficult to conclude that it is plain and obvious that a plaintiff's case has no reasonable prospect of success.

64 In Imperial Tobacco, the Supreme Court considered the admissibility of evidence in the context of statutory interpretation on a motion to strike, holding that it was proper to rely on Hansard on a motion to strike a pleading. The appeal was from the British Columbia Court of Appeal, and the motion to strike was governed by the British Columbia Supreme Court Rules, B.C. Reg. 221/90 [BCSC Rules], as they then were. Like the Federal Courts Rules, Rule 19(27) of the BCSC Rules (now Rule 9-5(2) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009) provided that no evidence was admissible on a motion to strike a statement of claim for failure to disclose a reasonable cause of action. Nonetheless, the Court opined that courts "may" consider all evidence relevant to statutory interpretation in order to discern legislative intent (Imperial Tobacco at para. 128).

65 Two points can be said about Imperial Tobacco.

66 First, and at risk of repetition, if a court must resort to material beyond the statute and its legislative history to answer the question as to its scope and application, it is difficult to conclude that the interpretation which forms the foundation of the claim has no reasonable prospect of success. In this context, yellow lights should be flashing before any judge who needs extrinsic evidence to answer a question of statutory interpretation on a motion to strike.

67 Second, in Imperial Tobacco, the Supreme Court was not asked to consider the range of procedural options available to parties in the Federal Court to resolve preliminary legal issues, several of which provide for the admission of the type of extrinsic evidence in issue here. Put otherwise, the prohibition on the use of evidence in Rule 221(2) is best understood when situated in the broader architecture of the Federal Courts Rules.

68 Rule 221(1)(a) is the beginning point on a continuum of procedural options available to parties to resolve questions of interpretation. Rule 213 provides for summary judgment, Rule 220 allows for the determination of preliminary questions of law, and should a matter reach trial, a trial judge has the discretion to direct the parties to address a questions of law. Unlike Rule 221, evidence is admissible under each of these rules to determine a question of statutory interpretation, with all of the guarantees of completeness and credibility associated with the adversarial process. It is for the judge to determine whether there is a sufficient evidentiary foundation to answer the question.

Ambiguity and statutory interpretation

69 Sections 45 and 48 are dual provisions — they give rise to both civil remedies and criminal prosecutions. The fact that they may be enforced criminally was a factor in the Federal Court's interpretation:

> To the extent that the words in subsection 45(1) might somehow be said to permit a broader interpretation that would bring within its scope the sorts of agreements alleged in the Amended Statement of Claim, the penal nature of that provision would entitle the defendants to the benefit of any ambiguity: R v McLaughlin, [1980] 2 SCR 331 at 335*;* R v McIntosh, [1995] 1 SCR 686 at 702 and 705.
>
> (Reasons at para. 47)
>
> . . .
>
> To the extent that there is any ambiguity in section 48, which is a penal provision, the Responding Defendants are entitled to the benefit of their narrower interpretation: see paragraph 47 above.
>
> (Reasons at paras. 85 and 139)

70 There is no presumption or rule of interpretation that the benefit of the doubt on a question of statutory interpretation goes to the defendant.

71 The principle of strict construction of penal statutes exists as a subsidiary interpretive device applicable only where there is a finding of a genuine ambiguity as to the meaning of a provision (Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, 2002 SCC 42, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559 at para. 28 [).

72 A genuine ambiguity arises only where there are two equally plausible interpretations to choose between following the interpretation exercise. A difficulty of interpretation is not necessarily an ambiguity (Bell ExpressVu at paras. 54-55). A restrictive interpretation may be warranted where an ambiguity cannot be resolved by means of the usual principles of interpretation. But it is a principle of last resort that does not supersede a purposive and contextual approach to interpretation.

73 As Professor Sullivan explains, the strict constructionist approach to the interpretation of penal statutes developed in the eighteenth century when criminal law sanctions were severe and invariably triggered incarceration. But by the 1990s that presumption began to erode to the point where it is engaged only in the limited circumstances which I have described (R. v. Jaw, 2009 SCC 42, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 26 at para. 38 citing R. Sullivan, Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes (5th ed. 2008), at pp. 472-74; R. v. Big River First Nation, 2019 SKCA 117, 28 C.E.L.R. (4th) 218).

74 In the absence of a finding of a true ambiguity, the principle of strict construction ought not to have been invoked. For the reasons I have explained, there is no ambiguity in section 45.

Appeal of the costs order

75 The appellant appeals the award of costs against him made by the Federal Court with respect to the motion to strike. He notes that class proceedings in the Federal Court are a no-costs regime (Rule 334.39 of the Federal Courts Rules). The Court did not award costs on the motion to amend as the defendants did not request costs on that motion.

76 As a general rule, the no-costs rule in class actions is engaged the moment that the defendants are made parties to a certification motion (Campbell v. Canada (Attorney General),2012 FCA 45, [2013] 4 F.C.R. 234 [). The policy objectives of the no-costs regime reflected in Rule 334.39 and why they do not apply prior to certification are fully discussed by Pelletier J.A. in Campbell, where this Court rejects the argument that no-costs regime attaches to the proceeding itself, as contended by the appellant.

77 Although the Federal Court did not consider the jurisprudence or Rule 334.39, no error was made in awarding costs against the appellant. The certification motion had not been filed, consequently the award of costs was not prohibited by Rule 334.39.

78 Therefore, I would dismiss the appeal. Although the appellant was unsuccessful in the result, the appeal was an understandable response to the Federal Court's errors that I have identified. In light of this, I would not make an award of costs.

David Stratas J.A.*:

I agree.

Anne L. Mactavish J.A.*:

I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

AnnexA

Competition Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-34

> Conspiracies, agreements or arrangements between competitors
>
> 45 (1) Every person commits an offence who, with a competitor of that person with respect to a product, conspires, agrees or arranges
>
> > (a) to fix, maintain, increase or control the price for the supply of the product;
> >
> > (b) to allocate sales, territories, customers or markets for the production or supply of the product; or
> >
> > (c) to fix, maintain, control, prevent, lessen or eliminate the production or supply of the product.
>
> Penalty

(2) Every person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable on conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years or to a fine not exceeding $25 million, or to both.

Evidence of conspiracy, agreement or arrangement

(3) In a prosecution under subsection (1), the court may infer the existence of a conspiracy, agreement or arrangement from circumstantial evidence, with or without direct evidence of communication between or among the alleged parties to it, but, for greater certainty, the conspiracy, agreement or arrangement must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

Defence

(4) No person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (1) in respect of a conspiracy, agreement or arrangement that would otherwise contravene that subsection if

(a) that person establishes, on a balance of probabilities, that

(i) it is ancillary to a broader or separate agreement or arrangement that includes the same parties, and

(ii) it is directly related to, and reasonably necessary for giving effect to, the objective of that broader or separate agreement or arrangement; and

(b) the broader or separate agreement or arrangement, considered alone, does not contravene that subsection.

Defence

(5) No person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (1) in respect of a conspiracy, agreement or arrangement that relates only to the export of products from Canada, unless the conspiracy, agreement or arrangement

(a) has resulted in or is likely to result in a reduction or limitation of the real value of exports of a product;

(b) has restricted or is likely to restrict any person from entering into or expanding the business of exporting products from Canada; or

(c) is in respect only of the supply of services that facilitate the export of products from Canada.

Exception

(6) Subsection (1) does not apply if the conspiracy, agreement or arrangement

(a) is entered into only by parties each of which is, in respect of every one of the others, an affiliate;

(b) is between federal financial institutions and is described in subsection 49(1); or

(c) is an arrangement, as defined in section 53.7 of the Canada Transportation Act, that has been authorized by the Minister of Transport under subsection 53.73(8) of that Act and for which the authorization has not been revoked, if the conspiracy, agreement or arrangement is directly related to, and reasonably necessary for giving effect to, the objective of the arrangement.

Common law principles — regulated conduct

(7) The rules and principles of the common law that render a requirement or authorization by or under another Act of Parliament or the legislature of a province a defence to a prosecution under subsection 45(1) of this Act, as it read immediately before the coming into force of this section, continue in force and apply in respect of a prosecution under subsection (1).

Definitions

(8) The following definitions apply in this section.

competitor includes a person who it is reasonable to believe would be likely to compete with respect to a product in the absence of a conspiracy, agreement or arrangement to do anything referred to in paragraphs (1)(a) to (c). (concurrent)

price includes any discount, rebate, allowance, price concession or other advantage in relation to the supply of a product. (prix)

Where application made under section 76, 79, 90.1 or 92

45.1 No proceedings may be commenced under subsection 45(1) against a person on the basis of facts that are the same or substantially the same as the facts on the basis of which an order against that person is sought by the Commissioner under section 76, 79, 90.1 or 92.

Conspiracy relating to professional sport

48 (1) Every one who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with another person

(a) to limit unreasonably the opportunities for any other person to participate, as a player or competitor, in professional sport or to impose unreasonable terms or conditions on those persons who so participate, or

(b) to limit unreasonably the opportunity for any other person to negotiate with and, if agreement is reached, to play for the team or club of his choice in a professional league is guilty of an indictable offence and liable on conviction to a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or to both.

Matters to be considered

(2) In determining whether or not an agreement or arrangement contravenes subsection (1), the court before which the contravention is alleged shall have regard to

(a) whether the sport in relation to which the contravention is alleged is organized on an international basis and, if so, whether any limitations, terms or conditions alleged should, for that reason, be accepted in Canada; and

(b) the desirability of maintaining a reasonable balance among the teams or clubs participating in the same league.

Application

(3) This section applies, and section 45 does not apply, to agreements and arrangements and to provisions of agreements and arrangements between or among teams and clubs engaged in professional sport as members of the same league and between or among directors, officers or employees of those teams and clubs where the agreements, arrangements and provisions relate exclusively to matters described in subsection (1) or to the granting and operation of franchises in the league, and section 45 applies and this section does not apply to all other agreements, arrangements and provisions thereof between or among those teams, clubs and persons.

Orphan Well Association and Alberta Energy Regulator Appellants

v.

Grant Thornton Limited and ATB Financial (formerly known as Alberta Treasury Branches) Respondents

and

Attorney General of Ontario, Attorney General of British Columbia, Attorney General of Saskatchewan, Attorney General of Alberta, Ecojustice Canada Society, Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, Greenpeace Canada, Action Surface Rights Association, Canadian Association of Insolvency and Restructuring Professionals and Canadian Bankers' Association Interveners

Orphan Well Association et Alberta Energy Regulator Appelants

c.

Grant Thornton Limited et ATB Financial (auparavant connue sous le nom d'Alberta Treasury Branches) Intimées

et

Procureure générale de l'Ontario, procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, procureur général de la Saskatchewan, procureur général de l'Alberta, Ecojustice Canada Society, Association canadienne des producteurs pétroliers, Greenpeace Canada, Action Surface Rights Association, Association canadienne des professionnels de l'insolvabilité et de la réorganisation et Association des banquiers canadiens Intervenants

INDEXED AS: ORPHAN WELL ASSOCIATION v. GRANT THORNTON LTD.

2019 SCC 5

File No.: 37627.

2018: February 15; 2019: January 31.

Present: Wagner C.J. and Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Gascon, Côté and Brown JJ.

RÉPERTORIÉ : ORPHAN WELL ASSOCIATION c. GRANT THORNTON LTD.

2019 CSC 5

N° du greffe : 37627.

2018 : 15 février; 2019 : 31 janvier.

Présents : Le juge en chef Wagner et les juges Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Gascon, Côté et Brown.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ALBERTA

Constitutional law — Division of powers — Federal paramountcy — Bankruptcy and insolvency — Environmental law — Oil and gas — Oil and gas companies in Alberta required by provincial comprehensive licensing regime to assume end-of-life responsibilities with respect to oil wells, pipelines, and facilities — Provincial regulator administering licensing regime and enforcing end-of-life obligations pursuant to statutory powers — Trustee in bankruptcy of oil and gas company not taking responsibility for company's unproductive oil and gas assets and seeking to walk away from environmental liabilities

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE L'ALBERTA

Droit constitutionnel — Partage des compétences — Prépondérance fédérale — Faillite et insolvabilité — Droit de l'environnement — Pétrole et gaz — Sociétés pétrolières et gazières de l'Alberta tenues par le régime provincial complet de délivrance de permis d'assumer des responsabilités de fin de vie à l'égard de puits de pétrole, de pipelines et d'installations — Organisme de réglementation provincial administrant le régime d'octroi de permis et assurant le respect des obligations de fin de vie en vertu des pouvoirs que lui confère la loi — Syndic de faillite d'une société pétrolière et gazière refusant d'assumer la associated with them or to satisfy secured creditors' claims ahead of company's environmental liabilities — Whether regulator's use of powers under provincial legislation to enforce bankrupt company's compliance with end-of-life obligations conflicts with trustee's powers under federal bankruptcy legislation or with the order of priorities under such legislation — If so, whether provincial regulatory regime inoperative to extent of conflict by virtue of doctrine of federal paramountcy — Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, s. 14.06 — Oil and Gas Conservation Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. O-6, s. 1(1)(cc) — Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-12, s. 134(b)(vi) — Pipeline Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. P-15, s. 1(1)(n).

In order to exploit oil and gas resources in Alberta, a company needs a property interest in the oil or gas (typically, a mineral lease with the Crown, which Canadian courts classify as a profit à prendre), surface rights and a licence issued by the Alberta Energy Regulator ("Regulator"). Under provincial legislation, the Regulator will not grant a licence to extract, process or transport oil and gas in Alberta unless the licensee assumes end-of-life responsibilities for plugging and capping oil wells to prevent leaks, dismantling surface structures and restoring the surface to its previous condition. These end-of-life obligations are known as "abandonment" and "reclamation".

The Licensee Liability Rating Program is one means by which the Regulator seeks to ensure that end-of-life obligations will be satisfied by licensees. As part of this program, the Regulator assigns each company a Liability Management Rating ("LMR"), which is the ratio between the aggregate value attributed by the Regulator to a company's licensed assets and the aggregate liability attributed by the Regulator to the eventual cost of abandoning and reclaiming those assets. For the purpose of calculating the LMR, all the licences held by a given company are treated as a package. A licensee's LMR is calculated on a monthly basis and, where it dips below the prescribed ratio, the licensee is required to bring its LMR back up to the prescribed level by paying a security deposit, performing end-of-life obligations, or transferring licences with the Regulator's approval. If either the transferor or the transferee would have a post-transfer LMR below 1.0, responsabilité des biens pétroliers et gaziers inexploités de la société et tentant de se soustraire aux engagements environnementaux associés à ces biens ou d'acquitter les réclamations des créanciers garantis avant les engagements environnementaux de la société — L'exercice par l'organisme de réglementation des pouvoirs que lui confère la législation provinciale pour contraindre la société faillie à respecter les obligations de fin de vie entre-t-il en conflit avec les pouvoirs accordés au syndic par la loi fédérale sur la faillite ou avec l'ordre de priorités fixé par cette loi? — Dans l'affirmative, le régime de réglementation provincial est-il inopérant dans la mesure du conflit par application de la doctrine de la prépondérance fédérale? — Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, c. B-3, art. 14.06 — Oil and Gas Conservation Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. O-6, art. 1(1)(cc) — Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-12, art. 134(b)(vi) — Pipeline Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. P-15, art. 1(1)(n).

Pour exploiter des ressources pétrolières et gazières en Alberta, une société a besoin d'un intérêt de propriété sur le pétrole ou le gaz (habituellement un bail d'exploitation minière avec la Couronne que les tribunaux canadiens qualifient de profit à prendre), des droits de surface et d'un permis délivré par l'Alberta Energy Regulator (« organisme de réglementation »). Selon la législation provinciale, l'organisme de réglementation n'accordera pas le permis voulu pour extraire, traiter ou transporter du pétrole et du gaz en Alberta à moins que le titulaire de permis n'assume les responsabilités de fin de vie consistant à obturer et à fermer les puits de pétrole afin d'éviter les fuites, à démanteler les structures de surface ainsi qu'à remettre la surface dans son état antérieur. Ces obligations de fin de vie sont appelées l'« abandon » et la « remise en état ».

Le Programme d'évaluation de la responsabilité du titulaire de permis constitue un moyen par lequel l'organisme de réglementation vise à s'assurer que les titulaires de permis rempliront les obligations de fin de vie. Dans le cadre de ce programme, l'organisme de réglementation attribue à chaque société une cote de gestion de la responsabilité (« CGR »), qui représente le rapport entre la valeur totale attribuée par l'organisme de réglementation aux biens d'une société qui sont visés par des permis et la responsabilité totale que l'organisme de réglementation attribue aux coûts éventuels de l'abandon et de la remise en état de ces biens. Pour les besoins du calcul de la CGR, tous les permis détenus par une société donnée sont traités comme un tout. La CGR d'un titulaire de permis est calculée sur une base mensuelle et, lorsqu'elle tombe sous le ratio prescrit, le titulaire de permis doit la ramener en versant un dépôt de garantie, en exécutant les obligations the Regulator will normally refuse to approve the licence transfer.

The insolvency of an oil and gas company licensed to operate in Alberta engages Alberta's comprehensive licensing regime, which is binding on companies active in the oil and gas industry, and the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA"), federal legislation that governs the administration of a bankrupt's estate and the orderly and equitable distribution of property among its creditors. Alberta's Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act ("EPEA") ensures that a licensee's regulatory obligations will continue to be fulfilled when it is subject to insolvency proceedings by including the trustee of a licensee in the definition of "operator" for the purposes of the duty to reclaim and by providing that an order to perform reclamation work may be issued to a trustee. However, it expressly limits a trustee's liability in relation to such an order to the value of the assets in the bankrupt estate, absent gross negligence or wilful misconduct. The Oil and Gas Conservation Act ("OGCA") and the Pipeline Act take a more generic approach: they simply include trustees in the definition of "licensee". As a result, every power which these Acts give the Regulator against a licensee can theoretically also be exercised against a trustee. The Regulator has delegated the authority to abandon and reclaim "orphans" — oil and gas assets and their sites left behind in an improperly abandoned or unreclaimed state by defunct companies at the close of their insolvency proceedings — to the Orphan Well Association ("OWA"), an independent non-profit entity. The OWA has no power to seek reimbursement of its costs, but it may be reimbursed up to the value of any security deposit held by the Regulator to the credit of the licensee of the orphans once it has completed its environmental work.

Redwater, a publicly traded oil and gas company, was first granted licences by the Regulator in 2009. Its principal assets are 127 oil and gas assets — wells, pipelines and facilities — and their corresponding licences. A few of its licensed wells are still producing and profitable, but the majority are spent and burdened with abandonment and reclamation liabilities that exceed their value. In 2013, ATB Financial, which had full knowledge of the de fin de vie ou en transférant des permis avec l'approbation de l'organisme de réglementation. Si le cédant ou le cessionnaire devait avoir une CGR inférieure à 1,0 après le transfert, l'organisme de réglementation refusera normalement d'approuver le transfert de permis.

L'insolvabilité d'une société pétrolière et gazière autorisée à exercer ses activités en Alberta met en jeu le régime complet de délivrance de permis de l'Alberta qui lie les sociétés actives dans l'industrie pétrolière et gazière, ainsi que la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité (« LFI »), une loi fédérale qui régit l'administration de l'actif d'un failli ainsi que la répartition ordonnée et équitable des biens entre ses créanciers. L'Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act (« EPEA ») de l'Alberta garantit que les obligations réglementaires d'un titulaire de permis continuent d'être respectées pendant qu'il fait l'objet d'une procédure d'insolvabilité en incluant le syndic d'un titulaire de permis dans la définition d'« exploitant » pour l'application de l'obligation de remettre en état et en prévoyant la possibilité qu'une ordonnance de remise en état soit adressée à un syndic. Cependant, faute de négligence grave ou d'inconduite délibérée, elle limite expressément la responsabilité du syndic à l'égard d'une telle ordonnance à la valeur des éléments de l'actif du failli. L'Oil and Gas Conservation Act (« OGCA ») et la Pipeline Act adoptent une approche plus générique : elles incluent simplement le syndic dans la définition de « titulaire de permis ». En conséquence, tout pouvoir que ces lois confèrent à l'organisme de réglementation à l'encontre d'un titulaire de permis peut, en théorie, s'exercer également contre un syndic. L'organisme de réglementation a délégué à l'Orphan Well Association (« OWA »), une entité indépendante sans but lucratif, le pouvoir d'abandonner et de remettre en état les « orphelins » — les biens pétroliers et gaziers ainsi que leurs sites délaissés sans que les processus en question n'aient été correctement effectués par les sociétés liquidées à la fin de leur procédure d'insolvabilité. L'OWA n'a pas le pouvoir de demander le remboursement de ses frais, mais elle peut être remboursée jusqu'à concurrence de la valeur du dépôt de garantie détenu, le cas échéant, par l'organisme de réglementation au profit du titulaire de permis associé au puits orphelin une fois ses travaux environnementaux terminés.

Redwater, une société pétrolière et gazière cotée en bourse, s'est vu octroyer ses premiers permis par l'organisme de réglementation en 2009. Son actif est principalement composé de 127 biens pétroliers et gaziers — puits, pipelines et installations — et des permis correspondants. Quelques-uns des puits autorisés de Redwater sont encore productifs et rentables, mais la majorité est tarie et grevée de responsabilités relatives à l'abandon et à la remise en end-of-life obligations associated with Redwater's assets, advanced funds to Redwater and, in return, was granted a security interest in Redwater's present and after-acquired property. In mid-2014, Redwater began to experience financial difficulties. Grant Thornton Limited ("GTL") was appointed as its receiver in 2015. At that time, Redwater owed ATB approximately $5.1 million and had 84 wells, 7 facilities and 36 pipelines, 72 of which were inactive or spent, but, since Redwater's LMR did not drop below the prescribed ratio until after it went into receivership, it never paid any security deposits to the Regulator.

Upon being advised of Redwater's receivership, the Regulator notified GTL that it was legally obligated to fulfill abandonment obligations for all licensed assets prior to distributing any funds or finalizing any proposal to creditors. The Regulator warned that it would not approve the transfer of any of Redwater's licences unless it was satisfied that both the transferee and the transferor would be in a position to fulfill all regulatory obligations, and that the transfer would not cause a deterioration in Redwater's LMR. GTL concluded that it could not meet the Regulator's requirements because the cost of the end-of-life obligations for the spent wells would likely exceed the sale proceeds for the productive wells. Based on this assessment, GTL informed the Regulator that it was taking possession and control only of Redwater's 17 most productive wells, 3 associated facilities and 12 associated pipelines ("Retained Assets"), and that it was not taking possession or control of any of Redwater's other licensed assets ("Renounced Assets"). GTL's position was that it had no obligation to fulfill any regulatory requirements associated with the Renounced Assets. In response, the Regulator issued orders under the OGCA and the Pipeline Act requiring Redwater to suspend and abandon the Renounced Assets ("Abandonment Orders"). The Regulator imposed short deadlines, as it considered the Renounced Assets an environmental and safety hazard.

The Regulator and the OWA then filed an application for a declaration that GTL's renunciation of the Renounced Assets was void, and for orders requiring GTL to comply with the Abandonment Orders and to fulfill the end-of-life obligations associated with Redwater's licensed properties.

état qui excèdent leur valeur. En 2013, ATB, qui avait pleinement connaissance des obligations de fin de vie associées aux biens de Redwater, lui a avancé des fonds et, en contrepartie, s'est vu accorder une sûreté sur ses biens actuels et futurs. Au milieu de 2014, Redwater a commencé à éprouver des difficultés financières. Grant Thornton Limited (« GTL ») a été nommé séquestre de Redwater en 2015. À cette époque, Redwater devait environ 5,1 millions de dollars à ATB et comptait 84 puits, 7 installations et 36 pipelines, dont 72 étaient inactifs ou taris, mais, comme la CGR de Redwater n'est tombée sous le ratio prescrit qu'après la mise sous séquestre de cette dernière, elle n'a jamais versé de dépôt de garantie à l'organisme de réglementation.

Après avoir été informé de la mise sous séquestre de Redwater, l'organisme de réglementation a avisé GTL qu'il était légalement tenu de remplir les obligations d'abandon pour tous les biens visés par des permis avant de distribuer des fonds ou de finaliser toute proposition aux créanciers. L'organisme de réglementation a averti qu'il n'approuverait pas le transfert de l'un ou l'autre permis de Redwater à moins d'être convaincu que le cessionnaire et le cédant seraient en mesure de s'acquitter de toutes les obligations réglementaires, et que le transfert n'occasionnerait pas une détérioration de la CGR de Redwater. GTL a conclu qu'il ne pouvait pas satisfaire aux exigences de l'organisme de réglementation car le coût des obligations de fin de vie des puits taris dépasserait probablement le produit de la vente des puits productifs. Sur la base de cette évaluation, GTL a informé l'organisme de réglementation qu'il prenait possession et contrôle seulement des 17 puits les plus productifs de Redwater, ainsi que de 3 installations et de 12 pipelines connexes (« biens conservés »), et qu'il ne prenait pas possession ou contrôle de tous les autres éléments d'actif de Redwater visés par des permis (« biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation »). Selon GTL, il n'était aucunement tenu de satisfaire aux exigences réglementaires en lien avec les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. L'organisme de réglementation a réagi en rendant des ordonnances au titre de l'OGCA et de la Pipeline Act enjoignant à Redwater de suspendre l'exploitation des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation et de les abandonner (« ordonnances d'abandon »). L'organisme de réglementation a imposé des délais serrés parce qu'il considérait les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation comme un danger pour l'environnement et la sécurité.

L'organisme de réglementation et l'OWA ont alors déposé une demande en vue d'obtenir un jugement déclaratoire portant que l'abandon par GTL des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation était nul, de même qu'une ordonnance obligeant GTL à se conformer aux ordonnances

The Regulator did not seek to hold GTL liable for these obligations beyond the assets remaining in the Redwater estate. GTL brought a cross-application seeking approval to pursue a sales process excluding the Renounced Assets and an order directing that the Regulator could not prevent the transfer of the licences associated with the Retained Assets on the basis of, inter alia, the LMR requirements, failure to comply with the Abandonment Orders, refusal to take possession of the Renounced Assets or Redwater's outstanding debts to the Regulator. A bankruptcy order was issued for Redwater and GTL was appointed as trustee. GTL invoked s. 14.06(4)(a)(ii) of the BIA in relation to the Renounced Assets.

The chambers judge and a majority of the Court of Appeal agreed with GTL and held that the Regulator's proposed use of its statutory powers to enforce Redwater's compliance with abandonment and reclamation obligations during bankruptcy conflicted with the BIA in two ways: (1) it imposed on GTL the obligations of a licensee in relation to the Redwater assets disclaimed by GTL, contrary to s. 14.06(4) of the BIA; and (2) it upended the priority scheme for the distribution of a bankrupt's assets established by the BIA by requiring that the provable claims of the Regulator, an unsecured creditor, be paid ahead of the claims of Redwater's secured creditors. The dissenting judge in the Court of Appeal would have allowed the Regulator's appeal on the basis that there was no conflict between Alberta's environmental legislation and the BIA.

Held (Moldaver and Côté JJ. dissenting): The appeal should be allowed.

Per Wagner C.J. and Abella, Karakatsanis, Gascon and Brown JJ.: The Regulator's use of its statutory powers does not create a conflict with the BIA so as to trigger the doctrine of federal paramountcy. Section 14.06(4) of the BIA is concerned with the personal liability of trustees, and does not empower a trustee to walk away from the environmental liabilities of the estate it is administering. Furthermore, the Regulator is not asserting any claims provable in the bankruptcy, and the priority scheme in the BIA is not upended. Thus, no conflict is caused by GTL's status as a licensee under Alberta legislation. Alberta's d'abandon et à remplir les obligations de fin de vie associées aux biens de Redwater visés par des permis. L'organisme de réglementation n'a pas cherché à tenir GTL responsable de ces obligations au-delà des éléments qui faisaient encore partie de l'actif de Redwater. GTL a présenté une demande reconventionnelle visant à obtenir l'autorisation de poursuivre un processus de vente excluant les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation ainsi qu'une ordonnance interdisant à l'organisme de réglementation d'empêcher le transfert des permis associés aux biens conservés en raison, notamment, des exigences relatives à la CGR, du non-respect des ordonnances d'abandon, du refus de prendre possession des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation ou des dettes en souffrance de Redwater envers l'organisme de réglementation. Une ordonnance de faillite a été rendue à l'égard de Redwater, et GTL a été nommé syndic. GTL a invoqué le sous-al. 14.06(4)a)(ii) de la LFI à l'égard des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation.

Le juge siégeant en cabinet et les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel ont donné raison à GTL et décidé que l'utilisation proposée par l'organisme de réglementation des pouvoirs que lui confère la loi pour contraindre Redwater à respecter les obligations d'abandon et de remise en état au cours de la faillite était incompatible avec la LFI de deux façons : (1) elle imposait à GTL les obligations d'un titulaire de permis relativement aux biens de Redwater auxquels GTL avait renoncé, ce qui est contraire au par. 14.06(4) de la LFI; (2) elle renversait le régime de priorité établi par la LFI pour le partage des biens d'un failli en exigeant que le paiement de ses réclamations prouvables, en tant que créancier ordinaire, soit effectué avant celui des réclamations des créanciers garantis de Redwater. La juge dissidente de la Cour d'appel aurait accueilli l'appel de l'organisme de réglementation au motif qu'il n'y avait pas de conflit entre la législation environnementale de l'Alberta et la LFI.

Arrêt (les juges Moldaver et Côté sont dissidents) : Le pourvoi est accueilli.

Le juge en chef Wagner et les juges Abella, Karakatsanis, Gascon et Brown : L'utilisation par l'organisme de réglementation des pouvoirs que lui confère la loi ne crée pas de conflit avec la LFI de façon à mettre en jeu la doctrine de la prépondérance fédérale. Le paragraphe 14.06(4) de la LFI intéresse la responsabilité personnelle du syndic et il ne l'investit pas du pouvoir de se soustraire aux engagements environnementaux liant l'actif qu'il administre. De plus, l'organisme de réglementation ne fait valoir aucune réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite, et le régime de priorité de la LFI n'est pas renversé. Donc, le statut regulatory regime can coexist with and apply alongside the BIA.

Bankruptcy is not a licence to ignore rules, and insolvency professionals are bound by and must comply with valid provincial laws during bankruptcy. They must, for example, comply with non-monetary obligations that are binding on the bankrupt estate, that cannot be reduced to provable claims, and the effects of which do not conflict with the BIA, notwithstanding the consequences this may have for the bankrupt's secured creditors. Given the procedural nature of the BIA, the bankruptcy regime relies heavily on the continued operation of provincial laws but, where there is a genuine conflict between provincial laws concerning property and civil rights and federal bankruptcy legislation, the BIA prevails. The BIA as a whole is intended to further two purposes: the equitable distribution of the bankrupt's assets among his or her creditors and the bankrupt's financial rehabilitation. As Redwater is a corporation that will never emerge from bankruptcy, only the former purpose is relevant here.

The Abandonment Orders and the LMR requirements are based on valid provincial laws of general application — exactly the kind of valid provincial laws upon which the BIA is built. There is no conflict between the Alberta regulatory scheme and s. 14.06 of the BIA, because, under s. 14.06(4), a trustee's disclaimer of real property when there is an order to remedy any environmental condition or damage affecting that property protects the trustee from personal liability, while the ongoing liability of the bankrupt estate is unaffected. This interpretation is supported by the plain language of the section, the Hansard evidence, a previous decision of this Court and the French version of the section. The same concept is also found in both s. 14.06(1.2) and s. 14.06(2), which also specifically state that the trustee is not personally liable — it is impossible to coherently read s. 14.06(2) as referring to personal liability and yet read s. 14.06(4) as somehow referring to the liability of the bankrupt estate.

Even assuming that GTL had successfully disclaimed in this case, no operational conflict or frustration of purpose would result from the fact that the Regulator requires GTL, as a licensee, to expend estate assets on abandoning the Renounced Assets. Furthermore, no conflict would be caused by continuing to include the Renounced Assets in the calculation of Redwater's LMR. Finally, given the de GTL en tant que titulaire de permis au sens de la loi albertaine n'est à l'origine d'aucun conflit. Le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta peut coexister et s'appliquer conjointement avec la LFI.

La faillite n'est pas un permis de faire abstraction des règles, et les professionnels de l'insolvabilité sont liés par les lois provinciales valides au cours de la faillite. Par exemple, ils doivent respecter les obligations non pécuniaires liant l'actif du failli qui ne peuvent être réduites à des réclamations prouvables et dont les effets n'entrent pas en conflit avec la LFI, sans égard aux répercussions que cela peut avoir sur les créanciers garantis du failli. Étant donné la nature procédurale de la LFI, le régime de faillite repose en grande partie sur l'application continue des lois provinciales mais, en cas de conflit véritable entre les lois provinciales concernant la propriété et les droits civils et la législation fédérale sur la faillite, la LFI l'emporte. La LFI dans son ensemble est censée favoriser l'atteinte de deux objectifs : le partage équitable des biens du failli entre ses créanciers et la réhabilitation financière du failli. Puisque Redwater est une société qui ne s'extirpera jamais de la faillite, seul le premier objectif est pertinent en l'espèce.

Les ordonnances d'abandon et exigences relatives à la CGR reposent sur des lois provinciales valides d'application générale et elles représentent exactement le genre de loi provinciale valide sur lequel se fonde la LFI. Il n'y a aucun conflit entre le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta et l'art. 14.06 de la LFI parce que, suivant le par. 14.06(4), la renonciation du syndic à un bien réel en cas d'ordonnance de réparation de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement et touchant ce bien dégage le syndic de toute responsabilité personnelle, alors que la responsabilité continue de l'actif du failli n'est pas touchée. Cette interprétation est étayée par le texte clair de l'article, les débats parlementaires, un arrêt de notre Cour et la version française de l'article. On retrouve également le même concept aux par. 14.06(1.2) et (2), lesquels disposent expressément que le syndic est dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle. Il est impossible d'interpréter de manière cohérente le par. 14.06(2) comme mentionnant la responsabilité personnelle tout en interprétant le par. 14.06(4) comme renvoyant d'une façon ou d'une autre à la responsabilité de l'actif du failli.

À supposer même que GTL ait renoncé avec succès à des biens en l'espèce, l'organisme de réglementation ne cause aucun conflit d'application ni n'entrave la réalisation d'un objet fédéral en exigeant de GTL, à titre de titulaire de permis, qu'il se serve d'éléments de l'actif pour abandonner les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. En outre, il n'y aurait aucun conflit du fait que ces biens soient restraint with which the doctrine of paramountcy must be applied, and given that the Regulator has not attempted to hold GTL personally liable as a licensee for the costs of abandonment, no conflict with s. 14.06(2) or s. 14.06(4) of the BIA is caused by the mere theoretical possibility of personal liability under the OGCA or the Pipeline Act.

The end-of-life obligations binding on GTL are not claims provable in the Redwater bankruptcy. Not all environmental obligations enforced by a regulator will be claims provable in bankruptcy. The test set out by the Court in Newfoundland and Labrador v. AbitibiBowater Inc., 2012 SCC 67, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 443 ("Abitibi"), must be applied to determine whether a particular regulatory obligation amounts to a claim provable in bankruptcy: (1) there must be a debt, a liability or an obligation to a creditor; (2) the debt, liability or obligation must be incurred before the debtor becomes bankrupt; and (3) it must be possible to attach a monetary value to the debt, liability or obligation. Only the first and third parts of the test are at issue in the instant case.

With respect to the first part of the test, Abitibi should not be taken as standing for the proposition that a regulator is always a creditor when it exercises its statutory enforcement powers against a debtor. A regulator exercising a power to enforce a public duty is not a creditor of the individual or corporation subject to that duty. Here, it is not disputed that, in seeking to enforce Redwater's end-of-life obligations, the Regulator is acting in a bona fide regulatory capacity and does not stand to benefit financially. It is clear that the Regulator acted in the public interest and for the public good in issuing the Abandonment Orders and enforcing the LMR requirements and that it is, therefore, not a creditor of Redwater. The public is the beneficiary of those environmental obligations; the province does not stand to gain financially from them. Strictly speaking, this is sufficient to dispose of this aspect of the appeal.

As it may prove helpful in future cases, under the third part of the test, a court must determine whether there are sufficient facts indicating the existence of an environmental duty that will ripen into a financial liability owed toujours inclus dans le calcul de la CGR de Redwater. Enfin, vu la retenue avec laquelle il faut appliquer la doctrine de la prépondérance, et vu que l'organisme de réglementation n'a pas tenté de tenir GTL personnellement responsable, en tant que titulaire de permis, des frais d'abandon, aucun conflit avec les par. 14.06(2) ou (4) de la LFI n'est causé par la simple possibilité théorique de responsabilité personnelle en application de la OGCA ou de la Pipeline Act.

Les obligations de fin de vie incombant à GTL ne sont pas des réclamations prouvables dans la faillite de Redwater. Les obligations environnementales appliquées par un organisme de réglementation ne sont pas toutes des réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite. Il faut appliquer le critère énoncé par la Cour dans Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador c. AbitibiBowater Inc., 2012 CSC 67, [2012] 3 R.C.S. 443 (« Abitibi »), pour déterminer si une obligation réglementaire précise équivaut à une réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite : (1) on doit être en présence d'une dette, d'un engagement ou d'une obligation envers un créancier; (2) la dette, l'engagement ou l'obligation doit avoir pris naissance avant que le débiteur ne devienne failli; et (3) il doit être possible d'attribuer une valeur pécuniaire à cette dette, cet engagement ou cette obligation. Seules les première et troisième parties du critère sont en litige dans la présente affaire.

Pour ce qui est de la première partie du critère, l'arrêt Abitibi ne doit pas être considéré comme soutenant la thèse qu'un organisme de réglementation est toujours un créancier lorsqu'il exerce les pouvoirs d'application qui lui sont dévolus par la loi à l'encontre d'un débiteur. L'organisme de réglementation exerçant un pouvoir pour faire respecter un devoir public n'est pas un créancier de la personne ou de la société assujettie à ce devoir. En l'espèce, personne ne conteste qu'en cherchant à assurer le respect des obligations de fin de vie incombant à Redwater, l'organisme de réglementation agit de bonne foi à titre d'autorité de réglementation et il n'est pas en mesure d'obtenir un avantage financier. Il est clair que l'organisme de réglementation a agi dans l'intérêt public et pour le bien public en rendant les ordonnances d'abandon et en assurant le respect des exigences relatives à la CGR, et qu'il n'est donc pas un créancier de Redwater. C'est le public qui bénéficie de ces obligations environnementales; la province n'est pas en mesure d'en bénéficier financièrement. Cela suffit, à proprement parler, pour trancher cet aspect du pourvoi.

Comme cela pourrait se révéler utile à l'avenir, à la troisième partie du critère, le tribunal doit décider s'il y a suffisamment de faits indiquant qu'il existe une obligation environnementale de laquelle résultera une dette envers un to a regulator. In determining whether a non-monetary regulatory obligation of a bankrupt is too remote or too speculative to be included in the bankruptcy proceeding, the court must apply the general rules that apply to future or contingent claims. It must be sufficiently certain that the contingency will come to pass — in other words, that the regulator will enforce the obligation by performing the environmental work and seeking reimbursement. In the instant case, the Abandonment Orders and the LMR requirements fail to satisfy this part of the test. It is not established by the evidence that it is sufficiently certain that the Regulator will perform the abandonments and advance a claim for reimbursement. This claim is too remote and speculative to be included in the bankruptcy process. Furthermore, the Regulator's refusal to approve licence transfers unless and until the LMR requirements have been satisfied does not give it a monetary claim against Redwater.

In crafting the priority scheme of the BIA, Parliament intended to permit regulators to place a first charge on real property of a bankrupt affected by an environmental condition or damage in order to fund remediation. Thus, the BIA explicitly contemplates that environmental regulators will extract value from the bankrupt's real property if that property is affected by an environmental condition or damage. Although the nature of property ownership in the Alberta oil and gas industry meant that s. 14.06(7) was unavailable to the Regulator, the Abandonment Orders and the LMR replicate the effect of s. 14.06(7) in this case. Furthermore, Redwater's only substantial assets were affected by environmental conditions or damage. Accordingly, the Abandonment Orders and LMR requirements did not seek to force Redwater to fulfill end-of-life obligations with assets unrelated to the environmental condition or damage. In other words, recognizing that the Abandonment Orders and LMR requirements are not provable claims in this case does not interfere with the aims of the BIA — rather, it facilitates them.

Per Moldaver and Côté JJ. (dissenting): GTL and ATB have satisfied their burden of demonstrating a genuine inconsistency between federal and provincial law under both branches of the paramountcy test, namely operational conflict and frustration of purpose. Accordingly, the appeal should be dismissed.

organisme de réglementation. Pour établir si une obligation réglementaire non pécuniaire du failli est trop éloignée ou trop conjecturale pour être incluse dans la procédure de faillite, le tribunal doit appliquer les règles générales qui visent les réclamations futures ou éventuelles. Il doit être suffisamment certain que l'éventualité se concrétisera ou, en d'autres termes, que l'organisme de réglementation fera respecter l'obligation en exécutant les travaux environnementaux et en sollicitant le remboursement de ses frais. Dans le cas présent, les ordonnances d'abandon et les exigences relatives à la CGR ne satisfont pas à cette partie du critère. La preuve n'établit pas qu'il est suffisamment certain que l'organisme de réglementation procédera à l'abandon et présentera une demande de remboursement. Cette réclamation est trop éloignée et conjecturale pour être incluse dans la procédure de faillite. En outre, le refus de l'organisme de réglementation d'approuver les transferts de permis jusqu'à ce que les exigences relatives à la CGR aient été satisfaites ne lui donne pas une réclamation pécuniaire contre Redwater.

Au moment d'élaborer le régime de priorité de la LFI, le Parlement voulait permettre aux organismes de réglementation d'imposer une charge prioritaire sur le bien réel du failli touché par un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement en vue de financer la décontamination. Ainsi, la LFI envisage explicitement la possibilité que des organismes de réglementation tirent une valeur des biens réels du failli touchés par un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement. Bien que l'organisme de réglementation n'ait pu se prévaloir du par. 14.06(7), compte tenu de la nature de la propriété des biens dans l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de l'Alberta, les ordonnances d'abandon et la CGR reproduisent l'effet du par. 14.06(7) en l'espèce. De plus, les seuls biens de valeur de Redwater étaient touchés par un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement. Les ordonnances d'abandon et exigences relatives à la CGR n'avaient donc pas pour objet de forcer Redwater à s'acquitter des obligations de fin de vie avec des biens étrangers au fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement. Autrement dit, la reconnaissance que les ordonnances d'abandon et exigences relatives à la CGR ne sont pas des réclamations prouvables en l'espèce facilite l'atteinte des objets de la LFI au lieu de la contrecarrer.

Les juges Moldaver et Côté (dissidents) : GTL et ATB se sont acquittés de leur fardeau de démontrer qu'il existe une incompatibilité véritable entre la loi fédérale et la loi provinciale selon les deux volets du test de la prépondérance, à savoir le conflit d'application et l'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral. Par conséquent, il y a lieu de rejeter le pourvoi.

Because Alberta's statutory regime does not recognize the disclaimers by trustees of assets encumbered by environmental liabilities as lawful by virtue of the fact that receivers and trustees are regulated as licensees who cannot disclaim assets, there is an unavoidable conflict between federal and provincial law. Alberta's legislation governing the oil and gas sector should therefore be held inoperative to the extent that it does not recognize the legal effect of GTL's disclaimers. An operational conflict arises where it is impossible to comply with both laws. An operational conflict analysis is an exercise in statutory interpretation: the Court must ascertain the meaning of each competing enactment in order to determine whether dual compliance is possible. This interpretation exercise takes place within the guiding confines of cooperative federalism, which operates as a straightforward interpretive presumption — one that supports, rather than supplants, the modern approach to statutory interpretation. Courts should favour an interpretation of the federal legislation that allows the concurrent operation of both laws; however, where the proper meaning of the provision cannot support a harmonious interpretation, it is beyond a court's power to create harmony where Parliament did not intend it.

In the instant case, reliance on cooperative federalism must not result in an interpretation of s. 14.06(4) of the BIA that is inconsistent with its language, context and purpose. The natural meaning which appears when s. 14.06(4) is simply read through is that it assumes and incorporates a pre-existing common law right to disclaim property in the context of bankruptcy and insolvency. This right is in keeping with the fundamental objective of trustees, which is the maximization of recovery for creditors as a whole by realizing the estate's valuable assets. It enables trustees to administer the estate in the most efficient manner and to avoid significant costs of administration that would reduce creditor recovery. Section 14.06(4) expresses the disclaimer right in unqualified terms and emphasizes that a trustee may not be held liable whenever that right is exercised. Parliament did not intend to condition the right to disclaim property on the actual existence of a risk of personal liability. Although the opening words of s. 14.06(4) refer to the personal liability of the trustee, when the words of the provision are read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act and the intention of Parliament, their meaning becomes apparent. Avoiding personal liability is not the only effect of the appropriate exercise of this power. By properly disclaiming certain properties, the trustee is relieved of Étant donné que le régime législatif albertain ne reconnaît pas la légalité des renonciations des syndics à des biens grevés d'engagements environnementaux en raison du fait que les séquestres et les syndics sont réglementés comme des titulaires de permis qui ne peuvent renoncer à des biens, il y a un conflit inévitable entre la loi fédérale et la loi provinciale. La loi albertaine régissant l'industrie pétrolière et gazière devrait donc être déclarée inopérante dans la mesure où elle ne reconnaît pas l'effet juridique des renonciations de GTL. Il y a conflit d'application lorsqu'il est impossible de respecter les deux lois. L'analyse relative au conflit d'application relève de l'interprétation des lois : la Cour doit déterminer le sens de chaque loi concurrente afin de décider s'il est possible de respecter les deux lois. Cette démarche d'interprétation s'effectue à l'intérieur du cadre directeur du fédéralisme coopératif, lequel fait office de simple présomption en matière d'interprétation — qui appuie, sans la supplanter, la méthode moderne d'interprétation des lois. Les tribunaux doivent favoriser une interprétation de la loi fédérale permettant une application concurrente des deux lois; cependant, lorsque le sens qu'il convient de donner à la disposition ne peut appuyer une interprétation harmonieuse, un tribunal n'a pas le pouvoir de créer l'harmonie là où le Parlement n'a pas eu l'intention de le faire.

En l'espèce, le recours au principe du fédéralisme coopératif ne doit pas donner lieu à une interprétation du par. 14.06(4) de la LFI qui est incompatible avec son libellé, son contexte et son objet. Le sens naturel qui se dégage de la simple lecture du par. 14.06(4) dans son ensemble est qu'il présume et incorpore un droit préexistant en common law de renoncer à des biens dans le contexte de la faillite et de l'insolvabilité. Ce droit est en accord avec l'objectif fondamental poursuivi par les syndics : maximiser le recouvrement au bénéfice de l'ensemble des créanciers par la réalisation des éléments de valeur de l'actif. Il permet aux syndics d'administrer l'actif le plus efficacement possible et leur épargne des frais considérables d'administration qui réduiraient le recouvrement pour les créanciers. Le paragraphe 14.06(4) exprime le droit de renonciation en des termes qui ne comportent aucune restriction et fait ressortir que le syndic ne peut être tenu responsable quand ce droit est exercé. Le Parlement ne voulait pas rendre le droit de renoncer à un bien tributaire de l'existence d'un risque de responsabilité personnelle. Bien que le début du par. 14.06(4) parle de la responsabilité personnelle du syndic, lorsqu'on lit les termes de la disposition dans leur contexte global en suivant le sens ordinaire et grammatical qui s'harmonise avec l'économie de la loi, l'objet de la loi et l'intention du législateur, leur sens devient apparent. La protection contre any liabilities associated with the disclaimed property and loses the ability to sell it for the benefit of the estate. The disclaimer right allows the trustee not to realize assets that would provide no value to the estate's creditors and whose realization would therefore undermine the trustee's objective of maximizing recovery. However, s. 14.06(4) does not relieve the estate of its liabilities or environmental obligations once a trustee exercises the disclaimer power. The disclaimed property ultimately reverts to the estate at the conclusion of the bankruptcy proceedings, as is the case with unrealized assets. Whether the estate has sufficient assets capable of satisfying those liabilities at that point in time is a separate question that is unrelated to the underlying fact of ongoing liability.

In accordance with the predominant and well-established modern approach to statutory interpretation, courts must read statutory provisions in their entire context, as parts of a coherent whole. In s. 14.06(4) of the BIA, Parliament has expressly referred to this disclaimer power and spelled out the particular effects flowing from its proper exercise. By doing so, it has purposefully incorporated the disclaimer power into its statutory scheme to achieve its desired purpose. Courts must read statutory provisions in their entire context, and Parliament is presumed to craft sections and subsections of legislation as parts of a coherent whole. The immediate statutory context surrounding s. 14.06(4), specifically, ss. 14.06(2), (5), (6) and (7), as well as the Hansard evidence, confirms that a trustee's right to disclaim property is not limited to protecting itself from personal liability.

The power to disclaim assets provided to trustees by s. 14.06(4) of the BIA was available to GTL on the facts of this case. The statutory conditions to the exercise of this power were met: the Abandonment Orders clearly relate to the remediation of an environmental condition. Additionally, the right of disclaimer is applicable in the context of the statutory regime governing the oil and gas industry. In delineating what interests may be disclaimed by a trustee under s. 14.06(4), Parliament used exceptionally broad language: the trustee is permitted to disclaim "any interest" in "any real property". GTL sought to disclaim profits à prendre and surface leases, which can be characterized as real property interests.

The requirement by the Regulator that GTL satisfy Redwater's environmental liabilities ahead of the estate's toute responsabilité personnelle n'est pas le seul effet de l'exercice régulier de ce pouvoir. En renonçant à bon droit à certains biens, le syndic est dégagé de toute responsabilité associée aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation et ne peut plus vendre les biens au profit de l'actif. Le droit de renonciation permet au syndic de ne pas réaliser des biens qui ne seraient pas profitables aux créanciers de l'actif et compromettraient par le fait même son objectif de maximiser le recouvrement. Cependant, le par. 14.06(4) ne décharge pas l'actif de ses obligations ou engagements environnementaux une fois que le syndic exerce le pouvoir de renonciation. Le bien visé par une renonciation retourne ultimement dans l'actif du failli à l'issue du processus de faillite, comme c'est le cas pour les biens non réalisés. La question de savoir si les éléments d'actif sont suffisants pour satisfaire à ces engagements à ce moment précis est une question distincte qui n'a aucun rapport avec le fait sous-jacent de la responsabilité continue.

D'après la méthode prédominante et bien établie d'interprétation des lois, les tribunaux doivent lire les dispositions législatives dans leur contexte global, comme un tout cohérent. Au paragraphe 14.06(4) de la LFI, le Parlement a mentionné expressément ce pouvoir de renonciation et exposé les effets particuliers découlant de son exercice approprié. Il a incorporé ainsi à dessein à son régime législatif le pouvoir de renonciation pour en réaliser l'objectif visé. Les tribunaux doivent lire les dispositions législatives dans leur contexte global, et le Parlement est présumé rédiger les articles et paragraphes d'une loi comme un tout cohérent. Le contexte immédiat du par. 14.06(4), plus précisément les par. 14.06(2), (5), (6) et (7), ainsi que les débats parlementaires, confirme que le droit du syndic de renoncer à des biens ne se limite pas à se prémunir contre une responsabilité personnelle.

Le pouvoir de renoncer à des biens que confère aux syndics le par. 14.06(4) de la LFI pouvait être exercé par GTL à la lumière des faits de la présente affaire. Les conditions statutaires préalables à l'exercice de ce pouvoir étaient réunies : les ordonnances d'abandon se rapportent clairement à la réparation d'un fait lié à l'environnement. En outre, le droit de renonciation s'applique dans le contexte du régime législatif régissant l'industrie pétrolière et gazière. En décidant des intérêts auxquels peut renoncer un syndic en vertu du par. 14.06(4), le Parlement a utilisé des mots exceptionnellement larges : il est permis au syndic de renoncer à « tout intérêt » sur « le bien réel ». GTL a tenté de renoncer aux profits à prendre et aux droits de surface, qui peuvent être qualifiés d'intérêts sur des biens réels.

L'exigence de l'organisme de réglementation voulant que GTL acquitte les engagements environnementaux de other debts contravenes the BIA's priority scheme. The Province's licensing scheme therefore should be held inoperative under the second prong of the paramountcy test, frustration of purpose. Even where dual compliance with both federal and provincial law is, strictly speaking, possible, provincial legislation or provisions will be rendered inoperative to the extent that they have the effect of frustrating a valid federal legislative purpose. The focus of the analysis is on the effect of the provincial legislation or provision, not its purpose. In the instant case, if the environmental claims asserted by the Regulator (i.e., the Abandonment Orders) are provable in bankruptcy, the Regulator will not be permitted to assert those claims outside the bankruptcy process and ahead of Redwater's secured creditors because this would frustrate the purpose of the federal priority scheme.

In Abitibi, the Court established a three-part test, rooted in the language of the BIA, to determine whether a claim is provable in bankruptcy. The first prong of the Abitibi test asks whether the debt, liability or obligation at issue is owed by a bankrupt entity to a creditor. The language of Abitibi admits of no ambiguity, uncertainty or doubt: the only determination that has to be made is whether the regulatory body has exercised its enforcement power against a debtor. Most environmental regulatory bodies can be creditors, and government entities cannot systematically evade the priority requirements of federal bankruptcy legislation under the guise of enforcing public duties. In the instant case, the first prong is satisfied. There is no doubt that the Regulator exercised its enforcement power against a debtor when it issued orders requiring Redwater to perform the environmental work on the non-producing properties. It is neither appropriate nor necessary in this case to attempt to redefine the first prong of the Abitibi test by narrowing the broad definition of "creditor" as the majority does.

There is no dispute that the second prong of the Abitibi test, which requires that the debt, liability or obligation be incurred before the debtor becomes bankrupt, is satisfied. The third prong asks whether it is sufficiently certain that the regulator will perform the work and make a claim for reimbursement. In this case, it is sufficiently certain that either the Regulator or its delegate, the OWA, will ultimately perform the abandonment and reclamation work and assert a monetary claim for reimbursement. Therefore, the final prong of the Abitibi test is satisfied. The chambers

Redwater avant les autres dettes de l'actif contrevient au régime de priorité établi par la LFI. Le régime provincial de délivrance de permis devrait donc être déclaré inopérant suivant le second volet du critère de la prépondérance, l'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral. Même lorsqu'il est à proprement parler possible de se conformer à la fois à la loi fédérale et à la loi provinciale, la loi ou les dispositions provinciales seront néanmoins rendues inopérantes dans la mesure où elles ont pour effet d'entraver la réalisation d'un objet valide d'une loi fédérale. L'analyse est axée sur l'effet de la loi ou de la disposition provinciale, et non sur son objet. En l'espèce, si les réclamations environnementales que fait valoir l'organisme de réglementation (c.-à-d. les ordonnances d'abandon) sont prouvables en matière de faillite, il n'est pas autorisé à faire valoir ces réclamations en dehors du processus de faillite et avant les créanciers garantis de Redwater, car cela entraverait la réalisation de l'objet du régime de priorité fédéral.

Dans Abitibi, la Cour a établi un test à trois volets, fondé sur le libellé de la LFI, pour déterminer si une réclamation est prouvable en matière de faillite. Le premier volet du test Abitibi pose la question de savoir si la dette, l'engagement ou l'obligation en cause sont dus par une entité faillie à un créancier. Le texte de cet arrêt ne laisse place à aucune ambiguïté, incertitude ou doute à cet égard : la seule question à trancher est de savoir si l'organisme de réglementation a exercé, à l'encontre d'un débiteur, son pouvoir de faire appliquer la loi. La plupart des organismes de réglementation environnementaux peuvent agir à titre de créanciers, et les entités gouvernementales ne sauraient systématiquement se soustraire aux exigences en matière de priorité de la loi fédérale sur la faillite sous le couvert de l'obligation de faire respecter les devoirs publics. Dans la présente affaire, il est satisfait au premier volet. Il ne fait aucun doute que l'organisme de réglementation a exercé son pouvoir d'appliquer la loi à l'encontre d'une débitrice lorsqu'il a rendu les ordonnances enjoignant à Redwater d'accomplir les travaux environnementaux sur les biens inexploités. Il n'est ni approprié ni nécessaire en l'espèce d'essayer de redéfinir ce volet du test Abitibi en restreignant le large sens attribué par la majorité au mot « créancier ».

Personne ne conteste qu'il est satisfait au second volet du test Abitibi, lequel exige que la dette, l'engagement ou l'obligation ait pris naissance avant que le débiteur ne devienne failli. Le troisième volet pose la question de savoir s'il est suffisamment certain que l'organisme de réglementation exécutera les travaux et présentera une demande de remboursement. En l'espèce, il est suffisamment certain que l'organisme de réglementation ou sa délégataire, l'OWA, effectuera ultimement les travaux d'abandon et de remise en état et fera valoir une réclamation pécuniaire judge made three critical findings of fact that easily support this conclusion. First, he found that GTL was not in possession of the disclaimed properties and, in any event, had no ability to perform any kind of work on these assets because the environmental liabilities exceeded the value of the estate itself and Redwater had no working interest participants that would step in to perform the work. As a result, he concluded that there was no other party who could be compelled to carry out the work. Second, in light of the fact that neither GTL nor Redwater's working interest participants would (or could) undertake this work, the chambers judge found as a fact that the Regulator will ultimately be responsible for the abandonment costs, since it has the power to seek recovery of abandonment costs and has actually performed the work on occasion, and has expressly stated an intention to seek reimbursement for the costs of abandoning the renounced assets. Third, the chambers judge found that the Regulator's only realistic alternative to performing the remediation work itself was to deem the renounced assets to be orphan wells. In this circumstance, he found that the legislation and evidence shows that if the Regulator deems a well an orphan, then the OWA will perform the work. In light of these factual determinations, the chambers judge rightly concluded that the sufficient certainty standard of Abitibi was satisfied because at a minimum, either the Regulator or the OWA will complete the abandonment work.

The majority elevates form over substance in concluding that the sufficient certainty standard is not satisfied when a regulatory body's delegate, as opposed to the regulatory body itself, performs the work. Considering the salient features of the OWA and its relationship with the Regulator, one must conclude that they are inextricably intertwined. When the Regulator exercises its statutory powers to declare a property an "orphan" under s. 70(2) of Alberta's Oil and Gas Conservation Act, it effectively delegates the abandonment work to the OWA. The majority's alternative conclusion that it is not sufficiently certain that even the OWA will perform the abandonment work would permit the Regulator to benefit from strategic gamesmanship by manipulating the timing of its intervention in order to escape the insolvency regime and strip Redwater of its assets.

afin d'obtenir un remboursement. Il est donc satisfait au dernier volet du test Abitibi. Le juge en cabinet a tiré trois conclusions de fait cruciales qui appuient aisément cette conclusion. Premièrement, il a conclu que GTL n'était pas en possession des biens visés par les renonciations et, de toute façon, qu'il ne peut pas exécuter de travaux sur ces biens parce que les engagements environnementaux dépassaient la valeur de l'actif même et Redwater ne comptait aucun participant en participation directe qui se chargerait d'exécuter les travaux. Il a donc conclu qu'il n'existe aucune autre partie susceptible d'être contrainte d'exécuter les travaux. Deuxièmement, compte tenu du fait que ni GTL ni les participants en participation directe de Redwater ne voudraient (ou ne pourraient) entreprendre ces travaux, le juge en cabinet a tiré la conclusion de fait selon laquelle l'organisme de réglementation sera en fin de compte responsable des frais d'abandon, car il a le pouvoir de tenter de recouvrer les frais d'abandon et a réellement exécuté les travaux à l'occasion. Il a aussi expressément manifesté l'intention de demander le remboursement des frais liés à l'abandon des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. Troisièmement, le juge en cabinet a conclu que la seule solution réaliste qui s'offre à l'organisme de réglementation autre que celle d'effectuer lui-même les travaux de décontamination était de considérer les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation comme des puits orphelins. Il a conclu qu'en pareil cas, les dispositions législatives et les éléments de preuve démontrent que, si l'organisme de réglementation considère un puits comme orphelin, l'OWA exécutera les travaux. À la lumière de ces conclusions de fait, le juge en cabinet a eu raison de conclure qu'il était satisfait à la norme de certitude suffisante énoncée dans Abitibi parce qu'à tout le moins, l'organisme de réglementation ou l'OWA mènerait à terme les travaux d'abandon.

La majorité fait passer la forme avant le fond en concluant qu'il n'est pas satisfait à la norme de certitude suffisante lorsque le délégataire de l'organisme de réglementation, et non l'organisme de réglementation lui-même, effectue les travaux. Vu les caractéristiques saillantes de l'OWA et de sa relation avec l'organisme de réglementation, force est de constater qu'ils sont inextricablement liés. Lorsque l'organisme de réglementation exerce le pouvoir de déclarer un bien « orphelin » que lui confère le par. 70(2) de l'Oil and Gas Conservation Act de l'Alberta, il délègue effectivement l'exécution des travaux d'abandon à l'OWA. La conclusion subsidiaire de la majorité selon laquelle il n'est pas suffisamment certain que même l'OWA exécutera les travaux d'abandon permettrait à l'organisme de réglementation de tirer profit de manœuvres stratégiques en manipulant le moment de son intervention afin de se soustraire au régime d'insolvabilité et de dépouiller Redwater de ses biens.

Since it is sufficiently certain that the Regulator (or the OWA, as its delegate) will complete the abandonment and reclamation work, all three prongs of the Abitibi test are satisfied. The Regulator's Abandonment Orders constitute "claims provable in bankruptcy". It would undermine the BIA's priority scheme and therefore frustrate an essential purpose of the BIA if the Regulator could assert those claims outside the bankruptcy process — and ahead of the estate's secured creditors — whether by compelling GTL to carry out those orders or by making the sale of Redwater's valuable assets conditional on the fulfillment of those obligations.

Cases Cited

By Wagner C.J.

Applied: Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd., 1991 ABCA 181, 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45; Newfoundland and Labrador v. AbitibiBowater Inc., 2012 SCC 67, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 443; approved: Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2013 ONCA 599, 368 D.L.R. (4th) 122; Strathcona (County) v. Fantasy Construction Ltd. (Trustee of), 2005 ABQB 559, 256 D.L.R. (4th) 536; distinguished: Alberta (Attorney General) v. Moloney, 2015 SCC 51, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 327; Northstar Aerospace Inc., Re, 2013 ONCA 600, 8 C.B.R. (6th) 154; referred to: Berkheiser v. Berkheiser, [1957] S.C.R. 387; Imperial Oil Ltd. v. Quebec (Minister of the Environment), 2003 SCC 58, [2003] 2 S.C.R. 624; Peters v. Remington, 2004 ABCA 5, 49 C.B.R. (4th) 273; Garner v. Newton (1916), 29 D.L.R. 276; Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2012 ONSC 1213, 88 C.B.R. (5th) 111; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453; Saskatchewan (Attorney General) v. Lemare Lake Logging Ltd., 2015 SCC 53, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 419; Multiple Access Ltd. v. McCutcheon, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 161; Canadian Western Bank v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 22, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 3; Quebec (Attorney General) v. Canadian Owners and Pilots Association, 2010 SCC 39, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 536; GMAC Commercial Credit Corp. — Canada v. T.C.T. Logistics Inc., 2006 SCC 35, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 123; Canada Trustco Mortgage Co. v. Canada, 2005 SCC 54, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 601; New Skeena Forest Products Inc. v. Don Hull & Sons Contracting Ltd., 2005 BCCA 154, 251 D.L.R. (4th) 328; Ocean Port Hotel Ltd. v. British Columbia (General Manager, Liquor Control and Licensing Branch), 2001 SCC 52, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 781; M. v. H., [1999] 2 S.C.R. 3; R. v. Sappier, 2006 SCC 54, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 686; R. v. Elshaw, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 24; AbitibiBowater Inc., Re, 2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1; Strathcona (County) v. Fantasy Construction Ltd. (Trustee of), 2005 ABQB

Comme il est suffisamment certain que l'organisme de réglementation (ou l'OWA, sa délégataire) achèvera les travaux d'abandon et de remise en état, il est satisfait aux trois volets du test Abitibi. Les ordonnances d'abandon de l'organisme de réglementation constituent des « réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite ». Ce serait saper le régime de priorités établi par la LFI et entraver la réalisation d'un objet essentiel de la LFI que de permettre à l'organisme de réglementation de faire valoir ces réclamations en dehors du processus de faillite — et en priorité par rapport aux créanciers garantis de l'actif — que ce soit en obligeant GTL à exécuter ces ordonnances ou en faisant dépendre la vente des biens de valeur de Redwater de l'acquittement de ces obligations.

Jurisprudence

Citée par le juge en chef Wagner

Arrêts appliqués : Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. c. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd., 1991 ABCA 181, 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45; Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador c. AbitibiBowater Inc., 2012 CSC 67, [2012] 3 R.C.S. 443; arrêts approuvés : Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2013 ONCA 599, 368 D.L.R. (4th) 122; Strathcona (County) c. Fantasy Construction Ltd. (Trustee of), 2005 ABQB 559, 256 D.L.R. (4th) 536; distinction d'avec les arrêts : Alberta (Procureur général) c. Moloney, 2015 CSC 51, [2015] 3 R.C.S. 327; Northstar Aerospace Inc., Re, 2013 ONCA 600, 8 C.B.R. (6th) 154; arrêts mentionnés : Berkheiser c. Berkheiser, [1957] R.C.S. 387; Cie pétrolière Impériale ltée c. Québec (Ministre de l'Environnement), 2003 CSC 58, [2003] 2 R.C.S. 624; Peters c. Remington, 2004 ABCA 5, 49 C.B.R. (4th) 273; Garner c. Newton (1916), 29 D.L.R. 276; Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2012 ONSC 1213, 88 C.B.R. (5th) 111; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. c. Ministre du Revenu national, [1995] 3 R.C.S. 453; Saskatchewan (Procureur général) c. Lemare Lake Logging Ltd., 2015 CSC 53, [2015] 3 R.C.S. 419; Multiple Access Ltd. c. McCutcheon, [1982] 2 R.C.S. 161; Banque canadienne de l'Ouest c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 22, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 3; Québec (Procureur général) c. Canadian Owners and Pilots Association, 2010 CSC 39, [2010] 2 R.C.S. 536; Société de crédit commercial GMAC — Canada c. T.C.T. Logistics Inc., 2006 CSC 35, [2006] 2 R.C.S. 123; Hypothèques Trustco Canada c. Canada, 2005 CSC 54, [2005] 2 R.C.S. 601; New Skeena Forest Products Inc. c. Don Hull & Sons Contracting Ltd., 2005 BCCA 154, 251 D.L.R. (4th) 328; Ocean Port Hotel Ltd. c. Colombie-Britannique (General Manager, Liquor Control and Licensing Branch), 2001 CSC 52, [2001] 2 R.C.S. 781; M. c. H., [1999] 2 R.C.S. 3; R. c. Sappier, 2006 CSC 54, [2006] 2 R.C.S. 686; R. c. Elshaw, [1991] 3 R.C.S. 24; AbitibiBowater Inc., Re, 2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R.

794, 261 D.L.R. (4th) 221; Lamford Forest Products Ltd. (Re) (1991), 86 D.L.R. (4th) 534; Daishowa-Marubeni International Ltd. v. Canada, 2013 SCC 29, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 336; Alberta Energy Regulator v. Grant Thornton Limited, 2017 ABCA 278, 57 Alta. L.R. (6th) 37.

By Côté J. (dissenting)

Newfoundland and Labrador v. AbitibiBowater Inc., 2012 SCC 67, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 443; Alberta (Attorney General) v. Moloney, 2015 SCC 51, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 327; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453; Saskatchewan (Attorney General) v. Lemare Lake Logging Ltd., 2015 SCC 53, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 419; Canadian Western Bank v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 22, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 3; Multiple Access Ltd. v. McCutcheon, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 161; Reference re Pan-Canadian Securities Regulation, 2018 SCC 48, [2018] 3 S.C.R. 189; Canadian Pacific Air Lines Ltd. v. Canadian Air Line Pilots Assn., [1993] 3 S.C.R. 724; New Skeena Forest Products Inc. v. Don Hull & Sons Contracting Ltd., 2005 BCCA 154, 251 D.L.R. (4th) 328; Re Thompson Knitting Co., Ltd., [1925] 2 D.L.R. 1007; Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, 2002 SCC 42, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559; Attorney General of Quebec v. Carrières Ste-Thérèse Ltée, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 831; Mitchell v. Peguis Indian Band, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 85; GMAC Commercial Credit Corp. — Canada v. T.C.T. Logistics Inc., 2006 SCC 35, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 123; Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27; Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd., 1991 ABCA 181, 81 D.L.R. (4th) 280; Canada (Attorney General) v. JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007 SCC 30, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 610; Morgentaler v. The Queen, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 616; R. v. L.T.H., 2008 SCC 49, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 739; Bank of Montreal v. Hall, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 121; Century Services Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2010 SCC 60, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 379; Teva Canada Ltd. v. TD Canada Trust, 2017 SCC 51, [2017] 2 S.C.R. 317; Canada v. Craig, 2012 SCC 43, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 489; Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235; Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2013 ONCA 599, 6 C.B.R. (6th) 159; Northstar Aerospace Inc., Re, 2013 ONCA 600, 8 C.B.R. (6th) 154; Sydco Energy Inc. (Re), 2018 ABQB 75, 64 Alta. L.R. (6th) 156.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Alberta Energy Regulator Administration Fees Rules, Alta. Reg. 98/2013.

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, ss. 2 "claim provable in bankruptcy, provable claim or claim

(5th) 1; Strathcona (County) c. Fantasy Construction Ltd. (Trustee of), 2005 ABQB 794, 261 D.L.R. (4th) 221; Lamford Forest Products Ltd. (Re) (1991), 86 D.L.R. (4th) 534; Daishowa-Marubeni International Ltd. c. Canada, 2013 CSC 29, [2013] 2 R.C.S. 336; Alberta Energy Regulator c. Grant Thornton Limited, 2017 ABCA 278, 57 Alta. L. R. (6th) 37.

Citée par la juge Côté (dissidente)

Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador c. AbitibiBowater Inc., 2012 CSC 67, [2012] 3 R.C.S. 443; Alberta (Procureur général) c. Moloney, 2015 CSC 51, [2015] 3 R.C.S. 327; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. c. Ministre du Revenu national, [1995] 3 R.C.S. 453; Saskatchewan (Procureur général) c. Lemare Lake Logging Ltd., 2015 CSC 53, [2015] 3 R.C.S. 419; Banque canadienne de l'Ouest c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 22, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 3; Multiple Access Ltd. c. McCutcheon, [1982] 2 R.C.S. 161; Renvoi relatif à la réglementation pancanadienne des valeurs mobilières, 2018 CSC 48, [2018] 3 R.C.S. 189; Lignes aériennes Canadien Pacifique Ltée c. Assoc. Canadienne des pilotes de lignes aériennes, [1993] 3 R.C.S. 724; New Skeena Forest Products Inc. c. Don Hull & Sons Contracting Ltd., 2005 BCCA 154, 251 D.L.R. (4th) 328; Re Thompson Knitting Co., Ltd., [1925] 2 D.L.R. 1007; Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership c. Rex, 2002 CSC 42, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 559; Procureur général du Québec c. Carrières Ste-Thérèse Ltée, [1985] 1 R.C.S. 831; Mitchell c. Bande indienne Peguis, [1990] 2 R.C.S. 85; Société de crédit commercial GMAC — Canada c. T.C.T. Logistics Inc., 2006 CSC 35, [2006] 2 R.C.S. 123; Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 R.C.S. 27; Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. c. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd., 1991 ABCA 181, 81 D.L.R. (4th) 280; Canada (Procureur général) c. JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007 CSC 30, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 610; Morgentaler c. La Reine, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 616; R. c. L.T.H., 2008 CSC 49, [2008] 2 R.C.S. 739; Banque de Montréal c. Hall, [1990] 1 R.C.S. 121; Century Services Inc. c. Canada (Procureur général), 2010 CSC 60, [2010] 3 R.C.S. 379; Teva Canada Ltd. c. TD Canada Trust, 2017 CSC 51, [2017] 2 R.C.S. 317; Canada c. Craig, 2012 CSC 43, [2012] 2 R.C.S. 489; Housen c. Nikolaisen, 2002 CSC 33, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 235; Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2013 ONCA 599, 6 C.B.R. (6th) 159; Northstar Aerospace Inc., Re, 2013 ONCA 600, 8 C.B.R. (6th) 154; Sydco Energy Inc. (Re), 2018 ABQB 75, 64 Alta. L.R. (6th) 156.

Lois et règlements cités

Alberta Energy Regulator Administration Fees Rules, Alta. Reg. 98/2013.

Conservation and Reclamation Regulation, Alta. Reg. 115/93.

provable", "creditor", 14.06, (2), (4) [am. 1997, c. 12, s. 15(1)], 16 to 38, 40, 69.3(1), (2), 72(1), 80, 121 to 154, 169(4), 197(3).

Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, s. 11.8(8).

Conservation and Reclamation Regulation, Alta. Reg. 115/93.

Constitution Act, 1867, ss. 91(21), 92(13), 92A(1)(c).

Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-12, ss. 1(ddd), 112 to 122, 134(b), 137, 140, 142(1)(a)(ii), 227 to 230, 240, 245.

Oil and Gas Conservation Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. O-6, ss. 1(1)(a), (w), (cc), (eee), 11(1), 12(1), 18(1), 24(2), 25, 27 to 30, 68(d), 70(1), (2), 73(1), (2), 74, 106, 108, 110.

Oil and Gas Conservation Rules, Alta. Reg. 151/71, ss. 1.100(2), 3.012.

Orphan Fund Delegated Administration Regulation, Alta. Reg. 45/2001, ss. 3(2)(b), 6.

Pipeline Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. P-15, ss. 1(1)(a), (n), (t), 6(1), 9(1), 23 to 26, 51 to 54.

Responsible Energy Development Act, S.A. 2012, c. R-17.3, ss. 2(1)(a), 2(2)(h), 3(1), 28, 29.

Surface Rights Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. S-24, ss. 1(h), 15.

Authors Cited

Alberta. Energy Resources Conservation Board. Directive 006: Licensee Liability Rating (LLR) Program and Licence Transfer Process, March 12, 2013.

Alberta Energy Regulator. Licensee Eligibility — Alberta Energy Regulator Measures to Limit Environmental Impacts Pending Regulatory Changes to Address the Redwater Decision, June 20, 2016 (online: https://www.aer.ca/documents/bulletins/Bulletin-2016-16.pdf; archived version: https://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2019SCC-CSC5_1_eng.pdf).

Bankes, Nigel. Majority of the Court of Appeal Confirm Chief Justice Wittmann's Redwater Decision, May 3, 2017 (online: https://ablawg.ca/2017/05/03/majority-of-the-court-of-appeal-confirms-chief-justice-wittmanns-redwater-decision; archived version: https://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2019SCC-CSC5_2_eng.pdf).

Bennett, Frank. Bennett on Creditors' and Debtors' Rights and Remedies, 5th ed. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2006.

Canada. House of Commons. Standing Committee on Industry. Evidence, No. 16, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., June 11, 1996.

Canada. House of Commons. Standing Committee on Industry. Evidence, No. 21, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., September 25, 1996.

Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-12, art. 1(ddd), 112 à 122, 134(b), 137, 140, 142(1)(a)(ii), 227 à 230, 240, 245.

Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, art. 91(21), 92(13), 92A(1)c).

Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, c. B-3, art. 2 « réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite ou réclamation prouvable », « créancier », 14.06, (2), (4) [mod. 1997, c. 12, s. 15(1)], 16 à 38, 40, 69.3(1), (2), 72(1), 80, 121 à 154, 169(4), 197(3).

Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, c. C-36, art. 11.8(8).

Oil and Gas Conservation Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. O-6, art. 1(1)(a), (w), (cc), (eee), 11(1), 12(1), 18(1), 24(2), 25, 27 à 30, 68(d), 70(1), (2), 73(1), (2), 74, 106, 108, 110.

Oil and Gas Conservation Rules, Alta. Reg. 151/71, art. 1.100(2), 3.012.

Orphan Fund Delegated Administration Regulation, Alta. Reg. 45/2001, art. 3(2)(b), 6.

Pipeline Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. P-15, art. 1(1)(a), (n), (t), 6(1), 9(1), 23 à 26, 51 à 54.

Responsible Energy Development Act, S.A. 2012, c. R-17.3, art. 2(1)(a), 2(2)(h), 3(1), 28, 29.

Surface Rights Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. S-24, art. 1(h), 15.

Doctrine et autres documents cités

Alberta. Energy Resources Conservation Board. Directive 006 : Licensee Liability Rating (LLR) Program and Licence Transfer Process, March 12, 2013.

Alberta Energy Regulator. Licensee Eligibility — Alberta Energy Regulator Measures to Limit Environmental Impacts Pending Regulatory Changes to Address the Redwater Decision, June 20, 2016 (en ligne : https://www.aer.ca/documents/bulletins/Bulletin-2016-16.pdf; version archivée : https://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2019SCC-CSC5_1_eng.pdf).

Bankes, Nigel. Majority of the Court of Appeal Confirm Chief Justice Wittmann's Redwater Decision, May 3, 2017 (en ligne : https://ablawg.ca/2017/05/03/majority-of-the-court-of-appeal-confirms-chief-justice-wittmanns-redwater-decision; version archivée : https://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2019SCC-CSC5_2_eng.pdf).

Bennett, Frank. Bennett on Creditors' and Debtors' Rights and Remedies, 5th ed., Toronto, Thomson Carswell, 2006.

Canada. Chambre des communes. Comité permanent de l'industrie. Témoignages, nº 16, 2e sess., 35e lég., 11 juin 1996.

Canada. Chambre des communes. Comité permanent de l'industrie, Témoignages, nº 21, 2e sess., 35e lég., 25 septembre 1996.

Canada. Senate. Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, No. 13, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., November 4, 1996.

Goode, Roy. Principles of Corporate Insolvency Law, 4th ed. London: Sweet & Maxwell/Thomson Reuters, 2011.

Grand Robert de la langue française, 2e éd. Paris: Le Robert, 2001, "ès".

Klimek, Jennifer. Insolvency and Environment Liability. Toronto: Carswell, 1994.

Lederman, Sidney N., Alan W. Bryant and Michelle K. Fuerst. The Law of Evidence in Canada, 5th ed. Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis, 2018.

Lund, Anna J. "Lousy Dentists, Bad Drivers, and Abandoned Oil Wells: a New Approach to Reconciling Provincial Regulatory Regimes with Federal Insolvency Law" (2017), 80 Sask. L. Rev. 157.

Oxford English Dictionary (online: http://www.oed.com), "probably".

Robert & Collins (online: https://grc.bvdep.com/login_.asp), "ès qualités".

Silverstein, Lee. "Rejection of Executory Contracts in Bankruptcy and Reorganization" (1964), 31 U. Chi. L. Rev. 467.

Stewart, Fenner L. "How to Deal with a Fickle Friend? Alberta's Troubles with the Doctrine of Federal Paramountcy", in Janis P. Sarra and Barbara Romaine, eds., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2017. Toronto: Thomson Reuters, 2018, 163.

Sullivan, Ruth. Statutory Interpretation, 3rd ed. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2016.

Sullivan, Ruth. Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes, 6th ed. Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis, 2014.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Alberta Court of Appeal (Slatter, Schutz and Martin JJ.A.), 2017 ABCA 124, 47 C.B.R. (6th) 171, [2017] 6 W.W.R. 301, 8 C.E.L.R. (4th) 1, 50 Alta. L.R. (6th) 1, [2017] A.J. No. 402 (QL), 2017 CarswellAlta 695 (WL Can.), affirming a decision of Wittmann C.J., 2016 ABQB 278, 37 C.B.R. (6th) 88, [2016] 11 W.W.R. 716, 33 Alta. L.R. (6th) 221, [2016] A.J. No. 541 (QL), 2016 CarswellAlta 994 (WL Can.). Appeal allowed, Moldaver and Côté JJ. dissenting.

Ken Lenz, Q.C., Patricia Johnston, Q.C., Keely R. Cameron, Brad Gilmour and Michael W. Selnes, for the appellants.

Canada. Sénat. Délibérations du comité sénatorial permanent des Banques et du commerce, no 13, 2e sess., 35e lég., 4 novembre 1996.

Goode, Roy. Principles of Corporate Insolvency Law, 4th ed. London, Sweet & Maxwell/Thomson Reuters, 2011.

Grand Robert de la langue française, 2e éd., Paris, Le Robert, 2001, "ès".

Klimek, Jennifer. Insolvency and Environment Liability. Toronto, Carswell, 1994.

Lederman, Sidney N., Alan W. Bryant and Michelle K. Fuerst. The Law of Evidence in Canada, 5th ed. Markham (Ont.), LexisNexis, 2018.

Lund, Anna J. « Lousy Dentists, Bad Drivers, and Abandoned Oil Wells : a New Approach to Reconciling Provincial Regulatory Regimes with Federal Insolvency Law » (2017), 80 Sask. L. Rev. 157.

Oxford English Dictionary (en ligne : http://www.oed.com), « probably ».

Robert & Collins (en ligne : https://grc.bvdep.com/login_.asp), « ès qualités ».

Silverstein. Lee. « Rejection of Executory Contracts in Bankruptcy and Reorganization » (1964), 31 U. Chi. L. Rev. 467.

Stewart, Fenner L. « How to Deal with a Fickle Friend? Alberta's Troubles with the Doctrine of Federal Paramountcy », in Janis P. Sarra and Barbara Romaine, eds., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2017, Toronto, Thomson Reuters, 2018.

Sullivan, Ruth. Statutory Interpretation, 3rd ed., Toronto, Irwin Law, 2016.

Sullivan, Ruth. Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes, 6th ed., Markham (Ont.), LexisNexis, 2014.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Alberta (les juges Slatter, Schutz et Martin), 2017 ABCA 124, 47 C.B.R. (6th) 171, [2017] 6 W.W.R. 301, 8 C.E.L.R. (4th) 1, 50 Alta. L.R. (6th) 1, [2017] A.J. No. 402 (QL), 2017 CarswellAlta 695 (WL Can.), qui a confirmé une décision du juge en chef Wittmann, 2016 ABQB 278, 37 C.B.R. (6th) 88, [2016] 11 W.W.R. 716, 33 Alta. L.R. (6th) 221, [2016] A.J. No. 541 (QL), 2016 CarswellAlta 994 (WL Can.). Pourvoi accueilli, les juges Moldaver et Côté sont dissidents.

Ken Lenz, c.r., Patricia Johnston, c.r., Keely R. Cameron, Brad Gilmour et Michael W. Selnes, pour les appelants.

Kelly J. Bourassa, Jeffrey Oliver, Tom Cumming, Ryan Zahara, Danielle Maréchal, Brendan MacArthur-Stevens and Chris Nyberg, for the respondents.

Josh Hunter and Hayley Pitcher, for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario.

Gareth Morley, Aaron Welch and Barbara Thomson, for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia.

Richard James Fyfe, for the intervener the Attorney General of Saskatchewan.

Robert Normey and Vivienne Ball, for the intervener the Attorney General of Alberta.

Adrian Scotchmer, for the intervener Ecojustice Canada Society.

Lewis Manning and Toby Kruger, for the intervener the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers.

Nader R. Hasan and Lindsay Board, for the intervener Greenpeace Canada.

Christine Laing and Shaun Fluker, for the intervener Action Surface Rights Association.

Caireen E. Hanert and Adam Maerov, for the intervener the Canadian Association of Insolvency and Restructuring Professionals.

Howard A. Gorman, Q.C., and D. Aaron Stephenson, for the intervener the Canadian Bankers' Association.

The judgment of Wagner C.J. and Abella, Karakatsanis, Gascon and Brown JJ. was delivered by

THE CHIEF JUSTICE —

I. Introduction

[1] The oil and gas industry is a lucrative and important component of Alberta's and Canada's economy. The industry also carries with it certain

Kelly J. Bourassa, Jeffrey Oliver, Tom Cumming, Ryan Zahara, Danielle Maréchal, Brendan MacArthur-Stevens et Chris Nyberg, pour les intimées.

Josh Hunter et Hayley Pitcher, pour l'intervenante la procureure générale de l'Ontario.

Gareth Morley, Aaron Welch et Barbara Thomson, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique.

Richard James Fyfe, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de la Saskatchewan.

Robert Normey et Vivienne Ball, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Alberta.

Adrian Scotchmer, pour l'intervenante Ecojustice Canada Society.

Lewis Manning et Toby Kruger, pour l'intervenante l'Association canadienne des producteurs pétroliers.

Nader R. Hasan et Lindsay Board, pour l'intervenante Greenpeace Canada.

Christine Laing et Shaun Fluker, pour l'intervenante Action Surface Rights Association.

Caireen E. Hanert et Adam Maerov, pour l'intervenante l'Association canadienne des professionnels de l'insolvabilité et de la réorganisation.

Howard A. Gorman, c.r., et D. Aaron Stephenson, pour l'intervenante l'Association des banquiers canadiens.

Version française du jugement du juge en chef Wagner et des juges Abella, Karakatsanis, Gascon et Brown rendu par

LE JUGE EN CHEF —

I. Introduction

[1] L'industrie pétrolière et gazière est une composante lucrative et importante de l'économie albertaine et canadienne. Cette industrie entraîne unavoidable environmental costs and consequences. To address them, Alberta has established a comprehensive cradle-to-grave licensing regime that is binding on companies active in the industry. A company will not be granted the licences that it needs to extract, process or transport oil and gas in Alberta unless it assumes end-of-life responsibilities for plugging and capping oil wells to prevent leaks, dismantling surface structures and restoring the surface to its previous condition. These obligations are known as "reclamation" and "abandonment" (Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-12 ("EPEA"), s. 1(ddd), and Oil and Gas Conservation Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. O-6 ("OGCA"), s. 1(1)(a)).

[2] The question in this appeal is what happens to these obligations when a company is bankrupt and a trustee in bankruptcy is charged with distributing its assets among various creditors according to the rules in the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA"). Redwater Energy Corporation ("Redwater") is the bankrupt company at the centre of this appeal. Its principal assets are 127 oil and gas assets — wells, pipelines and facilities — and their corresponding licences. A few of Redwater's licensed wells are still producing and profitable. The majority of the wells are spent and burdened with abandonment and reclamation liabilities that exceed their value.

[3] The Alberta Energy Regulator ("Regulator") and the Orphan Well Association ("OWA") are the appellants in this Court. (For simplicity, I will refer to the Regulator when discussing the appellants' position, unless otherwise noted.) The Regulator administers Alberta's licensing regime and enforces the abandonment and reclamation obligations of licensees. The Regulator has delegated to the OWA, an independent non-profit entity, the authority to abandon and reclaim "orphans", which are oil and gas assets and their sites left behind in an improperly abandoned or unreclaimed state by defunct companies at the close of their insolvency proceedings. The Regulator says that, one way or another, the également certains coûts et certaines conséquences inévitables pour l'environnement. Pour y faire face, l'Alberta a mis en place un régime complet de délivrance de permis du berceau à la tombe qui lie les sociétés actives dans l'industrie. Une société n'obtiendra pas les permis dont elle a besoin pour extraire, traiter ou transporter du pétrole et du gaz en Alberta, à moins qu'elle n'assume les responsabilités de fin de vie consistant à obturer et à fermer les puits de pétrole afin d'éviter les fuites, à démanteler les structures de surface ainsi qu'à remettre la surface dans son état antérieur. Ces obligations sont appelées la [TRADUCTION] « remise en état » et l'« abandon » (Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-12 (« EPEA »), al. 1(ddd) et Oil and Gas Conservation Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. O-6 (« OGCA »), al. 1(1)(a)).

[2] La question en l'espèce est de savoir ce qu'il advient de ces obligations lorsqu'une société est en faillite et qu'un syndic de faillite est chargé de répartir ses biens entre divers créanciers conformément aux règles prévues dans la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, c. B-3 (« LFI »). Redwater Energy Corporation (« Redwater ») est la société en faillite au cœur du présent pourvoi. Son actif est principalement composé de 127 biens pétroliers et gaziers — puits, pipelines et installations — et des permis correspondants. Quelques-uns des puits autorisés de Redwater sont encore productifs et rentables. La majorité est tarie et grevée de responsabilités relatives à l'abandon et à la remise en état qui excèdent leur valeur.

[3] L'Alberta Energy Regulator (« organisme de réglementation ») et l'Orphan Well Association (« OWA ») sont les appelants devant notre Cour (pour simplifier, je les appellerai l'organisme de réglementation au moment d'analyser la position des appelants, sauf indication contraire). L'organisme de réglementation administre le régime de délivrance de permis de l'Alberta et assure le respect, par les titulaires de permis, des obligations relatives à l'abandon et à la remise en état. L'organisme de réglementation a délégué à l'OWA, une entité indépendante sans but lucratif, le pouvoir d'abandonner et de remettre en état les « orphelins » — les biens pétroliers et gaziers ainsi que leurs sites délaissés ou non réclamés sans remaining value of the Redwater estate must be applied to meet the abandonment and reclamation obligations associated with its licensed assets.

[4] Redwater's trustee in bankruptcy, Grant Thornton Limited ("GTL"), and Redwater's primary secured creditor, Alberta Treasury Branches ("ATB"), oppose the appeal. (For simplicity, I will refer to GTL when discussing the respondents' position, unless otherwise noted.) GTL argues that, since it has disclaimed Redwater's unproductive oil and gas assets, s. 14.06(4) of the BIA empowers it to walk away from those assets and the environmental liabilities associated with them and to deal solely with Redwater's producing oil and gas assets. Alternatively, GTL argues that, under the priority scheme in the BIA, the claims of Redwater's secured creditors must be satisfied ahead of Redwater's environmental liabilities. Relying on the doctrine of paramountcy, GTL says that Alberta's environmental legislation regulating the oil and gas industry is constitutionally inoperative to the extent that it authorizes the Regulator to interfere with this arrangement.

[5] The chambers judge (2016 ABQB 278, 37 C.B.R. (6th) 88) and a majority of the Court of Appeal (2017 ABCA 124, 47 C.B.R. (6th) 171) agreed with GTL. The Regulator's proposed use of its statutory powers to enforce Redwater's compliance with abandonment and reclamation obligations during bankruptcy was held to conflict with the BIA in two ways: (1) it imposed on GTL the obligations of a licensee in relation to the Redwater assets disclaimed by GTL, contrary to s. 14.06(4) of the BIA; and (2) it upended the priority scheme for the distribution of a bankrupt's assets established by the BIA by requiring that the "provable claims" of the Regulator, an unsecured creditor, be paid ahead of the claims of Redwater's secured creditors.

que les processus en question n'aient été correctement effectués par les sociétés liquidées à la fin de leur procédure d'insolvabilité. L'organisme de réglementation affirme que, d'une façon ou d'une autre, la valeur restante de l'actif de Redwater doit être utilisée pour satisfaire aux obligations d'abandon et de remise en état qui sont associées à ses biens visés par des permis.

[4] Le syndic de faillite de Redwater, Grant Thornton Limited (« GTL »), et le principal créancier garanti de Redwater, Alberta Treasury Branches (« ATB »), s'opposent au pourvoi (pour simplifier, je les appellerai GTL au moment d'analyser la position des intimées, sauf indication contraire). GTL soutient que, comme il a renoncé aux biens pétroliers et gaziers inexploités de Redwater, le par. 14.06(4) de la LFI l'investit du pouvoir de les délaisser et de se soustraire aux engagements environnementaux qui s'y rattachent et de s'occuper uniquement des biens pétroliers et gaziers productifs de Redwater. GTL soutient subsidiairement que, d'après le régime de priorité établi dans la LFI, il faut acquitter les réclamations des créanciers garantis de Redwater avant de respecter ses engagements environnementaux. Invoquant la doctrine de la prépondérance, GTL affirme que la législation environnementale de l'Alberta réglementant l'industrie pétrolière et gazière est constitutionnellement inopérante dans la mesure où elle autorise l'organisme de réglementation à se mêler de cet arrangement.

[5] Le juge siégeant en cabinet (2016 ABQB 278, 37 C.B.R. (6th) 88) et les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel (2017 ABCA 124, 47 C.B.R. (6th) 171) ont donné raison à GTL. L'utilisation proposée par l'organisme de réglementation des pouvoirs que lui confère la loi pour contraindre Redwater à respecter les obligations d'abandon et de remise en état au cours de la faillite a été jugée incompatible avec la LFI de deux façons : (1) elle imposait à GTL les obligations d'un titulaire de permis relativement aux biens de Redwater auxquels GTL avait renoncé, ce qui est contraire au par. 14.06(4) de la LFI; (2) elle renversait le régime de priorité établi par la LFI pour le partage des biens d'un failli en exigeant que le paiement de ses « réclamations prouvables », en tant que créancier ordinaire, soit effectué avant celui des réclamations des créanciers garantis de Redwater.

[6] Martin J.A., as she then was, dissented. She would have allowed the Regulator's appeal on the basis that there was no conflict between Alberta's environmental legislation and the BIA. Martin J.A. was of the view that: (1) s. 14.06 of the BIA did not operate to relieve GTL of Redwater's obligations with respect to its licensed assets; and (2) the Regulator was not asserting any provable claims, so the priority scheme in the BIA was not upended.

[7] For the reasons that follow, I would allow the appeal. Although my analysis differs from hers in some respects, I agree with Martin J.A. that the Regulator's use of its statutory powers does not create a conflict with the BIA so as to trigger the doctrine of federal paramountcy. Section 14.06(4) is concerned with the personal liability of trustees, and does not empower a trustee to walk away from the environmental liabilities of the estate it is administering. The Regulator is not asserting any claims provable in the bankruptcy, and the priority scheme in the BIA is not upended. Thus, no conflict is caused by GTL's status as a licensee under Alberta legislation. Alberta's regulatory regime can coexist with and apply alongside the BIA.

II. Background

A. Alberta's Regulatory Regime

[8] The resolution of the constitutional questions and the ultimate outcome of this appeal depend on a proper understanding of the complex regulatory regime which governs Alberta's oil and gas industry. I will therefore describe that regime in considerable detail.

[9] In order to exploit oil and gas resources in Alberta, a company needs three things: a property interest in the oil or gas, surface rights and a licence issued by the Regulator. In Alberta, mineral rights are typically reserved from ownership rights in land.

[6] La juge d'appel Martin, maintenant juge de notre Cour, n'était pas d'accord. Elle aurait accueilli l'appel de l'organisme de réglementation au motif qu'il n'y avait pas de conflit entre la législation environnementale de l'Alberta et la LFI. La juge Martin a estimé que : (1) l'art. 14.06 de la LFI n'a pas eu pour effet de libérer GTL des obligations de Redwater à l'égard de ses biens visés par des permis; (2) l'organisme de réglementation ne faisait valoir aucune réclamation prouvable, de sorte que le régime de priorité de la LFI n'était pas renversé.

[7] Pour les motifs qui suivent, j'accueillerais le pourvoi. Bien que mon analyse diffère de la sienne à certains égards, je conviens avec la juge Martin que l'utilisation par l'organisme de réglementation des pouvoirs que lui confère la loi ne crée pas de conflit avec la LFI de façon à mettre en jeu la doctrine de la prépondérance fédérale. Le paragraphe 14.06(4) intéresse la responsabilité personnelle du syndic et il ne l'investit pas du pouvoir de se soustraire aux engagements environnementaux liant l'actif qu'il administre. L'organisme de réglementation ne fait valoir aucune réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite, et le régime de priorité de la LFI n'est pas renversé. Donc, le statut de GTL en tant que titulaire de permis au sens de la loi albertaine n'est à l'origine d'aucun conflit. Le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta peut coexister et s'appliquer conjointement avec la LFI.

II. Contexte

A. Le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta

[8] Le règlement des questions constitutionnelles et l'issue finale du présent pourvoi reposent sur une compréhension adéquate du régime complexe de réglementation qui régit l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de l'Alberta. Je vais donc décrire ce régime de façon très détaillée.

[9] Pour exploiter des ressources pétrolières et gazières en Alberta, une société a besoin de trois choses : un intérêt de propriété sur le pétrole ou le gaz, des droits de surface et un permis délivré par l'organisme de réglementation. En Alberta, les droits miniers sont

About 90 percent of Alberta's mineral rights are held by the Crown on behalf of the public.

[10] A company's property interest in the oil or gas it seeks to exploit typically takes the form of a mineral lease with the Crown (but occasionally with a private owner). The company also needs surface rights so it can access and occupy the physical land located above the oil and gas and place the equipment needed to pump, store and haul away the oil and gas. Surface rights may be obtained through a lease with the landowner, who is often a farmer or rancher (but is occasionally the Crown). Where a landowner does not voluntarily grant surface rights, Alberta law authorizes the Surface Rights Board to issue a right of entry order in favour of an "operator", that is, the person having the right to a mineral or the right to work it (Surface Rights Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. S-24, ss. 1(h) and 15).

[11] Canadian courts characterize a mineral lease that allows a company to exploit oil and gas resources as a profit à prendre. It is not disputed that a profit à prendre is a form of real property interest held by the company (Berkheiser v. Berkheiser, [1957] S.C.R. 387). A profit à prendre is fully assignable and has been defined as "a non-possessory interest in land, like an easement, which can be passed on from generation to generation, and remains with the land, regardless of changes in ownership" (F. L. Stewart, "How to Deal with a Fickle Friend? Alberta's Troubles with the Doctrine of Federal Paramountcy", in J. P. Sarra and B. Romaine, eds., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2017 (2018), 163 ("Stewart"), at p. 193). Solvent and insolvent companies alike will often hold profits à prendre in both producing and unproductive or spent wells. There are a variety of potential "working interest" arrangements whereby several parties can share an interest in oil and gas resources.

généralement soustraits des droits de propriété sur les terres. Environ 90 p. 100 des droits miniers de l'Alberta sont détenus par la Couronne au nom du public.

[10] L'intérêt de propriété d'une société dans le pétrole ou le gaz qu'elle cherche à exploiter prend généralement la forme d'un bail d'exploitation minière avec la Couronne (mais parfois avec un propriétaire privé). La société a également besoin de droits de surface, afin de pouvoir accéder au terrain physique situé au-dessus du pétrole et du gaz, de l'occuper, ainsi que d'installer l'équipement nécessaire pour pomper, stocker et transporter le pétrole de même que le gaz. On obtient les droits de surface au moyen d'un bail avec le propriétaire foncier, dans bien des cas un agriculteur ou un éleveur (mais parfois la Couronne). Lorsqu'un propriétaire foncier n'accorde pas volontairement des droits de surface, la loi albertaine autorise le Surface Rights Board (Conseil des droits de surface) à rendre une ordonnance d'accès aux terres en faveur d'un [TRADUCTION] « exploitant », soit la personne qui a droit à une substance minérale ou le droit de la travailler (Surface Rights Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. S-24, al. 1h) et art. 15).

[11] Les tribunaux canadiens qualifient le bail d'exploitation minière permettant à une société d'exploiter des ressources pétrolières et gazières de profit à prendre. Il n'est pas contesté qu'un profit à prendre constitue une forme d'intérêt détenue par la société sur un bien réel (Berkheiser c. Berkheiser, [1957] R.C.S. 387). Un profit à prendre est entièrement cessible et il a été défini comme [TRADUCTION] « un intérêt foncier sans possession, comme une servitude, qui peut être transmis de génération en génération et qui reste avec la terre, indépendamment des changements de propriétaire » (F. L. Stewart, « How to Deal with a Fickle Friend? Alberta's Troubles with the Doctrine of Federal Paramountcy », dans J. P. Sarra et B. Romaine, dir., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2017 (2018), 163 (« Stewart »), p. 193). Les sociétés, qu'elles soient solvables ou insolvables, détiennent souvent des profits à prendre tant dans les puits productifs que dans les puits inexploités ou épuisés. Il existe une foule d'ententes potentielles de « participation directe » par lesquelles plusieurs parties peuvent partager un intérêt dans des ressources pétrolières et gazières.

[12] The third thing a company needs in order to access and exploit Alberta's oil and gas resources, and the one most germane to this appeal, is a licence issued by the Regulator. The OGCA prohibits any person without a licence from commencing to drill a well or undertaking any operations preparatory or incidental to the drilling of a well, and from commencing to construct or operate a facility (ss. 11(1) and 12(1)). The Pipeline Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. P-15, similarly prohibits the construction of pipelines without a licence (s. 6(1)). The profit à prendre in an oil and gas deposit may be bought and sold without regulatory approval. However, it is of little practical use on its own, as, without the licence associated with a well, the purchaser cannot "continue any drilling operations, any producing operations or any injecting operations" (OGCA, s. 11(1)), and, without the licence associated with a facility, the purchaser cannot "continue any construction or operation" (OGCA, s. 12(1)).

[13] The three relevant licensed assets in the Alberta oil and gas industry are wells, facilities and pipelines. A "well" is defined, inter alia, as "an orifice in the ground completed or being drilled . . . for the production of oil or gas" (OGCA, s. 1(1)(eee)). A "facility" is broadly defined and includes any building, structure, installation or equipment that is connected to or associated with the recovery, development, production, handling, processing, treatment or disposal of oil and gas resources (OGCA, s. 1(1)(w)). A "pipeline" is defined as "a pipe used to convey a substance or combination of substances", including associated installations (Pipeline Act, s. 1(1)(t)).

[14] The licences a company needs to recover, process and transport oil and gas are issued by the Regulator. The Regulator is not an agent of the Crown. It is established as a corporation by s. 3(1) of the Responsible Energy Development Act, S.A. 2012, c. R-17.3 ("REDA"). It exercises a wide range of powers under the OGCA and the Pipeline Act. It also acts as the regulator in respect of energy resource [12] La troisième chose — celle qui se rapporte le plus au présent pourvoi — dont une société a besoin pour avoir accès aux ressources pétrolières et gazières de l'Alberta ainsi que pour les exploiter, c'est un permis délivré par l'organisme de réglementation. L'OGCA interdit à toute personne non titulaire d'un permis de commencer le forage d'un puits, y compris les activités préparatoires ou accessoires à cette fin, ou d'amorcer la construction ou l'exploitation d'une installation (par. 11(1) et 12(1)). La Pipeline Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. P-15, interdit également la construction de pipelines sans permis (par. 6(1)). Le profit à prendre dans des gisements de pétrole et de gaz peut être acheté et vendu sans approbation réglementaire. Cependant, cela n'a qu'une utilité pratique restreinte en soi, puisque, sans le permis associé à un puits, l'acheteur ne peut pas [TRADUCTION] « poursuivre une opération de forage, d'exploitation ou d'injection » (OGCA, par. 11(1)), et sans le permis associé à une installation, l'acheteur ne peut pas [TRADUCTION] « poursuivre la construction ou l'exploitation » (OGCA, par. 12(1)).

[13] Les trois biens visés par des permis pertinents dans l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de l'Alberta sont les puits, les installations et les pipelines. Le « puits » est défini, entre autres, comme [TRADUCTION] « un orifice dans le sol complété ou en cours de forage pour la production de pétrole ou de gaz » (OGCA, al. 1(1)(eee)). L'« installation » est définie au sens large et englobe tous les bâtiments, structures, installations et matériaux qui sont liés ou associés à la récupération, à la mise en valeur, à la production, à la manutention, au traitement ou à l'élimination de ressources pétrolières et gazières (OGCA, al. 1(1)(w)). Le « pipeline » est défini comme [TRADUCTION] « un tuyau utilisé pour transporter une substance ou une combinaison de substances », y compris les installations connexes (Pipeline Act, al. 1(1)(t)).

[14] Les permis dont une société a besoin pour récupérer, traiter ainsi que transporter le pétrole et le gaz sont délivrés par l'organisme de réglementation. Ce dernier n'est pas un mandataire de la Couronne. Il est constitué en société par le par. 3(1) de la Responsible Energy Development Act, S.A. 2012, c. R-17.3 (« REDA »). L'organisme de réglementation exerce un large éventail de pouvoirs en vertu de l'OGCA activities under the EPEA, Alberta's more general environmental protection legislation (REDA, s. 2(2)(h)). The Regulator's mandate is set out in the REDA and includes "the efficient, safe, orderly and environmentally responsible development of energy resources in Alberta" (s. 2(1)(a)). The Regulator is funded almost entirely by the industry it regulates, and it collects its budget through an administration fee (Stewart, at p. 219; REDA, ss. 28 and 29; Alberta Energy Regulator Administration Fees Rules, Alta. Reg. 98/2013).

et de la Pipeline Act. Il agit également à titre d'organisme de réglementation des activités liées aux ressources énergétiques sous le régime de l'EPEA, la loi albertaine plus générale sur la protection de l'environnement (REDA, al. 2(2)(h)). Le mandat de l'organisme de réglementation est énoncé dans la REDA et comprend [TRADUCTION] « la mise en valeur efficiente, sûre, ordonnée et respectueuse de l'environnement des ressources énergétiques en Alberta » (al. 2(1)(a)). L'organisme de réglementation est financé presque entièrement par l'industrie qu'il réglemente et il recueille ses recettes budgétaires au moyen de frais administratifs (Stewart, p. 219; REDA, art. 28 et 29; Alberta Energy Regulator Administration Fees Rules, Alta. Reg. 98/2013).

[15] The Regulator has a wide discretion when it comes to granting licences to operate wells, facilities and pipelines. On receiving an application for a licence, the Regulator may grant the licence subject to any conditions, restrictions and stipulations, or it may refuse the licence (OGCA, s. 18(1); Pipeline Act, s. 9(1)). Licences to operate a well, facility or pipeline are granted subject to obligations that will one day arise to abandon the underlying asset and reclaim the land on which it is situated.

[15] L'organisme de réglementation jouit d'un large pouvoir discrétionnaire lorsqu'il s'agit de délivrer des permis d'exploitation de puits, d'installations et de pipelines. À la réception d'une demande de permis, l'organisme de réglementation peut accorder le permis sous réserve de certaines conditions, restrictions et stipulations, ou il peut refuser le permis (OGCA, par. 18(1); Pipeline Act, par. 9(1)). Les permis d'exploitation d'un puits, d'une installation ou d'un pipeline sont accordés sous réserve d'obligations qui se manifesteront un jour d'abandonner le bien sous-jacent et de remettre en état le terrain sur lequel il est situé.

[16] "Abandonment" refers to "the permanent dismantlement of a well or facility in the manner prescribed by the regulations or rules" made by the Regulator (OGCA, s. 1(1)(a)). Specifically, the abandonment of a well has been defined as "the process of sealing a hole which has been drilled for oil or gas, at the end of its useful life, to render it environmentally safe" (Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd., 1991 ABCA 181, 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45 ("Northern Badger"), at para. 2). The abandonment of a pipeline refers to its "permanent deactivation . . . in the manner prescribed by the rules" (Pipeline Act, s. 1(1)(a)). "Reclamation" includes "the removal of equipment or buildings", "the decontamination of buildings . . . land or water", and the "stabilization, contouring, maintenance, conditioning or reconstruction of the surface of the land" (EPEA, s. 1(ddd)). A further duty binding on those active in the Alberta oil and gas industry is remediation, which arises where a harmful or potentially harmful substance has been released into the environment (EPEA, ss. 112 to 122). As the extent of any remediation obligations that may be associated with Redwater assets is unclear, I will not refer to remediation separately from reclamation, unless otherwise noted. As has been done throughout this litigation, I will refer to abandonment and reclamation jointly as end-of-life obligations.

[16] Le terme [TRADUCTION] « abandon » désigne « le démantèlement permanent d'un puits ou d'une installation de la manière prescrite par les règlements ou les règles » pris par l'organisme de réglementation (OGCA, al. 1(1)(a)). Plus précisément, l'abandon d'un puits a été défini comme [TRADUCTION] « l'obturation d'un trou qui a été foré pour le pétrole ou le gaz, à la fin de sa vie utile, afin de le rendre sûr sur le plan environnemental » (Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. c. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd., 1991 ABCA 181, 81 Alta L.R. (2d) 45 (« Northern Badger »), par. 2). L'abandon d'un pipeline fait référence à sa [TRADUCTION] « mise hors service permanente [. . .] de la manière prescrite par les règles » (Pipeline Act, al. 1(1)(a)). La remise en état comprend [TRADUCTION] « l'enlèvement des bâtiments et de l'équipement », « la décontamination des bâtiments, du terrain ou de l'eau », ainsi que

[17] A licensee must abandon a well or facility when ordered to do so by the Regulator or when required by the rules or regulations. The Regulator may order abandonment when "the Regulator considers that it is necessary to do so in order to protect the public or the environment" (OGCA, s. 27(3)). Under the rules, a licensee is required to abandon a well or facility, inter alia, on the termination of the mineral lease, surface lease or right of entry, where the Regulator cancels or suspends the licence, or where the Regulator notifies the licensee that the well or facility may constitute an environmental or safety hazard (Oil and Gas Conservation Rules, Alta. Reg. 151/71, s. 3.012). Section 23 of the Pipeline Act requires licensees to abandon pipelines in similar situations. The duty to reclaim is established by s. 137 of the EPEA. This duty is binding on an "operator", a broader term which encompasses the holder of a licence issued by the Regulator (EPEA, s. 134(b)). Reclamation is governed by the procedural requirements set out in regulations (Conservation and Reclamation Regulation, Alta. Reg. 115/93).

[18] The Licensee Liability Rating Program, which was, at the time of Redwater's insolvency, set out in Directive 006: Licensee Liability Rating (LLR) Program and License Transfer Process (March 12, la « stabilisation, l'établissement des courbes de niveau, l'entretien, le conditionnement ou la reconstruction de la surface du terrain » (EPEA, al. 1(ddd)). Une autre obligation qui incombe à ceux qui œuvrent dans l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de l'Alberta est celle de la décontamination, qui prend naissance lorsqu'une substance nocive ou potentiellement nocive a été rejetée dans l'environnement (EPEA, art. 112 à 122). Puisque l'on ne connaît pas l'étendue des obligations de décontamination, s'il en est, qui peuvent être associées aux biens de Redwater, je ne traiterai pas la décontamination séparément de la remise en état, sauf indication contraire. Comme cela a été fait tout au long du présent litige, je qualifierai conjointement l'abandon et la remise en état d'obligations de fin de vie.

[17] Le titulaire de permis doit abandonner un puits ou une installation lorsque l'organisme de réglementation le lui ordonne, ou lorsque les règles ou les règlements l'exigent. L'organisme de réglementation peut ordonner l'abandon lorsqu'il [TRADUCTION] « l'estime nécessaire pour protéger le public ou l'environnement » (OGCA, par. 27(3)). Selon les règles, le titulaire de permis est tenu d'abandonner un puits ou une installation, notamment, à la résiliation du bail d'exploitation minière, du bail de surface ou de l'accès aux terres, lorsque l'organisme de réglementation annule ou suspend le permis, ou lorsqu'il avise le titulaire de permis que le puits ou l'installation peut constituer un danger pour l'environnement ou la sécurité (Oil and Gas Conservation Rules, Alta. Reg. 151/71, art. 3.012). L'article 23 de la Pipeline Act oblige les titulaires de permis à abandonner des pipelines dans des situations semblables. L'obligation de remise en état est prévue par l'art. 137 de l'EPEA. Cette obligation s'impose à un « exploitant », terme plus large qui englobe le titulaire d'un permis délivré par l'organisme de réglementation (EPEA, al. 134(b)). La remise en état est régie par les exigences procédurales fixées dans le règlement (Conservation and Reclamation Regulation, Alta. Reg. 115/93).

[18] Le Programme d'évaluation de la responsabilité du titulaire de permis, qui était, au moment de l'insolvabilité de Redwater, établi dans la Directive 006 : Licensee Liability Rating (LLR) Program and 2013) ("Directive 006") is one means by which the Regulator seeks to ensure that end-of-life obligations will be satisfied by licensees rather than being offloaded onto the Alberta public. As part of this program, the Regulator assigns each company a Liability Management Rating ("LMR"), which is the ratio between the aggregate value attributed by the Regulator to a company's licensed assets and the aggregate liability attributed by the Regulator to the eventual cost of abandoning and reclaiming those assets. For the purpose of calculating the LMR, all the licences held by a given company are treated as a package, without any segregation or parcelling of assets. A licensee's LMR is calculated on a monthly basis and, where it dips below the prescribed ratio (1.0 at the time of Redwater's insolvency), the licensee is required to pay a security deposit. The security deposit is added to the licensee's "deemed assets" and must bring its LMR back up to the ratio prescribed by the Regulator. If the required security deposit is not paid, the Regulator may cancel or suspend the company's licences (OGCA, s. 25). As an alternative to posting security, the licensee can perform end-of-life obligations or transfer licences (with approval) in order to bring its LMR back up to the prescribed level.

License Transfer Process (12 mars 2013) (« Directive 006 ») constitue un moyen par lequel l'organisme de réglementation vise à s'assurer que les titulaires de permis rempliront les obligations de fin de vie, au lieu que celles-ci soient en fin de compte assumées par le public albertain. Dans le cadre de ce programme, l'organisme de réglementation attribue à chaque société une cote de gestion de la responsabilité (« CGR »), qui représente le rapport entre la valeur totale attribuée par l'organisme de réglementation aux biens d'une société qui sont visés par des permis et la responsabilité totale que l'organisme de réglementation attribue aux coûts éventuels de l'abandon et de la remise en état de ces biens. Pour les besoins du calcul de la CGR, tous les permis détenus par une société donnée sont traités comme un tout, sans isolement ou morcellement des biens. La CGR d'un titulaire de permis est calculée sur une base mensuelle et, lorsqu'elle tombe sous le ratio prescrit (1,0 à l'époque de l'insolvabilité de Redwater), le titulaire de permis est tenu de verser un dépôt de garantie. Le dépôt de garantie est ajouté aux [TRADUCTION] « biens réputés » du titulaire de permis, qui doit ramener sa CGR au ratio prescrit par l'organisme de réglementation. Si le dépôt de garantie requis n'est pas payé, l'organisme de réglementation peut annuler ou suspendre les permis de la société (OGCA, art. 25). Comme solution de rechange au versement d'une garantie, le titulaire de permis peut exécuter les obligations de fin de vie ou transférer des permis (avec approbation), afin de ramener sa CGR au niveau prescrit.

[19] Licences can be transferred only with the Regulator's approval. The Regulator uses the Licensee Liability Rating Program to ensure that end-of-life obligations will not be negatively affected by licence transfers. Upon receipt of an application to transfer one or more licences, the Regulator assesses how the transfer, if approved, would affect the LMR of both the transferor and the transferee. At the time of Redwater's insolvency, if both the transferor and the transferee would have a post-transfer LMR equal to or exceeding 1.0, the Regulator would approve the transfer, absent other concerns. Following the chambers judge's decision in this case, the Regulator implemented changes to its policies, including the requirement that transferees have an LMR of 2.0 or higher immediately following any licence transfer: Alberta Energy Regulator, Licensee Eligibility — Alberta Energy Regulator Measures to Limit Environmental Impacts Pending Regulatory Changes to Address the Redwater Decision, June 20, 2016 (online). For the purposes of this appeal, I will be referring to the regulatory regime as it existed at the time of Redwater's insolvency.

[19] Les permis ne peuvent être transférés qu'avec l'approbation de l'organisme de réglementation. Ce dernier utilise le Programme d'évaluation de la responsabilité du titulaire de permis pour éviter que les transferts de permis aient un effet néfaste sur les obligations de fin de vie. À la réception d'une demande de transfert d'un ou de plusieurs permis, l'organisme de réglementation évalue la façon dont le transfert, s'il est approuvé, influerait sur la CGR du cédant et du cessionnaire. À l'époque de l'insolvabilité de Redwater, si le cédant et le cessionnaire devaient avoir, après le transfert, des CGR égales ou supérieures à 1,0, l'organisme de réglementation approuverait le transfert en l'absence d'autres préoccupations. Après la décision du juge siégeant en cabinet dans

[20] As discussed in greater detail below, if either the transferor or the transferee would have a post-transfer LMR below 1.0, the Regulator would refuse to approve the licence transfer. In such a situation, the Regulator would insist on certain remedial steps being taken to ensure that neither LMR would drop below 1.0. Although Directive 006, as it was in the 2013 version, required both the transferee and transferor to have a post transfer LMR of at least 1.0, during this litigation, the Regulator stated that, when licensees are in receivership or bankruptcy, its working rule is to approve transfers as long as they do not cause a deterioration in the transferor's LMR, even where its LMR will remain below 1.0 following the transfer. The explanation for this working rule is that it helps to facilitate purchases. The Regulator's position is that the Licensee Liability Rating Program continues to apply to the transfer of licences as part of insolvency proceedings.

[21] The OGCA, the Pipeline Act and the EPEA all contemplate that a licensee's regulatory obligations will continue to be fulfilled when it is subject to insolvency proceedings. The EPEA achieves this by including the trustee of a licensee in the definition of "operator" for the purposes of the duty to reclaim (s. 134(b)(vi)). The EPEA also specifically provides that an order to perform reclamation work (known as an "environmental protection order") may be issued to a trustee (ss. 140 and 142(1)(a)(ii)). The EPEA imposes responsibility for carrying out the la présente affaire, l'organisme de réglementation a apporté des changements à ses politiques, y compris l'exigence selon laquelle les cessionnaires devaient avoir une CGR de 2,0 ou plus immédiatement après tout transfert de permis : Alberta Energy Regulator, Licensee Eligibility — Alberta Energy Regulator Measures to Limit Environmental Impacts Pending Regulatory Changes to Address the Redwater Decision, 20 juin 2016 (en ligne). Pour les besoins du présent pourvoi, je ferai référence au régime de réglementation tel qu'il existait à l'époque de l'insolvabilité de Redwater.

[20] Comme il est expliqué plus en détail ci-dessous, si le cédant ou le cessionnaire devait avoir une CGR inférieure à 1,0 après le transfert, l'organisme de réglementation refuserait d'approuver le transfert de permis. Dans une telle situation, l'organisme de réglementation insisterait pour que certaines mesures correctives soient prises afin de s'assurer qu'aucune des deux CGR ne descende en dessous de 1,0. Même si la Directive 006, dans sa version de 2013, exigeait que le cessionnaire ainsi que le cédant aient des CGR d'au moins 1,0 après le transfert, au cours de ce litige, l'organisme de réglementation a déclaré que, lorsque les titulaires de permis sont sous séquestre ou en faillite, sa règle pratique est d'approuver les transferts tant qu'ils n'entraînent pas une détérioration de la CGR du cédant, même si la CGR du cédant demeurerait inférieure à 1,0 après le transfert. L'explication donnée pour cette règle pratique est qu'elle vise à faciliter les achats. L'organisme de réglementation fait valoir que le Programme d'évaluation de la responsabilité du titulaire de permis continue de s'appliquer au transfert de permis dans le cadre de la procédure d'insolvabilité.

[21] L'OGCA, la Pipeline Act ainsi que l'EPEA envisagent toutes que les obligations réglementaires d'un titulaire de permis continuent d'être respectées pendant qu'il fait l'objet d'une procédure d'insolvabilité. L'EPEA y parvient en incluant le syndic d'un titulaire de permis dans la définition d'« exploitant » pour l'application de l'obligation de remettre en état (sous-al. 134(b)(vi)). L'EPEA prévoit aussi expressément la possibilité qu'une ordonnance de remise en état (appelée [TRADUCTION] « ordonnance de protection de l'environnement ») soit adressée à un syndic

terms of an environmental protection order on the person to whom the order is directed (ss. 240 and 245). However, absent gross negligence or wilful misconduct, a trustee's liability in relation to such an order is expressly limited to the value of the assets in the bankrupt estate (s. 240(3)). The OGCA and the Pipeline Act take a more generic approach to applying the various obligations of licensees to trustees in the insolvency context: they simply include trustees in the definition of "licensee" (OGCA, s. 1(1)(cc); Pipeline Act, s. 1(1)(n)). As a result, every power which these Acts give the Regulator against a licensee can theoretically also be exercised against a trustee.

[22] Despite this, Alberta's regulatory regime does contemplate the possibility that some of a licensee's end-of-life obligations will remain unfulfilled when the insolvency process has run its course. The Regulator may designate wells, facilities, and their sites as "orphans" (OGCA, s. 70(2)(a)). A pipeline is defined as a "facility" for the purposes of the orphan regime (OGCA, s. 68(d)). Directive 006 stated that "a well, facility, or pipeline in the LLR program is eligible to be declared an orphan where the licensee of that licence becomes insolvent or defunct" (s. 7.1). An "orphan fund" has been established for the purpose of paying for, inter alia, the abandonment and reclamation of orphans (OGCA, s. 70(1)). The orphan fund is financed by an annual industry-wide levy paid by licensees of wells, facilities and unreclaimed sites (s. 73(1)). The amount of the levy is prescribed by the Regulator based on the estimated cost of abandoning and reclaiming orphans in a given fiscal year (s. 73(2)).

[23] The Regulator has delegated its statutory authority to abandon and reclaim orphans to the OWA (Orphan Fund Delegated Administration Regulation, (art. 140 et sous-al. 142(1)(a)(ii))). L'EPEA impose la responsabilité d'exécuter une ordonnance de protection de l'environnement à la personne visée par l'ordonnance (art. 240 et 245). Cependant, faute de négligence grave ou d'inconduite délibérée, la responsabilité du syndic à l'égard d'une telle ordonnance est expressément limitée à la valeur des éléments de l'actif du failli (par. 240(3)). L'OGCA et la Pipeline Act adoptent une approche plus générique pour appliquer les diverses obligations d'un titulaire de permis aux syndics dans le contexte de l'insolvabilité; elles incluent simplement le syndic dans la définition de [TRADUCTION] « titulaire de permis » (OGCA, al. 1(1)(cc); Pipeline Act, al. 1(1)(n)). En conséquence, tout pouvoir que ces lois confèrent à l'organisme de réglementation à l'encontre d'un titulaire de permis peut, en théorie, s'exercer également contre un syndic.

[22] Malgré cela, le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta envisage la possibilité qu'une partie des obligations de fin de vie d'un titulaire de permis demeure insatisfaite à la fin du processus d'insolvabilité. L'organisme de réglementation peut désigner des puits, des installations et leurs sites comme [TRADUCTION] « orphelins » (OGCA, al. 70(2)(a)). Un pipeline est défini comme une « installation » pour l'application du régime relatif aux orphelins (OGCA, al. 68(d)). La Directive 006 disposait qu'un [TRADUCTION] « puits, une installation ou un pipeline visé par le Programme d'évaluation de la responsabilité du titulaire de permis peut être déclaré orphelin lorsque le titulaire de ce permis devient insolvable ou est liquidé » (art. 7.1). Un « fonds pour les puits orphelins » a été créé dans le but de payer, entre autres choses, l'abandon et la remise en état des puits orphelins (OGCA, par. 70(1)). Le fonds pour les puits orphelins est financé au moyen d'une redevance annuelle, à l'échelle de l'industrie, payée par les titulaires de permis de puits et d'installations ainsi que de sites non remis en état (par. 73(1)). Le montant de la redevance est prescrit par l'organisme de réglementation en fonction du coût estimatif de l'abandon et de la remise en état des puits orphelins au cours d'un exercice donné (par. 73(2)).

[23] L'organisme de réglementation a délégué le pouvoir que lui confère la loi d'abandonner et de remettre en état les puits orphelins à l'OWA (Orphan Alta. Reg. 45/2001), a non-profit organization overseen by an independent board of directors. It is funded almost entirely through the industry-wide levy described above, 100 percent of which is remitted to it by the Regulator. The OWA has no power to seek reimbursement of its costs. However, once it has completed its environmental work, it may be reimbursed up to the value of any security deposit held by the Regulator to the credit of the licensee of the orphans. In recent years, the number of orphans in Alberta has increased rapidly. For example, the number of new orphan wells increased from 80 in the 2013-14 years to 591 in the 2014-15 years.

Fund Delegated Administration Regulation, Alta. Reg. 45/2001), un organisme sans but lucratif supervisé par un conseil d'administration indépendant. Cette entité est presque entièrement financée par la redevance décrite ci-dessus qui a été établie dans toute l'industrie, et la totalité de cette redevance est remise à l'OWA par l'organisme de réglementation. L'OWA n'a pas le pouvoir de demander le remboursement de ses frais. Toutefois, une fois ses travaux environnementaux terminés, l'OWA peut être remboursée jusqu'à concurrence de la valeur du dépôt de garantie détenu, le cas échéant, par l'organisme de réglementation au profit du titulaire de permis associé au puits orphelin. Au cours des dernières années, le nombre de puits orphelins a augmenté rapidement en Alberta. Par exemple, le nombre de nouveaux puits orphelins est passé de 80 en 2013-2014 à 591 en 2014-2015.

[24] At issue in this appeal is the applicability during bankruptcy of two powers conferred on the Regulator by the provincial legislation. Both are designed to ensure that licensees satisfy their end-of-life obligations.

[24] Ce qui est en cause dans le présent pourvoi, c'est l'applicabilité, durant la faillite, de deux pouvoirs conférés à l'organisme de réglementation par la législation provinciale. Les deux sont conçus pour garantir que les titulaires de permis remplissent les obligations de fin de vie qui leur incombent.

[25] The first power at issue in this appeal is the Regulator's power to order a licensee to abandon licensed assets, which is accompanied by statutory powers for the enforcement of such orders. Where a well or facility has not been abandoned in accordance with a direction of the Regulator or the rules or regulations, the Regulator may authorize any person to abandon the well or facility or may do so itself (OGCA, s. 28). Where the Regulator or the person it has designated performs the abandonment, the costs of doing so constitute a debt payable to the Regulator. An order of the Regulator showing these costs may be filed with and entered as a judgment of the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench and then enforced according to the ordinary procedure for enforcement of judgments of that court (OGCA, s. 30(6)). A similar scheme applies with respect to pipelines (Pipeline Act, ss. 23 to 26).

[25] Le premier pouvoir en cause dans le présent pourvoi est celui dont dispose l'organisme de réglementation d'ordonner à un titulaire de permis d'abandonner des biens visés par des permis, auquel s'ajoutent les pouvoirs que la loi confère pour faire exécuter de telles ordonnances. Lorsqu'il y a eu délaissement d'un puits ou d'une installation sans que le processus d'abandon ait été effectué conformément aux directives de l'organisme de réglementation, ou aux règles et règlements, l'organisme peut autoriser toute personne à effectuer ce processus à l'égard du puits ou de l'installation, ou s'en charger lui-même (OGCA, art. 28). Quand l'organisme de réglementation ou la personne qu'il a désignée procède à l'abandon, les frais liés à cette opération constituent une dette payable à l'organisme de réglementation. Une ordonnance de l'organisme de réglementation indiquant ces frais peut être déposée à la Cour du Banc de la Reine de l'Alberta, inscrite comme un jugement de cette cour, puis exécutée conformément à la procédure ordinaire d'exécution des jugements de cette cour (OGCA, par. 30(6)). Un régime semblable s'applique aux pipelines (Pipeline Act, art. 23 à 26).

[26] A licensee that contravenes or fails to comply with an order of the Regulator, or that has an outstanding debt to the Regulator in respect of abandonment or reclamation costs, is subject to a number of potential enforcement measures. The Regulator may suspend operations, refuse to consider licence applications or licence transfer applications (OGCA, s. 106(3)(a), (b) and (c)), or require the payment of security deposits, generally or as a condition of granting any further licences, approvals or transfers (OGCA, s. 106(3)(d) and (e)). Where a licensee contravenes the Act, regulations or rules, any order or direction of the Regulator, or any condition of a licence, the Regulator may prosecute the licensee for a regulatory offence and a fine may be imposed as a penalty, although the licensee can raise a due diligence defence (OGCA, ss. 108 and 110). A similar scheme applies with respect to pipelines (Pipeline Act, ss. 51 to 54) and the EPEA contains similar debt-creating provisions with respect to environmental protection orders. The EPEA also provides for the prosecution of regulatory offences in cases of non-compliance, with an available due diligence defence. However, as noted, a trustee's liability in relation to environmental protection orders is capped at estate assets, unless the trustee is guilty of gross negligence or wilful misconduct (EPEA, ss. 227 to 230, 240 and 245).

[26] Le titulaire de permis qui contrevient ou ne se conforme pas à une ordonnance de l'organisme de réglementation, ou qui a une dette impayée envers ce dernier relativement aux frais d'abandon ou de remise en état, est assujetti à un certain nombre de mesures d'exécution potentielles. L'organisme de réglementation peut suspendre les activités, refuser d'étudier des demandes de permis ou de transfert de permis (OGCA, al. 106(3)(a), (b) et (c)), ou exiger le paiement des dépôts de garantie, de façon générale ou comme condition à l'octroi d'autres permis, approbations ou transferts (OGCA, al. 106(3)(d) et (e)). Lorsqu'un titulaire de permis contrevient à la Loi, aux règlements ou aux règles, à toute ordonnance ou directive de l'organisme de réglementation ou à toute condition d'un permis, l'organisme de réglementation peut intenter une poursuite contre le titulaire de permis pour infraction réglementaire, et ce dernier est passible d'une amende en guise de pénalité, bien qu'il puisse invoquer la défense de diligence raisonnable (OGCA, art. 108 et 110). Un régime semblable s'applique aux pipelines (Pipeline Act, art. 51 à 54). L'EPEA contient elle aussi des dispositions similaires relatives à la création de dettes et afférentes aux ordonnances de protection de l'environnement, en plus de prévoir la poursuite d'infractions réglementaires en cas d'inobservation, avec la possibilité d'invoquer une défense de diligence raisonnable. Toutefois, comme il a été mentionné, la responsabilité du syndic en ce qui concerne les ordonnances de protection de l'environnement se limite aux éléments de l'actif, sauf s'il est responsable de négligence flagrante ou d'inconduite délibérée (EPEA, art. 227 à 230, 240 et 245).

[27] The second power at issue in this appeal is the Regulator's power to impose conditions on a licensee's transfer of its licence(s). As when it initially grants a licence, the Regulator has broad powers to consent to the transfer of a licence subject to any conditions, restrictions and stipulations or to reject the transfer (OGCA, s. 24(2)). Under Directive 006 and its 2016 replacement, the Regulator can reject a transfer even where both parties would have the required LMR after the transfer or where a security deposit is available to be posted in compliance with LMR requirements. In particular, the Regulator may determine that it is not in the public interest to approve the licence transfer based on the compliance history of one or both parties or their directors, officers or security holders, or based on the risk posed by the transfer to the orphan fund.

[27] Le second pouvoir en cause dans le présent pourvoi est celui que possède l'organisme de réglementation d'imposer des conditions au transfert, par un titulaire, d'un ou de plusieurs de ses permis. Tout comme au moment où il octroie un permis au départ, l'organisme de réglementation jouit de vastes pouvoirs pour consentir au transfert d'un permis sous réserve de conditions, restrictions et stipulations, ou pour rejeter le transfert (OGCA, par. 24(2)). Suivant la Directive 006 et le texte qui l'a remplacée en 2016, l'organisme peut rejeter un transfert, même si les deux parties auraient la CGR requise après le transfert, ou même quand un dépôt de garantie

[28] Where a proposed transaction would cause the transferor's LMR to deteriorate below 1.0 (or simply to deteriorate, in the case of an insolvent transferor), the Regulator insists that one of the following conditions be met before it will approve the transaction: (i) that the transferor perform abandonment, reclamation, or both, thus reducing its deemed liabilities, or (ii) that the transferor post a security deposit, thus increasing its deemed assets. Alternatively, the transaction may be structured to avoid any deterioration of the transferor's LMR by "bundling" the licences for spent wells with the licences for producing wells. A transaction in which the licenses for spent wells are retained while the licences for producing wells are transferred will almost always cause a considerable deterioration in a company's LMR.

[29] During this appeal, there was significant discussion of other regulatory regimes which Alberta could have adopted to prevent environmental costs associated with the oil and gas industry from being offloaded onto the public. What Alberta has chosen is a licensing regime which makes such costs an inherent part of the value of the licensed assets. This regime has the advantage of aligning with the polluter-pays principle, a well-recognized tenet of Canadian environmental law. This principle assigns polluters the responsibility for remedying environmental damage for which they are responsible, thereby incentivizing companies to pay attention to the environment in the course of their economic activities (Imperial Oil Ltd. v. Quebec (Minister of the Environment), 2003 SCC 58, [2003] 2 S.C.R. 624, at para. 24). The Licensee Liability Rating Program essentially requires licensees to apply the value derived from oil and gas assets during the productive portions of the life cycle of peut être versé conformément aux exigences relatives à la CGR. Plus particulièrement, l'organisme de réglementation peut décider qu'il n'est pas dans l'intérêt public d'approuver le transfert de permis compte tenu des antécédents de conformité de l'une des parties, ou des deux, ou de leurs administrateurs, dirigeants ou détenteurs de titres, ou encore du risque que présenterait le transfert à l'égard du fonds pour les puits orphelins.

[28] Lorsqu'une transaction proposée entraînerait une détérioration de la CGR du cédant en deçà de 1,0 (ou simplement une détérioration dans le cas d'un cédant insolvable), l'organisme de réglementation insiste sur le respect d'une des conditions suivantes avant d'approuver la transaction : (i) que le cédant effectue les processus d'abandon et/ou de remise en état, réduisant ainsi ses passifs réputés; (ii) que le cédant verse un dépôt de garantie, augmentant ainsi ses biens réputés. La transaction pourrait également être structurée de manière à éviter toute détérioration de la CGR du cédant par le « regroupement » des permis relatifs aux puits épuisés et de ceux liés aux puits productifs. Une transaction au cours de laquelle on conserve les permis des puits épuisés tandis que les permis des puits productifs sont transférés entraînerait presque toujours une détérioration considérable de la CGR d'une société.

[29] Au cours du présent pourvoi, il a été beaucoup question d'autres régimes de réglementation que l'Alberta aurait pu adopter pour éviter que les coûts environnementaux associés à l'industrie pétrolière et gazière ne soient passés au public. Ce que l'Alberta a choisi, c'est un régime de permis qui fait de ces coûts une partie inhérente de la valeur des biens visés par les permis. Ce régime a l'avantage de s'accorder avec le principe du pollueur-payeur, un précepte bien reconnu du droit canadien de l'environnement. Ce principe attribue aux pollueurs la charge de réparer les dommages environnementaux dont ils sont responsables, ce qui incite les sociétés à se soucier de l'environnement dans le cadre de leurs activités économiques (Cie pétrolière Impériale ltée c. Québec (Ministre de l'Environnement), 2003 CSC 58, [2003] 2 R.C.S. 624, par. 24). Le Programme d'évaluation de la responsabilité des titulaires de permis exige essentiellement que les titulaires de permis the assets to the inevitable cost of abandoning those assets and reclaiming their sites at the end of those life cycles.

[30] Ultimately, it is not the role of this Court to decide the best regulatory approach to the oil and gas industry. What is not in dispute is that, in adopting its current regulatory regime, Alberta has acted within its constitutional authority over property and civil rights in the province and over the "development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources . . . in the province" (Constitution Act, 1867, ss. 92(13) and 92A(1)(c)). Alberta has devised a complex regulatory apparatus to address important policy questions concerning when, by whom and in what manner the inevitable environmental costs associated with oil and gas extraction are to be paid. Its solution is a licensing regime that depresses the value of key industry assets to reflect environmental costs, backstopped by a levy on industry in the form of the orphan fund. Alberta intended that apparatus to continue to operate when an oil and gas company is subject to insolvency proceedings.

[31] However, the insolvency of an oil and gas company licensed to operate in Alberta also engages the BIA. The BIA is federal legislation that governs the administration of a bankrupt's estate and the orderly and equitable distribution of property among its creditors. It is validly enacted pursuant to Parliament's constitutional authority over bankruptcy and insolvency (Constitution Act, 1867, s. 91(21)). Just as Alberta's regulatory regime reflects its considered choice about how to address the important policy questions raised by the environmental risks of oil and gas extraction, the BIA reflects Parliament's considered choice about how to balance important policy objectives when a bankrupt's assets are, by definition, insufficient to meet all of its various obligations. To the extent that there is an operational conflict between the Alberta regulatory regime and the appliquent la valeur dérivée des biens pétroliers et gaziers pendant les parties productives du cycle de vie des biens au coût inévitable de l'abandon de ces biens et de la remise en état de leurs sites à la fin de ce cycle de vie.

[30] En fin de compte, il ne revient pas à notre Cour de décider de la meilleure approche réglementaire pour l'industrie pétrolière et gazière. Ce qui n'est pas contesté, c'est qu'en adoptant son régime de réglementation actuel, l'Alberta a agi dans les limites de sa compétence constitutionnelle en matière de propriété et de droits civils dans la province ainsi que dans le domaine de l'« exploitation, [de la] conservation et [de la] gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables [. . .] de la province » (Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, par. 92(13) et al. 92A(1)c)). L'Alberta a mis au point un appareil réglementaire complexe pour régler d'importantes questions de politique concernant le moment où, par qui et de quelle manière les coûts environnementaux inévitables associés à l'extraction du pétrole et du gaz doivent être payés. Sa solution est un régime d'octroi de permis qui fait baisser la valeur des principaux éléments d'actif de l'industrie pour refléter les coûts environnementaux, lequel est soutenu par une redevance sur l'industrie sous forme de fonds pour les puits orphelins. L'Alberta voulait que cet appareil continue à fonctionner lorsqu'une société pétrolière et gazière fait l'objet d'une procédure d'insolvabilité.

[31] Par contre, l'insolvabilité d'une société pétrolière et gazière autorisée à exercer ses activités en Alberta met aussi en jeu la LFI, une loi fédérale qui régit l'administration de l'actif d'un failli ainsi que la répartition ordonnée et équitable des biens entre ses créanciers. Elle a été valablement promulguée dans l'exercice de la compétence constitutionnelle du Parlement en matière de banqueroute et de faillite (Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, par. 91(21)). Tout comme le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta témoigne de son choix réfléchi quant à la façon d'aborder les questions de politique importantes soulevées par les risques environnementaux liés à l'extraction du pétrole et du gaz, la LFI témoigne du choix réfléchi du Parlement concernant la manière d'équilibrer des objectifs de politique importants lorsque les biens d'un failli sont, de par leur nature, insuffisants

BIA, or that the Alberta regulatory regime frustrates the purpose of the BIA, the doctrine of paramountcy dictates that the BIA must prevail.

B. The Relevant Provisions of the BIA

[32] Here, I simply wish to note the sections of the BIA at issue in this appeal. These sections will determine whether the doctrine of paramountcy applies. I will discuss the purposes of the BIA and the various issues raised by s. 14.06 in greater detail below.

[33] The central concept of the BIA is that of a "claim provable in bankruptcy". Several provisions of the BIA form the basis for delineating the scope of provable claims. The first is the definition provided in s. 2:

claim provable in bankruptcy, provable claim or claim provable includes any claim or liability provable in proceedings under this Act by a creditor . . .

[34] "Creditor" is defined in s. 2 as "a person having a claim provable as a claim under this Act".

[35] The definition of "claim provable" is completed by s. 121(1):

All debts and liabilities, present or future, to which the bankrupt is subject on the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt or to which the bankrupt may become subject before the bankrupt's discharge by reason of any obligation incurred before the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt shall be deemed to be claims provable in proceedings under this Act.

[36] A claim may be provable in a bankruptcy proceeding even if it is a contingent claim. A "contingent claim is 'a claim which may or may not ever ripen into a debt, according as some future event does or does not happen'" (Peters v. Remington, 2004 ABCA pour satisfaire à toutes ses obligations diverses. Et, pour autant qu'il y ait un conflit d'application entre le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta et la LFI, ou que le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta entrave la réalisation de l'objet de la LFI, la doctrine de la prépondérance commande que la LFI l'emporte.

B. Les dispositions applicables de la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité

[32] À ce stade-ci, je tiens simplement à souligner les articles de la LFI qui sont en cause dans le présent pourvoi. Ce sont ces articles qui détermineront si la doctrine de la prépondérance s'applique. J'analyserai plus en détail ci-après les objets de la LFI ainsi que les différentes questions soulevées par l'art. 14.06.

[33] Le concept central de la LFI est celui d'une « réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite ». Plusieurs dispositions de la LFI servent de fondement pour circonscrire la portée des réclamations prouvables. La première est la définition que l'on trouve à l'art. 2 :

réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite ou réclamation prouvable Toute réclamation ou créance pouvant être prouvée dans des procédures intentées sous l'autorité de la présente loi par un créancier.

[34] Le terme « créancier » est défini à l'art. 2 comme une « [p]ersonne titulaire d'une réclamation prouvable à ce titre sous le régime de la présente loi ».

[35] La définition de « réclamation prouvable » se termine au par. 121(1) :

Toutes créances et tous engagements, présents ou futurs, auxquels le failli est assujetti à la date à laquelle il devient failli, ou auxquels il peut devenir assujetti avant sa libération, en raison d'une obligation contractée antérieurement à cette date, sont réputés des réclamations prouvables dans des procédures entamées en vertu de la présente loi.

[36] Une réclamation peut être prouvable dans une procédure de faillite même s'il s'agit d'une réclamation éventuelle. Une [TRADUCTION] « réclamation éventuelle est "une réclamation qui peut ou non se transformer en une créance, selon qu'un événement

5, 49 C.B.R. (4th) 273, at para. 23, quoting Garner v. Newton (1916), 29 D.L.R. 276 (Man. K.B.), at p. 281). Sections 121(2) and 135(1.1) provide guidance on when a contingent claim will be a provable claim:

121 (2) The determination whether a contingent or unliquidated claim is a provable claim and the valuation of such a claim shall be made in accordance with section 135.

. . .

135 (1.1) The trustee shall determine whether any contingent claim or unliquidated claim is a provable claim, and, if a provable claim, the trustee shall value it, and the claim is thereafter, subject to this section, deemed a proved claim to the amount of its valuation.

[37] In Newfoundland and Labrador v. Abitibi-Bowater Inc., 2012 SCC 67, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 443 ("Abitibi"), at para. 26, this Court interpreted the foregoing provisions of the BIA and articulated a three-part test for determining when an environmental obligation imposed by a regulator will be a provable claim for the purposes of the BIA and the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"):

First, there must be a debt, a liability or an obligation to a creditor. Second, the debt, liability or obligation must be incurred before the debtor becomes bankrupt. Third, it must be possible to attach a monetary value to the debt, liability or obligation. [Emphasis in original.]

[38] I will address the Abitibi test in greater detail below.

[39] Once bankruptcy has been declared, creditors of the bankrupt must participate in one collective bankruptcy proceeding if they wish to enforce their provable claims. Section 69.3(1) of the BIA thus provides for an automatic stay of enforcement of provable claims outside the bankruptcy proceeding, effective as of the first day of bankruptcy.

futur se produit ou non" » (Peters c. Remington, 2004 ABCA 5, 49 B.C.R. (4th) 273, par. 23, citant Garner c. Newton (1916), 29 D.L.R. 276, (B.R. Man.), p. 281. Les paragraphes 121(2) et 135(1.1) donnent des indications sur le moment où une réclamation éventuelle deviendra une réclamation prouvable :

121 (2) La question de savoir si une réclamation éventuelle ou non liquidée constitue une réclamation prouvable et, le cas échéant, son évaluation sont décidées en application de l'article 135.

. . .

135 (1.1) Le syndic décide si une réclamation éventuelle ou non liquidée est une réclamation prouvable et, le cas échéant, il l'évalue; sous réserve des autres dispositions du présent article, la réclamation est dès lors réputée prouvée pour le montant de l'évaluation.

[37] Dans l'arrêt Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador c. AbitibiBowater Inc., 2012 CSC 67, [2012] 3 R.C.S. 443 (« Abitibi »), par. 26, notre Cour a interprété les dispositions précédentes de la LFI et a formulé un critère tripartite afin de décider quand une obligation environnementale imposée par un organisme de réglementation sera une réclamation prouvable pour l'application de la LFI et de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, c. C-36 (« LACC ») :

Premièrement, on doit être en présence d'une dette, d'un engagement ou d'une obligation envers un créancier. Deuxièmement, la dette, l'engagement ou l'obligation doit avoir pris naissance avant que le débiteur ne devienne failli. Troisièmement, il doit être possible d'attribuer une valeur pécuniaire à cette dette, cet engagement ou cette obligation. [En italique dans l'original.]

[38] J'aborderai le critère de l'arrêt Abitibi plus en détail ci-dessous.

[39] Une fois la faillite déclarée, les créanciers du failli doivent participer à l'unique procédure collective de faillite s'ils souhaitent faire valoir leurs réclamations prouvables. Le paragraphe 69.3(1) de la LFI prévoit donc une suspension automatique de l'exécution des réclamations prouvables en dehors de la procédure de faillite, à compter du premier jour de la faillite.

[40] The BIA establishes a comprehensive priority scheme for the satisfaction of the provable claims asserted against the bankrupt in the collective proceeding. Section 141 sets out the general rule, which is that all creditors rank equally and share rateably in the bankrupt's assets. However, the rule set out in s. 141 applies "[s]ubject to [the BIA]". Section 136(1) lists the claims of preferred creditors and the order of priority for their payment. It also states that this order of priority is "[s]ubject to the rights of secured creditors". Under s. 69.3(2), the stay of proceedings does not prevent secured creditors from realizing their security interest. The BIA therefore sets out a priority scheme for paying claims provable in bankruptcy, with secured creditors being paid first, preferred creditors second and unsecured creditors last (see Alberta (Attorney General) v. Moloney, 2015 SCC 51, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 327, at paras. 32-35).

[41] Essential to this appeal is s. 14.06 of the BIA, which deals with various environmental matters in the bankruptcy context. I will now reproduce s. 14.06(2) and s. 14.06(4), the two portions of the s. 14.06 scheme that are directly implicated in this appeal. The balance of s. 14.06 can be found in the appendix at the conclusion of these reasons.

[42] Section 14.06(2) reads as follows:

(2) Notwithstanding anything in any federal or provincial law, a trustee is not personally liable in that position for any environmental condition that arose or environmental damage that occurred

(a) before the trustee's appointment; or

(b) after the trustee's appointment unless it is established that the condition arose or the damage occurred as a result of the trustee's gross negligence or wilful misconduct or, in the Province of Quebec, the trustee's gross or intentional fault.

[40] La LFI établit un régime de priorité complet pour l'acquittement des réclamations prouvables présentées contre le failli dans la procédure collective. L'article 141 énonce la règle générale, à savoir que tous les créanciers ont un rang égal et une part proportionnelle des biens du failli. Toutefois, la règle énoncée à l'art. 141 s'applique « [s]ous réserve des autres dispositions de [la LFI] ». Le paragraphe 136(1) énumère les réclamations des « créanciers privilégiés » et fixe l'ordre de priorité dans lequel ils doivent recevoir leur paiement. Cet ordre établi par le par. 136(1) l'est « [s]ous réserve des droits des créanciers garantis ». Selon le par. 69.3(2), la suspension des procédures n'empêche pas les créanciers garantis de réaliser leur garantie. La LFI instaure donc un régime de priorité pour le versement des réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite, les créanciers garantis étant payés en premier, les créanciers privilégiés en deuxième et les créanciers non garantis en dernier (voir Alberta (Procureur général) c. Moloney, 2015 CSC 51, [2015] 3 R.C.S. 327, par. 32-35).

[41] L'article 14.06 de la LFI, qui traite de diverses questions environnementales dans le contexte de la faillite, est essentiel pour statuer sur le présent pourvoi. Je vais maintenant reproduire les par. 14.06(2) et 14.06(4), les deux parties du régime prévu à l'art. 14.06 qui sont directement en cause dans le présent pourvoi. Le reste de l'art. 14.06 se trouve en annexe à la fin des présents motifs.

[42] Voici le texte du par. 14.06(2) :

(2) Par dérogation au droit fédéral et provincial, le syndic est, ès qualités, dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle découlant de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement survenu avant ou après sa nomination, sauf celui causé par sa négligence grave ou son inconduite délibérée ou, dans la province de Québec, par sa faute lourde ou intentionnelle.

[43] Section 14.06(4) reads as follows:

(4) Notwithstanding anything in any federal or provincial law but subject to subsection (2), where an order is made which has the effect of requiring a trustee to remedy any environmental condition or environmental damage affecting property involved in a bankruptcy, proposal or receivership, the trustee is not personally liable for failure to comply with the order, and is not personally liable for any costs that are or would be incurred by any person in carrying out the terms of the order,

(a) if, within such time as is specified in the order, within ten days after the order is made if no time is so specified, within ten days after the appointment of the trustee, if the order is in effect when the trustee is appointed, or during the period of the stay referred to in paragraph (b), the trustee

(i) complies with the order, or

(ii) on notice to the person who issued the order, abandons, disposes of or otherwise releases any interest in any real property, or any right in any immovable, affected by the condition or damage;

(b) during the period of a stay of the order granted, on application made within the time specified in the order referred to in paragraph (a), within ten days after the order is made or within ten days after the appointment of the trustee, if the order is in effect when the trustee is appointed, by

(i) the court or body having jurisdiction under the law pursuant to which the order was made to enable the trustee to contest the order, or

(ii) the court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy for the purposes of assessing the economic viability of complying with the order; or

(c) if the trustee had, before the order was made, abandoned or renounced or been divested of any interest in any real property, or any right in any immovable, affected by the condition or damage.

[44] As I will discuss, a main point of contention between the parties is the very different interpretations they ascribe to s. 14.06(4) of the BIA. I note that s. 14.06(4)(a)(ii), which is relied upon by GTL, refers to a trustee who "abandons, disposes of or otherwise releases any interest in any real property".

[43] Voici le texte du par. 14.06(4) :

(4) Par dérogation au droit fédéral et provincial, mais sous réserve du paragraphe (2), le syndic est, ès qualités, dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle découlant du non-respect de toute ordonnance de réparation de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement et touchant un bien visé par une faillite, une proposition ou une mise sous séquestre administrée par un séquestre, et de toute responsabilité personnelle relativement aux frais engagés par toute personne exécutant l'ordonnance :

a) si, dans les dix jours suivant l'ordonnance ou dans le délai fixé par celle-ci, dans les dix jours suivant sa nomination si l'ordonnance est alors en vigueur ou pendant la durée de la suspension visée à l'alinéa b) :

(i) il s'y conforme,

(ii) il abandonne, après avis à la personne ayant rendu l'ordonnance, tout droit sur l'immeuble en cause ou tout intérêt sur le bien réel en cause, en dispose ou s'en dessaisit;

b) pendant la durée de la suspension de l'ordonnance qui est accordée, sur demande présentée dans les dix jours suivant l'ordonnance visée à l'alinéa a) ou dans le délai fixé par celle-ci, ou dans les dix jours suivant sa nomination si l'ordonnance est alors en vigueur :

(i) soit par le tribunal ou l'autorité qui a compétence relativement à l'ordonnance, en vue de permettre au syndic de la contester,

(ii) soit par le tribunal qui a compétence en matière de faillite, en vue d'évaluer les conséquences économiques du respect de l'ordonnance;

c) si, avant que l'ordonnance ne soit rendue, il avait abandonné tout droit sur l'immeuble en cause ou tout intérêt sur le bien réel en cause ou y avait renoncé, ou s'en était dessaisi.

[44] Comme je l'expliquerai, un point de discorde important entre les parties tient aux interprétations fort différentes qu'elles donnent au par. 14.06(4) de la LFI. Je remarque que le sous-al. 14.06(4)a)(ii), sur lequel s'appuie GTL, parle du syndic qui « abandonne [. . .] tout intérêt sur le bien réel en cause, en dispose

The word "disclaim" is used in these reasons, as it has been throughout this litigation, as a shorthand for these terms.

[45] I turn now to a brief discussion of the events of the Redwater bankruptcy.

C. The Events of the Redwater Bankruptcy

[46] Redwater was a publicly traded oil and gas company. It was first granted licences by the Regulator in 2009. On January 31 and August 19, 2013, ATB advanced funds to Redwater and, in return, was granted a security interest in Redwater's present and after-acquired property. ATB lent funds to Redwater with full knowledge of the end-of-life obligations associated with its assets. In mid-2014, Redwater began to experience financial difficulties. Upon application by ATB, GTL was appointed receiver for Redwater on May 12, 2015. At that time, Redwater owed ATB approximately $5.1 million.

[47] Upon being advised of the receivership, the Regulator sent GTL a letter dated May 14, 2015, setting out its position. The Regulator noted that the OGCA and the Pipeline Act included both receivers and trustees in the definition of "licensee". The Regulator stated that it was not a creditor of Redwater and that it was not asserting a "provable claim in the receivership". Accordingly, notwithstanding the receivership, Redwater remained obligated to comply with all regulatory requirements, including abandonment obligations for all licensed assets. The Regulator stated that GTL was legally obligated to fulfill these obligations prior to distributing any funds or finalizing any proposal to creditors. It warned that it would not approve the transfer of any of Redwater's licences unless it was satisfied that both the transferee and the transferor would be in a position to fulfill all regulatory obligations. It requested confirmation that GTL had taken possession of Redwater's licensed properties and that it was taking steps to comply with all of Redwater's regulatory obligations.

ou s'en dessaisit ». Dans les présents motifs, le mot « renoncer » sert à raccourcir ces termes, comme cela a été le cas tout au long du litige qui nous occupe.

[45] Je vais maintenant procéder à une brève analyse des faits entourant la faillite de Redwater.

C. Les faits entourant la faillite de Redwater

[46] Redwater était une société pétrolière et gazière cotée en bourse. L'organisme de réglementation lui a octroyé ses premiers permis en 2009. Le 31 janvier et le 19 août 2013, ATB a avancé des fonds à Redwater et, en contrepartie, s'est vu accorder une sûreté sur les biens actuels et futurs de Redwater. ATB a prêté des fonds à Redwater en pleine connaissance des obligations de fin de vie associées à ses biens. Au milieu de 2014, Redwater a commencé à éprouver des difficultés financières. Sur demande d'ATB, GTL a été nommé séquestre de Redwater le 12 mai 2015. À cette époque, Redwater devait environ 5,1 millions de dollars à ATB.

[47] Après avoir été informé de la mise sous séquestre, l'organisme de réglementation a envoyé à GTL une lettre datée du 14 mai 2015 exposant sa position. L'organisme de réglementation a fait remarquer que l'OGCA et la Pipeline Act incluaient à la fois les séquestres et les syndics dans la définition d'un « titulaire de permis ». L'organisme de réglementation a déclaré qu'il n'était pas un créancier de Redwater et qu'il ne faisait pas valoir une [TRADUCTION] « réclamation prouvable dans le cadre de la mise sous séquestre ». Ainsi, malgré la mise sous séquestre, Redwater demeurait tenue de se conformer à toutes les exigences réglementaires, y compris les obligations d'abandon, pour tous les biens visés par des permis. L'organisme de réglementation a déclaré que GTL était légalement tenu de remplir ces obligations avant de distribuer des fonds ou de finaliser toute proposition aux créanciers. L'organisme de réglementation a averti qu'il n'approuverait pas le transfert de l'un ou l'autre permis de Redwater à moins d'être convaincu que le cessionnaire et le cédant seraient en mesure de s'acquitter de toutes les obligations réglementaires. Il a demandé la confirmation que GTL avait pris possession des biens de Redwater visés par des permis et qu'il prenait des mesures pour se conformer à toutes les obligations réglementaires de Redwater.

[48] At the time it ran into financial difficulties, Redwater was licensed by the Regulator for 84 wells, 7 facilities and 36 pipelines, all in central Alberta. The vast majority of its assets were these oil and gas assets. At the time GTL was appointed receiver, 19 of the wells and facilities were producing and the remaining 72 were inactive or spent. There were working interest participants in several of the wells and facilities. Redwater's LMR did not drop below 1.0 until after it went into receivership, so it never paid any security deposits to the Regulator.

[49] By September 2015, Redwater's LMR had dropped to 0.93. The net value of its deemed assets and its deemed liabilities was negative $553,000. The 19 producing wells and facilities for which Redwater was the licensee would have had an LMR of 2.85 and a deemed net value of $4.152 million. The remaining 72 wells and facilities for which Redwater was the licensee would have had an LMR of 0.30 and a deemed net value of negative $4.705 million. Given that Redwater was in receivership, the Regulator's position was that it would approve the transfer of Redwater's licences only if the transfer did not cause a deterioration in its LMR.

[50] In its Second Report to the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench dated October 3, 2015, GTL explained why it had concluded that it could not meet the Regulator's requirements. GTL had concluded that the cost of the end-of-life obligations for the spent wells would likely exceed the sale proceeds for the productive wells. It viewed a sale of the non-producing wells — even if bundled with producing wells — as unlikely. If such a sale were possible, the purchase price would be reduced by the end-of-life obligations, negating the benefit to the estate. Based on this assessment, by letter dated July 3, 2015, GTL informed the Regulator that it was taking possession and control only of Redwater's 17 most productive wells (including a leaking well that was subsequently abandoned), 3 associated facilities and 12 associated

[48] À l'époque où elle a connu des difficultés financières, Redwater avait des permis délivrés par l'organisme de réglementation concernant 84 puits, 7 installations et 36 pipelines, tous situés dans le centre de l'Alberta. La grande majorité de ses éléments d'actif étaient ces biens pétroliers et gaziers. Au moment de la nomination de GTL comme séquestre, 19 des puits ou installations étaient productifs, tandis que les 72 autres étaient inactifs ou taris. Il y avait des participants en participation directe dans plusieurs puits et installations. La CGR de Redwater n'est tombée en dessous de 1,0 qu'après la mise sous séquestre de celle-ci et, en conséquence, Redwater n'a jamais versé de dépôt de garantie à l'organisme de réglementation.

[49] En septembre 2015, la CGR de Redwater avait chuté à 0,93. La valeur nette de ses biens réputés moins ses passifs réputés était égale à un montant négatif de 553 000 $. Les 19 puits et installations productifs pour lesquels Redwater était titulaire de permis avaient une CRG de 2,85 et une valeur nette réputée de 4,152 millions de dollars. Les 72 autres puits ou installations pour lesquels Redwater était titulaire de permis auraient eu une CGR de 0,30 et une valeur nette réputée négative de 4,705 millions de dollars. Puisque Redwater était sous séquestre, l'organisme de réglementation a mentionné qu'il n'approuverait le transfert des permis de Redwater que si cela n'occasionnait pas une détérioration de sa CGR.

[50] Dans son Deuxième rapport à la Cour du Banc de la Reine de l'Alberta daté du 3 octobre 2015, GTL a expliqué pourquoi il avait conclu qu'il ne pouvait pas satisfaire aux exigences de l'organisme de réglementation. D'après GTL, le coût des obligations de fin de vie des puits taris dépasserait probablement le produit de la vente des puits productifs. Il considérait comme improbable la vente des puits inexploités, même s'ils étaient regroupés avec les puits productifs. Si une telle vente était possible, le prix d'achat serait réduit au regard des obligations de fin de vie, annulant ainsi le bénéfice pour l'actif. Sur la base de cette évaluation, par lettre datée du 3 juillet 2015, GTL a informé l'organisme de réglementation qu'il prenait possession et contrôle seulement des 17 puits les plus productifs de Redwater (y compris un puits pipelines ("Retained Assets"), and that, pursuant to para. 3(a) of the Receivership Order, it was not taking possession or control of any of Redwater's other licensed assets ("Renounced Assets"). GTL's position was that it had no obligation to fulfill any regulatory requirements associated with the Renounced Assets.

[51] In response, on July 15, 2015, the Regulator issued orders under the OGCA and the Pipeline Act requiring Redwater to suspend and abandon the Renounced Assets ("Abandonment Orders"). The orders required abandonment to be carried out immediately where there were no other working interest participants and, by September 18, 2015, where there were other working interest participants. The Regulator stated that it considered the Renounced Assets an environmental and safety hazard and that s. 3.012(d) of the Oil and Gas Conservation Rules required a licensee to abandon wells or facilities so considered. In issuing the Abandonment Orders, the Regulator also relied on ss. 27 to 30 of the OGCA and ss. 23 to 26 of the Pipeline Act. If the Abandonment Orders were not complied with, the Regulator threatened to abandon the assets itself and to sanction Redwater through the use of s. 106 of the OGCA. The Regulator further stated that, once abandonment had taken place, the surface would need to be reclaimed and reclamation certificates obtained in accordance with s. 137 of the EPEA.

[52] On September 22, 2015, the Regulator and the OWA filed an application for a declaration that GTL's renunciation of the Renounced Assets was void, an order requiring GTL to comply with the Abandonment Orders, and an order requiring GTL to "fulfill the statutory obligations as licensee in relation to the abandonment, reclamation and remediation" of all of Redwater's licensed properties (A.R., vol. II, at p. 41). The Regulator did not seek to hold GTL qui fuyait et qui a été abandonné par la suite), ainsi que de 3 installations et de 12 pipelines connexes (« biens conservés »), et qu'en vertu du par. 3a) de l'ordonnance de mise sous séquestre, il ne prenait pas possession ou contrôle de tous les autres éléments d'actif de Redwater visés par des permis (« biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation »). Selon GTL, il n'était aucunement tenu de satisfaire aux exigences réglementaires en lien avec les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation.

[51] Le 15 juillet 2015, l'organisme de réglementation a réagi en rendant des ordonnances au titre de l'OGCA et de la Pipeline Act enjoignant à Redwater de suspendre l'exploitation des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation et de les abandonner (« ordonnances d'abandon »). Les ordonnances exigeaient que l'abandon soit effectué sur-le-champ dans les cas où il n'y avait pas d'autres participants en participation directe, et, au plus tard le 18 septembre 2015, dans ceux où il y avait d'autres participants en participation directe. L'organisme de réglementation a déclaré qu'il considérait les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation comme un danger pour l'environnement et la sécurité, et que l'al. 3.012(d) des Oil and Gas Conservation Rules obligeait le titulaire de permis à abandonner ces puits ou installations. Lorsqu'il a rendu les ordonnances d'abandon, l'organisme de réglementation s'est également fondé sur les art. 27 à 30 de l'OGCA et sur les art. 23 à 26 de la Pipeline Act. Si les ordonnances d'abandon n'étaient pas respectées, l'organisme de réglementation menaçait d'effectuer lui-même le processus d'abandon des biens et de sanctionner Redwater par l'application de l'art. 106 de l'OGCA. L'organisme a ajouté qu'une fois qu'il y avait eu abandon, la surface devait être remise en état et il fallait obtenir des certificats de remise en état conformément à l'art. 137 de l'EPEA.

[52] Le 22 septembre 2015, l'organisme de réglementation et l'OWA ont déposé une demande en vue d'obtenir un jugement déclaratoire portant que l'abandon par GTL des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation était nul, une ordonnance obligeant GTL à se conformer aux ordonnances d'abandon, de même qu'une ordonnance enjoignant à GTL de [TRADUCTION] « remplir les obligations légales en tant que titulaire de permis concernant l'abandon, liable for these obligations beyond the assets remaining in the Redwater estate. GTL brought a cross-application on October 5, 2015, seeking approval to pursue a sales process excluding the Renounced Assets. GTL sought a court order directing that the Regulator could not prevent the transfer of the licences associated with the Retained Assets on the basis of, inter alia, the LMR requirements, failure to comply with the Abandonment Orders, refusal to take possession of the Renounced Assets or any outstanding debts owed by Redwater to the Regulator. GTL did not seek to foreclose the possibility that the Regulator might have some other valid reason to reject a proposed transfer.

[53] A bankruptcy order was issued for Redwater on October 28, 2015, and GTL was appointed as trustee. GTL sent another letter to the Regulator on November 2, 2015, this time invoking s. 14.06(4)(a)(ii) of the BIA in relation to the Renounced Assets. The Abandonment Orders remain outstanding.

D. Judicial History

(1) Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta

[54] The chambers judge concluded that s. 14.06 of the BIA was designed to permit trustees to disclaim property where this was a rational economic decision in light of the environmental condition affecting the property. Personal liability of the trustee was not a condition precedent to the power to disclaim. The chambers judge accordingly found an operational conflict between s. 14.06 of the BIA and the definition of "licensee" in the OGCA and the Pipeline Act. Under s. 14.06 of the BIA, GTL could renounce assets and not be responsible for the associated environmental obligations. However, under the OGCA and the Pipeline Act, GTL could not renounce licensed assets because the definition of "licensee" la remise en état et la décontamination » de tous les biens de Redwater visés par des permis (A.R., vol. II, p. 41). L'organisme de réglementation n'a pas cherché à tenir GTL responsable de ces obligations au-delà des éléments qui faisaient encore partie de l'actif de Redwater. Le 5 octobre 2015, GTL a présenté une demande reconventionnelle visant à obtenir l'autorisation de poursuivre un processus de vente excluant les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. GTL a demandé au tribunal de rendre une ordonnance interdisant à l'organisme de réglementation d'empêcher le transfert des permis associés aux biens conservés en raison, notamment, des exigences relatives à la CGR, du non-respect des ordonnances d'abandon, du refus de prendre possession des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation ou des dettes en souffrance de Redwater envers l'organisme de réglementation. GTL n'a pas cherché à exclure la possibilité que l'organisme de réglementation ait un autre motif valable de rejeter un transfert proposé.

[53] Le 28 octobre 2015, une ordonnance de faillite a été rendue à l'égard de Redwater, et GTL a été nommé syndic. GTL a envoyé une autre lettre à l'organisme de réglementation le 2 novembre 2015, dans laquelle il invoquait cette fois le sous-al. 14.06(4)a)(ii) de la LFI à l'égard des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. Les ordonnances d'abandon sont toujours pendantes.

D. Historique judiciaire

(1) La Cour du Banc de la Reine de l'Alberta

[54] Le juge siégeant en cabinet a conclu que l'art. 14.06 de la LFI visait à permettre aux syndics de renoncer à un bien lorsqu'il s'agissait d'une décision économique rationnelle compte tenu du fait lié à l'environnement et touchant le bien. La responsabilité personnelle du syndic n'était pas une condition préalable au pouvoir de renonciation. Le juge siégeant en cabinet a donc conclu à un conflit d'application entre l'art. 14.06 de la LFI et la définition de « titulaire de permis » que l'on trouve dans l'OGCA et la Pipeline Act. En vertu de l'art. 14.06 de la LFI, GTL pouvait renoncer aux biens et ne pas être responsable des obligations environnementales qui y étaient associées. Cependant, aux termes de l'OGCA included receivers and trustees, so GTL remained liable for environmental obligations.

[55] Applying the test from Abitibi, the chambers judge concluded that, although in a "technical sense" it was not sufficiently certain that the Regulator or the OWA would carry out the Abandonment Orders and assert a monetary claim to have its costs reimbursed, the situation met what was intended by the Court in Abitibi because the Abandonment Orders were "intrinsically financial" (para. 173). Forcing GTL, as a "licensee", to comply with the Abandonment Orders would therefore frustrate the BIA's overall purpose of equitable distribution of the bankrupt's assets, as the Regulator's claim would be given a super priority to which it was not entitled, ahead of the claims of secured creditors. It would also frustrate the purpose of s. 14.06, by which Parliament had legislated as to environmental claims in bankruptcy and had specifically chosen not to give them a super priority. The conditions imposed by the Regulator on transfers of the licences for the Retained Assets further frustrated s. 14.06 by including the Renounced Assets in the calculation for determining the approval of a sale.

[56] The chambers judge approved the sale procedure proposed by GTL. He declared that the OGCA and the Pipeline Act were inoperative to the extent that they conflicted with the BIA by deeming GTL to be the "licensee" of the Renounced Assets; that GTL was entitled to disclaim the Renounced Assets pursuant to s. 14.06(4)(a)(ii) and (c), and was not subject to any obligations in relation to those assets; that the Abandonment Orders were inoperative to the extent that they required GTL to comply or to provide security deposits; and that Directive 006 was inoperative to the extent it conflicted with s. 14.06 of the BIA. Lastly, he declared that the Regulator, in exercising its discretion to approve a transfer of the et de la Pipeline Act, GTL ne pouvait renoncer aux biens visés par des permis parce que la définition de « titulaire de permis » comprenait le séquestre et le syndic, si bien que GTL demeurait responsable des obligations environnementales.

[55] Appliquant le critère de l'arrêt Abitibi, le juge siégeant en cabinet a conclu que, bien qu'au [TRADUCTION] « sens technique », il n'était pas suffisamment certain que l'organisme de réglementation ou l'OWA exécuteraient les ordonnances d'abandon et feraient valoir une réclamation pécuniaire pour obtenir le remboursement de leurs frais, la situation répondait à l'intention de la Cour dans Abitibi car les ordonnances d'abandon étaient « intrinsèquement financières » (par. 173). Forcer GTL en tant que « titulaire de permis » à se conformer aux ordonnances d'abandon irait donc à l'encontre de l'objectif global de la LFI de partage équitable des biens du failli, puisque l'organisme de réglementation se verrait accorder, pour sa réclamation, une superpriorité à laquelle il n'avait pas droit, avant les réclamations des créanciers garantis. Cela entraverait aussi la réalisation de l'objet de l'art. 14.06, par lequel le Parlement a légiféré sur les réclamations environnementales en cas de faillite et a expressément fait le choix de ne pas leur accorder une superpriorité. Les conditions imposées par l'organisme de réglementation sur les transferts de permis relatifs aux biens conservés ont contrecarré davantage l'article 14.06 en incluant les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation dans le calcul pour décider de l'approbation d'une vente.

[56] Le juge siégeant en cabinet a approuvé la procédure de vente proposée par GTL. Il a déclaré que l'OGCA et la Pipeline Act étaient inopérantes dans la mesure où elles entraient en conflit avec la LFI, en considérant GTL comme le « titulaire des permis » relatifs aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation, que GTL avait le droit de renoncer à ces biens au titre du sous-al. 14.06(4)a)(ii) et de l'al. 14.06(4)c), et qu'il n'était assujetti à aucune obligation à l'égard de ces biens, que les ordonnances d'abandon étaient inopérantes dans la mesure où elles obligeaient GTL à s'y conformer ou à fournir des dépôts de garantie et que la Directive 006 était inopérante dans la mesure où elle entrait en conflit avec l'art. 14.06 de la LFI.

licences for the Retained Assets, could not consider the Renounced Assets for the purpose of calculating Redwater's LMR before or after the transfer, nor could it consider any other issue involving the Renounced Assets.

(2) Court of Appeal of Alberta

(a) Majority Reasons

[57] Slatter J.A., for the majority, dismissed the appeals. He stated that the constitutional issues in the appeals were complementary to the primary issue, which was the interpretation of the BIA. Section 14.06 did not exempt environmental claims from the general bankruptcy regime, other than the super priority in s. 14.06(7), which would rarely, if ever, have any application to oil and gas wells. Section 14.06(4) did not "limit the power of the trustee to renounce . . . properties to those circumstances where it might be exposed to personal liability" (para. 68). Additionally, the word "order" in s. 14.06(4) had to be given a wide meaning.

[58] Slatter J.A. identified the essential issue as "whether the environmental obligations of Redwater meet the test for a provable claim" (para. 73). He agreed with the chambers judge that the third branch of the Abitibi test was met, but concluded that that test had been met "in both a technical and substantive way" (para. 76). The Regulator's policies essentially stripped away from the bankrupt estate enough value to meet environmental obligations. Requiring the depositing of security, or diverting value from the bankrupt estate, clearly met the standard of "certainty". The Regulator's policies required that the full value of the bankrupt's assets be applied first to environmental liabilities, creating a super priority for environmental claims. Slatter J.A. concluded that, "[n]otwithstanding their intended effect as conditions of licensing, the Regulator's policies [had] a direct effect on property, priorities, and the Trustee's right to renounce Enfin, il a déclaré que l'organisme de réglementation, dans l'exercice de son pouvoir discrétionnaire d'approuver un transfert des permis relatifs aux biens conservés, ne pouvait pas tenir compte des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation pour le calcul de la CGR de Redwater, avant ou après le transfert, ni tenir compte de toute autre question liée aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation.

(2) La Cour d'appel de l'Alberta

a) Les motifs majoritaires

[57] Le juge Slatter, au nom des juges majoritaires, a rejeté les appels. Il a déclaré que les questions constitutionnelles des appels étaient complémentaires à la question principale, l'interprétation de la LFI. L'article 14.06 n'a pas soustrait les réclamations environnementales au régime général de faillite, à l'exception de la superpriorité prévue au par. 14.06(7), qui s'appliquerait rarement, voire jamais, aux puits de pétrole et de gaz. Le paragraphe 14.06(4) n'a pas [TRADUCTION] « limité le pouvoir du syndic de renoncer [. . .] aux biens dans des circonstances où il pourrait s'exposer à une responsabilité personnelle » (par. 68). En outre, il fallait donner un sens large au mot « ordonnance » qui figure au par. 14.06(4).

[58] Le juge Slatter a décidé que la question essentielle était de savoir [TRADUCTION] « si les obligations environnementales de Redwater satisf[aisaient] au critère de la réclamation prouvable » (par. 73). Il était d'accord avec le juge siégeant en cabinet quant au respect du troisième volet du critère d'Abitibi, mais il a conclu que ce critère avait été respecté « tant sur le plan technique que sur le fond » (par. 76). Les politiques de l'organisme de réglementation ont essentiellement privé l'actif du failli d'une valeur suffisante pour respecter les obligations environnementales. Exiger le dépôt d'une garantie, ou détourner la valeur de l'actif du failli, répond clairement à la norme de « certitude ». Les politiques de l'organisme de réglementation exigeaient que la pleine valeur des biens du failli soit d'abord appliquée aux engagements environnementaux, créant ainsi une superpriorité pour les réclamations environnementales. Le juge Slatter a estimé que, « [n]onobstant leur effet assets, all of which [were] governed by the BIA" (para. 86).

[59] In terms of constitutional analysis, Slatter J.A. concluded that the role of GTL as a "licensee" under the OGCA and the Pipeline Act was "in operational conflict with the provisions of the BIA" that exempted trustees from personal liability, allowed them to disclaim assets and established the priority of environmental claims (para. 89). It also frustrated the BIA's purpose of "managing the winding up of insolvent corporations and settling the priority of claims against them" (para. 89). As such, the Regulator could not "insist that the Trustee devote substantial parts of the bankrupt estate in satisfaction of the environmental claims in priority to the claims of the secured creditor" (para. 91).

(b) Dissenting Reasons

[60] Martin J.A. dissented. In contrast to the majority, she stressed the constitutional dimensions of the case, in particular the need for co-operative federalism in the area of the environment, and noted that the doctrine of paramountcy should be applied with restraint. She concluded that the Regulator was not asserting a provable claim within the meaning of the Abitibi test. It was not enough for a regulatory order to be "intrinsically financial" for it to be a claim provable in bankruptcy (para. 185, quoting the chambers judge's reasons, at para. 173). There was not sufficient certainty that the ordered abandonment work would be done, either by the Regulator or by the OWA, and there was "no certainty at all that a claim for reimbursement would be made" (para. 184). Martin J.A. was also of the view that the Regulator was not a creditor of Redwater — or, if it was a creditor in issuing the Abandonment Orders, it was at least not one in enforcing the conditions for the transfer of licences. The Regulator had to be able to maintain control over the transfer of licences during prévu en tant que conditions associées aux permis, les politiques de l'organisme de réglementation ont eu un effet direct sur les biens, les priorités et le droit du Syndic de renoncer à des biens, qui étaient tous régis par la LFI » (par. 86).

[59] Sur le plan de l'analyse constitutionnelle, le juge Slatter a conclu que le rôle de GTL en tant que « titulaire de permis » au sens de l'OGCA et de la Pipeline Act était [TRADUCTION] « en conflit d'application avec les dispositions de la LFI » qui dégageaient les syndics de toute responsabilité personnelle, qui leur permettaient de renoncer à des biens et qui établissaient la priorité des réclamations environnementales (par. 89). Ce rôle entravait également la réalisation de l'objet de la LFI consistant à « gérer la liquidation des sociétés insolvables et à régler la priorité des réclamations à leur encontre » (par. 89). Ainsi, l'organisme de réglementation ne pouvait pas « insister pour que le syndic consacre une partie substantielle de l'actif du failli à l'acquittement des réclamations environnementales, par priorité sur les réclamations du créancier garanti » (par. 91).

b) Les motifs dissidents

[60] La juge Martin a exprimé sa dissidence. Contrairement aux juges majoritaires, elle a souligné les dimensions constitutionnelles de l'affaire, en particulier la nécessité d'un fédéralisme coopératif dans le domaine de l'environnement, et a fait remarquer que la doctrine de la prépondérance devait être appliquée avec retenue. Elle a conclu que l'organisme de réglementation ne faisait pas valoir de réclamation prouvable au sens du critère d'Abitibi. Il ne suffisait pas qu'une ordonnance réglementaire soit [TRADUCTION] « intrinsèquement financière » pour qu'il s'agisse d'une réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite (par. 185, citant les motifs du juge siégeant en cabinet, par. 173). Il n'était pas suffisamment certain que les travaux d'abandon ordonnés soient accomplis, soit par l'organisme de réglementation soit par l'OWA, et il n'y avait « aucune certitude qu'une demande de remboursement soit présentée » (par. 184). La juge Martin estimait elle aussi que l'organisme de réglementation n'était pas un créancier de Redwater — ou, s'il était un créancier au moment de rendre les ordonnances a bankruptcy, and there was no reason why such regulatory requirements could not coexist with the distribution of the bankrupt's estate.

[61] With regard to s. 14.06, Martin J.A. accepted the Regulator's argument that s. 14.06(4) allowed a trustee to renounce real property in order to avoid personal liability but did not prevent the assets of the bankrupt estate from being used to comply with environmental obligations. However, she went beyond this. In her view, s. 14.06(4) to (8) were enacted together as a statutory compromise. Martin J.A. concluded that a trustee's power to disclaim assets under s. 14.06 simply had no applicability to Alberta's regulatory regime. The ability to renounce under s. 14.06(4) had to be read in conjunction with the other half of the compromise — the Crown's super priority over the debtor's real property established by s. 14.06(7). Licence conditions were not the sort of "order" contemplated by s. 14.06(4), nor were licences the kind of "real property" contemplated by that provision. The balance struck by s. 14.06 was not effective when there was no "real property of the debtor" in which the Crown could take a super priority (para. 210).

[62] As there was no entitlement under the BIA to renounce the end-of-life obligations imposed by Alberta's regulatory regime, there was no operational conflict in enforcing those obligations under provincial law. Nor was there any frustration of purpose. The Regulator was not asserting any claims provable in bankruptcy: "The continued application of [Alberta's] regulatory regime following bankruptcy did not determine or reorder priorities among creditors, but rather value[d] accurately the assets available for distribution" (para. 240).

d'abandon, il ne l'était pas dans l'application des conditions de transfert des permis. L'organisme de réglementation devait être en mesure de conserver la maîtrise du transfert des permis pendant une faillite, et il n'y avait aucune raison pour que de telles exigences réglementaires ne puissent pas coexister avec le partage de l'actif du failli.

[61] En ce qui concerne l'article 14.06, la juge Martin a retenu l'argument de l'organisme de réglementation selon lequel le par. 14.06(4) permettait à un syndic de renoncer aux biens réels afin d'éviter d'engager sa responsabilité personnelle, mais n'empêchait pas que l'on se serve des éléments de l'actif du failli pour se conformer aux obligations environnementales. Cependant, elle est allée plus loin. Selon elle, les par. 14.06(4) à (8) ont été adoptés ensemble à titre de compromis d'ordre législatif. La juge Martin a conclu que le pouvoir du syndic de renoncer aux biens en vertu de l'art. 14.06 n'était tout simplement pas applicable dans le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta. La faculté de renoncer en vertu du par. 14.06(4) devait être interprétée en corrélation avec l'autre moitié du compromis, la superpriorité de la Couronne sur les biens réels du débiteur établie par le par. 14.06(7). Les conditions relatives aux permis n'étaient pas le genre d'« ordonnance » envisagé par le par. 14.06(4), ni les permis le genre de « bien réel » envisagé par cette disposition. L'équilibre atteint par l'art. 14.06 n'était pas solide lorsqu'il n'y avait pas de [TRADUCTION] « bien réel du débiteur » à l'égard duquel la Couronne pouvait prendre une superpriorité (par. 210).

[62] Comme il n'y avait aucun droit, aux termes de la LFI, de renoncer aux obligations de fin de vie imposées par le régime de réglementation [de l'Alberta], aucun conflit d'application ne résultait de l'exécution de ces obligations sous le régime du droit provincial. Et il n'existait pas non plus d'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral. L'organisme de réglementation ne faisait valoir aucune réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite : [TRADUCTION] « L'application continue du régime de réglementation [de l'Alberta] après la faillite n'a pas fixé ou réarrangé les priorités parmi les créanciers, mais a plutôt donné lieu à une évaluation juste des biens pouvant être répartis » (par. 240).

III. Analysis

A. The Doctrine of Paramountcy

[63] As I have explained, Alberta legislation grants the Regulator wide-ranging powers to ensure that companies that have been granted licences to operate in the Alberta oil and gas industry will safely and properly abandon oil wells, facilities and pipelines at the end of their productive lives and will reclaim their sites. GTL seeks to avoid being subject to two of those powers: the power to order Redwater to abandon the Renounced Assets and the power to refuse to allow a transfer of the licences for the Retained Assets due to unmet LMR requirements. There is no doubt that these are valid regulatory powers granted to the Regulator by valid Alberta legislation. GTL seeks to avoid their application during bankruptcy by virtue of the doctrine of federal paramountcy, which dictates that the Alberta legislation empowering the Regulator to use the powers in dispute in this appeal will be inoperative to the extent that its use of these powers during bankruptcy conflicts with the BIA.

[64] The issues in this appeal arise from what has been termed the "untidy intersection" of provincial environmental legislation and federal insolvency legislation (Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2012 ONSC 1213, 88 C.B.R. (5th) 111, at para. 8). Paramountcy issues frequently arise in the insolvency context. Given the procedural nature of the BIA, the bankruptcy regime relies heavily on the continued operation of provincial laws. However, s. 72(1) of the BIA confirms that, where there is a genuine conflict between provincial laws concerning property and civil rights and federal bankruptcy legislation, the BIA prevails (see Moloney, at para. 40). In other words, bankruptcy is carved out from property and civil rights but remains conceptually part of it. Valid provincial legislation of general application continues to apply in bankruptcy until Parliament legislates pursuant to its exclusive jurisdiction in relation to bankruptcy and insolvency. At that point,

III. Analyse

A. La doctrine de la prépondérance fédérale

[63] Comme je l'ai expliqué, la législation albertaine accorde à l'organisme de réglementation des pouvoirs étendus pour s'assurer que les sociétés qui ont obtenu des permis d'exploitation dans l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de l'Alberta abandonneront, de façon appropriée et sécuritaire, les puits de pétrole, installations et pipelines à la fin de leur vie productive, et remettront en état leurs sites. GTL cherche à éviter d'être assujetti à deux de ces pouvoirs : celui d'ordonner à Redwater d'abandonner les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation et celui de refuser de permettre le transfert des permis relatifs aux biens conservés à cause du non-respect des exigences relatives à la CGR. Il s'agit là sans aucun doute de pouvoirs réglementaires valables accordés à l'organisme de réglementation par une loi albertaine valide. GTL cherche à éviter leur application au cours de la faillite en invoquant la doctrine de la prépondérance fédérale, selon laquelle la loi de l'Alberta habilitant l'organisme de réglementation à utiliser les pouvoirs qui sont en litige dans le cadre du présent pourvoi est inopérante dans la mesure où son exercice de ces pouvoirs pendant la faillite entre en conflit avec la LFI.

[64] Les questions en litige dans le présent pourvoi découlent de ce qu'on a appelé [TRADUCTION] l'« intersection désordonnée » de la législation provinciale sur l'environnement et de la législation fédérale sur l'insolvabilité (Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2012 ONSC 1213, 88 C.B.R. (5th) 111, par. 8). Les questions de prépondérance se posent souvent dans le contexte de l'insolvabilité. Étant donné la nature procédurale de la LFI, le régime de faillite repose en grande partie sur l'application continue des lois provinciales. Toutefois, le par. 72(1) de la LFI confirme qu'en cas de conflit véritable entre les lois provinciales concernant la propriété et les droits civils et la législation fédérale sur la faillite, la LFI l'emporte (voir Moloney, par. 40). En d'autres termes, la faillite est issue de la propriété et des droits civils, mais elle en fait toujours partie conceptuellement. Les lois provinciales valides d'application générale continuent de s'appliquer dans le domaine de la faillite jusqu'à ce the provincial law becomes inoperative to the extent of the conflict (see Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453, at para. 3).

[65] Over time, two distinct forms of conflict have been recognized. The first is operational conflict, which arises where compliance with both a valid federal law and a valid provincial law is impossible. Operational conflict arises "where one enactment says 'yes' and the other says 'no', such that 'compliance with one is defiance of the other'" (Saskatchewan (Attorney General) v. Lemare Lake Logging Ltd., 2015 SCC 53, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 419, at para. 18, quoting Multiple Access Ltd. v. McCutcheon, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 161, at p. 191). The second is frustration of purpose, which occurs where the operation of a valid provincial law is incompatible with a federal legislative purpose. The effect of a provincial law may frustrate the purpose of the federal law, even though it does "not entail a direct violation of the federal law's provisions" (Canadian Western Bank v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 22, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 3, at para. 73). The party relying on frustration of purpose "must first establish the purpose of the relevant federal statute, and then prove that the provincial legislation is incompatible with this purpose" (Lemare, at para. 26, quoting Quebec (Attorney General) v. Canadian Owners and Pilots Association, 2010 SCC 39, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 536, at para. 66).

[66] Under both branches of paramountcy, the burden of proof rests on the party alleging the conflict. This burden is not an easy one to satisfy, as the doctrine of paramountcy is to be applied with restraint. Conflict must be defined narrowly so that each level of government may act as freely as possible within its respective sphere of constitutional authority. "[H]armonious interpretations of federal and provincial legislation should be favoured over an interpretation that results in incompatibility . . . [i]n the absence of 'very clear' statutory language to the contrary" (Lemare, at paras. 21 and 27). "It is presumed that Parliament intends its laws to co-exist with provincial laws" (Moloney, at para. 27). As this Court found in Lemare, at paras. 22-23, the application of the que le Parlement légifère en vertu de sa compétence exclusive en matière de faillite et d'insolvabilité. La loi provinciale devient alors inopérante dans la mesure du conflit (voir Husky Oil Operations Ltd. c. Ministre du Revenu national, [1995] 3 R.C.S. 453, par. 3).

[65] Au fil du temps, deux formes distinctes de conflit ont été reconnues. La première est le conflit d'application, qui survient lorsqu'il est impossible de se conformer en même temps à une loi fédérale valide et à une loi provinciale valide. Il y a conflit d'application lorsqu'« une loi dit "oui" et l'autre dit "non", de sorte que "l'observance de l'une entraîne l'inobservance de l'autre" » (Saskatchewan (Procureur général) c. Lemare Lake Logging Ltd., 2015 CSC 53, [2015] 3 R.C.S. 419, par. 18, citant Multiple Access Ltd. c. McCutcheon, [1982] 2 R.C.S. 161, p. 191). La seconde est l'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral, qui se produit lorsque l'application d'une loi provinciale valide est incompatible avec l'objet d'une loi fédérale. L'effet d'une loi provinciale peut contrecarrer la réalisation de l'objet de la loi fédérale, « sans toutefois entraîner une violation directe de ses dispositions » (Banque canadienne de l'Ouest c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 22, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 3, par. 73). La partie qui invoque l'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral « doit d'abord établir l'objet de la loi fédérale pertinente et ensuite prouver que la loi provinciale est incompatible avec cet objet » (Lemare, par. 26, citant Québec (Procureur général) c. Canadian Owners and Pilots Association, 2010 CSC 39, [2010] 2 R.C.S. 536, par. 66).

[66] Aux deux volets de la prépondérance, la charge de la preuve incombe à la partie qui allègue l'existence du conflit. Il n'est pas facile de s'en acquitter, puisque la doctrine de la prépondérance doit être appliquée avec retenue. Le conflit doit être défini de façon étroite pour que chaque ordre de gouvernement puisse agir aussi librement que possible dans sa sphère de compétence constitutionnelle respective. « [L]es tribunaux doivent donner aux lois provinciale et fédérale une interprétation harmonieuse plutôt qu'une interprétation qui donne lieu à une incompatibilité [. . .] [e]n l'absence d'un texte législatif "clair" à cet effet » (Lemare, par. 21 et 27). « On présume que le Parlement a l'intention de faire coexister ses lois avec les lois provinciales » (Moloney, par. 27).

doctrine of paramountcy should also give due weight to the principle of co-operative federalism. This principle allows for interplay and overlap between federal and provincial legislation. While co-operative federalism does not impose limits on the otherwise valid exercise of legislative power, it does mean that courts should avoid an expansive interpretation of the purpose of federal legislation which will bring it into conflict with provincial legislation.

[67] The case law has established that the BIA as a whole is intended to further "two purposes: the equitable distribution of the bankrupt's assets among his or her creditors and the bankrupt's financial rehabilitation" (Moloney, at para. 32, citing Husky Oil, at para. 7). Here, the bankrupt is a corporation that will never emerge from bankruptcy. Accordingly, only the former purpose is relevant. As I will discuss below, the chambers judge also spoke of the purposes of s. 14.06 as distinct from the broader purposes of the BIA. This Court has discussed the purpose of specific provisions of the BIA in previous cases — see, for example, Lemare, at para. 45.

[68] GTL has proposed two conflicts between the Alberta legislation establishing the disputed powers of the Regulator during bankruptcy and the BIA, either of which, it says, would have provided a sufficient basis for the order granted by the chambers judge.

[69] The first conflict proposed by GTL results from the inclusion of trustees in the definition of "licensee" in the OGCA and the Pipeline Act. GTL says that s. 14.06(4) releases it from all environmental liability associated with the Renounced Assets after a valid "disclaimer" is made. But as a "licensee", it can be required by the Regulator to satisfy all of Redwater's statutory obligations and liabilities, which disregards the "disclaimer" of the Renounced Assets. GTL further notes the possibility that it may be held personally liable as a "licensee". In response, the Regulator says that s. 14.06(4) is concerned primarily with protecting trustees from personal liability in relation to environmental orders, and does not affect the ongoing responsibilities of the bankrupt

Comme le conclut notre Cour aux par. 22 et 23 de l'arrêt Lemare, l'application de la doctrine de la prépondérance devrait également tenir dûment compte du principe du fédéralisme coopératif. Ce principe permet l'interaction ainsi que le chevauchement entre les lois fédérales et provinciales. Bien que le fédéralisme coopératif n'impose pas de limites à l'exercice par ailleurs valide du pouvoir législatif, cela signifie que les tribunaux devraient éviter de donner à l'objet de la loi fédérale une interprétation large qui le mettrait en conflit avec la loi provinciale.

[67] La jurisprudence a établi que la LFI dans son ensemble est censée favoriser l'atteinte de « deux objectifs : le partage équitable des biens du failli entre ses créanciers et la réhabilitation financière du failli » (Moloney, par. 32, citant Husky Oil, par. 7). En l'espèce, la faillie est une société qui ne s'extirpera jamais de la faillite. Donc, seul le premier objectif est pertinent. Comme je vais l'expliquer ci-dessous, le juge siégeant en cabinet a également affirmé que l'objet de l'art. 14.06 se distinguait des objets plus larges de la LFI. Notre Cour a analysé l'objet de certaines dispositions de la LFI dans des décisions antérieures (voir, par exemple, Lemare, par. 45).

[68] GTL a relevé deux conflits entre la législation albertaine établissant les pouvoirs contestés de l'organisme de réglementation pendant la faillite et la LFI, et l'un ou l'autre aurait constitué, selon lui, un fondement suffisant pour l'ordonnance rendue par le juge siégeant en cabinet.

[69] Le premier conflit avancé par GTL découle de l'ajout des syndics à la définition de « titulaire de permis » qui figure dans l'OGCA et la Pipeline Act. GTL affirme que le par. 14.06(4) le soustrait à tout engagement environnemental associé aux biens faisant l'objet d'une « renonciation » valide. Toutefois, comme il est « titulaire de permis », l'organisme de réglementation peut l'obliger à s'acquitter de toutes les obligations et de tous les engagements légaux de Redwater, faisant ainsi abstraction de la « renonciation » aux biens en cause. GTL souligne en outre la possibilité qu'il soit tenu personnellement responsable en tant que « titulaire de permis ». L'organisme de réglementation réplique que le par. 14.06(4) a pour objectif premier de mettre les syndics à l'abri de toute estate. Thus, as long as a trustee is protected from personal liability, no conflict arises from its status as a "licensee" or from the fact that the bankrupt estate remains responsible under provincial law for the ongoing environmental obligations associated with "disclaimed" assets.

[70] The second conflict proposed by GTL is that, even if s. 14.06(4) is only concerned with a trustee's personal liability, the Regulator's use of its statutory powers effectively reorders the priorities in bankruptcy established by the BIA. Such reordering is said to be caused by the fact that the Regulator requires the expenditure of estate assets to comply with the Abandonment Orders and to discharge or secure the environmental liabilities associated with the Renounced Assets before it will approve a transfer of the licences for the Retained Assets (in keeping with the LMR requirements). These end-of-life obligations are said by GTL to be unsecured claims held by the Regulator, which cannot, under the BIA, be satisfied in preference over the claims of Redwater's secured creditors. In response, the Regulator says that, on the proper application of the Abitibi test, these environmental regulatory obligations are not provable claims in bankruptcy. Accordingly, says the Regulator, the provincial laws requiring the Redwater estate to satisfy these obligations prior to the distribution of its assets to secured creditors do not conflict with the priority scheme in the BIA.

[71] I will consider each alleged conflict in turn.

B. Is There a Conflict Between the Alberta Regulatory Scheme and Section 14.06 of the BIA?

[72] As a statutory scheme, s. 14.06 of the BIA raises numerous interpretive issues. As noted by Martin J.A., the only matter concerning s. 14.06 on responsabilité personnelle à l'égard des ordonnances environnementales et que cette disposition n'a aucune incidence sur les responsabilités continues de l'actif du failli. Ainsi, tant qu'un syndic est à l'abri de toute responsabilité personnelle, son statut de « titulaire de permis » et le fait que l'actif d'un failli demeure responsable, aux termes du droit provincial, des obligations environnementales continues associées aux éléments le composant et faisant l'objet de la renonciation ne sont à l'origine d'aucun conflit.

[70] Le second conflit allégué par GTL est que, même si le par. 14.06(4) ne porte que la responsabilité personnelle d'un syndic, l'exercice par l'organisme de réglementation des pouvoirs que lui confère la loi réarrange de fait les priorités établies par la LFI en matière de faillite. Un tel réarrangement serait imputable au fait que l'organisme de réglementation exige la dépense d'éléments d'actif pour respecter les ordonnances d'abandon ainsi que pour libérer ou garantir les engagements environnementaux associés aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation avant d'approuver un transfert des permis liés aux biens conservés (conformément aux exigences relatives à la CGR). Ces obligations de fin de vie sont considérées par GTL comme étant une créance ordinaire de l'organisme de réglementation, que la LFI ne permet pas d'acquitter de préférence aux réclamations des créanciers garantis de Redwater. L'organisme de réglementation réplique que, si l'on applique correctement le critère d'Abitibi, ces obligations réglementaires environnementales ne sont pas des réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite. En conséquence, selon l'organisme de réglementation, les lois provinciales exigeant que l'actif de Redwater satisfasse à ces obligations avant le partage, entre les créanciers garantis, des éléments dont il est composé n'entre pas en conflit avec le régime de priorité de la LFI.

[71] J'examinerai chacun des conflits allégués, l'un après l'autre.

B. Y a-t-il un conflit entre le régime de réglementation albertain et l'art. 14.06 de la LFI?

[72] En tant que régime législatif, l'art. 14.06 de la LFI soulève de nombreuses questions d'interprétation. Comme l'a fait remarquer la juge Martin, le seul which all the parties to this litigation can agree is that it "is not a model of clarity" (C.A. reasons, at para. 201). Given the confusion caused by attempts to interpret s. 14.06 as a coherent scheme during this litigation, Parliament may very well wish to re-examine s. 14.06 during its next review of the BIA.

[73] At its core, this appeal raises the issue of whether there is a conflict between specific Alberta legislation and the BIA. GTL submits that there is such a conflict. It argues that, because it "disclaimed" the Renounced Assets under s. 14.06(4) of the BIA, it should cease to have any responsibilities, obligations or liability with respect to them. And yet, it notes, as a "licensee" under the OGCA and the Pipeline Act, it remains responsible for abandoning the Renounced Assets. Furthermore, those assets continue to be included in the calculation of Redwater's LMR. GTL suggests an additional conflict with s. 14.06(2) of the BIA based on its possible exposure, as a "licensee", to personal liability for the costs of abandoning the Renounced Assets.

[74] I have concluded that there is no conflict. Various arguments were advanced during this appeal concerning the disparate elements of the s. 14.06 scheme. However, the provision upon which GTL in fact relies in arguing that it is entitled to avoid its responsibilities as a "licensee" under the Alberta legislation is s. 14.06(4). As I have noted, GTL and the Regulator propose very different interpretations of s. 14.06(4). However, s. 14.06(4) is clear and unambiguous when read on its own: where it is invoked by a trustee, the result is that "the trustee is not personally liable" for failure to comply with certain environmental orders or for the costs incurred by any person in carrying out the terms of such orders. The provision says nothing about the liability of the "bankrupt" or the "estate" — distinct concepts referenced many times throughout the BIA. Section 14.06(4), on its own wording, does not support the interpretation urged upon this Court by GTL.

point concernant l'art. 14.06 sur lequel toutes les parties au présent litige ont pu s'entendre est le fait que ce [TRADUCTION] « n'est pas un modèle de clarté » (motifs de la Cour d'appel, par. 201). Vu la confusion semée par les tentatives d'interpréter l'art. 14.06 comme un régime cohérent lors du présent litige, le Parlement pourrait fort bien vouloir réexaminer cet article durant sa prochaine étude de la LFI.

[73] Fondamentalement, le présent pourvoi porte sur la question de savoir s'il existe un conflit entre une loi albertaine en particulier et la LFI. GTL soutient que oui et affirme que, comme il a « renoncé » aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation en vertu du par. 14.06(4) de la LFI, il peut cesser d'assumer toute responsabilité ou obligation ou tout engagement à l'égard de ces biens. Pourtant, aux dires de GTL, en tant que « titulaire de permis », il reste chargé de les abandonner. De plus, ceux-ci sont toujours inclus dans le calcul de la CGR de Redwater. GTL prétend qu'il y a un autre conflit avec le par. 14.06(2) de la LFI du fait que sa responsabilité personnelle comme « titulaire de permis » peut être engagée relativement aux frais d'abandon des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation.

[74] J'ai conclu à l'absence de conflit. Différents arguments ont été présentés lors du pourvoi au sujet des éléments disparates du régime instauré par l'art. 14.06. Cependant, la disposition qu'invoque en fait GTL pour affirmer avoir le droit d'échapper à ses responsabilités en tant que « titulaire de permis » en application de la législation albertaine est le par. 14.06(4). Rappelons que GTL et l'organisme de réglementation proposent des interprétations fort différentes du par. 14.06(4). Toutefois, à la simple lecture de ses termes, le par. 14.06(4) est clair et sans équivoque : lorsqu'il est invoqué par un syndic, « le syndic est dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle » découlant du non-respect de certaines ordonnances environnementales ou relativement aux frais engagés par toute personne exécutant ces ordonnances. La disposition ne dit rien à propos de la responsabilité du « failli » ou de l'« actif », des notions distinctes mentionnées à maintes reprises dans la LFI. Le texte même du par. 14.06(4) n'étaye pas l'interprétation que GTL nous exhorte à retenir.

[75] In my view, s. 14.06(4) sets out the result of a trustee's "disclaimer" of real property when there is an order to remedy any environmental condition or damage affecting that property. Regardless of whether "disclaimer" is understood as a common law power or as a power deriving from some other statutory source, the result of a trustee's "disclaimer" of real property where an environmental order has been made in relation to that property is that the trustee is protected from personal liability, while the ongoing liability of the bankrupt estate is unaffected. The interpretation of s. 14.06(4) as being concerned with the personal liability of the trustee and not with the liability of the bankrupt estate is supported not only by the plain language of the section, but also by the Hansard evidence, a previous decision of this Court and the French version of the section. Furthermore, not only is the plain meaning of the words "personally liable" clear, but the same concept is also found in both s. 14.06(1.2) and s. 14.06(2), which specifically state that the trustee is not personally liable. In particular, in my view, it is impossible to coherently read s. 14.06(2) as referring to personal liability and yet read s. 14.06(4) as somehow referring to the liability of the bankrupt estate.

[76] Given that s. 14.06(4) dictates that "disclaimer" only protects trustees from personal liability, then, even assuming that GTL successfully "disclaimed" in this case, no operational conflict or frustration of purpose results from the fact that the Regulator requires GTL, as a "licensee", to expend estate assets on abandoning the Renounced Assets. Furthermore, no conflict is caused by continuing to include the Renounced Assets in the calculation of Redwater's LMR. Finally, given the restraint with which the doctrine of paramountcy must be applied, and given that the Regulator has not attempted to hold GTL personally liable as a "licensee" for the costs of abandonment, no conflict with s. 14.06(2) or s. 14.06(4) is caused by the mere theoretical possibility of personal liability under the OGCA or the Pipeline Act.

[75] À mon avis, le par. 14.06(4) expose le résultat d'une « renonciation » du syndic à un bien réel en cas d'ordonnance de réparation de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement et touchant ce bien. Que l'on voit la « renonciation » comme un pouvoir reconnu par la common law ou un pouvoir découlant d'une quelconque autre source législative, la « renonciation » d'un syndic à des biens réels en réaction à une ordonnance environnementale visant ces biens dégage le syndic de toute responsabilité personnelle, alors que la responsabilité continue de l'actif du failli n'est pas touchée. L'idée que le par. 14.06(4) vise la responsabilité personnelle du syndic, et non celle de l'actif du failli, est étayée non seulement par le texte clair de l'article, mais également par les débats parlementaires, un arrêt de notre Cour et la version française de l'article. De plus, non seulement le sens ordinaire des mots « responsabilité personnelle » est-il clair, mais on retrouve également le même concept aux par. 14.06(1.2) et (2), lesquels disposent expressément que le syndic est dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle. En particulier, il me paraît impossible d'interpréter de manière cohérente le par. 14.06(2) comme mentionnant la responsabilité personnelle tout en interprétant le par. 14.06(4) comme renvoyant d'une façon ou d'un autre à la responsabilité de l'actif du failli.

[76] Comme le par. 14.06(4) dispose que la « renonciation » dégage uniquement le syndic de toute responsabilité personnelle, à supposer même que GTL ait « renoncé » avec succès à des biens en l'espèce, l'organisme de réglementation ne cause aucun conflit d'application ni n'entrave la réalisation d'un objet fédéral en exigeant de GTL à titre de « titulaire de permis » qu'il se serve d'éléments de l'actif pour abandonner les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. En outre, il n'y a aucun conflit du fait que ces biens soient toujours inclus dans le calcul de la CGR de Redwater. Enfin, vu la retenue avec laquelle il faut appliquer la doctrine de la prépondérance, et vu que l'organisme de réglementation n'a pas tenté de tenir GTL personnellement responsable en tant que « titulaire de permis » des frais d'abandon, aucun conflit avec les par. 14.06(2) ou (4) n'est causé par la simple possibilité théorique de responsabilité personnelle en application de la OGCA ou de la Pipeline Act.

[77] In what follows, I will begin by interpreting s. 14.06(4) and explaining why, based on its plain wording and other relevant considerations, the provision is concerned solely with the personal liability of the trustee, and not with the liability of the bankrupt estate. I will then explain how, despite their superficial similarity, s. 14.06(4) and s. 14.06(2) have different rationales, and I will demonstrate that, on a proper understanding of the scheme crafted by Parliament, s. 14.06(4) does not affect the liability of the bankrupt estate. To conclude, I will demonstrate that there is no operational conflict or frustration of purpose between the Alberta legislation and s. 14.06 of the BIA in this case, with particular reference to the question of GTL's protection from personal liability.

(1) The Correct Interpretation of Section 14.06(4)

(a) Section 14.06(4) Is Concerned With the Personal Liability of Trustees

[78] I have concluded that s. 14.06(4) is concerned with the personal liability of trustees, and not with the liability of the bankrupt estate. I emphasize here the well-established principle that, "[w]hen a federal statute can be properly interpreted so as not to interfere with a provincial statute, such an interpretation is to be applied in preference to another applicable construction which would bring about a conflict between the two statutes" (Canadian Western Bank, at para. 75, quoting Attorney General of Canada v. Law Society of British Columbia, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 307, at p. 356).

[79] Section 14.06(4) says nothing about the "bankrupt estate" avoiding the applicability of valid provincial law. In drafting s. 14.06(4), Parliament could easily have referred to the liability of the bankrupt estate. Parliament chose instead to refer simply to the personal liability of a trustee. Notably, s. 14.06(7) and s. 14.06(8) both refer to a "debtor in a bankruptcy". Parliament's choice in this regard cannot be ignored. I agree with Martin J.A. that there is no basis on which to read the words "the trustee is not personally liable" in s. 14.06(4) as encompassing the liability of the bankrupt estate. As noted by Martin J.A., it

[77] Dans les paragraphes qui suivent, je vais d'abord interpréter le par. 14.06(4) et expliquer pourquoi, compte tenu de sa formulation claire et d'autres considérations pertinentes, la disposition ne concerne que la responsabilité personnelle du syndic, et non la responsabilité de l'actif du failli. Je vais ensuite expliquer en quoi, malgré leur similitude superficielle, la raison d'être du par. 14.06(4) diffère de celle du par. 14.06(2), et démontrer que, si l'on comprend bien le régime conçu par le Parlement, le par. 14.06(4) n'influe pas sur la responsabilité de l'actif du failli. Pour conclure, je démontrerai qu'il n'y a aucun conflit d'application ni aucune entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral entre la législation albertaine et l'art. 14.06 de la LFI dans la présente affaire, particulièrement en ce qui a trait à la protection de GTL contre toute responsabilité personnelle.

(1) L'interprétation juste du par. 14.06(4)

a) Le paragraphe 14.06(4) s'attache à la responsabilité personnelle du syndic

[78] J'ai conclu que le par. 14.06(4) s'attache à la responsabilité personnelle du syndic et non à la responsabilité de l'actif du failli. Je souligne ici le principe bien établi selon lequel « [c]haque fois qu'on peut légitimement interpréter une loi fédérale de manière qu'elle n'entre pas en conflit avec une loi provinciale, il faut appliquer cette interprétation de préférence à toute autre qui entraînerait un conflit » (Banque canadienne de l'Ouest, par. 75, citant Procureur général du Canda c. Law Society of British Columbia, [1982] 2 R.C.S. 307, p. 356).

[79] Le paragraphe 14.06(4) est muet à propos de « l'actif du failli » qui évite l'applicabilité d'une loi provinciale valide. Lorsqu'il a rédigé le par. 14.06(4), le Parlement aurait pu aisément parler de la responsabilité de l'actif du failli. Le Parlement a plutôt choisi de mentionner uniquement la responsabilité personnelle du syndic. Fait à noter, les par. 14.06(7) et (8) parlent tous deux du « débiteur ». Ce choix du Parlement ne peut être ignoré. Je conviens avec la juge d'appel Martin qu'il n'y aucune raison de considérer que les mots « le syndic est [. . .] dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle » figurant is apparent from the express language chosen by Parliament that s. 14.06(4) was motivated by and aimed at concerns about the protection of trustees, not the protection of the full value of the estate for creditors. Nothing in the wording of s. 14.06(4) suggests that it was intended to extend to estate liability.

[80] The Hansard evidence leads to the same conclusion. Jacques Hains, Director, Corporate Law Policy Directorate, Department of Industry Canada, noted the following during the 1996 debates preceding the enactment of s. 14.06(4) in 1997:

> The aim is to provide a better definition of the liability of insolvency professionals and practitioners in order to encourage them to accept mandates where there may be problems related to the environment. It is hoped that this will reduce the number of abandoned sites both for the benefit of the environment and the safeguard of businesses and jobs.

(Standing Committee on Industry, Evidence, No. 16, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., June 11, 1996, at 15:49-15:55, as cited in C.A. reasons, at para. 197.)

Several months later, Mr. Hains stated:

> What Parliament tried to do in 1992 was to provide a relief to insolvency practitioners . . . because they were at risk when they accepted a mandate to liquidate an insolvent business. Under environmental laws, therefore, they could have been subject to personal liability to clean up the environment. I am speaking of personal liability here, meaning "out of their own pockets."

(Proceedings of the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, No. 13, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., November 4, 1996, at p. 15)

Mr. Hains proceeded to explain how the 1997 amendments were intended to improve on the 1992 reforms to the BIA that had included the original version of s. 14.06(2) (as discussed further below), but he gave au par. 14.06(4) visent la responsabilité de l'actif du failli. Comme l'a signalé la juge Martin, il ressort des termes exprès choisis par le Parlement que le 14.06(4) découlait du souci de protéger les syndics et se voulait une réponse à ce souci, et non de protéger la pleine valeur de l'actif au bénéfice des créanciers. Le texte du par. 14.06(4) ne porte aucunement à croire qu'il devait s'étendre à la responsabilité de l'actif.

[80] Les débats parlementaires mènent à la même conclusion. Jacques Hains, directeur de la Direction de la politique des lois commerciales au ministère d'Industrie Canada, a souligné ce qui suit pendant les débats tenus en 1996 avant l'adoption du par. 14.06(4) l'année suivante :

> L'objectif est de mieux définir la responsabilité des professionnels de l'insolvabilité, des praticiens de façon à les encourager à accepter des mandats où il pourrait peut-être y avoir des problèmes en matière d'environnement, de façon à réduire le nombre de sites abandonnés au pays, pour le bénéfice de l'environnement et la sauvegarde des entreprises et des emplois qui en dépendent.

(Comité permanent de l'industrie, Témoignages, nº 16, 2e sess., 35e lég., 11 juin 1996, entre 15 h 49 et 15 h 55, cité dans les motifs de la Cour d'appel, par. 197.)

Plusieurs mois plus tard, M. Hains a mentionné que :

> [L]es dispositions [ont été] adoptées par le Parlement en 1992 en vue d'alléger le fardeau de ceux qui travaillent dans le domaine de l'insolvabilité [. . .] parce que le mandat de liquider une entreprise insolvable leur impose des risques. En vertu du droit environnemental, par conséquent, ils auraient pu être tenus personnellement responsables d'un accident environnemental et obligés de verser les dommages-intérêts.

(Délibérations du comité sénatorial permanent des Banques et du commerce, nº 13, 2e sess., 35e lég., 4 novembre 1996, p. 16)

M. Hains a ensuite expliqué en quoi les modifications de 1997 visaient à améliorer la réforme de la LFI en 1992 qui comprenait la première version du par. 14.06(2) (comme nous le verrons plus loin), mais no indication that the focus had somehow shifted away from a trustee's "personal liability".

[81] Prior to the enactment of the 1997 amendments, G. Marantz, Legal Advisor to the Department of Industry Canada, noted that they were intended to "provide the trustee with protection from being chased with deep-pocket liability" (Standing Committee on Industry, Evidence, No. 21, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., September 25, 1996, at 17:15, as cited in C.A. reasons, at para. 198). I agree with the Regulator that the legislative debates give no hint of any intention by Parliament to immunize bankrupt estates from environmental liabilities. The notion that s. 14.06(4) was aimed at encouraging trustees in bankruptcy to accept mandates, and not at limiting estate liability, is further supported by the fact that the provision was inserted under the general heading "Appointment and Substitution of Trustees".

[82] Furthermore, in drafting s. 14.06(4), Parliament chose to use exactly the same concept it had used earlier in s. 14.06(2): by their express wording, where either provision applies, a trustee is not "personally liable". This cannot have been an oversight given that s. 14.06(4) was added to the BIA some five years after the enactment of s. 14.06(2). Since both provisions deal expressly with the protection of trustees from being "personally liable", it is very difficult to accept that they could be concerned with different kinds of liability. By their wording, s. 14.06(2) and s. 14.06(4) are clearly both concerned with the same concept. Indeed, if one interprets s. 14.06(4) as extending to estate liability, then there is no principled reason not to interpret s. 14.06(2) in the same way. However, it is undisputed that this was not Parliament's intention in enacting s. 14.06(2).

[83] Similarly, Parliament has also chosen to use the same concept found in both s. 14.06(4) and s. 14.06(2) in a third part of the 14.06 scheme, namely s. 14.06(1.2). This provision states that a trustee carrying on the business of a debtor or continuing the employment of a debtor's employees is il n'a pas laissé entendre que l'accent n'était plus mis sur la « responsabilité personnelle » du syndic.

[81] Avant l'adoption des modifications de 1997, Gordon Marantz, conseiller juridique au ministère d'Industrie Canada, a fait remarquer qu'elles visaient à « empêcher le syndic d'être poursuivi pour de fortes sommes » (Comité permanent de l'industrie, Témoignages, nº 21, 2e sess., 35e lég., 25 septembre 1996, à 17 h 15, cité dans les motifs de la Cour d'appel, par. 198)). Je conviens avec l'organisme de réglementation que les débats législatifs ne donnent aucun indice d'une intention du Parlement de mettre les biens des faillis à l'abri de toute responsabilité environnementale. L'idée que le par. 14.06(4) avait pour objectif d'inciter les syndics de faillite à accepter des mandats, et non de limiter la responsabilité de l'actif, est étayée davantage par l'insertion de la disposition sous la rubrique générale « Nomination et remplacement des syndics ».

[82] De plus, au moment de rédiger le par. 14.06(4), le Parlement a décidé d'utiliser la même notion qu'il avait employé précédemment au par. 14.06(2) : de par leur libellé explicite, lorsque l'une ou l'autre disposition s'applique, le syndic est dégagé de toute « responsabilité personnelle ». Il ne peut s'agir d'une erreur, car le par. 14.06(4) a été inséré dans la LFI quelque cinq ans après l'adoption du par. 14.06(2). Puisque les deux dispositions visent expressément à protéger les syndics contre toute « responsabilité personnelle », il est très difficile d'accepter qu'elles puissent concerner différents types de responsabilité. D'après leurs termes, le par. 14.06(2) et le par. 14.06(4) traitent manifestement du même concept. En effet, si l'on considère que le par. 14.06(4) s'étend à la responsabilité de l'actif, il n'y a aucune raison de principe de ne pas donner la même interprétation au par. 14.06(2). Toutefois, personne ne conteste que ce n'était pas l'intention qu'avait le Parlement au moment d'adopter le par. 14.06(2).

[83] Dans le même ordre d'idées, le Parlement a aussi choisi d'utiliser la même notion figurant aux par. 14.06(4) et 14.06(2) dans une troisième partie du régime établi par l'art. 14.06, soit le par. 14.06(1.2). Selon cette disposition, le syndic qui continue l'exploitation de l'entreprise du débiteur ou lui succède not "personally liable" in respect of certain enumerated liabilities, including as a successor employer. Although this provision is not directly raised in this litigation, by its own terms, it clearly does not and cannot refer to the liability of the bankrupt estate. Again, it is difficult to conceive of how Parliament could have specified that a trustee is not "personally liable", using the ordinary, grammatical sense of that phrase, in both s. 14.06(1.2) and s. 14.06(2), but then intended the phrase to be read in a completely different and illogical manner in s. 14.06(4). All three provisions refer to the personal liability of a trustee, and all three must be interpreted consistently. Indeed, I note that the concept of a trustee being "not personally liable" is also used consistently in other parts of the BIA unrelated to the s. 14.06 scheme — see, for example, s. 80 and s. 197(3).

comme employeur est dégagé de toute « responsabilité personnelle » à l'égard de certains engagements énumérés, notamment comme successeur de l'employeur. Bien qu'elle n'ait pas été directement soulevée en l'espèce, cette disposition, de par ses propres termes, ne traite manifestement pas et ne peut traiter de la responsabilité de l'actif du failli. Là encore, il est difficile de concevoir comment le Parlement aurait pu préciser qu'un syndic est « dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle » suivant le sens ordinaire et grammatical de cette expression au par. 14.06(1.2) et au par. 14.06(2), et souhaiter par la suite que l'on donne à cette expression une interprétation tout à fait différente et illogique au par. 14.06(4). Les trois dispositions traitent toutes de la responsabilité personnelle d'un syndic et il faut les interpréter uniformément. En effet, je signale que l'idée selon laquelle le syndic est « dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle » est aussi reprise systématiquement dans d'autres parties de la LFI étrangères au régime de l'art. 14.06, par exemple l'art. 80 et le par. 197(3).

[84] This interpretation of s. 14.06(4) is also bolstered by the French wording of s. 14.06. The French versions of both s. 14.06(2) and s. 14.06(4) refer to a trustee's protection from personal liability "ès qualités". This French expression is defined by Le Grand Robert de la langue française (2nd ed. 2001) dictionary as referring to someone acting "à cause d'un titre, d'une fonction particulière", which, in English, would mean acting by virtue of a title or specific role. The Robert & Collins dictionary (online) translates "ès qualités" as in "one's official capacity". In using this expression in s. 14.06(4), Parliament is therefore stating that, where "disclaimer" properly occurs, a trustee, is not personally liable, in its capacity as trustee, for orders to remedy any environmental condition or damage affecting the "disclaimed" property. These provisions are clearly not concerned with the concept of estate liability. The French versions of s. 14.06(2) and s. 14.06(4) thus utilize identical language to describe the limitation of liability they offer trustees. It is almost impossible to conceive of Parliament using identical language in two such closely related provisions and yet intending different meanings. Accordingly, a trustee is not personally liable in its official capacity as representative of the bankrupt estate where it invokes s. 14.06(4).

[84] L'interprétation qui précède du par. 14.06(4) est également renforcée par la version française de l'art. 14.06. Les versions françaises des par. 14.06(2) et (4) indiquent que le syndic est, « ès qualités », dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle. Selon le dictionnaire Le Grand Robert de la langue française (2e éd. 2001), cette expression française désigne la personne qui agit « à cause d'un titre, d'une fonction particulière »; en anglais, elle désigne la personne agissant « by virtue of a title or specific role ». Dans le dictionnaire Robert & Collins (en ligne), cette expression décrit la personne qui agit en « one's official capacity ». En utilisant cette expression au par. 14.06(4), le Parlement prévoit ainsi qu'en cas de « renonciation » valide, le syndic est, ès qualités, dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle à l'égard d'ordonnance de réparation de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement et touchant le bien auquel il a été « renoncé ». Ces dispositions ne portent manifestement pas sur la notion de responsabilité de l'actif. Les versions françaises des par. 14.06(2) et (4) emploient donc les mêmes mots pour décrire la limitation de responsabilité qu'elles offrent aux syndics. Il est presque impossible de concevoir que le Parlement emploie les mêmes termes dans deux

[85] Prior to this litigation, the case law on s. 14.06 was somewhat scarce. However, this Court has considered the s. 14.06 scheme once before, in GMAC Commercial Credit Corp. — Canada v. T.C.T. Logistics Inc., 2006 SCC 35, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 123. In that case, comments made by both the majority and the dissenting judge support my conclusion that s. 14.06(4) is concerned only with the personal liability of trustees. Abella J., writing for the majority, explained that "where Parliament has intended to confer immunity on trustees or receivers from certain claims, it has done so explicitly" (para. 67). As examples of this principle, she referred to 14.06(1.2) and, most notably for our purposes, to s. 14.06(4), which she described as follows: "trustee immune in certain circumstances from environmental liabilities" (para. 67). In her dissent, Deschamps J. explained that a "trustee is not personally bound by the bankrupt's obligations" (para. 91). She noted that trustees are protected by the provisions that confer immunity upon them, including s. 14.06 (1.2), (2) and (4).

[86] Although the dissenting reasons focus on the source of the "disclaimer" power in s. 14.06(4), nothing in this case turns on either the source of the "disclaimer" power or on whether GTL successfully "disclaimed" the Renounced Assets. I would note that, while the dissenting reasons rely on a purported common law power of "disclaimer", the Court has been referred to no cases — and the dissenting reasons have cited none — demonstrating the existence of a common law power allowing trustees to "disclaim" real property. In any case, regardless of the source of the "disclaimer" power, nothing in s. 14.06(4) suggests that, where a trustee does "disclaim" real property, the result is that it is simply free to walk away from the environmental orders applicable to it. Quite the contrary — the provision is clear that, where an environmental order has been made, dispositions aussi intimement liées et leur attribue pourtant des sens différents. En conséquence, le syndic est dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle en sa qualité officielle de représentant de l'actif du failli lorsqu'il invoque le par. 14.06(4).

[85] Avant le présent litige, la jurisprudence sur l'art. 14.06 était relativement peu abondante. Notre Cour a cependant examiné le régime de l'art. 14.06 une fois auparavant, dans Société de crédit commercial GMAC — Canada c. T.C.T. Logistics Inc., 2006 CSC 35, [2006] 2 R.C.S. 123. Dans cet arrêt, les commentaires de la majorité et de la juge dissidente étayent ma conclusion selon laquelle le par. 14.06(4) ne porte que sur la responsabilité personnelle des syndics. La juge Abella a expliqué, au nom des juges majoritaires, que « lorsque le législateur a voulu protéger les syndics ou les séquestres contre certains recours, il l'a fait explicitement » (par. 67). À titre d'exemples de manifestation de ce principe, elle a cité le par. 14.06(1.2) et, notamment pour les fins qui nous occupent, le par. 14.06(4), qu'elle a décrits ainsi : « protection du syndic dans certaines circonstances contre les ordonnances en matière environnementale » (par. 67). Dans ses motifs dissidents, la juge Deschamps a expliqué que le « [syndic] n'est pas tenu personnellement aux obligations du failli » (par. 91). Elle a signalé que les syndics étaient protégés par les dispositions qui leur conférait une immunité, dont les par. 14.06 (1.2), (2) et (4).

[86] Bien que les motifs dissidents mettent l'accent sur la source du pouvoir de « renonciation » prévu au par. 14.06(4), la présente affaire ne porte aucunement sur la source de ce pouvoir ou sur la question de savoir si GTL a « renoncé » avec succès aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. Je me contente de signaler brièvement que, même si les juges dissidents s'appuient sur un supposé pouvoir de « renonciation » en common law, les parties n'ont renvoyé à la Cour aucune décision — et les juges dissidents n'en ont cité aucune — attestant l'existence d'un pouvoir en common law qui permet au syndic de « renoncer » à un bien réel. Quoi qu'il en soit, peu importe la source de ce pouvoir, rien dans le par. 14.06(4) ne donne à penser que le syndic « renonçant » à des biens réels peut tout simplement se soustraire aux ordonnances

the result of an act of "disclaimer" is the cessation of personal liability. No effect of "disclaimer" on the liability of the bankrupt estate is specified. Had Parliament intended to empower trustees to walk away entirely from assets subject to environmental liabilities, it could easily have said so.

[87] Additionally, as I have mentioned, s. 14.06(4)'s scope is not narrowed to a "disclaimer" in its formal sense. Under s. 14.06(4)(a)(ii), a trustee is not personally liable for an environmental order where the trustee "abandons, disposes of or otherwise releases any interest in any real property". This appeal does not, however, require us to decide what constitutes abandoning, disposing of or otherwise releasing real property for the purpose of s. 14.06(4), and I therefore leave the resolution of this question for another day. Nor does this appeal require us to decide the effects of a successful divestiture under s. 20 of the BIA. Section 20 of the BIA was not raised or relied upon by GTL as providing it with the authority to walk away from all responsibility, obligation or liability regarding the Renounced Assets.

[88] The dissenting reasons argue that certain other parts of the s. 14.06 scheme make the most sense if s. 14.06(4) limits estate liability. Other than s. 14.06(2), none of these provisions is in issue in this litigation, and none of them was relied on by GTL. Regardless, in view of the clear and unambiguous wording of s. 14.06(4), less weight should be given to its statutory context. This is particularly so given that the proposed alternative interpretation would require the Court to read words such as "personally" out of the subsection. As has been noted, when the words of a provision are precise and unequivocal, their ordinary meaning plays a dominant role in the interpretive process (Canada Trustco Mortgage Co. v. Canada, 2005 SCC 54, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 601, at para. 10). Ultimately, the consequences of a trustee's "disclaimer" are clear — protection from personal liability, not from estate liability. There is no ambiguity on the face of s. 14.06(4). This Court has no environnementales qui s'appliquent à eux. Bien au contraire, la disposition prévoit clairement que, si une ordonnance environnementale a été rendue, la « renonciation » emporte la cessation de la responsabilité personnelle. On ne fait état d'aucun effet de la renonciation sur la responsabilité de l'actif du failli. Si le Parlement avait voulu investir les syndics du pouvoir de délaisser entièrement les biens visés par des engagements environnementaux, il aurait pu le faire aisément.

[87] En outre, comme je l'ai mentionné, le par. 14.06(4) ne vise pas uniquement la « renonciation » au sens formel. D'après le sous-al. 14.06(4)(a)(ii), le syndic est dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle à l'égard d'une ordonnance environnementale lorsqu'il « abandonne [. . .] tout intérêt sur le bien réel en cause, en dispose ou s'en dessaisit ». Le présent pourvoi ne nous oblige cependant pas à décider ce qui constitue l'abandon, la disposition ou le dessaisissement d'un bien réel pour l'application du par. 14.06(4), et je remets le règlement de ce point à une autre occasion. Le pourvoi ne nous oblige pas non plus à décider des effets d'une renonciation réussie en vertu de l'art. 20 de la LFI. GTL n'a pas invoqué cet article ni soutenu qu'il lui accordait le pouvoir d'abandonner toute responsabilité ou obligation ou tout engagement applicable aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation.

[88] D'après les juges dissidents, d'autres parties du régime de l'art. 14.06 sont plus sensées si le par. 14.06(4) limite la responsabilité de l'actif. À l'exception du par. 14.06(2), aucune de ces dispositions n'était en litige dans la présente affaire et aucune d'elles n'a été invoquée par GTL. Quoi qu'il en soit, étant donné le libellé clair et sans équivoque de ce paragraphe, le poids à accorder à son contexte législatif est amoindri. Cela est d'autant plus vrai que l'autre interprétation proposée obligerait la Cour à écarter des mots comme « personnelle » du paragraphe. Tel qu'il a été mentionné, lorsque le libellé d'une disposition est précis et sans équivoque, le sens ordinaire des mots joue un rôle primordial dans le processus d'interprétation (Hypothèques Trustco Canada c. Canada, 2005 CSC 54, [2005] 2 R.C.S. 601, par. 10). En dernière analyse, les conséquences de la « renonciation » du syndic sont claires : l'immunité contre la responsabilité personnelle, et non celle de l'actif.

option other than to accede to the clear intention of Parliament.

[89] I turn now to the relationship between s. 14.06(2) and (4).

(b) How Section 14.06(4) Is Distinguishable From Section 14.06(2)

[90] In this case, GTL relied solely on s. 14.06(4) in purporting to "disclaim" the Renounced Assets. However, as I will explain, GTL is fully protected from personal liability for the environmental liabilities associated with those assets whether it is understood as having "disclaimed" the Renounced Assets or not. However, it cannot simply "walk away" from the Renounced Assets in either case.

[91] Regardless of whether GTL can access s. 14.06(4) (in other words, regardless of whether it has "disclaimed"), it is already fully protected from personal liability in respect of environmental matters by s. 14.06(2). Section 14.06(2) protects trustees from personal liability for "any environmental condition that arose or environmental damage that occurred", unless it is established that the condition arose or the damage occurred after the trustee's appointment and as a result of their gross negligence or wilful misconduct. In this case, it is not disputed that the environmental condition or damage leading to the Abandonment Orders arose or occurred prior to GTL's appointment. Section 14.06(2) provides trustees with protection from personal liability as broad as that provided by s. 14.06(4). Although, on the face of the provisions, there are two ways in which s. 14.06(4) may appear to offer broader protection, neither of them withstands closer examination.

[92] First, the Regulator submits that the protection offered by s. 14.06(4) should be distinguished from that offered by s. 14.06(2) on the basis that the former is concerned with orders while the latter is concerned with environmental obligations generally. I agree with the dissenting reasons that a persuasive distinction cannot be drawn between liability for an environmental condition or environmental damage

Le paragraphe 14.06(4) ne souffre à première vue d'aucune ambiguïté. Notre Cour n'a d'autre choix que d'accéder à l'intention manifeste du Parlement.

[89] Je passe maintenant au rapport entre les par. 14.06(2) et (4).

b) La manière dont le par. 14.06(4) se distingue du par. 14.06(2)

[90] En l'espèce, GTL s'est fondé uniquement sur le par. 14.06(4) pour prétendre « renoncer » aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. Or, comme je l'expliquerai, que l'on considère ou non que GTL a « renoncé » aux biens en question, il est entièrement protégé contre toute responsabilité personnelle à l'égard des engagements environnementaux associés à ces biens. Toutefois, il ne peut tout simplement pas les « délaisser » dans un cas comme dans l'autre.

[91] Que GTL puisse ou non se prévaloir du par. 14.06(4) (autrement dit, qu'il ait « renoncé » ou non aux biens en question), il est déjà entièrement à l'abri de toute responsabilité personnelle en matière environnementale par application du par. 14.06(2). Ce paragraphe dégage les syndics de toute responsabilité personnelle découlant de « tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement », sauf celui causé par sa négligence grave ou son inconduite délibérée après sa nomination. En l'espèce, personne ne conteste que le fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement à l'origine des ordonnances d'abandon est survenu avant la nomination de GTL. Le paragraphe 14.06(2) offre aux syndics une protection contre toute responsabilité personnelle aussi large que celle fournie par le par. 14.06(4). Bien qu'à la lecture des dispositions, le par. 14.06(4) semble offrir de deux manières une protection plus large, aucune d'entre elles ne résiste à un examen plus approfondi.

[92] En premier lieu, l'organisme de réglementation soutient qu'il y a lieu de distinguer la protection offerte par le par. 14.06(4) de celle accordée par le par. 14.06(2) car le premier concerne les « ordonnances » tandis que le deuxième intéresse les obligations environnementales en général. Je conviens avec les juges dissidents qu'il est impossible d'établir une distinction convaincante entre la responsabilité d'un (purportedly covered by s. 14.06(2)) and liability for failure to comply with an order to remedy such a condition or such damage (purportedly covered by s. 14.06(4)). As the dissenting reasons note, "[t]his distinction is entirely artificial" (para. 212). The underlying liability addressed through environmental orders is the liability provided for in s. 14.06(2): an "environmental condition that arose or environmental damage that occurred". Second, on the face of s. 14.06(4), no exceptions are carved out for gross negligence or wilful misconduct post-appointment, unlike in s. 14.06(2). However, s. 14.06(4) is expressly made "subject to subsection (2)". I agree with the dissenting reasons that the only possible interpretation of this proviso is that, where the trustee has caused an environmental condition or environmental damage through its wilful misconduct or gross negligence, the trustee will still be personally liable, regardless of its reliance on s. 14.06(4).

[93] It follows that s. 14.06(4) does not provide trustees with protection from personal liability any broader than the protection provided by s. 14.06(2). Despite this, in my view, Parliament had good reasons for enacting s. 14.06(4) in 1997. The first was to make it clear to trustees that they had complete protection from personal liability in respect of environmental conditions and damage (absent wilful misconduct or gross negligence), especially in situations where they have "disclaimed". The Hansard evidence shows that one of the impetuses for the 1997 reforms was the desire of trustees for further certainty. The second was to clarify the effect of a trustee's "disclaimer", on the liability of the bankrupt estate for orders to remedy an environmental condition or damage. In other words, s. 14.06(4) makes it clear not just that a trustee who "disclaims" real property is exempt from personal liability under environmental orders applicable to that property, but also that the liability of the bankrupt estate is unaffected by such "disclaimer".

fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement (prétendument visé par le par. 14.06(2)) et celle découlant du non-respect d'une ordonnance de réparation du fait ou dommage en question (prétendument visé par le par. 14.06(4)). Comme l'indiquent les motifs dissidents, « [c]ette distinction est tout à fait artificielle » (par. 212). La responsabilité sous-jacente sur laquelle portent les ordonnances environnementales découle du « fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement » et est prévue au par. 14.06(2). En second lieu, à la lecture du par. 14.06(4), celui-ci ne prévoit aucune exception pour négligence grave ou inconduite délibérée après la nomination, contrairement au par. 14.06(2). Le paragraphe 14.06(4) s'applique toutefois expressément « sous réserve du paragraphe (2) ». Je suis d'accord avec les juges dissidents pour dire que, d'après la seule interprétation que l'on peut donner à cette disposition, le syndic ayant causé un fait ou un dommage lié à l'environnement par son inconduite délibérée ou sa négligence grave engagerait toujours sa responsabilité personnelle même s'il invoque le par. 14.06(4).

[93] Ainsi, le par. 14.06(4) n'offre pas aux syndics une protection contre la responsabilité personnelle plus large que celle fournie par le par. 14.06(2). Malgré cela, j'estime que le Parlement avait de bonnes raisons d'adopter le par. 14.06(4) en 1997. La première était de préciser aux syndics qu'ils étaient entièrement dégagés de toute responsabilité personnelle à l'égard des faits et dommages liés à l'environnement (en l'absence d'inconduite délibérée ou de négligence grave), surtout dans des cas où ils ont « renoncé » à des biens. Les débats parlementaires indiquent que la réforme de 1997 prenait sa source notamment dans le vœu des syndics d'obtenir une certitude accrue. La réforme visait aussi à clarifier l'effet qu'a la « renonciation » d'un syndic sur la responsabilité de l'actif du failli relativement aux ordonnances de réparation d'un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement. En d'autres termes, il ressort du par. 14.06(4) non seulement que le syndic « renonçant » à des biens réels échappe à toute responsabilité personnelle à l'égard des ordonnances environnementales qui visent ces biens, mais aussi que pareille renonciation n'a aucune incidence sur la responsabilité de l'actif du failli.

[94] In 1992, Parliament turned its attention to the potential liability of trustees in the environmental context and enacted s. 14.06(2). The provision originally stated that trustees were protected from personal liability for any environmental condition that arose or any environmental damage that occurred "(a) before [their] appointment . . . or (b) after their appointment except where the condition arose or the damage occurred as a result of their failure to exercise due diligence". The Hansard evidence demonstrates that trustees were unhappy with the original language of s. 14.06(2). As Mr. Hains explained, they complained that the due diligence standard was "too vague. No one knows what it does and it may vary from one case to another. With the vagueness of the standard and what may be required to satisfy it, and with the risk of personal liability, the trustees were not even interested in investigating how they might exercise due diligence" (Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, No. 13, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., November 4, 1996, at pp. 15-16).

[95] As a result, Parliament made reforms to the BIA in 1997. These reforms not only changed the standard of protection offered to trustees by s. 14.06(2) by adopting the current language, but also introduced s. 14.06(4). As is evident from their shared language, the provisions were intended to work together to clarify a trustee's protection from personal liability for any environmental condition or damage. Section 14.06(4) provided the certainty that trustees had been seeking in the years prior to 1997. For the first time, it explicitly linked the concept of "disclaimer" to the scheme protecting trustees from environmental liability. Whether it is understood as a common law power or as a reference to other statutory provisions, the concept of "disclaimer" predates s. 14.06(4) itself, as well as the 1992 version of s. 14.06(2). "Disclaimer" is also applicable in other contexts, such as in relation to executory contracts, as discussed in New Skeena Forest Products Inc. v. Don Hull & Sons Contracting Ltd., 2005 BCCA 154, 251 D.L.R. (4th) 328.

[94] En 1992, le Parlement s'est penché sur la responsabilité potentielle des syndics en matière environnementale et a édicté le par. 14.06(2). Cette disposition prévoyait au départ que le syndic était dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle découlant d'un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement survenu « a) avant sa nomination [. . .]; ou b) après sa nomination, sauf d'un fait ou dommage causé par son omission d'agir avec la prudence voulue ». Il appert des débats parlementaires que les syndics étaient insatisfaits du libellé initial du par. 14.06(2). Comme l'explique M. Hains, ils se sont plaints que la norme de diligence raisonnable était « trop vague. Nul ne sait comment l'interpréter, et les interprétations peuvent varier d'une affaire à l'autre. Étant donné le libellé trop vague de la norme, le fait que l'on ignore ce qu'il faut faire pour y satisfaire et le risque de responsabilité personnelle, les syndics ne cherchaient même pas à savoir de quelle manière ils pourraient faire preuve de diligence raisonnable. » (Délibérations du comité sénatorial permanent des Banques et du commerce, nº 13, 2e sess., 35e lég., 4 novembre 1996, p. 15-16).

[95] En conséquence, le Parlement a réformé la LFI en 1997. Cette réforme a non seulement modifié la norme visant la protection que le par. 14.06(2) offre aux syndics par l'adoption du texte actuel, mais elle a aussi introduit le par. 14.06(4). Comme le montrent à l'évidence les termes qu'ils ont en commun, les dispositions étaient censées s'appliquer ensemble pour clarifier l'immunité de responsabilité personnelle dont bénéficient les syndics à l'égard de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement. Le paragraphe 14.06(4) leur offre la certitude qu'ils recherchaient avant 1997. Pour la première fois, il établissait en termes exprès un lien entre la notion de « renonciation » et le régime dégageant les syndics de toute responsabilité environnementale. Qu'on le voit comme un pouvoir de common law ou un renvoi à d'autres dispositions légales, le concept de « renonciation » précède le par. 14.06(4) lui-même ainsi que la version de 1992 du par. 14.06(2). Il peut aussi y avoir « renonciation » dans différents contextes, tel celui des contrats exécutoires étudiés dans New Skeena Forest Products Inc. c. Don Hull & Sons Contracting Ltd., 2005 BCCA 154, 251 D.L.R. (4th) 328.

[96] Prior to 1997, the effects of a "disclaimer" of real property on environmental liability was unclear. In particular, it was unclear what effect "disclaimer" might have on the liability of the bankrupt estate, given that environmental legislation imposed liability based on the achievement of the status of owner, party in control or licensee (see J. Klimek, Insolvency and Environment Liability (1994), at p. 4-19). By enacting s. 14.06(4), Parliament clarified that the effect of the "disclaimer" of real property was to limit the personal liability of the trustee for orders to remedy any environmental condition or damage, but not to limit the liability of the bankrupt estate. Parliament could have merely updated the language of s. 14.06(2) in 1997, but this would have left the question of "disclaimer" and estate liability unaddressed. Knowledge of the impact of "disclaimer" could be important to a trustee who is deciding whether to accept a mandate. Section 14.06(4) thus went a considerable way towards resolving the vagueness of which trustees had complained prior to 1997.

[97] A notable aspect of the scheme crafted by Parliament is that s. 14.06(4) applies "[n]otwithstanding anything in any federal or provincial law". In enacting s. 14.06(4), Parliament specified the effect of the "disclaimer" of real property solely in the context of environmental orders. The effect of "disclaimer" on liability in other contexts was not addressed. Parliament was concerned with orders to remedy any environmental condition or damage, where, liability frequently attaches based on the status of owner, party in control, or licensee. Parliament did not want trustees to think that they could avoid the estate's environmental liability through the act of "disclaiming". Accordingly, it used specific language indicating that the effect of the "disclaimer" of real property on orders to remedy an environmental condition or damage is merely that the trustee is not personally liable. It is possible that the effect of "disclaimer" on the liability of the bankrupt estate might be different in other contexts.

[96] Avant 1997, on ne savait pas quels effets la « renonciation » à des biens réels avait sur la responsabilité environnementale. Plus précisément, on ne connaissait pas l'effet que pouvait avoir la renonciation sur la responsabilité de l'actif du failli, vu que la législation environnementale imposait une responsabilité fondée sur l'acquisition du statut de propriétaire, de partie en possession du bien ou de titulaire de permis (voir J. Klimek, Insolvency and Environment Liability (1994), p. 4-19). En adoptant le par. 14.06(4), le Parlement a précisé que la « renonciation » à des biens réels avait pour effet de limiter la responsabilité personnelle du syndic, et non celle de l'actif du failli, aux ordonnances de réparation de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement. Le Parlement aurait pu se contenter d'actualiser le texte du par. 14.06(2) en 1997, mais cela aurait laissé en suspens la question de la « renonciation » et de la responsabilité de l'actif. La connaissance de l'incidence de la « renonciation » pourrait avoir de l'importance pour le syndic qui décide d'accepter ou non un mandat. Le paragraphe 14.06(4) a donc dissipé considérablement l'imprécision dont se plaignaient les syndics avant 1997.

[97] Un aspect digne de mention du régime conçu par le Parlement est l'application du par. 14.06(4) « [p]ar dérogation au droit fédéral et provincial ». En adoptant ce paragraphe, le Parlement a précisé l'effet de la « renonciation » à des biens réels uniquement dans le contexte des ordonnances environnementales. L'effet de la « renonciation » sur la responsabilité dans d'autres contextes n'a pas été abordé. Le Parlement se souciait des ordonnances de réparation de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement où la responsabilité est fréquemment engagée en raison du statut de propriétaire, de partie ayant le contrôle du bien ou de titulaire de permis. Le Parlement ne voulait pas que les syndics croient pouvoir échapper à la responsabilité environnementale de l'actif par la « renonciation ». Il a donc utilisé des termes précis pour indiquer que le seul effet de la « renonciation » à des biens réels sur des ordonnances de réparation d'un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement est que le syndic est dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle. Il se peut que la « renonciation » ait un effet différent sur la responsabilité de l'actif du failli dans d'autres contextes.

[98] Section 14.06(4) thus makes it clear that "disclaimer" by the trustee has no effect on the bankrupt estate's continuing liability for orders to remedy any environmental condition or damage. The liability of the bankrupt estate is, of course, an issue with which s. 14.06(2) is absolutely unconcerned. Thus, it can be seen that s. 14.06(4) and s. 14.06(2) are not in fact the same — they may provide trustees with the same protection from personal liability, but only the former has any relevance to the question of estate liability. Section 14.06(2) protects trustees without having to be invoked by them — it does not speak to the results of a trustee's "disclaimer".

[99] Where a trustee has "disclaimed" real property, it is not personally liable under an environmental order applicable to that property, but the bankrupt estate itself remains liable. Of course, the fact that the bankrupt estate remains liable even where a trustee invokes s. 14.06(4) does not necessarily mean that the trustee must comply with environmental obligations in priority to all other claims. The priority of an environmental claim depends on the proper application of the Abitibi test, as I will discuss below.

[100] Accordingly, regardless of whether GTL is properly understood as having "disclaimed", the result is the same. Given that the environmental condition or damage arose or occurred prior to GTL's appointment, it is fully protected from personal liability by s. 14.06(2). However, "disclaimer" does not empower a trustee to simply walk away from the "disclaimed" assets when the bankrupt estate has been ordered to remedy any environmental condition or damage. The environmental liability of the bankrupt estate remains unaffected.

[101] I offer the following brief comment on the balance of the s. 14.06 scheme, although, as mentioned, none of those provision is actually in issue before this Court. The dissenting reasons argue that interpreting s. 14.06(4) as being concerned solely with the personal liability of trustees creates interpretive issues with the balance of the s. 14.06 scheme.

[98] Le paragraphe 14.06(4) établit donc clairement que la « renonciation » du syndic n'a aucun effet sur la responsabilité continue de l'actif du failli pour ce qui est des ordonnances de réparation de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement. Bien entendu, il n'est absolument pas question de la responsabilité de l'actif du failli au par. 14.06(2). Ainsi, on constate que les par. 14.06(4) et (2) sont effectivement différents : ils fournissent peut-être aux syndics la même protection contre la responsabilité personnelle, mais seul le premier se rapporte à la responsabilité de l'actif. Le paragraphe 14.06(2) protège les syndics sans qu'ils aient à l'invoquer; il est muet sur les résultats de la « renonciation » d'un syndic.

[99] Le syndic ayant « renoncé » à des biens réels est dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle à l'égard d'une ordonnance environnementale applicable à ces biens, mais l'actif du failli lui-même demeure responsable. Bien sûr, le fait que la responsabilité de l'actif du failli demeure engagée même lorsque le syndic invoque le par. 14.06(4) ne veut pas nécessairement dire que le syndic doit respecter les obligations environnementales et qu'elles ont priorité sur toutes les autres réclamations. La priorité d'une réclamation environnementale dépend de la bonne application du critère d'Abitibi, comme je l'expliquerai plus loin.

[100] En conséquence, peu importe si l'on considère que GTL a « renoncé » ou non à des biens, le résultat est le même. Puisque le fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement est survenu avant la nomination de GTL, ce dernier est entièrement protégé contre toute responsabilité personnelle par le par. 14.06(2). En revanche, la « renonciation » n'habilite pas le syndic à tout simplement délaisser les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation quand on l'enjoint à réparer un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement. La responsabilité environnementale de l'actif du failli demeure inchangée.

[101] J'aimerais faire de brèves observations sur le reste du régime de l'art. 14.06 même si, comme je l'ai mentionné, aucune de ces dispositions n'est de fait en litige devant notre Cour. Les juges dissidents soutiennent que l'on créerait des problèmes d'interprétation avec le reste du régime de l'art. 14.06 si on interprétait le par. 14.06(4) comme visant uniquement

In my view, this is not a reason to ignore the plain meaning of s. 14.06(4). No principle of statutory interpretation requires that the plain meaning of a provision be contorted to make its scheme more coherent. This Court has been tasked with interpreting s. 14.06(4), and, in my view, the wording of s. 14.06(4) admits of only one interpretation.

(2) There Is No Operational Conflict or Frustration of Purpose Between Section 14.06(2) and Section 14.06(4) of the BIA and the Alberta Regulatory Scheme

[102] The operational conflicts between the BIA and the Alberta legislation alleged by GTL arise from its status as a "licensee" under the OGCA and the Pipeline Act. As I have just demonstrated, s. 14.06(4) does not empower a trustee to walk away from all responsibilities, obligations and liabilities with respect to "disclaimed" assets. Rather, it clarifies a trustee's protection from environmental personal liability and makes it clear that a trustee's "disclaimer" does not affect the environmental liability of the bankrupt estate. Regardless of whether GTL effectively "disclaimed" the Renounced Assets, it cannot walk away from them. In light of the proper interpretation of s. 14.06(4), no operational conflict is caused by the fact that, under Alberta law, GTL, as a "licensee", remains responsible for abandoning the Renounced Assets utilizing the remaining assets of the Redwater estate. Likewise, no operational conflict is caused by the fact that the end-of-life liabilities associated with the Renounced Assets continue to be included in the calculation of Redwater's LMR.

[103] Thus, regardless of whether it has effectively "disclaimed", s. 14.06(2) fully protects GTL from personal liability in respect of environmental matters affecting the Redwater estate. GTL notes that, on the face of the OGCA and the Pipeline Act, there is nothing specifically preventing the Regulator from holding it personally liable as a "licensee" for the costs of carrying out the Abandonment Orders. GTL submits that the mere possibility that it may la responsabilité personnelle des syndics. À mon avis, ces difficultés ne justifient pas que l'on fasse abstraction du sens clair du par. 14.06(4). Aucun principe d'interprétation législative ne requiert que l'on déforme le sens clair d'une disposition pour en rendre le régime plus cohérent. Notre Cour s'est vu confier la tâche d'interpréter le par. 14.06(4) et j'estime que son libellé ne permet qu'une seule interprétation.

(2) Il n'y a pas de conflit d'application ni d'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral entre les par. 14.06(2) et (4) de la LFI et le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta

[102] Les conflits d'application entre la LFI et la législation albertaine allégués par GTL résultent de sa qualité de « titulaire de permis » au sens de l'OGCA et de la Pipeline Act. Comme je viens de le démontrer, le par. 14.06(4) n'investit pas le syndic du pouvoir de se soustraire à l'ensemble des responsabilités, obligations ou engagements à l'égard de biens auxquels il a été « renoncé ». Il clarifie plutôt l'exonération de responsabilité personnelle dont jouit le syndic et précise que sa « renonciation » n'a aucune incidence sur la responsabilité environnementale de l'actif du failli. Que GTL ait bel et bien « renoncé » ou non aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation, il ne peut les délaisser. Vu l'interprétation qu'il convient de donner au par. 14.06(4), aucun conflit d'application n'est imputable au fait que, suivant le droit albertain, GTL demeure, en qualité de « titulaire de permis », tenu d'abandonner les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation et d'utiliser les autres éléments de l'actif de Redwater. De même, le fait que les obligations de fin de vie associées aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation sont toujours prises en compte dans le calcul de la CGR de Redwater ne donne lieu à aucun conflit d'application.

[103] Donc, qu'il ait « renoncé » effectivement ou non aux biens, GTL est entièrement protégé par le par. 14.06(2) contre toute responsabilité personnelle à l'égard de questions environnementales touchant l'actif de Redwater. GTL signale qu'à première vue, l'OGCA et la Pipeline Act n'empêchent aucunement en termes exprès l'organisme de réglementation de le tenir personnellement responsable, à titre de « titulaire de permis », du coût d'exécution be held personally liable for abandonment under the Alberta legislation creates an operational conflict with the protection from personal liability provided by s. 14.06(2) of the BIA.

[104] There is no possibility of trustees facing personal liability for reclamation or remediation — they are specifically protected from such liability by the EPEA, absent wilful misconduct or gross negligence. GTL is correct that its potential personal liability for abandonment as a "licensee" is not similarly capped at estate assets under the OGCA and the Pipeline Act. The Regulator submits that "[w]hile the definition of a licensee does not explicitly provide that the receiver's liability is limited to assets in the insolvency estate, such federal requirements are obviously read in to the provision and [are] explicitly included in other legislation administered by the [Regulator], namely the [EPEA]" (A.F., at para. 104 (footnote omitted)). For its part, GTL says that it is no answer that the Regulator's practice is to impose liability only up to the value of the estate because, as ATB argues, without a specific statutory provision, "[p]ractices can change without notice" (ATB's factum, at para. 106).

[105] I reject the proposition that the inclusion of trustees in the definition of "licensee" in the OGCA and the Pipeline Act should be rendered inoperative by the mere theoretical possibility of a conflict with s. 14.06(2). Such an outcome would be inconsistent with the principle of restraint which underlies paramountcy, as well as with the principles of cooperative federalism. The inclusion of trustees in the definition of "licensee" is an important part of the Alberta regulatory regime. It confers on them the privilege of operating the licensed assets of bankrupts while also ensuring that insolvency professionals are regulated during the lengthy periods of time when they manage oil and gas assets.

des ordonnances d'abandon. Toujours selon GTL, la simple possibilité que la législation albertaine l'oblige à effectuer l'abandon crée un conflit d'application avec l'exonération de responsabilité personnelle qu'accorde le par. 14.06(2) de la LFI.

[104] Les syndics ne peuvent être personnellement tenus de remplir des obligations de remise en état ou de décontamination — ils sont expressément exonérés de cette responsabilité par l'EPEA en l'absence d'inconduite délibérée ou de négligence grave de leur part. GTL a raison de dire que son éventuelle obligation, en tant que « titulaire de permis », de procéder à l'abandon n'est pas, de façon similaire, limitée aux éléments de l'actif en application de l'OGCA et de la Pipeline Act. L'organisme de réglementation fait valoir que, [TRADUCTION] « [b]ien que la définition de "titulaire de permis" ne prévoit pas explicitement que la responsabilité du séquestre se limite aux éléments de l'actif du failli, cette exigence fédérale figure manifestement par interprétation dans la disposition et est explicitement prévue dans une autre loi, à savoir [l'EPEA], qu'applique [l'organisme de réglementation] » (m.a., par. 104 (note en bas de page omise)). Pour sa part, GTL affirme que la pratique de l'organisme de réglementation de n'imposer une responsabilité que jusqu'à concurrence de la valeur de l'actif ne constitue pas une réponse valable, étant donné que, comme le prétend ATB, faute d'une disposition légale expresse, [TRADUCTION] « [l]es pratiques peuvent changer sans préavis » (mémoire d'ATB, par. 106).

[105] Je rejette la proposition selon laquelle l'ajout des syndics à la définition de « titulaire de permis » dans l'OGCA et la Pipeline Act devrait être déclaré inopérant en raison de la simple possibilité théorique de conflit avec le par. 14.06(2). Une telle issue serait incompatible avec le principe de la retenue qui sous-tend celui de la prépondérance fédérale, ainsi qu'avec le principe du fédéralisme coopératif. L'ajout des syndics à la définition de « titulaire de permis » constitue un aspect important du régime de réglementation albertain. Il leur confère le privilège d'exploiter les biens des faillis qui sont visés par des permis, tout en s'assurant que les professionnels de l'insolvabilité sont encadrés au cours des longues périodes pendant lesquelles ils gèrent les biens pétroliers et gaziers.

[106] Importantly, the situation in this case is completely different from the one before the Court in Moloney. In that case, Gascon J. rejected the argument that there was no operational conflict because the bankrupt could voluntarily pay a provincial debt post discharge or could choose not to drive. He noted that "the test for operational conflict cannot be limited to asking whether the respondent can comply with both laws by renouncing the protection afforded to him or her under the federal law or the privilege he or she is otherwise entitled to under the provincial law" (para. 60). In the instant case, GTL retains both the protection afforded to it under the federal law (no personal liability) and the privilege to which it is entitled under the provincial law (ability to operate the bankrupt's assets in a regulated industry). GTL is not being asked to forego doing anything or to voluntarily pay anything. Nor is it urged that the Regulator could avoid conflict by declining to apply the impugned law during bankruptcy, as in Moloney, at para. 69. This is not a situation in which the Regulator might decline to apply the provincial law, but a situation in which the provincial law can be — and has been — applied during bankruptcy without conflict.

[107] According to the evidence in this case, the OGCA and the Pipeline Act have included trustees in the definition of "licensee" for 20 years now, and, in that time, the Regulator has never attempted to hold a trustee personally liable. The Regulator does not look beyond the assets remaining in the bankrupt estate in seeking compliance with the bankrupt's environmental obligations. If the Regulator were to attempt to hold GTL personally liable under the Abandonment Orders, this would create an operational conflict between the OGCA and the Pipeline Act, and s. 14.06(2) of the BIA, rendering the former two Acts inoperative to the extent of the conflict. As it stands, however, GTL can both be protected from personal liability by s. 14.06(2) and comply with the Alberta regime in administering the Redwater estate as a "licensee".

[106] Fait important, la situation en l'espèce est complètement différente de celle dont a été saisie notre Cour dans Moloney. Dans cette affaire, le juge Gascon a rejeté l'argument selon lequel il n'y avait pas de conflit d'application parce que le failli pouvait volontairement payer une dette provinciale postérieure à la libération ou choisir de ne pas conduire. Le juge Gascon a signalé que « l'analyse relative au conflit d'application ne saurait se limiter à la question de savoir si l'intimé peut se conformer aux deux lois en renonçant soit à la protection que lui offre la loi fédérale, soit au droit dont il bénéficie en vertu de la loi provinciale » (par. 60). Dans l'affaire qui nous occupe, GTL conserve à la fois la protection que lui confère la loi fédérale (aucune responsabilité personnelle) et le privilège auquel il a droit en vertu de la loi provinciale (faculté d'exploiter l'actif du failli dans une industrie réglementée). On ne demande pas à GTL de renoncer à faire quelque chose ni de payer volontairement quoi que ce soit. On ne soutient pas non plus que l'organisme de réglementation puisse éviter le conflit en refusant d'appliquer les mesures législatives contestées pendant la faillite (comme dans Moloney, par. 69). Nous ne sommes pas en présence d'une situation où l'organisme de réglementation pourrait refuser d'appliquer la loi provinciale, mais d'une situation où la loi provinciale peut être appliquée — et l'a été — pendant la faillite sans qu'il y ait de conflit.

[107] Selon la preuve produite en l'espèce, les définitions de « titulaire de permis » dans l'OGCA et la Pipeline Act incluent depuis une vingtaine d'années les syndics et, durant cette période, l'organisme de réglementation n'a jamais essayé d'engager la responsabilité personnelle d'un syndic. L'organisme de réglementation ne va pas au-delà des éléments qui font encore partie de l'actif du failli en recherchant le respect de ses obligations environnementales. Si l'organisme de réglementation devait tenter d'obliger personnellement GTL à se conformer aux ordonnances d'abandon, cela engendrerait un conflit d'application entre, d'une part, l'OGCA et la Pipeline Act et, d'autre part, le par. 14.06(2) de la LFI, ce qui rendrait les deux premières lois inopérantes dans la mesure de ce conflit. Or, à l'heure actuelle, GTL peut à la fois être dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle en vertu du par. 14.06(2) et respecter le régime albertain en administrant l'actif de Redwater à titre de « titulaire de permis ».

[108] The suggestion, in the dissenting reasons, that the Regulator is seeking to hold GTL personally liable is untrue. No one disputes that significant value remains in the Redwater estate. Although the Regulator's entitlement is, of course, dependent on the priorities established by the BIA, the history of this regulatory system demonstrates that there are ways for the Regulator to access that value without holding GTL personally liable. It is not this Court's role to mandate a particular mechanism for the Regulator to achieve that end. Even if this was not the case, the fact that Redwater's assets have already been sold and are currently being held in trust means that personal liability is no longer a concern. There is no operational conflict.

[109] I turn now to frustration of purpose. The chambers judge identified a number of purposes of s. 14.06 in his reasons. GTL relies on three of them, namely: "limit[ing] the liability of insolvency professionals, so that they will accept mandates despite environmental issues"; "reduc[ing] the number of abandoned sites in the country"; and "permit[ing] receivers and trustees to make rational economic assessments of the costs of remedying environmental conditions, and giv[ing] receivers and trustees the discretion to determine whether to comply with orders to remediate property affected by these conditions" (chambers judge's reasons, at paras. 128-29).

[110] The burden is on GTL to establish the specific purposes of s. 14.06(2) and s. 14.06(4) if it wishes to demonstrate a conflict. This has been described as a "high" burden, requiring "[c]lear proof of purpose" (Lemare, at para. 26). In my view, based on the plain wording of s. 14.06(2) and s. 14.06(4) (a "trustee is not personally liable") and the Hansard evidence, it is evident that the purpose of these provisions is to protect trustees from personal liability in respect of environmental matters affecting the estates they are administering.

[108] La suggestion faite dans les motifs dissidents selon laquelle l'organisme de réglementation tente d'engager la responsabilité personnelle de GTL est inexacte. Personne ne conteste que l'actif de Redwater a toujours une grande valeur. Bien que le droit de l'organisme de réglementation soit naturellement tributaire des priorités établies par la LFI, l'historique du régime de réglementation en cause démontre que l'organisme de réglementation dispose de moyens pour obtenir cette valeur sans engager la responsabilité personnelle de GTL. Il n'appartient pas à notre Cour de prescrire un mécanisme en particulier à cette fin. Même si ce n'était pas le cas, le fait que les biens de Redwater ont déjà été vendus et qu'ils sont actuellement détenus en fiducie signifie que la responsabilité personnelle ne pose plus problème. Il n'y a pas de conflit d'application.

[109] Je me penche maintenant sur l'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral. Le juge siégeant en cabinet a relevé dans ses motifs un certain nombre d'objets de l'art. 14.06. GTL s'appuie sur trois d'entre eux, à savoir : [TRADUCTION] « limiter la responsabilité des professionnels de l'insolvabilité, afin qu'ils acceptent des mandats en dépit des problèmes environnementaux »; « réduire le nombre de sites délaissés dans le pays »; et « permettre aux séquestres et aux syndics de procéder à des évaluations économiques rationnelles des coûts de réparation des faits liés à l'environnement, et donner aux séquestres ainsi qu'aux syndics le pouvoir discrétionnaire de déterminer s'il y a lieu de se conformer aux ordonnances de décontamination des biens touchés par ces faits » (motifs du juge siégeant en cabinet, par. 128-129).

[110] Il incombe à GTL d'établir les objectifs précis des par. 14.06(2) et (4) s'il souhaite démontrer qu'il y a conflit. Notre Cour a qualifié ce fardeau d'« élevé » et ajouté qu'il faut « une preuve claire de l'objet » (Lemare, par. 26). À mon avis, compte tenu du libellé clair des par. 14.06(2) et (4) (« le syndic est, ès qualité, dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle ») et des débats parlementaires, l'objectif de ces dispositions est manifestement de dégager les syndics de toute responsabilité personnelle à l'égard de questions environnementales touchant l'actif qu'ils administrent.

[111] This purpose is not frustrated by the inclusion of trustees in the definition of "licensee" in the OGCA and the Pipeline Act. The Regulator's position is that it would never attempt to hold a trustee personally liable. Trustees have been considered licensees under these Acts for over 20 years, and they have yet to face the scourge of personal liability. To find an essential part of Alberta's regulatory regime inoperative based on the theoretical possibility of frustration of purpose would be inconsistent with the principles of paramountcy and cooperative federalism. To date, Alberta's regulatory regime has functioned as intended without frustrating the purpose of s. 14.06(2) or s. 14.06(4) of the BIA.

[112] In arguing that s. 14.06 has the broader goals of reducing the number of abandoned sites (in the non-technical sense of "abandoned") and encouraging trustees to accept mandates, GTL relies on what it calls "the available extrinsic evidence and the actual words and structure of that section" (GTL's factum, at para. 91). In my view, the arguments it advances are insufficient for GTL to meet its high burden and demonstrate that the purpose of s. 14.06(2) and s. 14.06(4) should be defined as including these broader objectives. Reducing the number of unaddressed sites and encouraging trustees to accept mandates may be positive side effects of s. 14.06(2) and s. 14.06(4), but it is a stretch to see them as the purpose of the provisions. Like the provision at issue in Lemare, it is more plausible that they serve a "simple and narrow purpose" (para. 45).

[113] Regardless, even if it is assumed that such broader goals are part of the purpose of s. 14.06(2) and s. 14.06(4), the evidence does not show that they are frustrated by the inclusion of trustees in the statutory definition of "licensee". Relying on statements made by GTL in the Second Report, ATB asserts that, if trustees continue to be considered licensees and if environmental claims continue to be binding on estates, then, in situations akin to that of the Redwater insolvency, trustees will refuse to accept appointments. The fact that, prior to this litigation, it had been settled in Alberta since at least

[111] Cet objectif n'est pas été entravé par l'ajout des syndics à la définition de « titulaire de permis » dans l'OGCA et la Pipeline Act. L'organisme de réglementation a soutenu qu'il n'essaierait jamais d'engager la responsabilité personnelle d'un syndic. Les syndics sont considérés comme des « titulaires de permis » dans ces lois depuis plus de 20 ans et ils n'ont pas encore été confrontés au fléau de la responsabilité personnelle. Déclarer inopérante une partie essentielle du régime de réglementation de l'Alberta en raison de la possibilité théorique d'entrave à un objectif fédéral irait à l'encontre des principes de la prépondérance fédérale et du fédéralisme coopératif. Jusqu'à présent, le régime de réglementation albertain fonctionne de la manière prévue sans entraver l'objectif des par. 14.06(2) ou (4) de la LFI.

[112] Pour soutenir que l'art. 14.06 a comme objectif général de réduire le nombre de sites abandonnés (au sens non technique du terme) et d'encourager les syndics à accepter des mandats, GTL se fonde sur ce qu'il appelle [TRADUCTION] « la preuve extrinsèque disponible et le libellé de cette disposition » (mémoire de GTL, par. 91). À mon avis, les arguments qu'il avance ne lui permettent pas de s'acquitter du fardeau élevé qui lui incombe et de démontrer que l'objectif des par. 14.06(2) et (4) devrait être défini de manière à inclure ces objectifs généraux. Réduire le nombre de sites délaissés et encourager les syndics à accepter des mandats peuvent être des effets secondaires positifs des par. 14.06(2) et (4), mais il serait exagéré de dire qu'il s'agit des objectifs de ces dispositions. Comme dans le cas de la disposition en litige dans Lemare, il est plus plausible que ces dispositions aient un « simple et restreint » (par. 45).

[113] Quoi qu'il en soit, même si l'on tient pour acquis que les par. 14.06(2) et (4) ont de tels objectifs généraux, la preuve ne démontre pas que la réalisation de ces objectifs est entravée par l'ajout des syndics à la définition légale de « titulaire de permis ». S'appuyant sur des affirmations de GTL dans le Deuxième rapport, ATB prétend que, si les syndics sont toujours considérés comme des « titulaires de permis » et les réclamations environnementales continuent de lier l'actif, les syndics refuseront la nomination dans des situations semblables à celle de l'insolvabilité de Redwater. À cette prétention Northern Badger that certain ongoing environmental obligations in the oil and gas industry continue to be binding on bankrupt estates must be weighed against this bald allegation. It was also well established that the Regulator would never attempt to hold insolvency professionals personally liable for such obligations. As noted by the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, there is nothing to suggest that this well-established state of affairs has led insolvency professionals to refuse to accept appointments or has increased the number of orphaned sites. There is no reason why the Regulator and trustees cannot continue to work together collaboratively, as they have for many years, to ensure that end-of-life obligations are satisfied, while at same time maximizing recovery for creditors.

sommaire il faut opposer le fait qu'avant le présent litige, il était établi en Alberta, depuis au moins l'arrêt Northern Badger, que certaines obligations environnementales continues dans l'industrie pétrolière et gazière liaient toujours l'actif du failli. Il était aussi bien établi que l'organisme de réglementation n'aurait jamais essayé de tenir les professionnels de l'insolvabilité personnellement responsables de telles obligations. Comme l'a fait remarquer l'Association canadienne des producteurs pétroliers, rien n'indique que cet état de fait bien établi a conduit les professionnels de l'insolvabilité à refuser la nomination ou augmenté le nombre de sites orphelins. Il n'y a aucune raison pour laquelle l'organisme de réglementation et les syndics ne peuvent pas poursuivre leur collaboration, comme ils le font depuis de nombreuses années, pour assurer le respect des obligations de fin de vie tout en maximisant le recouvrement au profit des créanciers.

(3) Conclusion on Section 14.06 of the BIA

[114] There is no conflict between the Alberta legislation and s. 14.06 of the BIA that makes the definition of "licensee" in the former inapplicable insofar as it includes GTL. GTL continues to have the responsibilities and duties of a "licensee" to the extent that assets remain in the Redwater estate. Nonetheless, GTL submits that, even if it cannot walk away from the Renounced Assets by invoking s. 14.06(4), the environmental obligations associated with those assets are unsecured claims of the Regulator for the purposes of the BIA. GTL says that the order of priorities in the BIA requires it to satisfy the claims of Redwater's secured creditors before the Regulator's claims, which rank equally with the claims of other unsecured creditors. According to GTL, the Regulator's attempts to use its statutory powers to prioritize its environmental claims conflict with the BIA. I will now consider this alleged conflict, which turns on the Abitibi test.

(3) Conclusion sur l'art. 14.06 de la LFI

[114] Il n'y a aucun conflit entre la législation albertaine et l'art. 14.06 de la LFI par suite duquel la définition de « titulaire de permis » dans la première est inapplicable dans la mesure où elle vise GTL. Ce dernier conserve les responsabilités et obligations d'un « titulaire de permis » tant qu'il reste des éléments dans l'actif de Redwater. GTL plaide néanmoins que, même s'il ne peut délaisser les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation en invoquant le par. 14.06(4), les obligations environnementales qui y sont associés sont des réclamations non garanties de l'organisme de réglementation pour l'application de la LFI. GTL affirme que l'ordre de priorités fixé dans la LFI l'oblige à acquitter les réclamations des créanciers garantis de Redwater avant celles de l'organisme de réglementation, lesquelles occupent le même rang que les réclamations des autres créanciers ordinaires. D'après GTL, les tentatives de l'organisme de réglementation d'utiliser les pouvoirs que lui accorde la loi pour faire primer ses réclamations environnementales entrent en conflit avec la LFI. Je vais maintenant me pencher sur ce conflit allégué, qui fait intervenir le critère d'Abitibi.

C. The Abitibi Test: Is the Regulator Asserting Claims Provable in Bankruptcy?

[115] The equitable distribution of the bankrupt's assets is one of the purposes of the BIA. It is achieved through the collective proceeding model. Creditors of the bankrupt wishing to enforce a claim provable in bankruptcy must participate in the collective proceeding. Their claims will ultimately have the priority assigned to them by the BIA. This ensures that the bankrupt's assets are distributed fairly. This model avoids inefficiency and chaos, thus maximizing global recovery for all creditors. For the collective proceeding model to be viable, creditors with provable claims must not be allowed to enforce them outside the collective proceeding.

[116] It is well established that a provincial law will be rendered inoperative in the context of bankruptcy where the effect of the law is to conflict with, reorder or alter the priorities established by the BIA. Both Martin J.A. and the chambers judge dealt with the altering of bankruptcy priorities under the frustration of purpose branch of paramountcy. In my view, it could also be plausibly advanced that a provincial law that has the effect of reordering bankruptcy priorities is in operational conflict with the BIA — such was the conclusion in Husky Oil, at para. 87. For the purposes of this appeal, there is no need to decide which would be the appropriate branch of the paramountcy analysis. Under either branch, the Alberta legislation authorizing the Regulator's use of its disputed powers will be inoperative to the extent that the use of these powers during bankruptcy alters or reorders the priorities established by the BIA.

[117] GTL says that this is precisely the effect of the obligations imposed on the Redwater estate by the Regulator through the use of its statutory powers, even if it cannot walk away from the Renounced Assets by invoking s. 14.06(4). Parliament has assigned a particular rank to environmental claims

C. Le critère d'Abitibi : L'organisme de réglementation fait-il valoir des réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite?

[115] La répartition équitable des biens du failli est l'un des objectifs de la LFI. Elle est réalisée par le truchement du modèle de la procédure collective. Les créanciers du failli souhaitant faire valoir une réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite doivent participer à la procédure collective. Leurs réclamations recevront en fin de compte la priorité qui leur a été attribuée par la LFI. Cela assure la répartition équitable des biens du failli. Ce modèle évite l'inefficacité et le chaos, maximisant ainsi le recouvrement global au profit de tous les créanciers. Pour que le modèle de la procédure collective soit viable, les créanciers ayant des réclamations prouvables ne doivent pas être autorisés à les faire valoir en dehors de la procédure collective.

[116] Il est bien établi qu'une loi provinciale devient inopérante dans le contexte d'une faillite si elle a pour effet d'entrer en conflit avec l'ordre de priorité établi par la LFI, de le réarranger ou de le modifier. La juge Martin et le juge siégeant en cabinet ont tous les deux traité de la modification des priorités en matière de faillite en fonction du volet « entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral » de la doctrine de la prépondérance. À mon avis, il pourrait aussi être plausiblement avancé qu'une loi provinciale ayant pour effet de réarranger les priorités en matière de faillite est en conflit d'application avec la LFI; telle était la conclusion dans Husky Oil, au par. 87. Pour les besoins du présent pourvoi, il n'est pas nécessaire de décider quel serait le bon volet de l'analyse relative à la prépondérance. Dans l'un ou l'autre volet, la loi albertaine autorisant l'organisme de réglementation à exercer ses pouvoirs contestés sera inopérante, dans la mesure où l'exercice de ces pouvoirs pendant la faillite modifie ou réarrange les priorités établies par la LFI.

[117] GTL affirme que, même si le fait d'invoquer le par. 14.06(4) ne lui permet pas de délaisser les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation, les obligations imposées à l'actif de Redwater par l'organisme de réglementation au moyen de l'exercice des pouvoirs que lui confère la loi font exactement cela. Le that are provable in bankruptcy. It is accepted that the limited super priority for environmental claims created by s. 14.06(7) of the BIA does not apply here, and accordingly, says GTL, the Regulator is an ordinary creditor as regards its environmental claims — in other words, neither a secured nor a preferred creditor. The Regulator's environmental claims are thus to be paid rateably with those of Redwater's other ordinary creditors under s. 141 of the BIA. GTL argues that, to comply with the Abandonment Orders or LMR requirements, the Redwater estate will have to expend funds prior to distributing its assets to the secured creditors, and that this amounts to the Regulator using its statutory powers to create for itself a priority in bankruptcy to which it is not entitled.

[118] However, only claims provable in bankruptcy must be asserted within the single proceeding. Other claims are not stayed upon bankruptcy and continue to be binding on the estate. In Abitibi, this Court clearly stated that not all environmental obligations enforced by a regulator will be claims provable in bankruptcy. As a matter of principle, bankruptcy does not amount to a licence to disregard rules. The Regulator says that it is not asserting any claims provable in the bankruptcy, so the Redwater estate must comply with its environmental obligations, to the extent that assets are available to do so.

[119] The resolution of this issue turns on the proper application of the Abitibi test for determining whether a particular regulatory obligation amounts to a claim provable in bankruptcy. To reiterate:

> First, there must be a debt, a liability or an obligation to a creditor. Second, the debt, liability or obligation must be incurred before the debtor becomes bankrupt. Third, it must be possible to attach a monetary value to the debt, liability or obligation. [Emphasis in original; para. 26.]

Parlement a attribué un rang donné aux réclamations environnementales qui sont prouvables en matière de faillite. Il est admis que la superpriorité limitée créée par le par. 14.06(7) de la LFI pour les réclamations de cette nature ne s'applique pas en l'espèce et, en conséquence, affirme GTL, l'organisme de réglementation est un créancier ordinaire à l'égard de ces réclamations, c'est-à-dire qu'il n'est ni un créancier garanti ni un créancier privilégié. Les réclamations environnementales de l'organisme de réglementation doivent donc être acquittées au prorata avec celles des autres créanciers ordinaires de Redwater en application de l'art. 141 de la LFI. GTL soutient que, pour respecter les ordonnances d'abandon ou les exigences relatives à la CGR, il devra dépenser des fonds avant de partager ses biens entre les créanciers garantis. Cela équivaut, pour l'organisme de réglementation, à utiliser les pouvoirs que lui confère la loi pour se créer une priorité en matière de faillite à laquelle il n'a pas droit.

[118] Toutefois, on doit faire valoir uniquement les réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite dans le cadre de la procédure unique. Les réclamations non prouvables ne sont pas suspendues à la faillite et elles lient toujours l'actif. Dans l'arrêt Abitibi, notre Cour a clairement déclaré que les obligations environnementales appliquées par un organisme de réglementation ne sont pas toutes des réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite. En principe, la faillite n'équivaut pas à une autorisation de faire fi des règles. L'organisme de réglementation dit qu'il ne fait valoir aucune réclamation prouvable dans la faillite et que l'actif de Redwater doit respecter ses obligations environnementales dans la mesure des biens dont il dispose.

[119] Le règlement de cette question requiert que l'on applique correctement le critère d'Abitibi pour déterminer si une obligation réglementaire précise équivaut à une réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite. Il y a lieu de réitérer ce critère :

> Premièrement, on doit être en présence d'une dette, d'un engagement ou d'une obligation envers un créancier. Deuxièmement, la dette, l'engagement ou l'obligation doit avoir pris naissance avant que le débiteur ne devienne failli. Troisièmement, il doit être possible d'attribuer une valeur pécuniaire à cette dette, cet engagement ou cette obligation. [En italique dans l'original; par. 26.]

[120] There is no dispute that in this appeal, the second part of the test is met. Accordingly, I will discuss only the first and the third parts of the test.

[121] In this Court, the Regulator, supported by various interveners, raised two concerns about how the Abitibi test has been applied, both by the courts below and in general. The first concern is that the "creditor" step of the Abitibi test has been interpreted too broadly in cases such as the instant appeal and Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2013 ONCA 599, 368 D.L.R. (4th) 122 ("Nortel CA"), and that, in effect, this step of the test has become so pro forma as to be practically meaningless. The second concern has to do with the application of the "monetary value" step of the Abitibi test by the chambers judge and Slatter J.A. This step is generally called the "sufficient certainty" step, based on the guidance provided in Abitibi. The argument here is that the courts below went beyond the test established in Abitibi by focusing on whether Redwater's regulatory obligations were "intrinsically financial". Under Abitibi, the sufficient certainty analysis should have focused on whether the Regulator would ultimately perform the environmental work and assert a monetary claim for reimbursement.

[122] In my view, both concerns raised by the Regulator have merit. As I will demonstrate, Abitibi should not be taken as standing for the proposition that a regulator is always a creditor when it exercises its statutory enforcement powers against a debtor. On a proper understanding of the "creditor" step, it is clear that the Regulator acted in the public interest and for the public good in issuing the Abandonment Orders and enforcing the LMR requirements and that it is, therefore, not a creditor of Redwater. It is the public, not the Regulator or the General Revenue Fund, that is the beneficiary of those environmental obligations; the province does not stand to gain financially from them. Although this conclusion is sufficient to resolve this aspect of the appeal, for the sake of completeness, I will also demonstrate that the chambers judge erred in finding that, on these facts, there is sufficient certainty that the Regulator will ultimately perform the environmental work and assert a claim for reimbursement. To conclude, I will briefly comment on why the effects of the end-of-life obligations do not conflict with the priority scheme in the BIA.

[120] Il est incontestable que, dans le présent pourvoi, la deuxième partie du critère est respectée. En conséquence, je ne traiterai que des première et troisième parties.

[121] Devant notre Cour, l'organisme de réglementation, avec l'appui de divers intervenants, a soulevé deux préoccupations quant à la façon dont le critère d'Abitibi avait été appliqué, tant par les tribunaux d'instance inférieure que par les cours en général. La première préoccupation concerne le fait que l'étape « créancier » du critère a reçu une interprétation trop large dans des affaires analogues à celle en l'espèce et Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2013 ONCA 599, 368 D.L.R. (4th) 122 (« Nortel CA ») et qu'en réalité, cette étape du critère est si aisément franchie qu'elle n'est appliquée que pour la forme et qu'elle n'a pratiquement plus de sens. La seconde préoccupation a trait à l'application de l'étape « valeur pécuniaire » du critère d'Abitibi par le juge siégeant en cabinet et le juge Slatter. Cette étape reçoit généralement le nom de « certitude suffisante », compte tenu des directives données dans Abitibi. On soutient par là que les tribunaux d'instance inférieure sont allés au-delà du critère établi dans l'arrêt Abitibi en se concentrant sur la question de savoir si les obligations réglementaires de Redwater étaient « intrinsèquement financières ». Suivant l'arrêt Abitibi, l'analyse de la certitude suffisante aurait dû être axée sur la question de savoir si l'organisme de réglementation effectuerait lui-même, au bout du compte, les travaux environnementaux et ferait valoir une réclamation pécuniaire pour le remboursement.

[122] Les deux préoccupations exprimées par l'organisme de réglementation me paraissent fondées. Comme je vais le démontrer, l'arrêt Abitibi ne doit pas être considéré comme soutenant la thèse qu'un organisme de réglementation est toujours un créancier lorsqu'il exerce les pouvoirs d'application qui lui sont dévolus par la loi à l'encontre d'un débiteur. D'après le sens qu'il convient de donner à l'étape « créancier », il est clair que l'organisme de réglementation a agi dans l'intérêt public et pour le bien public en rendant les ordonnances d'abandon et en assurant le respect des exigences relatives à la CGR, et qu'il n'est donc pas un créancier de Redwater.

C'est le public, et non l'organisme de réglementation ou le fonds d'administration du gouvernement, qui bénéficie de ces obligations environnementales; la province n'est pas en mesure d'en bénéficier financièrement. Bien que cette conclusion suffise pour trancher cet aspect du pourvoi, par souci d'exhaustivité, je vais aussi démontrer que le juge siégeant en cabinet a eu tort de conclure qu'au vu des faits de l'espèce, il est suffisamment certain que l'organisme de réglementation exécutera au bout du compte les travaux environnementaux et présentera une demande de remboursement. Pour conclure, je me prononcerai brièvement sur les raisons pour lesquelles les effets des obligations de fin de vie n'entrent pas en conflit avec le régime de priorité établi dans la LFI.

(1) The Regulator Is Not a Creditor of Redwater

(1) L'organisme de réglementation n'est pas un créancier de Redwater

[123] The Regulator and the supporting interveners are not the first to raise issues with the "creditor" step of the Abitibi test. In the six years since Abitibi was decided, concerns about the "creditor" step and the fact that, as it is commonly understood, it will seemingly be satisfied in all — or nearly all — cases have also been expressed by academic commentators, such as A. J. Lund, "Lousy Dentists, Bad Drivers, and Abandoned Oil Wells: A New Approach to Reconciling Provincial Regulatory Regimes with Federal Insolvency Law" (2017), 80 Sask. L. Rev. 157, at p. 178, and Stewart. This Court has not had an opportunity to comment on Abitibi since it was decided. However, the interpretation of the "creditor" step adopted by lower courts, including the majority of the Court of Appeal in this case, has focused on certain comments found at para. 27 of Abitibi, and the "creditor" step has accordingly been found to be satisfied whenever a regulator exercises its enforcement powers against a debtor (see, for example, C.A. reasons, at para. 60; Nortel CA, at para. 16).

[123] L'organisme de réglementation et les intervenants qui l'appuient ne sont pas les premiers à cerner des problèmes relativement à l'étape « créancier » du critère d'Abitibi. Pendant les six années qui ont suivi l'arrêt Abitibi, des problèmes au sujet de cette étape et le fait que, dans son acception courante, cette étape sera toujours — ou presque toujours — franchie ont aussi été énoncés par des commentateurs universitaires tels que A. J. Lund, « Lousy Dentists, Bad Drivers, and Abandoned Oil Wells : A New Approach to Reconciling Provincial Regulatory Regimes with Federal Insolvency Law » (2017), 80 Sask L. Rev. 157, p. 178, et M. Stewart. Notre Cour n'a pas eu l'occasion de commenter l'arrêt Abitibi depuis qu'il a été rendu. Par contre, l'interprétation de l'étape « créancier » retenue par des juridictions inférieures, notamment la majorité de la Cour d'appel en l'espèce, a mis l'accent sur certaines remarques faites au par. 27 de l'arrêt Abitibi. Sur cette base, ces tribunaux ont conclu que l'étape « créancier » est franchie chaque fois qu'un organisme de réglementation exerce à l'encontre d'un débiteur son pouvoir d'appliquer la loi (voir, par exemple, les motifs de la Cour d'appel, par. 60; Nortel CA, par. 16).

[124] GTL submits that these lower courts have correctly interpreted and applied the "creditor" step.

[124] Selon GTL, les juridictions inférieures susmentionnées ont bien interprété et appliqué l'étape

It further submits that, because of Abitibi, the 1991 Alberta Court of Appeal decision in Northern Badger is of no assistance in analyzing the creditor issue. Conversely, the Regulator forcefully argues that Abitibi must be understood in the context of its own unique facts and that it did not overrule Northern Badger. Relying on Northern Badger, the Regulator argues that a regulator exercising a power to enforce a public duty is not a creditor of the individual or corporation subject to that duty. Like Martin J.A., I agree with the Regulator on this point. If, as GTL urges and the majority of the Court of Appeal concluded, the "creditor" step is satisfied whenever a regulator exercises its enforcement powers against a debtor, then it is hard to imagine a situation in which the "creditor" step would not be satisfied by the actions of an environmental regulator. Stewart was correct to suppose that "[s]urely, the Court did not intend this result" (p. 189). For the "creditor" step to have meaning, "there must be situations where the other two steps could be met . . . but the order [or obligation] is still not a provable claim because the regulator is not a creditor of the bankrupt" (Attorney General of Ontario's factum, at para. 39).

[125] Before further explaining my conclusion on this point, I must address a preliminary issue: the fact that the Regulator conceded in the courts below that it was a creditor. It is well established that concessions of law are not binding on this Court: see Ocean Port Hotel Ltd. v. British Columbia (General Manager, Liquor Control and Licensing Branch), 2001 SCC 52, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 781, at para. 44; M. v. H., [1999] 2 S.C.R. 3, at para. 45; R. v. Sappier, 2006 SCC 54, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 686, at para. 62. As noted by L'Heureux-Dubé J., in dissent, but not on this point, in R. v. Elshaw, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 24, at p. 48, "the fact that an issue is conceded below means nothing in and of itself". Although concessions by the parties are often relied upon, it is ultimately for « créancier ». Il ajoute qu'à la suite de l'arrêt Abitibi, l'arrêt Northern Badger rendu en 1991 par la Cour d'appel de l'Alberta n'est d'aucun secours pour analyser la question du créancier. À l'inverse, l'organisme de réglementation soutient avec vigueur qu'il faut situer l'arrêt Abitibi dans le contexte des faits qui lui sont propres, et qu'il n'a pas infirmé Northern Badger. Se fondant sur cet arrêt, l'organisme de réglementation plaide qu'un organisme de réglementation exerçant un pouvoir pour faire respecter un devoir public n'est pas un créancier de la personne ou de la société assujettie à ce devoir. À l'instar de la juge Martin, je partage l'avis de l'organisme de réglementation sur ce point. Si, comme l'exhorte GTL et le concluent les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel, l'étape « créancier » est franchie chaque fois qu'un organisme de réglementation exerce ses pouvoirs d'application à l'encontre d'un débiteur, il est difficile d'imaginer une situation où les actes d'un organisme de réglementation ne franchiraient pas l'étape « créancier ». Monsieur Stewart avait raison de supposer que [TRADUCTION] « la Cour ne souhaitait sûrement pas ce résultat » (p. 189). Pour que l'étape « créancier » ait un quelconque sens [TRADUCTION] « il doit y avoir des situations dans lesquelles les deux autres étapes du critère d'Abitibi sont franchies […], mais l'ordonnance [ou l'obligation] environnementale n'est toujours pas une réclamation prouvable car l'organisme de réglementation n'est pas un créancier du failli » (mémoire de la procureure générale de l'Ontario, par. 39).

[125] Avant d'expliquer davantage ma conclusion sur ce point, je dois traiter d'une question préliminaire : l'organisme de réglementation a concédé devant les juridictions inférieures qu'il était un créancier. Il est bien établi que les concessions de droit ne lient pas notre Cour : voir Ocean Port Hotel Ltd. c. Colombie-Britannique (General Manager, Liquor Control & Licensing Branch), 2001 CSC 52, [2001] 2 R.C.S. 781, par. 44; M. c. H., [1999] 2 R.C.S. 3, par. 45; R. c. Sappier, 2006 CSC 54, [2006] 2 R.C.S. 686, par. 62). Comme l'a fait remarquer la juge L'Heureux-Dubé (dissidente, mais non sur ce point) dans R. c. Elshaw, [1991] 3 R.C.S. 24, p. 48, « un aveu fait devant une instance inférieure ne signifie rien en soi ». Bien que l'on se fonde souvent this Court to determine points of law. For several reasons, no fairness concerns are raised by disregarding the Regulator's concession in this case.

[126] First, in a letter to GTL dated May 14, 2015, the Regulator advanced the position that it was "not a creditor of [Redwater]", but, rather, had a "statutory mandate to regulate the oil and gas industry in Alberta" (GTL's Record, vol. 1, at p. 78). I note that this was the initial communication between the Regulator and GTL, only two days after the latter's appointment as receiver of Redwater's property. Second, the issue of whether the Regulator is a creditor was discussed in the parties' factums. Third, during oral arguments before this Court, the Regulator was questioned about its concession. Counsel made the undisputed point that higher courts are not bound by such concessions and took the position that, on the correct interpretation of Abitibi, the Regulator was not a creditor. Fourth, when the Regulator's status as a creditor was raised as an issue before this Court, opposing counsel did not argue that they would have adduced further evidence on the issue had it been raised in the courts below. Finally, a proper understanding of the "creditor" step of the Abitibi test is of fundamental importance to the proper functioning of the national bankruptcy scheme and of provincial environmental schemes throughout Canada. I conclude that this case is one in which it is appropriate to disregard the Regulator's concession in the courts below.

[127] Returning to the analysis, I note that the unique factual matrix of Abitibi must be kept in mind. In that case, Newfoundland and Labrador expropriated most of AbitibiBowater's property in the province without compensation. Subsequently, sur les concessions des parties, il revient en fin de compte à notre Cour de statuer sur des points de droit. Pour plusieurs raisons, on ne suscite aucune préoccupation en matière d'équité en ne tenant pas compte de la concession faite par l'organisme de réglementation en l'espèce.

[126] Premièrement, dans une lettre adressée à GTL en date du 14 mai 2015, l'organisme de réglementation soutient qu'il était [TRADUCTION] « non pas un créancier de [Redwater] », mais avait plutôt « pour mandat légal de réglementer l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de l'Alberta » (dossier de GTL, vol. 1, p. 78). Je constate qu'il s'agissait de la première communication entre l'organisme de réglementation et GTL et qu'elle est survenue seulement deux jours après la nomination de ce dernier comme séquestre des biens de Redwater. Deuxièmement, les parties ont traité dans leurs mémoires de la question de savoir si l'organisme de réglementation est un créancier. Troisièmement, au cours de sa plaidoirie devant notre Cour, l'organisme de réglementation a été interrogé à propos de sa concession. L'avocate a signalé le point non contesté que les tribunaux supérieurs ne sont pas liés par de telles concessions, et a soutenu que, si l'on interprète correctement l'arrêt Abitibi, l'organisme de réglementation n'était pas un créancier. Quatrièmement, quand le statut de l'organisme de réglementation en tant que créancier a été évoqué devant notre Cour, les avocats des parties adverses n'ont pas prétendu qu'ils auraient présenté des éléments de preuve supplémentaires sur ce point s'il avait été soulevé devant les juridictions inférieures. Enfin, le sens qu'il convient de donner à l'étape « créancier » du critère d'Abitibi est d'une importance fondamentale pour le bon fonctionnement du régime national de faillite et des régimes environnementaux provinciaux partout au Canada. Je conclus qu'il est indiqué en l'espèce de ne pas tenir compte de la concession faite par l'organisme de réglementation devant les juridictions inférieures.

[127] Pour revenir à l'analyse, je signale qu'il ne faut pas oublier la matrice factuelle unique de l'arrêt Abitibi. Dans cette affaire, Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador a exproprié la plupart des biens d'AbitibiBowater dans la province, sans indemnisation. Par la suite, AbitibiBowater was granted a stay under the CCAA. It then filed a notice of intent to submit a claim to arbitration under the North American Free Trade Agreement between the Government of Canada, the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America, Can. T.S. 1994 No. 2 ("NAFTA"), for losses resulting from the expropriation. In response, Newfoundland's Minister of Environment and Conservation ordered AbitibiBowater to remediate five sites pursuant to the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2 ("EPA"). Three of the five sites had been expropriated by Newfoundland and Labrador. The evidence led to the conclusion that "the Province never truly intended that Abitibi was to perform the remediation work", but instead sought a claim that could be used as an offset in connection with AbitibiBowater's NAFTA claim (Abitibi, at para. 54). In other words, the Province sought a financial benefit from the remediation orders.

AbitibiBowater s'est vu accorder une suspension en vertu de la LACC. Elle a ensuite déposé un avis d'intention de soumettre une réclamation à l'arbitrage au titre de l'Accord de libre-échange nord-américain entre le gouvernement du Canada, le gouvernement des États-Unis mexicains et le gouvernement des États-Unis d'Amérique, R.T. Can. 1994 nº 2 (« ALENA »), pour les pertes résultant de l'expropriation. En réponse, le ministre de l'Environnement et de la Conservation de Terre-Neuve a ordonné à AbitibiBowater de décontaminer cinq sites conformément à l'Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2 (« EPA »). Trois des cinq sites avaient été expropriés par la province. La preuve a mené à la conclusion que « la province n'avait jamais vraiment eu l'intention qu'Abitibi exécute les travaux [de décontamination] » (Abitibi, par. 54) et qu'elle cherchait plutôt à faire valoir une réclamation qui pourrait être utilisée à titre compensatoire au regard de la demande d'indemnisation d'AbitibiBowater fondée sur l'ALENA. Autrement dit, la province voulait tirer un avantage financier des ordonnances de décontamination.

[128] In this appeal, it is not disputed that, in seeking to enforce Redwater's end-of-life obligations, the Regulator is acting in a bona fide regulatory capacity and does not stand to benefit financially. The Regulator's ultimate goal is to have the environmental work actually performed, for the benefit of third-party landowners and the public at large. There is no colourable attempt by the Regulator to recover a debt, nor is there an ulterior motive on its part, as there was in Abitibi. The distinction between the facts of this appeal and those of Abitibi becomes even clearer when one examines the comprehensive reasons of the chambers judge in Abitibi. The crux of the findings of Gascon J. (as he then was) is found at paras. 173-76:

[128] En l'espèce, personne ne conteste qu'en cherchant à assurer le respect des obligations de fin de vie incombant à Redwater, l'organisme de réglementation agit de bonne foi à titre d'autorité de réglementation et il n'est pas en mesure d'obtenir un avantage financier. L'objectif ultime de l'organisme de réglementation est de faire exécuter les travaux environnementaux au profit des tiers propriétaires terriens et de la population en général. L'organisme de réglementation n'a pas fait de tentative déguisée de recouvrer une créance et il n'y avait pas de motif oblique de sa part, comme c'était le cas dans Abitibi. La distinction entre les faits du présent pourvoi et ceux de l'affaire Abitibi ressort encore plus clairement lorsqu'on examine les motifs exhaustifs du juge siégeant en cabinet dans Abitibi. Le cœur des conclusions du juge Gascon (maintenant juge de notre Cour) se trouve aux par. 173-176 :

. . . the Province stands as the direct beneficiary, from a monetary standpoint, of Abitibi's compliance with the EPA Orders. In other words, the execution in nature of the EPA Orders would result in a definite credit to the Province's own "balance sheet". Abitibi's liability in that regard is an asset for the Province itself.

[TRADUCTION] . . . la province bénéficie directement, d'un point de vue financier, du respect par Abitibi des ordonnances fondées sur l'EPA. En d'autres termes, l'exécution en nature des ordonnances fondées sur l'EPA se traduirait

With all due respect, this is not regulatory in nature; it is rather purely financial in reality. This is, in fact, closer to a debtor-creditor relationship than anything else.

This is quite far from the situation of the detached regulator or public enforcer issuing order for the public good. Here, the Province itself derives the direct pecuniary benefit from the required compliance of Abitibi to the EPA Orders. The Province stands to directly gain in the outcome. None of the cases submitted by the Province bear any similarity to the fact pattern in the present proceedings.

From this perspective, it is the hat of a creditor that best fits the Province, not that of a disinterested regulator.

(AbitibiBowater Inc., Re, 2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1)

[129] This Court recognized in Abitibi that the Province "easily satisfied" the creditor requirement (para 49). It was therefore not necessary to consider at any length how the "creditor" step should be understood or how it would apply in other factual situations. However, even at para. 27 of Abitibi, the paragraph relied on by the majority of the Court of Appeal, Deschamps J. made a point of noting that "[m]ost environmental regulatory bodies can be creditors in respect of monetary or non-monetary obligations imposed by the relevant statutes" (emphasis added). The interpretation of the "creditor" step adopted by the majority of the Court of Appeal and urged upon this Court by GTL leaves no room for a regulator that enforces obligations not to be a creditor, though this possibility was clearly contemplated by para. 27 of Abitibi. As noted above, GTL's interpretation leaves the "creditor" step with no independent work to perform.

par un crédit certain au propre « bilan » de la province. Le passif d'Abitibi à cet égard constitue un actif de la province elle-même.

Soit dit en tout respect, il ne s'agit pas d'une affaire de nature réglementaire; il s'agit plutôt en fait d'une affaire purement financière. Cela s'apparente effectivement davantage à une relation créancier-débiteur qu'à autre chose.

Nous sommes assez loin du cas de l'organisme de réglementation ou d'application de la loi qui a rendu de manière objective une ordonnance dans l'intérêt public. En l'espèce, la province elle-même tire directement l'avantage pécunaire du respect obligatoire, par Abitibi, des ordonnances EPA. La province peut tirer profit du résultat. Aucune des affaires soumises par la province ne ressemble un tant soit peu aux faits à l'origine de la présente instance.

Sous cet angle, la province a agi plus comme un créancier que comme un organisme de réglementation désintéressé.

(AbitibiBowater Inc., Re, 2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1)

[129] Notre Cour a reconnu dans Abitibi qu'il était « facile [pour la province] de répondre » à l'exigence relative au créancier (par. 49). Il n'était donc pas nécessaire d'analyser en profondeur le sens de l'étape « créancier » ou la manière dont elle s'appliquerait dans d'autres situations factuelles. Or, même au par. 27 de l'arrêt Abitibi, le paragraphe sur lequel se fondent les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel, la juge Deschamps a pris soin de souligner que « [l]a plupart des organismes administratifs peuvent agir à titre de créanciers en relation avec les obligations pécuniaires ou non pécuniaires imposées par ces lois » (italiques ajoutés). L'interprétation de l'étape « créancier » qu'ont retenue les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel et que GTL nous a exhortés à faire nôtre exclut la possibilité qu'un organisme de réglementation faisant respecter des obligations ne soit pas un créancier, alors que cette possibilité a été clairement envisagée au par. 27 de l'arrêt Abitibi. Comme je l'ai mentionné ci-dessus, l'interprétation de GTL prive l'étape « créancier » de toute fonction indépendante.

[130] Northern Badger established that a regulator enforcing a public duty by way of non-monetary order is not a creditor. I reject the claim in the dissenting reasons that Northern Badger should be interpreted differently. First, I note that whether the Regulator has a contingent claim is relevant to the sufficient certainty test, which presupposes that the Regulator is a creditor. I cannot accept the proposition in the dissenting reasons that Northern Badger was concerned with what would become the third prong of the Abitibi test. In Northern Badger, Laycraft C.J.A. accepted that abandonment was a liability and identified the issue as "whether that liability is to the board so that it is the board which is the creditor" (para. 32). Second, the underlying scenario here with regards to Redwater's end-of-life obligations is exactly the same as in Northern Badger — a regulator is ordering an entity to comply with its legal obligations in furtherance of the public good. This reasoning from Northern Badger was subsequently adopted in cases such as Strathcona (County) v. Fantasy Construction Ltd. (Trustee of), 2005 ABQB 794, 261 D.L.R. (4th) 221, at paras. 23-25, and Lamford Forest Products Ltd. (Re) (1991), 86 D.L.R. (4th) 534.

[131] I cannot agree with the suggestion by the majority of the Court of Appeal in this case that Northern Badger "is of limited assistance" in the application of the Abitibi test (para. 63). Rather, I agree with Martin J.A. that Abitibi did not overturn the reasoning in Northern Badger, but instead "emphasized the need to consider the substance of provincial regulation in assessing whether it creates a claim provable in bankruptcy" (para. 164). As Martin J.A. noted, even following Abitibi, the law continues to be that "public obligations are not provable claims that can be counted or compromised in the bankruptcy" (para. 174). Abitibi clarified the scope of Northern Badger by confirming that a regulator's environmental claims will be provable claims under certain circumstances. It does not stand for the [130] L'arrêt Northern Badger a établi qu'un organisme de réglementation faisant respecter un devoir public au moyen d'une ordonnance non pécuniaire n'est pas un créancier. Je rejette la prétention faite dans les motifs dissidents selon laquelle Northern Badger devrait recevoir une interprétation différente. Premièrement, je souligne que le point de savoir si l'organisme de réglementation a une réclamation éventuelle relève du critère de la certitude suffisante, lequel suppose au préalable que l'organisme de réglementation est un créancier. Je ne peux accepter la proposition énoncée dans les motifs dissidents selon laquelle Northern Badger porte sur ce qui allait devenir le troisième volet du critère d'Abitibi. Dans Northern Badger, après avoir reconnu que l'abandon constituait une responsabilité, le juge d'appel Laycraft a dit qu'il s'agissait de savoir [TRADUCTION] « si cette responsabilité appartient à l'Office, ce qui fait de lui le créancier » (par. 32). Deuxièmement, le scénario sous-jacent en l'espèce quant aux obligations de fin de vie qui incombent à Redwater est exactement le même que dans Northern Badger : un organisme de réglementation ordonne à une entité de se conformer à ses obligations légales pour le bien public. Ce raisonnement exact tiré de Northern Badger a été adopté par la suite dans des décisions telles Strathcona (County) c. Fantasy Construction Ltd. (Trustee of), 2005 ABQB 794, 261 D.L.R. (4th) 221, par. 23-25, et Lamford Forest Products Ltd. (Re) (1991), 86 D.L.R. (4th) 534.

[131] Je ne puis souscrire à l'opinion des juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel en l'espèce selon laquelle Northern Badger [TRADUCTION] « n'est guère utile » dans l'application du critère d'Abitibi (par. 63). Je partage plutôt l'avis de la juge Martin voulant que l'arrêt Abitibi n'ait pas infirmé le raisonnement de Northern Badger, et qu'il ait au contraire « mis en relief le besoin de prendre en considération la teneur du règlement provincial pour déterminer s'il crée une réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite » (par. 164). Comme l'a signalé la juge Martin, même depuis l'arrêt Abitibi, l'état du droit reste inchangé : « les obligations publiques ne sont pas des réclamations prouvables qui peuvent être comptabilisées ou compromises dans la faillite » (par. 174). L'arrêt Abitibi a éclairci la proposition that a regulator exercising its enforcement powers is always a creditor. The reasoning in Northern Badger was simply not applicable on the facts of Abitibi, given the actions of the Province as outlined above.

[132] In Abitibi, Deschamps J. noted that insolvency legislation had evolved in the years since Northern Badger. That legislative evolution did not, however, change the meaning to be ascribed to the term "creditor". In this regard, I agree with the conclusion in Strathcona County v. Fantasy Construction Ltd. (Trustee of), 2005 ABQB 559, 256 D.L.R. (4th) 536, that the amendments to the BIA dealing with environmental matters in the years following Northern Badger cannot be interpreted as having overturned the reasoning in that case. As should be clear from the earlier discussion of s. 14.06, the amendments to the BIA do not speak to when a regulator enforcing an environmental claim is a creditor.

[133] The conclusion that the reasoning in Northern Badger continues to be relevant since Abitibi and the amendments to insolvency legislation also finds support in the writings of academic commentators. Stewart's position is that, while Abitibi discussed Northern Badger, it did not overturn it. He urges this Court to clarify that there remains "a distinction between a regulatory body that is a creditor because it is enforcing a debt, and a regulatory body that is not a creditor because it is enforcing the law" (p. 221). Similarly, Lund argues that a court should "consider the importance of the public interests protected by the regulatory obligation when deciding whether the debtor owes a debt, liability or obligation to a creditor" (p. 178).

portée de Northern Badger en confirmant que les réclamations environnementales d'un organisme de réglementation seront des réclamations prouvables dans certains cas. Il ne permet pas d'affirmer qu'un organisme de réglementation exerçant ses pouvoirs d'application est toujours un créancier. Le raisonnement de l'arrêt Northern Badger ne s'appliquait tout simplement pas aux faits de l'affaire Abitibi, étant donné les agissements de la province décrits précédemment.

[132] Dans Abitibi, la juge Deschamps a signalé que la législation en matière d'insolvabilité avait évolué au cours des années qui ont suivi Northern Badger. Cette évolution législative n'a en revanche pas modifié le sens à attribuer au terme « créancier ». À cet égard, je souscris à la conclusion du juge Burrows dans Strathcona County c. Fantasy Construction Ltd. (Trustee of), 2005 ABQB 559, 256 D.L.R. (4th) 536, suivant laquelle les modifications en matière d'environnement qui ont été apportées à la LFI au cours des années suivant Northern Badger ne peuvent être interprétées comme ayant infirmé le raisonnement de cet arrêt. Tel qu'il devrait ressortir clairement de mon analyse précédente de l'art. 14.06, les modifications à la LFI ne traitent pas des cas où un organisme de réglementation faisant valoir une réclamation environnementale est un créancier.

[133] Les écrits de commentateurs universitaires appuient également la conclusion voulant que le raisonnement de l'arrêt Northern Badger conserve sa pertinence depuis Abitibi et les modifications à la loi sur l'insolvabilité. Monsieur Stewart estime que, même si l'arrêt Abitibi traite de Northern Badger, il ne l'a pas infirmé. Il exhorte notre Cour à préciser qu'il subsiste une distinction entre [TRADUCTION] « l'organisme de réglementation qui agit comme créancier car il recouvre une dette et celui qui n'est pas un créancier car il applique la loi » (p. 221). De même, M^me^ Lund fait valoir qu'un tribunal devrait [TRADUCTION] « prendre en considération l'importance que revêtent les intérêts publics protégés par l'obligation réglementaire au moment de décider si le débiteur a une dette, un engagement ou une obligation envers un créancier » (p. 178).

[134] For the foregoing reasons, Abitibi cannot be understood as having changed the law as summarized by Laycraft C.J.A. I adopt his comments at para. 33 of Northern Badger:

> The statutory provisions requiring the abandonment of oil and gas wells are part of the general law of Alberta, binding every citizen of the province. All who become licensees of oil and gas wells are bound by them. Similar statutory obligations bind citizens in many other areas of modern life . . . But the obligation of the citizen is not to the peace officer, or public authority which enforces the law. The duty is owed as a public duty by all the citizens of the community to their fellow citizens. When the citizen subject to the order complies, the result is not the recovery of money by the peace officer or public authority, or of a judgment for money, nor is that the object of the whole process. Rather, it is simply the enforcement of the general law. The enforcing authority does not become a "creditor" of the citizen on whom the duty is imposed.

[135] Based on the analysis in Northern Badger, it is clear that the Regulator is not a creditor of the Redwater estate. The end-of-life obligations the Regulator seeks to enforce against Redwater are public duties. Neither the Regulator nor the Government of Alberta stands to benefit financially from the enforcement of these obligations. These public duties are owed, not to a creditor, but, rather, to fellow citizens, and are therefore outside the scope of "provable claims". I do not intend to suggest, however, that a regulator will be a creditor only where it acts exactly as the province did in Abitibi. There may very well be situations in which a regulator's actions fall somewhere between those in Abitibi and those in the instant case. Notably, unlike some previous cases, the Regulator has performed no environmental work itself. I leave such situations to be addressed in future cases in which there are full factual records. Here, it is clear that the Regulator is seeking to enforce Redwater's public duties, whether by issuing the Abandonment Orders or by maintaining the LMR

[134] Pour les motifs qui précèdent, on ne peut juger que l'arrêt Abitibi a modifié le droit, comme l'a résumé le juge en chef Laycraft. Je fais miennes les remarques qu'il fait au par. 33 de Northern Badger :

> [TRADUCTION] Les dispositions légales qui exigent l'abandon de puits de pétrole et de gaz font partie du droit commun de l'Alberta et lient chaque citoyen de la province. Toutes les personnes qui acquièrent un permis d'exploitation de puits de pétrole ou de gaz doivent les respecter. Des obligations légales semblables lient les citoyens dans bien d'autres secteurs de la vie moderne [. . .] Mais l'obligation incombant au citoyen n'est pas envers l'agent de la paix ou l'autorité publique qui applique la loi. L'obligation est établie comme une obligation à caractère public qui doit être respectée par l'ensemble des citoyens de la collectivité à l'égard de leurs concitoyens. Lorsque le citoyen visé par l'ordonnance s'y conforme, le résultat n'est pas perçu comme le recouvrement d'une somme d'argent par un agent de la paix ou l'autorité publique, ni comme l'exécution d'un jugement ordonnant le paiement d'une somme d'argent; d'ailleurs, cela ne constitue pas non plus l'objectif de l'ensemble du processus. Il faut plutôt y voir l'application du droit commun. L'organisme d'application de la loi ne devient pas un « créancier » du citoyen à qui incombe l'obligation.

[135] Étant donné l'analyse effectuée dans Northern Badger, il est clair que l'organisme de réglementation n'est pas un créancier de l'actif de Redwater. Les obligations de fin de vie que l'organisme de réglementation veut imposer à Redwater sont de nature publique. Ni l'organisme de réglementation ni le gouvernement de l'Alberta ne peuvent bénéficier financièrement de l'exécution de ces obligations. Ces obligations à caractère public sont non pas envers un créancier, mais envers les concitoyens et échappent donc à la portée des « réclamations prouvables ». Je ne veux toutefois pas laisser entendre par là qu'un organisme de réglementation n'est un créancier que s'il se comporte d'une manière identique à la province dans Abitibi. Il peut fort bien exister des situations où les agissements d'un organisme de réglementation se situent quelque part entre ceux dans Abitibi et ceux en l'espèce. Signalons que, contrairement à certains cas antérieurs, l'organisme de réglementation n'a exécuté aucuns travaux environnementaux lui-même. Je laisse aux tribunaux disposant de dossiers factuels requirements. The Regulator is not a creditor within the meaning of the Abitibi test.

[136] I reject the suggestion that the foregoing analysis somehow overrules the first prong of the Abitibi test. The facts in Abitibi were not comparable to the facts of this appeal. Although this Court discussed Northern Badger in Abitibi, it merely referenced the subsequent amendments to the BIA, and did not overturn the earlier decision. The Court was clear that the ultimate outcome "must be grounded in the facts of each case" (para. 48). The dissenting reasons claim that, given the foregoing analysis, it will be nearly impossible to find that regulators are ever creditors. Abitibi itself shows this not to be the case. Furthermore, as I have said, there may well be cases that fall between Abitibi and the present case. However, if Abitibi is read as requiring only a determination of whether the regulator has exercised an enforcement power, it will in fact be impossible for a regulator not to be a creditor. The dissenting reasons do not seriously deny this, merely suggesting that regulators can publish guidelines or issue licences. The Regulator does both, yet, under the approach taken in the dissenting reasons, it is powerless to take any practical steps in the public interest regarding its guidelines or licences without qualifying as a creditor. As I have explained, Abitibi clearly contemplates a place for regulators who are not creditors.

[137] Strictly speaking, this is sufficient to dispose of this aspect of the appeal. However, additional guidance on the sufficient certainty analysis may prove helpful in future cases. Accordingly, I turn now to a discussion of the "sufficient certainty" step and complets le soin de résoudre pareilles situations à l'avenir. Dans la présente affaire, il est clair que l'organisme de réglementation cherche à faire respecter les devoirs à caractère public de Redwater, que ce soit en rendant les ordonnances d'abandon ou en maintenant les exigences relatives à la CGR. L'organisme de réglementation n'est pas un créancier au sens du critère d'Abitibi.

[136] Je rejette la thèse voulant que l'analyse qui précède écarte d'une façon ou d'une autre le premier volet du critère d'Abitibi. Les faits de l'affaire Abitibi n'étaient pas comparables à ceux de l'espèce. Bien que notre Cour ait examiné l'arrêt Northern Badger dans Abitibi, elle s'est contentée de mentionner les modifications subséquentes à la LFI et n'a pas infirmé l'arrêt antérieur. La Cour a été claire : l'issue finale « doit être fondée sur les faits de chaque affaire » (par. 48). Selon les motifs dissidents, vu l'analyse exposée précédemment, il sera presque impossible de juger que des organismes de réglementation sont des créanciers. L'arrêt Abitibi démontre lui-même que ce n'est pas le cas. De plus, comme je l'ai dit, il peut fort bien exister des cas qui se situent entre l'affaire Abitibi et celle qui nous occupe. Par contre, si l'on considère qu'Abitibi exige uniquement que le tribunal décide si l'organisme de réglementation a exercé un pouvoir d'application, il sera en fait impossible pour un organisme de réglementation de ne pas être un créancier. Les motifs dissidents ne nient pas sérieusement cette opinion et donnent seulement à penser que les organismes de réglementation peuvent publier des lignes directrices ou délivrer des permis. L'organisme de réglementation fait les deux mais, selon l'approche adoptée dans les motifs dissidents, il est dépourvu de moyens pour prendre quelque mesure concrète que ce soit dans l'intérêt public à propos de ses lignes directrices ou de permis sans avoir le statut de créancier. Comme je l'ai expliqué, l'arrêt Abitibi accorde clairement une place aux organismes de réglementation qui ne sont pas des créanciers.

[137] Cela suffit, à proprement parler, pour trancher cet aspect du pourvoi. Cependant, d'autres indications sur l'analyse de la certitude suffisante pourraient se révéler utiles à l'avenir. En conséquence, je passe maintenant à l'analyse de l'étape of the reasons why the Abandonment Orders and the LMR conditions both fail on this step of the Abitibi test. Abitibi test.

(2) There Is No Sufficient Certainty That the Regulator Will Perform the Environmental Work and Advance a Claim for Reimbursement

[138] The "sufficient certainty" test articulated in paras. 30 and 36 in Abitibi essentially does no more than reorganize and restate the requirements of the relevant provisions of the BIA. Section 121(2) provides that contingent claims may be provable claims. In other words, contingent debts or liabilities owed by a bankrupt to a creditor may be, but are not necessarily, provable claims. Section 135(1.1) provides for the valuation of such a claim. A contingent claim must be capable of valuation under s. 135(1.1) — it cannot be too remote or speculative — in order to be a provable claim under s. 121(2).

[139] Before the third step of the Abitibi test can even be reached, a regulator must already have been shown to be a creditor. I have concluded that, on the facts of this case, the Regulator is not a creditor of Redwater. However, for the purpose of explaining how I differ from the chambers judge on the "sufficient certainty" analysis, I will proceed as if the Regulator were, in fact, a creditor of Redwater in respect of the Abandonment Orders and LMR requirements. These end-of-life obligations do not directly require Redwater to make a payment to the Regulator. Rather, they are obligations requiring Redwater to do something. As discussed in Abitibi, if the Regulator were in fact a creditor, end-of-life obligations would be its contingent claims.

[140] What a court must determine is whether there are sufficient facts indicating the existence of an environmental duty that will ripen into a financial liability owed to a regulator. In determining whether de la « certitude suffisante » et des raisons pour lesquelles les ordonnances d'abandon et les conditions liées à la CGR ne franchissent pas cette étape du critère d'Abitibi.

(2) Il n'est pas suffisamment certain que l'organisme de réglementation exécutera les travaux environnementaux et présentera une demande de remboursement

[138] Le critère de la « certitude suffisante » énoncé aux par. 30 et 36 de l'arrêt Abitibi ne fait essentiellement que restructurer et reformuler les exigences des dispositions applicables de la LFI. Selon le par. 121(2), des réclamations éventuelles peuvent constituer des réclamations prouvables. Autrement dit, les dettes que devra peut-être le failli à un créancier peuvent constituer des réclamations prouvables, mais pas nécessairement l'être. Le paragraphe 135(1.1) prévoit l'évaluation d'une réclamation éventuelle, qui doit être évaluable suivant cette disposition; elle ne doit pas être trop éloignée ou conjecturale pour constituer une réclamation prouvable au sens du par. 121(2).

[139] Avant de pouvoir atteindre la troisième étape du critère d'Abitibi, il faut déjà avoir fait la démonstration que l'organisme de réglementation est un créancier. Au vu des faits de l'espèce, j'ai conclu que l'organisme de réglementation n'est pas un créancier de Redwater. Toutefois, afin d'expliquer pourquoi je me dissocie du juge siégeant au cabinet à l'égard de l'analyse de la « certitude suffisante », je vais procéder comme si l'organisme de réglementation était effectivement un créancier de Redwater en ce qui concerne les ordonnances d'abandon et les exigences de la CGR. Ces obligations de fin de vie n'exigent pas directement de Redwater qu'elle fasse un paiement à l'organisme de réglementation. Elles l'obligent plutôt à faire quelque chose. Comme l'indique l'arrêt Abitibi, si l'organisme de réglementation était en fait un créancier, les obligations de fin de vie constitueraient ses réclamations éventuelles.

[140] Ce que le tribunal doit décider, c'est s'il y a suffisamment de faits indiquant qu'il existe une obligation environnementale de laquelle résultera une dette envers un organisme de réglementation.

a non-monetary regulatory obligation of a bankrupt is too remote or too speculative to be included in the bankruptcy proceeding, the court must apply the general rules that apply to future or contingent claims. It must be sufficiently certain that the contingency will come to pass — in other words, that the regulator will enforce the obligation by performing the environmental work and seeking reimbursement.

[141] I will now discuss the Abandonment Orders and the LMR requirements in turn and demonstrate how they fail to satisfy the "sufficient certainty" step of the Abitibi test.

(a) The Abandonment Orders

[142] The Regulator has issued orders under the OGCA and the Pipeline Act requiring Redwater to abandon the Renounced Assets. Even if the Regulator were a creditor of Redwater, the Abandonment Orders would still have to be capable of valuation in order to be included in the bankruptcy process. In my view, it is not established either by the chambers judge's factual findings or by the evidence that it is sufficiently certain that the Regulator will perform the abandonments and advance a claim for reimbursement. The claim is too remote and speculative to be included in the bankruptcy process.

[143] The chambers judge acknowledged that it was "unclear" whether the Regulator would perform the abandonments itself or would deem the wells subject to the Abandonment Orders to be orphans (para. 173). He stated that, in the latter case, the OWA would probably carry out the abandonments, although it was not clear when they would be completed. Indeed, the chambers judge acknowledged that, given the OWA's resources, it could take as long as 10 years for it to get around to performing the required environmental work on the Redwater property. He nonetheless concluded that — even though the "sufficient certainty" step was not satisfied in a

Pour établir si une obligation réglementaire non pécuniaire du failli est trop éloignée ou trop conjecturale pour être incluse dans la procédure de faillite, le tribunal doit appliquer les règles générales qui visent les réclamations futures ou éventuelles. Il doit être suffisamment certain que l'éventualité se concrétisera ou, en d'autres termes, que l'organisme de réglementation fera respecter l'obligation en exécutant les travaux environnementaux et en sollicitant le remboursement de ses frais.

[141] Je vais maintenant analyser les ordonnances d'abandon de même que les exigences relatives à la CGR à tour de rôle et démontrer en quoi elles ne franchissent pas l'étape de la « certitude suffisante » du critère d'Abitibi.

a) Les ordonnances d'abandon

[142] L'organisme de réglementation a rendu, au titre de l'OGCA et de la Pipeline Act, des ordonnances enjoignant à Redwater d'abandonner les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. Même si l'organisme de réglementation était un créancier de Redwater, les ordonnances d'abandon doivent tout de même pouvoir faire l'objet d'une évaluation pour être incluses dans le processus de faillite. À mon avis, ni les conclusions de fait du juge siégeant en cabinet ni la preuve n'établissent qu'il est suffisamment certain que l'organisme de réglementation procédera à l'abandon et présentera une demande de remboursement. La réclamation est trop éloignée et conjecturale pour être incluse dans la procédure de faillite.

[143] Le juge siégeant en cabinet a reconnu qu'il n'était [TRADUCTION] « pas clair » si l'organisme de réglementation effectuerait lui-même le processus d'abandon ou s'il considérerait les puits assujettis aux ordonnances d'abandon comme orphelins (par. 173). Il a dit que, dans ce dernier cas, l'OWA se chargerait probablement de l'abandon, mais on ne savait pas quand cette tâche serait menée à terme. En effet, le juge siégeant en cabinet a admis qu'étant donné les ressources de l'OWA, cela pourrait lui prendre jusqu'à 10 ans avant qu'elle amorce les travaux environnementaux nécessaires sur la propriété de Redwater. Il a conclu néanmoins que, même

"technical sense" — the situation met what had been intended in Abitibi. That conclusion was at least partly based on his finding that the Abandonment Orders were "intrinsically financial" (para. 173).

si l'étape de la « certitude suffisante » n'a pas été franchie au « sens technique », la situation répondait à la norme voulue dans Abitibi. Cette conclusion reposait, du moins en partie, sur la sienne voulant que les ordonnances d'abandon soient « intrinsèquement financières » (par. 173).

[144] In my view, the chambers judge did not make a finding of fact that the Regulator would carry out the abandonments itself. As noted, he acknowledged that it was "unclear" whether the Regulator would perform the abandonments. This can hardly be deemed a finding of fact deserving of deference. In my view, considered as a whole, the evidence in this case leads to the conclusion that the Regulator will not abandon the Renounced Assets itself.

[144] À mon avis, le juge siégeant en cabinet n'a pas tiré la conclusion de fait que l'organisme de réglementation se chargerait lui-même des travaux d'abandon. Je le rappelle, il a reconnu qu'il n'était « pas clair » si l'organisme de réglementation s'en occuperait. On peut difficilement dire qu'il s'agit qu'une conclusion de fait qui commande la déférence. Prise dans son ensemble, la preuve en l'espèce me semble mener à la conclusion selon laquelle l'organisme de réglementation ne procèdera pas lui-même à l'abandon des biens auxquels il a été renoncé.

[145] The Regulator is not in the business of performing abandonments. It has no statutory duty to do so. Abandonment is instead an obligation of the licensee. The evidence of the Regulator's affiant was that the Regulator very rarely abandons properties on behalf of licensees and virtually never does so where the licensee is in receivership or bankruptcy. The affiant stated that the Regulator had no intention of abandoning Redwater's licensed assets. As noted by the chambers judge, it is true that, in its letter to GTL dated July 15, 2015, the Regulator threatened to perform the abandonments itself, but the Regulator subsequently took no steps to follow up on that threat. Even if this letter should be accorded any weight, the contradiction between it and the Regulator's subsequent affidavits at the very least makes it difficult to say with anything approaching sufficient certainty that the Regulator intends to carry out the abandonments. These facts distinguish this case from Abitibi, in which the restructuring judge's findings were based on the premise that the province would most likely perform the remediation work itself.

[145] Dans le cadre de ses activités, l'organisme de réglementation n'effectue pas lui-même les travaux d'abandon. Il n'est pas tenu par la loi de le faire. Il s'agit plutôt d'une obligation incombant au titulaire de permis. Dans son affidavit, le déposant de l'organisme de réglementation a déclaré que celui-ci procédait très rarement à l'abandon de biens au nom des titulaires de permis et qu'il ne le faisait pratiquement jamais dans le cas d'un titulaire de permis sous séquestre ou en faillite. Le déposant a déclaré que l'organisme de réglementation n'avait pas l'intention d'abandonner les biens de Redwater visés par des permis. Comme l'a signalé le juge siégeant en cabinet, il est vrai que, dans sa lettre adressée à GTL en date du 15 juillet 2015, l'organisme de réglementation a menacé d'effectuer lui-même ces processus, mais il n'a rien fait par la suite pour mettre cette menace à exécution. Même si l'on devrait accorder de l'importance à cette lettre, la contradiction entre elle et les affidavits subséquents de l'organisme de réglementation font en sorte à tout le moins qu'il est difficile de dire avec quoi que ce soit de comparable à une certitude suffisante que l'organisme de réglementation compte effectuer le processus d'abandon. Ces faits distinguent la présente affaire d'Abitibi, où les conclusions du juge chargé de la restructuration reposaient sur la prémisse que la province exécuterait fort probablement elle-même les travaux de décontamination.

[146] Below, I will explain why the OWA's involvement is insufficient to satisfy the "sufficient certainty" test. First, I note that any reliance the chambers judge placed on the intrinsically financial nature of the Abandonment Orders was an error. In this regard, I am in complete agreement with Martin J.A. Considering whether an order is intrinsically financial is an erroneous interpretation of the third step of the Abitibi test. It is too broad and would result in a provable claim being found even where the existence of a monetary claim in bankruptcy is merely speculative. Thus, in Nortel CA, Juriansz J.A. rightly rejected the argument that the Abitibi test did not require a determination that the regulator would perform the environmental work and claim reimbursement, and that it was sufficient for there to be an environmental order requiring an expenditure of funds by the bankrupt estate. He held the following, at paras. 31-32:

. . . As I read it, the Supreme Court's decision is clear: ongoing environmental remediation obligations may be reduced to monetary claims that can be compromised in CCAA proceedings only where the province has performed the remediation work and advances a claim for reimbursement, or where the obligation may be considered a contingent or future claim because it is "sufficiently certain" that the province will do the work and then seek reimbursement.

The respondents' approach is not only inconsistent with AbitibiBowater Inc., Re, it is too broad. It would result in virtually all regulatory environmental orders being found to be provable claims. As Deschamps J. observed, a company may engage in activities that carry risks. When those risks materialize, the costs are borne by those who hold a stake in the company. A risk that results in an environmental obligation becomes subject to the insolvency process only when it is in substance monetary and is in substance a provable claim.

[146] J'expliquerai ci-après pourquoi l'intervention de l'OWA est insuffisante pour satisfaire au critère de la « certitude suffisante ». Premièrement, je constate que le juge siégeant en cabinet a eu tort de tabler sur le caractère « intrinsèquement financier » des ordonnances d'abandon. Je suis entièrement d'accord avec la juge Martin sur ce point. Se demander si une ordonnance est « intrinsèquement financière » constitue une interprétation erronée de la troisième étape du critère d'Abitibi. Elle est trop large et conduirait à la conclusion qu'il y a une « réclamation prouvable » même lorsque l'existence d'une réclamation pécuniaire en matière de faillite ne relève que de la conjecture. Ainsi, dans l'arrêt Nortel CA, le juge Juriansz a rejeté à juste titre l'argument selon lequel le critère d'Abitibi n'exigeait pas qu'il soit décidé que l'organisme de réglementation exécuterait les travaux environnementaux et demanderait un remboursement, et qu'il suffisait qu'il y ait une ordonnance environnementale exigeant une dépense de fonds par l'actif du failli. Il a déclaré ce qui suit, aux par. 31-32 :

[TRADUCTION] . . . Selon moi, la décision de la Cour suprême est claire : les obligations continues de décontamination environnementale peuvent être réduites à des réclamations pécuniaires pouvant être compromises dans des procédures fondées sur la LACC seulement lorsque la Province a exécuté les travaux de décontamination et qu'elle présente une demande de remboursement, ou lorsque l'obligation peut être considérée comme une réclamation éventuelle ou future, parce qu'il est « suffisamment certain » que la Province fera le travail et cherchera ensuite à obtenir un remboursement.

L'approche des intimées n'est pas seulement incompatible avec celle de l'arrêt Abitibi, elle est trop large. Il en résulterait que pratiquement toutes les ordonnances réglementaires en matière d'environnement soient considérées comme des réclamations prouvables. Comme l'a fait remarquer la juge Deschamps, une société peut exercer des activités qui comportent des risques. Lorsque ces risques se matérialisent, les coûts sont supportés par ceux qui détiennent une participation dans la société. Un risque qui entraîne une obligation environnementale n'est soumis au processus d'insolvabilité que lorsqu'il est en substance pécuniaire et qu'il constitue en substance une réclamation prouvable.

[147] As the chambers judge correctly acknowledged, the fact that the Regulator would not conduct the abandonments itself does not mean that it would wash its hands of the Renounced Assets. Rather, if necessary, it would designate them as orphans pursuant to the OGCA and leave them for the OWA. I am not suggesting that a regulator can strategically avoid the "sufficient certainty" test simply by delegating environmental work to an arm's length organization. I would not decide, as the Regulator urges, that the Abitibi test always requires that the environmental work be performed by the regulator itself. However, the OWA's true nature must be emphasized. There are strong grounds to conclude that, given the particular features of this regulatory context, the OWA is not the regulator.

[148] The creation of the OWA was not an attempt by the Regulator to avoid the BIA order of priorities in bankruptcy. It is a non-profit organization with its own mandate and independent board of directors, and it operates as a financially independent entity pursuant to legally delegated authority. Although the OWA's board includes a representative of the Regulator and a representative of Alberta Environment and Parks, its independence is not in question. The OWA's 2014-2015 annual report indicates that five out of six voting directors represent industry. The OWA uses a risk assessment tool to prioritize when and how it will perform environmental work on the many hundreds of orphans in Alberta. There is no suggestion that the Regulator has any say in the order in which the OWA chooses to perform environmental work. The 2014-2015 annual report also states that, since 1992, 87 percent of the money collected and invested to fund OWA activities has been provided by industry via the orphan levy. The Regulator, at para. 99 of its factum, hints obliquely that additional provincial or federal funding may be forthcoming in the future, but even if it materializes, it will be almost entirely in the form of loans. I cannot accept the suggestion in the dissenting reasons

[147] Comme l'a reconnu à bon droit le juge siégeant en cabinet, ce n'est pas parce que l'organisme de réglementation n'effectuerait pas lui-même les travaux d'abandon qu'il se laverait les mains des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. Il les qualifierait plutôt, au besoin, d'orphelins conformément à l'OGCA et les confiera à l'OWA. Je ne prétends pas qu'un organisme de réglementation puisse stratégiquement éviter le critère de la « certitude suffisante » en déléguant simplement des travaux environnementaux à une organisation indépendante. Je ne déciderai pas, comme l'organisme de réglementation nous a exhortés à le faire, que le critère d'Abitibi exige toujours que les travaux environnementaux soient exécutés par l'organisme lui-même. Cependant, la véritable nature de l'OWA doit être soulignée. Il y a des motifs sérieux de conclure que, vu les caractéristiques propres à ce contexte réglementaire, l'OWA n'est pas l'organisme de réglementation.

[148] La création de l'OWA ne représentait pas une tentative de l'organisme de réglementation pour éviter l'ordre de priorité fixé en matière de faillite par la LFI. C'est un organisme sans but lucratif doté de son propre mandat et de son propre conseil d'administration indépendant, et il fonctionne comme une entité financièrement indépendante en vertu du pouvoir qui lui est délégué par la loi. Bien qu'un représentant de l'organisme de réglementation et un représentant d'Alberta Environment and Parks siègent au conseil d'administration de l'OWA, son indépendance n'est pas mise en question. Le rapport annuel 2014-2015 de l'OWA indique que cinq des six directeurs votants représentent l'industrie. L'OWA se sert d'un outil d'évaluation des risques pour décider, en ordre de priorité, quand et de quelle manière elle exécutera des travaux environnementaux sur les centaines de puits orphelins de l'Alberta. Personne ne prétend que l'organisme de réglementation a son mot à dire sur l'ordre dans lequel l'OWA décide d'exécuter des travaux environnementaux. Le rapport annuel 2014-2015 ajoute que, depuis 1992, 87 p. 100 de l'argent recueilli et investi pour financer les activités de l'OWA est fourni par l'industrie via la redevance pour les puits orphelins. Au paragraphe 99 de son mémoire, l'organisme de réglementation laisse that the Regulator and the OWA are "inextricably intertwined" (para. 273).

[149] Even assuming that the OWA's abandonment of Redwater's licensed assets could satisfy the "sufficient certainty" test, I agree with Martin J.A. that it is difficult to conclude that there is sufficient certainty that the OWA will in fact perform the abandonments. I also agree with her view that there is no certainty that a claim for reimbursement will be advanced should the OWA ultimately abandon the assets.

[150] The dissenting reasons suggest that the facts of this appeal are more akin to those of Northstar Aerospace Inc., Re, 2013 ONCA 600, 8 C.B.R. (6th) 154, than to those of Nortel CA, arguing that the "sufficient certainty" test is satisfied because, as in Northstar, there is no purchaser to take on Redwater's assets and the debtor itself is insolvent, so only the OWA can perform the work. In my view, Northstar is easily distinguishable. In that case, the bankrupt had been voluntarily carrying out remediation prior to its bankruptcy. After it made its assignment into bankruptcy, the Ministry of the Environment ("MOE") took over the remediation activities itself, purporting to do so on a without prejudice basis. Jurianz J.A. found that the fact that the MOE had already undertaken remediation activities made it sufficiently certain that it would do so. As I will now demonstrate, the facts here are very different.

[151] At the beginning of this litigation, the OWA estimated that it would take 10 to 12 years to get through the backlog of orphans. By 2015, that backlog was increasing rapidly, and it may well have continued to increase at the same or an even greater speed in the intervening years, as submitted by the Regulator. If anything, this suggests the possibility of an even larger backlog. There is no indication that entendre indirectement que la province ou le gouvernement fédéral pourrait accorder à l'avenir des fonds supplémentaires à l'OWA mais, même si cette possibilité se concrétise, les fonds seront presque entièrement consentis sous forme de prêts. Je ne peux accepter la proposition des juges dissidents selon laquelle l'organisme de réglementation et l'OWA sont « inextricablement liés » (par. 273).

[149] À supposer même que l'abandon par l'OWA des biens de Redwater visés par des permis puisse satisfaire au critère de la « certitude suffisante », je conviens avec la juge Martin qu'il est difficile de conclure à la certitude suffisante que l'OWA se chargera effectivement des travaux d'abandon et qu'il n'y a aucune certitude qu'une demande de remboursement sera présentée si l'OWA finit par abandonner les biens.

[150] Les motifs dissidents laissent croire que les faits de l'espèce s'apparentent davantage à ceux de l'affaire Northstar Aerospace Inc., Re, 2013 ONCA 600, 8 C.B.R. (6th) 154, qu'à ceux de Nortel CA, faisant valoir qu'il est satisfait au critère de la « certitude suffisante » car, tout comme dans Northstar, personne ne veut acheter les biens de Redwater et la débitrice elle-même est insolvable; en conséquence, seule l'OWA peut exécuter les travaux. Il me semble facile de distinguer l'affaire Northstar de celle qui nous occupe. Dans cette affaire, le failli effectuait de son plein gré des travaux de décontamination avant sa faillite. Après que le failli eu fait cession de ses biens, le ministre de l'Environnement (« ME ») a pris lui-même la relève des activités de décontamination et il entendait le faire sans préjudice. Selon le juge Jurianz, comme le ME avait déjà entrepris des activités de décontamination, il était suffisamment certain qu'il s'en occuperait. Comme je le démontrerai maintenant, les faits de l'espèce sont fort différents.

[151] Au début du présent litige, l'OWA a estimé qu'il lui faudrait de 10 à 12 ans pour résorber l'arriéré d'orphelins. Cet arriéré augmentait rapidement en 2015 et il peut fort bien avoir continué de croître tout aussi ou encore plus rapidement au cours des années suivantes, comme le soutient l'organisme de réglementation. Cela tend plutôt à établir que l'arriéré pourrait encore augmenter. Rien n'indique the Renounced Assets would have a particularly high priority in the backlog. Even if the potential additional funding materializes, the Regulator submits that it will be a generation or more before the OWA can address its existing inventory of orphans.

[152] The dissenting reasons rely on the chambers judge's conclusion that the OWA would "probably" perform the abandonments eventually, while downplaying the fact that he also concluded that this would not "necessarily [occur] within a definite timeframe" (paras. 261 and 278, citing the chambers judge's reasons, at para. 173). Given the most conservative timeline — the 10 years discussed by the chambers judge — it is difficult to predict anything occurring with sufficient certainty. Much could change within the next decade, both in terms of government policy and in terms of the willingness of those in the Alberta oil and gas industry to discharge environmental liabilities. This is not at all the same situation as in Northstar, in which the MOE had already commenced environmental work.

[153] Perhaps more to the point, this lengthy timeline means that, should it ultimately perform the work, the OWA will not advance a claim for reimbursement. Advancement of a claim is an element of the test that is just as essential as performance of the work. The OWA itself has no ability to seek reimbursement of its costs from licensees and, although the costs of abandonment carried out by a person authorized by the Regulator constitute a debt payable to the Regulator under s. 30(5) of the OGCA, no evidence has been adduced that the Regulator has exercised its power to recover such costs in comparable cases. There is a good reason for this: the reality is that, by the time the OWA got around to abandoning any of Redwater's wells, the estate would be finalized and GTL long since discharged. In sum, the chambers judge erred in failing to consider whether the OWA can be treated as the regulator and in failing to appreciate that, even if it can, it is not sufficiently certain that the OWA will qu'une priorité particulièrement grande serait accordée dans l'arriéré aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. Même si la possibilité d'attribuer des fonds supplémentaires se concrétise, l'organisme de réglementation fait valoir que cela prendra une génération ou plus avant que l'OWA ne puisse s'occuper de son inventaire actuel d'orphelins.

[152] Les motifs dissidents se fondent sur la conclusion du juge siégeant en cabinet selon laquelle l'OWA effectuerait « probablement » le processus d'abandon, tout en minimisant le fait qu'il a également conclu que l'OWA ne le ferait pas « nécessairement dans un délai précis » (par. 261 et 278, citant les motifs du juge siégeant en cabinet, par. 173). Vu l'échéancier le plus conservateur — celui de 10 ans dont a parlé le juge siégeant en cabinet —, il est difficile de prédire quoi que ce soit avec une certitude suffisante. La donne pourrait changer considérablement au cours de la prochaine décennie, tant au chapitre de la politique gouvernementale qu'à celui de la volonté de l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de l'Alberta de s'acquitter de ses responsabilités environnementales. Il ne s'agit pas du tout de la même situation que dans Northstar, où le ME avait déjà amorcé les travaux environnementaux.

[153] Plus particulièrement, ce long échéancier garantit que, s'il finit par exécuter les travaux, l'OWA ne présentera pas de demande de remboursement. La présentation de la demande est un élément tout aussi essentiel du critère que l'exécution des travaux. L'OWA lui-même ne peut faire rembourser ses frais par les titulaires de permis et, même si les coûts des processus d'abandon effectués par la personne autorisée par l'organisme de réglementation constituent une dette payable à cet organisme suivant le par. 30(5) de l'OGCA, on n'a produit aucune preuve montrant que l'organisme de réglementation a exercé son pouvoir de recouvrer ces frais dans des cas analogues, et pour cause : le fait est qu'au moment où l'OWA en arriverait à abandonner l'un ou l'autre des puits de Redwater, la liquidation de l'actif serait terminée et GTL serait libéré depuis longtemps. En somme, le juge siégeant en cabinet a eu tort de ne pas se demander si l'OWA peut être assimilé à l'organisme de réglementation et en ne in fact perform the abandonments and advance a claim for reimbursement.

[154] Accordingly, even if the Regulator had acted as a creditor in issuing the Abandonment Orders, it cannot be said with sufficient certainty that it would perform the abandonments and advance a claim for reimbursement.

(b) The Conditions for the Transfer of Licenses

[155] I will deal briefly with the LMR conditions for the transfer of licences. Much of the foregoing analysis with regard to the Abandonment Orders also applies to these conditions. As noted by Martin J.A., the requirement of regulatory approval for licence transfers is difficult to compare directly with the remediation orders at issue in Abitibi. However, this Court confirmed that the Abitibi test applies to a class of regulatory obligations that is broader than "orders" in Moloney, at paras. 54-55. The LMR conditions are a "non-monetary obligation" for the Redwater estate, since they must be satisfied before the Regulator will approve the transfer of any of Redwater's licences. However, it is notable that, even apart from the LMR conditions, licences are far from freely transferrable. The Regulator will not approve the transfer of licences where the transferee is not a licensee under the OGCA, the Pipeline Act, or both. The Regulator also reserves the right to reject a proposed transfer where it determines that the transfer is not in the public interest, such as where the transferee has outstanding compliance issues.

[156] In a sense, the factors suggesting an absence of sufficient certainty are even stronger for the LMR requirements than for the Abandonment Orders. There is a debt enforcement scheme under the OGCA and the Pipeline Act in respect of abandonment, but considérant pas que, même s'il peut l'être, il n'est pas suffisamment certain qu'il effectuera dans les faits le processus d'abandon et présentera une demande de remboursement.

[154] En conséquence, même si l'organisme de réglementation avait agi comme un créancier en rendant les ordonnances, on ne saurait dire avec une certitude suffisante qu'il effectuerait les processus d'abandon et présenterait une demande de remboursement.

b) Les conditions liées au transfert de permis

[155] Je traiterai brièvement des conditions relatives à la CGR dont est assorti le transfert de permis. Une grande partie de l'analyse qui précède concernant les ordonnances d'abandon vaut tout autant pour ces conditions. Comme l'a souligné la juge Martin, il est difficile de comparer directement la nécessité d'obtenir une approbation réglementaire pour les transferts de permis et les ordonnances de décontamination en litige dans Abitibi. Or, notre Cour a confirmé aux par. 54-55 de Moloney que le critère d'Abitibi s'applique à une catégorie d'obligations réglementaires plus large que les « ordonnances ». Les conditions relatives à la CGR forment une « obligation non pécuniaire » de l'actif de Redwater, car elles doivent être remplies avant que l'organisme de réglementation n'approuve le transfert de tout permis de Redwater. Cependant, il convient de noter que, même mises à part les conditions relatives à la CGR, les permis sont loin d'être librement transférables. L'organisme n'approuvera pas le transfert des permis si le cessionnaire n'est pas un titulaire de permis au sens de l'OGCA ou de la Pipeline Act ou des deux. L'organisme de réglementation se réserve également le droit de rejeter un transfert proposé lorsqu'il juge que le transfert n'est pas dans l'intérêt public, comme dans un cas où le cessionnaire a des problèmes non résolus touchant à la conformité.

[156] En un sens, les facteurs laissant croire qu'il n'y a pas de certitude suffisante militent encore plus fortement en faveur des exigences relatives à la CGR que des ordonnances d'abandon. L'OGCA et la Pipeline Act prévoient un régime de recouvrement there is no such scheme for the LMR requirements. The Regulator's refusal to approve licence transfers unless and until the LMR requirements have been satisfied does not give it a monetary claim against Redwater. It is true that compliance with the LMR requirements results in a reduction in the value of the bankrupt estate. However, as discussed earlier, not every obligation that diminishes the value of the bankrupt estate, and therefore the amount available to secured creditors, satisfies the "sufficient certainty" step. The question is not whether an obligation is intrinsically financial.

[157] Compliance with the LMR conditions prior to the transfer of licences reflects the inherent value of the assets held by the bankrupt estate. Without licences, Redwater's profits à prendre are of limited value at best. All licences held by Redwater were received by it subject to the end-of-life obligations that would one day arise. These end-of-life obligations form a fundamental part of the value of the licensed assets, the same as if the associated costs had been paid up front. Having received the benefit of the Renounced Assets during the productive period of their life cycles, Redwater cannot now avoid the associated liabilities. This understanding is consistent with Daishowa-Marubeni International Ltd. v. Canada, 2013 SCC 29, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 336, which dealt with the statutory reforestation obligations of holders of forest tenures in Alberta. This Court unanimously held that the reforestation obligations were "a future cost embedded in the forest tenure that serves to depress the tenure's value at the time of sale" (para. 29).

[158] The fact that regulatory requirements may cost money does not transform them into debt collection schemes. As noted by Martin J.A., licensing requirements predate bankruptcy and apply to all licensees regardless of solvency. GTL does not dispute the fact that Redwater's licences can be transferred only to other licensees nor that the Regulator retains the authority in appropriate situations to de créances en matière d'abandon, mais il n'existe aucun régime de ce genre pour les exigences liées à la CGR. Le refus de l'organisme de réglementation d'approuver les transferts de permis jusqu'à ce que ces exigences aient été satisfaites ne lui donne pas une réclamation pécuniaire contre Redwater. Certes, le respect des exigences relatives à la CGR entraîne une diminution de la valeur de l'actif du failli. Toutefois, comme nous l'avons vu plus tôt, toute obligation qui diminue la valeur de l'actif du failli, et donc la somme que peuvent recouvrer les créanciers garantis, ne franchit pas nécessairement l'étape de la « certitude suffisante ». Il ne s'agit pas de savoir si une obligation est intrinsèquement financière.

[157] Le respect des conditions liées à la CGR avant le transfert des permis reflète la valeur inhérente des biens détenus par l'actif du failli. Sans les permis, les profits à prendre appartenant à Redwater ont, au mieux, peu de valeur. Tous les permis détenus par Redwater ont été reçus par elle, sous réserve d'obligations de fin de vie qui prendraient naissance un jour. Ces obligations constituent une part fondamentale de la valeur des biens visés par des permis, comme si les frais connexes avaient été payés d'emblée. Ayant reçu le bénéfice des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation pendant la période productive de leur cycle de vie, Redwater ne peut plus éviter les engagements connexes. Cette interprétation concorde avec l'arrêt Daishowa-Marubeni International Ltd. c. Canada, 2013 CSC 29, [2013] 2 R.C.S. 336, qui portait sur les obligations légales de reboisement des détenteurs de tenures forestières en Alberta. Notre Cour a conclu à l'unanimité que les obligations relatives au reboisement constituaient « un coût futur inhérent à la tenure forestière qui a pour effet d'en diminuer la valeur au moment de la vente » (par. 29).

[158] La possibilité que des exigences réglementaires coûtent de l'argent ne les transforme pas en régimes de recouvrement de créances. Comme l'a fait remarquer la juge Martin, les exigences en matière de permis précèdent la faillite et s'appliquent à tous les titulaires de permis, peu importe leur solvabilité. GTL ne conteste pas le fait que les permis de Redwater ne peuvent être transférés qu'à reject proposed transfers due to safety or compliance concerns. There is no difference between such conditions and the condition that the Regulator will not approve transfers where they would leave the requirement to satisfy end-of-life obligations unaddressed. All these regulatory conditions depress the value of the licensed assets. None of them creates a monetary claim in the Regulator's favour. Licensing requirements continue to exist during bankruptcy, and there is no reason why GTL cannot comply with them.

(3) Conclusion on the Abitibi test

[159] Accordingly, the end-of-life obligations binding on GTL are not claims provable in the Redwater bankruptcy, so they do not conflict with the general priority scheme in the BIA. This is not a mere matter of form, but of substance. Requiring Redwater to pay for abandonment before distributing value to creditors does not disrupt the priority scheme of the BIA. In crafting the priority scheme set out in the BIA, Parliament intended to permit regulators to place a first charge on real property of a bankrupt affected by an environmental condition or damage in order to fund remediation (see s. 14.06(7)). Thus, the BIA explicitly contemplates that environmental regulators will extract value from the bankrupt's real property if that property is affected by an environmental condition or damage. Although the nature of property ownership in the Alberta oil and gas industry meant that s. 14.06(7) was unavailable to the Regulator, the Abandonment Orders and the LMR replicate s. 14.06(7)'s effect in this case. Furthermore, it is important to note that Redwater's only substantial assets were affected by an environmental condition or damage. Accordingly, the Abandonment Orders and LMR requirements did not seek to force Redwater to fulfill end-of-life obligations with assets unrelated to the environmental condition or damage. In other words, recognizing that the Abandonment Orders and LMR requirements are not provable claims d'autres titulaires de permis, ni le fait que l'organisme de réglementation conserve le pouvoir, dans les situations qui s'y prêtent, de rejeter les transferts proposés en raison de préoccupations relatives à la sécurité ou à la conformité. Il n'y a aucune différence entre ces conditions et celle voulant que l'organisme de réglementation n'approuve pas les transferts qui laisseraient en suspens l'exigence de satisfaire aux obligations de fin de vie. Toutes ces conditions réglementaires font baisser la valeur des biens visés par des permis. Aucune ne donne naissance à une réclamation pécuniaire en faveur de l'organisme de réglementation. Les exigences en matière de permis subsistent pendant la faillite, et il n'y a aucune raison pour laquelle GTL ne peut s'y conformer.

(3) Conclusion sur le critère d'Abitibi

[159] En conséquence, les obligations de fin de vie incombant à GTL ne sont pas des réclamations prouvables dans la faillite de Redwater et n'entrent donc pas en conflit avec le régime de priorité général instauré dans la LFI. Ce n'est pas une simple question de forme, mais de fond. Obliger Redwater à payer l'abandon avant de répartir la valeur entre les créanciers ne perturbe pas le régime de priorité établi dans la LFI. Au moment d'élaborer ce régime, le Parlement voulait permettre aux organismes de réglementation d'imposer une charge prioritaire sur le bien réel du failli touché par un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement en vue de financer la décontamination (voir le par. 14.06(7)). Ainsi, la LFI envisage explicitement la possibilité que des organismes de réglementation tire une valeur des biens réels du failli touchés par un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement. Bien que l'organisme de réglementation n'ait pu se prévaloir du par. 14.06(7), compte tenu de la nature de la propriété des biens dans l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de l'Alberta, les ordonnances d'abandon et la CGR reproduisent l'effet du par. 14.06(7) en l'espèce. De plus, il importe de souligner que les seuls biens de valeur de Redwater étaient touchés par un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement. Les ordonnances d'abandon et exigences relatives à la CGR n'avaient donc pas pour objet de forcer Redwater à s'acquitter des obligations de fin de vie avec des biens étrangers au fait in this case does not interfere with the aims of the BIA — rather, it facilitates them.

[160] Bankruptcy is not a licence to ignore rules, and insolvency professionals are bound by and must comply with valid provincial laws during bankruptcy. They must, for example, comply with non-monetary obligations that are binding on the bankrupt estate, that cannot be reduced to provable claims, and the effects of which do not conflict with the BIA, notwithstanding the consequences this may have for the bankrupt's secured creditors. The Abandonment Orders and the LMR requirements are based on valid provincial laws of general application — exactly the kind of valid provincial laws upon which the BIA is built. As noted in Moloney, the BIA is clear that "[t]he ownership of certain assets and the existence of particular liabilities depend upon provincial law" (para. 40). End-of-life obligations are imposed by valid provincial laws which define the contours of the bankrupt estate available for distribution.

[161] Finally, as noted earlier, the BIA's general purpose of facilitating financial rehabilitation is not relevant for a corporation such as Redwater. Corporations with insufficient assets to satisfy their creditors will never be discharged from bankruptcy because they cannot satisfy all their creditors' claims in full (BIA, s. 169(4)). Thus, no conflict with this purpose is caused by the conclusion that the end-of-life obligations binding Redwater are not provable claims.

IV. Conclusion

[162] There is no conflict between Alberta's regulatory regime and the BIA requiring portions of the former to be rendered inoperative in the context of bankruptcy. Although GTL remains fully protected from personal liability by federal law, it cannot walk away from the environmental liabilities of the bankrupt estate by invoking s. 14.06(4). On a ou dommage lié à l'environnement. Autrement dit, la reconnaissance que les ordonnances d'abandon et exigences relatives à la CGR ne sont pas des réclamations prouvables en l'espèce facilite l'atteinte des objets de la LFI au lieu de la contrecarrer.

[160] La faillite n'est pas un permis de faire abstraction des règles, et les professionnels de l'insolvabilité sont liés par les lois provinciales valides au cours de la faillite. À titre d'exemple, ils doivent respecter les obligations non pécuniaires liant l'actif du failli qui ne peuvent être réduites à des réclamations prouvables et dont les effets n'entrent pas en conflit avec la LFI, sans égard aux répercussions que cela peut avoir sur les créanciers garantis du failli. Les ordonnances d'abandon et exigences relatives à la CGR reposent sur des lois provinciales valides d'application générale et elles représentent exactement le genre de loi provinciale valide sur lequel se fonde la LFI. Tel qu'il est signalé dans Moloney, la LFI indique clairement que « [l]a propriété de certains biens et l'existence de dettes particulières relèvent du droit provincial » (par. 40). Les obligations de fin de vie sont imposées par des lois provinciales valides qui définissent les contours de l'actif du failli susceptible d'être partagé.

[161] Enfin, rappelons que l'objet général de la LFI de favoriser la réhabilitation financière ne concerne pas une société comme Redwater. Les sociétés n'ayant pas assez de biens pour satisfaire leurs créanciers ne seront jamais libérées de leur faillite puisqu'elles ne peuvent acquitter entièrement toutes les réclamations de leurs créanciers (LFI, par. 169(4)). Ainsi, la conclusion selon laquelle les obligations de fin de vie incombant à Redwater ne sont pas des réclamations prouvables n'est à l'origine d'aucun conflit avec cet objet.

IV. Conclusion

[162] Il n'y a aucun conflit entre le régime de réglementation de l'Alberta et la LFI en raison duquel des parties du premier doivent être inopérantes dans le contexte de la faillite. Bien que GTL demeure entièrement dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle par le droit fédéral, il ne peut se soustraire aux engagements environnementaux qui lient l'actif du proper application of the Abitibi test, the Redwater estate must comply with ongoing environmental obligations that are not claims provable in bankruptcy.

[163] Accordingly, the appeal is allowed. In Alberta Energy Regulator v. Grant Thornton Limited, 2017 ABCA 278, 57 Alta. L.R. (6th) 37, Wakeling J.A. declined to stay the precedential effect of the Court of Appeal's decision. As he noted, the interests of the Regulator itself were already protected. Pursuant to earlier orders of the Alberta courts, GTL had already sold or renounced all of Redwater's assets, and the sale proceeds were being held in trust. Accordingly, the Regulator's request for an order that the proceeds from the sale of Redwater's assets be used to address Redwater's end-of-life obligations is granted. Additionally, the chambers judge's declarations in paras. 3 and 5-16 of his order are set aside.

[164] As the successful party in the appeal, the Regulator would normally be entitled to its costs. However, the Regulator specifically did not seek costs. Accordingly, there will be no order made as to costs.

The reasons of Moldaver and Côté JJ. were delivered by Côté J. (dissenting) —

I. Introduction

[165] Redwater Energy Corporation ("Redwater") is a bankrupt oil and gas company. Its estate principally consists of two types of properties or assets: valuable, producing oil wells and facilities that are still capable of generating revenue; and value-negative, non-producing assets, including depleted wells that are subject to onerous environmental liabilities. Redwater's receiver and trustee in bankruptcy, Grant Thornton Limited ("GTL"), purports to have disclaimed ownership of the non-producing failli en invoquant le par. 14.06(4). D'après une juste application du critère d'Abitibi, l'actif de Redwater doit respecter les obligations environnementales continues qui ne sont pas des réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite.

[163] En conséquence, le pourvoi est accueilli. Dans Alberta Energy Regulator c. Grant Thornton Limited, 2017 ABCA 278, 57 Alta. L.R. (6th) 37, le juge Wakeling a refusé de suspendre l'effet de précédent de l'arrêt rendu par la Cour d'appel. Comme il l'a fait remarquer, les intérêts de l'organisme de réglementation lui-même étaient déjà protégés. Conformément aux ordonnances rendues auparavant par les tribunaux albertains, GTL avait déjà vendu l'ensemble des biens de Redwater ou y avait renoncé et le produit de la vente a été détenu en fiducie. Ainsi, la Cour rend l'ordonnance demandée par l'organisme de réglementation selon laquelle le produit de la vente des biens de Redwater doit être utilisé pour satisfaire aux obligations de fin de vie de Redwater. En outre, les déclarations du juge siégeant en cabinet qui figurent aux par. 3 et 5-16 de son ordonnance sont annulées.

[164] Puisqu'il a gain de cause dans le cadre de ce pourvoi, l'organisme de réglementation aurait normalement droit aux dépens. Toutefois, il a expressément mentionné ne pas les demander. C'est pourquoi aucune ordonnance ne sera rendue à cet égard.

Version française des motifs des juges Moldaver et Côté rendus par

La juge Côté (dissidente) —

I. Introduction

[165] Redwater Energy Corporation (« Redwater ») est une société pétrolière et gazière en faillite. Son actif se compose principalement de deux types de biens : des puits de pétrole et des installations pétrolières de valeur productifs qui sont encore susceptibles de générer un revenu; et des biens inexploités ayant une valeur négative, notamment des puits taris auxquels se rattachent de lourds engagements environnementaux. Le séquestre et syndic de faillite de Redwater, Grant Thornton Limited (« GTL »), assets. It did so in order to sell the valuable, producing wells separately — unencumbered by the liabilities attached to the disclaimed properties — and to distribute the proceeds of that sale to the estate's creditors.

[166] However, Alberta law does not recognize GTL's disclaimers as enforceable. Shortly after GTL's appointment as receiver, the Alberta Energy Regulator ("AER") issued "Abandonment Orders" for the disclaimed assets, directing Redwater and its working interest participants to carry out environmental work on those properties. Specifically, the AER sought to have GTL "abandon" the non-producing properties, which meant to render the wells environmentally safe according to the AER's directives. It later notified GTL that it would refuse to approve any sale of Redwater's valuable assets unless GTL did one of three things: sell the disclaimed properties in a single package with the producing wells and facilities; complete the abandonment and reclamation work itself; or post security to cover the environmental liabilities associated with the disclaimed properties.

[167] The evidence reveals that none of these options is economically viable. The net value of Redwater's 127 licensed properties is negative, so no rational purchaser would ever agree to buy them as a package. This is precisely why GTL opted to disclaim the burdensome properties in the first place. As to the remaining options, GTL cannot undertake or guarantee the abandonment and reclamation work because the environmental liabilities attached to the disclaimed assets exceed the estate's realizable value — and in any event, GTL could not access the funds necessary to satisfy these commitments until after a sale of the estate's valuable assets was completed. The effect of the AER's position, then, is to hamper GTL in its administration of the estate, preventing it from realizing any value for any of Redwater's creditors, including the AER. And the AER's position effectively leaves the valuable and producing wells in limbo, creating a real risk that prétend avoir renoncé à la propriété des biens inexploités, et ce, afin de vendre séparément les puits de valeur productifs — non grevés des engagements se rattachant aux biens visés par les renonciations — et de répartir le produit de cette vente entre les créanciers de l'actif.

[166] Toutefois, la loi albertaine ne reconnaît pas de force exécutoire aux renonciations de GTL. Peu de temps après la nomination de GTL à titre de séquestre, l'Alberta Energy Regulator (« AER ») a rendu des « ordonnances d'abandon » à l'égard des biens visés par les renonciations, ordonnant à Redwater et à ses participants en participation directe d'exécuter des travaux environnementaux sur ceux-ci. En particulier, l'AER souhaitait que GTL « abandonne » les biens inexploités, ce qui signifie rendre les puits sûrs pour l'environnement, selon les directives de l'AER. Il a ensuite avisé GTL qu'il refuserait d'approuver toute vente des biens de valeur de Redwater à moins que GTL ne fasse l'une des trois choses suivantes : vendre les biens visés par les renonciations avec les puits et les installations productifs comme un tout unique; achever elle-même les travaux d'abandon et de remise en état; ou verser un dépôt de garantie pour couvrir les engagements environnementaux liés aux biens visés par les renonciations.

[167] La preuve révèle qu'aucune de ces possibilités n'est viable sur le plan économique. La valeur nette des 127 biens de Redwater qui sont visés par des permis est négative, de sorte qu'aucun acheteur sensé n'accepterait de les acquérir ensemble. C'est précisément pour cette raison que GTL a choisi de renoncer aux biens représentant un fardeau en premier lieu. Quant aux autres possibilités, GTL ne peut ni exécuter les travaux d'abandon et de remise en état ni en garantir l'exécution parce que les engagements environnementaux se rattachant aux biens visés par les renonciations dépassent la valeur de réalisation de l'actif et que, de toute façon, GTL ne pourrait obtenir les sommes nécessaires pour satisfaire à ces engagements qu'après avoir procédé à la vente des biens de valeur se trouvant dans l'actif. La position de l'AER a donc pour effet d'entraver GTL dans son administration de l'actif, l'empêchant de réaliser une quelconque valeur pour l'un ou l'autre des créanciers they, too, will become "orphans" — assets that are unable to be sold to another company and are left entirely unrealized.

[168] According to Wagner C.J., GTL is without recourse because federal law enables it only to protect itself from personal liability and because the AER was entitled to assert its environmental liability claims outside of the bankruptcy process. I disagree on both points. In my view, two aspects of Alberta's regulatory regime conflict with the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA"). This result flows from a proper and accurate understanding of fundamental principles of constitutional and insolvency law.

[169] First, Alberta's statutes regulating the oil and gas industry define the term "licensee" as including receivers and trustees in bankruptcy. The effect of this definition is that insolvency professionals are subject to the same obligations and liabilities as Redwater itself — including the obligation to comply with the AER's Abandonment Orders and the risk of personal liability for failing to do so. The BIA, however, permits a trustee in bankruptcy to disclaim assets encumbered by environmental liabilities. This power was available to GTL in the circumstances of this case, and GTL validly disclaimed the non-productive assets. The result is that it is no longer subject to the environmental liabilities associated with those assets. Because Alberta's statutory regime does not recognize these disclaimers as lawful (by virtue of the fact that receivers and trustees are regulated as licensees, who cannot disclaim assets), there is an unavoidable operational conflict between federal and provincial law. Alberta's legislation governing the oil and gas sector should therefore be held inoperative to the extent that it does not recognize the legal effect of GTL's disclaimers.

de Redwater, y compris l'AER. La position de l'AER place de fait les puits de valeur productifs dans une situation incertaine, créant un risque réel qu'ils deviennent, eux aussi, des [TRADUCTION] « orphelins » — des biens qui ne peuvent être vendus à une autre société et dont la valeur demeure entièrement non réalisée.

[168] Selon le juge en chef Wagner, GTL est sans recours parce que la loi fédérale ne l'autorise qu'à se dégager de toute responsabilité personnelle, et que l'AER avait le droit de faire valoir ses réclamations environnementales en dehors du processus de faillite. Je suis en désaccord sur les deux points. À mon avis, deux aspects du régime de réglementation albertain entrent en conflit avec la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, c. B-3 (« LFI »). Une compréhension adéquate et fidèle des principes fondamentaux du droit constitutionnel et du droit de l'insolvabilité conduit à ce résultat.

[169] D'abord, les lois albertaines qui règlementent l'industrie pétrolière et gazière précisent que le terme [TRADUCTION] « titulaire de permis » vise les séquestres et syndics de faillite. Cette définition a pour effet d'assujettir les professionnels de l'insolvabilité aux mêmes obligations et responsabilités que Redwater elle-même — notamment l'obligation de se conformer aux ordonnances d'abandon de l'AER et le risque d'engager sa responsabilité personnelle pour ne pas l'avoir fait. La LFI, par contre, autorise le syndic de faillite à renoncer aux éléments d'actif grevés d'engagements environnementaux. GTL disposait de ce pouvoir dans les circonstances de l'espèce et elle a valablement renoncé aux biens inexploités. Elle n'est donc plus assujettie aux engagements environnementaux liés à ces biens. Étant donné que le régime législatif albertain ne reconnaît pas la légalité de ces renonciations (en raison du fait que les séquestres et les syndics sont réglementés comme des titulaires de permis, qui ne peuvent renoncer à des biens), il y a un conflit d'application inévitable entre la loi fédérale et la loi provinciale. La loi albertaine régissant l'industrie pétrolière et gazière devrait donc être déclarée inopérante dans la mesure où elle ne reconnaît pas l'effet juridique des renonciations de GTL.

[170] Second, the AER has required that GTL satisfy Redwater's environmental liabilities ahead of the estate's other debts, which contravenes the BIA's priority scheme. Because the Abandonment Orders are "claims provable in bankruptcy" under the three-part test outlined by this Court in Newfoundland and Labrador v. AbitibiBowater Inc., 2012 SCC 67, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 443 — from which this Court should not depart either explicitly or implicitly — the AER cannot assert those claims outside the bankruptcy process. To do so would frustrate an essential purpose of the BIA: distributing the estate's value in accordance with the statutory priority scheme. Nor can the AER achieve the same result indirectly by imposing conditions on the sale of Redwater's valuable assets. The province's licensing scheme effectively operates as a debt collection mechanism in relation to a bankrupt company: it prevents GTL from discharging its duties as trustee unless the AER's environmental claims are satisfied. As such, it should be held inoperative as applied to Redwater under the second prong of the paramountcy test, frustration of purpose.

[170] Ensuite, l'AER a exigé que GTL acquitte les engagements environnementaux de Redwater avant les autres dettes de l'actif, ce qui contrevient au régime de priorité établi par la LFI. Comme les ordonnances d'abandon sont des « réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite » selon le test à trois volets énoncé par la Cour dans l'arrêt Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador c. AbitibiBowater Inc., 2012 CSC 67, [2012] 3 R.C.S. 443 — test dont notre Cour ne devrait pas s'écarter explicitement ou implicitement — l'AER ne peut faire valoir ces réclamations en dehors du processus de faillite. Agir ainsi entraverait la réalisation d'un objet essentiel de la LFI : le partage de la valeur de l'actif conformément au régime de priorités établi par la loi. L'AER ne peut pas non plus atteindre indirectement le même résultat en imposant des conditions à la vente des biens de valeur de Redwater. Le régime provincial de délivrance de permis sert en fait de mécanisme de recouvrement de créances à l'endroit d'une société en faillite : il empêche GTL de s'acquitter de ses obligations à titre de syndic si les réclamations environnementales de l'AER ne sont pas réglées. Par conséquent, il devrait être déclaré inopérant en ce qui concerne Redwater, suivant le second volet du critère de la prépondérance, l'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral.

II. Background

II. Contexte

[171] Redwater was a publicly traded oil and gas company that operated wells, pipelines and other facilities in central Alberta. In mid-2014, it suffered a number of financial setbacks following a series of acquisitions and unsuccessful drilling initiatives. As a result, it became unable to meet its obligations to its largest secured creditor, ATB Financial, which commenced enforcement proceedings.

[171] Redwater était une société pétrolière et gazière cotée en bourse qui exploitait des puits, des pipelines et d'autres installations dans le centre de l'Alberta. Au milieu de l'année 2014, elle a connu plusieurs déboires financiers à la suite d'une série d'acquisitions et d'initiatives de forage infructueuses. Elle n'a donc plus été en mesure de respecter ses obligations envers son plus important créancier garanti, ATB Financial, qui a introduit une procédure d'exécution.

[172] GTL was appointed as Redwater's receiver on May 12, 2015. Upon its appointment, but before taking possession of any AER-licensed properties, GTL carried out an analysis of the economic viability and marketability of Redwater's assets. It determined that only a portion of the company's properties was actually saleable and that it would not be in Redwater's best interests — or in the interests of its creditors — for GTL, as receiver, to take possession of the non-producing properties. It therefore informed the AER on July 3, 2015, that it would take possession of only 20 of Redwater's 127 licensed wells and facilities. On November 2, 2015, shortly after its appointment as trustee, GTL again disclaimed the same non-producing properties it had previously renounced in its capacity as receiver.

[172] Le 12 mai 2015, GTL a été nommé séquestre de Redwater. Après sa nomination, mais avant de prendre possession de quelconque bien visé par un permis délivré par l'AER, GTL a procédé à une analyse de la viabilité économique et de la valeur commerciale des biens de Redwater. Elle a déterminé que seule une partie des biens de la

[173] According to GTL's assessment, Redwater's valuable assets were worth $4.152 million and would generate significant value for the estate's creditors if they were sold at auction. On the other hand, the net value of the non-producing properties was -$4.705 million, reflecting the extensive abandonment and reclamation liabilities owed to the AER. The net value of the estate as a whole was -$0.553 million. This was why, in GTL's business judgment, a sale of all the estate's assets together was simply not realistic.

[174] The AER responded to GTL's first disclaimer notice by issuing the Abandonment Orders which required Redwater to carry out environmental work on the non-producing properties that GTL had disclaimed. But the AER's enforcement efforts were not limited to the debtor's estate itself. In its initial application that spurred this litigation, the AER filed suit against GTL seeking three principal remedies: (1) a declaration that GTL's disclaimers were void and unenforceable; (2) an order compelling GTL, in its capacity as receiver, to comply with the Abandonment Orders issued in relation to a portion of Redwater's assets; and (3) an order compelling GTL to fulfill its obligations as licensee under Alberta's legislation, specifically in relation to the abandonment, reclamation and remediation of Redwater's licensed properties.

[175] The genesis of this litigation, then, was a clear and forceful effort by the AER to require GTL société était réellement vendable, et qu'il ne serait pas dans l'intérêt supérieur de Redwater — ni dans l'intérêt de ses créanciers — que GTL, à titre de séquestre, prenne possession des biens inexploités. Elle a donc informé l'AER le 3 juillet 2015 qu'elle prendrait possession de seulement 20 des 127 puits et installations de Redwater visés par un permis. Le 2 novembre 2015, peu après sa nomination à titre de syndic, GTL a encore une fois renoncé aux biens inexploités auxquels elle avait déjà renoncé en sa qualité de séquestre.

[173] Selon l'estimation de GTL, les biens de valeur de Redwater valaient 4,152 millions de dollars et créeraient une valeur importante pour les créanciers de l'actif s'ils étaient vendus aux enchères. Par contre, la valeur nette des biens inexploités était de -4,705 millions de dollars, reflétant les engagements énormes relatifs à l'abandon et à la remise en état envers l'AER. La valeur nette de l'ensemble de l'actif était de -0,553 million de dollars. C'est pourquoi, selon le jugement d'affaire de GTL, une vente de l'ensemble des biens de l'actif n'était tout simplement pas réaliste.

[174] L'AER a répondu au premier avis de renonciation de GTL en rendant les ordonnances d'abandon qui obligeaient Redwater à exécuter des travaux environnementaux sur les biens inexploités auxquels GTL avait renoncé. Mais les mesures d'exécution prises par l'AER ne visaient pas uniquement l'actif de la débitrice en tant que tel. Dans sa demande initiale ayant donné naissance au présent litige, l'AER a intenté une poursuite contre GTL, sollicitant trois mesures de réparation principales : (1) un jugement déclaratoire portant que les renonciations de GTL sont nulles et non exécutoires; (2) une ordonnance obligeant GTL, en sa qualité de séquestre, à se conformer aux ordonnances d'abandon rendues à l'égard d'une partie des biens de Redwater; et (3) une ordonnance contraignant GTL à respecter les obligations que lui impose la loi albertaine en tant que titulaire de permis, concernant plus précisément l'abandon, la remise en état et la décontamination des biens de Redwater visés par des permis.

[175] Le présent litige tire donc son origine d'un effort manifeste et vigoureux de l'AER dans le but to satisfy Redwater's environmental obligations. To understand why the AER took that approach, it is important to note that it had provincial law on its side. Under the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. O-6 ("OGCA") and the Pipeline Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. P-15 ("PLA"), the term "licensee" is defined to include receivers and trustees in bankruptcy (OGCA, s. 1(1)(cc); PLA, s. 1(1)(n)). As a result, insolvency professionals become subject to the same regulatory obligations as the insolvent debtor itself by effectively stepping into its shoes. They can therefore be compelled to carry out abandonment and reclamation work on the direction of the AER (OGCA, s. 27; PLA, s. 23; Oil and Gas Conservation Rules, Alta. Reg. 151/71 ("OGCA Rules"), s. 3.012); to reimburse anyone else who does abandonment work (OGCA, ss. 29 and 30; PLA, s. 25); to pay the orphan fund levy for any of the debtor's assets (OGCA, s. 74); to provide a security deposit, under certain circumstances, at the AER's request (OGCA Rules, s. 1.100(2)); and to pay a fine for failing to comply with an order made by the AER (OGCA, ss. 108 and 110(1); PLA, ss. 52(2) and 54(1)). These liabilities are all personal in nature. Other comparable legislation expressly limits the liability of insolvency professionals. For example, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-12, states that the liability of a receiver or trustee under an environmental protection order "is limited to the value of the assets that the person is administering", absent "gross negligence or wilful misconduct" (s. 240(3)). Alberta's oil and gas statutory regime, however, does not include such a clause protecting receivers and trustees. And as the AER's initial application makes clear, the AER itself viewed these obligations as personal. This was why it sued GTL to compel it, among other things, to comply with its obligations as a licensee under provincial law.

d'obliger GTL à acquitter les obligations environnementales de Redwater. Pour comprendre pourquoi l'AER a agi de la sorte, il est important de souligner que l'AER avait la loi provinciale de son côté. Aux termes de l'Oil and Gas Conservation Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. O-6 (« OGCA »), et de la Pipeline Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. P-15 (« PLA »), le terme [TRADUCTION] « titulaire de permis » est défini de façon à inclure les séquestres et les syndics de faillite (OGCA, al. 1(1)(cc); PLA, al. 1(1)(n)). Les professionnels de l'insolvabilité deviennent par le fait même assujettis aux mêmes obligations réglementaires que le débiteur insolvable lui-même, en se mettant de fait à sa place. Ils peuvent donc être contraints d'exécuter des travaux d'abandon et de remise en état sur ordre de l'AER (OGCA, art. 27; PLA, art. 23; Oil and Gas Conservation Rules, Alta. Reg. 151/71 (« Règles prises en vertu de l'OGCA »), art. 3.012), de rembourser n'importe qui d'autre effectue les travaux d'abandon (OGCA, art. 29 et 30; PLA, art. 25), de payer au fonds pour les puits orphelins la redevance requise à l'égard de n'importe lequel des biens du débiteur (OGCA, art. 74), de verser un dépôt de garantie, dans certaines circonstances, à la demande de l'AER (Règles prises en vertu de l'OGCA, par. 1.100(2)) et de payer une amende pour avoir omis de se conformer à une ordonnance de l'AER (OGCA, art. 108 et par. 110(1); PLA, par. 52(2) et 54(1)). Ces obligations sont toutes de nature personnelle. D'autres lois comparables limitent expressément la responsabilité des professionnels de l'insolvabilité. Par exemple, l'Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-12, prévoit que la responsabilité du séquestre ou du syndic à l'égard d'une ordonnance de protection environnementale [TRADUCTION] « ne dépasse pas la valeur des biens qu'administre cette personne », en l'absence de « négligence grave ou d'inconduite délibérée » (par. 240(3)). Le régime législatif albertain en matière de pétrole et de gaz ne contient toutefois aucune disposition semblable visant à protéger les séquestres et les syndics. Et, comme il ressort de sa demande initiale, l'AER considérait lui-même ces obligations comme des obligations personnelles. C'est pourquoi il a poursuivi GTL afin de le contraindre, notamment, à respecter les obligations que lui impose la loi provinciale en tant que titulaire de permis.

[176] The AER also exercised its enforcement power in another capacity. In addition to issuing the Abandonment Orders, the AER imposed restrictions and conditions on the sale of Redwater's assets — conditions that effectively required GTL to satisfy those same obligations before a sale could be approved. Thus, even if GTL defied the AER's request to abandon the non-producing properties, it would still be unable to discharge its duties as receiver and trustee.

[177] Both the chambers judge and the majority of the Court of Appeal found in favour of GTL on each prong of the paramountcy test, concluding that there is an operational conflict and a frustration of purpose (2016 ABQB 278, 33 Alta. L.R. (6th) 221; 2017 ABCA 124, 50 Alta. L.R. (6th) 1). They agreed with GTL and ATB Financial that the provisions of Alberta's statutory regime permitting the AER to enforce compliance with Redwater's environmental abandonment and reclamation obligations were constitutionally inoperative during bankruptcy. The AER and the Orphan Well Association ("OWA") then appealed to this Court.

III. Analysis

[178] The Constitution Act, 1867, grants the federal government exclusive jurisdiction to regulate matters relating to bankruptcy and insolvency (s. 91(21)). In the exercise of that jurisdiction, Parliament enacted the BIA, "a complete code governing bankruptcy" (Alberta (Attorney General) v. Moloney, 2015 SCC 51, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 327, at para. 40; see also Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453, at para. 85). The BIA outlines, among other things, the powers, duties and functions of receivers and trustees responsible for administering bankrupt or insolvent estates and the scope of claims that fall within the bankruptcy process (see BIA, ss. 16 to 38 and 121 to 154).

[179] Although the operation of the BIA "depends upon the survival of various provincial rights" (Moloney, at para. 40), this is true only to the extent that "substantive provisions of any [provincial] law or [176] L'AER a également exercé son pouvoir de faire appliquer la loi à un autre titre. En plus de rendre les ordonnances d'abandon, l'AER a imposé des restrictions et conditions à la vente des biens de Redwater — conditions qui obligent en fait GTL à satisfaire auxdites obligations avant même qu'une vente puisse être approuvée. Par conséquent, même si GTL n'accédait pas à la demande de l'AER visant l'abandon des biens inexploités, il ne serait toujours pas en mesure de s'acquitter de ses obligations à titre de séquestre et de syndic.

[177] Le juge en cabinet et les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel ont tous donné raison à GTL quant à chacun des volets du test de la prépondérance, concluant qu'il existe un conflit d'application et une entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral (2016 ABQB 278, 33 Alta. L.R. (6th) 221; 2017 ABCA 124, 50 Alta. L.R. (6th) 1). Ils ont convenu avec GTL et ATB Financial que les dispositions du régime législatif albertain permettant à l'AER d'assurer le respect des obligations d'abandon et de remise en état de Redwater étaient constitutionnellement inopérantes durant une faillite. L'AER et l'Orphan Well Association (« OWA ») se sont ensuite pourvus devant la Cour.

III. Analyse

[178] La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 confère au gouvernement fédéral la compétence exclusive pour réglementer la faillite et l'insolvabilité (par. 91(21)). Dans l'exercice de cette compétence, le Parlement a édicté la LFI, « un code complet en matière de faillite » (Alberta (Procureur général) c. Moloney, 2015 CSC 51, [2015] 3 R.C.S. 327, par. 40; voir aussi Husky Oil Operations Ltd. c. Ministre du Revenu national, [1995] 3 R.C.S. 453, par. 85). La LFI expose notamment les pouvoirs, obligations et attributions des séquestres et syndics chargés d'administrer l'actif du failli ou l'actif insolvable ainsi que la portée des réclamations qui relèvent du processus de faillite (voir LFI, art. 16 à 38 et 121 à 154).

[179] Quoique l'application de la LFI « dépend[e] de la subsistance de divers droits provinciaux » (Moloney, par. 40), ce n'est vrai que dans la mesure où « les dispositions de droit substantif d'une [. . .] loi ou statute relating to property . . . are not in conflict with [the BIA]" (BIA, s. 72(1)). When a conflict arises, the BIA necessarily prevails (Moloney, at paras. 16 and 29; Saskatchewan (Attorney General) v. Lemare Lake Logging Ltd., 2015 SCC 53, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 419, at para. 16). This reflects the constitutional principle that federal laws are paramount (Canadian Western Bank v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 22, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 3, at para. 32).

[180] The respondents in this appeal — GTL and ATB Financial — posit two distinct conflicts between the federal and provincial legislation. First, they argue that the BIA grants receivers and trustees the power to disclaim any interest in any real property, even where they are not at risk of personal liability by virtue of their possession of the property. This disclaimer power enables trustees to renounce valueless and liability-laden property of a bankrupt in pursuit of their primary goal, which is to maximize global recovery for all creditors. The respondents argue that GTL validly disclaimed the non-producing assets and therefore cannot be held responsible for carrying out the Abandonment Orders; nor can the AER make any sale of Redwater's assets conditional on the fulfillment of obligations with respect to the disclaimed properties.

[181] Second, they argue that the AER's Abandonment Orders constitute "claims provable in bankruptcy". In their view, it would undermine the BIA's priority scheme if the AER could assert those claims outside the bankruptcy process — and ahead of the estate's secured creditors — whether by compelling GTL to carry out those orders or by making the sale of Redwater's valuable assets conditional on the fulfillment of those obligations.

[182] In my view, GTL and ATB Financial have satisfied their burden of demonstrating a genuine inconsistency between federal and provincial law under both branches of the paramountcy test. In what follows, I first discuss the operational conflict that arises between Alberta's regulatory regime and s. 14.06(4) of the BIA. I then turn to the second règle de droit [provinciale] concernant la propriété [. . .] [ne sont pas] incompatibles avec la [LFI] » (LFI, par. 72(1)). Lorsqu'il y a un conflit, la LFI doit prévaloir (Moloney, par. 16 et 29; Saskatchewan (Procureur général) c. Lemare Lake Logging Ltd., 2015 CSC 53, [2015] 3 R.C.S. 419, par. 16). Cela reflète le principe constitutionnel selon lequel les lois fédérales sont prépondérantes (Banque canadienne de l'Ouest c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 22, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 3, par. 32).

[180] Les intimées en l'espèce — GTL et ATB Financial — plaident qu'il existe deux conflits distincts entre la législation fédérale et la législation provinciale. D'abord, ils soutiennent que la LFI confère aux séquestres et aux syndics le pouvoir de renoncer à tout intérêt sur un bien réel, même lorsque le séquestre ou le syndic ne risque pas d'engager sa responsabilité personnelle du fait qu'il est en possession du bien. Ce pouvoir de renonciation permet aux syndics de renoncer aux biens sans valeur et grevés d'engagements du failli en vue d'atteindre leur objectif premier : maximiser le recouvrement global pour tous les créanciers. Les intimées soutiennent que GTL a valablement renoncé aux biens inexploités et qu'il ne peut donc être tenu responsable de l'exécution des ordonnances d'abandon; l'AER ne peut pas non plus faire dépendre la vente des biens de Redwater de l'acquittement d'obligations à l'égard des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation.

[181] Ensuite, ils soutiennent que les ordonnances d'abandon de l'AER constituent des « réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite ». À leur avis, ce serait saper le régime de priorités établi par la LFI que de permettre à l'AER de faire valoir ces réclamations en dehors du processus de faillite — et en priorité par rapport aux créanciers garantis de l'actif — que ce soit en obligeant GTL à exécuter ces ordonnances, ou en faisant dépendre la vente des biens de valeur de Redwater de l'acquittement de ces obligations.

[182] À mon avis, GTL et ATB Financial se sont acquittés de leur fardeau de démontrer qu'il existe une incompatibilité véritable entre la loi fédérale et la loi provinciale selon les deux volets du test de la prépondérance. Dans les paragraphes qui suivent, j'analyse d'abord le conflit d'application qui existe entre le régime de réglementation albertain et le branch of the paramountcy analysis, frustration of purpose.

A. Operational Conflict

[183] The first branch of the paramountcy test is operational conflict. An operational conflict arises where "it is impossible to comply with both laws" (Moloney, at para. 18) — "where one enactment says 'yes' and the other says 'no'", or where "the same citizens are being told to do inconsistent things" (Multiple Access Ltd. v. McCutcheon, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 161, at p. 191; see also Lemare Lake, at para. 18).

[184] In essence, an operational conflict analysis is an exercise in statutory interpretation: the Court must ascertain the meaning of each competing enactment in order to determine whether dual compliance is possible. Although this interpretation exercise takes place within the guiding confines of cooperative federalism, a concept that allows for some interplay and overlap between federal and provincial legislation, this Court recently set out the limits to this concept:

> [C]ooperative federalism may be used neither to "override nor [to] modify the division of powers itself" (Rogers Communications Inc. v. Châteauguay (City), [2016 SCC 23, [2016] 1 S.C.R. 467] at para. 39), nor to impose "limits on the otherwise valid exercise of legislative competence" (Quebec (Attorney General) v. Canada (Attorney General), [2015 SCC 14, [2015] 1 S.C.R. 693] at para. 19; Reference re Securities Act, [2011 SCC 66, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 837] at paras. 61-62). It cannot, therefore, be used to make ultra vires legislation intra vires. By fostering cooperation between Parliament and the legislatures within the existing constitutional boundaries, however, cooperative federalism works to support, rather than supplant, the division of legislative powers (see: Canadian Western Bank v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 22, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 3, at para. 22).

(Reference re Pan-Canadian Securities Regulation, 2018 SCC 48, [2018] 3 S.C.R. 189, at para. 18)

[185] Properly understood, cooperative federalism operates as a straightforward interpretive par. 14.06(4) de la LFI. J'examine ensuite le second volet de l'analyse relative à la prépondérance, l'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral.

A. Conflit d'application

[183] Le premier volet du test de la prépondérance est le conflit d'application. Il y a conflit d'application lorsqu'« il est impossible de respecter les deux lois » (Moloney, par. 18) — « lorsqu'une loi dit "oui" et que l'autre dit "non" », ou lorsque l'« on demande aux mêmes citoyens d'accomplir des actes incompatibles » (Multiple Access Ltd. c. McCutcheon, [1982] 2 R.C.S. 161, p. 191; voir aussi Lemare Lake, par. 18).

[184] L'analyse relative au conflit d'application relève essentiellement de l'interprétation des lois : la Cour doit déterminer le sens de chaque loi concurrente afin de décider s'il est possible de respecter les deux lois. Bien que cette démarche d'interprétation s'effectue à l'intérieur du cadre directeur du fédéralisme coopératif, une notion qui permet une certaine interaction et un certain chevauchement entre la loi fédérale et la loi provinciale, notre Cour a récemment fixé les limites de cette notion :

> [L]e fédéralisme coopératif ne peut servir « ni [à] l'emporter sur le partage [des compétences] lui-même ni [à] le modifier » (Rogers Communications Inc. c. Châteauguay (Ville), [2016 CSC 23, [2016] 1 R.C.S. 467] par. 39), pas plus qu'il ne peut imposer « des limites à l'exercice par ailleurs valide d'une compétence législative » (Québec (Procureur général) c. Canada (Procureur général), [2015 CSC 14, [2015] 1 R.C.S. 693] par. 19; Renvoi relatif à la Loi sur les valeurs mobilières, [2011 CSC 66, [2011] 3 R.C.S. 837] par. 61-62). Il ne peut donc servir à rendre intra vires une loi ultra vires. En favorisant la coopération entre le Parlement et les législatures à l'intérieur des limites constitutionnelles existantes, le fédéralisme coopératif appuie le partage des compétences législatives au lieu de le supplanter : voir Banque canadienne de l'Ouest c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 22, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 3, par. 22.

(Renvoi relatif à la réglementation pancanadienne des valeurs mobilières, 2018 CSC 48, [2018] 3 R.C.S. 189, par. 18)

[185] Interprété correctement, le fédéralisme coopératif fait office de simple présomption en matière

presumption — one that supports, rather than supplants, the modern approach to statutory interpretation. This Court recognized as much in Moloney, where Gascon J. wrote that courts should "favour an interpretation of the federal legislation that allows the concurrent operation of both laws" on the basis of a presumption "that Parliament intends its laws to co-exist with provincial laws" (para. 27). But where "the proper meaning of the provision" — one that is not limited to "a mere literal reading of the provisions at issue" — cannot support a harmonious interpretation, it is beyond this Court's power to create harmony where Parliament did not intend it (para. 23; see also Pan-Canadian Securities Regulation, at para. 18; Lemare Lake, at paras. 78-79, per Côté J., dissenting, but not on this point).

[186] In my view, my colleague places undue reliance on the principle of cooperative federalism to narrow the scope of federal law and find a harmonious interpretation where no plausible one exists. Courts must be especially careful about using cooperative federalism to interpret legislative provisions narrowly in a case like this where Parliament expressly envisioned that the disclaimer right could come into conflict with provincial law. This is evident from the very first line of s. 14.06(4), which states that the disclaimer power applies "[n]otwithstanding anything in any federal or provincial law". The notion that judicial restraint should compel a different interpretation is therefore belied by the fact that Parliament considered, acknowledged and accepted the potential for conflict. To rely on judicial restraint, then, to avoid a conflict between federal and provincial law is to disregard Parliament's express instruction. Simply put, this is not a case where a drastic power is to be assumed from the statute; it is one where such a power is clearly provided for. In my view, reliance on cooperative federalism must never result in an interpretation of s. 14.06(4) that is inconsonant with its language, context and purpose.

d'interprétation — qui appuie, sans la supplanter, la méthode moderne d'interprétation des lois. La Cour l'a reconnu dans l'arrêt Moloney, où le juge Gascon a écrit que les tribunaux doivent « favoris[er] une interprétation de la loi fédérale permettant une application concurrente des deux lois » en se fondant sur la présomption « que le Parlement a voulu que ses lois coexistent avec les lois provinciales » (par. 27). Mais lorsque « le sens qu'il convient de donner à la disposition » — sens qui ne se limite pas à « une lecture littérale de la disposition en cause » — ne peut appuyer une interprétation harmonieuse, la Cour n'a pas le pouvoir de créer l'harmonie là où le Parlement n'a pas eu l'intention de le faire (Moloney, par. 23; voir aussi Réglementation pancanadienne des valeurs mobilières, par. 18; Lemare Lake, par. 78-79, la juge Côté, dissidente, mais non sur ce point).

[186] À mon avis, mon collègue se fonde indûment sur le principe du fédéralisme coopératif pour limiter la portée d'une loi fédérale et trouver une interprétation harmonieuse là où il n'en existe aucune qui soit plausible. Les tribunaux doivent être très prudents lorsqu'il s'agit de se fonder sur le fédéralisme coopératif pour interpréter étroitement des dispositions législatives dans un cas comme l'espèce, où le Parlement a expressément prévu que le droit de renonciation pouvait entrer en conflit avec le droit provincial. Cela ressort à l'évidence de la toute première ligne du par. 14.06(4), qui énonce que le pouvoir de renonciation s'applique « [p]ar dérogation au droit fédéral et provincial ». L'idée selon laquelle la retenue judiciaire devrait commander une interprétation différente est donc contredite par le fait que le Parlement a envisagé, reconnu et accepté la possibilité de conflit. Recourir à la retenue judiciaire pour éviter un conflit entre le droit fédéral et le droit provincial équivaut donc à faire fi de la directive expresse du Parlement. Autrement dit, il ne s'agit pas en l'espèce d'un cas où un pouvoir draconien doit être déduit de la loi; il s'agit d'un cas où un tel pouvoir est clairement prévu. À mon avis, le recours au principe du fédéralisme coopératif ne doit jamais donner lieu à une interprétation du par. 14.06(4) qui est incompatible avec son libellé, son contexte et son objet.

[187] It is undisputed in this appeal that Alberta law does not recognize GTL's disclaimers of assets licensed by the AER as enforceable to the extent that they relieve GTL of the obligation to satisfy the environmental liabilities associated with the assets. As receiver and trustee, GTL steps into Redwater's shoes as a "licensee" under provincial law; and, GTL submits, it can therefore, without the disclaimers, be held liable for the debtor's abandonment and reclamation obligations in the same manner as Redwater itself. The question, then, is whether the BIA permits GTL to disclaim these properties and what legal effect results from such disclaimer.

[188] Section 14.06 of the BIA, reproduced in full in the appendix, outlines a trustee's powers and duties with respect to environmental liabilities and the disclaimer of property. Specifically, s. 14.06(4) states that the trustee is "not personally liable for failure to comply" with an order requiring it to "remedy any environmental condition or environmental damage affecting property involved in a bankruptcy", provided that the trustee "abandons, disposes of or otherwise releases any interest in any real property . . . affected by the condition or damage" within the statutory timeframes. The timing of GTL's disclaimers is not at issue here.

[189] My colleague concludes that, regardless of whether GTL could have properly invoked the disclaimer power in this case, the effect of any such disclaimer would simply be to protect it from personal liability. He states that, in any event, the exercise of the disclaimer power was unnecessary in this case because GTL was already fully protected from personal liability through the operation of s. 14.06(2). Further, he argues, because the AER has not sought to hold GTL personally liable, there is no conflict between federal and provincial law on the facts of this case. With respect, I disagree with this approach to the language of the BIA, which does not properly account for fundamental principles of constitutional and insolvency law. I will begin by addressing the proper scope of the disclaimer power provided to trustees, explaining that the actual existence of a risk of personal liability is not a necessary condition for [187] Il n'est pas contesté en l'espèce que la loi albertaine ne reconnaît pas de force exécutoire aux renonciations de GTL à des biens visés par un permis délivré par l'AER dans la mesure où elles soustraient GTL à l'obligation de respecter les engagements environnementaux liés aux biens. À titre de séquestre et de syndic, GTL remplace Redwater en tant que « titulaire de permis » selon la loi provinciale, et GTL soutient qu'il peut par conséquent, en l'absence des renonciations, être tenu responsable des obligations d'abandon et de remise en état de la débitrice au même titre que Redwater elle-même. Il s'agit donc de savoir si la LFI autorise GTL à renoncer à ces biens et quel est l'effet de cette renonciation en droit.

[188] L'article 14.06 de la LFI, reproduit intégralement en annexe, décrit les pouvoirs et responsabilités du syndic quant aux engagements environnementaux et à la renonciation aux biens. Plus précisément, le par. 14.06(4) prévoit que le syndic est « dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle découlant du non-respect » d'une ordonnance l'obligeant à « répar[er] [. . .] tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement et touchant un bien visé par une faillite », pourvu que le syndic « abandonne [. . .] tout intérêt sur le bien réel en cause, en dispose ou s'en dessaisit » dans les délais prévus par la loi. Le moment des renonciations de GTL n'est pas en litige en l'espèce.

[189] Mon collègue conclut que, peu importe si GTL avait pu invoquer à juste titre le pouvoir de renonciation en l'espèce, cette renonciation a simplement pour effet de le dégager de toute responsabilité personnelle. Selon lui, en tout état de cause, il était inutile d'exercer le pouvoir de renonciation dans la présente affaire parce que GTL était déjà entièrement à l'abri de toute responsabilité personnelle par application du par. 14.06(2). Il soutient en outre que, comme l'AER n'a pas cherché à tenir GTL personnellement responsable, il n'y a aucun conflit entre la loi fédérale et la loi provinciale en l'espèce. Avec égards, je ne suis pas d'accord avec cette interprétation du libellé de la LFI, qui ne tient pas dûment compte des principes fondamentaux du droit constitutionnel et du droit de l'insolvabilité. Je commencerai par traiter de la portée que doit avoir le pouvoir de renonciation accordé aux syndics, en the exercise of this power and that, while protection from personal liability is one effect of a valid disclaimer, it is not the only one. In my view, this interpretation makes s. 14.06(4) consistent with the remainder of the section and is therefore to be preferred. With respect, I do not accept that Parliament intended s. 14.06(4) simply to protect trustees from the exact same liability that it had already addressed through s. 14.06(2). Subsection (4) must have a meaningful role to play within Parliament's bankruptcy and insolvency regime; I reject the suggestion that Parliament crafted a superfluous provision. I will also deal briefly with the AER's argument that the disclaimer power is not available at all in the context of Alberta's oil and gas statutory regime. In my view, it is available in this context.

(1) The Power to Disclaim Under Section 14.06(4)

[190] The "natural meaning which appears when the provision is simply read through" (Canadian Pacific Air Lines Ltd. v. Canadian Air Line Pilots Assn., [1993] 3 S.C.R. 724, at p. 735) is that s. 14.06(4) assumes and incorporates a pre-existing common law right to disclaim property in the context of bankruptcy and insolvency (see L. Silverstein, "Rejection of Executory Contracts in Bankruptcy and Reorganization" (1964), 31 U. Chi. L. Rev. 467, at pp. 468-72; New Skeena Forest Products Inc. v. Don Hull & Sons Contracting Ltd., 2005 BCCA 154, 251 D.L.R. (4th) 328, at paras. 24-31; Re Thompson Knitting Co., Ltd., [1925] 2 D.L.R. 1007 (Ont. S.C. (App. Div.), at p. 1008). This right is in keeping with the fundamental objective of court officers in insolvencies: the maximization of recovery for creditors as a whole by realizing the estate's valuable assets. By allowing trustees to disclaim assets with substantial liabilities, this power enables them to administer the estate in the most efficient manner and to avoid significant costs of administration that would reduce creditor recovery. Section 14.06(4) expliquant que l'existence d'un risque de responsabilité personnelle ne constitue pas une condition essentielle à l'exercice de ce pouvoir et que, même si la protection contre toute responsabilité personnelle est un effet d'une renonciation valide, ce n'est pas le seul. À mon avis, cette interprétation fait en sorte que le par. 14.06(4) s'accorde avec le reste de l'article et il convient donc de la privilégier. Avec égards, je n'accepte pas que le Parlement voulait par ce paragraphe mettre simplement les syndics à l'abri de la même responsabilité, ce qu'il avait déjà fait au par. 14.06(2). Le paragraphe (4) doit avoir un rôle significatif à jouer dans le régime de faillite et d'insolvabilité du Parlement; je rejette la thèse selon laquelle le Parlement a conçu une disposition superflue. Je me pencherai aussi brièvement sur l'argument de l'AER selon lequel il n'est pas du tout possible d'exercer le pouvoir de renonciation dans le contexte du régime législatif de l'Alberta en matière de pétrole et de gaz. J'estime qu'il peut être exercé dans ce contexte.

(1) Le pouvoir de renonciation en vertu du par. 14.06(4)

[190] Le « sens naturel qui se dégage de la simple lecture de la disposition dans son ensemble » (Lignes aériennes Canadien Pacifique Ltée c. Assoc. canadienne des pilotes de lignes aériennes, [1993] 3 R.C.S. 724, p. 735) est que le par. 14.06(4) présume et incorpore un droit préexistant en common law de renoncer à des biens dans le contexte de la faillite et de l'insolvabilité (voir L. Silverstein, « Rejection of Executory Contracts in Bankruptcy and Reorganization » (1964), 31 U. Chi. L. Rev. 467, p. 468-472; New Skeena Forest Products Inc. c. Don Hull & Sons Contracting Ltd., 2005 BCCA 154, 251 D.L.R. (4th) 328, par. 24-31; Re Thompson Knitting Co., Ltd., [1925] 2 D.L.R. 1007 (C.S. Ont. (Div. app.), p. 1008). Ce droit est en accord avec l'objectif fondamental poursuivi par les officiers de la cour en insolvabilité : maximiser le recouvrement au bénéfice de l'ensemble des créanciers par la réalisation des éléments de valeur de l'actif. En permettant aux syndics de renoncer à des biens grevés d'engagements substantiels, ce pouvoir donne aux syndics la faculté d'administrer l'actif le plus efficacement recognizes and supports this foundational principle of insolvency law.

[191] This reading offers the clearest and most obvious explanation for the manner in which the provision is drafted, in that it plainly describes a result or legal effect of disclaimer: a trustee "is not personally liable for failure to comply" with an environmental order "if . . . the trustee . . . abandons, disposes of or otherwise releases any interest in any real property" (s. 14.06(4)). We should interpret s. 14.06(4) as authorizing the act of disclaimer in light of the principle that "[t]he legislator does not speak in vain" (Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, 2002 SCC 42, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559, at para. 37, citing Attorney General of Quebec v. Carrières Ste-Thérèse Ltée, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 831, at p. 838). If a trustee did not have the power to disclaim property, and if that power were not recognized and provided for in the statute, a provision describing the effect of such a disclaimer would serve no purpose.

[192] The AER submits that property may be disclaimed only where it is necessary for a trustee to avoid personal liability with respect to an environmental order. This interpretation entirely inverts the language of the provision, turning a stated effect of disclaimer into a necessary condition that circumscribes the exercise of the power. The operative clauses are neither written nor ordered in this manner. Rather, s. 14.06(4) expresses the disclaimer right in unqualified terms and emphasizes that a trustee may not be held liable whenever that right is exercised. If Parliament truly intended to condition the right to disclaim property on the actual existence of a risk of personal liability, "it is hard to conceive of a more convoluted and sibylline way of stating something that could be so easily expressed in clear and direct terms" (Mitchell v. Peguis Indian Band, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 85, at p. 124).

possible et leur épargne des frais considérables d'administration qui réduiraient le recouvrement au profit des créanciers. Le paragraphe 14.06(4) reconnaît et appuie ce principe fondamental du droit de l'insolvabilité.

[191] Cette interprétation offre l'explication la plus claire et la plus évidente de la façon dont la disposition est rédigée, en ce qu'elle décrit simplement un résultat ou effet juridique d'une renonciation : le syndic est « dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle découlant du non-respect » d'une ordonnance environnementale « si [. . .] il abandonne [. . .] tout intérêt sur le bien réel en cause, en dispose ou s'en dessaisit » (al. 14.06(4)). Nous devons interpréter le par. 14.06(4) comme autorisant l'acte de renonciation à la lumière du principe selon lequel « le législateur ne parle pas pour ne rien dire » (Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership c. Rex, 2002 CSC 42, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 559, par. 37, citant Procureur général du Québec c. Carrières Ste-Thérèse Ltée, [1985] 1 R.C.S. 831, p. 838). Si le syndic n'avait pas le pouvoir de renoncer à des biens et si ce pouvoir n'était pas reconnu et prévu dans la loi, une disposition décrivant l'effet d'une telle renonciation n'aurait aucune utilité.

[192] L'AER soutient qu'il est possible de renoncer à un bien uniquement lorsque cela est nécessaire pour que le syndic échappe à toute responsabilité personnelle à l'égard d'une ordonnance environnementale. Cette interprétation inverse complètement le libellé de la disposition, transformant un effet énoncé de la renonciation en condition essentielle circonscrivant l'exercice du pouvoir. Les dispositions applicables ne sont ni rédigées ni ordonnées de cette façon. Le paragraphe 14.06(4) exprime plutôt le droit de renonciation en des termes qui ne comportent aucune restriction et fait ressortir que le syndic ne peut être tenu responsable quand ce droit est exercé. Si le Parlement avait vraiment voulu rendre le droit de renoncer à un bien tributaire de l'existence d'un risque de responsabilité personnelle, « il est difficile d'imaginer une façon plus compliquée et sibylline d'exprimer quelque chose qui pouvait être dit si facilement dans des termes clairs et directs » (Mitchell c. Bande indienne Peguis, [1990] 2 R.C.S. 85, p. 124).

[193] My colleague adopts a slightly different approach. Rather than accepting the argument that the risk of personal liability is a necessary condition to the exercise of the disclaimer power in s. 14.06(4), he concludes that protection from personal liability for non-compliance with environmental orders is the only consequence of a valid disclaimer. Therefore, he says, the bankrupt's estate is not relieved of its obligations under the environmental orders and the trustee can be compelled to expend the entirety of the estate's assets on compliance. With respect, this also cannot be the correct reading of the subsection. Nor do I believe that the brief references to s. 14.06(4) in GMAC Commercial Credit Corp. — Canada v. T.C.T. Logistics Inc., 2006 SCC 35, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 123 — a case in which this subsection was not directly in issue and this Court was not tasked with interpreting it in any meaningful way — provide much assistance in this case.

[193] Mon collègue adopte une approche légèrement différente. Au lieu d'accepter l'argument selon lequel le risque d'engager la responsabilité personnelle est une condition essentielle à l'exercice du pouvoir de renonciation prévu au par. 14.06(4), il conclut que la protection contre toute responsabilité personnelle pour non-respect d'ordonnance environnementale est l'unique conséquence d'une renonciation valide. Par conséquent, dit-il, l'actif du failli n'est pas déchargé des obligations que lui imposent les ordonnances environnementales et on peut contraindre le syndic à consacrer la valeur entière de l'actif au respect des ordonnances. Avec égards, il ne peut s'agir de la lecture correcte du par. 14.06(4). Je ne crois pas non plus que les brèves mentions de ce paragraphe dans Société de crédit commercial GMAC — Canada c. T.C.T. Logistics Inc., 2006 CSC 35, [2006] 2 R.C.S. 123, une affaire où le par. 14.06(4) n'était pas directement en cause et où notre Cour n'avait pas à l'interpréter de façon significative, se révèlent fort utiles en l'espèce.

[194] I accept that the opening words of s. 14.06(4) refer to the personal liability of the trustee. However, when the words of the subsection are read "in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament", as the courts are required to do (see Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27; Bell ExpressVu, at para. 26, quoting E. Driedger, Construction of Statutes (2nd ed. 1983), at p. 87), their meaning becomes apparent.

[194] Certes, le début du par. 14.06(4) parle de la responsabilité personnelle du syndic. Cependant, lorsqu'on lit les termes du paragraphe « dans leur contexte global en suivant le sens ordinaire et grammatical qui s'harmonise avec l'[économie] de la loi, l'objet de la loi et l'intention du législateur », tel que doivent le faire les tribunaux (voir Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 R.C.S. 27; Bell ExpressVu, par. 26, citant E. Driedger, Construction of Statutes (2e éd. 1983), p. 87), leur sens devient apparent.

[195] Section 14.06(4) both assumes and relies on the common law power of trustees to disclaim assets, a power that the majority of the Court of Appeal described as "commonplace" (para. 47). Even my colleague appears to accept that this disclaimer power "predates" s. 14.06(4) itself (at para. 95). Indeed, the majority of the Court of Appeal recognized that "[s]ection 14.06 does not appear to create a right in a trustee to abandon properties without value, but rather assumes that one exists upon bankruptcy" (para. 63). This is the only rational explanation for why Parliament made the effects of s. 14.06(4) available when the trustee "abandons, disposes of or otherwise releases any interest in any real property". While avoiding personal liability is one effect of the appropriate exercise of this power, it is not the only effect. Disclaimer operates to "determine, as from the date of the disclaimer, the rights, interests and liabilities" in the disclaimed property (R. Goode, Principles of Corporate Insolvency Law (4th ed. 2011), at p. 202). By properly disclaiming certain assets, the trustee is relieved of any liabilities associated with the disclaimed property and loses the ability to sell the property for the benefit of the estate. The author Frank Bennett, writing about the administration of the bankrupt's real property, explains that "[w]here the trustee disclaims its interest, the disclaimer releases and disclaims any and all right, title and interest to the property" (Bennett on Creditors' and Debtors' Rights and Remedies (5th ed. 2006), at p. 482 (footnote omitted)).

[195] Le paragraphe 14.06(4) tient pour acquis et repose sur le pouvoir des syndics en common law de renoncer à des biens, un pouvoir dont l'exercice est [TRADUCTION] « monnaie courante », affirment les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel (par. 47). Même mon collègue semble accepter que ce pouvoir de renonciation « précède » le par. 14.06(4) lui-même (par. 95). En effet, les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel ont reconnu que « [l]'article 14.06 ne semble pas créer le droit du syndic d'abandonner des biens sans valeur; il en tient plutôt l'existence pour acquise en cas de faillite » (par. 63). C'est la seule explication logique pour laquelle le Parlement a laissé le par. 14.06(4) produire ses effets lorsque le syndic « abandonne [. . .] tout intérêt sur le bien

[196] The majority asserts that s. 14.06(4) does not allow a trustee to "walk away" from assets and the environmental liabilities associated with them (paras. 86, 100 and 102). However, disclaiming property does have precisely this effect. It permits the trustee not to realize assets that would provide no value to the estate's creditors and whose realization would therefore undermine the trustee's fundamental objective. A recognized purpose of the disclaimer power is to "avoid the continuance of liabilities in respect of onerous property which would be payable as expenses of the liquidation, to the detriment of unsecured creditors" (Goode, at p. 200 (footnote omitted)). These principles are no less valid in relation to valueless real property than they are in relation to unprofitable and burdensome executory contracts. Indeed, there has been no suggestion in this appeal, including from the AER and the OWA, that trustees can never disclaim onerous real property.

[197] This explanation of the disclaimer power is borne out by GTL's actions in the instant case. After assessing the economic viability and marketability of Redwater's assets, GTL determined that it would be most beneficial to Redwater's creditors as a whole if it disclaimed the non-producing, liability-laden assets.

réel en cause, en dispose ou s'en dessaisit ». Bien que la protection contre toute responsabilité personnelle soit un effet de l'exercice régulier de ce pouvoir, ce n'est pas le seul. La renonciation sert à [TRADUCTION] « déterminer, à partir de sa date, les droits, intérêts et engagements » sur le bien auquel le syndic a renoncé (R. Goode, Principles of Corporate Insolvency Law (4e éd. 2011), p. 202). En renonçant à bon droit à certains biens, le syndic est dégagé de toute responsabilité associée aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation et ne peut plus vendre les biens au profit de l'actif. Dans le contexte de l'administration des biens réels du failli, l'auteur Frank Bennett explique que [TRADUCTION] « [l]orsque le syndic renonce à son intérêt, la renonciation emporte dessaisissement de tout droit, titre et intérêt sur le bien en question » (Bennett on Creditors' and Debtors' Rights and Remedies (5e éd. 2006), p. 482 (note en bas de page omise)).

[196] Les juges majoritaires font valoir que le par. 14.06(4) n'autorise pas le syndic à « délaisser » des biens ou à se soustraire aux engagements environnementaux qui s'y rattachent (par. 86, 100 et 102). Or, c'est exactement ce qu'entraîne la renonciation à des biens. Elle permet au syndic de ne pas réaliser des biens qui ne seraient pas profitables aux créanciers de l'actif et compromettraient par le fait même son objectif principal. Le pouvoir de renonciation a pour objet reconnu [TRADUCTION] « [d']éviter la poursuite des engagements à l'égard de biens onéreux qui seraient payables aux dépens de la liquidation, et ce, au détriment des créanciers non garantis » (Goode, p. 200 (note en bas de page omise)). Ces principes valent tout autant dans le cas des biens réels sans valeur que dans celui des contrats exécutoires non rentables et contraignants. En fait, personne n'a laissé entendre en l'espèce, pas même l'AER ou l'OWA, que les syndics ne peuvent jamais renoncer à des biens réels onéreux.

[197] Cette explication du pouvoir de renonciation est confirmée par les agissements de GTL en l'espèce. Après avoir estimé la viabilité économique et la qualité marchande des biens de Redwater, GTL a décidé que ce qui serait le plus profitable aux créanciers de Redwater dans leur ensemble, ce serait qu'il renonce aux biens inexploités et grevés d'engagements.

[198] Parliament's recognition of this common law disclaimer power in s. 14.06(4) is not new. The power is also referred to in another section, albeit in a broader context. Section 20(1) of the BIA, provides trustees with the ability to "divest" themselves of "any real property or immovable of the bankrupt" generally. However, the disclaimer power itself does not derive from this section. Nor is a trustee required to invoke s. 20(1) in order to exercise the disclaimer power described in s. 14.06(4), which incorporates that power and spells out the particular effects of its exercise in the specific context of environmental remediation orders. In any event, this Court is not required in this appeal to comment on the full effects of s. 20(1).

[199] Under my colleague's interpretation, it is unclear why Parliament chose to enact the disclaimer mechanism. It is surely true that Parliament could have achieved the same outcome through the use of simpler language. Had it merely intended to protect trustees from personal liability for failure to comply with environmental orders, it could have easily done so directly — in fact, it had already done so in s. 14.06(2). There is no reason why Parliament would have attempted to achieve this relatively straightforward result through the convoluted mechanism of requiring trustees to disclaim property while at the same time not intending such disclaimer to have its "commonplace" common law effects. There is a reason why Parliament has referred to the power to disclaim in s. 14.06(4); we must give effect to this choice and to the words that Parliament has used.

[200] It follows, then, that I respectfully disagree that s. 14.06(4) only protects trustees from specific types of personal liability. But it does not follow that the estate is relieved of its liabilities once a trustee exercises the disclaimer power — a misconception that is pervasive in the AER's submissions and the majority's analysis. The disclaimed property ultimately reverts to the estate at the conclusion of the bankruptcy proceedings, as is the case with unrealized assets (see BIA, s. 40; see also Bennett, at p. 528). The estate remains liable for the remediation obligations attached to the land. Whether the estate has sufficient assets capable of satisfying those liabilities at that point in time is a separate question that is unrelated to the underlying fact of ongoing liability. In any case, the regulatory scheme continues to apply with respect to the retained assets. In referring repeatedly to the idea that disclaimer does not "immunize bankrupt estates from environmental liabilities" (para. 81), the majority misunderstands the impact and purpose of the disclaimer power. The estate itself is not relieved of environmental obligations. As I have noted, the trustee does not take possession of the bankrupt's assets in order to continue the life of the bankrupt indefinitely. The trustee's function is to realize on the estate's valuable assets and maximize global recovery for all creditors. Allowing the trustee to deal only with the value-positive assets to achieve this goal does not relieve the estate of its environmental obligations. As a result, the disclaimer power, and its incorporation into s. 14.06(4), is entirely consistent with the foundational principles of insolvency law.

[198] La reconnaissance par le Parlement, au par. 14.06(4), de ce pouvoir de renonciation en common law n'a rien de nouveau. Le pouvoir est aussi mentionné dans une autre disposition, quoique dans un contexte plus général. Le paragraphe 20(1) de la LFI donne au syndic la possibilité de « renoncer » à « un immeuble ou [à] un bien réel du failli » en général. Le pouvoir de renonciation lui-même ne découle cependant pas de cette disposition. Le syndic n'est pas non plus obligé d'invoquer le par. 20(1) pour exercer le pouvoir de renonciation décrit au par. 14.06(4), lequel incorpore ce pouvoir et expose certains effets de son exercice dans le contexte précis des ordonnances de décontamination environnementale. Quoi qu'il en soit, notre Cour n'a pas à commenter en l'espèce tous les effets du par. 20(1).

[199] Suivant l'interprétation de mon collègue, la raison pour laquelle le Parlement a choisi d'instaurer le mécanisme de renonciation n'est pas claire. Il ne fait aucun doute que le Parlement aurait pu atteindre le même résultat en employant un langage plus simple. Si le Parlement comptait simplement protéger les syndics contre toute responsabilité personnelle découlant du non-respect d'ordonnances environnementales, il aurait pu aisément le faire directement; en fait, il l'avait déjà fait au par. 14.06(2). Il n'y a aucune raison pour laquelle le Parlement aurait tenté d'obtenir ce résultat relativement simple par le mécanisme alambiqué consistant à exiger des syndics qu'ils renoncent aux biens, tout en évitant que cette renonciation ait « couramment » des effets en common law. Il y a une raison pour laquelle le Parlement a mentionné le pouvoir de renonciation au par. 14.06(4); nous devons donner effet à ce choix et aux mots qu'il a utilisés.

[200] Par conséquent, avec égards, je ne suis pas d'accord pour dire que le par. 14.06(4) protège les syndics uniquement contre certains types de responsabilité personnelle. Mais cela ne signifie pas que l'actif est déchargé de ses engagements une fois que le syndic exerce son pouvoir de renonciation — une idée fausse qui est omniprésente dans les observations de l'AER et l'analyse de la majorité. Le bien visé par une renonciation retourne ultimement dans l'actif à l'issue du processus de faillite, comme c'est

[201] In s. 14.06(4), Parliament has expressly referred to this disclaimer power and spelled out the particular effects flowing from its proper exercise. By doing so, it has purposefully incorporated the disclaimer power into its statutory scheme to achieve its desired purposes.

[202] My interpretation of s. 14.06(4) finds ample support in the Hansard evidence. In the debates preceding the enactment of s. 14.06(4) in 1997, Jacques Hains, a director in the Department of Industry Canada who had been involved in drafting the amendments to the BIA, discussed the new options being provided to trustees when faced with an environmental remediation order:

First, he could decide to carry out the order and remedy the environmental damage, the costs to be charged as costs of administration from the bankrupt's assets.

le cas pour les biens non réalisés (voir LFI, art. 40; voir aussi Bennett, p. 528). L'actif demeure responsable des obligations de décontamination qui se rattachent au terrain. La question de savoir si les éléments d'actif sont suffisants pour satisfaire à ces engagements à ce moment précis est une question distincte qui n'a aucun rapport avec le fait sous-jacent de la responsabilité continue. Dans tous les cas, le régime de réglementation continue de s'appliquer aux biens conservés. En exprimant maintes fois l'idée que la renonciation ne met pas « les biens des faillis à l'abri de toute responsabilité environnementale » (par. 81), la majorité se méprend sur l'incidence et l'objet du pouvoir de renonciation. L'actif en soi n'est pas libéré des obligations environnementales. Comme je l'ai noté, le syndic ne prend pas possession des biens du failli en vue de poursuivre indéfiniment la vie du failli. Il a pour fonction de réaliser les biens de valeur de l'actif et de maximiser le recouvrement global au profit de tous les créanciers. Permettre au syndic de s'occuper uniquement des biens de valeur pour atteindre cet objectif ne libère pas l'actif de ses obligations environnementales. Ainsi, le pouvoir de renonciation et son incorporation au par. 14.06(4) s'accordent parfaitement avec les principes fondamentaux du droit de l'insolvabilité.

[201] Au paragraphe 14.06(4), le Parlement a mentionné expressément ce pouvoir de renonciation et exposé les effets particuliers découlant de son exercice approprié. Il a incorporé ainsi à dessein à son régime législatif le pouvoir de renonciation pour en réaliser les objectifs visés.

[202] Mon interprétation du par. 14.06(4) est amplement étayée par les débats parlementaires. Lors des débats qui ont précédé l'adoption du par. 14.06(4) en 1997, Jacques Hains, directeur au ministère d'Industrie Canada qui avait participé à la rédaction des modifications à la LFI, a discuté des nouvelles solutions qui s'offraient aux syndics aux prises avec des ordonnances de décontamination environnementale :

Premièrement, ils pourraient décider de se conformer à l'ordonnance et d'effectuer la dépollution, dont les coûts seraient des coûts d'administration des actifs du failli.

The second option would be to challenge this order to remedy before the appropriate courts; these two options are already to be found in environmental legislation.

The third option would be for the monitor to apply to the appropriate court for a period of stay to assess the economic viability of complying with the order, whether it is worth the trouble and whether the assets are sufficient to cover the clean up costs.

As a fourth option, if he considers that this course has absolutely no economic viability, he may give notification that he has renounced the real property to which the order applies. [Emphasis added.]

(Standing Committee on Industry, Evidence, No. 16, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., June 11, 1996, at 15:45 to 15:50)

The above passage makes no reference to the personal liability of a trustee who is considering whether to invoke the "fourth option" and disclaim the property. Mr. Hains was clear that the decision to disclaim is based on the "economic viability" of complying with the remediation orders, specifically "whether the assets are sufficient to cover the clean up costs". This makes sense only in the context of the trustee's obligation to maximize economic recovery for creditors.

[203] Several months later, Mr. Hains reiterated this fourth option, explaining that, after assessing the economic viability of complying with the order and "knowing that the bill will be too expensive and will not be economically viable, the trustees are then out of it and can abandon that piece of property subject to the order" (Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, No. 13, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., November 4, 1996, at p. 13:68 (emphasis added)). This description plainly reflects the function of the disclaimer power, which does indeed allow trustees to "walk away" from liability-laden assets that will not contribute to maximizing creditor recovery.

[204] Mr. Hains' answers to questions from the House of Commons Standing Committee further Comme deuxième option, ils pourraient contester devant les tribunaux compétents cette ordonnance de dépollution; ces deux options sont déjà prévues dans les lois en matière d'environnement.

La troisième option du praticien consisterait à demander à un tribunal compétent du temps de réflexion pour évaluer s'il est économique de se conformer à l'ordonnance ou non, si cela en vaut la peine et si les actifs sont suffisants pour couvrir les frais de dépollution.

Comme quatrième option, s'il croit que ce n'est absolument pas une décision économique, il pourra signifier qu'il abandonne les sites faisant l'objet de l'ordonnance. [Je souligne.]

(Comité permanent de l'industrie, Témoignages, nº 16, 2e sess., 35e lég., 11 juin 1996, entre 15 h 45 et 15 h 50)

Le passage précité ne mentionne aucunement la responsabilité personnelle du syndic qui se demande s'il y a lieu de se prévaloir de la « quatrième option » et de renoncer au bien. M. Hains a clairement affirmé que la décision de renoncer repose sur la viabilité « économique » du respect des ordonnances de décontamination, tout particulièrement sur la question de savoir « si les actifs sont suffisants pour couvrir les frais de dépollution ». Cela n'est logique que dans le contexte de l'obligation du syndic de maximiser le recouvrement au profit des créanciers.

[203] Plusieurs mois plus tard, M. Hains a répété cette quatrième option, expliquant qu'après avoir évalué s'il est économique de se conformer à l'ordonnance et « sachant que la facture sera trop élevée et que la proposition ne sera donc pas économiquement viable, le syndic peut s'en laver les mains et abandonner la propriété visée par l'ordonnance » (Délibérations du comité sénatorial permanent des Banques et du commerce, nº 13, 2e sess., 35e leg., 4 novembre 1996, p. 13:68 (je souligne)). Cette description traduit clairement la fonction du pouvoir de renonciation, qui permet au syndic de « délaisser » les biens grevés d'engagement qui ne contribuent pas à maximiser le recouvrement au profit des créanciers.

[204] Les réponses de M. Hains aux questions du Comité permanent de la Chambre des communes confirms this interpretation of the disclaimer power. The following exchange is very telling:

Mr. Lebel [Member of Parliament for Chambly]: When a trustee decides to give up the land and realize[s] assets elsewhere, for example by making a profit from the sale of assets, having released himself from the obligation to clean up the land, he would be sharing a dividend realized from other profitable assets and telling the creditors to manage as best they can with the real property. If the creditors are not willing to touch it, he will then tell the government to clean it up. In such a case, each of the bankruptcy creditors would also . . . stand to earn a small dividend, as it is referred to in Bankruptcy Law.

Do you not think that your bill should require the trustee to carry out a clean-up from the assets of the bankruptcy before the dividends are distributed?

Mr. Hains: It's an excellent question that was put to me only three weeks ago by colleagues from the Department of the Environment of Quebec, whom I was meeting to discuss this subject. There were a number of matters of interest to them, particularly the one raised by Mr. Lebel. [Emphasis added.]

(Standing Committee on Industry, June 11, 1996, at 16:55)

Mr. Hains went on to reference various other features of the scheme to assuage Mr. Lebel's concerns and noted that provincial environmental agencies would be responsible for performing the remediation work. Significantly, at no point did Mr. Hains contradict Mr. Lebel's understanding of the bill's provisions. Nor did he take issue with the premise underlying the question: that the new legislation does not "require the trustee to carry out a clean-up from the assets of the bankruptcy" before they are distributed to creditors. Mr. Hains did not claim that provincial regulators might still enforce such a requirement.

[205] This exchange between Mr. Lebel and Mr. Hains clearly demonstrates the collective understanding of all parties that the proposed amendments, containing what would become s. 14.06(4), specifically did not require the trustee to expend confirment elles aussi cette interprétation du pouvoir de renonciation. L'échange qui suit est fort éloquent :

M. Lebel [député de Chambly] : Lorsque le syndic décide de renoncer au terrain et réalise des actifs par ailleurs, par exemple en faisant un profit par la vente d'actifs, s'étant libéré de son obligation de dépolluer le terrain, il partage un dividende réalisé sur d'autres actifs rentables et dit aux créanciers de s'organiser avec le terrain. Si les créanciers ne veulent pas y toucher, il dit au gouvernement de le dépolluer. À ce moment-là, chacun des autres créanciers de la faillite ressort avec un petit dividende. C'est ainsi qu'on appelle cela en droit de la faillite.

Ne pensez-vous pas que votre projet de loi devrait forcer le syndic à faire la décontamination à même les actifs de la faillite avant de distribuer des dividendes?

M. Hains : C'est une excellente question qui m'a été posée il y a à peine trois semaines par des collègues du ministère de l'Environnement du Québec, que j'ai rencontrés pour parler de ce sujet-là. Il y avait des questions qui les intéressaient, notamment celle que M. Lebel soulève. [Je souligne.]

(Comité permanent de l'industrie, 11 juin 1996, à 16 h 55)

M. Hains a ensuite mentionné plusieurs autres caractéristiques du régime pour dissiper les préoccupations de M. Lebel et a fait remarquer que les organismes de réglementation environnementaux provinciaux devraient exécuter les travaux de décontamination. Fait important, M. Hains ne contredit jamais la conception que M. Lebel se fait des dispositions du projet de loi. Il ne conteste pas non plus la prémisse qui sous-tend la question : la nouvelle loi ne « force [. . .] pas le syndic à faire la décontamination à même les actifs de la faillite » avant leur répartition entre les créanciers. M. Hains ne prétend pas que les organismes de réglementation provinciaux peuvent toujours assurer le respect d'une telle exigence.

[205] Cet échange entre MM. Lebel et Hains démontre clairement que toutes les parties s'entendent pour dire que les modifications proposées, lesquelles contiennent ce qui allait devenir le par. 14.06(4), *n'*obligeaient pas expressément le syndic à dépenser the estate's assets to comply with environmental remediation orders. The drafters of s. 14.06(4) thus turned their minds directly to this issue, and their understanding of the provision's effects was contrary to that proposed by the majority.

[206] Based on these references to Hansard, I cannot agree with the majority's statement that the legislative debates provide "no hint" of a parliamentary intention to relieve trustees of the obligation to expend estate assets on environmental remediation (para. 81). This intention was clearly expressed on multiple occasions.

[207] As courts must read statutory provisions in their entire context, and as Parliament is presumed to craft sections and subsections of legislation as parts of a coherent whole, it is important to carefully examine the other subsections of s. 14.06. This is true regardless of whether a party to litigation seeks to apply them or to put them directly in issue (majority reasons, at paras. 88 and 101). Significantly, the immediate statutory context surrounding s. 14.06(4) confirms that a trustee's right to disclaim property is not limited in the manner suggested by the AER or my colleague. Four provisions adjacent to s. 14.06(4) support this conclusion.

[208] First, s. 14.06(5) provides that a court may stay an environmental order "for the purpose of enabling the trustee to assess the economic viability of complying with the order". Assessing "economic viability" is, on its face, broader than assessing the risk of personal liability. This provision indicates that a trustee is entitled to disclaim assets based on a rational economic analysis geared toward maximizing the value of the estate, and not merely in order to protect itself from personal liability. Otherwise, there would be no reason for Parliament to permit a court to grant a stay for the purpose of assessing economic viability. This understanding is consistent with the fundamental principles of insolvency law and with the Hansard evidence, as noted above, as well as with one of the recognized justifications for the disclaimer power more generally: to allow a trustee les biens de l'actif pour respecter les ordonnances de décontamination environnementale. Les rédacteurs du par. 14.06(4) se sont ainsi directement attardés à cette question et leur conception des effets de la disposition contredisait celle proposée par les juges majoritaires.

[206] Étant donné les extraits précédents des débats parlementaires, je ne peux souscrire à l'affirmation des juges majoritaires selon laquelle les débats législatifs ne donnent « aucun indice » d'une intention du Parlement de relever les syndics de l'obligation de consacrer des biens de l'actif à la décontamination environnementale (par. 81). Le Parlement a clairement manifesté cette intention à maintes reprises.

[207] Puisque les tribunaux doivent lire les dispositions législatives dans leur contexte global, et que le Parlement est présumé rédiger les articles et paragraphes d'une loi comme un tout cohérent, il importe d'examiner avec soin les autres paragraphes de l'art. 14.06. Il en est ainsi, peu importe qu'une partie au litige cherche à les appliquer ou à les mettre directement en cause (motifs des juges majoritaires, par. 88 et 101). Fait révélateur, le contexte immédiat du par. 14.06(4) confirme que le droit du syndic de renoncer à des biens n'est pas limité de la façon suggérée par l'AER ou mon collègue. Quatre dispositions adjacentes au par. 14.06(4) étayent cette conclusion.

[208] Premièrement, le par. 14.06(5) prévoit que le tribunal peut suspendre une ordonnance environnementale « [e]n vue de permettre au syndic d'évaluer les conséquences économiques du respect de l'ordonnance ». Évaluer les « conséquences économiques » a, à première vue, une portée plus large qu'évaluer le risque de responsabilité personnelle. Cette disposition indique que le syndic a le droit de renoncer à des biens en se fondant sur une analyse économique rationnelle visant à maximiser la valeur de l'actif, et non simplement afin de se prémunir contre une responsabilité personnelle. Sinon, le Parlement n'aurait aucune raison d'autoriser le tribunal à accorder une suspension en vue de permettre l'évaluation des conséquences économiques. Cette interprétation s'accorde avec les principes fondamentaux du droit de l'insolvabilité et les débats parlementaires, tel que

"to complete the administration of the liquidation without being held up by continuing obligations on the company under . . . continued ownership and possession of assets which are of no value to the estate" (Goode, at p. 200).

[209] Second, s. 14.06(7) grants the government a super priority for environmental claims in cases where it has already taken action to remedy the condition or damage. This provision would serve little purpose if a government regulator could assert a super priority for all environmental claims, as the AER effectively purports to do here by refusing to recognize GTL's disclaimers as lawful. It also suggests that Parliament specifically envisioned that the government could obtain a super priority and leapfrog other creditors, but only where the government itself has already remediated the environmental damage. An analogous argument was central to the reasoning in Abitibi, where this Court observed that the existence of a Crown priority limited to the contaminated property and certain related property under s. 11.8(8) of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, undercut the argument that Parliament "intended that the debtor always satisfy all remediation costs" in circumstances where that express priority was inapplicable and where the Crown had no further priority with respect to the totality of the estate's assets (para. 33).

[210] Third, s. 14.06(6) provides that claims for costs of remedying an environmental condition or environmental damage cannot rank as costs of administration if the trustee has disclaimed the property in question. Again, if the AER could effectively assert a super priority by compelling GTL to use all of Redwater's assets to satisfy its outstanding environmental liabilities, this provision would be unnecessary, because the costs of environmental je l'ai signalé précédemment, de même qu'avec l'une des justifications reconnues du pouvoir de renonciation de façon plus générale : permettre au syndic [TRADUCTION] « de mener à terme la liquidation sans être freiné par les obligations permanentes de la société [. . .] en conservant la propriété et la possession de biens qui n'augmentent en rien la valeur de l'actif » (Goode, p. 200).

[209] Deuxièmement, le par. 14.06(7) accorde au gouvernement une superpriorité à l'égard des réclamations environnementales dans les cas où il a déjà pris des mesures pour réparer le fait ou le dommage. Cette disposition serait fort peu utile si un organisme de réglementation gouvernemental pouvait faire valoir une superpriorité à l'égard de toutes les réclamations environnementales, comme l'AER a effectivement la prétention de le faire en l'espèce, en refusant de reconnaître la légalité des renonciations de GTL. Elle donne également à penser que le Parlement a expressément prévu que le gouvernement pouvait obtenir une superpriorité et devancer les autres créanciers, mais seulement lorsqu'il a lui-même déjà réparé le dommage lié à l'environnement. Un argument analogue a constitué l'élément central du raisonnement dans Abitibi, où la Cour a fait remarquer que l'existence d'une priorité de la Couronne portant uniquement sur les biens contaminés et certains biens connexes en vertu du par. 11.8(8) de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, c. C-36, mine l'argument selon lequel le Parlement a eu « l'intention d'obliger le débiteur à supporter dans tous les cas tous les coûts des travaux de décontamination » dans les situations où ce droit de priorité exprès était inapplicable et où la Couronne ne disposait d'aucune autre priorité sur l'ensemble des biens de l'actif (par. 33).

[210] Troisièmement, le par. 14.06(6) prévoit que les réclamations visant les frais de réparation du fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement ne peuvent faire partie des frais d'administration si le syndic a renoncé au bien en question. Encore une fois, si l'AER pouvait effectivement faire valoir une superpriorité en obligeant GTL à utiliser tous les biens de Redwater pour satisfaire aux engagements environnementaux non acquittés de celle-ci, cette disposition remediation would rank ahead of administrative costs in the priority structure. Moreover, s. 14.06(6) highlights the potential for a direct conflict between federal and provincial law. A trustee cannot comply with the AER's instruction to pay environmental costs as part of its administration of the estate while simultaneously complying with the BIA's requirement that such costs not be included in the trustee's administrative costs. This further raises the spectre of bankruptcy professionals being forced to expend their own funds under Alberta's regulatory regime — a notion that Parliament clearly rejected by amending the BIA in response to Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd., 1991 ABCA 181, 81 D.L.R. (4th) 280 (see C.A. reasons, at para. 63). This is a risk that is not adequately addressed under my colleague's interpretation.

ne serait pas nécessaire parce que les frais de décontamination environnementale passeraient avant les frais d'administration dans l'ordre de priorité. De plus, le par. 14.06(6) fait ressortir la possibilité d'un conflit direct entre la loi fédérale et la loi provinciale. Le syndic ne peut pas obtempérer à la directive de l'AER lui indiquant de supporter les frais environnementaux dans le cadre de son administration de l'actif tout en respectant l'exigence de la LFI selon laquelle ces frais ne font pas partie des frais d'administration du syndic. Cela fait également apparaître le spectre de l'obligation pour les professionnels de la faillite de dépenser leurs propres fonds en application du régime de réglementation albertain, une idée que le Parlement a clairement rejetée en modifiant la LFI en réaction à l'arrêt Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. c. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd., 1991 ABCA 181, 81 D.L.R. (4th) 280 (voir motifs de la Cour d'appel, par. 63). C'est un risque auquel l'interprétation de mon collègue ne répond pas adéquatement.

[211] Fourth, s. 14.06(2) already deals with the circumstances in which a trustee can be held personally liable for a bankrupt's environmental liabilities. Under this provision, personal liability can arise only where environmental damage occurs as a result of the trustee's gross negligence or wilful misconduct. If a risk of personal liability is, in fact, a necessary condition to disclaim under s. 14.06(4), or if protection from personal liability is the only effect of disclaimer, this would mean that the disclaimer power is available or useful only in cases where the underlying environmental condition arises after the trustee's appointment and the trustee is responsible for gross negligence or wilful misconduct.

[211] Quatrièmement, le par. 14.06(2) traite déjà des circonstances dans lesquelles le syndic peut être tenu personnellement responsable des engagements environnementaux du failli. Selon cette disposition, la responsabilité personnelle du syndic ne peut être engagée que si le dommage lié à l'environnement est imputable à sa négligence grave ou à son inconduite délibérée. Si le risque de responsabilité personnelle constitue, en fait, une condition essentielle à la renonciation prévue par le par. 14.06(4), ou si la protection contre toute responsabilité personnelle est le seul effet de la renonciation, cela signifie que le pouvoir de renonciation ne peut être exercé ou n'est utile que dans les cas où le fait sous-jacent lié à l'environnement prend naissance après la nomination du syndic et où ce dernier est responsable de négligence grave ou d'inconduite délibérée.

[212] This obvious absurdity cannot be sidestepped by trying to distinguish between liability for environmental damage (purportedly covered by s. 14.06(2)) and liability for a failure to comply with an order to remedy such damage (purportedly covered by s. 14.06(4)). This distinction is entirely artificial. If the AER issues an abandonment order in relation to a licensed property, it effectively creates liability for the underlying condition itself — liability that would still be encompassed by s. 14.06(2). This is evident from the marginal note for s. 14.06(2), "[l]iability in respect of environmental matters", which is capacious enough to include liability that flows from a failure to comply with an environmental order. In any event, it is difficult to imagine why Parliament would intend to immunize a trustee from personal liability for an environmental condition, but still hold the trustee liable for a failure to comply with an order to remedy that exact same condition — and then further, permit the trustee to avoid that very liability by disclaiming the property, but either not permit the trustee to disclaim that property in any other circumstance or make it pointless to do so. This convoluted reasoning not only misreads s. 14.06(4), but also rewrites s. 14.06(2) in the process. It effectively creates a sector specific exemption from bankruptcy law that would prohibit many receivers and trustees that operate in the oil and gas industry from disclaiming assets (see N. Bankes, Majority of the Court of Appeal Confirms Chief Justice Wittmann's Redwater Decision, May 3, 2017 (online)).

[212] On ne saurait contourner ce résultat manifestement absurde en tentant d'établir une distinction entre la responsabilité découlant d'un dommage lié à l'environnement (qui serait visée par le par. 14.06(2)) et la responsabilité découlant du non-respect de toute ordonnance de réparation de ce dommage (qui serait visée par le par. 14.06(4)). Cette distinction est tout à fait artificielle. Si l'AER rend une ordonnance

[213] I also cannot accept that Parliament enacted s. 14.06(4) simply to protect trustees from personal liability in the narrow subset of circumstances not already covered by s. 14.06(2) — namely where an environmental condition or environmental damage arises after a trustee's appointment and as a result of the trustee's gross negligence or wilful misconduct — for two main reasons. Firstly, the terms of the provision itself belie this theory. The opening lines of s. 14.06(4) expressly make the limitation of liability "subject to subsection (2)". This indicates that Parliament deliberately intended subs. (2) to supersede subs. (4) in the determination of liability. Thus, where a trustee has caused an environmental condition or environmental damage through its wilful misconduct or gross negligence, the trustee will still be personally liable, despite any valid disclaimer d'abandon à l'égard d'un bien visé par un permis, il crée effectivement une responsabilité découlant du fait sous-jacent lui-même — une responsabilité qui serait toujours visée par le par. 14.06(2). Cela ressort clairement de la note marginale du par. 14.06(2), « [r]esponsabilité en matière d'environnement », qui est suffisamment vaste pour englober la responsabilité découlant du non-respect d'une ordonnance environnementale. Quoi qu'il en soit, il est difficile d'imaginer pourquoi le Parlement voudrait mettre le syndic à l'abri d'une responsabilité personnelle découlant d'un fait lié à l'environnement, tout en tenant néanmoins le syndic responsable du non-respect d'une ordonnance de réparation concernant exactement le même fait — pour ensuite permettre au syndic d'être dégagé de cette même responsabilité en renonçant au bien, mais en ne permettant pas au syndic de renoncer à ce bien dans d'autres circonstances ou en rendant inutile cette renonciation. Non seulement ce raisonnement alambiqué constitue-t-il une mauvaise interprétation du par. 14.06(4), mais il équivaut en même temps à une reformulation du par. 14.06(2). Cela revient en fait à créer une exemption sectorielle à l'application du droit de la faillite qui empêcherait les séquestres et les syndics qui exercent leurs activités dans l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de renoncer à des biens (voir N. Bankes, Majority of the Court of Appeal Confirms Chief Justice Wittmann's Redwater Decision, 3 mai 2017 (en ligne)).

[213] Je ne peux non plus accepter que le Parlement a adopté le par. 14.06(4) dans le simple but de protéger les syndics contre toute responsabilité personnelle dans le sous-ensemble restreint de circonstances qui ne sont pas déjà visées par le par. 14.06(2) — à savoir celles où un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement survient après la nomination du syndic et à cause de sa négligence grave ou de son inconduite délibérée — pour deux raisons principales. Tout d'abord, le texte de la disposition contredit lui-même cette théorie. Les premières lignes du par. 14.06(4) limitent expressément la responsabilité « sous réserve du paragraphe (2) ». Le Parlement tenait donc à ce que le par. (2) l'emporte sur le par. (4) pour ce qui est de déterminer la responsabilité. Ainsi, le syndic ayant causé un fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement par son inconduite délibérée ou sa négligence grave under subs. (4). Secondly, there is no evidence, or indeed any rationale, to explain why Parliament would have drafted s. 14.06(4) to protect trustees in such narrow circumstances, through the method of disclaiming property, and to shield them from liability where they cause environmental issues through their own wrongdoing.

[214] The majority of this Court accepts that, on its interpretation, no meaningful distinction can be drawn between the protection from personal liability provided by subs. (2) and that provided by subs. (4). Indeed, the majority appears to believe that such a distinction is not even necessary, accepting that "s. 14.06(4) does not provide trustees with protection from personal liability any broader than the protection provided by s. 14.06(2)" (para. 93). However, the effect of this interpretation is to render subs. (4) entirely meaningless and redundant. Trustees would have no reason to exercise their power to disclaim assets, as the only effect of doing so would be to protect them from personal liability from which they are already fully shielded by subs. (2). Section 14.06(4) would therefore serve no purpose whatsoever within Parliament's bankruptcy regime. I cannot understand the logic of Parliament explicitly referring to, and incorporating, the ability of trustees to disclaim assets — and specifically outlining one consequence of that power — simply to mandate that such an action has no meaningful effect. We must presume that Parliament does not speak in vain and did not craft a pointless provision (Canada (Attorney General) v. JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007 SCC 30, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 610, at para. 87). It is a trite principle of statutory interpretation that every provision of a statute should be given meaning:

> It is presumed that every feature of a legislative text has been deliberately chosen and has a particular role to play in the legislative design. The legislature does not include unnecessary or meaningless language in its statutes; . . . it does not make the same point twice.
>
> (R. Sullivan, Statutory Interpretation (3rd ed. 2016), at p. 43)

engagera toujours sa responsabilité personnelle, malgré toute renonciation dûment effectuée en vertu du par. (4). Ensuite, aucune preuve, ni raison en fait, n'explique pourquoi le Parlement aurait rédigé le par. 14.06(4) afin de protéger les syndics dans des situations aussi particulières, par la renonciation à des biens, et de les mettre à l'abri de leur responsabilité lorsqu'ils endommagent l'environnement par leurs propres actes répréhensibles.

[214] Les juges majoritaires reconnaissent que, d'après leur interprétation, on ne peut établir de distinction utile entre l'immunité de responsabilité personnelle accordée par le par. (2) et celle fournie par le par. (4). En effet, ils semblent croire que cette distinction n'est même pas nécessaire, acceptant que « le par. 14.06(4) n'offre pas aux syndics une protection contre la responsabilité personnelle plus large que celle fournie par le par. 14.06(2) » (par. 93). Cette interprétation a cependant pour effet de rendre le par. (4) tout à fait dénué de sens et redondant. Le syndic n'aurait aucune raison d'exercer son pouvoir de renoncer à des biens, car cette mesure ne servirait qu'à le protéger contre la responsabilité personnelle dont le par. (2) le met déjà entièrement à l'abri. Ainsi, le par. 14.06(4) n'aurait absolument aucune utilité dans le régime de faillite du Parlement. Je ne peux saisir la logique, pour le Parlement, de mentionner explicitement et d'incorporer le pouvoir du syndic de renoncer à ces biens — et d'énoncer en termes exprès une conséquence de ce pouvoir — simplement pour disposer que cette mesure n'a aucun effet utile. Nous devons présumer que le Parlement ne parle pas pour ne rien dire et qu'il n'a pas rédigé une disposition inutile (Canada (Procureur général) c. JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007 CSC 30, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 610, par. 87). Un principe reconnu d'interprétation législative veut que chaque disposition d'une loi reçoive un sens :

> [TRADUCTION] On présume que chaque caractéristique d'un texte de loi a été délibérément choisie et a un rôle précis à jouer dans le cadre législatif. Le législateur n'emploie pas de termes inutiles ou dénués de sens dans ses lois; [. . .] il ne dit pas la même chose deux fois.
>
> (R. Sullivan, Statutory Interpretation (3e éd. 2016), p. 43)

[215] This evident absurdity cannot be avoided by suggesting that s. 14.06(4) was created to clarify to trustees that they may be required to expend the entire value of a bankrupt estate to comply with environmental orders, despite valid disclaimers. If Parliament's intent was truly to undermine the disclaimer power in this way, it is difficult to conceive of a more convoluted, tortuous and unclear method to achieve this result than s. 14.06(4). Had Parliament simply sought to make clear to trustees that disclaimer would not allow them to relieve themselves from satisfying environmental liabilities, it could easily have done so directly rather than enacting a provision that describes protection from personal liability they do not actually face.

[216] Section 14.06, when read as a whole, indicates that subs. (4) does more than merely protect trustees from personal liability. My colleague has declined to even consider the remaining subsections of s. 14.06 that I have discussed, other than subs. (2). Nonetheless, he says that the plain meaning of a provision cannot be "contorted to make its scheme more coherent" (para. 101). The conclusion that would result from such an approach would be that Parliament simply intended to craft a largely incoherent framework. I disagree that we should reach this conclusion here. As Dickson J. (as he then was) stated in Morgentaler v. The Queen, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 616, at p. 676: "We should pay Parliament the respect of not assuming readily that it has enacted legislative inconsistencies or absurdities." A determination that Parliament designed s. 14.06 as an incoherent whole is inconsistent with the role of the courts in statutory interpretation, which is to read the words of a statute in their entire context, harmoniously with the scheme of the statute. As Ruth Sullivan has noted:

> It is presumed that the provisions of legislation are meant to work together, both logically and teleologically, as parts of a functioning whole. The parts are presumed to fit together logically to form a rational, internally consistent framework; and because the framework has a purpose, the parts are also presumed to work together dynamically, [215] Il est impossible d'éviter cette absurdité évidente en affirmant que le par. 14.06(4) visait à préciser au syndic qu'il devait dépenser toute la valeur de l'actif d'un failli pour se conformer à des ordonnances environnementales en dépit de renonciations valides. Si le Parlement avait vraiment eu l'intention de miner ainsi le pouvoir de renonciation, il est difficile d'imaginer un moyen plus alambiqué, tortueux et vague d'atteindre ce résultat que le par. 14.06(4). Si le Parlement avait simplement voulu préciser au syndic que la renonciation ne leur permettrait pas d'être dégagés de l'obligation de respecter les engagements environnementaux, il lui aurait été facile de le faire directement, plutôt que d'adopter une disposition décrivant une immunité de responsabilité personnelle dont le syndic n'a pas besoin.

[216] Lu dans son ensemble, l'art. 14.06 indique que le par. (4) ne se borne pas à dégager les syndics de toute responsabilité personnelle. Mon collègue a même refusé d'examiner les autres paragraphes de l'art. 14.06 dont j'ai parlé, sauf le par. (2). Peu importe, dit-il, on ne peut « déforme[r] le sens clair d'une disposition pour en rendre le régime plus cohérent » (par. 101). Cette approche mènerait à la conclusion selon laquelle le Parlement voulait simplement concevoir un cadre incohérent en grande partie. Je suis en désaccord avec cette conclusion. Tel que l'a mentionné le juge Dickson (plus tard juge en chef) dans Morgentaler c. La Reine, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 616, p. 676 : « Nous devons avoir envers le Parlement la courtoisie de ne pas présumer aisément qu'il a édicté des incohérences ou des absurdités ». La conclusion que le Parlement a conçu l'art. 14.06 comme un tout incohérent est incompatible avec la tâche confiée aux tribunaux dans l'interprétation législative, laquelle consiste à lire les termes d'une loi dans leur contexte global en harmonie avec l'économie de la loi. Comme l'a fait remarquer Ruth Sullivan : each contributing something toward accomplishing the intended goal.

> [TRADUCTION] Les dispositions d'une loi sont présumées fonctionner ensemble, tant logiquement que téléologiquement, comme les diverses parties d'un tout. Les parties sont présumées s'assembler logiquement pour former un cadre rationnel, intrinsèquement cohérent; et parce que ce cadre a un objet, ses éléments sont aussi

The presumption of coherence is also expressed as a presumption against internal conflict. It is presumed that the body of legislation enacted by a legislature does not contain contradictions or inconsistencies, that each provision is capable of operating without coming into conflict with any other. [Footnote omitted.]

(Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes (6th ed. 2014), at p. 337; see also R. v. L.T.H., 2008 SCC 49, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 739, at para. 47.)

[217] Where it is possible to read the provisions of a statute — especially the various subsections of a single section — in a consistent manner, that interpretation is to be preferred over one that results in internal inconsistency. In my view, as I have set out above, it is possible to read s. 14.06(4) coherently with the remainder of the section. This is the interpretation that Parliament is presumed to have intended. In this case, I see no compelling reason to depart from this presumption.

[218] My colleague's analysis is reminiscent of the strictly textual or literal approach to statutory interpretation — the "plain meaning rule" — that this Court squarely rejected in Rizzo. This is apparent from the fact that he relies strictly on what he alleges to be the "clear and unambiguous" wording of s. 14.06(4), while discounting the context of the provision. With respect, I am of the view that the Court should rely on the predominant and well-established modern approach to statutory interpretation: the words of an Act must be "'read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament"' (Rizzo, at para. 21; Bell ExpressVu, at para. 26, both quoting Driedger, at p. 87).

[219] In Rizzo, Iacobucci J. explained that "statutory interpretation cannot be founded on the wording of the legislation alone" (para. 21). The Court of Appeal in Rizzo, which had adopted the plain présumés s'appliquer ensemble de façon dynamique, chacun contribuant à la réalisation de l'objectif visé.

La présomption de cohérence se traduit également par une présomption d'absence d'incompatibilité intrinsèque. Il est présumé que l'ensemble des textes législatifs édictés par une législature ne comporte pas de contradictions ou d'incohérences et que chaque disposition peut être appliquée sans entrer en conflit avec une autre. [Note en bas de page omise.]

(Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes (6e éd. 2014), p. 337; voir aussi R. c. L.T.H., 2008 CSC 49, [2008] 2 R.C.S. 739, par. 47.)

[217] Quand il est possible d'interpréter les dispositions d'une loi — surtout les divers paragraphes d'un même article — de façon cohérente, il faut privilégier cette interprétation à une interprétation qui donne lieu à une incohérence intrinsèque. À mon avis, et comme je l'ai déjà dit, il est possible de lire le par. 14.06(4) de façon cohérente avec le reste de l'article. Voilà l'interprétation que le Parlement est présumé avoir donnée à ce paragraphe. En l'espèce, je ne vois aucune raison impérieuse de s'écarter de cette présomption.

[218] L'analyse de mon collègue rappelle la méthode purement textuelle ou littérale d'interprétation des lois — la « règle du sens ordinaire » — que notre Cour a rejetée sans équivoque dans Rizzo. Cela ressort du fait qu'il se fonde strictement sur ce qu'il prétend être le texte « clai[r] et non ambig[u] » du par. 14.06(4), tout en ne tenant pas compte du contexte de la disposition. Avec égards, j'estime que la Cour devrait recourir à la méthode prédominante et bien établie d'interprétation des lois : il faut lire les termes d'une loi « dans leur contexte global en suivant le sens ordinaire et grammatical qui s'harmonise avec l'[économie] de la loi, l'objet de la loi et l'intention du législateur » (Rizzo, par. 21; Bell ExpressVu, par. 26, citant tous les deux Driedger, p. 87).

[219] Dans l'arrêt Rizzo, le juge Iacobucci a expliqué que « l'interprétation législative ne peut pas être fondée sur le seul libellé du texte de loi » (par. 21). La Cour d'appel saisie de l'affaire Rizzo, qui avait retenu meaning interpretation, "did not pay sufficient attention to the scheme of the [Act], its object or the intention of the legislature; nor was the context of the words in issue appropriately recognized" (para. 23).

[220] In interpreting s. 14.06(4) of the BIA, the majority similarly relies on the supposed plain meaning of the words of the provision but does not pay sufficient attention to the scheme of s. 14.06 as a whole; nor does it appropriately recognize the context of the words.

[221] Even if we were to leave aside the wording of the provision itself and its immediate statutory context, a purposive interpretation would lead to the same result. Consider the consequences of the analysis of the AER or the analysis of my colleague in other cases like this, where an oil company's environmental liabilities exceed the value of its realizable assets. Insolvency professionals, knowing in advance that they can be compelled to funnel all of the estate's remaining assets toward those environmental liabilities (either because they cannot disclaim value-negative assets absent a risk of personal liability or because their disclaimer will be ineffective to prevent this), will never accept mandates in the first place. This is sensible business practice: if the estate's entire realizable value must go toward its environmental liabilities, leaving nothing behind to cover administrative costs, insolvency professionals will have nothing to gain — and much to lose — by stepping in to serve as receivers and trustees, irrespective of whether they are protected from personal liability. Debtors and creditors alike, knowing that this is the case, will have no reason to even petition for bankruptcy. The result is that none of a bankrupt estate's assets will be sold — not even an oil company's valuable wells — and the number of orphaned properties will increase. This is a far cry from the objectives of the 1997 amendments to the BIA as discussed in Parliament, which were to "encourage [insolvency professionals] to accept mandates" and to "reduce the number of abandoned sites" (Standing Committee on Industry, June 11, 1996, at 15:49). It is difficult to imagine that Parliament would have intended a construction l'interprétation fondée sur le sens ordinaire, « n'a pas accordé suffisamment d'attention à l'économie de la [Loi], à son objet ni à l'intention du législateur; le contexte des mots en cause n'a pas non plus été pris en compte adéquatement » (par. 23).

[220] En interprétant le par. 14.06(4) de la LFI, la majorité s'appuie elle aussi sur le supposé sens ordinaire des mots de la disposition mais n'accorde pas suffisamment d'attention à l'économie de l'art. 14.06 dans son ensemble; elle ne prend pas non plus adéquatement en compte le contexte de ces mots.

[221] Même si nous faisions abstraction du libellé de la disposition elle-même et de son contexte législatif immédiat, une interprétation téléologique mènerait au même résultat. Considérons les conséquences de l'analyse de l'AER ou de celle de mon collègue dans d'autres cas comme celui qui nous occupe, où les engagements environnementaux de la société pétrolière excèdent la valeur de son actif réalisable. Les professionnels de l'insolvabilité, sachant d'avance qu'ils peuvent être contraints de canaliser tous les autres éléments d'actif vers ces engagements environnementaux (soit parce qu'ils ne peuvent renoncer à des biens ayant une valeur négative en l'absence du risque d'engager leur responsabilité personnelle, soit parce que leur renonciation n'empêchera pas cette éventualité de se produire), n'accepteront jamais de mandats au départ. Il s'agit là d'une pratique commerciale sensée : si toute la valeur réalisable de l'actif doit être dirigée vers ces engagements environnementaux, et qu'il ne reste rien pour couvrir les frais administratifs, les professionnels de l'insolvabilité n'auront rien à gagner — et beaucoup à perdre — en acceptant d'exercer les fonctions de séquestre et de syndic, indépendamment de la question de savoir s'ils sont protégés contre toute responsabilité personnelle. Les débiteurs tout comme les créanciers, sachant qu'il en est ainsi, n'auront aucune raison de même présenter une requête de mise en faillite. Il s'ensuit qu'aucun des biens de l'actif du failli ne sera vendu — pas même les puits de valeur de la société pétrolière — et que le nombre de biens orphelins augmentera. Cela est bien loin des objectifs des modifications apportées à la LFI en 1997 qui ont été débattues au Parlement of s. 14.06(4) that explicitly undermines its stated purposes.

[222] The majority appears to accept that the purposes of s. 14.06(4) of the BIA included encouraging insolvency professionals to accept mandates in cases where there may be environmental liabilities (paras. 80-81). However, merely protecting trustees from personal liability in such cases will fail to achieve Parliament's desired result. As I have explained, even where prospective trustees face no risk of personal liability, they will be reluctant to accept mandates if provincial entities can require the entire value of a bankrupt's realizable estate to be applied to satisfy environmental obligations.

[223] Since I have explained that s. 14.06(4) provides trustees with the power to disclaim assets even where there is no risk of personal liability, it is now necessary to briefly consider whether this power was available to GTL on the facts of this case. Here, the statutory conditions to the exercise of this power were met. The Abandonment Orders clearly relate to the remediation of an "environmental condition" (or "tout fait . . . lié à l'environnement" in the French version of the BIA, which can be translated literally as "any fact . . . related to the environment"). Indeed, even the AER and the OWA have never contested this point. In response to such orders, GTL was therefore entitled to exercise the disclaimer power provided for in s. 14.06(4).

(2) Section 14.06(4) Applies to Alberta's Oil and Gas Industry

[224] The AER raised an additional argument that the right of disclaimer is entirely inapplicable in the context of the statutory regime governing the oil and gas industry due to the role played by third-party surface landowners and the nature of the property et qui devaient « encourager [les professionnels de l'insolvabilité] à accepter des mandats » et « réduire le nombre de sites abandonnés » (Comité permanent de l'industrie, 11 juin 1996 à 15 h 49). Il est difficile d'imaginer que le Parlement aurait privilégié une interprétation du par. 14.06(4) qui nuit explicitement aux objectifs qu'il a énoncés.

[222] La majorité semble reconnaître que le par. 14.06(4) de la LFI a eu notamment pour objectif d'encourager les professionnels de l'insolvabilité à accepter des mandats dans des cas où il existe peut-être des engagements environnementaux (par. 80-81). Or, le simple fait de mettre les syndics à l'abri de la responsabilité personnelle en pareil cas ne permettra pas d'atteindre le résultat escompté par le Parlement. Comme je l'ai expliqué, même lorsque les syndics potentiels ne courent aucun risque d'engager leur responsabilité personnelle, ils seront réticents à accepter des mandats si des entités provinciales peuvent exiger que toute la valeur de l'actif réalisable d'un failli serve à acquitter des obligations environnementales.

[223] Ayant expliqué que le par. 14.06(4) confère aux syndics le pouvoir de renoncer à des biens même en l'absence d'un risque de responsabilité personnelle, je dois maintenant me demander brièvement si GTL disposait de ce pouvoir à la lumière des faits de la présente affaire. En l'espèce, les conditions statutaires préalables à l'exercice de ce pouvoir étaient réunies. Les ordonnances d'abandon se rapportent clairement à la réparation de « tout fait [. . .] lié à l'environnement » (dans la version française de la LFI) ou d'une « condition environnementale » (une traduction littérale du terme « environmental condition » dans la version anglaise de la LFI). En effet, même l'AER et l'OWA n'ont jamais contesté ce point. En réaction à de telles ordonnances, GTL pouvait donc exercer le pouvoir de renonciation prévu au par. 14.06(4).

(2) Le paragraphe 14.06(4) s'applique à l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de l'Alberta interests involved which rendered the Crown's super priority under s. 14.06(7) impractical. Martin J.A. (as she then was), writing in dissent at the Alberta Court of Appeal, reached the same conclusion. With respect, I cannot agree. Parliament did not make the disclaimer power in s. 14.06(4) conditional on the availability of the Crown's super priority.

[224] L'AER a également soutenu que le droit de renonciation ne s'applique aucunement dans le contexte du régime législatif régissant l'industrie pétrolière et gazière en raison du rôle joué par les tiers propriétaires de droits de surface et de la nature

[225] In delineating what interests may be disclaimed by a trustee under s. 14.06(4), Parliament used exceptionally broad language. The trustee is permitted to disclaim "any interest" in "any real property". While Redwater's AER-issued licences may not be real property, all of the parties accept that profits à prendre and surface leases can be characterized as real property interests. In the context of this case, it is these interests that GTL truly sought to disclaim. The AER argued that s. 14.06(4) permits the disclaimer only of "true real property", meaning land currently or previously owned by the bankrupt, without any third-party landowners. This interpretation is not consistent with the actual language used by Parliament. Had Parliament intended to restrict the disclaimer power solely to fee simple interests, it could have stated this, rather than referring to "any interest in any real property".

[226] Further, the Alberta oil and gas industry is far from the only natural resource sector in which companies traditionally operate on the land of third parties, whether the Crown or private landowners. The potential liability of trustees would explode if the mere presence of these third-party landowners rendered the disclaimer power in s. 14.06(4) entirely inapplicable. The language of the section is clearly broad enough to capture the statutory regime governing Alberta's oil and gas sector.

(3) Conclusion on Operational Conflict

[227] In light of this interpretation of s. 14.06(4), I agree with both courts below that there is an operational conflict to the extent that Alberta's statutory des droits de propriété en cause qui empêchaient la Couronne de se prévaloir de la superpriorité dont elle jouit en vertu du par. 14.06(7). La juge Martin (maintenant juge de notre Cour), dissidente en Cour d'appel de l'Alberta, est parvenue à la même conclusion. Avec égards, je ne peux partager son avis. Le Parlement n'a pas rendu le pouvoir de renonciation prévu au par. 14.06(4) conditionnel à la possibilité pour la Couronne de se prévaloir de sa superpriorité.

[225] En décidant des intérêts auxquels peut renoncer un syndic en vertu du par. 14.06(4), le Parlement a utilisé des mots exceptionnellement larges. Il est permis au syndic de renoncer à « tout intérêt » sur « le bien réel ». Bien que les permis réglementaires de Redwater ne soient peut-être pas des biens réels, toutes les parties reconnaissent que les profits à prendre et droits de surface peuvent être qualifiés d'intérêts sur des biens réels. Dans le contexte de la présente affaire, ce sont les droits auxquels GTL veut vraiment renoncer. L'AER a soutenu que le par. 14.06(4) autorise uniquement la renonciation à de « véritables biens réels », soit un terrain qui appartient ou appartenait au failli, sans tiers propriétaires fonciers. Cette interprétation ne s'accorde pas avec les mots employés par le Parlement. Si ce dernier avait voulu ne restreindre le pouvoir de renonciation qu'aux intérêts en fief simple, il aurait pu le dire plutôt que de parler de « tout intérêt sur le bien réel ».

[226] De plus, l'industrie pétrolière et gazière de l'Alberta est loin d'être le seul secteur de ressources naturelles où les sociétés exercent depuis longtemps leurs activités sur le terrain de tiers, qu'il s'agisse de la Couronne ou de propriétaires privés. La responsabilité potentielle des syndics exploserait si la simple présence de ces tiers propriétaires fonciers écartait complètement l'application du pouvoir de renonciation prévu au par. 14.06(4). Le texte du paragraphe est manifestement assez large pour embrasser le régime législatif régissant le secteur pétrolier et gazier de l'Alberta.

(3) Conclusion sur le conflit d'application

[227] Compte tenu de cette interprétation du par. 14.06(4), je suis d'accord avec les deux tribunaux d'instance inférieure pour dire qu'il y a un regime holds receivers and trustees liable as "licensees" in relation to the disclaimed assets (see chambers judge reasons, at para. 181; C.A. reasons, at para. 57). This conflict is far from hypothetical. Under federal law, GTL is entitled to disclaim the bankrupt's assets affected by the Abandonment Orders. Under the BIA, GTL cannot be compelled to take action with respect to properties it has validly disclaimed, since the act of disclaimer relieves it of any rights, interests and liabilities in respect of the disclaimed properties. But under provincial law, the AER can order GTL to abandon the disclaimed assets, among other things (see para. 11). This is exactly what happened here. Not only did the AER order GTL to complete the work, but it also made the sale of Redwater's valuable assets conditional on GTL either abandoning the non-producing properties itself or packaging those properties with the estate's valuable assets for the purposes of any sale. In doing so, the AER impermissibly disregarded the effect of GTL's disclaimers. This remains the case, irrespective of whether GTL could (or would) ever be held personally liable for the costs of abandoning the properties above and beyond the entire value of the estate.

[228] My colleague claims that the AER "has never attempted to hold a trustee personally liable" (para. 107). What is clear is that, on the facts of this case, the AER directly sought to require GTL to perform or pay for the abandonment work itself, whether this is referred to as personal liability or not. It is critical to observe that this litigation began when the AER filed an application seeking to compel GTL to comply with its obligations as a licensee, including the obligation to abandon the non-producing properties. Practically speaking, this amounted to an effort to hold GTL personally liable. Where else would the money required to abandon the disclaimed properties have come from? The value of the estate as a whole was negative, and the AER refused to permit GTL to sell the valuable properties on their own. No purchaser would have agreed to buy all of the assets together. Therefore, conflit d'application dans la mesure où le régime législatif albertain tient les séquestres et les syndics responsables en tant que « titulaires de permis » relativement aux biens faisant l'objet d'une renonciation (voir les motifs du juge en cabinet, par. 181; motifs de la Cour d'appel, par. 57). Ce conflit est loin d'être hypothétique. En vertu de la loi fédérale, GTL peut renoncer aux biens du failli touchés par les ordonnances d'abandon. Selon la LFI, GTL ne peut être contraint de prendre des mesures à l'égard des biens auxquels il a valablement renoncé puisque l'acte de renonciation le libère de tous les droits, intérêts et obligations à l'égard des biens visés par la renonciation. Mais selon la loi provinciale, l'AER peut notamment ordonner à GTL d'abandonner les biens ayant fait l'objet d'une renonciation (voir par. 11). C'est exactement ce qui s'est passé en l'espèce. Non seulement l'AER a-t-il ordonné à GTL de mener les travaux à terme, mais il a aussi rendu la vente des biens de valeur de Redwater conditionnelle à l'abandon des biens inexploités par GTL lui-même ou de la vente de ces biens avec les biens de valeur de l'actif comme un tout unique. En agissant ainsi, l'AER a indûment fait abstraction de l'effet des renonciations de GTL. Cela demeure vrai indépendamment de la question de savoir si GTL pouvait (ou allait) être tenue personnellement responsable des frais d'abandon des biens susmentionnés au-delà de la valeur totale de l'actif.

[228] Mon collègue prétend que l'AER « n'a jamais essayé d'engager la responsabilité personnelle d'un syndic » (par. 107). Ce qui est clair, c'est qu'à la lumière des faits de l'espèce, l'AER a directement tenté de contraindre GTL à exécuter ou à payer lui-même les travaux d'abandon, que l'on qualifie cela de responsabilité personnelle ou non. Il est primordial de faire remarquer que le présent litige a commencé lorsque l'AER a déposé une demande visant à contraindre GTL à respecter ses obligations en tant que titulaire de permis, notamment l'obligation d'abandonner des biens inexploités. Sur le plan pratique, cela constituait une tentative de tenir GTL personnellement responsable. Où d'autre aurait-on pris l'argent nécessaire à l'abandon des biens visés par les renonciations? La valeur de l'actif dans son ensemble était négative, et l'AER a refusé de permettre à GTL de vendre isolément les biens de GTL had no way to recoup any value from the estate, as Redwater was bankrupt and no longer generating income. The only source of funds, in this scenario, was GTL itself. This is why the AER filed suit to compel GTL to carry out Redwater's abandonment obligations. As this makes clear, I cannot agree with the suggestion that the provincial regime has never been utilized to hold trustees personally liable in contravention of federal law. That is precisely what happened in this very case.

[229] This conclusion cannot be avoided by referring to the fact that, pursuant to orders of the Alberta courts, GTL has already sold the valuable Redwater assets and the proceeds are being held in trust pending the outcome of this appeal (see majority reasons, at para. 108). This is precisely the result the AER sought to prevent by precluding GTL from selling only the valuable properties, without the disclaimed ones. GTL was able to do so only as a direct result of this litigation.

[230] My colleague states that, if the AER "were to attempt to hold GTL personally liable under the Abandonment Orders, this would create an operational conflict between the OGCA and the Pipeline Act, and s. 14.06(2) of the BIA, rendering the former two Acts inoperative to the extent of the conflict" (para. 107). Thus, even on my colleague's interpretation of s. 14.06 — which I do not accept — an operational conflict does exist on the facts of this case, specifically as a result of the AER's application to the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench seeking to have GTL personally satisfy the environmental obligations associated with the disclaimed assets.

[231] All of that being said, creditors with provable claims can still seek payment in accordance with the BIA's priority scheme (Abitibi, at para. 98). As I discuss below, the AER's environmental claims remain valid as against the Redwater estate, and it may pursue those claims through the normal bankruptcy valeur. Personne n'aurait consenti à acheter les biens tous ensemble. GTL ne disposait par conséquent d'aucun moyen de recouvrer une quelconque valeur de l'actif, car Redwater était en faillite et ne générait plus aucun revenu. La seule source de fonds, dans ce scénario, était GTL lui-même. C'est pourquoi l'AER a intenté une poursuite visant à contraindre GTL à exécuter les obligations d'abandon de Redwater. Il est donc clair que je ne puis souscrire à l'idée que le régime provincial n'a jamais été utilisé pour tenir les syndics personnellement responsables en violation de la loi fédérale. C'est justement ce qui s'est passé dans la présente affaire.

[229] On ne peut éviter cette conclusion en invoquant le fait que, conformément aux ordonnances des tribunaux albertains, GTL a déjà vendu les biens de valeur de Redwater et que le produit de leur vente est détenu en fiducie en attendant l'issue du présent pourvoi (voir les motifs de la majorité, par. 108). C'est exactement le résultat que l'AER a cherché à prévenir en empêchant GTL de vendre uniquement les biens de valeur, sans les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation. GTL n'est parvenu à le faire qu'à la suite du présent litige.

[230] Mon collègue dit que, si l'AER « devait tenter d'obliger personnellement GTL à se conformer aux ordonnances d'abandon, cela engenderait un conflit d'application entre, d'une part, l'OGCA et la Pipeline Act et, d'autre part, le par. 14.06(2) de la LFI, ce qui rendrait les deux premières lois inopérantes dans la mesure de ce conflit » (par. 107). Ainsi, même d'après l'interprétation donnée par mon collègue à l'art. 14.06 — que je ne retiens pas — il existe bel et bien un conflit d'application eu égard aux faits de l'espèce, surtout du fait de la demande présentée par l'AER à la Cour du Banc de la Reine de l'Alberta pour que GTL respecte personnellement les obligations environnementales associées aux biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation.

[231] Tout cela étant dit, les créanciers ayant des réclamations prouvables peuvent toujours demander un paiement conformément au régime de priorité établi par la LFI (Abitibi, par. 98). Comme je l'explique plus loin, les réclamations environnementales de l'AER demeurent valides à l'égard de l'actif de process. Thus, even if s. 14.06(4) does not permit GTL to disclaim the non-producing wells and relieve itself of the environmental obligations associated with them, it is nevertheless the case that the AER cannot compel GTL to satisfy its claims ahead of those of Redwater's secured creditors.

B. Frustration of Purpose

[232] The second branch of the paramountcy test is frustration of purpose. Even where dual compliance with both federal and provincial law is, strictly speaking, possible, provincial legislation or provisions will nevertheless be rendered inoperative to the extent that they have the effect of frustrating a valid federal legislative purpose (Moloney, at para. 25; Bank of Montreal v. Hall, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 121, at pp. 154-55; Canadian Western Bank, at para. 73). The focus of the analysis is on the effect of the provincial legislation or provisions, not its purpose (Moloney, at para. 28; Husky Oil, at para. 39).

[233] This Court has repeatedly recognized that one of the purposes of the BIA is "the equitable distribution of the bankrupt's assets among his or her creditors" (Moloney, at para. 32; Husky Oil, at para. 7). It achieves this goal through a collective proceeding model — one that maximizes creditors' total recovery and promotes order and efficiency by distributing the estate's assets in accordance with a designated priority scheme (Century Services Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2010 SCC 60, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 379, at para. 22). All claims that are "provable in bankruptcy" are subject to this priority scheme. Exercises of provincial power that have the effect of altering bankruptcy priorities are therefore inoperative because they frustrate Parliament's purpose of equitably distributing the estate's assets in accordance with the federal statutory regime (Abitibi, at para. 19; Husky Oil, at para. 32).

[234] The question here is whether the environmental claims asserted by the AER (i.e., the Abandonment Orders) are provable in bankruptcy. If they Redwater, et il peut faire valoir ces réclamations dans le cadre du processus normal de faillite. Donc, même si le par. 14.06(4) n'autorise pas GTL à renoncer aux puits inexploités et à se libérer des obligations environnementales qui s'y rattachent, il n'en demeure pas moins que l'AER ne peut pas contraindre GTL à régler ses propres réclamations avant celles des créanciers garantis de Redwater.

B. Entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral

[232] Le second volet du test de la prépondérance est l'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral. Même lorsqu'il est à proprement parler possible de se conformer à la fois à la loi fédérale et à la loi provinciale, la loi ou les dispositions provinciales seront néanmoins rendues inopérantes dans la mesure où elles ont pour effet d'entraver la réalisation d'un objet valide d'une loi fédérale (Moloney, par. 25; Banque de Montréal c. Hall, [1990] 1 R.C.S. 121, p. 154-155; Banque canadienne de l'Ouest, par. 73). L'analyse est axée sur l'effet de la loi ou des dispositions provinciales, et non sur son objet (Moloney, par. 28; Husky Oil, par. 39).

[233] La Cour a maintes fois reconnu que l'un des objets de la LFI est « le partage équitable des biens du failli entre ses créanciers » (Moloney, par. 32; Husky Oil, par. 7). Elle réalise cet objectif au moyen d'un modèle de procédure collective — modèle qui maximise le recouvrement intégral au profit des créanciers et fait régner l'ordre et l'efficacité en partageant les biens de l'actif conformément à un régime de priorité désigné (Century Services Inc. c. Canada (Procureur général), 2010 CSC 60, [2010] 3 R.C.S. 379, par. 22). Toutes les réclamations « prouvables en matière de faillite » sont assujetties à ce régime de priorité. Les exercices d'un pouvoir provincial ayant pour effet de modifier les priorités en matière de faillite sont donc inopérants parce qu'ils entravent la réalisation de l'objectif du Parlement d'assurer le partage équitable des biens de l'actif conformément au régime établi par la loi fédérale (Abitibi, par. 19; Husky Oil, par. 32).

[234] Il s'agit de savoir en l'espèce si les réclamations environnementales que fait valoir l'AER (c.-à-d. les ordonnances d'abandon) sont prouvables are, then the AER is not permitted to assert those claims outside of the bankruptcy process and ahead of Redwater's secured creditors because this would frustrate the purpose of the federal priority scheme. Rather, it must abide by the BIA and seek recovery from the estate through the normal bankruptcy procedures (Abitibi, at para. 40).

[235] In Abitibi, this Court established a three-part test, rooted in the language of the BIA, to determine whether a claim is provable in bankruptcy: "First, there must be a debt, a liability or an obligation to a creditor. Second, the debt, liability or obligation must be incurred before the debtor becomes bankrupt. Third, it must be possible to attach a monetary value to the debt, liability or obligation" (para. 26 (emphasis in original)). Since there is no dispute that Redwater's environmental obligations arose before it became bankrupt, I limit my analysis below to the first and third prongs of the Abitibi test: whether the liability is owed to a creditor, and whether it is possible to attach a monetary value to that liability.

[236] The first prong of the Abitibi test asks whether the debt, liability or obligation at issue is owed by a bankrupt entity to a creditor. Deschamps J., writing for a majority of the Court, suggested that this is not an exacting requirement: "The only determination that has to be made at this point is whether the regulatory body has exercised its enforcement power against a debtor. When it does so, it identifies itself as a creditor, and the requirement of this stage of the analysis is satisfied" (para. 27 (emphasis added)). Though I would not go so far as to suggest that the analysis under the first prong is merely perfunctory or pro forma, and circumstances may well exist where it is not satisfied, Deschamps J. made clear in Abitibi that "[m]ost environmental regulatory bodies can be creditors", again stressing that government entities cannot systematically evade the priority requirements of federal bankruptcy legislation under the guise of enforcing public duties (para. 27 (emphasis added)).

en matière de faillite. Si elles le sont, l'AER n'est pas autorisé à faire valoir ces réclamations en dehors du processus de faillite et avant les créanciers garantis de Redwater, car cela entraverait la réalisation de l'objet du régime de priorité fédéral. Il doit plutôt se conformer à la LFI et tenter de recouvrer de l'actif par le truchement de la procédure normale de faillite (Abitibi, par. 40).

[235] Dans Abitibi, la Cour a établi un test à trois volets, fondé sur le libellé de la LFI, pour déterminer si une réclamation est prouvable en matière de faillite : « Premièrement, on doit être en présence d'une dette, d'un engagement ou d'une obligation envers un créancier. Deuxièmement, la dette, l'engagement ou l'obligation doit avoir pris naissance avant que le débiteur ne devienne failli. Troisièmement, il doit être possible d'attribuer une valeur pécuniaire à cette dette, cet engagement ou cette obligation » (par. 26 (en italique dans l'original)). Comme personne ne conteste le fait que les obligations environnementales de Redwater ont pris naissance avant que cette dernière ne devienne faillie, je limiterai mon analyse ci-dessous aux premier et troisième volets du test établi dans Abitibi : la question de savoir si l'engagement est dû à un créancier, et celle de savoir s'il est possible d'attribuer une valeur pécuniaire à cet engagement.

[236] Le premier volet du test Abitibi pose la question de savoir si la dette, l'engagement ou l'obligation en cause sont dus par une entité faillie à un créancier. S'exprimant au nom des juges majoritaires, la juge Deschamps a laissé entendre qu'il ne s'agit pas d'une exigence rigoureuse : « [à] cette étape, la seule question à trancher est de savoir si l'organisme administratif a exercé, à l'encontre d'un débiteur, son pouvoir de faire appliquer la loi. Lorsqu'il le fait, il s'identifie alors comme créancier et la condition de cette étape est respectée » (par. 27 (je souligne)). Je n'irais pas jusqu'à dire que l'analyse à effectuer au premier volet est une simple analyse superficielle ou pro forma et il peut fort bien exister des cas où il n'est pas satisfait à ce volet, mais la juge Deschamps indique clairement dans Abitibi que « [l]a plupart des organismes administratifs [environnementaux] peuvent agir à titre de créanciers » (par. 27 (je souligne)), soulignant encore une

Even Martin J.A., writing in dissent at the Court of Appeal in this case, acknowledged that "Abitibi cast[s] the creditor net widely" (para. 186). The language of Abitibi admits of no ambiguity, uncertainty or doubt in this regard.

[237] The majority suggests that applying Abitibi on its own terms will make it "impossible for a regulator not to be a creditor" (para. 136 (emphasis in original)). Without seeking to speculate on all possible scenarios, I would simply note that there will be many obvious circumstances in which regulators are not even exercising enforcement powers against particular debtors and the analysis from Abitibi can be concluded at a very early stage. Provincial regulators do many things that do not qualify as enforcement mechanisms against specific parties. For example, a regulatory agency may publish guidelines for the benefit of all actors in a certain industry or it may issue a license or permit to an individual. In such cases, any discussion of frustrating federal purposes will not go far. However, as Deschamps J. expressly acknowledged, the first prong of the test will have very broad application. This Court should not feel compelled to limit its scope when Abitibi employed clear language in full recognition of its wide-ranging effects.

[238] Here, there is no doubt that the AER exercised its enforcement power against a debtor when it issued orders requiring Redwater to perform the environmental work on the non-producing properties. The reasoning is simple: Redwater owes a debt to the AER, and the AER has attempted to enforce that debt by issuing the Abandonment Orders, which require Redwater to make good on its obligation. If Redwater (or GTL, as the receiver and trustee) does not abide by those orders — to the detriment of the estate's other creditors — it can be held liable fois que les entités gouvernementales ne sauraient systématiquement se soustraire aux exigences en matière de priorité de la loi fédérale sur la faillite sous le couvert de l'obligation de faire respecter les devoirs publics. Même la juge d'appel Martin, dans les motifs dissidents qu'elle a rédigés, a reconnu que [TRADUCTION] « l'arrêt Abitibi ratisse large en ce qui a trait à la qualité de créancier » (par. 186). Le texte de cet arrêt ne laisse place à aucune ambiguïté, incertitude ou doute à cet égard.

[237] Les juges majoritaires soutiennent que, si l'on applique tel quel l'arrêt Abitibi, cela « exclut la possibilité qu'un organisme de réglementation ne soit pas un créancier » (par. 136 (en italique dans l'original)). Sans vouloir conjecturer tous les scénarios possibles, je ferai simplement remarquer qu'il existe de nombreuses situations évidentes où des organismes de réglementation n'exercent même pas de pouvoirs d'application à l'encontre de débiteurs en particulier, et l'analyse tirée d'Abitibi peut être menée à terme très tôt. Les organismes de réglementation font bien des choses qui ne participent pas de mécanismes d'application à l'encontre de certaines parties. Par exemple, un organisme de réglementation peut publier des lignes directrices pour le bien de tous les acteurs d'une industrie donnée, ou encore délivrer une licence ou un permis à un particulier. Dans ces cas, toute analyse de l'entrave à la réalisation d'objets fédéraux sera brève. Or, comme l'a explicitement reconnu la juge Deschamps, le premier volet du test sera d'application très large. Notre Cour ne devrait pas se sentir contrainte d'en restreindre la portée alors que des termes clairs sont employés dans cet arrêt pour reconnaître sans réserve ses vastes effets.

[238] En l'espèce, il ne fait aucun doute que l'AER a exercé son pouvoir d'appliquer la loi à l'encontre d'une débitrice lorsqu'il a rendu les ordonnances enjoignant à Redwater d'accomplir les travaux environnementaux sur les biens inexploités. Le raisonnement est simple : Redwater a une dette envers l'AER, et l'AER a tenté de recouvrer cette créance en rendant les ordonnances d'abandon, qui enjoignent à Redwater d'honorer son obligation. Si Redwater (ou GTL, en tant que séquestre et syndic) ne respecte pas ces ordonnances — au détriment des autres under provincial law. This is, by any definition, an exercise of enforcement power, which is precisely what Abitibi describes. In fact, the AER itself conceded this point twice — first before the Court of Queen's Bench, and again at the Court of Appeal (chambers judge reasons, at para. 164; C.A. reasons, at para. 73).

[239] The conclusion that I reach with respect to the AER's status as a creditor follows from a straightforward application of Abitibi. My colleague, however, seeks to reformulate this prong of the test. He suggests that a regulator is acting as a creditor only where it is not acting in the public interest and where the regulator itself, or the general revenue fund, is the beneficiary of the environmental obligation. He endorses the holding allegedly made in Northern Badger that "a regulator enforcing a public duty by way of non-monetary order is not a creditor" (para. 130).

[240] In my view, it is neither appropriate nor necessary in this case to attempt to redefine this prong of Abitibi and narrow the broad definition of "creditor" provided by Deschamps J. This Court should leave her clear description of the provable claim standard to stand on its own terms. Respectfully, I disagree with the manner in which the majority is attempting to reformulate the "creditor" analysis, for a number of reasons.

[241] Firstly, I do not believe that this case represents an appropriate opportunity to revisit the "creditor" stage of the Abitibi test. The AER conceded in both of the courts below that it was in fact a creditor of GTL. As a direct result of these concessions, neither the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench nor the majority of the Court of Appeal directly addressed this issue; instead, they merely provided cursory comments. This issue appears to have been raised for the first time by Martin J.A. in her dissenting judgment. However, even her analysis is relatively brief, comprising only three paragraphs and consisting mainly of the statement that the costs of créanciers de l'actif — elle peut être tenue responsable en application de la loi provinciale. Il s'agit, par définition, de l'exercice d'un pouvoir d'appliquer la loi, ce qui est précisément ce que décrit l'arrêt Abitibi. En fait, l'AER a lui-même concédé ce point à deux reprises — la première fois devant la Cour du Banc de la Reine, et la deuxième fois devant la Cour d'appel (motifs du juge en cabinet, par. 164; motifs de la Cour d'appel, par. 73).

[239] La conclusion que je tire quant au statut de créancier de l'AER découle d'une application pure et simple de l'arrêt Abitibi. Mon collègue, en revanche, cherche à reformuler ce volet du critère. Il soutient qu'un organisme de réglementation agit comme créancier seulement lorsqu'il ne le fait pas dans l'intérêt public et lorsque l'organisme lui-même, ou le Trésor, est le bénéficiaire de l'obligation environnementale. Il fait sienne la conclusion qui aurait été tirée dans Northern Badger selon laquelle « un organisme de réglementation faisant respecter un devoir public au moyen d'une ordonnance non pécuniaire n'est pas un créancier » (par. 130).

[240] À mon sens, il n'est ni approprié ni nécessaire en l'espèce d'essayer de redéfinir ce volet du critère Abitibi et de restreindre le large sens attribué par la juge Deschamps au mot « créancier ». La Cour devrait s'en tenir à la description claire que fait la juge Deschamps de la norme de la réclamation prouvable. Avec égards, je ne puis me rallier à la façon dont les juges majoritaires tentent de reformuler l'analyse relative au « créancier », et ce, pour plusieurs raisons.

[241] Premièrement, je ne crois pas que la présente affaire soit une bonne occasion de revoir l'étape « créancier » du critère Abitibi. L'AER a concédé devant les deux tribunaux d'instance inférieure qu'il était en effet un créancier de GTL. Ces concessions ont pour conséquence directe que la question n'a été abordée directement ni par la Cour du Banc de la Reine de l'Alberta ni par les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel, qui se sont plutôt contentés de formuler de brefs commentaires. Cette question semble avoir été soulevée pour la première par la juge d'appel Martin dans ses motifs dissidents. Toutefois, même son analyse est relativement brève, ne compte abandonment are "not owed to the Regulator, or to the province" (para. 185). While it is true that the parties briefly addressed this issue in their written and oral submissions to this Court, it was clearly not a substantial focus of their arguments. Without the benefit of considered reasons from the lower courts or thorough submissions on the continued application of the first prong of the test formulated in Abitibi, this Court should not attempt to significantly alter it.

[242] Secondly, the majority states that no fairness concerns are raised by disregarding the AER's concessions below. It makes this point predominantly because the issue was raised and argued before this Court and because of the AER's unilateral assertion in its letter to GTL in May 2015. However, it is important to note that the effect of the AER's concessions was that GTL and ATB Financial were no longer required to adduce any evidence on this issue (S. N. Lederman, A. W. Bryant and M. K. Fuerst, The Law of Evidence in Canada (5th ed. 2018), at p. 1387). This point is important given that the majority's reformulation of the "creditor" requirement under the first prong of the test is highly fact-specific and dependent on the circumstances of the particular case. As a direct result of the AER's concession in the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench, we cannot know what evidence GTL or ATB Financial could have adduced on this issue. Therefore, there may indeed be real prejudice occasioned to these parties by disregarding the AER's concession at this point in time.

[243] Thirdly, my colleague relies on the fact that the chambers judge in Abitibi found that the Province had already expropriated three of the five sites for which it issued remediation orders and was likely using the orders as a means to offset AbitibiBowater's NAFTA claims. While the chambers judge did in fact make these findings, they were inconsequential to Deschamps J.'s analysis on the "creditor" prong of the test. When applying the test to the facts of que trois paragraphes et se limite principalement à l'affirmation portant que les coûts liés à l'abandon ne sont pas dûs à [TRADUCTION] « l'organisme de réglementation ou à la province » (par. 185). Bien que les parties aient abordé succinctement la question dans leurs observations écrites et leurs plaidoiries présentées à la Cour, ce n'était clairement pas au cœur de leur argumentaire. En l'absence de motifs réfléchis des tribunaux d'instance inférieure ou d'observations exhaustives sur l'application continue du premier volet du test formulé dans Abitibi, la Cour ne devrait pas tenter de le modifier substantiellement.

[242] Deuxièmement, selon les juges majoritaires, on ne soulève aucune préoccupation en matière d'équité en ne tenant pas compte de la concession faite par l'AER devant les tribunaux d'instance inférieure. La majorité apporte cette précision principalement parce que la question a été soulevée et débattue devant la Cour et en raison de l'affirmation unilatérale contenue dans la lettre de l'AER adressée à GTL en mai 2015. Il importe toutefois de noter que les concessions de l'AER ont eu pour effet que GTL et ATB Financial ne sont plus tenus de présenter de la preuve à cet égard (S. N. Lederman, A. W. Bryant et M. K. Fuerst, The Law of Evidence in Canada (5e éd. 2018), p. 1387). Il s'agit d'un point important étant donné que la reformulation, par les juges majoritaires, de l'exigence « créancier » au premier volet du test est largement tributaire des faits et dépend des circonstances de l'affaire en cause. La concession de l'AER devant la Cour du Banc de la Reine de l'Alberta a pour résultat direct qu'il nous est impossible de savoir quels éléments de preuve GTL ou ATB Financial aurait présentés à ce sujet. Par conséquent, ne pas tenir compte de la concession à ce moment-ci pourrait bien causer un véritable préjudice aux parties.

[243] Troisièmement, mon collègue s'appuie sur le fait que, dans Abitibi, le juge en cabinet a conclu que la Province avait déjà exproprié trois des cinq sites pour lesquels elle avait émis des ordonnances exigeant la décontamination et qu'elle utilisait vraisemblablement ces ordonnances pour compenser les réclamations d'AbitibiBowater fondées sur l'ALENA. Bien que le juge en cabinet soit effectivement arrivé à ces conclusions, celles-ci n'ont eu

Abitibi, she explained that the first prong was "easily satisfied" because "the Province had identified itself as a creditor by resorting to [Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2] enforcement mechanisms" (Abitibi, at para. 49). She placed no reliance on the fact that the Province might itself derive a financial benefit from its actions and was not enforcing a purely public duty. Her analysis was in no way based on a finding that the Province's actions were a "colourable attempt" to recover a debt or that they demonstrated an "ulterior motive" (majority reasons, at para. 128).

[244] Fourthly, in my view, it is incorrect to rely on Northern Badger in this case. That decision does not support my colleague's position in the manner he alleges. The issue in Northern Badger was also whether environmental remediation orders could be considered claims provable in bankruptcy. However, the crux of the dispute was whether "enforcing the requirement for the proper abandonment of oil and gas wells" (p. 57) gave rise to a provable claim because it would require the receiver to expend funds. Laycraft C.J.A. never addressed the question of whether the regulator could be said to have a contingent claim because it would complete the abandonment work itself and assert a claim for reimbursement. It was in the context of the regulator requiring the receiver to fulfill the abandonment obligations itself that the Alberta Court of Appeal discussed the enforcement of a public duty. It is important to carefully examine what the Court of Appeal actually said in this regard: aucune incidence sur l'analyse de la juge Deschamps relativement au volet « créancier » du test. Appliquant le test aux faits dans l'affaire Abitibi, elle a expliqué qu'il était « facile de répondre » au premier volet étant donné que « la province s'est elle-même présentée comme créancière en ayant recours aux mécanismes d'application de l'[Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2] » (Abitibi, par. 49). Elle n'a pas tenu compte du fait que la Province pourrait elle-même tirer un avantage financier de ses actions et qu'elle n'appliquait pas un devoir purement public. Son analyse ne reposait aucunement sur la conclusion suivant laquelle les mesures de la Province étaient une « tentative déguisée » de recouvrer une créance ou témoignaient de « motifs obliques » (motifs des juges majoritaires, par. 128).

> The statutory provisions requiring the abandonment of oil and gas wells are part of the general law of Alberta, binding every citizen of the province. All who become licensees of oil and gas wells are bound by them. Similar statutory obligations bind citizens in many other areas of

[244] Quatrièmement, il me paraît incorrect de s'appuyer sur l'arrêt Northern Badger en l'espèce. Cet arrêt n'étaye pas la position de mon collègue comme il l'affirme. L'arrêt Northern Badger portait également sur la question de savoir si des ordonnances de décontamination environnementale pouvaient être considérées comme des réclamations prouvables en matière de faillite. Le nœud du litige consistait toutefois à établir si [TRADUCTION] « l'application de l'exigence concernant l'abandon de puits de pétrole et de gaz » (p. 57) donnait naissance en soi à une réclamation prouvable parce qu'elle exigerait du séquestre qu'il débourse des fonds. Le juge en chef Laycraft de la Cour d'appel n'a jamais abordé la question de savoir s'il était possible d'affirmer que l'organisme de réglementation pouvait faire valoir une réclamation éventuelle du fait qu'il achèverait lui-même les travaux et présenterait une demande de remboursement. C'est dans le contexte où l'organisme de réglementation exige du séquestre qu'il s'acquitte lui-même des obligations liées à l'abandon que la Cour d'appel de l'Alberta s'est prononcée sur l'exécution d'un devoir public par l'organisme de réglementation. Il est important d'examiner avec soin les propos tenus par la Cour d'appel à cet égard :

> [TRADUCTION] Les dispositions statutaires exigeant l'abandon des puits de pétrole et de gaz font partie des lois d'application générale de l'Alberta et lient tous les citoyens de la province. Quiconque devient titulaire de permis relativement à de tels puits y est assujetti. Les modern life. Rules relating to health, or the prevention of fires, or the clearing of ice and snow, or the demolition of unsafe structures are examples which come to mind. But the obligation of the citizen is not to the peace officer, or public authority which enforces the law. The duty is owed as a public duty by all the citizens of the community to their fellow citizens. When the citizen subject to the order complies, the result is not the recovery of money by the peace officer or public authority, or of a judgment for money, nor is that the object of the whole process. Rather, it is simply the enforcement of the general law. The enforcing authority does not become a "creditor" of the citizen on whom the duty is imposed.

citoyens sont liés par des obligations statutaires similaires dans de nombreux domaines de la vie moderne. Notons, par exemple, les règles relatives à la santé, à la prévention des incendies, à l'enlèvement de la glace et de la neige ou à la démolition des structures non sécuritaires. Mais l'obligation qui incombe au citoyen n'incombe pas au policier ou à l'autorité publique qui applique la loi. L'obligation est établie comme une obligation à caractère public qui doit être respectée par l'ensemble des citoyens de la collectivité à l'égard de leurs concitoyens. Lorsque le citoyen visé par l'ordonnance s'y conforme, le résultat n'est pas perçu comme le recouvrement d'une somme d'argent par un agent de la paix ou l'autorité publique, ni comme l'exécution d'un jugement ordonnant le paiement d'une somme d'argent; d'ailleurs, cela ne constitue pas non plus l'objectif de l'ensemble du processus. Il faut plutôt y voir l'application d'une loi générale. L'organisme d'application de la loi ne devient pas un « créancier » du citoyen à qui incombe l'obligation.

It is true that this board has the power by statute to create in its own favour a statutory debt if it chooses to do so. It may, under Sections 91(1) and (2) of the Oil and Gas Conservation Act (discussed above) do the work of abandonment itself and become a creditor for the sums expended. But the Board has not done so in this case. Rather it is simply in the course of enforcing observance of a part of the general law of Alberta. [Emphasis added; paras. 33-34.]

Il est vrai que la loi autorise l'Office à créer une créance légale en sa faveur s'il le désire. En vertu des par. 91(1) et (2) de l'Oil and Gas Conservation Act (analysée précédemment), l'Office peut exécuter lui-même les travaux d'abandon et devenir créancier à l'égard des sommes dépensées. Mais il n'a pas procédé de cette façon en l'espèce. En réalité, il applique simplement une partie des lois d'application générale de l'Alberta. [Je souligne; par. 33-34.]

[245] As is evident from para. 34 of Northern Badger, quoted above, the Court of Appeal never stated in that case that a regulator is not — or cannot be — a creditor when it is acting to enforce a public duty. In Abitibi, when referring to Northern Badger, Deschamps J. explained that the Alberta Court of Appeal "found that the duty to undertake remediation work is owed to the public at large until the regulator exercises its power to assert a monetary claim" (Abitibi, at para. 44 (emphasis added)). Laycraft C.J.A. accepted that when the regulator fulfills an environmental obligation itself and asserts a claim for reimbursement, it does indeed "become a creditor for the sums expended". Even in this situation, the public is still the ultimate beneficiary of the remediation work. This is largely consistent with Deschamps J.'s formulation of the test for a provable claim. In fact, this Court simply extended this principle in Abitibi, concluding that a regulator may also be a creditor with a provable contingent claim when it is sufficiently certain that the regulator will perform the remediation work and advance a claim for reimbursement. This is precisely the situation with the AER and the OWA here, as I will explain in more detail below. The Alberta Court of Appeal did not frame the issue in terms of the three-part test that would later be developed in Abitibi; it did not divide its analysis of whether a provable claim existed. However, viewed properly, Deschamps J. dealt with the concerns raised in Northern Badger under the third prong of the Abitibi test. It is not appropriate to duplicate these principles under the first prong as well, as the majority proposes. For this reason, it is misguided to rely on Northern Badger in this appeal to conclude that the AER is not a creditor.

[245] Comme il ressort du par. 34 précité de l'arrêt Northern Badger, la Cour d'appel n'a jamais mentionné dans cette affaire qu'un organisme de réglementation n'a pas — ou ne peut avoir — le statut de créancier lorsqu'il fait respecter un devoir public. En parlant de Northern Badger dans l'arrêt Abitibi, la juge Deschamps a expliqué que la Cour d'appel de l'Alberta a « conclu que l'obligation d'entreprendre les travaux de décontamination est due au public en général jusqu'à ce que l'organisme administratif exerce son pouvoir de faire valoir une réclamation pécuniaire » (Abitibi, par. 44 (je souligne)). Le juge Laycraft a reconnu que l'organisme de règlementation qui s'acquitte lui-même d'une obligation environnementale et présente une demande de remboursement devient effectivement [TRADUCTION] « créancier à l'égard des sommes dépensées ». Même dans une telle situation, le public demeure l'ultime bénéficiaire des travaux de décontamination, ce qui cadre largement avec la norme de la réclamation

[246] However, even if the majority were correct about the reasoning in Northern Badger with respect to whether regulators enforcing public duties can be creditors — which I do not concede — I do not accept its conclusion that Abitibi did not overturn that reasoning. The Court was well aware of the decision in Northern Badger and cited it directly. Despite this, Deschamps J., when formulating the first prong of the test, made no distinction between regulators acting in the public interest and regulators acting for their own benefit. Instead, she stated that "the only determination that has to be made" (para. 27) is whether the regulator is exercising its enforcement powers against a debtor. In referring to Northern Badger, she expressly noted that "[t]he real question is not to whom the obligation is owed, as this question is answered by the statute, which determines who can require that it be discharged" (paras. 27 and 46 (emphasis added)).

[247] Finally, and perhaps most importantly, suggesting that a regulator is not acting as a creditor prouvable énoncée par la juge Deschamps. En fait, notre Cour a simplement élargi ce principe dans Abitibi, concluant que l'organisme de réglementation peut également avoir le statut de créancier relativement à une revendication éventuelle prouvable s'il est suffisamment certain qu'il exécutera les travaux de décontamination et présentera une demande de remboursement. Comme je l'expliquerai plus en détail, il s'agit précisément de la situation dans laquelle se trouvent l'AER et OWA en l'espèce. La Cour d'appel de l'Alberta n'a pas formulé la question sous l'angle du test à trois volets qui a été élaboré par la suite dans Abitibi; elle n'a pas divisé son analyse de la question de savoir s'il existait une réclamation prouvable. Toutefois, il est juste de considérer que la juge Deschamps a traité des préoccupations exprimées dans Northern Badger en fonction du troisième volet du test Abitibi. Il ne convient pas de reprendre ces principes au premier volet également, comme le propose la majorité. C'est pourquoi il est malavisé de se fonder sur l'arrêt Northern Badger en l'espèce pour conclure que l'AER n'est pas un créancier.

[246] Cependant, même si les juges majoritaires avaient raison quant au raisonnement dans l'arrêt Northern Badger à savoir si un organisme de réglementation faisant respecter un devoir public peut avoir le statut de créancier — ce que je ne concède pas — je ne retiens pas leur conclusion portant que l'arrêt Abitibi n'a pas écarté ce raisonnement. La Cour était bien au fait de la décision rendue dans Northern Badger et l'a citée textuellement. Malgré cela, lorsqu'elle a formulé le premier volet du test, la juge Deschamps n'a établi aucune distinction entre les organismes de réglementation qui agissent dans un intérêt public et ceux qui agissent dans leur propre intérêt. Elle a plutôt affirmé que « la seule question à trancher » (par. 27) est de savoir si l'organisme exerce ses pouvoirs d'application de la loi à l'encontre d'un débiteur. En mentionnant l'arrêt Northern Badger, elle a souligné expressément que « [l]a véritable question n'est pas de savoir à qui est due l'obligation, puisque la loi y répond en indiquant qui peut en exiger l'exécution » (par. 27 et 46 (je souligne)).

[247] Enfin, et fait peut-être plus important encore, laisser entendre qu'un organisme de réglementation where its environmental enforcement activities are aimed at the public good and are for the benefit of the public effectively overrules the first prong of the Abitibi test. Under my colleague's approach, it is no longer the case that the only determination that has to be made at the creditor stage of the analysis is "whether the regulatory body has exercised its enforcement power against a debtor" (Abitibi, at para. 27). Instead, the court must consider whether the regulatory body is enforcing a public duty and whether it stands to benefit financially from the fulfillment of the obligation in question.

[248] Provincial regulators, in exercising their statutory environmental powers, will, in some sense, virtually always be acting in some public interest or for the benefit of some segment of the public. Under my colleague's reformulation of the first prong of the Abitibi test, it will be nearly impossible to find that regulators acting to protect environmental interests are ever creditors, outside the facts of Abitibi itself. As a result, provincial entities will be able to completely disregard the BIA's priority scheme as long as they can plausibly point to some public interest that is furthered by their actions. Such a result strips Abitibi of its central holding and entitles provincial regulators to easily upend Parliament's purpose of providing an equitable recovery scheme in bankruptcy for all creditors.

[249] In my view, it is insufficient to simply note that the facts of Abitibi differ from those of the present appeal (majority reasons, at para. 136). Deschamps J.'s broad articulation of the first prong of the test was in no way made dependent upon the particular facts of Abitibi. She sought to provide a clear general framework for determining when a regulator will be classified as a creditor — a framework that the majority's reasons effectively rewrite.

[250] Further, it is worth noting that this Court in Moloney followed Abitibi in applying the broad n'agit pas comme créancier quand ses activités de protection de l'environnement visent le bien public et profitent au public écarte dans les faits le premier volet du test Abitibi. Suivant l'approche de mon collègue, la question de savoir « si l'organisme [de réglementation] a exercé, à l'encontre d'un débiteur, son pouvoir de faire appliquer la loi » (Abitibi, par. 27) n'est plus la seule question à trancher à l'étape « créancier » de l'analyse. Le tribunal doit plutôt se demander si l'organisme de réglementation fait respecter un devoir public et s'il peut tirer un avantage financier de l'acquittement de l'obligation en question.

[248] Dans l'exercice des pouvoirs que la loi leur confie en matière d'environnement, les organismes de réglementation provinciaux agissent, en quelque sorte, toujours dans un intérêt public ou au bénéfice d'une partie de la population. Selon le premier volet du test Abitibi reformulé par mon collègue, il sera presque impossible de conclure que les organismes de réglementation protégeant les droits environnementaux sont des « créanciers » à l'extérieur du cadre de l'arrêt Abitibi lui-même. Par conséquent, les entités provinciales pourront totalement ignorer le régime de priorité de la LFI tant qu'elles sont en mesure de relever un quelconque intérêt public qui est servi par leurs actions. Pareil résultat vide l'arrêt Abitibi de sa conclusion centrale et permet aux organismes de réglementation provinciaux de faire obstacle aisément à l'objectif du Parlement d'instaurer un régime équitable de recouvrement des créances en matière de faillite au bénéfice de tous les créanciers.

[249] À mon avis, il ne suffit pas de noter simplement que les faits de l'affaire Abitibi diffèrent de ceux de l'espèce (motifs des juges majoritaires, par. 136). Les termes larges employés par la juge Deschamps pour formuler le premier volet du test n'étaient aucunement tributaires des faits propres à cette affaire. Elle a cherché à établir un cadre général clair indiquant dans quelles circonstances l'organisme de réglementation sera considéré comme un créancier, un cadre effectivement remanié dans les motifs de la majorité.

[250] En outre, il convient de souligner que, dans Moloney, la Cour a suivi l'arrêt Abitibi en definition of "creditor". In Moloney, this Court concluded that the Province of Alberta was acting as a creditor even though the debt it was collecting was reimbursement for compensating a third party who had been injured by the debtor in a car accident (para. 55). I fail to see how any meaningful distinction can be drawn between that situation and a situation in which a regulator seeks reimbursement for the costs incurred to remedy environmental damage caused to the land of third parties by the debtor.

[251] "[G]reat care should be taken" before this Court overturns or overrules one of its prior decisions (Teva Canada Ltd. v. TD Canada Trust, 2017 SCC 51, [2017] 2 S.C.R. 317, at para. 65). It is "a step not to be lightly undertaken" (Canada v. Craig, 2012 SCC 43, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 489, at para. 24). In order to do so, "the Court must be satisfied based on compelling reasons that the precedent was wrongly decided and should be overruled" (Craig, at para. 25; see also Teva, at para. 65). The reasons for exercising such caution are clear and sound, namely to ensure "certainty, consistency and institutional legitimacy" and to recognize that "the public relies on our disciplined ability to respect precedent" (Teva, at para. 65). When this Court decides that it is necessary to depart from one of its past decision, it should be clear about what it is doing and why.

[252] Despite these clear admonitions against this Court too easily overturning its own precedents, that is precisely what the majority proposes to do in this case. Its approach effectively overrules the unequivocal definition of "creditor" provided in Abitibi — a considered decision rendered by a majority of this Court a mere six years ago. Not only does the majority fail to provide compelling reasons why Deschamps J.'s clear definition is wrong, but it also does not acknowledge that it is overturning a recent decision of this Court, rejecting the suggestion that this is the impact of its reasoning (para. 136). Further, this is being done without complete and robust submissions on the issue. Such an approach to our own precedents does not serve appliquant la définition large de « créancier ». Dans cette affaire, la Cour a conclu que la province de l'Alberta agissait à titre de créancier même si la créance qu'elle cherchait à recouvrer était le remboursement d'une indemnité versée à une tierce partie blessée par le débiteur dans un accident de voiture (par. 55). Je ne vois pas en quoi il est possible d'établir quelque véritable distinction que ce soit entre cette situation et celle d'un organisme de réglementation qui chercherait à obtenir le remboursement des dépenses engagées pour réparer des dommages environnementaux causés au terrain d'un tiers par le débiteur.

[251] « [U]ne grande prudence s'impose » avant que notre Cour n'infirme ou n'écarte l'un de ses précédents (Teva Canada Ltée c. TD Canada Trust, 2017 CSC 51, [2017] 2 R.C.S. 317, par. 65). Cette étape ne peut être accomplie « à la légère » (Canada c. Craig, 2012 CSC 43, [2012] 2 R.C.S. 489, par. 24). Pour ce faire, la Cour doit « être convaincue, pour des raisons impérieuses, que la décision est erronée et qu'elle devrait être écartée » (Craig, par. 25; voir aussi Teva, par. 65). Il y de bonnes raisons qui, clairement, justifient de prendre une telle précaution, à savoir assurer « la certitude, la cohérence et la légitimité institutionnelle » et reconnaître que « le public s'attend à ce que nous respections scrupuleusement nos précédents » (Teva, par. 65). Lorsque la Cour juge nécessaire de s'écarter de l'un de ses précédents, sa décision et ce qui la motive devraient être clairs.

[252] Malgré ces mises en garde claires contre l'idée pour la Cour d'écarter trop aisément ses propres précédents, c'est précisément ce que les juges majoritaires proposent de faire en l'espèce. Leur approche revient, dans les faits, à infirmer la définition sans équivoque de « créancier » énoncée dans l'arrêt Abitibi — une décision réfléchie rendue par les juges majoritaires de la Cour il y a six ans à peine. En plus de ne fournir aucune raison impérieuse qui expliquerait en quoi la définition claire de la juge Deschamps est erronée, les juges majoritaires, dans leurs motifs, ne reconnaissent pas qu'ils écartent une décision récente de la Cour et rejettent la proposition que c'est là l'incidence de leur raisonnement (par. 136). Qui plus est, ils ont pris leur décision en l'absence d'observations complètes the goals of certainty, consistency or institutional legitimacy.

[253] This Court should continue to apply the "creditor" prong of the test as it was clearly articulated in Abitibi. Deschamps J.'s definition ensures that provincial regulators are not able to easily appropriate for themselves a higher priority in bankruptcy and undermine Parliament's priority scheme. It advances the goals of orderliness and fairness in insolvency proceedings. Under that broad standard, the AER plainly acted as a creditor with respect to the Redwater estate. That is likely why it conceded this point in both of the courts below.

[254] Since there is no dispute that the second prong of the Abitibi test is satisfied, I turn next to the third prong, which asks whether it is sufficiently certain that the regulator will perform the work and make a claim for reimbursement. As explained in Abitibi in the context of an environmental order:

> With respect to the third requirement, that it be possible to attach a monetary value to the obligation, the question is whether orders that are not expressed in monetary terms can be translated into such terms. I note that when a regulatory body claims an amount that is owed at the relevant date, that is, when it frames its order in monetary terms, the court does not need to make this determination, because what is being claimed is an "indebtedness" and therefore clearly falls within the meaning of "claim" as defined in s. 12(1) of the CCAA.
>
> . . .
>
> The criterion used by courts to determine whether a contingent claim will be included in the insolvency process is whether the event that has not yet occurred is too remote or speculative (Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75). In the context of an environmental order, this means that there must be sufficient indications that the regulatory body that triggered the et étoffées à ce sujet. Adopter une telle approche à l'égard de nos propres précédents ne permet pas d'atteindre les objectifs de certitude, de cohérence ou de légitimité institutionnelle.

[253] La Cour devrait continuer d'appliquer l'analyse relative au « créancier » telle qu'elle a été clairement formulée dans l'arrêt Abitibi. La définition de la juge Deschamps empêche les organismes de réglementation provinciaux de s'approprier facilement un rang supérieur en matière de faillite et de saper le régime de priorité du Parlement. Cette définition favorise l'atteinte des objectifs d'ordre et d'équité dans les procédures d'insolvabilité. Suivant ce critère général, l'AER a clairement agi comme créancier relativement à l'actif de Redwater, et c'est probablement pour cette raison qu'il a concédé ce point devant les deux tribunaux d'instance inférieure.

[254] Puisque personne ne conteste qu'il est satisfait au second volet du test Abitibi, je passe maintenant au troisième volet, qui pose la question de savoir s'il est suffisamment certain que l'organisme de réglementation exécutera les travaux et présentera une demande de remboursement. Comme l'explique l'arrêt Abitibi, dans le contexte d'une ordonnance environnementale :

> En ce qui concerne la troisième condition, soit qu'il doit être possible d'attribuer à l'obligation une valeur pécuniaire, la question est de savoir si des ordonnances qui ne sont pas formulées en termes pécuniaires peuvent être formulées en de tels termes. Je souligne que lorsqu'un organisme administratif réclame une somme qui est due à la date pertinente, il formule ainsi son ordonnance en termes pécuniaires. Le tribunal n'a alors aucune détermination à faire à cette étape car ce qui est réclamé est une « dette » et est, par conséquent, clairement visé par la définition d'une « réclamation » prévue au par. 12(1) de la LACC.
>
> . . .
>
> Le critère retenu par les tribunaux pour décider si une réclamation éventuelle sera incluse dans le processus d'insolvabilité est celui qui consiste à déterminer si l'événement non encore survenu est trop éloigné ou conjectural (Confederation Treasury Service Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75). Dans le contexte d'une ordonnance environnementale, cela signifie qu'il doit y avoir enforcement mechanism will ultimately perform remediation work and assert a monetary claim to have its costs reimbursed. If there is sufficient certainty in this regard, the court will conclude that the order can be subjected to the insolvency process. [Emphasis added; paras. 30 and 36.]

[255] In my view, it is sufficiently certain that either the AER or the OWA will ultimately perform the abandonment and reclamation work and assert a monetary claim for reimbursement. Therefore, the final prong of the Abitibi test is satisfied. The chambers judge made three critical findings of fact — each of which is entitled to deference on appeal (Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235, at para. 10) — that easily support this conclusion.

[256] First, Wittmann C.J. found that GTL was not in possession of the disclaimed properties and, in any event, "has no ability to perform any kind of work on these assets" because the environmental liabilities exceeded the value of the estate itself (para. 170; see also Abitibi, at para. 53 where the Court stated that: "Abitibi had no means to perform the remediation work"). He discounted the possibility that any of Redwater's working interest participants would step in to perform the work, even for the small number of Redwater's licensed assets for which such partners existed (chambers judge reasons, at para. 171). In sum, he concluded that "there is no other party who could be compelled to carry out the abandonment work" (para. 172).

[257] Two decisions of the Ontario Court of Appeal highlight why this is important. In Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2013 ONCA 599, 6 C.B.R. (6th) 159, Juriansz J.A. found that the "sufficient certainty" standard was not satisfied in respect of certain sites because those sites had already been sold so the purchasers could be compelled to carry out the work on the basis that they were jointly and severally liable for the remediation obligations (paras. 39-40). But in Northstar Aerospace Inc., Re, 2013 ONCA 600, 8 C.B.R. (6th) 154, Juriansz J.A. found that the des indications suffisantes permettant de conclure que l'organisme administratif qui a eu recours aux mécanismes d'application de la loi effectuera en fin de compte des travaux de décontamination et présentera une réclamation pécuniaire afin d'obtenir le remboursement de ses débours. Si cela est suffisamment certain, le tribunal conclura que l'ordonnance peut être assujettie au processus d'insolvabilité. [Je souligne; par. 30 et 36]

[255] À mon avis, il est suffisamment certain que l'AER ou l'OWA effectuera ultimement les travaux d'abandon et de remise en état et fera valoir une réclamation pécuniaire afin d'obtenir un remboursement. Il est donc satisfait au dernier volet du test Abitibi. Le juge en cabinet a tiré trois conclusions de fait cruciales — chacune d'elles commandant la déférence en appel (Housen c. Nikolaisen, 2002 CSC 33, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 235, par. 10) — qui appuient aisément cette conclusion.

[256] Premièrement, le juge en chef Wittmann a conclu que GTL n'était pas en possession des biens visés par les renonciations et, de toute façon, il [TRADUCTION] « ne peut pas exécuter de travaux sur les biens » parce que les engagements environnementaux dépassaient la valeur de l'actif même (par. 170; voir également Abitibi, par. 53, où la Cour a dit que : « Abitibi ne disposait d'aucune ressource pour exécuter les travaux »). Il a écarté la possibilité que les participants en participation directe de Redwater se chargent de le faire même à l'égard des quelques biens visés par des permis de Redwater pour lesquels de tels partenaires existaient (motifs du juge en cabinet, par. 171). Bref, il a conclu [TRADUCTION] « qu'il n'existe aucune autre partie susceptible d'être contrainte d'exécuter les travaux d'abandon » (par. 172).

[257] Deux décisions de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario font ressortir pourquoi cela est important. Dans Nortel Networks Corp., Re, 2013 ONCA 599, 6 C.B.R. (6th) 159, le juge Juriansz a conclu qu'il n'était pas satisfait au critère de la « certitude suffisante » relativement à certains sites parce que ceux-ci avaient déjà été achetés. Les acheteurs pouvaient par conséquent être contraints d'exécuter les travaux parce qu'ils étaient solidairement responsables des obligations de décontamination (par. 39-40). Mais dans Northstar Aerospace Inc., Re, 2013 ONCA 600,

"sufficient certainty" standard was satisfied because there was no purchaser that could be compelled by the regulator to complete the work. While it is true that fresh evidence on appeal revealed that the Ministry of the Environment had commenced the remediation work, Juriansz J.A. found that the fact that there were no subsequent purchasers had grounded the application judge's implicit conclusion regarding sufficient certainty (paras. 16-17). The present case is like Northstar, which is perfectly applicable to the facts of this case: there is no purchaser to take on Redwater's assets, and the debtor itself is insolvent. The chambers judge in this case concluded that there was no other party who could be compelled to carry out the work.

[258] Second, in light of the fact that neither GTL nor Redwater's working interest participants would (or could) undertake this work, Wittmann C.J. found as a fact that "the AER will ultimately be responsible for [the abandonment] costs" (para. 171). He concluded that "the AER has the power [to seek recovery of abandonment costs] and has actually performed the work on occasion" (para. 168). In fact, in this very case, "the AER has expressly stated an intention to seek reimbursement for the costs of abandoning the renounced assets" (para. 172). This conclusion finds ample support in the record. In a cover letter sent with the Abandonment Orders on July 15, 2015, the AER unambiguously stated that if Redwater failed to abandon the disclaimed properties in accordance with its instructions, "the AER will, without further notice, use its process to have the properties abandoned" (GTL's Record, vol. I, at p. 102 (emphasis added)). The letter further stated that "[t]he AER will exercise all remedies available to it to recover the costs from the liable parties" (p. 102 (emphasis added)). The chambers judge did not err in relying on these unequivocal statements from the AER itself — to the effect that it will have the abandonment work performed and seek reimbursement — to conclude that sufficient certainty existed in this case.

8 C.B.R. (6th) 154, le juge Juriansz a conclu qu'il était satisfait au critère de la « certitude suffisante » parce qu'il n'y avait pas d'acheteur qui pouvait être contraint d'exécuter les travaux par l'organisme de réglementation. Certes, les éléments de preuve nouveaux déposés en appel révèlent que le ministère de l'Environnement avait amorcé les travaux de décontamination, mais le juge Juriansz a conclu que l'absence d'acheteurs subséquents justifiait la conclusion implicite du juge de première instance quant à la certitude suffisante (par. 16-17). La présente affaire s'apparente à Northstar, qui s'applique parfaitement aux faits de l'espèce : il n'y a aucun acheteur pour prendre en charge les biens de Redwater, et la débitrice elle-même est insolvable. Le juge en cabinet en l'espèce a conclu qu'il n'existe aucune autre partie qui pourrait être contrainte d'exécuter les travaux.

[258] Deuxièmement, compte tenu du fait que ni GTL ni les participants en participation directe de Redwater ne voudraient (ou ne pourraient) entreprendre ces travaux, le juge en chef Wittmann a tiré la conclusion de fait selon laquelle [TRADUCTION] « l'AER sera en fin de compte responsable des frais [d'abandon] » (par. 171). Il a conclu que « l'AER a le pouvoir [de tenter de recouvrer les frais d'abandon] et a réellement exécuté les travaux à l'occasion » (par. 168). Dans les faits, en l'espèce, « l'AER a expressément manifesté l'intention de demander le remboursement des frais liés à l'abandon des biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation » (par. 172). Cette conclusion est amplement étayée par le dossier. Dans la lettre du 15 juillet 2015 accompagnant les ordonnances d'abandon, l'AER a déclaré sans équivoque que, si Redwater ne procède pas à l'abandon des biens visés par les renonciations conformément aux directives de l'AER, [TRADUCTION] « l'AER utilisera, sans autre avis, sa procédure pour faire abandonner les biens » (dossier de GTL, vol. I, p. 102 (je souligne)). La lettre indiquait également que « [l']AER exercera tous les recours dont il dispose pour recouvrer les frais des parties responsables » (p. 102 (je souligne)). Le juge siégeant en cabinet n'a pas commis d'erreur en se fondant sur ces déclarations sans équivoque de l'AER lui-même — selon lesquelles il fera exécuter les travaux d'abandon et demandera un remboursement — pour conclure qu'il y avait une certitude suffisante en l'espèce.

[259] Although there is some contrary evidence in the record — principally, the remarks of an AER affiant, who stated that the AER would not abandon the properties — Wittmann C.J. did not commit any palpable and overriding error by giving more weight to the letter that the AER sent contemporaneously with the Abandonment Orders. Likewise, to the extent that the AER sent other correspondence stating that it was not a creditor and that it was not asserting a provable claim, Wittmann C.J. did not err in discounting these self-serving statements as insufficiently probative on the ultimate legal questions. There is therefore no basis to disturb these factual findings or to reweigh this evidence on appeal.

[260] Even if the AER's admission that it would abandon the properties itself is not sufficient on its own, Wittmann C.J. made a third critical finding of fact: the AER's only "realistic alternativ[e] to performing the remediation work itself" was to deem the renounced assets to be orphan wells (para. 172). In this circumstance, he found that "the legislation and evidence shows that if the AER deems a well an orphan, then the OWA will perform the work" (para. 166 (emphasis added)).

[261] In light of these factual determinations, Wittmann C.J. rightly concluded that the "sufficient certainty" standard of Abitibi was satisfied. He elaborated on the legal basis for that conclusion as follows:

> Does this situation meet the sufficient certainty criterion as described in AbitibiBowater? The answer is no in a narrow and technical sense, since it is unclear whether the AER will perform the work itself or if it will deem the properties subject to the orders, orphans. If so, the OWA will probably perform the work, although not necessarily within a definite timeframe. However, the situation does meet, in my opinion, what was intended by the majority of the Court in AbitibiBowater. . . . In the result, I find that although not expressed in monetary terms, the AER orders are in this case intrinsically financial. [para. 173]

[259] Bien qu'il y ait certains éléments de preuve contraires au dossier — notamment les propos d'un déclarant de l'AER selon lesquels l'AER ne procéderait pas à l'abandon des biens — le juge en chef Wittmann n'a pas commis d'erreur manifeste et dominante en accordant plus de poids à la lettre que l'AER a envoyée en même temps que les ordonnances d'abandon. De même, dans la mesure où l'AER a envoyé d'autres lettres dans lesquelles il déclarait ne pas être un créancier et ne pas faire valoir une réclamation prouvable, le juge en chef Wittmann n'a pas commis d'erreur en faisant abstraction de ces déclarations intéressées parce qu'elles n'étaient pas suffisamment probantes quant aux questions de droit ultimes. Il n'y a donc aucune raison de modifier ces conclusions de fait ou d'apprécier de nouveau ces éléments de preuve en appel.

[260] Même si la déclaration de l'AER selon laquelle il procéderait lui-même à l'abandon des biens n'est pas suffisante en soi, le juge en chef Wittmann a tiré une troisième conclusion de fait cruciale : la seule [TRADUCTION] « solution réaliste [qui s'offre à l'AER] autre que celle d'effectuer lui-même les travaux de décontamination » était de considérer les biens faisant l'objet de la renonciation comme des puits orphelins (par. 172). Il a conclu qu'en pareil cas, « les dispositions législatives et les éléments de preuve démontrent que, si l'AER considère un puits comme orphelin, l'OWA exécutera les travaux » (par. 166 (je souligne)).

[261] À la lumière de ces conclusions de fait, le juge en chef Wittmann a eu raison de conclure qu'il était satisfait à la norme de « certitude suffisante » énoncée dans Abitibi. Il a précisé ainsi le fondement juridique de cette conclusion :

> [TRADUCTION] La situation répond-elle au critère de la certitude suffisante décrit dans l'arrêt AbitibiBowater? Au sens strict et technique du terme, la réponse est non, car il n'est pas clair si l'AER effectuera lui-même les travaux ou s'il considérera les biens visés par les ordonnances comme orphelins. Dans l'affirmative, l'OWA exécutera probablement les travaux, mais pas nécessairement dans un délai précis. La situation correspond toutefois, à mon avis, à ce qu'ont voulu les juges majoritaires de la Cour dans AbitibiBowater. . . . Par conséquent, je conclus que, bien qu'elles ne soient pas formulées en termes pécuniaires, les ordonnances de l'AER sont, en l'espèce, intrinsèquement financières. [par. 173]

[262] My colleague does not specify the standard of review he applies in overturning Wittmann C.J.'s application of the third prong of the Abitibi test to this case. Nevertheless, he disagrees with the chambers judge and holds that the "sufficient certainty" standard is not satisfied. He offers two reasons for overruling Wittmann C.J.'s finding; but in doing so, he does not identify any palpable and overriding error (or, even under the non-deferential standard of correctness, any true error) in the chambers judge's ultimate conclusion.

[263] The first reason — the purported legal error of determining that the Abandonment Orders are "intrinsically financial" — is little more than a distraction. Even if this is an erroneous application of Abitibi, it is evident that Wittmann C.J. was of the view, at a minimum, that either the AER or the OWA would complete the abandonment work. And as I describe below, this alone is enough to satisfy the "sufficient certainty" standard. My colleague overemphasizes the import of this stray comment in the context of a thorough set of reasons that otherwise faithfully applies the correct standard. Any legal error on this basis, to the extent that one exists, does not displace the result that the chambers judge reached.

[264] The second reason is more substantial. According to Wagner C.J., whether the AER will perform the abandonment work itself or delegate that task to the OWA is dispositive, since it was the Province itself that undertook the reclamation work in Abitibi. Here, he suggests, "the OWA is not the regulator" (para. 147) and thus the involvement of the OWA "is insufficient to satisfy the 'sufficient certainty' test" (para. 146).

[265] Accepting, for a moment, the potential relevance of this distinction, I am of the view that any uncertainty as to whether the AER would delegate the reclamation work to the OWA is questionable. My colleague's emphasis on the self-serving remarks of an AER affiant and the fact that the AER took no immediate steps to perform the abandonment work

[262] Mon collègue ne précise pas la norme de contrôle qu'il applique en infirmant l'application par le juge en chef Wittmann du troisième volet du test Abitibi à la présente affaire. Néanmoins, il est en désaccord avec le juge en cabinet et conclut qu'il n'est pas satisfait au volet de la « certitude suffisante ». Il donne deux raisons pour infirmer la conclusion du juge en chef Wittmann; mais ce faisant, il ne relève aucune erreur manifeste et dominante (ni même une véritable erreur selon la norme de la décision correcte, qui ne commande aucune déférence) dans la conclusion ultime du juge en cabinet.

[263] La première raison, la prétendue erreur de droit consistant à décider que les ordonnances d'abandon sont [TRADUCTION] « intrinsèquement financières », n'est guère plus qu'une distraction. Même s'il s'agit d'une application erronée de l'arrêt Abitibi, il est manifeste que le juge en chef Wittmann a estimé, au moins, que l'AER ou l'OWA mènerait à terme les travaux d'abandon. Et comme je l'explique plus loin, cela suffit en soi pour satisfaire à la norme de « certitude suffisante ». Mon collègue surestime l'importance de ce commentaire isolé dans le contexte d'un ensemble de motifs étoffés où la norme appropriée est par ailleurs fidèlement appliquée. Toute erreur de droit de ce genre, dans la mesure où il en existe une, n'écarte en rien le résultat auquel est arrivé le juge en cabinet.

[264] La deuxième raison est plus sérieuse. Selon le juge en chef Wagner, la question de savoir si l'AER effectuera lui-même les travaux d'abandon ou s'il déléguera cette tâche à l'OWA est déterminante, car c'est la Province elle-même qui a procédé aux travaux de décontamination dans Abitibi. Dans l'affaire qui nous occupe, suggère-t-il, « l'OWA n'est pas l'organisme de réglementation » (par. 147) et, en conséquence, l'intervention de l'OWA « est insuffisante pour satisfaire au critère de la "certitude suffisante" » (par. 146).

[265] Acceptant pour un instant la pertinence éventuelle de cette distinction, j'estime que toute incertitude quant à la question de savoir si l'AER déléguerait l'exécution des travaux de décontamination à l'OWA est discutable. L'importance qu'accorde mon collègue aux propos intéressés d'un déclarant de l'AER et au fait que l'AER n'a rien fait sur-le-champ pour exécuter itself amounts to little more than post hoc appellate fact finding, especially in light of the AER's own statement. Although Wittmann C.J. suggested that it was "unclear" whether the AER would complete this work itself, his other findings of fact and law — that the AER has the statutory power to perform the work, that it has actually done so in the past, and that it expressly stated its intention to seek reimbursement here — suggest otherwise. Regardless, Wittmann C.J.'s remark that the "sufficient certainty" standard was not satisfied "in a narrow and technical sense" must be read in this context: he was simply suggesting that there was some uncertainty as to "whether the AER will perform the work itself" as opposed to delegating the work to the OWA (para. 173). He was not implying — let alone concluding as a matter of law — that GTL had failed to prove the third prong of the Abitibi test. That reading would vastly overstate, and completely decontextualize, the meaning of a few isolated words in his reasons.

[266] The more important problem, though, is that any distinction between the performance of the abandonment work by the AER and its performance by the OWA is meaningless. Form is elevated over substance if it is concluded that the "sufficient certainty" standard is not satisfied when a regulatory body's delegate, as opposed to the regulatory body itself, performs the work. And despite my colleague's suggestion that a regulatory body cannot act strategically to evade Abitibi, that is precisely what his analysis permits.

[267] We are told that the "OWA's true nature" (majority reasons, at para. 147) — and therefore what purports to distinguish this case from impermissible examples of strategic delegation — rests on four factors: (1) the OWA is a non-profit organization; (2) it has an independent board of directors; (3) it has its own mandate and determines "when and how it will perform environmental work" (para. 148); and (4) it is "financially independent" (para. 148) as it is lui-même les travaux d'abandon ne constitue rien de moins qu'une appréciation des faits après coup en appel, surtout compte tenu de la propre déclaration de l'AER. Bien que le juge en chef Wittmann ait affirmé qu'il n'était [TRADUCTION] « pas clair » si l'AER effectuerait lui-même les travaux, ses autres conclusions de fait et de droit — que la loi confère à l'AER le pouvoir d'exécuter les travaux, qu'il l'a réellement fait dans le passé et qu'il a expressément manifesté l'intention de demander un remboursement en l'espèce — indiquent le contraire. Quoi qu'il en soit, la remarque du juge en chef Wittmann selon laquelle il n'était pas satisfait à la norme de « certitude suffisante » « au sens strict et technique » doit être interprétée dans ce contexte : il voulait tout simplement dire qu'il y avait une certaine incertitude quant à savoir « si l'AER effectuera[it] lui-même les travaux » au lieu de déléguer les travaux à l'OWA (par. 173). Il ne sous-entendait pas — et concluait encore moins en droit — que GTL n'avait pas réussi à établir le troisième volet du test Abitibi. Cette interprétation exagère considérablement le sens de quelques mots isolés contenus dans ses motifs, et sort complètement ces mots de leur contexte.

[266] Le problème le plus important, cependant, c'est que toute distinction entre l'exécution des travaux d'abandon par l'AER et leur exécution par l'OWA est dénuée de sens. C'est faire passer la forme avant le fond que de conclure qu'il n'est pas satisfait à la norme de « certitude suffisante » lorsque le délégataire de l'organisme de réglementation, et non l'organisme de réglementation lui-même, effectue les travaux. Et malgré l'affirmation de mon collègue selon laquelle un organisme de réglementation ne saurait stratégiquement éviter l'arrêt Abitibi, c'est précisément ce que son analyse permet de faire.

[267] On nous dit que la « véritable nature de l'OWA » (motifs majoritaires, par. 147) — et, par conséquent, ce qui est censé distinguer la présente affaire des exemples inadmissibles de délégation stratégique — repose sur quatre facteurs : (1) l'OWA est un organisme sans but lucratif; (2) elle a un conseil d'administration indépendant; (3) elle dispose de son propre mandat et décide « quand et de quelle manière elle exécutera des travaux environnementaux » funded "almost entirely" by a tax on the oil and gas industry (para. 23).

[268] The first point is true, but irrelevant. Why does an organization's non-profit status have any bearing on whether it is being used as a vehicle to avoid the "sufficient certainty" standard under Abitibi?

[269] The second point is not accurate. The AER appoints members of the OWA's board of directors, as does another provincial body, Alberta Environment and Parks — underscoring the extent to which the provincial government can influence the OWA's activities.

[270] The third point overstates the OWA's level of independence. The Orphan Fund Delegated Administration Regulation, Alta. Reg. 45/2001, gives the AER substantial power to influence the OWA's decision making. Section 3(2)(b) of the regulation expressly states that, in fulfilling its delegated powers, duties and functions, the OWA must act in accordance with "applicable requirements, guidelines, directions and orders of the [AER]". The regulation also mandates that the OWA provide information to the AER on request and regularly submit reports indicating or containing its budget, "goals, strategies and performance measures", activities for the previous year and financial statements (s. 6). The AER appears to be able to exercise substantial control and oversight over the OWA if it so chooses, including over the manner in which the OWA carries out its environmental work.

[271] The fourth point is also inaccurate and would probably be irrelevant even if it were accurate. The Province has provided funding to the OWA in the past, including a $30 million contribution in 2009 and an additional $50,000 in 2012, and it has announced that it will loan the OWA an additional $230 million (see A.F., at para. 99 (alluding to this loan); recall Abitibi, at para. 58 where the Court stated that: "Earmarking money may be a strong (par. 148); (4) elle est « financièrement indépendante » (par. 148) et « presque entièrement » financée par une taxe imposée à l'industrie pétrolière et gazière (par. 23).

[268] Le premier point est exact, mais non pertinent. Pourquoi le statut d'organisme sans but lucratif aurait-il une incidence sur la question de savoir s'il est utilisé comme moyen d'éviter la norme de « certitude suffisante » fixée dans Abitibi?

[269] Le deuxième point est inexact. L'AER nomme les membres du conseil d'administration de l'OWA, comme le fait un autre organisme provincial, Alberta Environment and Parks — ce qui fait ressortir à quel point le gouvernement provincial peut influencer les activités de l'OWA.

[270] Le troisième point surestime l'indépendance de l'OWA. Le Orphan Fund Delegated Administration Regulation, Alta. Reg. 45/2001, accorde à l'AER le pouvoir important d'influencer la prise de décisions de l'OWA. L'alinéa 3(2)(b) du règlement dispose en termes exprès que, dans l'exercice des pouvoirs, obligations et attributions qui lui sont déléguées, l'OWA doit se conformer aux [TRADUCTION] « conditions, lignes directrices, directives et ordonnances applicables de [l'AER] ». Le règlement exige que l'OWA fournisse sur demande des renseignements à l'AER et dépose périodiquement des rapports décrivant son budget de même que ses « objectifs, stratégies, mesures du rendement », activités de l'année précédente et états financiers (art. 6). L'AER semble être à même d'exercer beaucoup d'emprise et de surveillance sur l'OWA, si tel est son désir, y compris sur la manière dont l'OWA effectue ses travaux environnementaux.

[271] Le quatrième point est lui aussi inexact et il n'aurait probablement aucune pertinence même s'il était exact. La Province a fourni des fonds à l'OWA dans le passé, notamment une contribution de 30 millions de dollars en 2009 et une somme supplémentaire de 50 000 $ en 2012, et elle a annoncé qu'elle prêtera une somme supplémentaire de 230 millions de dollars à l'OWA (voir le m.a., par. 99 (faisant allusion à ce prêt); rappelons ce que la Cour a affirmé indicator that a province will perform remediation work").

[272] In any event, it is important to note the more salient features of the OWA and its relationship with the AER (and, more generally, with the provincial government). The OWA operates under legal authority delegated to it by the AER and in accordance with a Memorandum of Understanding it has signed with both the AER and Alberta Environment and Parks. The orphan fund itself is administered by the AER, which prescribes and collects industry contributions and remits the funds to the OWA. The OWA cannot increase the industry levy without first obtaining approval from the Alberta Treasury Board. In addition, the OGCA makes clear that abandonment costs incurred by any person authorized by the AER — which would include the OWA — constitute a debt payable to the AER (OGCA, s. 30(5)). The record shows that the AER has remitted abandonment costs to the OWA in the past, in the form of security deposits and amounts recovered through successful enforcement action against licensees.

[273] The AER and the OWA are therefore inextricably intertwined. We should see this arrangement for what it is: when the AER exercises its statutory powers to declare a property an "orphan" under s. 70(2) of the OGCA, it effectively delegates the abandonment work to the OWA. Treating the OWA's work as meaningfully different from abandonment activities carried out by the AER turns a blind eye to this reality and does nothing to further the underlying principles of paramountcy. To the contrary, it provides provincial regulators with an easy way to evade the test of Abitibi through strategic behaviour, thereby undermining the legitimate federal interest in enforcing the BIA's priority scheme. It should not matter which body carries out the work (see C.A. reasons, at para. 78; OGCA, s. 70(1)(a)(ii)).

[274] The majority faults the chambers judge for "failing to consider whether the OWA can be treated as the regulator" (para. 153). However, the chambers dans Abitibi, par. 58 : « [l]e fait de prévoir un budget peut constituer un indicateur clair qu'une province exécutera des travaux de décontamination »).

[272] Quoi qu'il en soit, il importe de souligner les caractéristiques plus saillantes de l'OWA et de sa relation avec l'AER (et, de façon plus générale, avec le gouvernement provincial). L'OWA agit en vertu du pouvoir légal qui lui est délégué par l'AER et conformément au protocole d'entente qu'elle a signé avec l'AER et Alberta Environment and Parks. Le fonds pour les puits orphelins est lui-même administré par l'AER, qui fixe et recueille les contributions de l'industrie et remet les fonds à l'OWA. L'OWA ne peut pas augmenter les prélèvements qu'elle effectue auprès de l'industrie sans d'abord obtenir l'approbation du Conseil du trésor de l'Alberta. De plus, l'OGCA indique clairement que les frais liés à l'abandon engagés par toute personne autorisée par l'AER — y compris l'OWA — constituent une dette payable à l'AER (OGCA, par. 30(5)). Le dossier révèle que l'AER a versé des frais d'abandon à l'OWA dans le passé, sous la forme de dépôts de garantie et de sommes recouvrées grâce à des mesures de recouvrement réussies à l'encontre des titulaires de permis.

[273] L'AER et l'OWA sont donc inextricablement liés. Il faut reconnaître cet arrangement pour ce qu'il est : lorsque l'AER exerce le pouvoir de déclarer un bien [TRADUCTION] « orphelin » que lui confère le par. 70(2) de l'OGCA, il délègue effectivement l'exécution des travaux d'abandon à l'OWA. Considérer les travaux de l'OWA comme significativement différents des activités d'abandon menées par l'AER ne tient pas compte de cette réalité et n'aide en rien à favoriser l'application des principes sous-jacents de la prépondérance. Au contraire, cela donne aux organismes de réglementation provinciaux un moyen facile d'échapper au test Abitibi par l'adoption d'un comportement stratégique, minant ainsi l'intérêt légitime du gouvernement fédéral à assurer le respect du régime de priorité établi par la LFI. Il importe peu de savoir qui effectue les travaux (voir les motifs de la Cour d'appel, par. 78; OGCA, sous-al. 70(1)(a)(ii)).

[274] La majorité reproche au juge en cabinet de « ne pas se demander si l'OWA [pouvait] être assimilé à l'organisme de réglementation » (par. 153).

judge cannot have erred by failing to appreciate a level of independence that simply does not exist.

[275] The majority also offers an alternative conclusion: it is not sufficiently certain that even the OWA will perform the abandonment work (para. 149). Whether the chambers judge's conclusion to the contrary amounts to a palpable and overriding error, or something else, we are not told.

[276] Again, such an approach would permit the AER to benefit from strategic gamesmanship by manipulating the timing of its intervention in order to escape the insolvency regime and strip Redwater of its assets. This arbitrary line-drawing exercise, in which a period of 10 years before the wells are abandoned is too long (but presumably some shorter time line would not be), has no basis in law. As Slatter J.A. convincingly observed in his reasons, the AER > cannot insist that security be posted to cover environmental costs, but at the same time argue that it may be a long time before the Orphan Well Association actually does the remediation. If the Regulator takes security for remediating Redwater's orphan wells, those funds cannot be used for any other purpose. If security is taken, it is no answer that the security might be held for an indefinite period of time; the consequences to the insolvency proceedings and distribution of funds to the creditors are immediate and certain. Further, if security is taken, the environmental obligation has clearly been reduced to monetary terms. [Emphasis added; para. 79.]

[277] Moreover, the OWA's estimate of 10 to 12 years was put forward at the start of this litigation more than 3 years ago. Whether that estimate remains accurate after the province's proposed infusion of nearly a quarter of a billion dollars into the orphan fund (A.F., at para. 99)[1] — money that will undoubt-

[1] I am assuming that the AER's factum is accurate in referring to the existence and amount of this loan (which no other party contested).

Le juge en cabinet ne peut toutefois avoir fait erreur en n'appréciant pas une indépendance qui n'existe tout simplement pas.

[275] La majorité tire aussi une conclusion subsidiaire : il n'est pas suffisamment certain que même l'OWA exécutera les travaux d'abandon (par. 149). Quant à savoir si la conclusion contraire du juge en cabinet équivaut à une erreur manifeste et dominante, ou à quelque chose d'autre, on ne nous le dit pas.

[276] Là encore, une telle approche permettrait à l'AER de tirer profit de manœuvres stratégiques en manipulant le moment de son intervention afin de se soustraire au régime d'insolvabilité et de dépouiller Redwater de ses biens. Cet exercice de délimitation arbitraire, dans lequel une période de 10 ans avant que les puits fassent l'objet d'un abandon est trop longue (mais selon lequel une période plus courte ne le serait présumément pas), n'a aucun fondement en droit. Comme le juge Slatter l'a fait observer de manière convaincante dans ses motifs, l'AER

> [TRADUCTION] ne peut exiger qu'un dépôt de garantie soit versé pour couvrir les frais environnementaux, et en même temps faire valoir qu'il pourrait s'écouler beaucoup de temps avant que l'Orphan Well Association procède réellement à la décontamination. Si l'organisme de réglementation prend un dépôt de garantie afin de décontaminer les puits orphelins de Redwater, ces fonds ne peuvent être utilisés à aucune autre fin. Si un dépôt de garantie est pris, il ne suffit pas de répondre que ce dépôt pourrait être conservé pendant une période indéterminée; les conséquences pour la procédure d'insolvabilité et la distribution des fonds aux créanciers sont immédiates et certaines. De plus, si un dépôt de garantie est pris, l'obligation environnementale est clairement réduite à une obligation formulée en termes pécuniaires. [Je souligne; par. 79.]

[277] De plus, l'estimation de 10 à 12 ans de l'OWA a été mise de l'avant au début du présent litige il y a plus de 3 ans. La question de savoir si cette estimation demeure exacte après l'injection proposée par la province de près d'un quart de milliard de dollars dans le fonds pour les puits orphelins (m.a., par. 99)[1] — des edly speed up the OWA's abandonment efforts — is an open question. In any case, the changing factual context highlights the essential problem with the majority's approach: pinning the constitutional analysis on the timing of the OWA's intervention is arbitrary and irrational, as it causes the result to shift based on decisions made by the very actor that stands to benefit from a finding that the "sufficient certainty" standard is not satisfied.

[1] Je suppose que le mémoire de l'AER est exact quand il fait état de l'existence et du montant de ce prêt (des faits qui n'ont pas été contestés par une autre partie).

[278] All that aside, the chambers judge's recognition that the OWA will "probably" abandon the properties should be enough (chambers judge reasons, at para. 173). Concluding otherwise is not justified, since it would mean applying a stricter certainty requirement than is called for by Abitibi itself. Deschamps J. expressly rejected an alternative standard — a "likelihood approaching certainty" — adopted by McLachlin C.J. in dissent (Abitibi, at para. 60). But here, dismissing as insufficient the chambers judge's conclusion that the OWA would "probably" complete the work essentially means requiring a "likelihood approaching certainty". Since Abitibi does not require absolute certainty, or even a likelihood approaching certainty, Wittmann C.J. did not err in concluding that the third prong was satisfied (see the Oxford English Dictionary (online), which defines "probably" as "with likelihood (though not with certainty)"; "almost certainly; as far as one knows or can tell; in all probability; most likely").

[279] After concluding that it is not sufficiently certain that the AER will abandon the sites, the majority goes on to find that the AER's licence transfer restrictions similarly do not satisfy the Abitibi test. This is so, it says, because the AER's refusal to approve a licence transfer does not give it a monetary claim against Redwater and because compliance with the Licensee Management Ratio ("LMR") conditions "reflects the inherent value of the assets held by the bankrupt estate" (para. 157). At the outset, I wish to sommes qui accéléreront sans doute les efforts d'abandon de l'OWA — demeure sans réponse. Quoi qu'il en soit, le contexte factuel changeant met en lumière le problème fondamental que pose l'approche de la majorité : arrimer l'analyse constitutionnelle au moment de l'intervention de l'OWA est arbitraire et irrationnel, car cette approche a pour effet d'inverser le résultat en fonction de décisions prises par l'acteur même qui peut bénéficier de la conclusion selon laquelle il n'est pas satisfait à la norme de « certitude suffisante ».

[278] Mis à part tout ce qui précède, la reconnaissance par le juge en cabinet que l'OWA abandonnera [TRADUCTION] « probablement » les biens devrait suffire (motifs du juge en cabinet, par. 173). Il n'est pas justifié de conclure le contraire, car cela reviendrait à appliquer une norme plus stricte en matière de certitude que celle que commande l'arrêt Abitibi lui-même. La juge Deschamps a expressément rejeté la norme subsidiaire — une « probabilité proche de la certitude » — qu'a adoptée la juge en chef McLachlin dans ses motifs dissidents (Abitibi, par. 60). Mais en l'espèce, rejeter comme insuffisante la conclusion du juge en cabinet selon laquelle l'OWA mènerait « probablement » à terme les travaux revient essentiellement à exiger une « probabilité proche de la certitude ». Étant donné que l'arrêt Abitibi n'exige pas une certitude absolue, ni même une probabilité proche de la certitude, le juge en chef Wittmann n'a pas commis d'erreur en concluant qu'il était satisfait au troisième volet du test (voir l'Oxford English Dictionary (en ligne), qui définit [TRADUCTION] « probablement » comme « selon la vraisemblance (mais sans certitude) »; « presque certainement; pour autant que l'on sache ou que l'on puisse le dire; selon toute vraisemblance; vraisemblablement »).

[279] Après avoir conclu qu'il n'est pas suffisamment certain que l'AER abandonnera les sites, la majorité juge que les restrictions imposées par l'AER au transfert de permis ne satisfont pas non plus au test Abitibi. Il en est ainsi, dit-elle, parce que le refus de l'AER d'approuver le transfert d'un permis ne lui confère pas une réclamation pécuniaire contre Redwater et que le respect des conditions liées au ratio de gestion du titulaire de permis (« RGTP ») « reflète la valeur inhérente des biens détenus par make clear that I have already concluded that, since GTL lawfully disclaimed the non-producing properties under s. 14.06(4) of the BIA, an operational conflict arises to the extent that the AER included those disclaimed properties in calculating Redwater's LMR for the purpose of imposing conditions on the sale of Redwater's assets. In the analysis that follows, I reach that same conclusion under the frustration of purpose aspect of the paramountcy test as well.

[280] I take issue with the majority's conclusion regarding the LMR conditions for two reasons. First, this approach elevates form over substance, disregarding Gascon J.'s admonition in Moloney that "[t]he province cannot do indirectly what it is precluded from doing directly" (para. 28; see also Husky Oil, at para. 41). Refusing to approve a sale of Redwater's assets unless GTL satisfies Redwater's environmental liabilities is no different, in substance, from directly ordering Redwater or GTL to undertake that work. This is because the AER achieves the exact same thing — the fulfillment of Redwater's environmental obligations — by making any sale conditional on GTL completing the work itself, posting security or packaging the non-producing assets into the sale, which reduces the sale price by the exact amount of those liabilities and ensures that the purchaser can be compelled, as the subsequent "licensee" under provincial law, to comply with the Abandonment Orders.

[281] The only difference between these two exercises of provincial power is the means by which the AER has opted to enforce the underlying obligations. The Abandonment Orders carry a threat of liability for non-compliance; imposing conditions on the sale of Redwater's assets, on the other hand, does not create a liability in a formal sense, but it does preclude any sale from occurring unless and until those obligations are satisfied. Since the trustee must sell the assets in order to carry out its mandate, the effect of imposing conditions on the sale of Redwater's assets l'actif du failli » (par. 157). Tout d'abord, je tiens à préciser une chose : j'ai déjà conclu qu'étant donné que GTL a légalement renoncé aux bien inexploités en vertu du par. 14.06(4) de la LFI, il y a un conflit d'application dans la mesure où l'AER a inclus ces biens visés par les renonciations dans le calcul du RGTP de Redwater afin d'imposer des conditions à la vente des actifs de Redwater. Dans l'analyse qui suit, j'arrive également à la même conclusion en m'appuyant sur le second volet concernant l'entrave à la réalisation d'un objet fédéral du test de la prépondérance.

[280] Je suis en désaccord avec la conclusion de la majorité quant aux conditions relatives au RGTP pour deux raisons. D'abord, cette approche fait passer la forme avant le fond, ignorant la mise en garde du juge Gascon dans l'arrêt Moloney selon laquelle « [l]a province ne peut faire indirectement ce qu'il lui est interdit de faire directement » (par. 28; voir aussi Husky Oil, par. 41). Refuser d'approuver la vente des biens de Redwater à moins que GTL ne satisfasse aux obligations environnementales de Redwater n'est pas différent, au fond, que d'ordonner directement à Redwater ou à GTL de procéder à ces travaux. Il en est ainsi parce que l'AER atteint exactement le même résultat — le respect des obligations environnementales de Redwater — en faisant dépendre la vente de l'exécution des travaux par GTL lui-même, du versement par celle-ci d'un dépôt de garantie ou de l'inclusion des biens inexploités dans la vente, ce qui réduit le prix de vente du montant exact de ces engagements et permet de contraindre l'acheteur, en tant que « titulaire de permis » subséquent sous le régime de la loi provinciale, à se conformer aux ordonnances d'abandon.

[281] La seule différence entre ces deux exercices d'un pouvoir provincial est le moyen par lequel l'AER a choisi de faire exécuter les obligations sous-jacentes. Les ordonnances d'abandon comportent un risque de responsabilité pour non-respect; l'imposition de conditions à la vente des actifs de Redwater, par contre, ne crée pas formellement de responsabilité, mais empêche effectivement toute vente de se réaliser tant et aussi longtemps qu'il n'est pas satisfait à ces obligations. Étant donné que le syndic doit vendre les biens afin de remplir is the same as that of issuing abandonment orders — and, as my colleague acknowledges, it is the effect of provincial action, not its intent or its form, that is central to the paramountcy analysis (para. 116; see also Husky Oil, at para. 40). In either case, then, the effect of the AER's action is to create a debt enforcement scheme — one that requires the environmental obligations owed to the AER to be discharged ahead of the bankrupt's other debts.

[282] Second, it is irrelevant to this analysis that the licensing requirements predate Redwater's bankruptcy and apply to all licensees. This is no different from Abitibi, where the obligation to close down and remediate the properties predated AbitibiBowater's bankruptcy and could also have been said to constitute an "inherent" limitation on the value of the regulatory licence. Yet the obligations at issue there were provable claims. So too here. Alberta is, of course, free to affect the priority of claims in non-bankruptcy contexts. For example, it can leverage its licensing power to condition the sale of assets by solvent corporations on the payment of outstanding debts to the province. But "once bankruptcy has occurred [the BIA] determines the status and priority of the claims" (Husky Oil, at para. 32, quoting A. J. Roman and M. J. Sweatman, "The Conflict Between Canadian Provincial Personal Property Security Acts and The Federal Bankruptcy Act: The War is Over" (1992), 71 Can. Bar Rev. 77, at p. 79).

[283] In this case, imposing conditions on the sale of Redwater's valuable assets does result in a monetary debt in the AER's favour, whether in the form of: (1) the posting of security; (2) actual completion of the environmental work; or (3) the sale of the non-producing properties to another entity that is then regulated as a "licensee" and, as such, can be compelled under provincial law to complete the work. In each case, the result is the same: the AER is conditioning any sale of Redwater's assets on its son mandat, l'effet de l'imposition de conditions à la vente des biens de Redwater est le même que celui des ordonnances d'abandon — et, comme le reconnaît mon collègue, c'est l'effet de l'action provinciale, et non son intention ou sa forme, qui est au cœur de l'analyse relative à la prépondérance (par. 116; voir aussi Husky Oil, par. 40). L'effet de l'action de l'AER est donc, dans les deux cas, de créer un régime de recouvrement des créances — qui exige que les obligations environnementales envers l'AER soient acquittées avant les autres dettes du failli.

[282] Ensuite, le fait que les exigences en matière de permis précèdent la faillite et s'appliquent à tous les titulaires de permis n'est pas pertinent pour les besoins de la présente analyse. La situation n'est pas différente de celle dans l'affaire Abitibi, où l'obligation de fermer et de décontaminer les biens précédait la faillite d'AbitibiBowater et aurait également pu être considérée comme constituant une limite « inhérente » à la valeur du permis réglementaire. Pourtant, les obligations en cause dans cette affaire étaient des réclamations prouvables. C'est également le cas en l'espèce. Il est certes loisible à l'Alberta de modifier l'ordre de priorité des réclamations dans un contexte autre que celui d'une faillite. Par exemple, elle peut se servir de son pouvoir de délivrer des permis pour faire dépendre la vente des biens des sociétés solvables du paiement des dettes impayées envers la province. Mais « dès qu'il y a faillite, c'est [la LFI] qui détermine le statut et l'ordre de priorité des réclamations » (Husky Oil, par. 32, citant A. J. Roman et M. J. Sweatman, « The Conflict Between Canadian Provincial Personal Property Security Acts and the Federal Bankrupcy Act : The War is Over » (1992), 71 R. du B. can. 77, p. 79).

[283] En l'espèce, l'imposition de conditions à la vente des actifs de valeur de Redwater entraîne bel et bien une créance pécuniaire en faveur de l'AER, que ce soit sous forme : (1) de versement d'un dépôt de garantie; (2) d'achèvement réel des travaux environnementaux; ou (3) de vente des biens inexploités à une autre entité qui est alors réglementée comme « titulaire de permis » et qui peut ainsi être contrainte en application de la loi provinciale à mener à bien les travaux. Dans un cas comme dans l'autre, le résultat ability to recover a pre-existing debt owed to it by the bankrupt.

[284] An approach which artificially separates the Abandonment Orders and the transfer requirements in order to treat them as analytically distinct under the Abitibi test would cause the paramountcy analysis to turn on irrelevant subtleties in the manner or form in which the province has chosen to exercise its power. The two measures must be seen in tandem as the AER's means of enforcing a debt against the Redwater estate. As I have described, there is no meaningful difference in the bankruptcy context between a formal abandonment order directing a trustee to engage in remediation work and a rigid licensing system that imposes the exact same obligations as a condition of sale — a sale that, if the trustee is to carry out its mandate, must occur. The only effect of the majority's analysis is to encourage regulators to collect on their debts in more creative ways. None of this serves the purposes of paramountcy; and, more critically, nothing in that analysis offers insolvency professionals (or regulators, for that matter) clear guidance as to the types of obligations that will or will not satisfy the Abitibi test.

[285] Since it is sufficiently certain that the AER (or the OWA, as its delegate) will complete the abandonment and reclamation work, all three prongs of the Abitibi test are satisfied. The Abandonment Orders are provable claims, and therefore the AER may not compel Redwater or its trustee to fulfill the obligations in question outside of the BIA's priority scheme. Likewise, the AER may not condition the sale of Redwater's valuable assets on the performance of those same obligations.

[286] Towards the end of its analysis, the majority makes the point that the AER's enforcement actions in this case facilitate, rather than frustrate, est le même : l'AER fait dépendre la vente des biens de Redwater de sa capacité de recouvrer une dette préexistante que lui devait le failli.

[284] Une approche qui différencie artificiellement les ordonnances d'abandon et les exigences relatives au transfert afin de leur réserver un traitement distinct sur le plan analytique en application du critère Abitibi ferait reposer l'analyse relative à la prépondérance sur des subtilités non pertinentes concernant la manière dont la province a choisi d'exercer son pouvoir ou la forme que prend ce choix. Les deux mesures doivent être considérées ensemble comme le moyen employé par l'AER pour recouvrer une créance à l'encontre de l'actif de Redwater. Comme je l'ai expliqué, il n'existe aucune différence significative dans le contexte de la faillite entre une ordonnance officielle d'abandon enjoignant au syndic de procéder à des travaux de décontamination et un système de délivrance de permis rigide qui impose exactement les mêmes obligations comme condition de la vente — une vente qui, si le syndic veut remplir son mandat, doit avoir lieu. Le seul effet qu'a l'analyse de la majorité est d'encourager les organismes de réglementation à trouver des façons plus ingénieuses de recouvrer leurs créances. Rien de tout cela ne sert les fins de la prépondérance; et, fait plus important, rien dans cette analyse ne donne aux professionnels de l'insolvabilité (ni aux organismes de réglementation, d'ailleurs) des indications claires quant aux types d'obligations qui peuvent ou non satisfaire au test Abitibi.

[285] Comme il est suffisamment certain que l'AER (ou l'OWA, sa délégataire) achèvera les travaux d'abandon et de remise en état, il est satisfait aux trois volets du test Abitibi. Les ordonnances d'abandon sont des réclamations prouvables, et l'AER ne peut donc contraindre Redwater ou son syndic à acquitter les obligations en cause à l'extérieur du régime de priorité établi par la LFI. De la même façon, l'AER ne peut faire dépendre la vente des biens de valeur de Redwater de l'exécution de ces mêmes obligations.

[286] Vers la fin de son analyse, la majorité soutient que les mesures d'application prises par l'AER en l'espèce favorisent, au lieu de contrecarrer, la Parliament's intentions behind the BIA priority scheme due to the super priority for environmental remediation costs set out in s. 14.06(7) (para. 159). Respectfully, I completely reject this contention. No party attempted to argue that the super priority in subs. (7) was applicable on the facts of this case. Indeed, it is clear that it is not, as the majority itself acknowledges. I cannot accept that where Parliament has set out a particular super priority for the Crown for environmental remediation costs, secured against specific real property assets of the bankrupt, and where certain conditions are met, it somehow "facilitates" Parliament's priority scheme to, in effect, impose that super priority over other assets, in the absence of those statutory conditions being satisfied. It is wrong to rely on s. 14.06(7) to recognize an effective super priority for the AER in circumstances where the terms of that subsection are inapplicable. Doing so clearly undermines the detailed and comprehensive priority scheme that Parliament set out in the BIA to achieve its purposes. Had Parliament wished to extend a Crown super priority for environmental remediation costs beyond the circumstances in s. 14.06(7), it could have done so.

[287] As a final note, GTL and ATB Financial advance alternative arguments that some aspects of Alberta's statutory regime, including the definition of "licensee", frustrate the purposes of the 1997 amendments to the BIA — purposes that, they say, include protecting insolvency professionals from liability and reducing the number of orphaned sites.

[288] It is not strictly necessary for me to address these arguments, since I have already found that there is an operational conflict (the Alberta regime's failure to recognize the lawfulness of GTL's disclaimers) as well as a frustration of purpose on other grounds (interference with the BIA's priority scheme). I would note, however, that GTL has stated that it would immediately seek a discharge if it were required to carry out the abandonment work, which would result réalisation des intentions du Parlement qui sous-tendent le régime de priorité de la LFI en raison de la superpriorité prévue au par. 14.06(7) pour les frais de décontamination environnementale (par. 159). Avec égards, je rejette entièrement cette prétention. Aucune partie n'a tenté de faire valoir que la superpriorité visée au par. (7) s'appliquait aux faits de l'espèce. En effet, elle ne s'applique clairement pas, comme le reconnait elle-même la majorité. Je ne peux accepter que, dans les cas où le Parlement a conféré à la Couronne une superpriorité lorsque certaines conditions sont réunies pour les frais de décontamination environnementale et l'a garantie par une sûreté sur certains biens réels du failli, on « favorise » d'une façon ou d'une autre le régime de priorité du Parlement en imposant dans les faits cette superpriorité sur d'autres biens alors que ces conditions statutaires ne sont pas remplies. Il est erroné d'invoquer le par. 14.06(7) pour reconnaître à l'AER une superpriorité dans des situations où les conditions de ce paragraphe ne s'appliquent pas. Agir de la sorte sape clairement le régime de priorité détaillé et complet que le Parlement a établi dans la LFI pour réaliser ses objectifs. Si le Parlement avait souhaité étendre une superpriorité de la Couronne pour des frais de décontamination environnementale dans d'autres cas que ceux visés au par. 14.06(7), il aurait pu le faire.

[287] En terminant, GTL et ATB Financial font valoir des arguments subsidiaires selon lesquels certains aspects du régime de réglementation albertain, notamment la définition de « titulaire de permis », entravent la réalisation des objets des modifications apportées à la LFI en 1997 — objets qui, affirment-ils, comprennent la protection des professionnels de l'insolvabilité contre la responsabilité et la réduction du nombre de sites orphelins.

[288] Il n'est pas strictement nécessaire que j'examine ces arguments, car j'ai déjà conclu qu'il existe un conflit d'application (la non-reconnaissance par le régime albertain de la légalité des renonciations de GTL) ainsi qu'une entrave à la réalisation d'objet pour d'autres motifs (atteinte au régime de priorité établi par la LFI). Je tiens toutefois à souligner que GTL a déclaré qu'elle demanderait immédiatement une libération si elle était tenue d'exécuter les in the remaining Redwater assets being surrendered to the OWA. The result in this circumstance, which does not appear to be acknowledged, or which appears to be ignored, in my colleague's reasons, would be more orphaned oil wells. To the extent, then, that the 1997 amendments were intended to reduce the number of orphaned properties, that purpose is also frustrated by preventing a receiver or trustee from disclaiming value-negative assets.

IV. Conclusion

[289] There is much to be said in the context of this appeal about which outcome will optimally balance environmental protection and economic development. On the one hand, enforcing the AER's remediation orders would effectively wipe out the estate's remaining value and leave all of its creditors (except the AER) without any recovery. It would also likely discourage insolvency professionals from accepting mandates in cases such as this one — potentially resulting in more orphaned properties across the province. On the other hand, permitting GTL to disclaim the non-producing wells and preventing the AER from enforcing environmental obligations before the estate's value is depleted would leave open the question of who, exactly, should foot the bill for remediating the affected land.

[290] Whatever the merits of these competing positions, in matters of statutory interpretation this Court is one of law, not of policy. As the majority recognizes, at para. 30, "it is not the role of this Court to decide the best regulatory approach to the oil and gas industry"; decisions on these matters are made — indeed, they have been made — by legislators, not judges. And the law in this case supports only one outcome. But this does not mean that the AER is without options to protect the public from bearing the costs of abandoning oil wells. It could adjust its LMR requirements to prevent other oil companies from reaching the point of bankruptcy with unfunded abandonment obligations (as it has already done since this litigation began). It could travaux d'abandon, ce qui entraînerait la cession du reste des biens de Redwater à l'OWA. Il en résulterait, ce qui ne semble pas être reconnu ou paraît être passé sous silence dans les motifs de mon collègue, un nombre plus élevé de puits de pétrole orphelins. Dans la mesure où les modifications de 1997 étaient censées entraîner une réduction du nombre de biens orphelins, la réalisation de cet objet est également entravée en empêchant le séquestre ou le syndic de renoncer aux biens ayant une valeur négative.

IV. Conclusion

[289] Il y a beaucoup à dire, dans le contexte du présent pourvoi, sur l'issue qui établirait un équilibre optimal entre la protection de l'environnement et le développement économique. D'une part, faire exécuter les ordonnances de décontamination de l'AER aurait pour effet d'éliminer la valeur restante de l'actif et priverait tous ses créanciers (sauf l'AER) de tout recouvrement. En outre, cela découragerait vraisemblablement les professionnels de l'insolvabilité d'accepter des mandats dans des cas comme celui qui nous occupe, ce qui pourrait occasionner une augmentation du nombre de biens orphelins dans l'ensemble de la province. D'autre part, permettre à GTL de renoncer aux puits inexploités en empêchant l'AER de faire exécuter les obligations environnementales avant que l'actif soit épuisé laisserait sans réponse la question de savoir qui, exactement, devrait payer la facture de la décontamination des terrains concernés.

[290] Quel que soit le bien-fondé de ces positions opposées en matière d'interprétation statutaire, notre Cour est un tribunal de droit, et non de politique. Comme le reconnaît la majorité (par. 30), « il ne revient pas à notre Cour de décider de la meilleure approche réglementaire pour l'industrie pétrolière et gazière » : les décisions sur ces enjeux sont prises — et ont d'ailleurs été prises — par les législateurs, et non par les juges. Et le droit en l'espèce n'appuie qu'une seule issue. Mais cela ne veut pas dire qu'aucune solution ne s'offre à l'AER pour empêcher le public d'avoir à supporter les frais liés à l'abandon des puits de pétrole. Il pourrait ajuster ses exigences relatives à la RGTP afin d'éviter que d'autres sociétés pétrolières soient acculées à la faillite en raison adopt strategies used in other jurisdictions, such as requiring the posting of security up-front so that abandonment costs are not borne entirely at the end of an oil well's life cycle. One of the interveners, the Canadian Bankers' Association, noted that such systems of up-front bonding are prevalent in American jurisdictions. The AER could work with industry to increase levies so that the orphan fund has sufficient resources to respond to the recent increase in the number of orphaned properties. It could seek judicial intervention in cases where it suspects that a company is strategically using insolvency as a voluntary step to avoid its environmental liabilities (Sydco Energy Inc. (Re), 2018 ABQB 75, 64 Alta. L.R. (6th) 156, at para. 84). And, as I have noted, it can continue to apply the province's statutory regime to all assets of an insolvent or bankrupt debtor that are retained by a receiver or trustee, including wells and facilities that the receiver or trustee seeks to operate rather than sell.

d'obligations d'abandon non financées (comme il l'a déjà fait depuis que le présent litige a commencé). Il pourrait adopter les stratégies utilisées dans d'autres ressorts, comme exiger dès le début le versement d'un dépôt de garantie afin que les frais liés à l'abandon ne soient pas entièrement supportés à la fin du cycle de vie du puits de pétrole. L'une des intervenants, l'Association des banquiers canadiens, a fait remarquer que de tels systèmes de dépôts de garantie au départ abondent dans les États américains. L'AER pourrait collaborer avec l'industrie pour augmenter les prélèvements afin que le fonds pour les puits orphelins dispose de ressources suffisantes pour répondre à la récente augmentation du nombre de biens orphelins. Il pourrait solliciter l'intervention des tribunaux dans les cas où il soupçonne une société d'utiliser stratégiquement l'insolvabilité comme une mesure facultative lui permettant de se soustraire à ses engagements environnementaux (Sydco Energy Inc. (Re), 2018 ABQB 75, 64 Alta. L.R. (6th) 156, par. 84). Et, comme je l'ai mentionné, il peut continuer d'appliquer le régime législatif provincial à tous les biens d'un débiteur insolvable ou en faillite qui sont conservés par un séquestre ou un syndic, y compris les puits et installations que le séquestre ou le syndic veut exploiter plutôt que de les vendre.

[291] The AER may not, however, disregard federal bankruptcy law in the pursuit of otherwise valid statutory objectives. Yet that is precisely what it has done here by effectively displacing the "polluter-pays" principle enacted by Parliament in favour of a "lender-pays" regime, in which responsibility for the bankrupt's environmental liabilities is transferred to the estate's creditors. Our paramountcy jurisprudence does not permit that result.

[291] L'AER ne peut pas, cependant, faire abstraction du droit fédéral de la faillite pour atteindre des objectifs statutaires par ailleurs valides. Or, c'est précisément ce qu'il a fait en l'espèce en écartant effectivement le principe du « pollueur-payeur » adopté par le Parlement en faveur d'un régime du « prêteur-payeur », dans le cadre duquel la responsabilité à l'égard des engagements environnementaux du failli passe aux créanciers de l'actif. Notre jurisprudence en matière de prépondérance n'admet pas ce résultat.

[292] For the foregoing reasons, I would dismiss the appeal and affirm the orders made by the chambers judge.

[292] Pour les motifs qui précèdent, je suis d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi et de confirmer les ordonnances rendues par le juge en cabinet.

APPENDIX

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3

14.06 (1) No trustee is bound to assume the duties of trustee in matters relating to assignments, bankruptcy orders or proposals, but having accepted an appointment in relation to those matters the trustee shall, until discharged or another trustee is appointed in the trustee's stead, perform the duties required of a trustee under this Act.

(1.1) In subsections (1.2) to (6), a reference to a trustee means a trustee in a bankruptcy or proposal and includes

(a) an interim receiver;

(b) a receiver within the meaning of subsection 243(2); and

(c) any other person who has been lawfully appointed to take, or has lawfully taken, possession or control of any property of an insolvent person or a bankrupt that was acquired for, or is used in relation to, a business carried on by the insolvent person or bankrupt.

. . .

(2) Notwithstanding anything in any federal or provincial law, a trustee is not personally liable in that position for any environmental condition that arose or environmental damage that occurred

(a) before the trustee's appointment; or

(b) after the trustee's appointment unless it is established that the condition arose or the damage occurred as a result of the trustee's gross negligence or wilful misconduct or, in the Province of Quebec, the trustee's gross or intentional fault.

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) exempts a trustee from any duty to report or make disclosure imposed by a law referred to in that subsection.

(4) Notwithstanding anything in any federal or provincial law but subject to subsection (2), where an order is made which has the effect of requiring a trustee to remedy

ANNEXE

Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, c. B-3

14.06 (1) Le syndic n'est pas tenu d'assumer les fonctions de syndic relativement à des cessions, à des ordonnances de faillite ou à des propositions concordataires; toutefois, dès qu'il accepte sa nomination à ce titre, il doit accomplir les fonctions que la présente loi lui impose, jusqu'à ce qu'il ait été libéré ou qu'un autre syndic ait été nommé à sa place.

(1.1) Les paragraphes (1.2) à (6) s'appliquent également aux syndics agissant dans le cadre d'une faillite ou d'une proposition ainsi qu'aux personnes suivantes :

a) les séquestres intérimaires;

b) les séquestres au sens du paragraphe 243(2);

c) les autres personnes qui sont nommément habilitées à prendre — ou ont pris légalement — la possession ou la responsabilité d'un bien acquis ou utilisé par une personne insolvable ou un failli dans le cadre de ses affaires.

. . .

(2) Par dérogation au droit fédéral et provincial, le syndic est, ès qualités, dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle découlant de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement survenu avant ou après sa nomination, sauf celui causé par sa négligence grave ou son inconduite délibérée ou, dans la province de Québec, par sa faute lourde ou intentionnelle.

(3) Le paragraphe (2) n'a pas pour effet de soustraire le syndic à une obligation de faire rapport ou de communiquer des renseignements prévue par le droit applicable en l'espèce.

(4) Par dérogation au droit fédéral et provincial, mais sous réserve du paragraphe (2), le syndic est, ès qualités, dégagé de toute responsabilité personnelle découlant du any environmental condition or environmental damage affecting property involved in a bankruptcy, proposal or receivership, the trustee is not personally liable for failure to comply with the order, and is not personally liable for any costs that are or would be incurred by any person in carrying out the terms of the order,

(a) if, within such time as is specified in the order, within ten days after the order is made if no time is so specified, within ten days after the appointment of the trustee, if the order is in effect when the trustee is appointed, or during the period of the stay referred to in paragraph (b), the trustee

(i) complies with the order, or

(ii) on notice to the person who issued the order, abandons, disposes of or otherwise releases any interest in any real property, or any right in any immovable, affected by the condition or damage;

(b) during the period of a stay of the order granted, on application made within the time specified in the order referred to in paragraph (a), within ten days after the order is made or within ten days after the appointment of the trustee, if the order is in effect when the trustee is appointed, by

(i) the court or body having jurisdiction under the law pursuant to which the order was made to enable the trustee to contest the order, or

(ii) the court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy for the purposes of assessing the economic viability of complying with the order; or

(c) if the trustee had, before the order was made, abandoned or renounced or been divested of any interest in any real property, or any right in any immovable, affected by the condition or damage.

(5) The court may grant a stay of the order referred to in subsection (4) on such notice and for such period as the court deems necessary for the purpose of enabling the trustee to assess the economic viability of complying with the order.

(6) If the trustee has abandoned or renounced any interest in any real property, or any right in any immovable, affected by the environmental condition or environmental non-respect de toute ordonnance de réparation de tout fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement et touchant un bien visé par une faillite, une proposition ou une mise sous séquestre administrée par un séquestre, et de toute responsabilité personnelle relativement aux frais engagés par toute personne exécutant l'ordonnance :

a) si, dans les dix jours suivant l'ordonnance ou dans le délai fixé par celle-ci, dans les dix jours suivant sa nomination si l'ordonnance est alors en vigueur ou pendant la durée de la suspension visée à l'alinéa b) :

(i) il s'y conforme,

(ii) il abandonne, après avis à la personne ayant rendu l'ordonnance, tout droit sur l'immeuble en cause ou tout intérêt sur le bien réel en cause, en dispose ou s'en dessaisit;

b) pendant la durée de la suspension de l'ordonnance qui est accordée, sur demande présentée dans les dix jours suivant l'ordonnance visée à l'alinéa a) ou dans le délai fixé par celle-ci, ou dans les dix jours suivant sa nomination si l'ordonnance est alors en vigueur :

(i) soit par le tribunal ou l'autorité qui a compétence relativement à l'ordonnance, en vue de permettre au syndic de la contester,

(ii) soit par le tribunal qui a compétence en matière de faillite, en vue d'évaluer les conséquences économiques du respect de l'ordonnance;

c) si, avant que l'ordonnance ne soit rendue, il avait abandonné tout droit sur l'immeuble en cause ou tout intérêt sur le bien réel en cause ou y avait renoncé, ou s'en était dessaisi.

(5) En vue de permettre au syndic d'évaluer les conséquences économiques du respect de l'ordonnance, le tribunal peut en ordonner la suspension après avis et pour la période qu'il estime indiqués.

(6) Si le syndic a abandonné tout droit sur l'immeuble en cause ou tout intérêt sur le bien réel en cause ou y a renoncé, les réclamations pour les frais de réparation du damage, claims for costs of remedying the condition or damage shall not rank as costs of administration.

(7) Any claim by Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province against the debtor in a bankruptcy, proposal or receivership for costs of remedying any environmental condition or environmental damage affecting real property or an immovable of the debtor is secured by security on the real property or immovable affected by the environmental condition or environmental damage and on any other real property or immovable of the debtor that is contiguous with that real property or immovable and that is related to the activity that caused the environmental condition or environmental damage, and the security

(a) is enforceable in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction in which the real property or immovable is located, in the same way as a mortgage, hypothec or other security on real property or immovables; and

(b) ranks above any other claim, right, charge or security against the property, despite any other provision of this Act or anything in any other federal or provincial law.

(8) Despite subsection 121(1), a claim against a debtor in a bankruptcy or proposal for the costs of remedying any environmental condition or environmental damage affecting real property or an immovable of the debtor shall be a provable claim, whether the condition arose or the damage occurred before or after the date of the filing of the proposal or the date of the bankruptcy.

Appeal allowed, MOLDAVER and CÔTÉ JJ. dissenting.

Solicitors for the appellants: Bennett Jones, Calgary; Alberta Energy Regulator, Calgary.

Solicitors for the respondents: Blake, Cassels & Graydon, Calgary; Cassels Brock & Blackwell, Calgary; Gowling WLG (Canada), Calgary.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario: Attorney General of Ontario, Toronto.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia: Attorney General of British Columbia, Victoria.

fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement et touchant le bien ne font pas partie des frais d'administration.

(7) En cas de faillite, de proposition ou de mise sous séquestre administrée par un séquestre, toute réclamation de Sa Majesté du chef du Canada ou d'une province contre le débiteur pour les frais de réparation du fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement et touchant un de ses immeubles ou biens réels est garantie par une sûreté sur le bien en cause et sur ceux qui sont contigus à celui où le dommage est survenu et qui sont liés à l'activité ayant causé le fait ou le dommage; la sûreté peut être exécutée selon le droit du lieu où est situé le bien comme s'il s'agissait d'une hypothèque ou autre garantie sur celui-ci et, par dérogation aux autres dispositions de la présente loi et à toute règle de droit fédéral et provincial, a priorité sur tout autre droit, charge, sûreté ou réclamation visant le bien.

(8) Malgré le paragraphe 121(1), la réclamation pour les frais de réparation du fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement et touchant l'immeuble ou le bien réel du débiteur constitue une réclamation prouvable, que la date du fait ou dommage soit antérieure ou postérieure à celle de la faillite ou du dépôt de la proposition.

Pourvoi accueilli, les juges MOLDAVER et CÔTÉ sont dissidents.

Procureurs des appelants : Bennett Jones, Calgary; Alberta Energy Regulator, Calgary.

Procureurs des intimées : Blake, Cassels & Graydon, Calgary; Cassels Brock & Blackwell, Calgary; Gowling WLG (Canada), Calgary.

Procureur de l'intervenante la procureure générale de l'Ontario : Procureure générale de l'Ontario, Toronto.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique : Procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, Victoria.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Saskatchewan: Attorney General of Saskatchewan, Regina.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de la Saskatchewan : Procureur général de la Saskatchewan, Regina.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Alberta: Attorney General of Alberta, Edmonton.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Alberta : Procureur général de l'Alberta, Edmonton.

Solicitor for the intervener Ecojustice Canada Society: Ecojustice Clinic at the University of Ottawa, Ottawa.

Procureur de l'intervenante Ecojustice Canada Society : Clinique Ecojustice à l'Université d'Ottawa, Ottawa.

Solicitors for the intervener the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers: Lawson Lundell, Calgary.

Procureurs de l'intervenante l'Association canadienne des producteurs pétroliers : Lawson Lundell, Calgary.

Solicitors for the intervener Greenpeace Canada: Stockwoods, Toronto.

Procureurs de l'intervenante Greenpeace Canada : Stockwoods, Toronto.

Solicitor for the intervener Action Surface Rights Association: University of Calgary Public Interest Law Clinic, Calgary.

Procureur de l'intervenante Action Surface Rights Association : University of Calgary Public Interest Law Clinic, Calgary.

Solicitors for the intervener the Canadian Association of Insolvency and Restructuring Professionals: McMillan, Calgary.

Procureurs de l'intervenante l'Association canadienne des professionnels de l'insolvabilité et de la réorganisation : McMillan, Calgary.

Solicitors for the intervener the Canadian Bankers' Association: Norton Rose Fulbright Canada, Calgary.

Procureurs de l'intervenante l'Association des banquiers canadiens : Norton Rose Fulbright Canada, Calgary.

Most Negative Treatment: Reversed
Most Recent Reversed: Pries v. Economical Mutual Insurance Co. | 2013 CarswellOnt 9902, [2013] O.F.S.C.D. No. 93 | (F.S.C.O. App., Jul 8, 2013)

2012 CarswellOnt 12509
Financial Services Commission of Ontario (Arbitration Decision)

Pries v. Economical Mutual Insurance Co.

2012 CarswellOnt 12509

Leroy Pries, Applicant and Economical Mutual Insurance Company, Insurer

John Wilson Member

Heard: August 10, 2012
Judgment: September 21, 2012
Docket: FSCO A11-002004

Counsel: David Donnelly, for Mr. Pries
Helen D.K. Friedman, for Economical Mutual Insurance Company

Subject: Insurance
Related Abridgment Classifications
Insurance
XII Automobile insurance
XII.5 No-fault benefits
XII.5.e Disability benefits (loss of income payments)
XII.5.e.ii Entitlement
XII.5.e.ii.A General principles
Headnote
Insurance --- Automobile insurance — No-fault benefits — Disability benefits (loss of income payments) — Entitlement — General principles
Table of Authorities
Cases considered by John Wilson Member:
Beattie v. National Frontier Insurance Co. (2003), 5 C.C.L.I. (4th) 1, 68 O.R. (3d) 60, 2003 CarswellOnt 4465, 233 D.L.R. (4th) 329, 179 O.A.C. 52 (Ont. C.A.) — considered
Bell ExpressVu Ltd. Partnership v. Rex (2002), 212 D.L.R. (4th) 1, 287 N.R. 248, [2002] 5 W.W.R. 1, 166 B.C.A.C. 1, 271 W.A.C. 1, 18 C.P.R. (4th) 289, 100 B.C.L.R. (3d) 1, 2002 SCC 42, 2002 CarswellBC 851, 2002 CarswellBC 852, 93 C.R.R. (2d) 189, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559 (S.C.C.) — considered
Boarelli v. Flannigan (1973), 1973 CarswellOnt 872, [1973] 3 O.R. 69, 36 D.L.R. (3d) 4 (Ont. C.A.) — considered
Cugliari v. White (1998), 159 D.L.R. (4th) 254, 109 O.A.C. 109, 38 O.R. (3d) 641, 1998 CarswellOnt 1789, 21 C.P.C. (4th) 213 (Ont. C.A.) — referred to Kirkham v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. (1996), 1996 CarswellOnt 3339 (Ont. Insurance Comm.) — considered
Kirkham v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. (1997), 1997 CarswellOnt 1277 (Ont. Insurance Comm.) — referred to Kirkham v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. (1998), 1998 CarswellOnt 2811 (Ont. Div. Ct.) — referred to Kirkham v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. (1998), 1998 CarswellOnt 2799 (Ont. C.A.) — referred to

R. v. McIntosh (1995), 21 O.R. (3d) 797 (note), 178 N.R. 161, 79 O.A.C. 81, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 686, 1995 CarswellOnt 4, 1995 CarswellOnt 518, 36 C.R. (4th) 171, 95 C.C.C. (3d) 481 (S.C.C.) — considered
Slater v. Personal Insurance Co. of Canada (2008), 2008 CarswellOnt 2019 (F.S.C.O. Arb.) — considered
State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. v. Kong (1996), 1996 CarswellOnt 2668, 5 O.T.C. 147 (Ont. Gen. Div.) — referred to Trottier v. Royal & SunAlliance Insurance Co. of Canada (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 5083 (F.S.C.O. App.) — considered
Vanderkop v. Personal Insurance Co. of Canada (2008), 2008 CarswellOnt 2761, 63 C.C.L.I. (4th) 64 (Ont. S.C.J.) — referred to Vanderkop v. Personal Insurance Co. of Canada (2009), 2009 ONCA 511, 2009 CarswellOnt 3604, 74 C.C.L.I. (4th) 191, 251 O.A.C. 77, 2009 C.E.B. & P.G.R. 8348 (Ont. C.A.) — referred to

John Wilson Member*:

Issues:

1 The Applicant, Leroy Pries, was injured in a motor vehicle accident on September 3, 2007. He applied for and received statutory accident benefits from Economical Mutual Insurance Company ("Economical"), payable under the Schedule. [1]

2 Mr. Pries applied for a number of statutory accident benefits, including an income replacement benefit. For some time this benefit was stopped by Economical as it believed that he no longer met the criteria for its payment.

3 On the receipt of further information Economical reinstated payment of an income replacement benefit. In the meantime however, Mr. Pries had applied to the Canada Pension Plan for a disability benefit under that regime.

4 On March 3, 2010, Mr. Pries was informed that his application for CPP was accepted and received a lump sum payment from CPP retroactive to the date when CPP considered entitlement began. The payment reflected CPP benefits payable between November 23, 2008 to May 2, 2010.

5 Mr. Pries notified Economical of the benefit that he had received from CPP and on March 15, 2010 Economical formally provided notice to Mr. Pries of its intention to demand repayment of benefits by Mr. Pries as a result of what it qualified as an overpayment situation brought about by the receipt of the lump sum from CPP.

6 The parties were unable to resolve their disputes through mediation, and Mr. Pries applied for arbitration at the Financial Services Commission of Ontario under the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, c.I.8, as amended.

7 The preliminary issue is:

1. Is Economical entitled to the repayment of weekly income replacement benefits in the sum of $12,333.34 as set out in its letter of April 27, 2010 due to the retroactive payment Mr. Pries received for CPP benefits in the amount of $10,954.88 covering the period of November 1, 2008 to February 28, 2010?

Result:

8

1. Economical may not claim repayment income replacement benefits prior to the notice of repayment given on April 27, 2010 and may only deduct CPP benefits on a going- forward basis from the date of notice.

Evidence and Analysis:

9 As noted above, the background facts in this matter are not in dispute. Economical currently recognizes that Mr. Pries is entitled to an income replacement benefit on an ongoing basis. Both sides recognize that the ongoing payments Mr. Pries receives from CPP are properly deducted from his income replacement benefit payment. Where this dispute arises is Economical's contention that the entire retroactive CPP payment is properly repayable in accordance with its notice under section 47 of the Schedule as it then read.

10 The right to deduct CPP payments from SABS IRB payments is a statutory provision that is incorporated into the insurance contract. Likewise, the right of an insurer to demand repayment under section 47(1)(c) (receipt of collateral deductible payments) does not arise outside of the statute. [2]

11 The nub of the dispute is section 47(3) which states that:

> The obligation to repay a benefit does not apply unless the notice under subsection (2) is given within 12 months after the payment was made.

12 Economical chooses to interpret that section as meaning that notice must be given within 12 months after the collateral payment giving rise to the overpayment is received, while Mr. Pries has taken the position that a right to repayment is only generated when notice is given within 12 months of the date that payment of the benefit to be repaid has been paid.

13 Given that the Schedule in its various iterations wins no prizes for clarity and elegance in legislative drafting, it is not surprising that the parties have had some difficulty in agreeing on the meaning of "payment" in this section.

14 The word "payment" in the context of section 47 is not defined. Consequentially, both parties have looked to the grammatical sense of the phrase and the principles of legislative interpretation to assist them in divining some meaning.

15 Legislative interpretation in the words of Borins J.A. "resolves conflicts where the words of a provision are reasonably capable of more than one meaning." [3]

16 Iacobucci J. reminds us, in Bell ExpressVu Ltd. Partnership, that:

> The preferred approach recognizes the important role that context must inevitably play when a court construes the written words of a statute: as Professor John Willis incisively noted in his seminal article "Statute Interpretation in a Nutshell" (1938), 16 Can. Bar Rev. 1, at p. 6, "words, like [page581] people, take their colour from their surroundings". This being the case, where the provision under consideration is found in an Act that is itself a component of a larger statutory scheme, the surroundings that colour the words and the scheme of the Act are more expansive. In such an instance, the application of Driedger's principle gives rise to what was described in R. v. Ulybel Enterprises Ltd., [2001] 2 S.C.R. 867, 2001 SCC 56, at para. 52, as "the principle of interpretation that presumes a harmony, coherence, and consistency between statutes dealing with the same subject matter". (See also Stoddard v. Watson, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 1069, at p. 1079; Pointe-Claire (City) v. Quebec (Labour Court) [4]

17 The first analysis must be to determine whether the word "payment" as used in section 47 is reasonably capable of more than one meaning.

18 To start, the Concise Oxford Dictionary accords three varying definitions to the word:

> Payment 1 The act or an instance of paying. 2 an amount paid. 3 reward, recompense.

19 In this dispute, the definition "an amount paid" could potentially encompass the differing interpretations put on the word by both parties. Does this then make the word ambiguous enough to engage further the principles of statutory interpretation?

20 Iacobucci J., in Bell ExpressVu, posed the same question:

> What, then, in law is an ambiguity? To answer, an ambiguity must be "real" (Marcotte, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 108, supra, at p. 115). The words of the provision must be "reasonably capable of more than one meaning" (Westminster Bank Ltd. v.

> Zang, [1966] A.C. 182 (H.L.), at p. 222, per Lord Reid). By necessity, however, one must consider the "entire context" of a provision before one can determine if it is reasonably capable of multiple interpretations. [5]

21 Since examining the word by itself sheds little light on the section, it is necessary to divine the meaning of the word from its context. The immediate context reads as follows:

> The obligation to repay a benefit does not apply unless the notice under subsection (2) is given within 12 months after the payment was made.

22 Counsel for Mr. Pries points to the use of the word "repay" in the same provision as payment as a key to interpretation. For Mr. Donnelly the payment can only be the payment of the benefit under the SABS which the Insurer wishes to have clawed back or reimbursed.

23 Counsel for Economical instead drew my attention to the wider context of section 47. Section 47(1)(c) for example provides that an insured shall repay to the insurer:

> Any income replacement, non-earner or caregiver benefit or any benefit under Part VI to the extent of any payments received by the person that are deductible from those benefits under this Regulation.
>
> [emphasis added]

24 It is clear in the latter referenced provision that the word payments refers to collateral payments received by an insured that would be deductible in the calculation of an income replacement benefit.

25 Adding to the confusion is the likely intention on the part of the drafters of the Regulation to have CPP and other income support benefits deducted from the amount payable by way of income replacement benefits.

26 Mr. Pries' reading of the clause would, in the mind of the insurer, inhibit the intention of the Act by creating circumstances where it would be impossible to provide notice of repayment in a timely manner and so disentitle an insurer from repayment.

27 The Insurer states that it would have to engage in time travel to provide adequate notice and to engage the repayment provisions in Mr. Pries' case

28 An alternative interpretation would be that the legislature did not intend that Mr. Pries' lump sum CPP payment be clawed back at all.

29 The revised version of the 2010 Schedule makes it clear that it is not the intention of the legislature to permit a clawback of benefits under all situations:

> (3) If the notice required under subsection (2) is not given within 12 months after the payment of the amount that is to be repaid, the person to whom the notice would have been given ceases to be liable to repay the amount unless it was originally paid to the person as a result of wilful misrepresentation or fraud. O. Reg. 34/10, s. 52 (3).

30 While still perhaps inelegant, the meaning of the section is clear. If, for example, Mr. Pries received a payment in January 2012 that the Insurer wants repaid, then notice must be given by January 2013 or "the person to whom the notice would have been given ceases to be liable to repay the amount." This is precisely what the predecessor section 47 is said to express.

31 Counsel for Economical, however, points to this change in wording as evidence of a change in meaning of the section as it read in the 1996 Schedule. I note, however, that the Legislation Act, 2006 provides:

> 56. (1) The repeal, revocation or amendment of an Act or regulation does not imply anything about the previous state of the law or that the Act or regulation was previously in force.
>
> (2) The amendment of an Act or regulation does not imply that the previous state of the law was different.

32 In the end I find that nothing meaningful can be read into the changes between the 1996 and the 2010 Schedules. At best it would be a clarification and reassertion of what went before.

33 In such a case, it would make sense that "payment" takes its immediate context from the repayment of a benefit and that the appropriate time frame for the notice requirement relates to the original payment of the benefit being reclaimed.

34 In the context of the limited jurisprudence to date on this issue, this is not without precedent.

35 Mr. Pries relies principally on the Slater [6] case, an arbitration decision by Arbitrator Ashby, dating from 2008. In that matter, Personal Insurance claimed a repayment of benefits due to an error in calculation. Although the reason for repayment was different, the provisions relating to notice of repayment by the Insurer are identical to those faced by Mr. Pries. Arbitrator Ashby held that "payment" in section 47(3) refers to the initial payment of the benefit to the insured by the insured. Accordingly, Mr. Pries' interpretation is not without precedent.

36 In Trottier, [7] Director's Delegate Draper also dealt with the repayment provisions in section 47. In that matter, the Director's Delegate found that "in my opinion that 'the payment' in s. 47(3) refers to the payment of the accident benefit, not the payment of collateral benefits."

37 Economical's principal argument against this interpretation is that it runs counter to the purpose of the repayment provisions and the collateral reduction. If the legislature has decided that certain collateral payments are deductible, then it makes no sense for an insured to be in a position to keep an overpayment just because of the manner in which the payment was made: a retrospective bulk payment in the case of Mr. Pries. Economical sees this as an interpretive absurdity conferring what can only be a windfall of double payment on Mr. Pries.

38 As Professor Ruth Sullivan has observed [8] :

> In a perfect world the legislature would create flawless legislation. Each statute would be drafted so that the effects of interpreting and applying it to an unfolding reality would match the goals sought by the legislature.

39 The Schedule exists in a very imperfect universe. It has been subject to continual revision, tinkering and titivation in an attempt to balance its political sensitivity with the realities of the insurance marketplace.

40 Professor Sullivan concluded her observation as follows:

> In an imperfect world there is often a divergence between the purpose of legislation on the one hand and the effects of applying it on the other. The language of particular provisions may turn out to be over or under inclusive: there may be a lacuna in the legislative scheme. [9]

41 If the sole purpose of the repayment provision is to prevent double payment, then there indeed is a logical dissonance if the provision of the payment by retroactive lump sum somehow succeeds in avoiding at least part of the effective deductibility of the collateral payment. Economical would have me change the meaning of "payment" in section 47(3) to facilitate the operation of the policy against double recovery. I am not convinced that it is either proper or appropriate to do so.

42 Lamer C.J., in McIntosh [10] , dealing with what he characterized as Criminal Code "provisions (that) overlap, and are internally inconsistent in certain respects", stated:

> In resolving the interpretive issue raised by the Crown, I take as my starting point the proposition that where no ambiguity arises on the face of a statutory provision, then its clear words should be given effect. This is another way of asserting what is sometimes referred to as the "golden rule" of literal construction: a statute should be interpreted in a manner consistent with the plain meaning of its terms. Where the language of the statute is plain and admits of only one meaning, the task of interpretation does not arise

43 Elsewhere in the decision he commented:

> The fact that a provision gives rise to absurd results is not, in my opinion, sufficient to declare it ambiguous and then embark upon a broad-ranging interpretive analysis would match the goals sought by the legislature.

44 Professor Sullivan sums up the reasoning behind Lamer C.J.'s approach as follows:

> While courts are willing to correct drafting errors, they are reluctant to fill gaps in legislation. This reluctance is grounded in two factors. First, unlike mistakes, which are always inadvertent, a gap in legislation may be deliberate. Gaps may result from faulty drafting but equally they may result from factual misconceptions, poor planning or even a considered policy choice. For this reason, gaps are taken to embody the actual intentions of the legislature, which courts are bound to respect. It is up to the legislature rather than the courts to effect any desired change. Second, whether inadvertent or not, gaps result from provisions or schemes that are under-inclusive, and correcting under-inclusiveness would require courts to legislate.

45 In this matter, it is plausible that the legislature was not as concerned about limited double recovery as it was about encouraging insureds to apply for potential collateral benefits, even in the face of initial refusals by the collateral carrier. In Mr. Pries' case, he followed through with an application for CPP benefits, which in the long term greatly benefitted the Insurer in spite of initial roadblocks and refusals. Some incentive for insureds to persevere [11] would not be contrary to the scheme of the *Schedul*e since it would serve the purpose of encouraging parties to access collateral benefits notwithstanding refusals.

46 Even if such an intention cannot be read into the creation of the Schedule, the fact remains that changing the meaning of "payment" as urged by the Insurer would constitute judicial legislation.

47 While I believe that the use of "payment" in section 47(3), when analyzed in its immediate context, inescapably has the meaning attributed to it by Mr. Pries and Arbitrator Ashby, I would also accept that if it was found to be at all ambiguous, the principles of statutory interpretation outlined by Arbitrator Ashby in Slater would lead to the same conclusion.

48 Consequently, I find that, although Economical is entitled to deduct Mr. Pries' CPP payments from his ongoing IRB payments, it must have acted within 12 months of the "payment (which) was made" in making its demand of repayment. As noted, the notice date was given on April 27, 2010.

49 Assuming that the first payment of an income replacement benefit was made to Mr. Pries on October 13, 2007, it is obvious that a notice of repayment given on April 27, 2010 is at the very least partially out of time, if Economical wishes to recover the equivalent in benefits of the entire CPP payment. At best, if one interpreted the repayment provisions widely, as targeting each individual payment, Economical could hope to be eligible to reclaim benefits paid after April 27, 2009.

50 Mr. Pries, however, would challenge even this interpretation of what is repayable, relying again on Slater, in which Arbitrator Ashby held that the date of first payment of the benefit was the watershed to be used to determine whether any benefits would be repayable.

51 Arbitrator Ashby noted the jurisprudence of the Commission specifically rejecting the notion of a rolling limitation in respect of time limits for contesting benefits and found that the corollary of no rolling time limits arising to the benefit of an insured was the principle that the same would apply to insurer's time limits in reclaiming benefits.

52 Arbitrator Ashby's reasoning makes sense. Her concerns regarding the burden of repayment falling on vulnerable people would seem congruent with an insurance scheme that incorporates elements of social policy.

53 The words in section 47(3) have at least one clear meaning. They provide for no repayment of a benefit "unless the notice under subsection (2) is given within 12 months after the payment was made." We have already seen that the payment in question is the payment of the income replacement benefit and not the payment of the collateral benefit.

54 What the provision does not clearly address is the timing of the payment that was made. Economical would suggest that the section addresses each and every subsequent payment of a benefit, and that although payment of a benefit may have commenced beyond the 12 month period, later payments of the same benefit, if within a 12-month period, may be caught retrospectively by the provision.

55 Statutory accident benefits can be payable over a lifetime. Situations change. Collateral payment sources may change. Given that understanding, it might seem odd, indeed unworkable if, 12 months after the commencement of benefit payments, all benefits became immune from recapture except in cases of fraud, even those "within 12 months" of the repayment notice.

56 Arbitrator Ashby's conclusions in Slater are difficult to reconcile with the popular interpretation of Trottier — that is, that the repayment claim may automatically go back 12 months from the date of notice.

57 The unique aspect of Slater is that Arbitrator Ashby treats section 47(3) as a limitation period rather than a period of retroactivity. As such, in the absence of a rolling limitation, the limitation period would be calculated from the initial IRB payment.

58 Section 51(1) of the Schedule, which contains the general limitation, reads as follows:

> A mediation proceeding or evaluation under section 280 or 280.1 of the Insurance Act or a court proceeding or arbitration under clause 281 (1) (a) or (b) of the Act in respect of a benefit under this Regulation shall be commenced within two years after the insurer's refusal to pay the amount claimed.

59 In the case of the generalized limitation, the meaning of the "refusal" is clearly the first refusal, and not the ongoing refusal to pay each further benefit as it would have accrued to the insured (rolling time limit).

60 In Mr. Pries' case, a rolling time limit would be necessary in any interpretation where it would be individual ongoing payments that trigger the repayment claim and not the commencement of payment of the benefit being reclaimed.

61 Earlier iterations of the Schedule dealt with repayment due to "error, wilful misrepresentation or fraud" as well as certain collateral benefits. CPP benefits [12] however were not caught in this scheme until the Schedule was amended to specifically address that issue.

62 It would make sense that errors and misfeasance ought to be discoverable at an early point in the process and that insurers would be expected to raise such simple issues early in the process. [13] That and the need to provide early warning to an insured if he or she is to bear the burden of repayment would justify the current wording.

63 In this context, I note Economical's submission that the CPP claims process has built-in delays that make retroactive payments almost a routine of the process once a claimant is accepted.

64 The expansion of the reasons for repayment to include CPP payments did not see a commensurate revision of what became section 47(3) to recognize the institutional delays referred to by Economical. This may well have been an oversight that failed to reflect the changed conditions resulting from the potentially wider grounds for repayment.

65 There might have been good policy grounds for the legislature to have specifically included a rolling time limit to deal with the changed situation, but it did not. Consequently, it is hard to unilaterally import a rolling time limit into this section.

66 Jurisprudence at the Commission has long treated rolling limitations as a pariah. In Kirkham, [14] the Director's Delegate, Divisional Court and the Court of Appeal all agreed that certainty required that the limitation period commence with the refusal to pay a benefit and not with each individual payment as it became due. Essentially, Arbitrator Ashby contends that if the insured is held to an inflexible date for the initiation of proceedings against an insurer, then fairness dictates that, in actions against an insured for repayment, the insurer not have benefit of the same sort of rolling limitation denied to its insured.

67 Whatever the policy reasons for finding in favour of rolling limitations or not, it comes down to the question of whether the wording of the section can support Arbitrator Ashby's interpretation.

68 Once again the section reads:

> (3) The obligation to repay a benefit does not apply unless the notice under subsection (2) is given within 12 months after the payment was made.

69 The French version [15] of the same enactment is perhaps equally enlightening:

> (3) L'obligation de rembourser une indemnité ne s'applique que si l'avis prévu au paragraphe (2) est donné dans les 12 mois du versement

70 Any questions arising from the phrase « after the payment was made » are clarified by the use of « versement » without the verb « made ». There is no question of whether the phrase refers to the payment most recently made, or first made, or each payment. It refers instead simply to the payment of the benefit itself. As such, it is consistent with Arbitrator Ashby's understanding.

71 This is not merely an academic discussion about meaning and grammatical sense.

72 In Mr. Pries' case, as a result of the deduction of CPP, and the Insurer's claim for repayment, an income replacement benefit of $264.48 per week was reduced to $87.56 per week. Mr. Pries fulfilled his obligation of promptly reporting his CPP benefit. One can infer that, even with the CPP payments available to Mr. Pries, he is not getting rich on the back of the Insurer. Indeed, persons living on the economic margins of society such as Mr. Pries must be seen as a highly vulnerable group.

73 Both Trottier and Kong [16] stand for the proposition that an insured should "not be expected to receive his no-fault benefits with a mere hope that the quantum is correct and a fear that he will be asked to repay them at a later date."

74 This is not a calculation error by Economical. It is however linked to the unjustified cessation and later reinstatement of benefits that prompted Mr. Pries to attempt to claim from CPP notwithstanding the long waiting period and initial discouragement.

75 It should be noted that Economical could at any time have put Mr. Pries on notice that he had to apply for CPP benefits to continue to receive IRB benefits. Economical was not shy about ceasing to pay IRB benefits for reasons that later turned out to be spurious, and could well have acted promptly to bring the CPP issue forward. It did not and Mr. Pries did not apply until much later, all of which could have been a factor in potentially delaying both the CPP payment and the notice of deductibility.

76 In the end, Economical benefitted from Mr. Pries' action and continues to do so. If Mr. Pries gets to keep a little more of his past CPP benefit than Economical intended, then it is the result of an anomaly in the legislation, not the fault of Mr. Pries.

77 While Arbitrator Ashby's reasoning in Slater is not binding on me, her discussion of the application of sections 47(2) and (3) of the Schedule is one of the few attempts to make sense of an often-contradictory provision and to account for the dilemma of insureds in Mr. Pries' uncomfortable position.

78 Consequently, while I accept that the drafters of the Schedule may well have had the overall goal of making all collateral payments deductible, and consequently recoverable by way of repayment, that goal did not translate well into the legislation itself.

79 The answer to calls to reinterpret this legislation is to suggest that they direct their attention to the Legislature and ask that institution to clarify the law.

80 If I am wrong in my interpretation of the applicability of Slater to this matter, then I would find that the jurisprudence, including Trottier, would not support a recovery of benefits beyond the 12-month notice period.

81 Mr. Pries also alleged that Economical's Notice of Repayment was insufficient and did not comply with section 47(2). Although the notice argument was not directly raised at the time the issue was set for hearing, it goes without saying that the statutory scheme requires a valid notice prior to any repayment taking place.

82 Having examined the notice, I am satisfied that it adequately communicated the extent of Economical's claim for repayment, and importantly, that it was overreaching itself in its attempt to recapture the IRB payments which were at that time clearly out of its reach. It certainly put Mr. Pries on notice of both the repayment and the need to challenge its rationale. As such, it served its purpose.

Expenses:

83 If the parties are unable to agree on the issue of expenses I may be spoken to on that issue providing that the request is made in a timely manner.

John Wilson Member*:

84 Under section 282 of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, c.I.8, as amended, it is ordered that:

1. Economical may not claim repayment income replacement benefits prior to the notice of repayment given on April 27, 2010 and may only deduct CPP benefits on a going-forward basis from the date of notice.

2. If the parties are unable to agree on the issue of expenses, I may be spoken to on that issue providing that the request is made in a timely manner.

Footnotes

1 The Statutory Accident Benefits Schedule - Accidents on or after November 1, 1996, Ontario Regulation 403/96, as amended.

2 "Moneys received by an injured party as a result of a private or public benevolence have never been taken into consideration in assessing damages for loss of income or earning capacity." Boarelli v. Flannigan, [1973] 3 O.R. 69 (Ont. C.A.) at p. 73, (1973), 36 D.L.R. (3d) 4 (Ont. C.A.)

3 Beattie v. National Frontier Insurance Co. (2003), 68 O.R. (3d) 60 (Ont. C.A.)

4 Bell ExpressVu Ltd. Partnership v. Rex, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559 (S.C.C.)

5 Bell ExpressVu Ltd. Partnership v. Rex, (supra)

6 Slater v. Personal Insurance Co. of Canada [2008 CarswellOnt 2019 (F.S.C.O. Arb.)], (FSCO A07-000592, March 27, 2008)

7 Trottier v. Royal & SunAlliance Insurance Co. of Canada [2003 CarswellOnt 5083 (F.S.C.O. App.)] (FSCO Appeal P03-00019, December 15, 2003)

8 Sullivan and Driedger on the Construction of Statutes, 4th ed. (Markham: Butterworths, 2002) at 134, 9 Sullivan and Driedger op cit.

10 R. v. McIntosh, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 686 (S.C.C.):

11 Collateral payments that have been refused after application by an insured are not "available" benefits subject to deduction by the AB insurer. See Vanderkop v. Personal Insurance Co. of Canada, [2008] O.J. No. 1937 (Ont. S.C.J.), [2009] O.J. No. 2616 (Ont. C.A.)

12 See Cugliari v. White (1998), 38 O.R. (3d) 641 (Ont. C.A.)

13 It is noteworthy that an exception in the time limit is specifically carved out when the repayment is triggered by fraud.

14 Kirkham v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. [1996 CarswellOnt 3339 (Ont. Insurance Comm.)] (OIC A96-000141, August 15, 1996), appeal (OIC P96-00069, January 27, 1997 [1997 CarswellOnt 1277 (Ont. Insurance Comm.)]) and [1998] O.J. No. 6459 (Ont. Div. Ct.), [1998] O.J. No. 2872 (Ont. C.A.)

15 Legislation Act 2006, S.O. 2006, c. 21 Sched. F — 65. The English and French versions of Acts and regulations that are enacted or made in both languages are equally authoritative.

16 State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. v. Kong, [1996] O.J. No. 2321 (Ont. Gen. Div.), Kennedy J.

End of Document

Ontario Supreme Court
Purolator Courier Ltd. v. United Parcel Service Canada Ltd.
Date: 1995-04-03

Purolator Courier Ltd./Courrier Purolator Ltee

and

United Parcel Service Canada Ltd.

Court File No. 94-CU-81492

Ontario Court (General Division), Lederman J. April 3, 1995.

Marilyn Field-Marsham, Jennifer Dolman and Ahab Abdel-Aziz, for plaintiff.

Robert Kwinter, for defendant.

[1] LEDERMAN J.:—In this action the plaintiff, Purolator Courier Ltd.—Courrier Purolator Ltee ("PCL"), seeks damages and a permanent injunction restraining the defendant, United Parcel Service Canada Ltd. ("UPS"), from airing and using a radio and television commercial concerning UPS's guaranteed overnight delivery before 10:30 a.m. service ("Guaranteed 10:30 Service"). The radio broadcast consists of the following:

(Character Norm Yustin talking to himself)

Norm: "How much will it cost?"

Norm: "How much?"

Norm: "What do you mean, how much have I got?"

Norm: "How much do you want?"

Announcer: When Norm Yustin sends an urgent overnight package, he has only one overriding concern …

Norm: "Just tell me how much? I can take it."

Announcer: Which is why UPS guarantees overnight delivery before 10:30 a.m., usually at rates up to 40% less than other couriers charge.

Norm: (sighing with relief) Yes. Thank you.

Announcer: UPS. Removing the need to go all the way down to Accounting to get approval to spend way too much for your overnight deliveries. Next time call 1-800-PICKUPS. See Service Guide for Guaranteed details; (Emphasis added.)

[2] The television broadcast displays the following caption:

> UPS
>
> 10:30 a.m.
>
> Guaranteed
>
> For less

[3] and vocalizes the following statement:

> Which is why UPS guarantees overnight delivery before 10:30 a.m., usually at rates up to 40% less than other couriers charge. (Emphasis added.)

[4] PCL has asserted both statutory and common law causes of action in this proceeding. The former is based upon s. 36(1) of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34 (the "Act"), which creates a civil cause of action for loss or damage suffered as a result of contravention of the provisions of the Act. In this regard, PCL alleged the following violations: s. 52(1)(a) of the Act which prohibits false and misleading advertising; s. 52(1)(d) of the Act which prohibits materially misleading representations concerning the price at which a product has been or will be ordinarily sold; and s. 57(2) of the Act which prohibits the practice of "bait and switch" selling. The common law cause of action asserted by PCL is the tort claim that the advertising in question has unlawfully interfered with its economic relations.

[5] At issue is whether the words in the commercial, which are highlighted above, contravene the Act or are otherwise tortious and actionable by PCL.

Nature of courier services in Canada

[6] The Canadian courier industry is highly competitive. There are some 2,000 businesses engaged in this industry, the four largest of which (PCL, Priority Post, Federal Express, and UPS) control 50% of the total market. These four primary competitors compete on a national basis. Each tracks and traces packages, has pick-up and call-taking capability, and a pricing system based on the time of arrival, distance and weight. The four courier firms all offer guaranteed overnight delivery. PCL, Priority Post and Federal Express hold roughly equal shares of the guaranteed overnight delivery segment of the market. PCL's revenue share is about 28%, that of Priority Post is about 26% and that of Federal Express is approximately 24%. UPS's revenue share of the guaranteed overnight segment is approximately 5%.

[7] At issue in this case is the Guaranteed 10:30 Service.

[8] Since the primary competitors offer essentially the same service, price is a major point of competition among them. A company can gain market share by offering a similar service at a lower price, or it can take a sub-segment of the market and tailor the service to that sub-segment. Since the courier business is a mature market, the only way to gain market share is to capture market share away from competitors.

[9] Nature of customers of Guaranteed 10:30 Service

[10] PCL breaks down its customers for this service into two groups: high frequency and low frequency. It defines a high frequency customer as one who sends more than 20 shipments per day whereas a low frequency customer sends less than 20 shipments per day. PCL estimates that it has 7,500 high frequency customers and 450,000 low frequency customers. High frequency customers, because of the volume of their business, are able to negotiate a separate contract and generally are afforded a price discount. Low frequency customers have no contract with PCL and pay published rates because their volume is not high enough to be afforded a discount.

[11] A substantial part of PCL's Guaranteed 10:30 Service business comes from low frequency customers. Fifty-nine percent of PCL's Guaranteed 10:30 a.m. Service business is comprised of packages in the weight range of 1 to 4 lbs. and 73% of that business comes from low frequency customers.

[12] Decisions by low frequency customers as to which courier to use are generally made by an individual in the firm who has other functions. Since volume and cost are not significant, the person responsible for sending overnight shipments is usually a receptionist, secretary or small firm partner, who is free to choose whatever courier he or she desires. Purchasing decisions by high frequency customers, on the other hand, are usually made by a distribution manager or committee.

[13] Courier companies have sales staff who are utilized exclusively to solicit business from high frequency shippers. These customers are approached directly by the sales personnel in the hope of landing a negotiated contract. In order to reach low frequency customers, courier companies resort to mass advertising, by way of television, radio, mailings, posters, etc. The UPS ads in question are an example of one such means.

The UPS ads

[14] On November 10, 1994, UPS commenced running a series of three radio advertisements which promoted its Guaranteed 10:30 Service. Three television advertisements, similar in content to the radio advertisements, began running on November 23, 1994. The three advertisements have been identified in these proceedings as the "Norm Yustin" ad, the "Maria Bayley" ad, and the "Melissa Minor" ad. Only the radio and television versions of the "Norm Yustin" ad are in issue in this case. The other two advertisements were put into evidence by PCL to demonstrate the general target audience of the series of commercials.

[15] UPS has admitted that the ads were developed to capture market share from its other three competitors in the 10:30 a.m. market. The ads were trying to appeal to shippers, such as the ones depicted in the ads, i.e., a tax accountant (Norm Yustin who sends 21 overnight deliveries per month), a law firm receptionist (Maria Bayley who sends six overnight letters per day) and a sales manager (Melissa Minor who sends 37 documents per week).

[16] It is important to note that the ads make no reference to either PCL or its products. Rather, they refer generally to other courier companies and do not single out a particular competitor, including PCL.

[17] Before these proceedings were begun, the Norm Yustin ad ran 394 times on radio in four cities: Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and Calgary. The television commercial ran from November 23 to December 28, 1994, 58 times in Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. The intention was to run these ads 500 more times on the radio and 200 more times on television. In addition, the intention was to run the Maria Bayley and Melissa Minor ads the same number of times. UPS has spent approximately $1 million on this ad campaign.

[18] PCL alleges that the Norm Yustin ad is false and misleading because of the price claim "usually at rates up to 40% less than other couriers charge". PCL has argued that it is misleading as it gives the false impression that UPS's rates are 40% less than those of other couriers, including PCL.

The connection between the advertisements and PCL

[19] UPS argues that in order to establish a cause of action under the misleading provisions of the Act, or under common law, the plaintiff must be specifically or implicitly named or targeted in the offending advertisement.

[20] In Unitel Communications Inc. v. Bell Canada (1994), 56 C.P.R. (3d) 232, 17 B.L.R. (2d) 63, [1994] O.J. No. 1320 (Gen. Div.), Winkler J., on a motion for an interlocutory injunction, in considering ss. 36(1) and 52(1) of the Act, stated at p. 250: “It is critical to the success of this action that Unitel be identifiable directly or by implication in the advertisement.”

[21] Jarvis J., in Church & Dwight Ltd. v. Sifto Canada Inc. (1994), 58 C.P.R. (3d) 316, 17 B.L.R. (2d) 92, 20 O.R. (3d) 483 (Gen. Div.), referred to this passage. He also had before him a motion for an interlocutory injunction in an action based upon ss. 36 and 52 of the Act and the tort of injurious falsehood. He stated that to make out that tort, the party complaining of injury must have been identified by name or by implication. At p. 321 he said:

> The case before me is unusual in that virtual domination of the marketplace has been established by the plaintiff’s product. Where a party virtually controls the market-place it cannot be said that the absence of the name of the target competitor is determinative of the question. Viscount Simon L.C. in Knupffer v. London Express Newspaper Ltd., [1944] A.C. 116 (H.L.) said at p. 119:
>
> > “Where the plaintiff is not named, the test which decides whether the words used refer to him is the question whether the words are such as would reasonably lead persons acquainted with the plaintiff to believe that he was the person referred to.”
>
> …
>
> The facts of the case before me satisfy me that the plaintiff’s product is identifiable by implication in that its product dominates the market, and for that reason the disparaging comments would fall upon them with virtually full force.

[22] (A similar finding was made by Jarvis J. in Maple Leaf Foods Inc. v. Robin Hood Multifoods Inc. (1994), 58 C.P.R. (3d) 54, 17 B.L.R. (2d) 86, [1994] O.J. No. 2165 (Gen. Div.), where the plaintiffs products represented 75% of the market).

[23] Based on these authorities, UPS submits that an unnamed competitor can be identified by implication in an advertisement only where its share of the market is so dominant that the offending representations can point only to the unnamed competitor and to no one else. UPS argues that this is not the case here, as PCL is one of three competitors with roughly equal shares of the relevant market segment and PCL is no more likely to be singled out as the target of the representation than UPS's other major competitors.

[24] As distinguished from Church & Dwight Ltd., the tort of injurious falsehood is not being advanced in the instant case. Furthermore, even in respect of that cause of action, Viscount Simon L.C. in the passage in Knupffer v. London Express Newspaper Ltd., [1944] A.C. 116 (H.L.), quoted by Jarvis J., went on to say at p. 119:

> There are cases in which the language used in a reference to a limited class may be reasonably understood to refer to every member of the class, in which case every member may have a cause of action.

[25] That would appear to be the situation here. There are only three major couriers, including PCL, in the Guaranteed 10:30 Service to which the advertisements make comparative reference. PCL does not dominate the market as did the complaining parties in Church & Dwight and Maple Leaf Foods Inc. None the less, the fact that it is a member of such a small class means that reference to PCL in the advertisements is reasonably understood.

[26] There is no express requirement in respect of claims made under the Act that a competitor must be identified in the impugned advertising. In fact, competitors and consumers alike have a cause of action if harmed by the false and misleading representations: General Motors of Canada Ltd. v. City National Leasing (1989), 24 C.P.R. (3d) 417 at p. 448, 58 D.L.R. (4th) 255, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 641. Consumers and competitors are not required to be identified.

[27] Accordingly, notwithstanding that PCL has not been specifically named in the commercials in question, it is free to assert claims under the Act and may also assert a claim for unlawful interference with economic relations.

Meaning of the representation according to UPS

[28] UPS's position is that the representation as to its rates in comparison with the other couriers is true. UPS argues that, having regard to the plain and ordinary meaning of the words in the advertisements, the representation is that UPS's rates for Guaranteed 10:30 Service are more often than not (although not always) less than the rates charged by other courier companies by as much as 40%. UPS's argument is that the advertisements do not claim that its rates are always less than the rates charged by PCL or its other competitors, nor does UPS claim that its rates are always "40%" less than the rates charged by PCL or the others. Rather, UPS asserts that it advertises that its Guaranteed 10:30 Service is usually at rates up to 40% less than other couriers charge. Support for this interpretation, according to UPS, is found in a comparison of the rates charged by PCL and UPS.

Comparative rates

[29] A considerable part of the trial was spent closely examining the rates charged by UPS and PCL with respect to various weight and destination combinations. The comparison is difficult because UPS's "rate zones" do not necessarily correspond with those of PCL, However, to the extent that such examination can be done, the evidence does indicate that there are significant occasions when UPS's rates are in fact cheaper than those of PCL. For example:

(a) UPS's rates are always less than PCL's regular 10:30 rates.

(b) With the exception of limited anomalies in UPS's zones 9 and 10, UPS's letter rates are 39% less than PCL's letter rates in UPS's zones 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 and 34% less than PCL's letter rates in UPS's zones 1, 2 and 3.

(c) UPS's rates are less than PCL's in the higher weight categories (i.e., over 5 lbs. in UPS's zones 1-8 and over 10 lbs. in zones 9 and 10).

[30] A comparison of rates for every possible shipping instance was adduced in evidence by PCL. In 80% of those possibilities, UPS's rates are in fact lower than PCL'S. Moreover, in approximately 16% of the total permutations and combinations, UPS's rates are at least 30% lower.

FlitePak

[31] PCL has argued that such comparison is irrelevant since its FlitePak product is that which has been targeted by implication in the advertisements and that the representation in respect of it is false.

[32] FlitePak is a plasticized envelope used by PCL which generally contains documents in the weight range of under 4 lbs. The charge for the Flitepak is a favourable flat rate of $13.25 for regional ground delivery and $14.95 for national air delivery. This FlitePak product is one of a number of products utilized by PCL in its Guaranteed 10:30 Service. It was launched in October, 1994. The UPS commercials were aired for the first time in November, 1994, and PCL has argued that the timing was such that UPS intended its commercials to draw away customers of PCL's FlitePak. PCL had high hopes for its FlitePak product, forecasting that it would result in 1,200 shipments per diem after two months, then 1,800 shipments per diem after four months, increasing to 2,500 per diem after six months. PCL alleges that they were on target for the first month; however, the UPS advertisements caused sales to decline and then level off at 1,088 shipments per day.

[33] There is no question that the FlitePak, in a head-to-head comparison with any of UPS's products, would prove, for the most part, to be less expensive. PCL has argued that because the bulk of its volume in the Guaranteed 10:30 Service is in the 1 to 4 lbs. category, the representation in UPS's advertisement that its rates are usually less expensive is a blatant falsehood.

[34] In the comparative rate evidence developed by PCL in respect of every possible shipping instance (a total of 17.8 million possible situations) PCL utilized the most favourable rates of both it and UPS. It indicated that in the weight category of 1 to 4 lbs., PCL was cheaper than UPS 94.7% of the time and in the 5 lbs. and over category, PCL was cheaper than UPS 15.4% of the time. It submitted that 1 to 4 lbs. shipments for October and November, 1994, represented 59% of PCL's Guaranteed 10:30 Service and, when this volume distribution was applied to the 94.7% of instances where PCL is cheaper, the result was that 55.9% of all PCL activity in the 1 to 4 lbs. category was cheaper than UPS.

[35] UPS countered by submitting that the 59% figure in relation to PCL's Guaranteed 10:30 a.m. Service included non-FlitePak shipments and no allowance was made in this percentage for the fact that UPS's rates would be lower than PCL's for the shipments that would not fit into the FlitePak. Furthermore, no allowance had been made for the frequency of FlitePak shipments in UPS's zone 1 where UPS's Express Pak rates are lower than PCL's FlitePak rates up to 3 lbs., and no allowance had been made for FlitePaks which are part of a multiple shipment in respect of which UPS's rates are lower than PCL's rates. No allowance had been made for any FlitePak containing items that would fit in a UPS Express Envelope in which case UPS's rates are lower than PCL's rates. Accordingly, the 59% figure is somewhat suspect.

[36] In addition, there are numerous instances where FlitePak pricing does not compare favourably with UPS's rates. For example:

(a) The UPS Express Pak rate (for Express Paks up to 3 lbs.) is less than the FlitePak rate within UPS's zone 1.

(b) UPS's rates are frequently less than PCL's rates (either using FlitePak or PCL's regular 10:30 rates) for shipments over 5 lbs.

(c) UPS's rates are frequently less than PCL's rates for items under 5 lbs. that are too large to fit in a FlitePak.

(d) UPS's rates are less than PCL's FlitePak rates if the shipment requires more than one FlitePak;

(e) UPS's Express Envelope rates are almost always less than PCL's FlitePak rates. Thus, in respect of any item that will fit in UPS's Express Envelope, the UPS rate is almost always less than the FlitePak rate.

[37] Nevertheless, there is no question that PCL can point to many examples where its rates are significantly cheaper than UPS's rates in the utilization of its FlitePak product or, indeed, with its Metroservice pricing (for shipments within four designated cities in Canada where the point of origin and destination are within that same Metropolitan area).

[38] What emerges from any analysis of all the hypothetical permutations and combinations is that in many situations UPS is cheaper than PCL and conversely, in many situations PCL is cheaper than UPS.

Target of the commercials

[39] PCL argued that it is a distortion to examine the entire spectrum of shipment categories since the advertisements in question are directed to the one area where it consistently offers cheaper rates, namely, the 1 to 4 lbs. FlitePak. PCL has submitted that the individual, Norm Yustin, who is the subject-matter of the advertisements in both the radio and television broadcasts, is the very sort of individual and business person who would utilize PCL's FlitePak. He is described as a tax accountant and PCL says that it appears from the backdrop that he is in a small business and sends small packages in the weight range of 1 to 4 lbs. Reference, however, is made to going "all the way down to Accounting to get approval", suggesting a larger business enterprise. The commercial indicates that he sends 21 overnight deliveries per month which PCL characterizes as a low frequency or low-volume shipper.

[40] In addition to the two commercials in question, two other UPS commercials were put into evidence. These commercials were launched at the same time as the impugned ones. No mention is made of comparative rates in these advertisements and, accordingly, no allegation is made by PCL that they are false and misleading. They were put into evidence by PCL, however, to demonstrate that the target of these advertisements go hand in hand with the Norm Yustin example and would also be typical low frequency customers of its FlitePak product. "Melissa Minor" is a sales manager and "Maria Bayley" is a law firm receptionist. PCL argues that the profile of its low frequency customer is the same as is typified in these commercials:—that decisions about choosing a courier service are only one aspect of their employment responsibilities and do not constitute a high-budget item for them. They are therefore particularly susceptible to the message in these advertisements which offer an instant and cost-effective solution to their problems.

What do Norm Yustin, Melissa Minor and Maria Bayley ship?

[41] PCL's analysis, however, can only be meaningful if it can be said that these advertisements are truly aimed at its FlitePak product. There is, however, no mention in these ads of what is specifically intended to be shipped—whether it is a single letter, or documents which weigh up to 4 lbs., or documents which weigh in excess of 4 lbs. UPS's rates may or may not be cheaper than PCL's depending on what is being shipped and the weight of the item. Tax accountants and law firms often ship single letters or documents which weigh over 4 lbs. or are of a size that may not fit into a FlitePak. One cannot conclude, by watching and listening to the advertisements, that they make any direct comparison with PCL's FlitePak. Rather, they could just as readily be interpreted as referring to a comparison of the overall range of weights. If so, there is a reasonable basis for UPS to say that its products are usually less expensive.

[42] Furthermore, there are numerous situations where UPS offers a discount between 35% and 40%. So long as there is a significant opportunity to obtain discounts in the range of 40%, then the advertisement cannot be said to be misleading on its face.

The general impression conveyed by the UPS ads

[43] In order for the court to determine whether or not a representation is false or misleading in a material respect, it must consider the general impression conveyed by the advertisement in question in addition to its literal meaning. Section 52(4) of the Act codifies this requisite step. The general impression created by the advertisement depends on a combination of factors: the understanding of those who have listened to the commercial, as presented through survey evidence; the use of the qualifiers, “usually” and “up to”; the nature of the consumers; and the nature of the medium.

(a) PCL’s survey

[44] Peter Atkinson, who has been engaged in market survey research for the last 30 years, was given the task by PCL to determine what message was being communicated by the UPS radio ad and to determine what might be the reaction of the audience. The customer that he focused upon was someone who ships less than 4 lbs. for overnight delivery to a non-local destination in Canada and who chooses the appropriate courier as part of his or her day-to-day decisions, as PCL considered the ad to be a threat to that particular kind of customer. A sampling was taken of 100 such PCL customers in the Metropolitan Toronto area who had used PCL in the months of October and November of 1994. The radio ad was played to them twice over the telephone and they were asked a series of questions. The conclusions drawn by Mr. Atkinson from the survey are as follows:

> (a) Seventy-two percent of the respondents understood the commercial to be telling them that UPS’s pricing is lower than that of other couriers.
>
> (b) Thirty-three percent thought that UPS is 40% cheaper than other couriers.
>
> (c) Sixty-two percent said they would expect other companies to be more expensive than UPS for Guaranteed 10:30 Service.
>
> (d) Thirty-four percent expected PCL to be more expensive than UPS.

[45] UPS has challenged the reliability of the survey for the following reasons: the uncertainty of the universe from which the sample frame was drawn; the unsupported resultant projectability of Mr. Atkinson's results to the total population of PCL customers who use its Guaranteed 10:30 Service; the apparent absence of adequate controls; and the failure to eliminate a variety of biases. More serious concerns with the survey, however, arise from the fact that a number of the respondents who were played the radio ad over the telephone had difficulty hearing the tape recording. Furthermore, for unknown reasons, a number of respondents completely misunderstood the intent of what was being communicated in the ad. In this regard, on the basis of the UPS commercial, 29% of the respondents expected that companies other than UPS would be cheaper or charge the same price as UPS for Guaranteed 10:30 a.m. Service. However, there is nothing in the commercial to that effect. Obviously, those respondents walked away with a message that was completely the opposite of what was intended to be conveyed. If 29% suffered from such perceptual distortion, it is quite possible that similar hearing and perceptual distortions affected some of those who concluded that UPS was 40% cheaper. This makes the entire survey suspect.

(b) The qualifiers "usually" and "up to"

[46] Gerald Gorn, a professor of consumer behaviour at the University of British Columbia, testified on behalf of PCL to explain the general message or impression of the ad that would be received by consumers. He testified that people do not process or encode everything that they see and will of necessity select particular information and form certain impressions. This is especially true in situations where they are not paying close attention to the specific content of a message, for example, when they are watching television or listening to the radio. Viewers or listeners have tuned in because of the program content and pay less attention to the commercials. They generally do not know in advance which commercials will be aired at any given point in time. In contrast to the print medium, there is no opportunity to go back and look more closely at the details of a message that may not have been fully appreciated when the commercial was first aired.

[47] He pointed out that the UPS commercial is quite complex and quickly paced. For example, the time of delivery and rates are mentioned in a very brief time period.

[48] In his report, Professor Gorn indicated that a consumer is more likely to pay attention to and recall the 40% figure rather than any “up to” qualifier that precedes it. He stated the following in his report at pp. 2-3:

> Numbers should be easier to retain than words given that they are specific. One would expect that the number “40%” would stand out and be easier to recall than the large series of words the ad would contain. A consumer is more likely to pay attention to and recall the 40% figure percentage off rather than any “up to” qualifier that precedes it. The fact that it is a percentage further increases its likelihood of recall. Consumers are accustomed to seeing sales promotions containing percentage deductions. For example, ads promoting a sale usually indicate the percentage off, as opposed to putting down the original price and the sale price of every item.
>
> Referring in an ad to concrete numbers such as actual percentages may also be convincing for the following reason. If the ad contains a price claim with a supportive number like 40% then it would likely be seen as having a factual basis. Otherwise, why would the advertiser be picking that particular value and not an even higher value like 50% or 60%? Hence the mention of “40%” less would likely increase the credibility of the ad in the eyes of the consumer.
>
> One would usually equate the word “usually” (the word “usually” connotes “generally”, “regularly”, “customarily”, and “habitually”) with something in the 2/3 (roughly 66%) to 3/4 (75%) range, or higher. Percentages closer to 50% would not be consistent with the word “usually” or any of the other synonyms noted above. The word “usually” also has to be interpreted in the context of the ad. The actor in the commercial is playing the part of a tax accountant in an office setting, who needs to deliver items overnight. It is natural to assume that these items would be small documents and not large boxes. In fact, there are no large boxes or even large stacks of paper in the office setting, just a few sheets of paper on the accountant’s desk. One would assume that the relatively low weight documents that this accountant (and by extension, other business people) would send are substantially cheaper using UPS. In this context, it would be reasonable for a consumer to interpret “usually up to 40% less for next day 10:30 a.m. delivery” as UPS is generally cheaper (40% would be the likely amount to come to mind) than other couriers for guaranteed next day 10:30 a.m. delivery of small items.

[49] It is not clear why Professor Gorn would conclude that the audience would attribute considerable significance to the impression conveyed by the qualifying word “usually” but that the qualifier “up to” would be ignored. In fact, another expert called by PCL, Professor Thomas Speh, a professor of marketing at Miami University in Ohio, had no hesitation in concluding that business consumers of courier services would clearly understand the UPS advertisement as representing savings that “could be up to rates 40%” less than the rates charged by other companies.

[50] The qualifiers “usually” and “up to” are akin to disclaimers which often appear somewhere in an ad to provide additional limiting information with respect to the main representation.

[51] In R. v. International Vacations Ltd. (1980), 56 C.P.R. (2d) 251, 124 D.L.R. (3d) 319, 59 C.C.C. (2d) 557 (Ont. C.A.), the accused, a marketer of air travel, published advertisements relating to its flights to Europe. The advertisement stated “Seats Still Available” and had a complete flight schedule printed below. At the bottom of the list of flights, the following disclaimer appeared: “This is Wardair’s operating schedule. Please check individual flight availabilities with a travel agent or Intervac, as some flights may be sold out.” The accused was charged with several counts of misleading advertising contrary to the then Combines Investigation Act The issue was whether the advertisements held out that seats were available on all flights listed at the time of publication. The court applied the general impression test and held that the average traveller interested in taking an overseas flight would presumably read the advertisement carefully. The average traveller would be a discerning consumer and read the advertisement in its entirety, including the disclaimer, and would understand that the disclaimer was an important part of the advertisement itself and should not be treated as separate from the primary representation.

[52] National Hockey League v. Pepsi-Cola Canada (1992), 42 C.P.R. (3d) 390, 92 D.L.R. (4th) 349, 5 B.L.R. (2d) 121 (B.C.S.C.); affirmed 59 C.P.R. (3d) 216, 122 D.L.R. (4th) 412, [1995] B.C.J. No. 310 (C.A.), was a case involving actions for passing-off, trade mark infringement, interference with economic relations, and interference with future business. The court held that the manner in which the disclaimer was displayed during the television commercials, stating that the defendant was not associated with nor sponsored by the plaintiff, left something to be desired. It was displayed for about seven seconds against a background that made it difficult to read. In contrast, however, on all the printed material that related to the contest in question, the disclaimer was displayed prominently in quite bold print. The court held [at p. 408]:

> The prominence to be given to a disclaimer must, to some extent, depend on the likelihood of a false impression being conveyed to the public if there is no disclaimer. The greater the likelihood the more prominent must be the disclaimer.

[53] The court held that the likelihood was minimal that the television advertisements relating to the contest would create a false impression in the minds of the public that the plaintiff in some way endorsed the defendant's products. The court therefore held, at p. 409, that "had the disclaimer been necessary, it would have been sufficient to dispel any possible misapprehension".

[54] In the case at bar, it appears, at least on the face of the advertisement, that UPS gave as much prominence to the qualifications as any other part of the text.

[55] A disclaimer does not automatically nullify a misleading impression created by an ad. Its effect will depend on several factors, including the degree to which a representation misleads the public without the disclaimer, the prominence which it is given in the context of the entire advertisement, the degree of sophistication that the public to whom the advertisement is directed exhibits, and the likelihood that the audience would recognize the disclaimer. It is a question of fact whether, in the circumstances, a disclaimer is sufficient to ensure that the representation is not otherwise misleading.

[56] The qualifiers in the instant case must be considered in the context which the general impression of the advertisement conveys. These qualifiers, like the disclaimers in the above-noted cases, attempt to explain or further restrict the generality of the given representation. Most importantly, the qualifiers form part of the primary representation in that they do not appear elsewhere in the ad in small print marked with an asterisk.

[57] The court, in International Vacations, supra, at p. 257, held that the disclaimer in that case had to be considered an "integral part of the advertisement". UPS has attempted to give the qualifiers as much prominence as the rest of the text in issue.

(c) Nature of the consumers and nature of the medium

[58] The consumers in question are not totally naive. They are business individuals who make these kinds of decisions everyday based on service and price. The qualifier “up to” is commonly used in advertising parlance and it is difficult to accept that they would interpret that reference to mean that in all cases UPS is 40% cheaper than PCL. Common sense would dictate that the “up to” qualifier is of great significance in the context of courier rates where the only variables affecting price are the weight, destination and time of arrival of the shipment.

[59] Business purchasers, even those in what have been described as “modified” or “straight re-buy” situations, would not be sold on the service merely by being exposed to the UPS commercial. Most likely, they would make inquiries to determine if the opportunity for savings applied to their particular situation.

[60] If some listeners misinterpret the ad, it does not mean that the ad itself is necessarily misleading. Much turns on the degree of attention paid by the listener and the environment in which he or she hears or sees the ad.

[61] At the risk of sounding McLuhanesque, the medium may affect how some perceive the message. In this regard, I agree with Professor Gorn that the public views television commercials and listens to radio ads much differently than it reads an advertisement in print. By their nature, television and radio commercials are short, fast paced and often utilize, as the UPS commercials do, background music, voice-overs and superimposed words to attract attention and interest. Some people do not listen as keenly as others and may perceive the message incorrectly. That does not mean the commercial is misleading.

[62] The qualifiers here are an important part of UPS’s message and I believe that the import of those words would be absolutely clear to the discerning business consumer.

Geographical coverage

[63] PCL provides service to a greater number of destinations within Canada than does UPS. PCL has argued that the advertisements are misleading when one takes that factor into account. The advertisements, however, do not make reference to any destination points. UPS, like PCL, covers the major metropolitan areas, although not to the same extent, and there are certainly some important centres in Canada that PCL services but UPS does not. This is irrelevant in any event as the advertisements make no mention of the extent of geographical coverage. Rather, the implication is that where UPS provides service, there is a possibility of savings if its services, as opposed to its competitors' services, are utilized.

Bait and switch selling

[64] With respect to s. 57(2) of the Act, it cannot be said that the ad represents that a certain bargain price is available. Rather, UPS is merely promoting its regular prices for its Guaranteed 10:30 Service. Moreover, these services are not restricted in quantity in any way, in that there is no practical limit on the quantity of such services supplied by UPS and available to the public.

Conclusion

[65] There is nothing wrong with the aggressive promotion of one's own goods or services so long as there is no untruthful disparagement of a competitor's goods or services. In the circumstances, it cannot be said that these advertisements have that effect. What they do is raise awareness that could lead business purchasers to make inquiries to determine whether their shipment requirements would attract the discount set out in the ads. By means of a simple telephone call, a common business consumer can readily obtain the information as to whether there is any price advantage and, if so, the extent of such advantage in using UPS for a particular shipment need. The advertisements do not claim that UPS's rates are always less than the rates charged by PCL or its other competitors; nor do they claim that UPS's rates are always 40% less than the rates of the others. Advertising is unfair where claims are made which lack a reasonable basis. I cannot, however, say that is the case here.

[66] The "Norm Yustin" ad is well crafted and effective. The ad in question in the Unitel case, supra, prompted Winkler J. to say at p. 250:

> The … ad is an effective advertisement. The Unitel response to it is ample proof of this. That is insufficient justification, however, for the court's intervention in the dynamic of the market-place.

[67] The same statement can be made just as appropriately here. Advertising can be an effective tool in persuading the public to utilize a particular product or service. By its nature, it is one-sided and usually does not convey a full and balanced analysis. To do so, of course, might diminish its persuasive power. There must, however, be a reasonable basis for the representation that is made. So long as that is so, competitors may complain that the ad does not depict the whole picture; but they are just as equipped to tell their side of the story in the commercial market-place of ideas, with emphasis on those matters which they believe to be important. Courts should be reluctant to intervene in the competitive market-place unless the advertisements are clearly unfair.

[68] In the circumstances, PCL has not established that UPS has contravened the Competition Act or wrongfully interfered with PCL's economic relations. The action is dismissed with costs.

Action dismissed.

2009 ONCA 624
Ontario Court of Appeal

R. v. Abbey

2009 CarswellOnt 5008, 2009 ONCA 624, [2009] O.J. No. 3534, 246 C.C.C. (3d) 301, 254 O.A.C. 9, 68 C.R. (6th) 201, 84 W.C.B. (2d) 790, 97 O.R. (3d) 330

Her Majesty the Queen (Appellant) and Warren Abbey (Respondent)

Doherty, J.C. MacPherson, S.E. Lang JJ.A.

Heard: January 13-14, 2009
Judgment: August 27, 2009
Docket: CA C47020

Counsel: Randy Schwartz for Appellant
Christopher Hicks, Catriona Verner for Respondent

Doherty J.A.*:

I. Overview

1 A jury acquitted the respondent of first degree murder. The Crown appeals, alleging that the trial judge erred in law in excluding evidence relating to the meaning of a teardrop tattoo the respondent had inscribed on his face a few months after the murder. At trial, the Crown contended that the excluded evidence, considered as a whole, provided evidence from which the jury could infer that the respondent had killed a rival gang member. The Crown contended that this evidence, placed in the context of the rest of the evidence, provided a strong case identifying the respondent as the killer of Simeon Peter, the victim named in the indictment. Identity was the only live factual issue at trial.

2 The Crown attempted to elicit evidence as to the meaning of the teardrop tattoo from three gang members, A.B., C.S. and G.D.;[1] Detective Sergeant Quan, a police officer with extensive involvement with Toronto street gangs; and Dr. Mark Totten, an acknowledged expert in the culture of Canadian street gangs. For various and different reasons, the trial judge refused to allow any of these witnesses to testify as to their understanding of the meaning of the teardrop tattoo.

3 On appeal, the Crown argues that the exclusion of the evidence of the gang members, standing alone, constitutes a reversible error in law. Crown counsel makes the same submission with respect to the exclusion of Dr. Totten's evidence. Counsel submits that the exclusion of Detective Sergeant Quan's evidence, while not sufficient on its own to merit a new trial, exacerbates the improper exclusion of the other evidence.

4 I would allow the appeal. For the reasons that follow, I would hold that the trial judge erred in excluding Dr. Totten's evidence insofar as that evidence identified the potential meanings of the teardrop tattoo within the urban street gang culture. I would also hold that the three gang members should have been allowed to testify as to the meaning of that tattoo within the culture that they shared with the respondent. Finally, I would hold that the witness, G.D., should have been allowed to provide evidence of his comments concerning the respondent's tattoo, made during his conversation with the respondent immediately before the respondent's description of his involvement in the murder. Had G.D. been allowed to testify to the entirety of this interaction, a jury may well have inferred from the respondent's conduct that the inscription of the tattoo on his face was related to the murder. The improperly excluded evidence, taken as a package, could well have affected the verdict. The acquittal must be quashed and a new trial ordered.

5 I will not address the merits of the Crown's argument that the trial judge should have admitted the evidence of Detective Sergeant Quan. The trial record on this issue is unclear in many respects and the appeal can be resolved without deciding the admissibility of this evidence.

II. The Evidence

6 In January 2004, two Toronto street gangs, the Malvern Crew and the Galloway Boys, both of whom claimed parts of Scarborough as their territory, were engaged in a bloody turf war. Several members of the Malvern Crew had been the targets of drive-by shootings attributed to the Galloway Boys. Any sighting of a member of the Galloway Boys in the part of Scarborough regarded as Malvern territory could instigate a violent reaction by members of the Malvern Crew. The respondent lived in Empringham, part of the Malvern district of Scarborough. He was an associate of the Malvern Crew with ties to a gang called the "Emps", a subset of the Malvern Crew operating in the Empringham area.

7 On the afternoon of January 8, 2004, Mr. Simeon Peter and his girlfriend, Clorie-Ann Anderson, were walking towards Ms. Anderson's home in the Malvern district of Scarborough. Ms. Anderson noticed that they were being followed. Mr. Peter slowed down and fell behind Ms. Anderson. The person following Mr. Peter opened fire, striking Mr. Peter with at least one bullet. The shooter approached the wounded Mr. Peter and shot him from close range. He then fled the scene, running through backyards in the direction of Empringham Park. The police later found seven cartridge casings along the route where the shots were fired. The post-mortem examination revealed that Mr. Peter had been shot three times.

8 It was agreed at trial that the murder was gang related and that one or more of the Malvern Crew had killed Mr. Peter believing that he was a member of the Galloway Boys.[2] The Crown contended that the respondent was the shooter and that he had the help of A.B. and C.S., two other Malvern Crew members. The defence did not call any evidence but argued that the respondent had nothing to do with the shooting and that A.B. and/or C.S. had killed Mr. Peter.

9 The respondent was not arrested until March 2005, some 14 months after the homicide. Apart from the excluded teardrop tattoo evidence, the Crown's case was based on evidence of motive; the testimony of A.B. and C.S.; the testimony of G.D., a third member of the Malvern Crew; and some circumstantial evidence.

10 The Crown advanced two motives for the murder. First, the Crown contended that the respondent and his accomplices decided to kill Mr. Peter because, as members of the Malvern Crew, they believed that Mr. Peter, who they thought was a member of the rival Galloway Boys, had no right to be in their territory. The Crown contended that in the street gang world inhabited by the respondent and his accomplices, a rival gang member's presence in the territory of the Malvern Crew was enough to justify killing that individual. The Crown led evidence to establish the existence of these street gangs, their respective territories, their bloody rivalry, and the manner in which they operated.

11 The second motive relied on by the Crown was more personal to the respondent. When Mr. Peter was seen by A.B. and C.S. on January 8, 2004, they mistakenly believed that he was a person named "Tevin", a Galloway Boys gang member who had recently robbed the respondent. They reported this information to the respondent who, on the Crown's theory, went after Mr. Peter and shot him.

12 The Crown alleged that A.B. and C.S. assisted the respondent in the commission of the murder. Both were members of the Malvern Crew. They had criminal records and were admitted drug dealers. Both testified as part of a plea agreement, which saw them receive lenient treatment in return for acknowledging their involvement in the Malvern Crew, admitting responsibility in certain criminal activities and testifying against the respondent. The trial judge cautioned the jury against relying on the unconfirmed evidence of either A.B. or C.S.

13 A.B. testified that on January 8, 2004, he and C.S. were driving through Scarborough on their way to Ajax, Ontario to see another member of the Malvern Crew. As they approached the highway, they noticed Ms. Anderson and Mr. Peter. C.S. recognized Ms. Anderson as a person who went out with members of the Galloway Boys. A.B. and C.S. decided that Mr. Peter could well be a member of the Galloway Boys and that he should not be in the Malvern Crew territory.

14 A.B. testified that he and C.S. decided to go to the respondent's home as it was nearby. They needed a gun to go after Mr. Peter and they knew that the respondent had access to the guns communally used by members of the Malvern Crew. A.B. also thought that the respondent would be interested in going after Mr. Peter because he believed Mr. Peter was the man named "Tevin" who had robbed the respondent about a week earlier.

15 A.B. and C.S. arrived at the respondent's home and told him that they had seen a suspected Galloway Boys member in their territory. They told the respondent that it could be "Tevin" — the person who had robbed him. According to A.B., the respondent agreed to go after this person. He was armed. The three men drove to where Mr. Peter and Ms. Anderson had been seen earlier by A.B. and C.S. They saw Mr. Peter and Ms. Anderson get on a bus. They followed the bus until Ms. Anderson and Mr. Peter disembarked. The respondent got out of the car and followed Ms. Anderson and Mr. Peter on foot.

16 A.B. and C.S. drove to Ajax. About twenty minutes after letting the respondent out of the car, A.B. called him on his home number and spoke with him. He did not ask the respondent what had happened because he thought the phone could be tapped by the police. He asked the respondent if everything was okay, and the respondent replied that it was. A.B. told him he should take a shower.

17 A.B. spoke to the respondent the next day. The respondent told A.B. that he believed that Mr. Peter had a gun so he had shot him in the leg from behind. He then ran up to Mr. Peter and shot him again. The respondent went on to tell A.B. that he turned the gun on Ms. Anderson intending to shoot her but that he was out of bullets. The respondent recounted how he ran home and subsequently disposed of the gun. A.B. also testified about other similar conversations with the respondent. The respondent complained that rumours were circulating that he was the shooter and that he was being teased for having run out of bullets before he could shoot Ms. Anderson.

18 C.S. denied any involvement in the murder. He testified that he was in his vehicle with A.B. and the respondent when they saw Mr. Peter and Ms. Anderson standing at a bus shelter. There was some discussion about Mr. Peter being a member of the Galloway Boys, but there was no discussion about doing him any harm. According to C.S., shortly after they passed the bus shelter, the respondent left the vehicle indicating he wanted to visit a friend who lived nearby.

19 C.S. testified that in the days after the murder, the respondent told him that he had shot Mr. Peter. The respondent told C.S. that Mr. Peter was the person who had robbed him earlier. The respondent described how he followed Mr. Peter and his girlfriend, shot Mr. Peter in the leg, caught up to him and shot him a couple more times. The respondent also told C.S. that he had turned the gun on Ms. Anderson and tried to shoot her but that it was out of bullets.

20 C.S.'s credibility was even more suspect than A.B.'s credibility. The Crown ultimately told the jury that it should reject C.S.'s evidence except where it was supported by other evidence. In the end, the Crown relied only on C.S.'s evidence regarding the admissions made to him by the respondent.

21 G.D., the third member of the Malvern Crew to testify for the Crown, had nothing to do with this murder. G.D. was, however, a long-time senior member of the Malvern Crew street gang. G.D. had a lengthy criminal record and had been arrested on a variety of offences. He ultimately decided to cooperate with the police and give evidence concerning the operation of the Malvern Crew and his conversations with the respondent. G.D. was serving a 12-year sentence when he testified against the respondent. He had not entered into any plea agreement with the Crown in exchange for his testimony, however, his cooperation was considered by the trial judge as a mitigating factor when G.D. received the 12-year sentence.

22 G.D. testified that the respondent told him that he and three other members of the Malvern Crew had killed Mr. Peter, who they believed to be a member of the rival gang. According to the respondent, he was chosen as the shooter because the other three gang members knew Ms. Anderson. G.D. testified that the respondent told him that he followed the victim and Ms. Anderson, shot the victim first in the leg and then chased him down and shot him again. The respondent also told G.D. that he tried to shoot Ms. Anderson but that the gun was out of bullets. [3]

23 In addition to the evidence from the gang members, there was some circumstantial evidence, which played a minor supporting role in the Crown's case. Cell phone records confirmed that the respondent was in the vicinity of the shooting shortly before it occurred and that he was at his residence, also within the vicinity of the shooting, shortly after the shooting occurred. Shoeprint impressions taken at the scene indicated that the shooter probably wore size 13 Nike Air Force 1 shoes. The respondent wore size 13 Nike Air Force 1 shoes. The police could not, however, connect any shoes owned by the respondent to the murder scene. The shoes he was wearing when arrested, some 14 months after the homicide, were not manufactured until sometime after the homicide.

24 Expert evidence also established that the seven cartridge casings found at the scene of the murder matched a .45 calibre semi-automatic handgun manufactured by Springfield Armory. That gun is a near exact replica of the Colt model handgun commonly referred to as a "Colt .45". A.B. testified that Malvern Crew gang members, including the respondent, had access to a communal "Colt .45" handgun.

III. The Admissibility of Dr. Totten's Evidence

(i) Background

25 The Crown offered Dr. Totten, a sociologist, as an expert in the culture of urban street gangs in Canada. The Crown proposed to have Dr. Totten give his opinion as to the meaning of a teardrop tattoo within the urban street gang culture and to give his opinion as to the meaning of the respondent's teardrop tattoo. The admissibility of this evidence was one of several issues addressed in a series of pre-trial motions that proceeded intermittently for several weeks prior to trial. Dr. Totten prepared a report dated December 8, 2006. He testified on a voir dire and his report was filed on consent. Following Dr. Totten's evidence, the trial judge expressed concerns about its admissibility and invited the Crown to address those concerns by way of further evidence from Dr. Totten. Dr. Totten prepared a second report, dated January 3, 2007, which was also filed as an exhibit. He testified for a second time. The defence did not call any evidence on the voir dire and the trial judge's ruling was based on Dr. Totten's evidence and the contents of the two reports. [4]

26 Several facts were agreed upon for the purpose of determining the admissibility of Dr. Totten's evidence. It was agreed that the respondent was an associate of the Malvern Crew street gang with proven ties to the Emps, a subset of the Malvern Crew. It was also agreed that the Malvern Crew and the Galloway Boys were involved in a bloody turf war in January 2004 when Mr. Peter was killed and that his murder was gang related. Counsel further agreed for the purpose of the voir dire that the respondent had a teardrop tattoo inscribed on his face some time in May or June 2004, about four or five months after the homicide. Counsel also agreed that no other member of the Galloway Boys was murdered in the first half of 2004 and that the person or persons who killed Mr. Peter believed that he was a member of the Galloway Boys.

27 The defence also conceded the following facts:

- no member of the Malvern Crew was murdered in 2003 or 2004;
- no close family member of the respondent died in 2003 or in the first six months of 2004; and
- the respondent had not spent any significant time in a penitentiary or a correctional institution.

28 This latter group of admissions was relevant to the three possible meanings of the teardrop tattoo put forward by Dr. Totten in his reports and testimony.

(ii) The Crown's Position

29 The Crown contended that Dr. Totten's expertise extended to the manner in which gang members communicated with each other and with members of other gangs. Various symbols, including tattoos, had certain meanings within the gang culture and were used to communicate with fellow gang members and sometimes with rival gang members. The Crown submitted that Dr. Totten's numerous research studies, his long clinical experience and his review of the relevant academic literature, enabled him to offer the opinion that a teardrop tattoo inscribed on the face of a young gang member had one of three possible meanings. One of those meanings was that the person with the tattoo had recently murdered a rival gang member.

30 The Crown proposed to have Dr. Totten testify not only as to the three possible meanings of the teardrop tattoo, but also to answer a hypothetical question that would include factual assumptions eliminating the two other possible meanings. In effect, the Crown wanted Dr. Totten to testify that, based on his knowledge of gang culture and the Crown's assumptions (to be supported, presumably, by the evidence), the respondent's inscription of a teardrop tattoo meant that he had killed a rival gang member. In the context of the rest of the evidence, this could only mean that he had killed Mr. Peter.

31 The Crown took a less ambitious alternative position, submitting that Dr. Totten should be permitted to at least identify the three possible meanings of the teardrop tattoo within the urban street gang culture. It would then be left to the Crown to lead evidence that would permit the jury, if so inclined, to exclude the other two possibilities, leaving only the explanation that the respondent had killed a rival gang member. Crown counsel at trial expressed her alternative position in these terms:

> [T]he other position is that we would be asking Your Honour to also consider whether this gentleman can provide merely the definitions [explanations], because the definitions have been consistent throughout that there are, as he put it, three, though I see four. There is three; one of them is doublebarrelled: loss of family member or a gang member has died; killed someone; or has spent time in prison.
>
> Whether that definition — we will be asking Your Honour to consider whether just merely the definition can be left to the jury, and then it is for the jury, not usurping the jury's role, because then it is for the jury to decide whether they want to make the inferences that the Crown may ask them to make.
>
> [Emphasis added.]

(iii) The Defence Position

32 The defence did not argue that the meaning of the teardrop tattoo was not properly the subject of expert evidence. Nor did the defence argue that Dr. Totten was not qualified to offer an opinion with respect to the meaning of a teardrop tattoo based on his study and knowledge of street gang culture. The defence submitted, however, that Dr. Totten's opinion concerning the meaning to be attributed to the respondent's teardrop tattoo was not sufficiently reliable to justify risking the potential prejudice to the trial process that could flow should his opinion be heard by the jury. In arguing that the potential probative value of the evidence was insufficient to risk the prejudice occasioned to the trial process, counsel stressed that Dr. Totten could not speak specifically to the meaning of the teardrop tattoo among members of the Malvern Crew. Counsel also emphasized that Dr. Totten's opinion could potentially be taken by the jury as determinative on the issue of identity, the only factual issue at trial.

(iv) Dr. Totten's Evidence

33 It is unnecessary to detail Dr. Totten's extensive and impressive academic, research and clinical credentials. The trial judge accepted that Dr. Totten was a "preeminent leader" in his field — the study of the culture of street gangs in Canada. The trial judge readily accepted that Dr. Totten's expertise could assist the trier of fact in understanding how gang members communicate. That expertise extended to the interpretation of tattoos; one of the symbols used by gang members to communicate with fellow gang members and with rival gangs.

34 In his reports and testimony, Dr. Totten stated that it was his opinion that a teardrop tattoo on the face of a young male member of an urban street gang signified one of three things:

- the death of a fellow gang member or family member of the wearer of the tattoo;
- that the wearer of the tattoo had served a period of incarceration in a correctional facility; or
- that the wearer of the tattoo had murdered a rival gang member.

35 Dr. Totten testified, however, that the meaning of a tattoo worn by any particular individual was ultimately a personal matter. He said:

> In my opinion, and based on existing studies in the area, it is not possible to determine the meaning of a teardrop tattoo unless one spends a significant period of time with the person wearing the tattoo.
>
> What's important is to understand how he — the meanings that he attaches to the tattoo. We can't impute motives. We can't assume that we know why the tattoo has been inscribed under the eye.
>
> So, if, for example, a researcher was merely to photograph people or just to use mug shots of offenders who had the tattoo, you can't — you can't imply that the reason that these individuals got the tattoo was for "X". We know that there are at least three distinct possibilities.
>
> [Emphasis added.]

36 This testimony echoes the comments in his January 3, 2007 report:

> This means that one cannot ascribe one meaning only to the tear drop tattoo worn by an individual without having access to other supporting data. It is not possible to just look at someone with this tattoo and verify the meaning without having specific information on the individual and his gang.
>
> [Emphasis added.]

37 Dr. Totten based his opinion as to the possible meanings of a teardrop tattoo on data gathered through several research projects conducted over ten years, information gained through a 25-year clinical practice involving long-term relationships with gang members both in and out of custody, and his review of the relevant academic literature. Dr. Totten's research consisted of six different studies conducted between 1995 and 2005. These studies explored the day-to-day lives of gang members through detailed interviews with those who lived in that culture. The manner in which gang members communicated, including various symbols used, was one of the many aspects of gang culture explored in these studies. Questions about tattoos were a small part of a much wider range of questions. The broad purpose of the studies was to understand the urban street gang world from the perspective of those who lived in that world.

38 Each of the research studies involved long interview sessions with gang members who agreed to be interviewed by Dr. Totten and his fellow researchers. These interviews were recorded and the questioners took detailed notes. The accumulated data were examined and assessed by the researchers. Often, more than one researcher would examine the same data and their assessments would be compared. Dr. Totten used the information garnered from these interviews and assessments when asked by the Crown to offer an opinion as to the meaning of the teardrop tattoo on the respondent's face. None of this information was gathered for the purpose of offering an opinion for the Crown in a criminal proceeding.

39 Dr. Totten described his research as qualitative and not quantitative. He explained that quantitative studies employ large sample sizes, attempt to explore the strength of association between variables and establish generalizations applicable to populations beyond the study sample. Qualitative research depends on information gleaned from individuals through a carefully constructed interview process. In research involving cultural habits, knowledge gained through many individual interviews with persons who live within a given culture permits the researcher to come to conclusions about the meaning that members of that group or culture attribute to certain conduct or symbols.

40 Dr. Totten indicated that in the fields of criminology, sociology and anthropology, there is a long-established tradition of excellent qualitative research into the culture and lifestyle of various groups, including street gangs. Dr. Totten referred to various well-recognized and accepted qualitative studies and reports on gang culture reaching back 80 years. Dr. Totten gave uncontradicted evidence to the effect that qualitative research techniques had been proven to yield excellent and reliable data "on the fine details of gang life". In his assessment, quantitative studies based on statistical inferences could not provide the same insight into those "fine details".

41 Dr. Totten described at length the steps taken by him, and others in his field, to enhance the reliability of answers received from those interviewed during his studies. Several techniques were used to increase the reliability of the questioning process itself. Interviews followed a fixed and carefully formulated format. The language used in each question was selected using insight gained from the experience of prior studies and input from peer review of the proposed questions. Dr. Totten sought to remove anything from the questions that was suggestive of the answer, ambiguous or would not have a common meaning across a broad spectrum of interviewees.

42 Dr. Totten also explained that answers given by interviewees were not simply accepted at face value. Answers were checked against reliable independent sources such as criminal records and police reports, a process called triangulation. If information from these outside sources was inconsistent with the answers given, those answers were not accepted as accurate.

43 Dr. Totten described at length a technique known as investigative discourse analysis. Applying that technique, an examination of the actual language used by an interviewee in his answers afforded insight into the veracity of those answers. Dr. Totten testified that this technique was well understood by him and other qualitative sociological researchers and that it had a long and well-established pedigree as a useful tool in his kind of research.

44 Dr. Totten also explained that several prospective subjects were excluded from his studies because there were reasons to doubt the reliability of any answers they might give. Gang members suffering from mental disorders or severe drug abuse were not asked to participate in the studies. Gang members who had been charged with a homicide related offence and who were awaiting trial were excluded from the study on the basis that their legal status gave them a motive to be less than honest about any criminal activity in which they had engaged. About 45 gang members were excluded from the studies.

45 Dr. Totten's six studies involved interviews with 300 gang members between the ages of 15 and 26. Roughly one half were in custody. Ninety-seven of the gang members interviewed had been convicted of some form of homicide. Of that group, 71 had teardrop tattoos under one eye. Of the 203 not convicted of homicide, ten had teardrop tattoos under one eye. In total, 81 of the 300 gang members whose interviews were considered had a teardrop tattoo. All 71 gang members interviewed who had a teardrop tattoo and had also been convicted of a homicide related offence indicated that the teardrop tattoo signified that they had killed a rival gang member. The ten gang members who had a teardrop tattoo but had not been convicted of a homicide related offence explained that the tattoo meant they had served time in a correctional institution.

46 Dr. Totten was questioned about the concept of peer review as it applied to his field of study. He acknowledged the importance of peer review in sociological research. Dr. Totten testified that in addition to the efforts made to carefully select those interviewed and to produce questions that yielded reliable answers, his studies underwent extensive peer reviews at several levels. In any given study, the questions he intended to use to collect data and his proposed methodology were peer reviewed before conducting the study. A post-study peer review occurred if any of the collected data were proposed for publication. Co-authors, where studies involved Dr. Totten and another author, served as a means of peer review after the studies were completed. Finally, those studies commissioned by a government ministry were subject to careful review by officials within the commissioning ministry.

47 While Dr. Totten insisted that concepts such as error rates and random sampling applied to quantitative scientific research and not to qualitative behavioural analysis, he agreed that concerns about the reliability of one's methodology and the validity of one's results were as germane to his work as the work of those engaged in quantitative research. However, in his view, given the very different nature of the research that he conducted as compared to quantitative research, different analytical tools than those used to assess quantitative research had to be used to assess the reliability of his methods and the validity of his results.

48 Dr. Totten found confirmation for the data collected in his studies from his own clinical experience. In the course of a 25-year clinical practice, Dr. Totten had been involved in many long-term relationships with gang members. During those relationships, he had had many conversations with gang members who had teardrop tattoos and had discussed with them what those tattoos meant to them. The answers provided were consistent with the answers received in the studies conducted by Dr. Totten.

49 The six studies conducted by Dr. Totten involved interviews with young male gang members in most of the major cities across Canada. His research was centered in Ottawa. He interviewed ten persons who were members of street gangs in Toronto. Dr. Totten did not interview any members of the Malvern Crew.

50 In cross-examination, Dr. Totten testified that his own experience and the academic literature suggested that the potential meanings of teardrop tattoos were not localized to any particular street gang, but cut across gang lines throughout North America. He pointed to his clinical experience, some of which occurred in Chicago, as support for this observation. Dr. Totten also indicated that his results were consistent with the results reported in American academic literature. He opined that there was "no evidence at all to suggest that it [the teardrop tattoo] is the property of one or a couple of street gangs".

51 Dr. Totten was also questioned about the sample size of his studies. He explained that as his data came from six separate studies, including some 300 gang members, his sample size was much larger than the size commonly used for behavioural research involving street gangs.

52 Dr. Totten was asked how long after a homicide the perpetrator would typically inscribe a tattoo on his cheek. Dr. Totten suggested that it could be between four months and a year after the homicide. He acknowledged that he could not be very specific and that there was "quite a range". He thought it would be unusual for a gang member to inscribe the teardrop soon after the homicide because by doing so he would identify himself to knowledgeable people, including the police, as the perpetrator. Dr. Totten did not refer to any specific parts of his studies or anything in the academic literature that directly addressed the amount of time that would pass after the homicide before the gang member who committed that homicide would have the teardrop tattoo inscribed on his face.

53 Dr. Totten agreed in cross-examination that gang symbols, including teardrop tattoos, could be used by "wannabees" or "poseurs" who wished to appear to be part of a gang culture but in reality had nothing to do with gangs, much less with the murder of rival gang members. Dr. Totten thought this an unlikely explanation for the respondent's teardrop tattoo in that he was an acknowledged member of the Malvern Crew and, as a result of this membership, he would be exposed to attack by other gang members if he inscribed a teardrop tattoo on his face and had not "earned" that tattoo.

54 Dr. Totten also agreed that the meanings of gang symbols, including tattoos, were subject to change: as those outside of the gang world became aware of and adopted gang symbols into parts of the mainstream culture, the meaning of those same symbols was lost or changed within the gang culture.

(v) The Trial Judge's Reasons [5]

55 The trial judge began his reasons by reference to the criteria governing the admissibility of expert opinion evidence. He quickly disposed of the criteria that were not in dispute before him. He accepted, as did defence counsel, that Dr. Totten's opinion was logically relevant to the identification of the respondent as the killer (para. 45). Likewise, the trial judge accepted that Dr. Totten was properly qualified to give an opinion on aspects of gang culture, including the meaning of tattoos, and that this was a subject matter that was appropriate for expert evidence by a properly qualified expert (paras. 13-15, 34). Finally, although the trial judge did not expressly address this issue, there was no exclusionary rule apart from the rule governing the admissibility of expert opinion evidence barring the admissibility of Dr. Totten's opinion. Having disposed of the non-contentious issues, the trial judge turned his attention to the reliability of Dr. Totten's opinion. The trial judge appreciated that his role as "gatekeeper" required that he determine whether that evidence was sufficiently reliable to warrant its consideration by the jury. He found that it was not.

56 The trial judge gave many reasons for rejecting Dr. Totten's evidence as insufficiently reliable. Several are summarized near the beginning of his reasons at para. 4:

> Based on the evidence, I am not satisfied that Dr. Totten's opinion is reliable. First, Dr. Totten's qualitative research is used to make specific quantitative conclusions. Second, he cannot provide an error rate for his analysis. Third, I have concerns about the small size of his study sample and its composition. Fourth, his opinions clash with authoritative texts in the > field. Fifth, his attempts at verifying the "truth-status" of his interview subjects are suspect. Sixth, his own conclusions are internally inconsistent — he often vacillated on the issues of whether the teardrop tattoo meaning was regional or universal, and whether the meaning could be generalized to individuals outside his study. Seventh, he did not interview any members of the Malvern Crew — the very gang of which the accused is a member. Eighth, Dr. Totten's theories with respect to the meaning of the teardrop are rare, and have never been peer-reviewed or published.

57 The trial judge found that the evidence was unreliable because, in addition to the reasons set out in the above passage, it was not based on proven facts (para. 46) and did not take into account the possibility that the meaning of the teardrop tattoo could change in time (para. 70) or the possibility that a "poseur" or "wannabee" may inscribe the tattoo "as some kind of fad" (para. 66).

58 The trial judge also characterized Dr. Totten's opinion concerning the meaning of the tattoo as "a novel scientific theory". Having so characterized his opinion, the trial judge, applying binding authority, subjected Dr. Totten's evidence to a more rigorous threshold reliability inquiry than would be the case if his opinion was not regarded as involving a novel scientific theory. However, it would seem from the trial judge's reasons that he would have excluded Dr. Totten's evidence even on the lower threshold reliability requirement applicable to expert opinion evidence that does not involve a novel scientific theory (para. 92).

59 Despite the many reasons advanced by the trial judge for rejecting Dr. Totten's evidence, it would appear that had Dr. Totten's studies and clinical work included members of the Malvern Crew, the trial judge would have admitted his evidence (para. 12). In the course of explaining four possible ways in which the Crown could have adduced admissible expert evidence, the trial judge said at para. 9:

> The third possible way would be through a sociologist, criminologist, or psychologist with specific experience of the Malvern Crew.

(vi) Analysis

60 The admissibility of Dr. Totten's opinion as to the meaning of the respondent's teardrop tattoo raised a difficult evidentiary problem for the trial judge. On the one hand, gang culture and the murderous violence it promotes were unavoidably central features of the factual matrix of this trial. On the other hand, the respondent could only be properly convicted if the Crown could prove his personal criminal responsibility in Mr. Peter's death. The respondent could not be convicted on the basis of his involvement in a violent gang culture. In ruling on the admissibility of Dr. Totten's evidence, the trial judge had to steer a course that would at once equip the jury with all relevant, reliable information available and needed to arrive at a correct verdict, while avoiding exposure to information that could invite a verdict based on the jury's understandably negative reaction to those who were part of the gang culture: see R. c. J. (J.-L.), [2000] 2 S.C.R. 600 (S.C.C.), at para. 61.

61 With respect, I think the trial judge, whose reasons reveal a detailed consideration of the issues raised by Dr. Totten's proposed evidence, erred in excluding Dr. Totten's evidence in its entirety. Before turning to the errors in his analysis, I will address the general principles governing the admissibility of this kind of evidence. I propose to outline an approach that I suggest may be helpful when assessing admissibility. In doing so, I do not depart from the controlling jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of Canada. Nor do I intend to suggest that the admissibility of expert opinion evidence should always be approached in the same way.

(a) Delineating the Scope of the Expert's Opinion

62 The admissibility inquiry is not conducted in a vacuum. Before deciding admissibility, a trial judge must determine the nature and scope of the proposed expert evidence. In doing so, the trial judge sets not only the boundaries of the proposed expert evidence but also, if necessary, the language in which the expert's opinion may be proffered so as to minimize any potential harm to the trial process. A cautious delineation of the scope of the proposed expert evidence and strict adherence to those boundaries, if the evidence is admitted, are essential. The case law demonstrates that overreaching by expert witnesses is probably the most common fault leading to reversals on appeal: see, for example, R. v. Ranger (2003), 67 O.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Klymchuk (2005), 203 C.C.C. (3d) 341 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. K. (A.) (1999), 45 O.R. (3d) 641 (Ont. C.A.), at paras. 123-35; R. v. Llorenz (2000), 145 C.C.C. (3d) 535 (Ont. C.A.), at paras. 33-40.

63 A determination of the scope of the proposed expert opinion evidence and the manner in which it may be presented to the jury if admissible will be made after a voir dire. The procedures to be followed on that voir dire are for the trial judge to decide. Sometimes the expert must be examined and cross-examined on the voir dire to ensure that the proposed evidence is properly understood. At the conclusion of the voir dire, the trial judge must identify with exactitude the scope of the proposed opinion that may be admissible. He or she will also decide whether certain terminology used by the expert is unnecessary to the opinion and potentially misleading: see R. v. G. (P.) (2009), 242 C.C.C. (3d) 558 (Ont. C.A.), at para. 16. Admissibility is not an all or nothing proposition.[6] Nor is the trial judge limited to either accepting or rejecting the opinion evidence as tendered by one party or the other. The trial judge may admit part of the proffered testimony, modify the nature or scope of the proposed opinion, or edit the language used to frame that opinion: see, for example, R. v. Wilson (2002), 166 C.C.C. (3d) 294 (Ont. S.C.J.).

64 The importance of properly defining the limits and nature of proposed expert opinion evidence and the language to be used by the expert is one of the valuable lessons learned from the Inquiry into Pediatric Forensic Pathology in Ontario.[7] That inquiry examined the forensic work of Dr. Charles Smith, who at the time was considered to be a leading pediatric pathologist in Ontario. The inquiry determined that, among other failings, Dr. Smith often went beyond the limits of his expertise when offering opinions in his testimony. His excesses were sometimes not caught by the court or counsel and, along with other shortcomings, led to several miscarriages of justice. Goudge J.A., the Commissioner, stressed the trial judge's obligation to take an active role in framing the scope and the language of the proposed expert opinion evidence. He observed at pp. 499-500:

> A final outcome from the admissibility process is a clear definition of the scope of the expertise that a particular witness is qualified to give. As discussed in the earlier part of this chapter, it will be beneficial to define the range of expertise with as much precision as possible so that all the parties and the witness are alerted to areas where the witness has not been qualified to give evidence. ... As I earlier recommended, the trial judge should take steps at the outset to define clearly the proposed subject area of the witness's expertise. At the conclusion of the voir dire, the trial judge will be well situated to rule with precision on what the witness can and cannot say. These steps will help to ensure that the witness's testimony, when given, can be confined to permissible areas and that it meets the requirement of threshold reliability.
>
> [Emphasis added.]

65 The present case affords an example of the problem that can ensue when the proffered expert opinion evidence is not properly circumscribed. In its primary position, the Crown contended that Dr. Totten's opinion could be put before the jury in the form of a hypothetical, which, as the trial judge accurately observed, was "tantamount to a confession" (para. 92). The Crown's proposed formulation of Dr. Totten's evidence drew a straight and powerful line between the jury's acceptance of his opinion and the conviction of the respondent on a charge of first degree murder. As advanced by the Crown in its primary position, Dr. Totten's evidence reads less like the opinion of a sociologist on the meaning of a symbol used in a certain culture and more like evidence from a factual witness offering identification testimony: see United States of America v. Mejia, 545 F.3d 179 (U.S. C.A. 2nd Cir. 2008), at pp. 195 -96.

66 In his reasons, the trial judge acknowledged both the primary and alternative positions advanced by the Crown, but in his analysis focussed almost entirely on the Crown's primary position. For example, very early in his analysis (para. 25), he summarized Dr. Totten's proposed evidence in these terms:

> Dr. Totten concluded that Mr. Abbey's tattoo was related to the murder of a rival gang member in 2004.

67 References to Dr. Totten's evidence going directly to the meaning of the respondent's tattoo are found throughout the reasons. In the concluding paragraph (para. 96), the trial judge said:

> It would be an error to allow Dr. Totten to testify to the potential meanings of the teardrop tattoo on Mr. Abbey's face and to present a ready-made inference concerning it to the jury.

The close and strong connection urged by the Crown between Dr. Totten's opinion and the ultimate issue of identification quite properly caused the trial judge to be concerned that if admitted, Dr. Totten's evidence could usurp the jury's fact-finding role on the ultimate issue in the trial: R. v. Mohan, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 9 (S.C.C.), at p. 24.

68 The Crown's attempt to link directly Dr. Totten's opinion to the identity of the respondent as the killer misconceived the true nature of Dr. Totten's opinion and the role he could legitimately play in assisting the jury. His report and his evidence made it clear that he could not speak to the reason the respondent placed a teardrop tattoo on his face. Dr. Totten could speak to the culture within urban street gangs in Canada and specifically the potential meanings to be taken from the inscription of a teardrop tattoo on the face of a young male member of that culture. Dr. Totten's evidence was directed to the potential meanings attributed to that symbol within a given culture and not to the reason any particular individual placed a tattoo on his face. Properly understood, Dr. Totten's opinion provided context within which to assess other evidence that the jury would hear, thereby assisting the jury in making its own assessment as to the meaning, if any, to be given to the respondent's teardrop tattoo: see David M. Paciocco & Lee Stuesser, The Law of Evidence, 5th ed. (Toronto: Irwin Law, 2008), at p. 209; Melvin M. Mark, "Social Science Evidence in the Courtroom: Daubert and Beyond?" (1999) 5 Psychol. Pub. Pol'y & L. 175, at p. 187, n. 7.

69 The Crown's secondary position on the voir dire was described by the trial judge in these terms, at para. 28:

> ... Dr. Totten's evidence could be limited to the introduction alone of the possible meanings for the tattoo without providing his analysis of the specific meaning attributable to Mr. Abbey's tattoo.

70 This secondary position reflects the proper limits of the opinion that Dr. Totten could properly advance. Phrased in this manner, his opinion did not go directly to the ultimate issue of identity and did not invite the jury to move directly from acceptance of the opinion to a finding of guilt. Dr. Totten's opinion, as properly delineated, would form part of a larger evidentiary picture to be evaluated as a whole by the jury.

(b) The Applicable Principles and a Suggested Approach to Admissibility

71 It is fundamental to the adversary process that witnesses testify to what they saw, heard, felt or did, and the trier of fact, using that evidentiary raw material, determines the facts. Expert opinion evidence is different. Experts take information accumulated from their own work and experience, combine it with evidence offered by other witnesses, and present an opinion as to a factual inference that should be drawn from that material. The trier of fact must then decide whether to accept or reject the expert's opinion as to the appropriate factual inference. Expert evidence has the real potential to swallow whole the fact-finding function of the court, especially in jury cases. Consequently, expert opinion evidence is presumptively inadmissible. The party tendering the evidence must establish its admissibility on the balance of probabilities: Paciocco & Stuesser at pp. 184, 193; S. Casey Hill et al., McWilliams' Canadian Criminal Evidence, 4th ed., looseleaf (Aurora, Ont.: Canada Law Book, 2009), at para. 12:30.10.

72 The increased reliance on expert opinion evidence by both the Crown and defence in criminal matters is evident upon even a cursory review of the reported cases. Sometimes it seems that a deluge of experts has descended on the criminal courts ready to offer definitive opinions to explain almost anything. Expert evidence is particularly prevalent where inferences must be drawn from a wide variety of human behaviour: see, for example, R. v. McIntosh (1997), 35 O.R. (3d) 97 (Ont. C.A.), at pp. 101 -103, leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused R. v. McIntosh, [1998] 1 S.C.R. xii (S.C.C.) [leave sought by second appellant in McIntosh, Mr. McCarthy]; David M. Paciocco, "Coping With Expert Evidence About Human Behaviour" (1999) 25 Queen's L.J. 305, at pp. 307-308; S. Casey Hill et al. at para. 12:30.10; R. v. Olscamp (1994), 95 C.C.C. (3d) 466 (Ont. Gen. Div.)), approved in R. v. Lance (1998), 130 C.C.C. (3d) 438 (Ont. C.A.), at para. 24; Ontario, The Commission on Proceedings Involving Guy Paul Morin: Report, vol. 1 (Toronto: Queen's Printer, 1998), at pp. 311-24. As Moldaver J.A. put it in R. v. Clark (2004), 69 O.R. (3d) 321 (Ont. C.A.), at para. 107, a case involving the proposed expert evidence of a criminal profiler:

> Combined, these two concerns [giving expert evidence more weight than it deserves and accepting expert evidence without subjecting it to the scrutiny it requires] raise the spectre of trial by expert as opposed to trial by jury. That is something that must be avoided at all costs. The problem is not a new one but in today's day and age, with proliferation of expert evidence, it poses a constant threat. Vigilance is required to ensure that expert witnesses like Detective Inspector Lines are not allowed to hijack the trial and usurp the function of the jury.

[Emphasis added.]

73 Despite justifiable misgivings, expert opinion evidence is, of necessity, a mainstay in the litigation process. Put bluntly, many cases, including very serious criminal cases, could not be tried without expert opinion evidence. The judicial challenge is to properly control the admissibility of expert opinion evidence, the manner in which it is presented to the jury and the use that the jury makes of that evidence.

74 The current approach to the admissibility of expert opinion evidence was articulated by Sopinka J. in Mohan. Broadly speaking, Mohan replaced what had been a somewhat laissez faire attitude toward the admissibility of expert opinion evidence with a principled approach that required closer judicial scrutiny of the proffered evidence. After Mohan, trial judges were required to assess the potential value of the evidence to the trial process against the potential harm to that process flowing from admission.

75 The four criteria controlling the admissibility of expert opinion evidence identified in Mohan have achieved an almost canonical status in the law of evidence. No judgment on the topic seems complete without reference to them. The four criteria are:

- relevance;
- necessity in assisting the trier of fact;
- the absence of any exclusionary rule; and
- a properly qualified expert.

76 Using these criteria, I suggest a two-step process for determining admissibility. First, the party proffering the evidence must demonstrate the existence of certain preconditions to the admissibility of expert evidence. For example, that party must show that the proposed witness is qualified to give the relevant opinion. Second, the trial judge must decide whether expert evidence that meets the preconditions to admissibility is sufficiently beneficial to the trial process to warrant its admission despite the potential harm to the trial process that may flow from the admission of the expert evidence. This "gatekeeper" component of the admissibility inquiry lies at the heart of the present evidentiary regime governing the admissibility of expert opinion evidence: see Mohan; R. v. D. (D.), [2000] 2 S.C.R. 275 (S.C.C.); J. (J.-L.); R. v. Trochym, [2007] 1 S.C.R. 239 (S.C.C.); K. (A.); Ranger; R. v. Osmar (2007), 84 O.R. (3d) 321 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused (2007), 85 O.R. (3d) xviii (S.C.C.).

