Decided on the basis of the written record.
Before Judicial Member: Gascon J. (Chairperson)
Date of Reasons for Order and Order: December 16, 2015

REASONS FOR ORDER AND ORDER DISMISSING AN APPLICATION FOR LEAVE

I. OVERVIEW

[1] On October 1, 2015, Audatex Canada, ULC ("Audatex") applied to the Competition Tribunal, pursuant to section 103.1 of the Competition Act, RSC 1985, c C-34 (the "Act"), for leave to bring a refusal to deal application under section 75 of the Act. If leave is granted, Audatex seeks an order under subsection 75(1) of the Act directing CarProof Corporation ("CarProof"), Trader Corporation ("Trader") and Marktplaats B.V. ("Marktplaats") (collectively, the "Respondents") to accept Audatex as a customer and to supply Canadian automobile listings data to Audatex on usual trade terms.

[2] On November 6, 2015, each of CarProof, Trader and Marktplaats filed written representations in response to Audatex's leave application. Further to an order issued on October 29, 2015, the Tribunal granted leave to CarProof and Marktplaats to file affidavit evidence, along the terms and conditions set out in such order, as part of their representations in writing.

[3] On November 17, 2015, Audatex filed a reply, which included reply affidavit evidence as well as written representations. Audatex had not sought leave from the Tribunal to file additional affidavit evidence. The issue of the admissibility of that reply evidence will be dealt with below in Part II.D of these reasons.

[4] In support of its application for leave, Audatex submitted an affidavit sworn on October 1, 2015 by Mr. Gabor Toth, the Chief Financial and Operating Officer of Audatex (the "Toth Affidavit"). In its reply, Audatex also added affidavits sworn on November 17, 2015 by Mr. Jason Brady, the Senior Vice President, General Counsel and Secretary of Audatex's parent company Solera Holdings Inc. (the "Brady Affidavit") and by Mr. Alberto Cairo, Chief of Staff for North America of Solera (the "Cairo Affidavit"). With their respective responses, CarProof submitted an affidavit sworn on November 5, 2015 by Mr. Paul Antony, Chairman of the Board of CarProof (the "Antony Affidavit") and Marktplaats submitted an affidavit sworn on November 5, 2015 by Mr. Scott Neil, Director, Commercial Business with eBay GmBH (the "Neil Affidavit").

[5] Pursuant to subsections 103.1(1) and (6) of the Act, and subject to the ruling below, the Tribunal has relied on these affidavits and the written representations of the parties in deciding this application for leave.

[6] Audatex claims that it has provided sufficient credible evidence to satisfy the Tribunal that there is a reasonable possibility that its business is directly and substantially affected by the Respondents' refusal to deal, and that such refusal could be the subject of an order under section 75 of the Act. CarProof, Trader and Marktplaats collectively seek an order denying Audatex leave and dismissing the application, with costs, as Audatex has failed to provide sufficient credible evidence for each of the requirements set out in sections 75 and 103.1(7) of the Act. They further invite the Tribunal to exercise its discretion to refuse to grant leave, in accordance with subsection 103.1(7).

[7] For the reasons that follow, I am not satisfied that Audatex has met its burden under subsection 103.1(7) to apply for relief under the refusal to deal provision of the Act. Audatex's application for leave shall therefore be dismissed.

II. BACKGROUND

A. The Parties

a. Audatex

[8] Audatex is an Alberta corporation that provides data and software solutions to Canadian automobile insurance companies and automobile repair shops in order to streamline the accident claims process, both for estimating the cost of repairs and for calculating market values of automobiles. As part of the business Audatex describes as its "primary business", it offers two services to its customers: "total loss valuation" and "partial loss estimating". Audatex's affiliate, Audatex North America, Inc. ("Audatex North America"), provides similar services in the United States.

i. Total loss valuation services

[9] Audatex's total loss valuation services refer to the determination of the market values of damaged automobiles for its insurance company customers. In order to provide these services, Audatex relies on Canadian automobile listings data. These automobile listings data are information about an automobile that is contained in an advertisement listing an automobile for sale. Such advertisements almost always include the year, make and model of the automobile, as well as the asking price. Mileage, features, transmission type and colour of the automobile, amongst other details, are typically also included in automobile listings data. Automobile listings data is the product for which Audatex is seeking an order to supply.

[10] When an automobile is damaged in an accident, Audatex reviews automobile listings data for advertisements of automobiles that have similar characteristics as the damaged automobile and are within a close geographic proximity. Using proprietary algorithms, Audatex generates a total loss valuation for the damaged automobile. Audatex then prepares a report for the insurance company which includes information from the listings that underpin the total loss valuation (the "Valuation Report"). The total loss valuation generated by Audatex is a criterion by which insurers determine if it is preferable to make repairs to an automobile or, if the repair cost is greater than the market value of the automobile, to provide the policyholder with the total loss cash value.

ii. Partial loss estimating services

[11] Audatex's partial loss estimating services refer to automobile repair estimates offered to both its insurance company customers and its repair shop customers. The partial loss estimating services do not require the automobile listings data in question.

[12] In terms of revenues, the Toth Affidavit reports that approximately one-quarter of Audatex's revenues in its "primary business" originates from its total loss valuation services provided to insurance company customers. One-third comes from its partial loss estimating services sold to those insurance company customers. The remaining 45% of Audatex's revenues is generated by automobile repair shops purchasing its partial loss estimating services.

b. The Respondents

[13] CarProof is headquartered in Ontario and its principal business is the sale of detailed vehicle-history reports (the "VHRs"). As stated in the Antony Affidavit, these VHRs are used by car sellers and buyers to obtain detailed information about a vehicle's past.

[14] In order to prepare its VHRs, CarProof uses various sources of data as inputs. These include "damage repair estimates" provided by repair shops following an accident. Audatex, HyperQuest, Inc. ("HyperQuest") (an American affiliate of Audatex) [CONFIDENTIAL] all collect this estimate repair data as part of their respective insurance business. CarProof purchases this estimate repair data through licenses obtained from Audatex North America [CONFIDENTIAL].

[15] As a by-product of its VHR business and as an additional source of revenue, CarProof also sublicenses some of the data it sources to other industry participants.

[16] Another important source of data used by CarProof for its VHR business is automobile listings data. As it does for the estimate repair data, CarProof licenses automobile listings data from numerous sources in the United States and Canada, including Trader and Marktplaats. The Antony Affidavit states that [CONFIDENTIAL]. However, as it does with other sources of data, CarProof looks to use automobile listings data as an additional source of revenues through sublicensing some of this data to other industry participants. CarProof has never supplied automobile listings data to Audatex.

[17] Trader is based in Canada and owns the Canadian websites www.autotrader.ca and www.autohebdo.net (collectively "AutoTrader"). AutoTrader offers online automobile classified advertisements services that, for a fee, allow anyone to list an automobile for sale. In the course of its business, Trader has licensed certain automobile listings data to Audatex North America pursuant to an agreement called the "Data Licensing Agreement" (the "Trader Agreement"). The Trader Agreement terminated in August 2015 and is no longer in force.

[18] Marktplaats is headquartered in Amsterdam and operates the www.kijiji.ca website ("Kijiji"). Kijiji is an online classified advertisements service that allows dealers, for a fee, and anyone else, for free, to list an automobile for sale. Vehicle advertisements are live on Kijiji and publicly available for only a limited time. However, [CONFIDENTIAL]. The Neil Affidavit indicates that Marktplaats refers to that [CONFIDENTIAL] as the "Confidential and Proprietary Listing Data". Marktplaats has recently entered into a data licensing agreement with CarProof regarding its Confidential and Proprietary Listing Data. [CONFIDENTIAL]. The Neil Affidavit attests that Audatex has never been a customer of Marktplaats.

B. The Relevant Facts

[19] Audatex complains that it no longer has access to the AutoTrader and Kijiji automobile listings data from Trader and Marktplaats. In September 2009, Audatex North America had entered into the Trader Agreement, pursuant to which Audatex received Canadian automobile listings data from Trader. It had a [CONFIDENTIAL], which automatically renewed for additional [CONFIDENTIAL] terms unless either party gave at least [CONFIDENTIAL]

notice of termination prior to the end of the current term. On March 24, 2015, Trader sent Audatex North America a letter advising of its termination of the Trader Agreement, effective on August 31, 2015. Since that date, Audatex no longer receives automobile listings data from Trader. The Toth Affidavit states that the reason for terminating the Trader Agreement was because Trader had concluded a long-term, exclusive agreement to provide its Canadian automobile listings data to CarProof.

[20] With respect to the Kijiji automobile listings data, the Toth Affidavit indicates that Audatex had been using a computer script to access specific, relevant vehicle valuation information from Kijiji's online site. Audatex never had a formal supply agreement with Marktplaats. Starting in November 2014, Audatex unsuccessfully attempted to enter into an agreement with Marktplaats for access to Kijiji's Canadian automobile listings data. In July 2015, Kijiji requested that Audatex cease its practice of accessing data on Kijiji, which Marktplaats qualified in the Neil Affidavit as being "data scraping" and contrary to Kijiji's terms of use. The Toth Affidavit confirms that Audatex complied with Marktplaats' request. After that, and as discussed in more detail in the Brady Affidavit, Audatex continued discussions with CarProof for the possibility of an agreement to access Kijiji's automobile listings data. These were ultimately unsuccessful. The Toth Affidavit attests that, in August 2015, Audatex learned that Marktplaats had already entered into an exclusive supply agreement with CarProof with respect to Kijiji's automobile listings data.

[21] Audatex claims that access to AutoTrader's and Kijiji's Canadian automobile listings data is vital to its business. According to the Toth Affidavit, Audatex generated over [CONFIDENTIAL] Valuation Reports in the 2015 fiscal year and, since its algorithm requires at least [CONFIDENTIAL] comparable automobile listings in order to generate each Valuation Report, Audatex requires access to approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] Canadian automobile listings per month. Without access to either AutoTrader's or Kijiji's Canadian automobile listings data, Mr. Toth says that Audatex is not able to have a sufficient number of "new" listings per month, causing the Valuation Reports [CONFIDENTIAL]. This, according to Mr. Toth, severely restricts Audatex from continuing to provide its total loss valuation services.

[22] According to Mr. Toth, Audatex has recently procured Canadian automobile listings data from three different companies; [CONFIDENTIAL]. However, these listings combined fall [CONFIDENTIAL] short of the monthly new listings required by Audatex to continue to operate its total loss valuation services. In August 2015, Audatex also entered into negotiations with Boost Motor Group, but it was advised that Boost had entered into a long-term, exclusive agreement to provide automobile listing data to CarProof.

[23] Audatex tried to negotiate a satisfactory sublicense agreement with CarProof to have access to the AutoTrader and Kijiji automobile listings data but no agreement was reached. The Toth Affidavit, the Brady Affidavit, the Cairo Affidavit and the Antony Affidavit contain details on the exchanges between the parties, on the contractual terms discussed and on the areas of disagreement. There is no need to elaborate on those negotiations for the purpose of this application. Suffice it to say that CarProof was seeking some contractual conditions from Audatex, perceived by Audatex to be over and beyond the terms governing the simple sublicensing of the automobile listings data. CarProof viewed these as forming an integral part of the agreement to be concluded with Audatex and reflective of the multifaceted nature of their business relationship. [CONFIDENTIAL].

[24] I also note that, in August 2015, CarProof instituted legal proceeding against HyperQuest in the United States, seeking access to HyperQuest's estimate repair data and alleging that HyperQuest reneged on an agreement it had entered with CarProof in July 2014.

C. The Parties' Arguments

[25] Audatex argues that the refusal of CarProof, Trader and Marktplaats to supply the AutoTrader and Kijiji automobile listings data directly and substantially affects its business. The Respondents dispute that.

[26] Audatex further claims that CarProof has purposefully and tactically concluded exclusive agreements with a number of suppliers of automobile listings data, including the key suppliers Trader and Marktplaats, and has thus eliminated competition in the supply of Canadian automobile listings data. These exclusive contracts have, despite Audatex's efforts, prevented it from negotiating access to such data going forward. While Audatex has been able to negotiate agreements for access to Canadian automobile listings data from a few smaller suppliers, it contends that it is unable to obtain adequate supplies of the product from other suppliers. Audatex pleads that it offered to meet and exceed CarProof's usual trade terms, but that CarProof was focused on extracting unconnected concessions from Audatex and its affiliates in the United States as a condition to providing Audatex with Canadian automobile listings data. Furthermore, Audatex submits that it is willing to obtain Canadian automobile listings data from Trader and Marktplaats on usual trade terms, in accordance with the range of market values attributed to such data. Finally, Audatex submits that, if it is not able to compete effectively, Mitchell, described in the Toth Affidavit as Audatex's only material competitor, will lose its most important competitive constraint. Competition will thus be adversely affected in the total loss valuation and partial loss estimating services, as this market would be reduced to only one major competitor. For those reasons, Audatex argues that an order could be issued under section 75.

[27] CarProof, Trader and Marktplaats respond that the product for which Audatex seeks relief is not the automobile listings data itself but a license to use the confidential and proprietary Trader and Marktplaats data. The Respondents only supply their automobile listings data through licenses and, based on the ratio in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v Warner Music Canada Ltd. (1997), 78 CPR (3d) 321 (Comp. Trib.), licenses are not products for the purposes of section 75 of the Act as they are not in "ample supply". Trader and Marktplaats further argue that Audatex's claimed inability to obtain adequate supplies is due to the allegedly anti-competitive conduct of CarProof, not a lack of competition among suppliers. CarProof says it has been more than willing to sublicense available automobile listing data to Audatex on fair and reasonable terms consistent with industry practice, and claims that its negotiations with Audatex reflect the complex relationship between the parties and the ubiquity of multi-faceted value exchanges in the industry. The Respondents also submit that Audatex does not provide information regarding the size of the downstream market which it claims will be affected by the refusal to deal, the size of Mitchell or its market power absent Audatex's participation, or the number and size of competitors in that market. Therefore, the Tribunal could not have reason to believe that an order could be issued under the refusal to deal provision.

[28] The Respondents finally argue that the Tribunal should in any event exercise its discretion not to grant leave. Marktplaats states that Audatex's conduct in scraping the Kijiji website should disentitle it from applying for an order under section 75, as it would compel Marktplaats to do business with a party that knowingly violated its rights by breaching the Kijiji terms of use. Marktplaats also claims that Audatex was the author of its own misfortune due to its apparent failure to act timely to secure a license from Marktplaats (and other licensors). In their view, the Tribunal should not permit the private application process under section 75 to be used as a mechanism for ineffective or unsuccessful competitors to interfere in the competitive process.

D. The Reply Affidavit Evidence

[29] There is disagreement between the parties on the admissibility of Audatex's reply affidavit evidence as part of this application for leave.

[30] On behalf of the Respondents, CarProof requests that the Brady Affidavit and the Cairo Affidavit filed as part of Audatex's reply be struck from the record. CarProof claims that Rule 120 of the Competition Tribunal Rules, SOR/94-290 (the "Rules") only contemplates that a person may serve a reply, not a "reply record", at the leave application stage. Contrary to Rule 115 (which expressly allows an applicant to file affidavit evidence) or to Rule 119 (which allows a respondent to file such evidence with leave of the Tribunal), Rule 120 does not contemplate the filing of additional affidavit evidence as part of a reply by an applicant for leave. Relying on the order issued by Mr. Justice Blanchard in Nadeau Poultry Farm Limited v Groupe Westco Inc et al, 2008 Comp. Trib. 6 ("Nadeau Reply Order") at para 4, CarProof contends that a reply must be limited to legal argument, excluding additional affidavit evidence.

[31] Audatex replies that Rule 120 specifically provides for an applicant for leave under section 103.1 to serve a "reply" and that, unlike Rule 119, Rule 120 does not require the applicant to seek leave to include affidavit evidence in the reply. Audatex contends that the right of reply granted by Rule 120 would be meaningless if it did not permit an applicant, by way of reply evidence, to respond to factual allegations made by a respondent. Audatex states that the Nadeau Reply Order predates Rule 120 and refers to B-Filer Inc v The Bank of Nova Scotia, CT-2005-06, where the applicant was permitted to file reply affidavit evidence. Audatex pleads that no unfairness or injustice would be caused to CarProof by allowing the reply affidavit evidence and that the right of an applicant to file non-repetitive reply evidence responsive to factual allegations is well-established. Audatex also claims that striking the reply evidence would unfairly and unjustly deny Audatex the right to reply to the Respondents' factual representations, as well as depriving the Tribunal of valuable evidence on which to make its determination.

[32] I disagree in part with Audatex and conclude that some portions of the reply affidavit evidence cannot be allowed and must be struck.

[33] Rule 120 simply provides that "[the] person making an application for leave under section 103.1 of the Act may serve a reply on each person against whom an order is sought (…)". Contrary to the language used in Rules 115 and 119, no reference is made to affidavit evidence or even to the possibility of seeking leave for it in the context of a reply. Audatex's claim that Rule 120 provides for the right to file an entire reply record, encapsulating a reply affidavit, is without merit. In the context of applications for leave, filing an affidavit in reply is contemplated neither explicitly nor implicitly by the Rules. In fact, given the express language found in Rules 115 and 119, the only reasonable interpretation of Rule 120 is that no reply affidavit evidence is to be submitted. This, in my view, is consistent with the nature of an application for leave under section 103.1 of the Act, which is meant to be a summary process (Symbol Technologies Canada ULC v Barcode Systems Inc., 2004 FCA 339 ("Barcode FCA") at para 19). Audatex's unilateral filing of affidavit evidence with its reply is therefore not permissible under the Rules.

[34] I do, however, mention that Rule 2 permits the Tribunal to "dispense with, vary or supplement the application of any of [the] Rules in a particular case in order to deal with all matters as informally and expeditiously as the circumstances and consideration of fairness permit". Audatex could therefore have sought permission from the Tribunal, under Rule 2, to file reply affidavit evidence by way of a motion. Alternately, Audatex could have addressed a more informal letter to the Tribunal, as per the requirements of Rule 81. Audatex did not. It just decided to file a reply record.

[35] Audatex defends its position by invoking that the "general right of an applicant to file non-repetitive reply evidence which is responsive to the factual allegations of a respondent is well established". In the context of summary processes like an application for leave under section 103.1 of the Act, this is only partly correct. The exercise of such a "right" requires permission. By analogy, I refer to applications under Part V of the Federal Court Rules, SOR/98-106 (the "FCR"), where no "right" to file reply affidavit evidence is contemplated after parties submit their respective affidavits. Applications governed by Part V of the FCR are summary proceedings meant to be dealt with without delay. Pursuant to Rule 312 of the FCR, a party (whether an applicant or a respondent) needs to obtain leave of the Federal Court in order to file additional affidavits. In the exercise of its discretion, the Court will consider factors such as whether the evidence sought to be adduced was available when the party filed its initial affidavits or could have been available with the exercise of due diligence, whether the evidence will assist the Court and serve the interest of justice, and whether the evidence will cause substantial or serious prejudice to the other parties (Forest Ethics Advocacy Assn v National Energy Board, 2014 FCA 88 at para 6; Rosenstein v Atlantic Engraving Ltd, 2002 FCA 503 at paras 8-9). Since a party must put its best case forward at the first opportunity, the discretion of the Court to permit the filing of additional material should be exercised with great circumspection (Mazhero v Canada (Industrial Relations Board), 2002 FCA 295 at para 5).

[36] In my view, in the context of a summary process like an application for leave under section 103.1 of the Act, these principles apply even more forcefully.

[37] That being said, it is important to step back and consider CarProof's request to strike Audatex's reply affidavit evidence in the context of this particular application for leave. In this matter, the Tribunal has allowed CarProof and Marktplaats to file affidavit evidence, as part of their respective responses, limited to certain specific and discrete facts meeting the exception contemplated by Rule 119(3) (Audatex Canada, ULC v CarProof Corporation, 2015 Comp. Trib. 13 ("Audatex Affidavit Order") at para 16). In the case of CarProof, it was in relation to "[the] alternative sources of data available to Audatex within the industry; the proprietary and confidential nature of the data that Audatex seeks to license; and the terms on which CarProof has made the data available to Audatex and Audatex' alleged unwillingness to meet the relevant terms of trade" (Audatex Affidavit Order at para 28). In the case of Marktplaats, it was limited to "the confidential and proprietary nature of the data Audatex is seeking to license from Marktplaats; and the data licensing agreement between CarProof and Marktplaats" (Audatex Affidavit Order at para 29).

[38] In those circumstances, and bearing in mind the principles set out above, I believe that, pursuant to Rule 2, the Tribunal could have supplemented the application of Rule 120 and allowed Audatex to file reply affidavit evidence to respond to this specific factual evidence. While Audatex should have asked the Tribunal permission to do so prior to or at the time of filing its reply affidavit evidence, I am satisfied that the Tribunal can exercise its discretion to consider the application of Rule 2 at this stage. However, Audatex's reply affidavit evidence could only be allowed to the extent that it is responding to the factual evidence filed by CarProof and Marktplaats and for which specific, tailored leave has been granted by the Tribunal. This is what Audatex did for most of its reply evidence, but this is not the case for those paragraphs of the Cairo Affidavit dealing with Audatex's substantial harm and the effect of not having the listings data on Audatex's business. The Respondents made written representations about this issue but neither the Antony Affidavit nor the Neil Affidavit provide factual evidence on Audatex's business. I therefore cannot conclude that the portions of the Cairo Affidavit dealing with this matter constitute proper reply evidence in the context of these proceedings. I further note that the Cairo Affidavit does not specify whether this additional evidence of harm was available or could have been available to Audatex before it filed its application on October 1, 2015.

[39] As a result, the following portions of Audatex's reply evidence (and the corresponding portions of its Memorandum of Fact and Law relying upon such evidence) cannot be accepted on the record and will not be considered by the Tribunal: paragraphs 15 to 19 of the Cairo Affidavit. However, given that the remaining portions of the Cairo Affidavit, as well as the entire Brady Affidavit, respond to new factual evidence filed by CarProof and Marktplaats, I will exercise my discretion to allow that evidence to be part of the record in this proceeding.

[40] I have one final comment. In these proceedings, the request to file affidavit evidence in response was not made by way of a formal motion. Instead, CarProof and Marktplaats both sent letters to the Tribunal outlining the topics they wished to address in their affidavit evidence. Such a process is perfectly in line with Rule 2, and the Tribunal accepted it. However, by doing so, the Tribunal did not have much detail on the actual contents of the affidavits intended to be filed. Going forward, it would be helpful for the Tribunal if respondents seeking leave to file affidavit evidence in response to an application for leave file, along with their request, a draft of the affidavit evidence they seek to produce. In this case, that would have allowed the Tribunal to better and more quickly assess whether the contemplated evidence fell within the principles and guidance set out in the Audatex Affidavit Order. Similarly, if an applicant seeks leave or permission from the Tribunal, under Rule 2, to file reply affidavit evidence, it would be helpful for the Tribunal to have a draft of the affidavit evidence intended to be produced. Such reply affidavit evidence will typically have to be limited to the issues covered in the respondent's affidavit evidence.

III. ANALYSIS

A. The Leave Test

[41] Subsection 103.1(7) of the Act sets out the test for leave on an application under section 75 of the Act. It reads as follows:

| 103.1(7) The Tribunal may grant leave to make an application under section 75 or 77 if it has reason to believe that the applicant is directly and substantially affected in the applicant's business by any practice referred to in one of those sections that could be subject to an order under that section. | 103.1(7) Le Tribunal peut faire droit à une demande de permission de présenter une demande en vertu des articles 75 ou 77 s'il a des raisons de croire que l'auteur de la demande est directement et sensiblement gêné dans son entreprise en raison de l'existence de l'une ou l'autre des pratiques qui pourraient faire l'objet d'une ordonnance en vertu de ces articles. |

[42] The test to be followed on an application for leave in refusal to deal cases was first articulated by Madam Justice Dawson in National Capital News Canada v Milliken, 2002 Comp. Trib. 41 ("Milliken") at para 14. It was subsequently adopted by the Federal Court of Appeal in 2004 in Barcode FCA when it considered an appeal of the Tribunal's decision to grant leave. The test has been followed since then by the Tribunal in section 103.1 matters. Pursuant to this test, the Tribunal must determine two elements: whether the application for leave is supported by sufficient credible evidence to give rise to a bona fide belief that 1) the applicant is directly and substantially affected in its business by the refusal to deal; and 2) the practice in question could be subject to an order under section 75. There is no dispute between the parties that this is the test to be applied in this leave application.

[43] In Barcode FCA, the Federal Court of Appeal further noted that leave applications are to be dealt with summarily and that, when determining whether to grant leave, the Tribunal's role is a screening function based on the sufficiency of evidence advanced (Barcode FCA at para 24). The evidence is looked at on a scale which is less than the balance of probabilities (Barcode FCA at para 17). However, it is not sufficient that the evidence shows a mere possibility that the business may be directly and substantially affected. The standard of proof requires the "existence of reasonable grounds for a belief" (Milliken at paras 9-10).

[44] While the test is a lower standard of proof than proof on a balance of probabilities, "it is important not to conflate the lower standard of proof on a leave application with what evidence must be before the Tribunal and what the Tribunal must consider on that application" (Barcode FCA at para 18). As Mr. Justice Rothstein said in that decision, the refusal to deal required is not "simply a refusal by a supplier to sell a product to a willing customer" (Barcode FCA at para 18). It has to meet the elements mapped out in section 75, and these must all be addressed by the Tribunal before granting leave.

[45] With respect to the first part of the test under subsection 103.1(7) (being "directly and substantially affected by a refusal to deal"), the terms "directly" and "substantially" should be given their ordinary meaning. For the "substantial" component, terms such as "important" are acceptable synonyms to considering whether there has been a "substantial" impact, which is ultimately assessed by reviewing the circumstances at issue (Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v Chrysler Canada Ltd (1989), 27 CPR (3d) 1 (Comp. Trib.), aff'd 38 CPR (3d) 25 (FCA) at para 64). In the Nadeau decision on the merits, Mr. Justice Blanchard specified that "the Applicant need not demonstrate that it is affected by the refusal to the point of it being unable to carry on its business. Rather, it is required to establish on a balance of probabilities that it is affected in an important or significant way" (Nadeau Poultry Farm Limited v Groupe Westco Inc et al, 2009 Comp. Trib. 6 ("Nadeau Final Order") at para 131, aff'd 2011 FCA 188). The "direct" component has not been interpreted, but its ordinary meaning calls for a close nexus between the refused supply and the impact on an applicant's business.

[46] Turning to the second part (whether the refusal "could be the object of an order"), all the elements of the refusal to deal set out in subsection 75 (1) of the Act must be addressed (Barcode FCA at para 18). In order to grant leave, the Tribunal must be satisfied that "each of the elements set out in subsection 75(1) could be met when the application is heard on the merits" (B-Filer Inc v The Bank of Nova Scotia, 2005 Comp. Trib. 38 ("B-Filer Leave") at para 53). The Tribunal may address each element summarily in keeping with the expeditious nature of the leave proceeding and, "[a]s long as it is apparent that each element is considered, the Tribunal's discretionary decision to grant or refuse leave will be treated with deference by [the Federal Court of Appeal]" (Barcode FCA at para 19).

[47] At the leave stage, the question of whether the reviewable conduct "could" be subject to an order is being considered in an application which is not supported by a full evidentiary record (The Used Car Dealers Association of Ontario v Insurance Bureau of Canada, 2011 Comp. Trib. 10 ("Used Car Dealers") at para 32). Madam Justice Simpson added in Used Car Dealers that, in applying this part of the test and considering if an order is possible, "hard and fast evidence" is not required on every point and that "reasonable inferences may be drawn where the supporting grounds are given and circumstantial evidence may be considered" (Used Car Dealers at para 34).

| 75.(1) Where, on application by the Commissioner or a person granted leave under section 103.1, the Tribunal finds that | 75.(1) Lorsque, à la demande du commissaire ou d'une personne autorisée en vertu de l'article 103.1, le Tribunal conclut : |
| (a) a person is substantially affected in his business or is precluded from carrying on business due to his inability to obtain adequate supplies of a product anywhere in a market on usual trade terms, | a) qu'une personne est sensiblement gênée dans son entreprise ou ne peut exploiter une entreprise du fait qu'elle est incapable de se procurer un produit de façon suffisante, où que ce soit sur un marché, aux conditions de commerce normales; |
| (b) the person referred to in paragraph (a) is unable to obtain adequate supplies of the product because of insufficient competition among suppliers of the product in the market, | b) que la personne mentionnée à l'alinéa a) est incapable de se procurer le produit de façon suffisante en raison de l'insuffisance de la concurrence entre les fournisseurs de ce produit |

(c) the person referred to in paragraph (a) is willing and able to meet the usual trade terms of the supplier or suppliers of the product,

(d) the product is in ample supply, and

(e) the refusal to deal is having or is likely to have an adverse effect on competition in a market, the Tribunal may order that one or more suppliers of the product in the market accept the person as a customer within a specified time on usual trade terms unless, within the specified time, in the case of an article, any customs duties on the article are removed, reduced or remitted and the effect of the removal, reduction or remission is to place the person on an equal footing with other persons who are able to obtain adequate supplies of the article in Canada.

c) que la personne mentionnée à l'alinéa a) accepte et est en mesure de respecter les conditions de commerce normales imposées par le ou les fournisseurs de ce produit;

d) que le produit est disponible en quantité amplement suffisante;

e) que le refus de vendre a ou aura vraisemblablement pour effet de nuire à la concurrence dans un marché, le Tribunal peut ordonner qu'un ou plusieurs fournisseurs de ce produit sur le marché en question acceptent cette personne comme client dans un délai déterminé aux conditions de commerce normales à moins que, au cours de ce délai, dans le cas d'un article, les droits de douane qui lui sont applicables ne soient supprimés, réduits ou remis de façon à mettre cette personne sur un pied d'égalité avec d'autres personnes qui sont capables de se procurer l'article en quantité suffisante au Canada.

[49] If there is insufficient evidence dealing with one of the elements of subsection 75(1), leave cannot be granted (Brandon Gray Internet Services Inc v Canadian Internet Registration Authority, 2011 Comp. Trib. 17 ("Gray")). In that case, a "bald statement of belief" about adverse impact on competition in the market (such as simply stating that the termination of supply will result in reduced competition), without any supporting evidence, was not considered sufficient by the Tribunal, and therefore leave was not granted (Gray at para 13). In brief, if an applicant for leave fails to provide some cogent evidence to demonstrate that each element of subsection 75(1) could be met, leave will be denied.

[50] I add one other remark. While sections 75 and 103.1 provide for a private right of action for refusals to deal, they are part of the Act and must be considered in the context of this legislation and what it aims to protect and accomplish. As Mr. Justice Rothstein said in Barcode FCA, "[the] basic purpose of the Competition Act as described in subsection 1.1 is 'to maintain and encourage competition in Canada' and the purpose of section 75 is in furtherance of that objective" (Barcode FCA at para 14). He elaborated on that point further in his reasons, restating the purpose of the Act to maintain and encourage competition and adding that "[i]t is not to provide a statutory cause of action for the resolution of a dispute between a supplier and a customer that has no bearing on the maintenance or encouragement of competition" (Barcode FCA at para 23).

[51] In Barcode FCA, Mr. Justice Rothstein was more specifically referring to the requirement of paragraph 75(1)(e) of an adverse effect on competition in a market. However, I note that the overarching concern about the competition and market-related dimension of the refusal to deal provision is also reflected in the language of paragraph 75(1)(b) requiring that the inability to obtain adequate supplies result from "insufficient competition among suppliers of the product in the market". Insufficient competition has been held to mean that the competitive conditions in the market for the supply of the product must be the "overriding reason" that adequate supplies are not available (Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v Xerox, [1990] CLD 1146 at para 83; Nadeau Final Order at para 229; Nadeau Poultry Farm Limited v Groupe Westco Inc et al, 2011 FCA 188 at para 61).

[52] Both of these components of section 75 (i.e., paragraphs 75(1)(b) and (e)) reflect the fact that the provision is not there to arbitrate private contractual disputes relating to the supply of a product in circumstances where the refusal to deal does not result from insufficient competition and does not have a market impact.

B. The Requirement of Direct and Substantial Effect

[53] I now turn to the first part of the test: whether the evidence before the Tribunal is sufficient to satisfy it that there is reason to believe Audatex's allegations that it is directly and substantially affected in its business by a practice referred to in section 75. There are two dimensions to this requirement: a direct and substantial effect on Audatex's business, and a causality link with the Respondents' alleged refusal to deal.

[55] I have assumed, for the purpose of this decision, that Audatex is "directly" affected in its business by the Respondents' refusal but, for the reasons that follow, I am not satisfied that Audatex has provided sufficient credible evidence to give rise to a bona fide belief that it is or may be substantially affected in its business by the Respondents' refusal to supply automobile listings data. I instead find that Audatex has failed to submit sufficient non-speculative, cogent evidence to give me reasonable grounds to believe that the impact of the refusal on its total loss valuation and partial loss estimating services could reasonably be considered to constitute a "substantial" effect, even if only its "primary business" were considered.

a. Audatex's evidence

[56] Audatex claims that its business is directly and substantially affected now that it is not able to receive the AutoTrader and Kijiji automobile listings data from either CarProof, Trader or Marktplaats. The Toth Affidavit describes them as the only sufficiently large sources of data to enable Audatex to produce [CONFIDENTIAL] Valuation Reports for its customers. In essence, Audatex contends that the refusal to supply affects the entirety of its total loss valuation services where the automobile listings data is needed and that, as described in the paragraph below, it also impacts its partial loss estimating services and thus the totality of its "primary business".

[57] Paragraphs 42 to 45 of the Toth Affidavit summarize Audatex's allegation of substantial harm:

> 42 Given the need for current automobile listing data and the insufficiency of Audatex's other data sources, Audatex's total loss valuation service will soon begin to experience significant performance issues if access to sufficient Canadian automobile listings data is not restored.
> 43 As Audatex's performance dips below the accepted service levels in its customer agreements, its customers will be able to terminate their contracts. Additionally, the uncertainty of the situation will likely cause Audatex's customers who are in the contract renewal process to reconsider staying with Audatex. In fact, [CONFIDENTIAL]. Audatex is concerned that the current situation will negatively impact those negotiations.
> 44 Once Audatex can no longer provide the total loss valuation service, all revenues and profits generated from it will be lost. As set out in Exhibit "3", Audatex's total loss valuation service, which generates approximately one-quarter of its revenues and profits will rapidly decline to zero as Audatex can no longer meet the mandated service levels in its customer agreements. Given that Audatex's insurance company customers are able, and I believe will in all likelihood want, to cancel their partial loss estimating service upon cancelling or losing their total loss valuation service, I expect that a further one-third of Audatex's revenues and profits will also be severely impacted. Finally, without any insurance company customers themselves using or mandating automobile repair shops to contract with Audatex, I believe the remaining revenues and profits, derived from automobile repair shops, will also steadily shrink.
> 45 In other words, Audatex's entire business is in jeopardy.

[58] The Toth Affidavit specifies that access to sufficient Canadian automobile listings data is critical to Audatex's business, and that Audatex requires access to approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] Canadian automobile listings per month for its total loss valuation services (of which approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] would be new listings). The Toth Affidavit adds that its recently procured listings from [CONFIDENTIAL] together represent a monthly shortfall in the order of [CONFIDENTIAL] on new listings.

[59] According to Mr. Toth, Audatex's total loss valuation services represent approximately one-quarter of the revenues and profits from its "primary business", and the Respondents' refusal will affect all of this line of business. In addition, these services are said to be inextricably linked to Audatex's partial loss estimating services. The Toth Affidavit describes the close link between these two services by saying that the vast majority of Audatex's insurance company customers use both services. [CONFIDENTIAL], those who do not use both services use only the total loss valuation services. Referring to Audatex's agreements with two insurance company customers, the Toth Affidavit specifies that the customers purchasing both services do so pursuant to a single bundled contract which allows them to terminate the entire contract if Audatex fails to provide either of the services at the agreed upon service levels. As it is easier to deal with one service provider for both total loss valuation and partial loss estimating services, Mr. Toth expects that Audatex's insurance company clients can and would, in all likelihood, terminate use of Audatex's services altogether if it cannot provide a total loss valuation service. The Toth Affidavit attests that this will result in a further loss of approximately one-third of Audatex's revenues and profits.

[60] The Toth Affidavit then adds that, if an insurer drops Audatex as a supplier, the incentive for automobile repair shops dealing with that insurer to remain with Audatex is weakened, if not completely eliminated. Mr. Toth expects that, with the loss of insurer clients, Audatex's automobile repair shops will have less incentive to remain customers, thereby dissipating Audatex's remaining revenues and profits in its partial loss estimating services. The Toth Affidavit refers to Audatex's Repair Shop Template in that respect. As a result, the Toth Affidavit claims that the entirety of Audatex's "primary business" is directly and substantially affected by CarProof's refusal to deal. Mr. Toth further states that without automobile listings data from AutoTrader and Kijiji, insurance companies and their policy holders will question the legitimacy of the Valuation Reports, and have a lack of confidence in the Valuation Reports' conclusions. The Toth Affidavit refers to [CONFIDENTIAL] in relation to that issue.

[61] In essence, the Toth Affidavit asserts that Audatex will be directly and substantially affected in its business in two phases. First, the refusal will impact its total loss valuation services where the automobile listings data are directly used. Second, the detrimental impact will expand to its partial loss estimating services even though the automobile listings data are not needed for those. I will review these two claims in turn.

b. The effect on Audatex's total loss valuation services

[62] The refusal to supply complained of by Audatex relates to one product, the automobile listings data. The Toth Affidavit indicates that this input is only used in Audatex's total loss valuation services, which is one of its lines of business. In order to determine whether there is sufficient credible evidence to have a bona fide belief that Audatex may be directly and substantially affected in its business by the alleged refusal to supply automobile listings data from the Respondents, the Tribunal must thus first consider the evidence on the magnitude of the supply being refused and the impact of the refusal on Audatex in the context of its overall business.

[63] The Toth Affidavit states that Audatex is engaged in the supply of "data and software solutions" to insurance companies and automobile repair shops. The Toth Affidavit then attests that:

> 13 55% of Audatex's revenues from its automobile accident claims business are from insurance company customers, including independent appraisers, with revenues from the automobile repair shops making up the balance. 40% of Audatex's insurance company revenues are generated from its total loss valuation services. In other words, with respect to total revenues from Audatex's primary business, approximately one-quarter is made up of insurance company customers with respect to total loss valuation services, one-third is made up of insurance company customers with respect to partial loss estimating services, and 45% is made up of automobile repair shops with respect to partial loss estimating services […].

[64] The financial figures referred to in the Toth Affidavit are limited to Exhibit 3 containing one page entitled "PnL By Line of Business" for the year ended June 30, 2015. It refers to total revenues of approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] from [CONFIDENTIAL], and distinguishes between Partial Loss and Total Loss. The percentages mentioned in the Toth Affidavit are drawn from the figures in Exhibit 3. The Toth Affidavit speaks of Audatex's "primary business", but I observe that there is no indication as to what this "primary business" represents in Audatex's "data and software solutions" business, and what its share is in the overall business of Audatex. There is no other reference, in the Toth Affidavit (or in the Brady and Cairo Affidavits), to figures or financial statements relating to Audatex's total business.

[65] In other words, the Toth Affidavit does not provide clear evidence on the total business of Audatex or on the relative place of its "primary business" in Audatex's supply of data and software solutions. I further note that the "approximately one-quarter" reference used by the Toth Affidavit to reflect the proportion of its "total loss valuation" services is in fact 22% (i.e., 40% of 55%). This 22% figure indeed corresponds to the ratio of the total loss valuation business from its insurance company customers and independent appraisers to the total revenues of [CONFIDENTIAL] reported on the P&L statement attached to the Toth Affidavit at Exhibit 3. When the [CONFIDENTIAL] revenue stream is excluded, that proportion is identified as 23% in Exhibit 3. But there is no indication as to what this "approximately one-quarter" (or in fact 22-23%) of Audatex's "primary business" would actually be as a proportion of Audatex's overall business.

[66] Furthermore, I observe that "approximately one-quarter" (or 22-23%) represents the totality of Audatex's total loss valuation services. The Toth Affidavit does not provide information on the actual supply of AutoTrader and Kijiji automobile listings data lost by Audatex from Trader, Marktplaats and/or CarProof, or on the proportion of Audatex's total purchases of automobile listings data represented by the Respondents. The Toth Affidavit only states that, until recently, Audatex relied "primarily" on the AutoTrader and Kijiji listings data. The Toth Affidavit does not describe the total AutoTrader automobile listings data that was supplied by Trader (when Audatex had the Trader Agreement with it) and that it lost at the end of August 2015. As to the Kijiji automobile listings data, the Neil Affidavit states that Audatex never was a customer of Marktplaats, and there is also no information regarding the magnitude of Kijiji automobile listings data that Audatex had access to with its "computer script" prior to the notice it received in July 2015 to cease using the Kijiji data. The only financial figures provided reflect Audatex's revenues for the entirety of its total loss valuation services. It is therefore not possible for the Tribunal to tell precisely what is the refused supply of AutoTrader and Kijiji automobile listings data actually required for Audatex's total loss valuation business.

[67] The Toth Affidavit however says that Audatex requires [CONFIDENTIAL] automobile listings data per month. It further estimates that AutoTrader posts 1.1 million listings per month and Kijiji 760,000 listings. Arguably, the Tribunal could deduct from these figures that supplies from the Respondents "could" account for about [CONFIDENTIAL] of Audatex's total supply of automobile listings data, assuming Audatex had indeed used all the potential supply available from these two sources. Based on this information, the lost supply of the AutoTrader and Kijiji automobile listings data could represent about [CONFIDENTIAL] of Audatex's total loss valuation business, which is itself only approximately one-quarter (22-23%) of the total revenues of its "primary business".

[68] I note that, in its reply submissions, Audatex did not clarify the issue of its "primary business" or the proportion represented by its total loss valuation services in its overall business, despite the arguments made by the Respondents in their responses and raising concerns about the information provided by Audatex on the magnitude of its business. This is evidence that only Audatex could have provided. I appreciate that there will inevitably be incomplete information on some topics at the application for leave stage (Used Car Dealers at para 32). However, sufficient and credible information on the applicant's own business and on the proportion represented by the suppliers refusing to supply are fundamental and basic elements needed by the Tribunal in order to be able to have a bona fide belief of a direct and substantial effect pursuant to subsection 103.1(7) of the Act.

[69] I pause to point out that this type of evidence was typically available to the Tribunal in those cases where it decided to grant an application for leave under section 103.1 of the Act. In Nadeau Poultry Farm Limited v Groupe Westco Inc et al, 2008 Comp. Trib. 7 ("Nadeau Leave Order") for example, the evidence of substantial effect was found sufficient by the Tribunal. The applicant had provided figures showing that the exact supply held by the respondents represented 48% of the overall chicken processing business of the applicant. This allowed the Tribunal to have a reliable measure of the impact of the intended cut-off in supply, which had not yet occurred in that case. In the current case, the evidence does not clearly indicate to the Tribunal the proportion of the supply represented by the Respondents in Audatex's total loss valuation business, and what the total loss valuation business represents within Audatex's total business (over and above its "primary business"). The only figure the Tribunal has is the "approximately one-quarter" (in fact 22-23%) for Audatex's total loss valuation services.

c. The effect on Audatex's partial loss estimating services

[70] Audatex also claims that, even though the automobile listings data supplied by the Respondents is only used for its total loss valuation services, and that these total loss valuation services only account for approximately one-quarter (22-23%) of its "primary business", the refusal will also impact its partial loss estimating services which account for the remaining 77-78% of its "primary business". These partial loss estimating services are sold to both insurance company customers (33%) and to repair shops (45%). Since the automobile listings data refused to Audatex is not used as input for Audatex's partial loss estimating services, sufficient credible evidence needs to be adduced to illustrate how the refusal to supply may end up impacting this other line of business representing three times the revenues generated by Audatex's total loss valuation services.

[71] Relying on Audatex's Master Services Agreements with the [CONFIDENTIAL], which both contemplate the provision of total and partial loss services as a single bundle, Mr. Toth states that all of Audatex's business with insurance companies, whether total loss valuation or partial loss estimating services, will be affected by the refusal to deal. The Toth Affidavit speaks of some insurance company customers purchasing both types of services through a single bundled contract which "allows them to terminate the entire contract" if Audatex fails to provide both services. Then, the Toth Affidavit adds that "frequently", its repair shop customers are mandated to deal with Audatex through the insurance company customers. So, if an insurer drops Audatex as a customer, Mr. Toth "expects that the automobile repair shops will begin providing notices of termination". The Toth Affidavit later refers to "automobile repair shops generally" selecting a service provider based on insurance company preferences. From that sequence of events, the Toth Affidavit draws the conclusion that "Audatex's revenue from both total loss and partial loss services is jeopardized if it can no longer access sufficient Canadian automobile listings data to provide total loss valuation services".

[72] Audatex relies on this evidence from the Toth Affidavit to claim that the refusal to supply will affect the totality of the partial loss estimating services provided to insurance company customers (representing one-third of its "primary business") as well as the totality of the partial loss estimating services provided to repair shop customers (representing 45% of its "primary business"). Repair shop customers do not use Audatex's total loss valuation services.

[73] I am not persuaded that this constitutes sufficient credible evidence to support a bona fide belief that Audatex may be "directly and substantially" affected in its other line of business of partial loss estimating services to insurance customers and even less so, to repair shops. I cannot find in the Toth Affidavit the elements to allow the Tribunal to have reasonable grounds to believe that the refusal to supply automobile listings data could have such an impact on a line of business which represents more than three-quarters of Audatex's "primary business" and where the refused automobile listings data are not required. Apart from the scenarios described by Mr. Toth, there are no examples or circumstantial evidence supporting the allegations being made.

[74] The Toth Affidavit states that "it is simpler and more efficient to deal with one service provider for both total and partial loss estimating services", but Mr. Toth does not offer credible supporting evidence on that connection. No evidence from insurance company customers has been adduced on this point. The Toth Affidavit only relies on the contractual language referring to the bundled package. There is also no reference to experiences of insurance company customers having terminated their whole contract or threatening to do so because of poor performance or other issues in one of the two services. Similarly, no evidence was provided with respect to past experiences of contract terminations by insurance company customers and their effect on the partial loss estimating services purchased by repair shops. Neither is there evidence adduced regarding the incentive for automobile repair shops dealing with a specific insurer to remain with Audatex only as long as such insurer deals with Audatex; or regarding situations where repair shop customers have raised this prospect as a reason to terminate their business with Audatex.

[75] I agree with the Respondents that Audatex's allegations in respect of its partial loss estimating services are based on speculation. I find that the Toth Affidavit relies on a complex chain of cascading assumptions that are based on what might occur in the future with respect to Audatex's business other than total loss valuation services, with no credible evidence in support. The allegations are essentially based on an interpretation of certain contractual provisions. The Toth Affidavit contains no evidence from insurance company customers expressing concerns that the lack of AutoTrader or Kijiji automobile listings data could impact their partial loss estimating business. As CarProof pointed out in its submissions, Mr. Toth does not identify a single insurance customer (or repair shop customer) that has threatened to terminate its agreement with Audatex, despite the fact that Audatex no longer receives supplies of automobile listings data from AutoTrader and that it can no longer use its computer script to access the Kijiji automobile listings data. Similarly, with respect to the allegation that automobile repair shops generally select a service provider based on insurance company preferences, there is no specific evidence of a repair shop having such a practice or stating an intention to terminate on that basis.

[76] It is of note that the partial loss estimating services account for 77-78% of Audatex's "primary business" (according to Exhibit 3 of the Toth Affidavit), and the automobile listings data which form the basis of Audatex's complaint are not required as supply for that business. To support an allegation that the refusal to supply such data would affect this line of business to the point where it is substantially affected and that Audatex's whole business is in jeopardy would require more than the general assertions contained in the Toth Affidavit.

[77] It bears underscoring that, at the leave application stage, the evidence only needs to show a reasonable possibility that Audatex's business may have been directly and substantially affected. However, with respect to the effect on Audatex's partial loss estimating services, I find that the evidence adduced by Audatex only amounts to a mere possibility and is speculative. In a situation like this where the contemplated detrimental effect of the refusal to supply is through a series of indirect events affecting a line of business which accounts for the vast majority of Audatex's "primary business", I am not satisfied that Audatex's evidence is sufficient.

d. Conclusion on direct and substantial effect

[78] The Tribunal is essentially left with an alleged impact on Audatex's total loss valuation business. Even if the Tribunal were to accept that all of Audatex's total loss valuation services business can be considered to be directly affected by the Respondents' refusal to supply automobile listings data (despite the fact that these supplies only account for a portion of the automobile listings data used by Audatex in that business), and even if the Tribunal were to accept that Audatex's "primary business" represents its total business (despite unclear evidence about that), I am not persuaded that, overall, the figures and evidence provided constitute sufficient credible evidence to allow the Tribunal to reasonably believe that Audatex may be directly and substantially affected in its business.

[79] Audatex's own evidence indicates that the total loss valuation services at issue represent only about one-quarter (or in fact 22-23%) of Audatex's total revenues in its "primary business".

And, as mentioned above, the evidence on the effect on the remaining partial loss estimating services is at best speculative. This, in my opinion, is insufficient to establish that Audatex could be affected in an important or significant way by the alleged refusal. An effect of this magnitude does not rise to the level of substantial effect typically considered sufficient by the Tribunal to grant applications for leave under subsection 103.1(7).

[80] In the reasons allowing the application for leave in the Barcode case, evidence was provided that a receiver had been appointed for all the property, assets and undertakings of Barcode and 50% of employees had been laid off in the business directly affected by the refusal to supply (Symbol Technologies Canada ULC v Barcode Systems Inc., 2004 Comp. Trib. 1 at paras 14-16). In B-Filer Leave, the Tribunal was satisfied with the applicants' evidence that they could be substantially affected in their business because 50% of their revenue was dependent on the banking services provided by the respondent (B-Filer Leave at para 54). In Nadeau Leave Order, the evidence showed that the supply of live chickens provided by the respondents accounted for 48% of the applicant's whole business and that the anticipated refusal to supply would have a direct impact on the applicant's production of processed chicken. In Used Car Dealers, the affidavit showed that the specific business at stake and supplied by the respondent accounted for more than 50% of the applicant's net income (at para 31).

[81] Conversely, in Construx Engineering Corporation v General Motors of Canada, 2005 Comp. Trib. 21 ("Construx"), leave was denied. Madam Justice Simpson concluded that "Construx' evidence did not provide sufficient information about its business and the impact of the Policies on its business" (at para 8), and that the Tribunal could not asses the significance of the sales of the product purchased from the respondent, even though there was a general statement that they accounted for 38% of total sales over a given period. Madam Justice Simpson noted several deficiencies, including an absence of evidence on the nature or volume of transportation products sold, total annual sales, and what the losses from the respondent meant for the whole enterprise (Construx at paras 5, 8).

[82] In Broadview Pharmacy v Wyeth Canada Inc, 2004 Comp. Trib. 22 ("Broadway"), leave was denied by Mr. Justice Blais as the losses claimed were "speculative and undocumented" (Broadway at para 21). In that case, the applicant feared a loss of customers because "they will not be able to fill multiple prescriptions including the respondent's products" (Broadway at para 21). But no figures were provided to show the impact or potential impact of the loss of the respondent's products and no evidence was presented to support the assertion that not filling all the prescriptions for a given patient will mean not filling any. The leave applications in Mrs. O's Pharmacy v Pfizer Canada Inc, 2004 Comp. Trib. 24 at paras 23-24, Broadview Pharmacy v Pfizer Canada Inc, 2004 Comp. Trib. 23 at para 18 and Paradise Pharmacy Inc and Rymal Pharmacy Inc v Novartis Pharmaceuticals Canada Inc, 2004 Comp. Trib. 21 at para 23 were all dismissed by Mr. Justice Blais for the same reasons: there was no direct and non-speculative evidence about the impact of the refusal on the applicant's business. In Sears, it was found that alleged harm such as the improved bargaining position of other brands was mere speculation, in the absence of evidence showing that it was based on the deponent's actual experience or comments to that effect made by personnel who worked for other brands (Sears at para 35).

[83] I agree with Audatex that it is only required to provide "sufficient credible evidence" to satisfy the Tribunal that there is a reasonable possibility that its business may be directly and substantially affected by a refusal to deal. And I also agree with Audatex that it does not have to wait until harm actually occurs before bringing an application under subsection 103.1 of the Act (Nadeau Leave Order at para 25). But sufficient, cogent evidence is needed, even for anticipated harm. In Nadeau Leave Order, supply had not yet ceased, but there was nonetheless sufficient and measurable evidence of the anticipated effects of the refusal amounting to 48% of the business.

[84] In the current case, the supply of AutoTrader and Kijiji automobile listings data to Audatex has already ceased, but the harm alleged by Audatex continues to be anticipated. There is no evidence of lost sales or lost revenues (whether in the total loss valuation or in the partial loss estimating business) even though Audatex has no access to the Kijiji automobile listings data since mid-July 2015 and to the AutoTrader automobile listings data since the end of August 2015, which are said to be "critical" for its business. In these circumstances, I am not satisfied that the evidence provided by Audatex rises to the level of sufficient credible evidence required to give the Tribunal a bona fide belief that Audatex may be directly and substantially affected in its business due to its inability to obtain automobile listings data from Trader, Marktplaats and/or CarProof. The evidence presented by Audatex is not sufficient at this time to meet the burden it carries to show a substantial effect.

[85] I add that my conclusion would not have been different even if the struck paragraphs of the Cairo Affidavit had been admitted as part of Audatex's reply affidavit evidence. In my opinion, they would not have added sufficient credible evidence of harm to reach the "direct and substantial" threshold set forth in subsection 103.1(7) of the Act.

[86] This finding is fatal to Audatex's application.

C. The Section 75 Factors

[87] Since Audatex has failed to meet the requirement of "directly and substantially affected in the applicant's business", this first element of the section 103.1 test is dispositive of the leave application. In view of this conclusion, it is therefore not necessary to consider whether Audatex has adduced sufficient evidence to meet the second part of the test for leave, namely whether each of the elements of subsection 75(1) could be met and an order could be issued under the refusal to deal provision.

IV. CONCLUSION

[88] The Tribunal concludes that the leave application is not supported by sufficient credible evidence to give rise to a bona fide belief that Audatex may be or is directly and substantially affected in its business by the refusal to supply of the Respondents. Accordingly, Audatex's application for leave to apply under section 75 of the Act is denied.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL THEREFORE ORDERS THAT:

[89] Audatex's application for leave to apply under section 75 of the Act is denied.

[90] The Respondents are awarded costs.

DATED at Ottawa, this 16th day of December, 2015.

Registry document no.: 0011

IN THE MATTER OF an application by Barcode Systems Inc., for an order pursuant to section 103.1 of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34, granting leave to bring an application under section 75 of the Act.

B E T W E E N:

Barcode Systems Inc.
(applicant)

and

Symbol Technologies Canada ULC
(respondent)

Decided on the basis of the written record.
Member: Lemieux J. (presiding)
Date of reasons and order: 20040115
Reasons and order signed by: Lemieux J.

REASONS AND ORDER REGARDING APPLICATION FOR LEAVE TO MAKE AN APPLICATION UNDER SECTION 75 OF THE *COMPETITION ACT

[1] Barcode Systems Inc. ("Barcode") has applied to the Competition Tribunal (the "Tribunal") pursuant to subsection 103.1(1) of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34 (the "Act") for leave to make an application under section 75 of that Act.

[2] Barcode alleges Symbol Technologies Canada ULC ("Symbol"), a subsidiary of Symbol Technologies Inc. ("Symbol US"), is refusing to supply it with barcode scanners contrary to the provisions of section 75 of the Act and seeks an order, if leave is granted and appropriate findings are made by the Tribunal, that Symbol accept Barcode as a customer on the "usual trade terms" forthwith upon the issuance of such an order.

[3] This application for leave is only the second such application to the Tribunal brought under the recent amendments to the Act providing for what has been termed as "a private access action" because the Commissioner of Competition (the "Commissioner") does not initiate the proceeding.

[4] The first application for leave was decided by Justice Dawson in National Capital News v. Milliken, 2002 Comp. Trib. 41 ("National Capital News"), a decision which I endorse entirely.

[5] The test for the Tribunal granting leave is set out in subsection 103.1(7) of the Act. It provides as follows:

> The Tribunal may grant leave to make an application under section 75 or 77 if it has reason to believe that the applicant is directly and substantially affected in the applicant[']s business by any practice referred to in one of those sections that could be subject to an order under that section. (emphasis added)

[6] In this case, the practice that is complained of and that could be subject to an order under section 75 of the Act is Symbol's refusal to sell its products to Barcode after Symbol terminated its ten year relationship with Barcode in March 2003.

[7] I make the following points about the Tribunal's test for granting leave.

[8] What the Tribunal must have reason to believe is that Barcode is directly and substantially affected in its business by Symbol's refusal to sell. The Tribunal is not required to have reason to believe that Symbol's refusal to deal has or is likely to have an adverse effect on competition in a market at this stage.

[9] I make this observation because Symbol, in its vigorous opposition to leave being granted, described what, in its view, was a highly competitive marketplace and argued that Barcode had provided no evidence as to this requirement as described in paragraph 75(1)(e) of the Act.

[10] As I read the Act, adverse effect on competition in a market is a necessary element to the Tribunal finding a breach of section 75 and a necessary condition in order that the Tribunal make a remedial order under that section. It is not, however, part of the test for the Tribunal's granting leave or not.

[11] Justice Dawson in National Capital News, supra, described what kind of proof the Tribunal had to have before it in order to have "reason to believe". She concluded that > . . . .the leave application [must be] supported by sufficient credible evidence to give rise to a bona fide belief that the applicant may have been directly and substantially affected in [its] business by a reviewable practice [the refusal to deal here], and that the practice in question could be subject to an order.

[12] What this standard of proof means is that the applicant Barcode must advance sufficient credible evidence supported by an affidavit to satisfy the Tribunal that there is a reasonable possibility that its business has been directly and substantially affected because of Symbol's refusal to deal.

[13] The Tribunal measures the evidence on a scale which is less than the balance of probabilities. It is not sufficient, however, that the evidence shows a mere possibility that Barcode's business has been directly and substantially affected by Symbol's refusal to supply.

[14] Barcode's evidence was to the effect Symbol's refusal to supply, either directly or by preventing Symbol distributors or Symbol resellers from doing so, has now caused a substantial loss of revenues to the point where it, if continued, would force Barcode out of business. On December 19, 2003, on petition from the Royal Bank of Canada, an interim Receiver was appointed of all the property, assets and undertakings of Barcode.

[15] Barcode states Symbol's actions also critically impacted its ability to perform its ongoing maintenance contracts.

[16] Barcode asserts that, as of the filing of its application, 50 percent of its employees have been laid off.

[17] Symbol filed written representations and affidavits to counter Barcode. Symbol outlines the reasons why it is not supplying Barcode with the Symbol products. Specifically it denies that Barcode's business has been substantially affected. It says Barcode has not been precluded from carrying on business by any actions attributable to Symbol.

[18] Symbol states, if Barcode suffered any loss, it is because it breached its contract with Symbol or because of factors which have nothing to do with Symbol such as declining market conditions generally, increased competition from suppliers, exchange rate changes and Barcode's failure to meet usual trade terms with its current suppliers.

[19] On an application for leave, it is not the function of the Tribunal to make credibility findings based on affidavits which have not been cross-examined. I note that the Act requires an applicant to support an application for leave by a sworn affidavit while, for a person opposing leave only written representations are contemplated.

[20] These provisions confirm that the Tribunal's role when granting leave is a screening function simply deciding on the sufficiency of evidence advanced.

[21] There may be situations, however, where it can be demonstrated that an applicant's evidence is simply not credible without engaging the Tribunal in weighing contested statements from opposing parties and the applicant. This is not the case here.

[22] I close on a procedural point. Both Symbol and Barcode have sought leave to file additional material as a result of the limited right of reply granted by the Tribunal to Barcode, as an exception in the interest of justice.

[23] In only exceptional circumstances will the Tribunal grant parties a right of reply in leave applications which are to be dealt with expeditiously.

[24] The Tribunal sees no need to have additional evidence before it as proposed by Barcode or Symbol.

FOR THESE REASONS THE TRIBUNAL ORDERS THAT:

[25] The application for leave is granted.

[26] The Tribunal is prepared to expedite the hearing of the application and invites the parties to communicate with the Deputy Registrar of the Tribunal for this purpose.

DATED at Ottawa, this 15th day of January, 2004.

SIGNED on behalf of the Tribunal by the judicial member.

Reference: Registry Document No.: 0006

IN THE MATTER OF the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c.C34;

AND IN THE MATTER OF an application by Broadview Pharmacy (Broadview) for an order pursuant to section 103.1 of the Competition Act granting leave to bring an application under section 75 of the Act;

B E T W E E N:

Broadview Pharmacy
(applicant)

and

Pfizer Canada Inc.
(respondent)

Decided on the basis of the written record.
Presiding Member: Blais J.
Date of Reasons for Order and Order: September 20, 2004

REASONS FOR ORDER AND ORDER

APPLICATION

[1] The applicant is 1177057 Ontario Inc., carrying out business as Broadview Pharmacy (Broadview), a corporation incorporated under the laws of the Province of Ontario. Broadview has been operating at its Toronto address since 1960. Within a two block radius, there are six other retail pharmacies.

[2] The respondent, Pfizer Canada Inc. (Pfizer) is a corporation incorporated under the laws of Canada. Pfizer carries on business as a pharmaceutical manufacturer across Canada, including Ontario.

[3] The applicant has sold the respondent's products for many years; approximately 20 per cent of its pharmaceutical sales ($300,000 out of a total of $1.5 million in pharmaceutical sales) are from the sale of the respondent's products. A number of important patented medicines are available only from the respondent.

[4] The respondent has ceased supplying the applicant with its pharmaceutical products. In the past, Broadview sold some pharmaceutical products over the internet. It asserts that it has now ceased that practice, and is willing to sign an undertaking to that effect. It is also willing to agree to audits by the respondent to verify that it is not exporting Pfizer products outside of Canada. However, Broadview is not willing to agree to a cross-ownership clause, whereby none of its owners, directors or officers may hold any interest whatsoever in any Canadian pharmacy which may be exporting medical drugs out of Canada. This undertaking, according to the applicant, is "unnecessary, unreasonable and overreaching." The applicant found this clause to be applied in an arbitrary fashion, since other pharmacies held by one group of principals (the example given is Medicine Shoppe pharmacies) do not have to sign such a clause on cross-ownership.

[5] In its response, the respondent submits the following points:

[6] Broadview states that Pfizer products represent 20 per cent of its pharmaceutical sales, but presents no figures to support that statement.

[7] Two of the products attributed to Pfizer have been divested to another company.

[8] Broadview estimates the losses as a percentage of pharmaceutical sales, not as a percentage of its total sales. Yet the test under subsection 103.1(7) of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34 (the "Act"), indicates that the substantial effect must be on the applicant's business, not part of it. The respondent argues that according to the annual survey of pharmacy owners and managers, sales of pharmaceutical products represent 78 per cent of sales for independent pharmacies. Taking into account that factor to calculate the impact of the loss of the respondent's products, as well as the figures according to IMS for 2002 (when there were no internet sales), the loss is around 11 per cent.

[9] As to the undertaking on cross-ownership, the respondent replies that in the case of Medicine Shoppe pharmacies, there is no cross-ownership. Rather, it is a franchise agreement where individual pharmacists are wholly owners of their own Medicine Shoppe franchise, so that cross-ownership considerations do not apply. The respondent considers the cross-ownership clause essential to ensure that further sales by Broadview to internet pharmacies do not occur.

ANALYSIS

[10] Section 103.1 of the Act is a new section which has been the basis of five decisions so far, which can be briefly summarized as follows:

[11] In National Capital News Canada v. Milliken, 2002 Comp. Trib. 41, Justice Dawson found that the refusal to grant the applicant full access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery was entirely within the privilege of Parliament, as vested in the Speaker, and thus could not be subject to an order under section 75 since the Competition Tribunal (the "Tribunal") did not have the jurisdiction, any more than the courts, to examine that particular exercise of the privilege. For this reason, the requirement of subsection 103.1(7) was not met.

[12] In Barcode Systems Inc. v. Symbol Technologies Canada ULC, 2004 Comp. Trib. 1, Justice Lemieux granted leave to Barcode, having found sufficient credible evidence to give the Tribunal reason to believe that the applicant may have been directly and substantially affected. There was evidence that on petition of the Royal Bank of Canada, an interim Receiver had been appointed for all property, assets and undertakings of Barcode. Barcode also asserted in its materials that it had laid off half of its employees.

[13] In Allan Morgan and Sons Ltd. v. La-Z-Boy Canada Ltd., 2004 Comp. Trib. 4 (Justice Lemieux), the applicant, Allan Morgan and Sons Ltd., filed an application under section 103.1 for leave to make an application under section 75, alleging that the respondent La-Z-Boy Canada Ltd., by terminating its right to act as representative of the respondent, had directly and substantially affected its business.

[14] The applicant presented various tables to show sales by category, gross profits and estimates of profit loss due to the respondent's restrictions which occurred before the contract was terminated. Based on these figures, Justice Lemieux found that there was sufficient credible evidence to satisfy himself that the applicant "may have been directly and substantially affected by the actions of La-Z-Boy." He then added: "Morgan's Furniture, at the leave stage, is not required to meet any higher standard of proof threshold."

[15] Madam Justice Simpson has recently rendered two decisions on section 103.1 applications, Robinson Motorcycle Limited. v. Fred Deeley Imports Ltd., 2004 Comp. Trib. 13 and Quinlan's of Huntsville Inc. v. Fred Deeley Imports Ltd., 2004 Comp. Trib. 15. In both cases, leave was granted. Justice Simpson indicated that leave requirements set in subsection 103.1(7) of the Act had been met; she then added that under section 75, an order could issue, because for each condition the Tribunal could conclude that the condition was satisfied.

[16] In this case, I believe the applicant has failed to meet the test of “directly and substantially affected in the applicant’s business.” It is therefore not necessary to consider whether an order could issue under section 75. The applicants must show sufficient credible evidence of a direct and substantial effect. In Barcode, for example, the company was in receivership and fifty per cent of the employees had been laid off. In La-Z-Boy, the applicant had figures showing a 46 per cent decrease in its sales. There was thus a credible basis as to substantial effect.

[17] The Tribunal has never defined specifically what was to be considered “substantial”; however, it stated as follows in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Chrysler Canada Ltd. (1989), 27 C.P.R. (3d) 1:

> The Tribunal agrees that "substantial" should be given its ordinary meaning, which means more than something just beyond de minimis. While terms such as "important" are acceptable synonyms, further clarification can only be provided through evaluations of actual situations.
> The cut-off resulted in a decline of over $200,000 in sales between 1986 and 1988. 1987 was a year of transition during most of which Brunet was able to obtain parts from Chrysler Canada dealers and Chrysler Canada continued to fill orders received by Brunet before October, 1986. The slight rise in 1988 sales of Chrysler U.S.-sourced parts suggests that some substitution may have occurred between Chrysler Canada and Chrysler U.S. sourced parts, perhaps because of the increasing difficulty of obtaining parts in Canada. If such substitution did occur, it was far too limited to alleviate the decline in sales and gross profits from Chrysler auto parts. The decline in profits between 1986 and 1988 from sourcing Chrysler parts in Canada was in excess of $30,000. Losses of the order of magnitude of $200,000 in sales and $30,000 in gross profits constitute a substantial effect for a small business such as Brunet's.

[19] The cross-ownership issue which arises between the parties in this case is not relevant to the subsection 103.1(7) enquiry; it has to do with the usual terms of trade, which would have to be considered under section 75. The only consideration for now is the substantial effect which again, has not been sufficiently established to satisfy the Tribunal and enable it to grant leave.

[20] Unfortunately for the applicants, the evidence presented in support of the application is not sufficient to grant leave for an application under section 75 of the Act.

THEREFORE THE TRIBUNAL ORDERS THAT:

[21] The application for leave is dismissed.

DATED at Ottawa, this 20th day of September 2004.

IN THE MATTER OF the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34;

AND IN THE MATTER OF an application by 1177057 Ontario Inc. c.o.b. as Broadview Pharmacy (Broadview) for an order pursuant to section 103.1 of the Competition Act granting leave to bring an application under section 75 of the Act;

B E T W E E N :

1177057 Ontario Inc. c.o.b. as Broadview Pharmacy
(applicant)

and

Wyeth Canada Inc.
(respondent)

Decided on the basis of the written record.
Presiding Member: Blais J.
Date of Reasons for Order and Order: September 20, 2004

REASONS FOR ORDER AND ORDER

APPLICATION

[1] The applicant is 1177057 Ontario Inc., carrying out business as Broadview Pharmacy (Broadview), a corporation incorporated under the laws of the Province of Ontario. The pharmacy operates in Toronto.

[2] The respondent is Wyeth Canada Inc. (Wyeth), a corporation incorporated under the laws of Canada, which carries on business as a pharmaceutical manufacturer across Canada, including Ontario.

[3] Broadview has been operating at its Toronto address since 1960. Within a two block radius, there are six other retail pharmacies.

[4] Broadview has sold Wyeth products for the past several years. The sale of Wyeth drugs represents a little more than 5 per cent of Broadview's total annual sales. Some of Wyeth's patented medicines include an anti-depressant (Effexor), a number of very popular birth control pills (Tripasil, Alesse, Minovral) and female hormone replacement drugs (Premarin and Premplus).

[5] In a letter dated April 26, 2004, Wyeth informed its Canadian distributors that they were not to sell any Wyeth products to purchasers appearing on a list of "unapproved purchasers." Broadview being on this list, it can no longer obtain pharmaceutical products from Wyeth.

[6] Broadview believes this refusal to deal is linked to the fact that Broadview has in the past supplied some pharmaceutical products through the internet pharmacy business. Broadview has ceased this practice. Despite assurances to this effect given by Broadview, Wyeth continues to refuse to supply or deal with Broadview.

[7] For now, Broadview has managed to obtain some short-term substitute supplies; however, this solution cannot be long-term. Without the supply coming directly from Wyeth, Broadview will not be able to serve its customers, which will have a significant negative impact on its business. Broadview argues that customers who cannot fill all their prescriptions in one location will take their business elsewhere.

[8] Broadview's alleges that its financial viability is threatened. Wyeth occupies a dominant position in the market place with respect to its patented pharmaceutical products. Wyeth's products are widely available in the Toronto area, including from Broadway's neighbouring competitors.

RESPONDENT'S POSITION

[9] Wyeth Canada Inc. (respondent) opposes the application on the grounds that there is no reason to believe the applicant will suffer direct and substantial effects from the alleged conduct of the respondent, and no reason to believe that the conduct could be subject to an order under section 75 of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34 (the "Act").

[10] The applicant had engaged in internet selling of pharmaceutical products. The applicant contends it has stopped doing so, but has given the respondent no assurance that it would abide by the usual terms of trade and refrain from selling products through the internet.

No direct and substantial effect

[11] Given the small percentage which the respondent's pharmaceutical products represent for the applicant, the first branch of the test under subsection 103.1(7), direct and substantial effect, would not be satisfied. As acknowledged in the applicant's affidavit, only 5 per cent of the applicant's sales of pharmaceutical drugs (not total sales) are from the sale of drugs manufactured by the respondent. At present, the applicant is able to obtain the respondent's pharmaceutical drugs from other sources. The applicant provides no figures to support its contention that it will suffer from loss of clientele because customers cannot fill multiple prescriptions.

Test under section 75

[12] The applicant states that there is significant competition among retail pharmacies in the area where it is located. The respondent contends that the test under section 103.1 must include an assessment of whether an order could be granted under section 75. Since all the conditions of section 75 are not met, namely paragraph 75(1)(e) (adverse effect on competition), an order could not be granted, according to the respondent.

ANALYSIS

[13] Section 103.1 of the Act is a new section which has been the basis of five decisions so far, which can be briefly summarized as follows:

[14] In National Capital News Canada v. Milliken, 2002 Comp. Trib. 41, Justice Dawson found that the refusal to grant the applicant full access to the Parliamentary Press Gallery was entirely within the privilege of Parliament, as vested in the Speaker, and thus could not be subject to an order under section 75 since the Competition Tribunal (the "Tribunal") did not have the jurisdiction, any more than the courts, to examine that particular exercise of the privilege. For this reason, the requirement of subsection 103.1(7) was not met.

[15] In Barcode Systems Inc. v. Symbol Technologies Canada ULC, 2004 Comp. Trib. 1, Justice Lemieux granted leave to Barcode, having found sufficient credible evidence to give the Tribunal reason to believe that the applicant may have been directly and substantially affected. There was evidence that on petition of the Royal Bank of Canada, an interim Receiver had been appointed for all property, assets and undertakings of Barcode. Barcode also asserted in its materials that it had laid off half of its employees.

[16] In Allan Morgan and Sons Ltd. v. La-Z-Boy Canada Ltd., 2004 Comp. Trib. 4 (Justice Lemieux), the applicant Allan Morgan and Sons Ltd. filed an application under section 103.1 for leave to make an application under section 75, alleging that the respondent La-Z-Boy Canada Ltd., by terminating its right to act as representative of the respondent, had directly and substantially affected its business.

[17] The applicant presented various tables to show sales by category, gross profits and estimates of profit loss due to the respondent's restrictions which occurred before the contract was terminated. Based on these figures, Justice Lemieux found that there was sufficient credible evidence to satisfy himself that the applicant "may have been directly and substantially affected by the actions of La-Z-Boy." He then added: "Morgan's Furniture, at the leave stage, is not required to meet any higher standard of proof threshold."

[18] Madam Justice Simpson has recently rendered two decisions on section 103.1 applications, Robinson Motorcycle Limited. v. Fred Deeley Imports Ltd., 2004 Comp. Trib. 13 and Quinlan's of Huntsville Inc. v. Fred Deeley Imports Ltd., 2004 Comp. Trib. 15. In both cases, leave was granted. Justice Simpson indicated that leave requirements set in subsection 103.1(7) of the Act had been met; she then added that under section 75, an order could issue, because for each condition the Tribunal could conclude that the condition was satisfied.

[19] In this case, I believe the applicant has failed to meet the test of "directly and substantially affected in the applicant's business." It is therefore not necessary to consider whether an order could issue under section 75. The applicants must show sufficient credible evidence of a direct and substantial effect. In Barcode, for example, the company was in receivership and fifty per cent of the employees had been laid off. In La-Z-Boy, the applicant had figures showing a 46 per cent decrease in its sales. There was thus a credible basis as to substantial effect.

> The Tribunal agrees that "substantial" should be given its ordinary meaning, which means more than something just beyond de minimis. While terms such as "important" are acceptable synonyms, further clarification can only be provided through evaluations of actual situations.
> The cut-off resulted in a decline of over $200,000 in sales between 1986 and 1988. 1987 was a year of transition during most of which Brunet was able to obtain parts from Chrysler Canada dealers and Chrysler Canada continued to fill orders received by Brunet before October, 1986. The slight rise in 1988 sales of Chrysler U.S.-sourced parts suggests that some substitution may have occurred between Chrysler Canada and Chrysler U.S. sourced parts, perhaps because of the increasing difficulty of obtaining parts in Canada. If such substitution did occur, it was far too limited to alleviate the decline in sales and gross profits from Chrysler auto parts. The decline in profits between 1986 and 1988 from sourcing Chrysler parts in Canada was in excess of $30,000. Losses of the order of magnitude of $200,000 in sales and $30,000 in gross profits constitute a substantial effect for a small business such as Brunet's.

[21] In this case, the losses are speculative and undocumented. From the applicant's affidavit, Wyeth products represent 5 per cent of its annual sales of pharmaceutical drugs. The applicant fears losing customers because they will not be able to fill multiple prescriptions including the respondent's products. No figures are provided to show the impact or potential impact of the loss of the respondent's products, and no evidence presented to support the assertion that not filling all the prescriptions for a given patient will mean not filling any. A loss of 5 per cent of pharmaceutical sales, which does not represent the totality of the business of the pharmacy, cannot in good faith be considered a substantial impact.

RÉPERTORIÉ : CANADA (COMMISSAIRE DE LA CONCURRENCE) c. TUYAUTERIES CANADA LTÉE (C.A.F.)

Cour d'appel fédérale, juges Desjardins, Létourneau et Pelletier, J.C.A.—Ottawa, 7 et 9 février et 23 juin 2006.

Concurrence — Appel d'une décision par laquelle le Tribunal de la concurrence a rejeté la demande formée par la commissaire de la concurrence en vue d'obtenir une ordonnance interdisant à l'intimée de se livrer à certaines pratiques — L'intimée offrait un programme de fidélisation de sa clientèle — L'appelante affirmait que ce programme constituait une pratique d'exclusivité (art. 77(2) de la Loi sur la concurrence) ainsi qu'une pratique d'agissements anti-concurrentiels constituant un abus de position dominante (art. 79(1) de la Loi) — Appel accueilli — Pour ce qui concerne l'abus de position dominante, le Tribunal a commis une erreur dans son approche du critère juridique applicable sous le régime de l'art. 79(1)c) — Le Tribunal a effectué son analyse du point de vue étroit et absolu de la question de savoir si le programme avait empêché l'entrée et la concurrence lorsqu'il aurait dû orienter son attention vers la question de savoir si la concurrence se trouvait sensiblement diminuée avec le programme — Le Tribunal a également déclaré à tort que l'art. 79(1)b) (agissements anti-concurrentiels) exigeait un lien de causalité entre la pratique attaquée et une diminution de la concurrence — L'art. 79(1)b) est orienté vers les effets de l'agissement sur les concurrents — Il n'y avait pas de justification commerciale valable — Pour ce qui concerne la pratique d'exclusivité, le Tribunal a adopté la même approche que celle qu'il a appliquée à l'art. 79(1) — Ainsi, les conclusions quant aux erreurs de droit commises dans le contexte de l'art. 79(1) s'appliquaient aussi relativement à l'art. 77(2).

Il s'agissait d'un appel d'une décision par laquelle le Tribunal de la concurrence a rejeté la demande formée par la commissaire de la concurrence (la commissaire) sous le régime des articles 77 et 79 de la Loi sur la concurrence en vue d'obtenir une ordonnance interdisant à l'intimée (Tuyauteries Canada) de se livrer à une pratique comprenant des agissements anti-concurrentiels et constituant un abus de position dominante (article 79), et lui interdisant de continuer à se livrer à la pratique de l'exclusivité (article 77).

The conduct at issue was a loyalty rebate program offered by the respondent (the Stocking Distributor Program or SDP). Under this program, distributors of the respondent's cast iron drain, waste and vent (DWV) products obtained significant rebates and discounts in return for stocking only cast iron products produced by the respondent. The Commissioner argued that the SDP constituted both a practice of exclusive dealing with exclusionary effects and a practice of anti-competitive acts, and was likely to have the effect of substantially lessening competition in the markets for DWV products by impeding the entry and expansion of competitors.

In dismissing the Commissioner's application, the Tribunal found that the requisite elements for the order requested were not met. The SDP did not qualify as an "anti-competitive act" (paragraph 79(1)(b)), the SDP had not substantially lessened or prevented competition (paragraph 79(1)(c)), and finally, while the SDP could be characterized as a practice of exclusive dealing, there was insufficient evidence to establish that it had impeded entry into or expansion of firms in a market, that it was having any other exclusionary effect on the market, or that it had caused or was likely to cause a substantial lessening of competition (subsection 77(2)).

Held, the appeal should be allowed.

On the question of abuse of dominant position, the Tribunal erred in law with respect to the legal test applicable under paragraph 79(1)(c). Pararaph 79(1)(c) permits the Tribunal to make an order prohibiting a practice which it finds "has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market." In order to achieve the inquiry dictated by the statutory language of paragraph 79(1)(c), the Tribunal must compare the level of competitiveness in the presence of the impugned practice with that which would exist in the absence of the practice, and then determine whether the preventing or lessening of competition, if any, is "substantial". This comparison must be done with reference to actual effects in the past and present, as well as likely future effects. One correct approach (but not necessarily the only correct one) is for the Tribunal to ask itself the following question: Would the relevant markets—in the past, present or future—be substantially more competitive but for the impugned practice of anti-competitive acts (the "but for" test)? This legal test reflects the plain meaning of the statutory language of paragraph 79(1)(c) and corresponds to the Tribunal's analysis in its previous decisions with respect to this provision. In the case at bar, the Tribunal's analysis was conducted from the narrow, absolute perspective of whether the SDP prevented entry and whether competition subsisted in Le comportement en litige consistait en l'application par l'intimée d'un programme de fidélisation de sa clientèle (le programme des distributeurs stockistes ou PDS). Dans le cadre de ce programme, les distributeurs des produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte de l'intimée avaient droit à des ristournes et à des abattements substantiels à condition de ne stocker que les produits en fonte fabriqués par l'intimée. La commissaire a affirmé que le PDS constituait à la fois une pratique d'exclusivité aux effets tendant à exclure et une pratique d'agissements anti-concurrentiels, et qu'il aurait vraisemblablement pour effet de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence sur les marchés des produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en faisant obstacle à l'entrée et au développement de la concurrence.

Lorsqu'il a rejeté la demande de la commissaire, le Tribunal a conclu que les conditions qui devaient être remplies pour que soit rendue l'ordonnance demandée ne l'avaient pas été. Le PDS ne remplissait pas les conditions nécessaires pour être qualifié d'« agissements anti-concurrentiels » (alinéa 79(1)b)), le PDS n'avait pas empêché ou diminué sensiblement la concurrence (alinéa 79(1)c)) et, enfin, même si le PDS pouvait être qualifié de pratique d'exclusivité, la preuve produite ne suffisait pas à établir que le PDS eût fait obstacle à l'entrée ou au développement de firmes, ni qu'il eût sur le marché quelque autre effet tendant à exclure, ni que la concurrence eût été ou serait vraisemblablement réduite sensiblement en conséquence de ce programme (paragraphe 77(2)).

Pour ce qui concerne l'abus de position dominante, le Tribunal a commis une erreur de droit relativement au critère juridique applicable sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)c), qui permet au Tribunal de rendre une ordonnance interdisant à une personne de se livrer à une pratique qui « a eu, a ou aura vraisemblablement pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence dans un marché ». Pour mener à bien l'examen que dicte le libellé de l'alinéa 79(1)c), le Tribunal doit comparer le niveau de concurrence sur le marché caractérisé par la présence de la pratique attaquée au niveau qui existerait en l'absence de cette pratique, pour ensuite établir si la concurrence est empêchée ou diminuée « sensiblement », en supposant qu'elle le soit tant soit peu. Cette comparaison doit se faire en tenant compte des effets réels dans le passé et dans le présent, ainsi que des effets vraisemblables dans l'avenir. Selon une approche correcte, mais pas nécessairement la seule approche correcte, le Tribunal doit se poser la question suivante : est-ce que les marchés pertinents auraient été, ou seraient actuellement ou dans l'avenir, sensiblement plus concurrentiels en l'absence de la pratique attaquée d'agissements anti-concurrentiels (critère de l'« absence hypothétique »)? Ce critère juridique correspond à la fois au sens manifeste du libellé de l'alinéa 79(1)c) et à l'analyse effectuée par le Tribunal dans ses its presence, when it should have turned its mind to the question of whether, in each of the relevant markets, competitiveness was substantially lessened in the presence of the SDP, as compared to the likely state of competition in the absence of this practice.

The second issue with respect to the question of abuse of dominant position was whether the Tribunal erred in concluding that the SDP did not constitute an "anti-competitive act" as required by paragraph 79(1)(b) before a prohibition order may issue. An anti-competitive act is identified by reference to its purpose. This requisite purpose is an intended, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor. As such, the paragraph 79(1)(b) inquiry is focused upon the intended effects of the act on a competitor. Relevant factors to be considered and weighed to determine the purpose of the impugned conduct include the reasonably foreseeable or expected objective effects of the act, any business justification, and any evidence of subjective intent. The Tribunal misdirected itself as to the applicable legal test and considered irrelevant factors in making its paragraph 79(1)(b) determination. The Tribunal's erroneous interpretation played a significant role in its analysis of the SDP. As such, it committed a reversible error of law. Particularly, it erred in requiring a causal link between the impugned act and a decrease in competition. Paragraph 79(1)(b) simply concerns whether the act displays the requisite intended effect on competitors; it is not directly concerned with the state of competition in the market or the general causes thereof. The Tribunal thus conflated the legal test for paragraph 79(1)(c) (which concerns the broader state of competition) with that applicable for paragraph 79(1)(b) (which focuses on the impugned act's effects on competitors). The Tribunal was also wrong to suggest that "detriment to the consumer" is an independently relevant consideration for the purposes of that paragraph. Finally, there was no valid business justification in the case at bar. Such a justification is properly relevant only in so far as it is pertinent and probative in relation to the determination required by paragraph 79(1)(b), i.e. whether the purpose for which the act was performed was a predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor. It is properly employed to counterbalance or neutralize other evidence of an anti-competitive purpose, prior to making a determination under paragraph 79(1)(b), and must provide a credible efficiency or pro-competitive explanation, unrelated to an anti-competitive purpose, for why the dominant firm engaged in the conduct alleged to be anti-competitive. Here the justification was that the SDP makes possible the high-volume sales necessary to enable the respondent to maintain a full line of products. The Tribunal's reasons did not establish the décisions antérieures pour l'application de cet alinéa. En l'espèce, le Tribunal a effectué son analyse du point de vue étroit et absolu de la question de savoir si le PDS avait empêché l'entrée et si la concurrence subsistait en sa présence lorsqu'il aurait dû orienter son attention vers le point de savoir si, sur chacun des marchés pertinents, la concurrence se trouvait sensiblement diminuée avec le PDS, en comparaison de l'état vraisemblable de la concurrence en l'absence de cette pratique.

La deuxième question en litige relative à l'abus de position dominante était celle de savoir si le Tribunal avait formulé une conclusion erronée lorsqu'il a déclaré que le PDS ne constituait pas un « agissement anti-concurrentiel » comme l'exige l'alinéa 79(1)b) avant de rendre une ordonnance d'interdiction. L'agissement anti-concurrentiel est défini par rapport à un but. Le but qu'il faut établir est un effet négatif sur un concurrent, qui doit être intentionnel, ou viser une exclusion ou une mise au pas. L'analyse à effectuer dans le cadre de l'alinéa 79(1)b) est donc orientée vers les effets intentionnels de l'agissement sur un concurrent. Parmi les facteurs pertinents à examiner et à apprécier pour établir le but du comportement attaqué, il faut mentionner les effets objectifs prévus ou raisonnablement prévisibles du comportement en question, la justification commerciale s'il y en a une, et tous éléments de preuve dont on dispose tendant à établir l'intention subjective. Le Tribunal s'est mépris sur le critère juridique applicable et a pris en considération des facteurs non pertinents pour rendre sa décision sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)b). L'interprétation erronée par le Tribunal a joué un rôle important dans son analyse du PDS. Il a donc commis une erreur de droit donnant lieu à révision. Plus particulièrement, il a commis une erreur en exigeant la preuve d'un lien de causalité entre la pratique attaquée et une diminution de la concurrence. L'alinéa 79(1)b) pose purement et simplement la question de savoir si le comportement considéré a sur les concurrents l'effet intentionnel de la nature requise; il n'a pas de rapport direct avec l'état de la concurrence sur le marché ou ses causes générales. Le Tribunal a donc fusionné le critère juridique applicable à l'alinéa 79(1)c) (qui porte sur l'état général de la concurrence) et le critère juridique applicable à l'alinéa 79(1)b) (qui vise les effets de la pratique attaquée sur les concurrents). Le Tribunal a également commis une erreur lorsqu'il a déclaré que le « préjudice aux consommateurs » était un facteur indépendant pertinent à prendre en considération pour l'application de cet alinéa. Enfin, il n'y avait pas de justification commerciale valable en l'espèce. Une telle justification ne peut être prise en considération que dans la mesure où elle est pertinente et probante par rapport à la décision qu'exige l'alinéa 79(1)b), soit celle du point de savoir si le comportement avait pour but un effet négatif sur un concurrent, effet qui doit être abusif, ou viser une exclusion ou une mise au pas. La justification commerciale est appliquée à bon escient pour contrebalancer ou neutraliser les éléments de preuve tendant à établir requisite efficiency-related link between the SDP and the respondent, and hence did not supply a legitimate explanation for the latter's choice to engage in the impugned conduct, unrelated to an anti-competitive purpose. Self-interest was the only justification for the SDP. The Tribunal thus erred in concluding that the respondent had established a valid business justification for the SDP.

On the question of exclusive dealing (Act, subsection 77(2)), the first issue was whether the Tribunal erred in its determination with respect to whether the SDP had the result that competition was or was likely to be lessened substantially. Because of the parallel structure and logic between the requisite statutory elements for exclusive dealing under subsection 77(2) and abuse of dominant position under subsection 79(1), the parties simply referred the Court to their arguments in the context of subsection 79(1). Although the two subsections contain some differences in wording, it was not necessary to consider these differences in the present instance. To the extent that the Tribunal erred in law in the context of paragraph 79(1)(c) in its interpretation of the test for substantial lessening of competition, the same errors of law applied with respect to subsection 77(2). The same could be said with respect to whether the Tribunal erred in its conclusion that the SDP was not likely to impede entry or expansion of a firm or a product in a market or have any other exclusionary effect in a market. The Tribunal's analysis of the evidence concerning barriers to entry and the effects of the SDP was conducted from the narrow perspective of prevention, and not the broader perspective implied by the word "impede", and as such constituted a reversible error.

STATUTES AND REGULATIONS JUDICIALLY CONSIDERED

Competition Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-34, ss. 1 (as am. by R.S.C., 1985 (2nd Supp.), c. 19, s. 19), 1.1 (as enacted l'existence d'un but anti-concurrentiel avant de prendre une décision sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)b), et elle doit être une explication crédible, fondée sur l'efficience ou de nature pro-concurrentielle, et sans lien avec un but anti-concurrentiel, des motifs qu'avait l'entreprise dominante de se livrer au comportement attaqué comme étant anti-concurrentiel. En l'espèce, l'intimée avançait comme justification commerciale le fait que le PDS rendait possible les ventes en grandes quantités dont elle avait besoin pour maintenir une ligne complète de produits. L'exposé des motifs du Tribunal n'établissait pas l'existence du lien nécessaire, fondé sur l'efficience, entre le PDS et l'intimée, et ne donnait donc pas une explication légitime, non liée à un but anti-concurrentiel, de la décision de l'intimée de se livrer au comportement attaqué. L'intérêt propre restait la seule justification du PDS. Le Tribunal a donc commis une erreur en concluant que l'intimée avait établi une justification commerciale valable du PDS.

Pour ce qui est de la pratique de l'exclusivité (paragraphe 77(2) de la Loi), la première question en litige était celle de savoir si le Tribunal avait formulé une conclusion erronée touchant le point de savoir si le PDS avait eu pour effet ou risquait vraisemblablement de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence. Compte tenu de l'existence d'un parallélisme structurel et logique entre, d'une part, les conditions prévues au paragraphe 77(2) concernant l'exclusivité, et, d'autre part, celles prévues au paragraphe 79(1) touchant l'abus de position dominante, les parties se sont plutôt contentées de renvoyer la Cour aux arguments qu'elles avaient avancés relativement à cet élément dans le contexte du paragraphe 79(1). Même si le libellé des deux paragraphes diffère quelque peu, la Cour n'avait pas à se demander si elle devait prendre ces différences en considération en l'espèce. Dans la mesure où le Tribunal avait commis des erreurs de droit dans son interprétation du critère de la diminution sensible de la concurrence dans le contexte de l'alinéa 79(1)c), il pouvait être dit avoir commis les mêmes erreurs de droit relativement au paragraphe 77(2). Ces considérations s'appliquaient à la question de savoir si le Tribunal avait formulé une conclusion erronée touchant le point de savoir si le PDS aurait vraisemblablement, sur un marché, soit pour effet de faire obstacle à l'entrée ou au développement d'une firme, ou encore au lancement ou à l'expansion des ventes d'un produit, soit quelque autre effet tendant à exclure. Le Tribunal a analysé la preuve concernant les obstacles à l'entrée et les effets du PDS du point de vue étroit qu'exprime le terme « empêcher » et non du point de vue plus large qu'appelle l'expression « faire obstacle » et l'adoption de ce point de vue constituait une erreur susceptible de révision.

[1] DESJARDINS J.A.: This is an appeal from a decision of the Competition Tribunal (Tribunal), dated February 3, 2005, dismissing the application by the Commissioner of Competition (Commissioner or appellant) under sections 77 [as am. by R.S.C., 1985 (2nd Supp.), c. 19, s. 45; S.C. 1999, c. 2, ss. 23, 37(y); c. 31, s. 52(F); 2002, c. 16, ss. 11.2, 11.3] and 79 [as enacted by R.S.C., 1985 (2nd Supp.), c. 19, s. 45; S.C. 1990, c. 37, s. 31; 1999, c. 2, s. 37(z); 2002, c. 16, s.

[1] LA JUGE DESJARDINS, J.C.A. : Il s'agit d'un appel de la décision en date du 3 février 2005, publiée sous la référence CT-2002-006, par laquelle le Tribunal de la concurrence (le Tribunal) a rejeté la demande formée par la commissaire de la concurrence (la commissaire ou l'appelante) sous le régime des articles 77 [mod. par L.R.C. (1985) (2e suppl.), ch. 19, art. 45; L.C. 1999, ch. 2, art. 23, 37*y*); ch. 31, art. 52(F); 2002, ch. 16, art. 11.2, 11.3] et 79 [édicté par L.R.C. (1985) (2e suppl.), 11.4] of the Competition Act [R.S.C., 1985, c. C-34, s. 1 (as am. by R.S.C., 1985 (2nd supp.) c. 19, s. 19)] (reported as (2005), 40 C.P.R. (4th) 453) (Comp. Trib.). The Commissioner sought an order against Canada Pipe Company Ltd. (Canada Pipe or respondent), to prohibit the respondent from engaging in the practice of several purported anti-competitive acts leading to an abuse of dominant position under section 79, as well as to prohibit the respondent from continuing to engage in the practice of exclusive dealing under section 77. This case also involves a cross-appeal by Canada Pipe, which is dealt with in separate reasons [[2007] 2 F.C.R. 57 (F.C.A.)].

[2] This is the first time this Court has the opportunity to consider the tests for exclusive dealing and abuse of dominant position established respectively by sections 77 and 79 of the Act. Both of these provisions, generally speaking, authorize the Tribunal to make orders prohibiting a dominant firm from engaging in conduct that has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of substantially lessening competition. While the Act has been in force since 1986, and the Tribunal has elaborated its perspective on the requirements of sections 77 and 79 in several cases, these provisions have not to date been interpreted by any Canadian court.

[4] According to the Commissioner, Canada Pipe is a dominant firm with respect to the product markets relevant in this case. Furthermore, the Commissioner ch. 19, art. 45; L.C. 1990, ch. 37, art. 31; 1999, ch. 2, art. 37*z*); 2002, ch. 16, art. 11.4] de la Loi sur la concurrence [L.R.C. (1985), ch. C-34, art. 1 (mod. par L.R.C. (1985) (2e suppl.), ch. 19, art. 19)]. La commissaire visait par cette demande à obtenir une ordonnance interdisant à Tuyauteries Canada Ltée (Tuyauteries Canada ou l'intimée) de se livrer à une pratique comprenant plusieurs agissements anti-concurrentiels supposés et constituant un abus de position dominante sous le régime de l'article 79, et lui interdisant en outre de continuer à se livrer à la pratique de l'exclusivité sous le régime de l'article 77. La présente affaire a aussi donné lieu à un appel incident, qui fait l'objet d'un exposé de motifs distinct [[2007] 2 R.C.F. 57 (C.A.F.)].

[4] Selon la commissaire, Tuyauteries Canada occupe une position dominante sur les marchés de produit pertinents en l'espèce. La commissaire affirme en outre asserts, the SDP constitutes both a practice of exclusive dealing with exclusionary effects and a practice of anti-competitive acts, and it is likely to have the effect of substantially lessening competition in the markets for DWV products by impeding the entry and expansion of competitors. The respondent contends, by contrast, that it exercises no market power in relation to the relevant product markets, when the latter are properly defined. Moreover, according to the respondent, the SDP is neither exclusionary nor anti-competitive, but rather is a voluntary, non-exclusive, incentive-based program which encourages competition between DWV distributors, is compatible with competition on the merits between suppliers and is supported by valid business justifications.

[5] The Tribunal dismissed the Commissioner's application, based upon the following findings. With respect to the alleged abuse of dominant position under section 79, the Tribunal held that: (i) there are three relevant product markets, and six geographic markets, and the respondent substantially controls all these markets; (ii) the SDP is a practice, but does not qualify as an "anti-competitive act"; and (iii) the Commissioner had not demonstrated that the SDP had substantially lessened or prevented competition. With respect to the allegation of exclusive dealing contrary to section 77, the Tribunal found that: (i) the SDP can be characterized as a practice of exclusive dealing; (ii) the respondent is a major supplier of the products in the relevant markets; and (iii) there was insufficient evidence to establish that the SDP had impeded entry or expansion of firms, or that it is having any other exclusionary effect on the market, or that it has caused or is likely to cause a substantial lessening of competition.

[7] Broadly stated, the appeal challenges two aspects of the Tribunal's conclusions: first, the finding with respect to substantial lessening of competition for the purposes of both sections 77 and 79, and second, the que le PDS constitue à la fois une pratique d'exclusivité aux effets tendant à exclure et une pratique d'agissements anti-concurrentiels, et qu'il aura vraisemblablement pour effet de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence sur les marchés des produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en faisant obstacle à l'entrée et au développement de concurrents. L'intimée soutient quant à elle qu'elle n'exerce pas de puissance commerciale sur les marchés de produit pertinents, s'ils sont définis comme ils doivent l'être. En outre, selon l'intimée, le PDS n'a pas d'effets tendant à exclure ni n'est anti-concurrentiel : il s'agit d'un programme volontaire, incitatif et non exclusif, qui favorise la concurrence entre les distributeurs de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation, est compatible avec la concurrence fondée sur l'efficacité entre les fournisseurs et s'appuie sur des justifications commerciales valables.

[5] Le Tribunal a rejeté la demande de la commissaire sur le fondement des conclusions suivantes. Pour ce qui concerne l'abus supposé de position dominante sous le régime de l'article 79, le Tribunal a conclu : i) qu'il y a trois marchés de produit pertinents et six marchés géographiques, et que l'intimée contrôle sensiblement tous ces marchés; ii) que le PDS est bien une pratique, mais ne remplit pas les conditions nécessaires pour être qualifié d'« agissements anti-concurrentiels »; et iii) que la commissaire n'avait pas démontré que le PDS eût empêché ou diminué sensiblement la concurrence. En ce qui a trait à l'allégation d'exclusivité formulée sous le régime de l'article 77, le Tribunal a conclu : i) que le PDS peut être qualifié de pratique d'exclusivité; ii) que l'intimée est un fournisseur important des produits en cause sur les marchés pertinents; et iii) que la preuve produite ne suffisait pas à établir que le PDS eût fait obstacle à l'entrée ou au développement de firmes, ni qu'il eût sur le marché quelque autre effet tendant à exclure, ni que la concurrence eût été ou serait vraisemblablement réduite sensiblement en conséquence de ce programme.

[7] On peut dire de façon générale que le présent appel met en cause deux aspects des conclusions du Tribunal : premièrement, la conclusion relative à la diminution sensible de la concurrence pour l'application finding concerning exclusionary effects under section 77 or anti-competitive acts under section 79. The cross-appeal by Canada Pipe, which concerns the Tribunal's conclusions as to the definition of the relevant product markets and the issue of market power for the purpose of paragraph 79(1)(a), is discussed in separate reasons, as stated earlier.

[8] In order to facilitate the reading of these reasons, I include the following table of contents:

de l'article 77 aussi bien que de l'article 79; et deuxièmement, la conclusion concernant les effets tendant à exclure visés à l'article 77 ou les agissements anti-concurrentiels visés à l'article 79. Comme nous le disions plus haut, l'appel incident interjeté par Tuyauteries Canada, qui concerne les conclusions formulées par le Tribunal sur la définition des marchés de produit pertinents et la question de la puissance commerciale pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)a), fait l'objet d'un exposé de motifs distinct.

[8] Voici une table des matières destinée à faciliter la lecture du présent exposé.

I. FACTS

[9] The respondent is a Canadian company based in Hamilton, Ontario, which produces and sells through its Bibby Ste-Croix division (Bibby) cast iron drain, waste and vent products. DWV products are used in a wide variety of structures to carry waste and drain water, and to vent plumbing systems. There are three components to a cast iron DWV system: pipe, fittings and mechanical joint (MJ) couplings (collectively "DWV products").

[10] There are currently two domestic manufacturers of cast iron DWV products: Bibby and Vandem Industries (Vandem). Bibby manufactures cast iron DWV pipe and fittings, and imports MJ couplings from its sister companies in the United States. Vandem, which was founded in 1997 (according to the Tribunal; the respondent claims it was 1999, but little turns on this fact) by two former officers of Bibby, manufactures

I. LES FAITS

[9] L'intimée est une entreprise canadienne ayant son siège à Hamilton (Ontario), qui, par l'intermédiaire de sa division Bibby Ste-Croix (Bibby), fabrique et vend des produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte. Les produits d'évacuation et de ventilation sont utilisés dans toutes sortes de bâtiments pour le transport des eaux usées et la ventilation des canalisations. Un système d'évacuation et de ventilation comprend trois éléments : les tuyaux, les raccords et les joints mécaniques (collectivement désignés ci-après « produits d'évacuation et de ventilation »).

[10] Il y a actuellement au Canada deux fabricants de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte : Bibby et Vandem Industries (Vandem). Bibby fabrique des tuyaux et des raccords en fonte, et importe les joints mécaniques de ses sociétés sœurs aux États-Unis. Vandem, fondée en 1997 (selon le Tribunal) par deux anciens cadres de Bibby, fabrique des tuyaux d'évacuation et de ventilation et importe les raccords et DWV pipe and imports fittings and couplings. The only Canadian manufacturer of MJ couplings is Rollee Industrial Products (1987) Ltd., but it is not a major player. In addition, there are a limited number of other Canadian importers of cast iron DWV products, who generally import from the United States and the Far East (mainly China and India). Imports of cast iron DWV products for all of Canada, including imports by Bibby and Vandem, represented 5% of total sales in 2002. The respondent is the only company in Canada that manufactures and sells a full range of cast iron DWV products.

[11] Distributors buy DWV products from the suppliers (either manufacturers or importers), and in turn sell to the building, mechanical or plumbing contractors involved in construction or renovation projects. Distributors generally carry DWV pipe and fittings made of various materials; cast iron DWV products usually represent only a small proportion of their inventory and sales. In Canada, there are three major distributors, all with national presence: Wolseley Canada Inc., EMCO Ltd, and Crane Supply. There are also small distributors, some of whom are members of buying groups in order to improve their bargaining power and obtain volume discount advantages.

[12] Contractors buy DWV products from distributors for construction projects upon which they bid. The bidding process is highly competitive, and contractors will try to obtain the best price possible in order to make their bids attractive. Although contractors may have some leeway in deciding what material to use in construction they will generally buy the type of DWV product that has been specified by the architect or mechanical engineer.

[13] The SDP was introduced by Bibby in January 1998. In contrast to the volume-based rebate programs typical in the industry, the SDP is premised on les joints (l'intimée soutient que Vandem n'a été fondée qu'en 1999, mais la question importe peu en l'espèce). Le seul fabricant canadien de joints mécaniques est Rollee Industrial Products (1987) Ltd., mais il n'est pas un acteur important du marché. Il existe en outre un nombre restreint d'importateurs de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte, qui importent en général des États-Unis et d'Asie (principalement de Chine et d'Inde). Pour l'ensemble du Canada, les importations, y compris celles de Bibby et de Vandem, représentaient en 2002 une proportion de 5 % des ventes totales de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte. L'intimée est la seule entreprise au Canada à fabriquer et à vendre une ligne complète de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte.

[13] Bibby a lancé le PDS en janvier 1998. Contrairement aux programmes de remises sur volume qui sont typiques dans ce secteur, le PDS est fondé sur exclusivity, not the volume of purchases. Under the SDP, distributors of Bibby's DWV products obtain quarterly and yearly rebates as well as significant point-of-purchase discounts, in return for stocking only Bibby-supplied cast-iron DWV products. These distributors are free to stock other companies' DWV products which are not made of cast iron, but must purchase all three cast iron DWV products exclusively from the respondent. There are no signed contracts for the SDP: distributors can join at any time, and receive the quarterly and yearly rebates for each completed calendar quarter or year. Distributors who choose not to participate in the SDP are permitted to purchase products from Bibby, albeit at higher prices. There are no restrictions on the resale of cast iron DWV products purchased by distributors who participate in the SDP.

[14] The SDP discounts consist of point-of-sale discounts (for example, 55% of list price for stocking distributors, compared to 94% for non-stocking distributors), as well as quarterly and annual rebates (in 2002, the quarterly rebates were 7, 15 and 9 percent on pipe, fittings and MJ couplings respectively, and the annual rebate was 4 percent for all products). The point-of-sale discount and the rebates vary from one region to another. Any distributor can participate in the SDP, so long as a threshold minimum purchase is made; once this threshold is met, the rebates and discounts are the same for the given region, regardless of the size of the distributor's purchase. As a result, the SDP allows small- and medium-sized distributors to access the same prices as large distributors. The discount is applied at the time of purchase, so long as the distributor has committed to participating in the program, and is not reimbursable even if the distributor leaves the program. Except for losing the rebates, there are therefore no penalties attached to opting out of the SDP.

II. LEGISLATIVE FRAMEWORK

[15] Three legislative provisions govern the issues to be decided in this appeal, namely sections 77, 78 [as l'exclusivité et non sur le volume des achats. Les distributeurs des produits d'évacuation et de ventilation de Bibby qui adhèrent au PDS ont droit à des ristournes trimestrielles et annuelles, ainsi qu'à de substantiels abattements à l'achat, à condition de stocker seulement les produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte fournis par Bibby. Ces distributeurs restent libres de stocker les produits d'évacuation et de ventilation d'autres entreprises qui ne sont pas faits en fonte, mais ils doivent acheter exclusivement à l'intimée l'ensemble des trois produits en fonte. Le PDS ne prévoit pas la signature de contrats : les distributeurs peuvent y adhérer n'importe quand et ils touchent les ristournes trimestrielles et annuelles pour chaque trimestre et chaque année calendaires de participation effective. Les distributeurs qui ne souhaitent pas participer au PDS peuvent néanmoins acheter des produits à Bibby, mais à des prix plus élevés. La revente des produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte achetés par les distributeurs qui participent au PDS n'est soumise à aucune restriction.

[14] Les avantages du PDS consistent en abattements à l'achat (par exemple, les distributeurs stockistes ne paient que 55 % du prix de catalogue, contre 94 % pour les distributeurs non-stockistes), ainsi qu'en ristournes trimestrielles et annuelles (en 2002, les ristournes trimestrielles étaient de 7, 15 et 9 % respectivement pour les tuyaux, les raccords et les joints mécaniques, et tous les produits faisaient l'objet d'une ristourne annuelle de 4 %). Les abattements à l'achat et les ristournes varient d'une région à l'autre. Tout distributeur peut participer au PDS, à condition d'acheter le minimum requis; une fois ce seuil atteint, les abattements et les ristournes sont les mêmes pour l'ensemble de la région, quelles que soient les quantités que les distributeurs achètent. Il s'ensuit que le PDS permet aux petits et aux moyens distributeurs de bénéficier des mêmes prix que les grands. L'abattement est inscrit au moment de l'achat, à la seule condition que le distributeur se soit engagé à participer au PDS, et il n'est pas remboursable même si le distributeur se retire du programme. Mis à part la perte des abattements, l'abandon du PDS n'entraîne donc pas de pénalités.

II. LE CADRE LÉGISLATIF

enacted by R.S.C., 1985 (2nd Supp.), c. 19, s. 45; S.C. 2000, c. 15, s. 13] and 79 of the Act. These sections set out the various elements that must be proven by the Commissioner to establish exclusive dealing and abuse of dominant position, and provide some relevant statutory definitions.

[16] With respect to an alleged abuse of dominant position, the requisite elements for an order are described in subsection 79(1):

79. (1) Where, on application by the Commissioner, the Tribunal finds that

(a) one or more persons substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business,

(b) that person or those persons have engaged in or are engaging in a practice of anti-competitive acts, and

(c) the practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market,

the Tribunal may make an order prohibiting all or any of those persons from engaging in that practice.

[17] Subsection 79(4) further specifies that possible superior competitive performance must be considered in making the requisite determination under subsection 79(1) concerning competition:

79. . . .

(4) In determining, for the purposes of subsection (1), whether a practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market, the Tribunal shall consider whether the practice is a result of superior competitive performance.

[18] The term "anti-competitive act", which is a requisite element pursuant to paragraph 79(1)(b), is not defined in the Act. However, section 78 provides, under the heading "Definition", a non-exhaustive illustrative list of 11 anti-competitive acts:

[16] Pour ce qui concerne l'abus supposé de position dominante, les conditions qui doivent être remplies pour que soit rendue une ordonnance d'interdiction sont énumérées au paragraphe 79(1) :

79. (1) Lorsque, à la suite d'une demande du commissaire, il conclut à l'existence de la situation suivante :

a) une ou plusieurs personnes contrôlent sensiblement ou complètement une catégorie ou espèce d'entreprises à la grandeur du Canada ou d'une de ses régions;

b) cette personne ou ces personnes se livrent ou se sont livrées à une pratique d'agissements anti-concurrentiels;

c) la pratique a, a eu ou aura vraisemblablement pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence dans un marché, le Tribunal peut rendre une ordonnance interdisant à ces personnes ou à l'une ou l'autre d'entre elles de se livrer à une telle pratique.

[18] La Loi ne définit pas l'expression « agissement anti-concurrentiel », qui constitue une condition préalable à l'ordonnance selon l'alinéa 79(1)b). Cependant, l'article 78 donne à titre indicatif, sous le titre « Définition », une liste de 11 exemples d'agissements anti-concurrentiels :

78. (1) For the purposes of section 79, "anti-competitive act", without restricting the generality of the term, includes any of the following acts:

(a) squeezing, by a vertically integrated supplier, of the margin available to an unintegrated customer who competes with the supplier, for the purpose of impeding or preventing the customer's entry into, or expansion in, a market;

(b) acquisition by a supplier of a customer who would otherwise be available to a competitor of the supplier, or acquisition by a customer of a supplier who would otherwise be available to a competitor of the customer, for the purpose of impeding or preventing the competitor's entry into, or eliminating the competitor from, a market;

(c) freight equalization on the plant of a competitor for the purpose of impeding or preventing the competitor's entry into, or eliminating the competitor from, a market;

(d) use of fighting brands introduced selectively on a temporary basis to discipline or eliminate a competitor;

(e) pre-emption of scarce facilities or resources required by a competitor for the operation of a business, with the object of withholding the facilities or resources from a market;

(f) buying up of products to prevent the erosion of existing price levels;

(g) adoption of product specifications that are incompatible with products produced by any other person and are designed to prevent his entry into, or to eliminate him from, a market;

(h) requiring or inducing a supplier to sell only or primarily to certain customers, or to refrain from selling to a competitor, with the object of preventing a competitor's entry into, or expansion in, a market;

(i) selling articles at a price lower than the acquisition cost for the purpose of disciplining or eliminating a competitor;

(j) acts or conduct of a person operating a domestic service, as defined in subsection 55(1) of the Canada Transportation Act, that are specified under paragraph (2)(a); and

a) la compression, par un fournisseur intégré verticalement, de la marge bénéficiaire accessible à un client non intégré qui est en concurrence avec ce fournisseur, dans les cas où cette compression a pour but d'empêcher l'entrée ou la participation accrue du client dans un marché ou encore de faire obstacle à cette entrée ou à cette participation accrue;

b) l'acquisition par un fournisseur d'un client qui serait par ailleurs accessible à un concurrent du fournisseur, ou l'acquisition par un client d'un fournisseur qui serait par ailleurs accessible à un concurrent du client, dans le but d'empêcher ce concurrent d'entrer dans un marché, dans le but de faire obstacle à cette entrée ou encore dans le but de l'éliminer d'un marché;

c) la péréquation du fret en utilisant comme base l'établissement d'un concurrent dans le but d'empêcher son entrée dans un marché ou d'y faire obstacle ou encore de l'éliminer d'un marché;

d) l'utilisation sélective et temporaire de marques de combat destinées à mettre au pas ou à éliminer un concurrent;

e) la préemption d'installations ou de ressources rares nécessaires à un concurrent pour l'exploitation d'une entreprise, dans le but de retenir ces installations ou ces ressources hors d'un marché;

f) l'achat de produits dans le but d'empêcher l'érosion des structures de prix existantes;

g) l'adoption, pour des produits, de normes incompatibles avec les produits fabriqués par une autre personne et destinées à empêcher l'entrée de cette dernière dans un marché ou à l'éliminer d'un marché;

h) le fait d'inciter un fournisseur à ne vendre uniquement ou principalement qu'à certains clients, ou à ne pas vendre à un concurrent ou encore le fait d'exiger l'une ou l'autre de ces attitudes de la part de ce fournisseur, afin d'empêcher l'entrée ou la participation accrue d'un concurrent dans un marché;

i) le fait de vendre des articles à un prix inférieur au coût d'acquisition de ces articles dans le but de discipliner ou d'éliminer un concurrent;

j) à l'égard des exploitants d'un service intérieur, au sens du paragraphe 55(1) de la Loi sur les transports au Canada, les agissements précisés à l'alinéa (2)a);

(k) the denial by a person operating a domestic service, as defined in subsection 55(1) of the Canada Transportation Act, of access on reasonable commercial terms to facilities or services that are essential to the operation in a market of an air service, as defined in that subsection, or refusal by such a person to supply such facilities or services on such terms.

77. (1) For the purposes of this section,

"exclusive dealing" means

(a) any practice whereby a supplier of a product, as a condition of supplying the product to a customer, requires that customer to

(i) deal only or primarily in products supplied by or designated by the supplier or the supplier's nominee, or

(ii) refrain from dealing in a specified class or kind of product except as supplied by the supplier or the nominee, and

(b) any practice whereby a supplier of a product induces a customer to meet a condition set out in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii) by offering to supply the product to the customer on more favourable terms or conditions if the customer agrees to meet the condition set out in either of those subparagraphs;

(2) Where, on application by the Commissioner or a person granted leave under section 103.1, the Tribunal finds that exclusive dealing or tied selling, because it is engaged in by a major supplier of a product in a market or because it is widespread in a market, is likely to

(a) impede entry into or expansion of a firm in a market,

(b) impede introduction of a product into or expansion of sales of a product in a market, or

k) le fait pour l'exploitant d'un service intérieur, au sens du paragraphe 55(1) de la Loi sur les transports au Canada, de ne pas donner accès, à des conditions raisonnables dans l'industrie, à des installations ou services essentiels à l'exploitation dans un marché d'un service aérien, au sens de ce paragraphe, ou de refuser de fournir ces installations ou services à de telles conditions.

77. (1) Les définitions qui suivent s'appliquent au présent article.

a) Toute pratique par laquelle le fournisseur d'un produit exige d'un client, comme condition à ce qu'il lui fournisse ce produit, que ce client :

(i) soit fasse, seulement ou à titre principal, le commerce de produits fournis ou indiqués par le fournisseur ou la personne qu'il désigne,

(ii) soit s'abstienne de faire le commerce d'une catégorie ou sorte spécifiée de produits, sauf ceux qui sont fournis par le fournisseur ou la personne qu'il désigne;

b) toute pratique par laquelle le fournisseur d'un produit incite un client à se conformer à une condition énoncée au sous-alinéa a)(i) ou (ii) en offrant de lui fournir le produit selon des modalités et conditions plus favorables s'il convient de se conformer à une condition énoncée à l'un ou l'autre de ces sous-alinéas.

(2) Lorsque le Tribunal, à la suite d'une demande du commissaire ou d'une personne autorisée en vertu de l'article 103.1, conclut que l'exclusivité ou les ventes liées, parce que pratiquées par un fournisseur important d'un produit sur un marché ou très répandues sur un marché, auront vraisemblablement :

a) soit pour effet de faire obstacle à l'entrée ou au développement d'une firme sur un marché;

b) soit pour effet de faire obstacle au lancement d'un produit sur un marché ou à l'expansion des ventes d'un produit sur un marché;

(c) have any other exclusionary effect in a market,

with the result that competition is or is likely to be lessened substantially, the Tribunal may make an order directed to all or any of the suppliers against whom an order is sought prohibiting them from continuing to engage in that exclusive dealing or tied selling and containing any other requirement that, in its opinion, is necessary to overcome the effects thereof in the market or to restore or stimulate competition in the market.

[21] A parallel structure and logic is readily apparent between the requisite elements for exclusive dealing under subsection 77(2) and abuse of dominant position under subsection79(1). First, both provisions require an initial determination that the firm in question occupies a position of dominance: subsection 77(2) refers to a "major supplier of a product in a market", while paragraph 79(1)(a) requires that "one or more persons substantially or completely control . . . a class or species of business". Second, both provisions call for the identification of a particular type of conduct, namely a practice of exclusive dealing with an exclusionary effect in the case of subsection 77(2), and a practice of anti-competitive acts in the case of subsection 79(1). Third, both provisions require a finding of actual or likely substantial lessening of competition.

[22] While I would not conclude that the legal tests applicable under these two provisions would necessarily produce identical results in all cases, this parallel structure suggests that an overlapping analysis is to be expected.

III. ISSUES

[23] This appeal raises the following four issues:

(A) For the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c), did the Tribunal err in its determination with respect to whether the SDP has had, is having or is likely to have the effect

c) soit sur un marché quelque autre effet tendant à exclure, et qu'en conséquence la concurrence est ou sera vraisemblablement réduite sensiblement, le Tribunal peut, par ordonnance, interdire à l'ensemble ou à l'un quelconque des fournisseurs contre lesquels une ordonnance est demandée de pratiquer désormais l'exclusivité ou les ventes liées et prescrire toute autre mesure nécessaire, à son avis, pour supprimer les effets de ces activités sur le marché en question ou pour y rétablir ou y favoriser la concurrence.

III. LES QUESTIONS EN LITIGE

[23] Le présent appel soulève les quatre questions suivantes :

A) Pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)c), le Tribunal a-t-il formulé une conclusion erronée touchant le point de savoir si le PDS a, a eu ou aura vraisemblablement of preventing or lessening competition substantially?

(B) For the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b), did the Tribunal err in its determination with respect to whether the SDP constitutes an "anti-competitive act"?

(C) For the purposes of subsection 77(2), did the Tribunal err in its determination with respect to whether the SDP has the result that competition is or is likely to be lessened substantially?

(D) For the purposes of subsection 77(2), did the Tribunal err in its determination with respect to whether the SDP is likely to impede entry or expansion of a firm or a product in a market or have any other exclusionary effect in a market?

[24] I will address each of these issues in turn. As the analysis of each issue depends heavily upon the Tribunal's particular findings and approach, I will summarize the Tribunal's decision in the context of my analysis of each question.

IV. ANALYSIS

[25] Before proceeding to an analysis of the issues listed above, a preliminary observation concerning analytic methodology and evidentiary limitations in the competition law context might be helpful. Each of the legislative provisions governing this appeal define a series of elements that must be proven in order to ground the particular order that is sought; if any of these elements is not established, the Commissioner's application must fail. Both section 77 and section 79 specify three distinct elements, and each of these elements is at issue in the appeal or cross-appeal in this case.

[26] The multi-element structures of sections 77 and 79 suggest that the applicable legal tests consist of several discrete subtests, each corresponding to a different requisite element. Indeed, this interpretation appears necessary to give effect to the "well accepted pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence?

B) Pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)b), le Tribunal a-t-il formulé une conclusion erronée touchant le point de savoir si le PDS constitue un « agissement anti-concurrentiel »?

C) Pour l'application du paragraphe 77(2), le Tribunal a-t-il formulé une conclusion erronée touchant le point de savoir si la concurrence est ou sera vraisemblablement réduite sensiblement en conséquence du PDS?

D) Pour l'application du paragraphe 77(2), le Tribunal a-t-il formulé une conclusion erronée touchant le point de savoir si le PDS aura vraisemblablement, sur un marché, soit pour effet de faire obstacle à l'entrée ou au développement d'une firme, ou encore au lancement ou à l'expansion des ventes d'un produit, soit quelque autre effet tendant à exclure?

[24] Je traiterai ces questions successivement. Comme l'analyse de chacune dépend dans une mesure considérable des conclusions et de l'approche correspondantes du Tribunal, je résumerai la décision de ce dernier dans le contexte de mon examen de chaque question.

IV. ANALYSE

[25] Il ne serait peut-être pas inutile de proposer, avant d'entreprendre l'analyse des questions énumérées ci-dessus, quelques observations préliminaires sur la méthode d'analyse à suivre et les limites auxquelles la preuve est soumise dans le contexte du droit de la concurrence. Chacune des dispositions législatives applicables au présent appel définit une série d'éléments qu'il faut prouver pour justifier l'ordonnance souhaitée; si l'un ou l'autre de ces éléments n'est pas établi, la demande du commissaire doit être rejetée. L'article 77 aussi bien que l'article 79 spécifient trois éléments distincts, dont chacun est en question dans le présent appel et dans l'appel incident interjeté parallèlement.

[26] La pluralité des conditions prévues aux articles 77 et 79 donne à penser que les critères juridiques applicables doivent se décomposer en plusieurs sous-critères distincts, chacun correspondant à une condition distincte. En fait, cette interprétation paraît nécessaire principle of statutory interpretation that no legislative provision should be interpreted so as to render it mere surplusage" (R. v. Proulx, [2000] 1 S.C.R. 61, at paragraph 28; see also Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27, at paragraph 27). Each statutory element must give rise to a distinct legal test, for otherwise the interpretation risks rendering a portion of the statute meaningless or redundant.

[27] The difficulty arises, however, when the necessary distinct subtests are examined in light of the available evidence in a given case. In the abuse of dominance context, the economic concepts upon which the legal tests are based often cannot be readily extracted from the available evidence. For example, in many cases the foundational concept of market power cannot be established directly; instead, one must look to relevant indirect indicators. However, these indirect indicators are often relevant with respect to more than one element. As a result, the same evidence—for example, concerning barriers to entry, or market share—is potentially and unavoidably relied upon at several points in the analysis, in respect of different requisite elements. In its first abuse of dominance case, Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. NutraSweet Co. (1990), 32 C.P.R. (3d) 1 (NutraSweet), the Competition Tribunal noted that this difficulty "is pervasive in competition law because the relevant factors in the different statutory elements are rarely distinct and it is impossible not to draw on common factors whenever required" (page 28).

[28] However, it is important that the correct approach to the overlapping use of supporting evidence in the competition context be properly understood, so as to avoid the interpretive danger of impermissible erosion or conflation of the discrete underlying statutory tests. Although a particular piece of supporting evidence may be employed as an indirect indicator in respect of more than one element, the elements themselves must remain conceptually distinct. I will return to this point in my analysis of the questions at issue in the appeal at bar.

pour mettre en œuvre le « principe d'interprétation législative reconnu [suivant lequel] une disposition législative ne devrait jamais être interprétée de façon telle qu'elle devienne superfétatoire » : R. c. Proulx, [2000] 1 R.C.S. 61, au paragraphe 28; voir aussi Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 R.C.S. 27, au paragraphe 27. À chaque condition prévue par la loi applicable doit correspondre un critère juridique distinct, faute de quoi l'interprétation risque de priver de sens ou de rendre superflue une partie de cette loi.

[27] Il se pose cependant un problème lorsque les sous-critères distincts reconnus comme nécessaires sont examinés à la lumière de la preuve produite dans une affaire déterminée. Dans le contexte de l'abus de position dominante, il arrive souvent qu'on ne puisse extraire facilement de la preuve au dossier les concepts économiques sur lesquels se fondent les critères juridiques. Dans bien des cas, par exemple, l'élément fondamental qu'est la puissance commerciale ne peut être établi directement, mais doit l'être au moyen d'indicateurs indirects pertinents. Cependant, ces indicateurs indirects sont souvent pertinents à l'égard de plus d'un élément. Par suite, il se révèle possible et inévitable de se fonder sur les mêmes éléments de preuve—concernant par exemple les obstacles à l'entrée ou la part de marché—à divers moments de l'analyse et à l'égard de conditions différentes prévues par la loi. Dans sa première décision relative à l'abus de position dominante, Canada (Directeur des enquêtes et recherches) c. NutraSweet Co., CT-1989-002 (NutraSweet), le Tribunal de la concurrence notait que ce problème « est courant dans le droit de la concurrence parce que les facteurs pertinents des différentes dispositions législatives sont rarement distincts et [que] l'on doit nécessairement se fonder sur des facteurs communs au besoin » (page 55).

[28] Il est toutefois important de bien comprendre quelle est la manière juste d'aborder cette difficulté de l'utilisation coïncidente des éléments de preuve dans le contexte de la concurrence si l'on veut éviter le danger que représente pour l'interprétation l'inacceptable érosion ou fusion des critères juridiques distincts qui doivent la guider. S'il est permis d'utiliser un élément de preuve donné comme indicateur indirect à l'égard de plus d'une condition prévue par la Loi, les conditions elles-mêmes doivent rester conceptuellement distinctes.

(A) For the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c), did the Tribunal err in its determination with respect to whether the SDP has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially?

[29] I begin my analysis with the issue of substantial lessening of competition for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c), for it is on this question that I am most clearly convinced that this Court's intervention is required. My conclusion in this regard follows directly from an interpretation of the governing statutory language. In short, I have concluded that the Tribunal erred in law in its analytic approach with respect to the legal test applicable under paragraph 79(1)(c).

[30] Before this Court, the appellant argued that the Tribunal erred in law in its interpretation of paragraph 79(1)(c) and failed to apply the correct legal test. The appellant argued that the statutory language—and in particular the use of the relative concept "lessening"—mandates an assessment of the effect of the impugned practice on competition in the relevant markets, which can only be properly accomplished by comparing the competitiveness of the relevant markets in the presence and absence of the impugned practice. The appellant submitted that the correct legal test for assessing competitive effects therefore involves a "but for" analysis: would markets—in the past, present or future—be substantially more competitive but for the impugned practice? Or, in other words, but for the impugned practice, would markets be characterized by greater price competition, choice, service or innovation than exists in the presence of this practice? The Tribunal thus erred, the appellant contended, in that its assessment of substantial lessening of competition focussed virtually exclusively on the narrow question of whether the SDP prevented entry or switching of suppliers, or in other words, whether a substantial level of competition continued to exist in the relevant market. Rather, the Tribunal should have considered the broader question of whether the SDP impeded or hindered the competition that would otherwise exist if the program were absent from the market.

Je reviendrai sur ce point dans mon analyse des questions en litige dans le présent appel.

A) Pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)c), le Tribunal a-t-il formulé une conclusion erronée touchant le point de savoir si le PDS a, a eu ou aura vraisemblablement pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence?

[29] Je commence mon analyse par la question de la diminution sensible de la concurrence pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)c), parce que c'est sur cette question que je suis le plus convaincue que notre Cour doit intervenir. Ma conclusion à cet égard découle directement d'une interprétation du libellé des dispositions législatives applicables. Je dirai d'emblée que le Tribunal a commis une erreur de droit dans son approche analytique du critère juridique applicable sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)c).

[30] L'appelante soutient devant notre Cour que le Tribunal a commis une erreur de droit dans son interprétation de l'alinéa 79(1)c) et n'a pas appliqué le critère juridique qui convient. Elle fait valoir que le libellé de la Loi—en particulier par son emploi du concept relatif qu'exprime le verbe « diminuer »—commande une évaluation de l'effet de la pratique attaquée sur la concurrence dans les marchés pertinents, évaluation qu'on ne peut bien effectuer qu'en comparant les niveaux de ladite concurrence qui correspondent respectivement à la présence et à l'absence hypothétique de cette pratique. Selon l'appelante, le critère juridique qu'il faut appliquer à l'évaluation des effets sur la concurrence nécessite donc une analyse fondée sur l'« absence hypothétique » ("but for" analysis) : il convient de se demander si les marchés auraient été, ou seraient actuellement ou dans l'avenir, sensiblement plus concurrentiels en l'absence de (but for) la pratique contestée. Autrement dit, en l'absence de la pratique attaquée, les marchés se caractériseraient-ils par une plus grande concurrence des prix, un choix plus large, un meilleur service ou une tendance plus forte à l'innovation que dans le cas où cette pratique est présente? Le Tribunal s'est donc trompé, affirme l'appelante, en axant son évaluation de la diminution sensible de la concurrence à peu près exclusivement sur la question restreinte de savoir si le PDS empêchait l'entrée de concurrents (competitors)ou le changement de fournisseurs, autrement dit sur la question de savoir si un niveau sensible de concurrence était maintenu sur le marché pertinent; il aurait plutôt dû se poser la question plus large de savoir si le PDS représentait un obstacle ou un frein pour la concurrence qui caractériserait le marché en l'absence de ce programme.

[31] In response, the respondent submitted two main arguments challenging the Commissioner's proposed "but for" test. First, the respondent argued that the "but for" test was a "novel approach", which the Commissioner had never before advocated before the Tribunal, either in this case or in prior proceedings under section 79. As a result, the respondent contended, the appellant is precluded from introducing this new argument at the appellate level. In this regard, the respondent cited this Court's comments in Gravel and Lake Services Ltd. v. Bay Ocean Management Inc. (2002), 298 N.R. 369, at paragraph 8; SMX Shopping Centre Ltd. v. Canada, [2003] 2 C.T.C. 48, at paragraph 32; and Naguib v. Canada, [2004] 2 C.T.C. 215, at paragraph 7 for the proposition that a new argument may not be raised for the first time on appeal if the responding party would be prejudiced by having had no opportunity to adduce evidence that could, if accepted, defeat the argument. In this case, the respondent maintained that the record contains little or no evidence to establish the likely characteristics of the necessary hypothetical "but for" market. Moreover, Canada Pipe would have argued its case very differently had it had notice at the Tribunal level of the Commissioner's new "but for" test; in particular, it would have retained experts to model the hypothetical comparator markets that would exist "but for" the SDP.

[31] L'intimée oppose deux arguments principaux au critère de l'« absence hypothétique » proposé par la commissaire. Premièrement, soutient-elle, ce critère constitue une [TRADUCTION] « approche inédite », que la commissaire n'a jamais invoquée devant le Tribunal, que ce soit dans la présente affaire ou dans d'autres relevant de l'article 79. Par conséquent, fait valoir l'intimée, il est interdit à l'appelante de présenter ce nouveau moyen en appel. À ce propos, l'intimée a invoqué, à l'appui de la thèse qu'un nouvel argument ne peut être avancé pour la première fois en appel dans le cas où la partie intimée en subirait un préjudice du fait de n'avoir pas eu la possibilité de produire des éléments de preuve qui, acceptés, eussent pu réfuter cet argument, les observations formulées par notre Cour : au paragraphe 8 de Gravel and Lake Services Ltd. c. Bay Ocean Management Inc., 2002 CAF 465; au paragraphe 32 de SMX Shopping Centre Ltd. c. Canada, 2003 CAF 479; et au paragraphe 7 de Naguib c. Canada, 2004 CAF 40. Pour ce qui concerne la présente espèce, l'intimée soutient que le dossier ne contient pas, ou guère, d'éléments de preuve tendant à établir les caractéristiques probables du marché hypothétique qu'il faudrait décrire aux fins de comparaison. En outre, Tuyauteries Canada aurait fait valoir des moyens très différents si elle avait été informée au niveau du Tribunal du nouveau critère de l'« absence hypothétique » proposé par la commissaire; en particulier, elle aurait engagé des experts pour modéliser, aux fins de comparaison, le marché qui existerait hypothétiquement « en l'absence » du PDS.

[32] Second, or in the alternative, the respondent asserted that the Tribunal adopted the correct, well-established approach in its determination under paragraph 79(1)(c), and properly considered all relevant factors. The Tribunal reached its conclusion by carefully exercising its considerable expertise in appraising and weighing the relevant factors, and the respondent argued that since its conclusion on this question of mixed law and fact was not unreasonable, this Court should not interfere.

[33] Although initially appealing, the respondent's first argument cannot be sustained, for several reasons. The legal principle cited by the respondent, with respect to the impropriety of an appellate court considering an entirely new argument which had not been raised below and in relation to which additional evidence is required, is indeed well established: see, for example, The SS "Tordenskjold" v. The SS "Euphemia" (1908), 41 S.C.R. 154; Perka et al. v. The Queen, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 232, at page 240; R. v. Keegstra, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 381, at paragraph 26; Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559, at paragraph 58. However, this principle is inapplicable in the instant case, for the appellant's argument is not in fact "entirely new" (Perka, at page 240). As I explain further below, although the Competition Tribunal has not used the "but for" wording in its previous cases, this wording appears in Enforcement Guidelines on the Abuse of Dominance Provisions issued by the appellant, and the substance of this legal test has been articulated and applied by the Tribunal in prior decisions. The respondent thus had ample notice of this argument. Moreover, the primary concern underlying the general prohibition—namely, that the evidentiary record is insufficient to support the new argument (Keegstra, at paragraph 26)—also does not apply in this case, for the Commissioner bears the burden of establishing each statutory element; if insufficient evidence exists to meet the "but for" test, no order will issue.

[34] As to the respondent's second argument, I am not persuaded that the Tribunal's error with respect to its determination under paragraph 79(1)(c) is one of mixed law and fact. The appellant's argument calls for an exercise of statutory interpretation, to determine whether the statutory language indeed mandates a particular analytic approach. As the Supreme Court of Canada noted in Canada (Director of Investigation and et de fait n'est pas déraisonnable, la Cour ne devrait pas la remettre en cause.

[33] Bien que séduisant à première vue, le premier argument de l'intimée ne peut être retenu, pour plusieurs raisons. Le principe juridique invoqué par l'intimée, selon lequel il n'est pas permis à une cour d'appel de prendre en considération un argument entièrement nouveau qui n'a pas été avancé en première instance et à l'égard duquel de nouveaux éléments de preuve sont nécessaires, est effectivement bien établi; voir par exemple : The SS "Tordenskjold" v. The SS "Euphemia" (1908), 41 R.C.S. 154; Perka et autres c. La Reine, [1984] 2 R.C.S. 232, à la page 240; R. c. Keegstra, [1995] 2 R.C.S. 381, au paragraphe 26; et Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership c. Rex, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 559, au paragraphe 58. Cependant, ce principe n'est pas applicable à la présente espèce, car l'argument de l'appelante n'est pas en fait « entièrement nouveau » (Perka, à la page 240). Comme je l'explique de manière plus détaillée ci-dessous, s'il est vrai que le Tribunal de la concurrence n'a pas employé la terminologie de l'« absence hypothétique » dans sa jurisprudence, l'expression « en l'absence de » figure textuellement à ce propos dans les Lignes directrices pour l'application des dispositions sur l'abus de position dominante publiées par l'appelante, et le Tribunal a formulé et appliqué la substance de ce critère juridique dans des décisions antérieures. L'intimée a donc été informée largement à l'avance de cet argument. En outre, la crainte principale qui sous-tend l'interdiction générale—à savoir celle que le dossier de la preuve ne suffise pas à étayer le nouvel argument (Keegstra, au paragraphe 26)—n'a pas lieu d'être dans la présente espèce, étant donné que la commissaire a la charge d'établir la réalisation de chacune des conditions prévues par la Loi; si la preuve produite ne suffit pas à remplir le critère de l'« absence hypothétique », il ne sera pas rendu d'ordonnance.

Research) v. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748, at paragraph 36 (Southam), questions of statutory interpretation "are generally questions of law," as such questions have "the potential to apply widely to many cases". In the case at bar, the Tribunal's actual appraisal and weighting of different factors—that is, the question of mixed law and fact—is a secondary question, arising only once it has been determined whether the correct legal test was applied. While the Tribunal has economics and competition law expertise in relation to the determinations of fact and mixed law and fact required for the application of the correct legal test, this is not sufficient to displace the expertise of this Court with respect to statutory interpretation itself. As this Court has previously determined—and indeed, the parties do not dispute—the Tribunal's conclusions on questions of law are to be reviewed on the standard of correctness: Canada (Commissioner of Competition) v. Superior Propane Inc., [2001] 3 F.C. 185 (C.A.) (Superior Propane), at paragraph 88.

(1) The legal test under paragraph 79(1)(c)

[35] In light of the appellant's argument, I must consider the correct statutory interpretation of paragraph 79(1)(c), which, for convenience's sake, I set out again:

>
> . . .

[36] Two aspects of the scope of paragraph 79(1)(c) are immediately evident from the wording. First, the effect on competition is to be assessed by reference to up to three different time frames: actual effects in the past or present, and likely effects in the future. Second, the effect on competition which must be proven to ground an order prohibiting an abuse of dominance is one of substantial preventing or lessening. The requisite Canada le faisait observer au paragraphe 36 de Canada (Directeur des enquêtes et recherches) c. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 R.C.S. 748 (Southam), les questions d'interprétation des lois « sont généralement des questions de droit », étant donné qu'elles sont « susceptible[s] de s'appliquer à un grand nombre de cas ». Dans la présente espèce, l'opération effective d'évaluation et de pondération de divers facteurs accomplie par le Tribunal—c'est-à-dire la question mixte de droit et de fait—est une question secondaire, qui se pose seulement une fois qu'on a établi si le Tribunal a appliqué le critère juridique qui convient. S'il est vrai que le Tribunal possède une expertise en science économique et en droit de la concurrence pour ce qui concerne les conclusions de fait et les conclusions mixtes de droit et de fait qu'exige l'application du critère juridique approprié, cette expertise ne suffit pas à remplacer celle de notre Cour en matière d'interprétation des lois. Or, comme notre Cour l'a déjà établi—et, en fait, les parties ne le contestent pas —, les conclusions du Tribunal sur des questions de droit doivent être contrôlées suivant la norme de la décision correcte : Canada (Commissaire de la concurrence) c. Supérieur Propane Inc., [2001] 3 C.F. 185 (C.A.) (Supérieur Propane), au paragraphe 88.

1) Le critère juridique prévu à l'alinéa 79(1)c)

> 79. (1) Lorsque, à la suite d'une demande du commissaire, il conclut à l'existence de la situation suivante :
>
> [. . .]
> c) la pratique a, a eu ou aura vraisemblablement pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence dans un marché, [36] Deux aspects de la portée de l'alinéa 79(1)c) ressortent immédiatement de son libellé. Premièrement, l'effet sur la concurrence doit être évalué par rapport aux trois divisions du temps : il faut prendre en considération l'effet réel dans le passé et dans le présent, et l'effet vraisemblable dans l'avenir. Deuxièmement, l'effet sur la concurrence qui doit être établi pour motiver une ordonnance d'interdiction d'abus de assessment is thus a relative one: it is not the absolute level of competition in a market which must be substantial, but rather the preventing or lessening of competition that results from the impugned practice must be substantial.

[37] The test mandated by paragraph 79(1)(c) is not whether the relevant markets would or did attain a certain level of competitiveness in the absence of the impugned practice, or whether the level of competitiveness observed in the presence of the impugned practice is "high enough" or otherwise acceptable. These are absolute evaluations, while the statutory language of "effect of preventing or lessening . . . substantially" clearly demands a relative and comparative assessment. In order to achieve the inquiry dictated by the statutory language of paragraph 79(1)(c), the Tribunal must compare the level of competitiveness in the presence of the impugned practice with that which would exist in the absence of the practice, and then determine whether the preventing or lessening of competition, if any, is "substantial". This comparison must be done with reference to actual effects in the past and present, as well as likely future effects. Only through such a comparative approach can the Tribunal determine, as the statutory provision requires, whether the impugned practice "has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially".

[38] The comparative interpretation described above is in my view equivalent to the "but for" test proposed by the appellant. Apart from its arguments concerning the evidentiary difficulties involved in the application of such a test at the appeal stage in this case, the respondent did not advance any reasons of principle or statutory interpretation as to why this approach to paragraph 79(1)(c) is incorrect or inappropriate. I would therefore endorse the formulation of the legal test proposed by the appellant: the question that must be assessed for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c) is, would the relevant markets—in the past, present or future—be substantially more competitive but for the impugned practice of anti-competitive acts?

[37] Le critère dont l'alinéa 79(1)c) prescrit l'application ne consiste pas à se demander si les marchés pertinents atteindraient ou ont atteint un niveau déterminé de concurrence en l'absence de la pratique attaquée, ou si le niveau de concurrence observé sur le marché tel qu'il est déterminé par la présence de cette pratique est « suffisamment élevé » ou acceptable pour d'autres raisons. Ce sont là des évaluations dans l'absolu, alors que le libellé de la Loi (« pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement ») commande à l'évidence une évaluation relative et comparative. Pour mener à bien l'examen que dicte le libellé de l'alinéa 79(1)c), le Tribunal doit comparer le niveau de concurrence sur le marché caractérisé par la présence de la pratique attaquée au niveau qui existerait en l'absence de cette pratique, pour ensuite établir si la concurrence est empêchée ou diminuée « sensiblement », en supposant qu'elle le soit tant soit peu. Cette comparaison doit se faire en tenant compte des effets réels dans le passé et dans le présent, ainsi que des effets vraisemblables dans l'avenir. Ce n'est que par cette approche comparative que le Tribunal peut établir, comme la disposition applicable l'exige, si la pratique attaquée « a, a eu ou aura vraisemblablement pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence ».

[39] It is important to note that the "but for" wording appears in the Enforcement Guidelines on the Abuse of Dominance Provisions issued by the appellant, which Guidelines are expressly intended to "help the general public, business people, and their legal and economic advisors to better understand . . . the general approach taken by the Competition Bureau . . . to enforce these provisions" (see Enforcement Guidelines on the Abuse of Dominance Provisions, section 1.1). In describing the Commissioner's approach to assessing the effects of anti-competitive acts for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c), the Guidelines employ the "but for" wording (see section 3.2.4).

[40] The expression "but for" has also appeared in American antitrust jurisprudence. In Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039 (8th Cir. 2000), at page 1055, the Court referred to the difficulty of constructing a hypothetical market:

> Notwithstanding the complex nature of the conduct at issue, Dr. Hall was required to construct a hypothetical market, a "but for" market, free of the restraints and conduct alleged to be anticompetitive. The difficulty of such a task has long been recognized by courts in antitrust cases. [Emphasis added.]

[41] In substance, the "but for" interpretation of paragraph 79(1)(c) is also accordant with the Tribunal's interpretations in earlier abuse of dominance cases. Although the "but for" wording does not appear in the statutory provision or in previous Tribunal decisions, this legal test does not, as the respondent alleges, "amount . . . to an attempt by the Commissioner to re-write the Act at the appellate stage of this l'avenir, sensiblement plus concurrentiels en l'absence de la pratique attaquée d'agissements anti-concurrentiels.

proceeding" (respondent's memorandum of fact and law, paragraph 102). Rather, the "but for" test reflects the plain meaning of the statutory language of paragraph 79(1)(c), and corresponds to the Tribunal's analysis in its previous decisions with respect to this provision.

[42] The Tribunal's use of a comparative and relative test for paragraph 79(1)(c) is evident in its descriptions, in previous abuse of dominance cases, of the appropriate analytic approach for determining whether there exists an actual or likely substantial lessening of competition. In Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd. (1992), 40 C.P.R. (3d) 289 (Comp. Trib.) (Laidlaw), the Tribunal specifically endorsed an assessment based upon comparison of the competitiveness of the relevant markets with and without the impugned practice (at pages 344-346):

> Laidlaw argues that the Director has not demonstrated that there has been any substantial lessening of competition in the relevant markets. It is argued that no analysis has been done of the state of competition in the markets before Laidlaw entered compared to what exists now.
> It is not just the number of competitors and comparative market shares which are relevant in considering whether a substantial lessening of competition has occurred. . . . [T]he substantial lessening which is to be assessed need not necessarily be proved by weighing the competitiveness of the market in the past with its competitiveness at present. Substantial lessening can also be assessed by reference to the competitiveness of the market in the presence of the anti-competitive acts and its likely competitiveness in their absence. [Emphasis added.]

Similarly, in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. D & B Companies of Canada Ltd. (1995), 64 C.P.R. (3d) 216 (D & B), the Tribunal described as follows the appropriate approach to assessing the existence of a substantial lessening of competition (at page 267):

n'équivaut pas, comme l'affirme l'intimée, [TRADUCTION] « à une tentative de réécriture de la Loi par la commissaire à l'étape de l'appel de la présente affaire » (exposé des faits et du droit de l'intimée, paragraphe 102). Le critère de l'« absence hypothétique » correspond en effet à la fois au sens manifeste du libellé de l'alinéa 79(1)c) et à l'analyse effectuée par le Tribunal dans ses décisions antérieures pour l'application de cet alinéa.

> Laidlaw soutient que le directeur n'a pas fait la preuve qu'il y eu diminution sensible de la concurrence dans les marchés pertinents. Elle soutient qu'aucune analyse n'a été effectuée eu égard à l'état de la concurrence dans ces marchés avant et après l'entrée dans les marchés de Laidlaw.
> Il ne faut pas s'en tenir seulement au nombre de concurrents et à leur part relative du marché pour établir s'il y a eu diminution sensible de la concurrence [...] [P]our établir qu'il y a eu diminution sensible de la concurrence, il n'est pas nécessaire de comparer, chiffres à l'appui, le niveau de concurrence qui régnait par le passé dans le marché avec celui qui y règne aujourd'hui. On peut également évaluer la diminution sensible de la concurrence en mesurant le niveau de compétitivité qui existe dans un marché dans lequel une entreprise se livre à des agissements anticoncurrentiels, et estimer le niveau probable de compétitivité en l'absence de ces agissements. [Non souligné dans l'original.]

De même, à la page 88 de Canada (Directeur des enquêtes et recherches) c. D & B Companies of Canada Ltd., CT-1994-001 (D & B), le Tribunal décrivait comme suit la marche à suivre pour établir s'il existe une diminution sensible de la concurrence :

First, we must establish what the conditions of entry would be without the exclusives [the impugned practice of anti-competitive acts] and, then, determine how the anti-competitive acts altered the prospects for economically feasible entry.

The correspondence between these formulations and the "but for" test described above is readily apparent.

[43] The Tribunal's previous abuse of dominance decisions also highlight the centrality of relative comparison in the test mandated by paragraph 79(1)(c). The test for substantial lessening of competition articulated by the Tribunal in NutraSweet, Laidlaw, and D & B, in all cases depends upon this relative comparative aspect (NutraSweet, at page 47):

> The factors to be considered in deciding whether competition has been or is likely to be substantially lessened are similar to those that were discussed in concluding that NSC [NutraSweet Co.] has market power [that is, market share and entry barriers]. In essence, the question to be decided is whether the anti-competitive acts engaged in by NSC preserve or add to NSC's market power.
> The issue with respect to the contract terms associated with exclusivity and the use of the United States patent as leverage in competing for Canadian customers is the degree to which these anti-competitive acts add to the entry barriers into the Canadian market and, additionally therefore, into the industry. [Emphasis added.]

Laidlaw, at pages 347-348:

> There is no reason to doubt that based solely on the economics of lift-on-board service that these should be highly competitive markets. The evidence shows, however, that the effect of the contracts is to make entry sufficiently difficult so that it no longer effectively polices the market. The evidence demonstrates that a new firm can acquire a certain number of customers but that it cannot establish a customer base with sufficient rapidity to make entry attractive. In the markets in question there is no doubt that acquisition practices of Laidlaw buttressed by the creation of artificial barriers to entry through the contracts have resulted in a substantial lessening of competition. [Emphasis added.]

Premièrement, nous devons déterminer quelles seraient les conditions d'accès au marché en l'absence des clauses d'exclusivité [la pratique d'agissements anti-concurrentiels attaquée], puis dans quelle mesure les agissements anti-concurrentiels ont modifié la perspective d'une entrée économiquement viable sur le marché.

On constate une correspondance manifeste entre ces formulations et le critère de l'« absence hypothétique » défini plus haut.

> Les facteurs à prendre en considération pour déterminer si la concurrence a été ou risque d'être diminuée sensiblement sont semblables à ceux qui ont été mentionnés au moment où il a été conclu que NSC [NutraSweet Co.] constitue une puissance sur le marché [ces facteurs sont la part de marché et les obstacles à l'entrée]. Essentiellement, il faut déterminer si les agissements anticoncurrentiels auxquels se livre NSC préservent ou augmentent son emprise sur le marché.
> Par rapport aux modalités des contrats relatives à l'exclusivité et à l'utilisation du brevet américain pour gagner les clients canadiens, la question est de savoir dans quelle mesure ces agissements anticoncurrentiels renforcent les obstacles à l'accès au marché canadien et, partant, à l'industrie [Non souligné dans l'original.]

Laidlaw, à la page 123 :

> Il n'y a pas lieu de douter qu'en se fondant seulement sur les réalités économiques du service de vidage de conteneurs sur place, il devrait régner une vive concurrence dans les marchés. Toutefois, les éléments de preuve révèlent que les contrats ont pour conséquence de rendre l'entrée dans le marché suffisamment difficile de sorte que l'arrivée de nouvelles entreprises ne s'avère plus un moyen efficace de contrôler les prix. La preuve révèle également qu'une nouvelle entreprise peut recruter un certain nombre de clients mais qu'elle ne peut y parvenir dans un délai suffisamment court pour faire de l'entrée dans un marché une perspective attrayante. Dans les marchés en cause, il n'y a aucun doute que les pratiques d'acquisition de Laidlaw, conjuguées à l'imposition d'obstacles artificiels à l'entrée dans le marché, obstacles que constituent les contrats, se sont traduites par une diminution sensible de la concurrence. [Non souligné dans l'original.]

The central issue to be decided in determining whether the Director has satisfied this third element [of subsection 79(1)] is the effect of the exclusives with retailers and the long-term contracts with customers on the conditions of entry into the market. Or, to paraphrase the words of the Tribunal in NutraSweet, in essence, the question to be decided is whether the anti-competitive acts engaged in by Nielsen [D & B] preserve or add to Nielsen's market power. [Emphasis added.]

Clearly, the assessment envisaged and undertaken by the Tribunal in all these cases was not merely an absolute evaluation of the level of competition in the relevant markets, but rather a relative comparison: did the impugned practice result in a preventing or lessening of competition as compared to the conditions governing in the absence of the practice, and was this lessening of a degree sufficient to be considered substantial?

[44] Based upon the plain meaning of the statutory language, and supported by the interpretation advanced by the Tribunal in its earlier cases, I conclude therefore that paragraph 79(1)(c) mandates an approach that properly accentuates these comparative and relative aspects, and enables this analysis to be undertaken in respect of each of the three specified time frames (past, present and future). As I have explained, the "but for" test is one such approach. I must emphasize, however, as the Tribunal rightly implied in the passage from Laidlaw quoted in paragraph 39 above, that the "but for" test is not necessarily the only correct approach. I therefore expressly leave open the possibility that the Tribunal might in a future abuse of dominance case find evidence corresponding to a different test sufficient to discharge the burden placed upon the Commissioner by virtue of paragraph 79(1)(c). However, as the "but for" test describes an approach that corresponds to the requirements mandated by the statutory language of paragraph 79(1)(c), it is one that the Tribunal must consider in all cases—although it may in future cases choose to consider other appropriate tests as well.

La principale question à trancher lorsqu'il s'agit de décider si le directeur a fait la preuve de ce troisième élément [du paragraphe 79(1)] se rapporte à l'effet des clauses d'exclusivité liant les détaillants et des contrats à long terme conclus avec les clients sur les conditions d'entrée dans le marché. En se basant sur la décision du Tribunal dans l'affaire NutraSweet, il faut essentiellement déterminer si les agissements anti-concurrentiels de Nielsen [D & B] préservent ou augmentent son emprise sur le marché. [Non souligné dans l'original.]

Manifestement, l'examen envisagé et effectué par le Tribunal dans toutes ces affaires ne consistait pas simplement en une évaluation dans l'absolu du niveau de concurrence sur les marchés pertinents, mais plutôt en une comparaison relative : la pratique attaquée, se demandait-il, a-t-elle eu pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer la concurrence en comparaison de la situation définie par l'absence de cette pratique, et cette diminution, le cas échéant, était-elle suffisante pour être considérée comme sensible?

[44] Me fondant sur le sens manifeste du libellé de la Loi et, accessoirement, sur l'interprétation proposée par le Tribunal dans ses décisions antérieures, je conclus que l'alinéa 79(1)c) prescrit une approche mettant l'accent qui convient sur ces aspects comparatifs et relatifs et permettant l'application de cette analyse à chacune des trois divisions du temps visées par la Loi (passé, présent et futur). Comme je l'ai expliqué, le critère de l'« absence hypothétique » est une approche de cette nature. Je dois cependant souligner le fait que, comme le Tribunal le laisse entendre avec raison dans le passage de Laidlaw cité au paragraphe 39 du présent exposé, le critère de l'« absence hypothétique » n'est pas nécessairement la seule approche correcte. Je laisse donc expressément ouverte la possibilité que le Tribunal, dans une affaire ultérieure d'abus de position dominante, déclare la preuve correspondant à un critère différent suffisante pour acquitter le commissaire de la charge que prévoit l'alinéa 79(1)c). Cependant, comme le critère de l'« absence hypothétique » est une approche correspondant aux conditions qui doivent obligatoirement être remplies selon le libellé de l'alinéa 79(1)c), le Tribunal doit en envisager l'application dans tous les cas —encore que, dans des affaires ultérieures, il puisse décider d'envisager également l'utilisation d'autres critères appropriés.

(2) Application of the statutory test for paragraph 79(1)(c)

[45] In practice, the application of the "but for" test, and in particular, determination of the appropriate methodology in any given case, is a matter for which the Tribunal is better qualified than this Court. This Court should not attempt to prescribe in the abstract the "correct" methodology, for "[s]uch a task is beyond the limits of the Court's competence" (Superior Propane, at paragraph 159). As the Supreme Court of Canada observed in Southam, at paragraph 52, for the questions of mixed law and fact involved in the application of the legal tests set out in the Competition Act, "what is required in the end is an assessment of the economic significance of the evidence; and to this task an economist is almost by definition better suited than is a judge".

[46] As suggested by the parties in the case at bar, application of the "but for" test could conceivably involve the construction of a hypothetical comparator model, a market identical to reality in all respects except that the impugned practice is absent. In appropriate circumstances, the "but for" test might also be applied by comparing the competitiveness of the market across time, and treating the market conditions before and after the introduction of the impugned practice as proxies for the market with and without the practice. However, I would not want to be seen to suggest that any particular type of evidence would necessarily be required. Ultimately, the Commissioner bears the burden of proof for each requisite element, and the Tribunal must be convinced on the balance of probabilities. The evidence required to meet this burden can only be determined by the Tribunal on a case-by-case basis.

2) L'application du critère prévu à l'alinéa 79(1)c)

[46] Ainsi que l'ont fait remarquer les parties à la présente espèce, il se pourrait bien que l'application du critère de l'« absence hypothétique » comporte la construction d'un modèle hypothétique aux fins de comparaison, c'est-à-dire d'un marché identique au marché réel à tous égards, sauf que la pratique attaquée en serait absente. Dans le cas où le contexte s'y prêterait, on pourrait aussi appliquer le critère de l'« absence hypothétique » en comparant les niveaux de concurrence du marché dans le temps et en considérant les caractéristiques du marché avant et après l'introduction de la pratique attaquée comme des valeurs de remplacement des caractéristiques du marché avec et sans la pratique en question. Cependant, je ne voudrais pas qu'on croie que je laisse ici entendre que tel ou tel type de preuve devrait nécessairement être produit. En dernière analyse, c'est au commissaire qu'incombe la charge de la preuve de la réalisation de chaque condition prévue par la Loi, et il doit convaincre le Tribunal suivant la prépondérance de la preuve. La nature des éléments de preuve nécessaires pour s'acquitter de cette charge ne peut être établie que par le Tribunal, au cas par cas.

[47] The Act does, however, provide some guidelines which should be borne in mind in undertaking the assessment mandated by paragraph 79(1)(c). In this regard, I would adopt mutatis mutandis the advice provided by Evans J.A. in Superior Propane [at paragraph 160] with respect to the methodology appropriate for determining the anti-competitive "effects" of a merger under section 96 [as enacted by R.S.C., 1985 (2nd Supp.), c. 19, s. 45] of the Act:

> Whatever standard is selected (and, for all I know, the same standard may not be equally apposite for all mergers) must be more reflective than the total surplus standard [the methodology adopted by the Tribunal in that case] of the different objectives of the Competition Act. It should also be sufficiently flexible in its application to enable the Tribunal fully to assess the particular fact situation before it.

Similarly, whatever methodology the Tribunal chooses in any given case in its application of the "but for" analysis required under paragraph 79(1)(c) must be sufficiently flexible to allow a full assessment of all factors relevant in the particular fact situation at issue, and must be reflective of the different objectives of the Act.

[48] In Superior Propane, at paragraphs 104-112, this Court looked to the purposes provision of the Act, section 1.1 [as enacted idem, s. 19], to inform its analysis of the meaning of the word "effects" in section 96. Similarly, for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c), in undertaking its assessment of whether there is an actual or likely substantial preventing or lessening of competition, the Tribunal must ensure that the methodology chosen to apply the "but for" test reflects the multiple purposes or objectives set out in section 1.1. Four different purposes are described in section 1.1:

> 1.1 The purpose of this Act is to maintain and encourage competition in Canada in order to promote the efficiency and adaptability of the Canadian economy, in order to expand opportunities for Canadian participation in world markets while at the same time recognizing the role of foreign competition in Canada, in order to ensure that small and medium-sized enterprises have an equitable opportunity to [47] La Loi, cependant, donne certaines lignes directrices qu'il convient de ne pas oublier lorsqu'on entreprend l'examen prescrit par l'alinéa 79(1)c). À ce propos, je reprends à mon compte, mutatis mutandis, les observations formulées par M. le juge Evans dans Supérieur Propane [au paragraphe 160], touchant la méthode appropriée pour établir les « effets » anti-concurrentiels d'un fusionnement sous le régime de l'article 96 [édicté par L.R.C. (1985) (2e suppl.), ch. 19, art. 45] de la Loi :

> Quel que soit le critère choisi (et, pour ce que j'en sais, il se peut que le même critère ne convienne pas également pour tous les fusionnements), il doit refléter, mieux que ne le fait le critère du surplus total, les différents objectifs de la Loi sur la concurrence. Il doit également être d'application suffisamment souple pour permettre au Tribunal d'apprécier pleinement la situation de fait particulière qui lui est présentée.

De même, quelle que soit la méthode que le Tribunal choisisse dans une affaire déterminée pour effectuer l'analyse fondée sur l'« absence hypothétique » qu'exige l'alinéa 79(1)c), elle doit être suffisamment souple pour permettre la pleine appréciation de tous les facteurs pertinents dans la situation de fait particulière qui lui est présentée et elle doit refléter les différents objectifs de la Loi.

> 1.1 La présente loi a pour objet de préserver et de favoriser la concurrence au Canada dans le but de stimuler l'adaptabilité et l'efficience de l'économie canadienne, d'améliorer les chances de participation canadienne aux marchés mondiaux tout en tenant simultanément compte du rôle de la concurrence étrangère au Canada, d'assurer à la petite et à la moyenne entreprise une chance honnête de participer à l'économie participate in the Canadian economy and in order to provide consumers with competitive prices and product choices.

All of these purposes must be reflected in the methodology adopted by the Tribunal to assess the existence of an actual or likely substantial lessening of competition for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c).

(3) The Tribunal's paragraph 79(1)(c) decision

[49] Having articulated the legal test for paragraph 79(1)(c), I turn now to an analysis of what the Tribunal actually did in the case at bar. The Tribunal's analysis directly concerning paragraph 79(1)(c) is brief, and I will therefore quote it in its entirety (at paragraphs 263-266):

The Tribunal, as stated above, is satisfied that Bibby does exercise market control. This can be traced to a number of factors and specifically to the fact that Bibby is the only Canadian supplier able to supply full product lines. The SDP is certainly an instrument that helps Bibby market its products, but the Tribunal is not satisfied that the SDP has been shown to be a practice of anti-competitive acts. If, however, the Tribunal has erred in this assessment, the Tribunal is also of the view that the SDP has not been shown to be a practice that has substantially lessened or prevented competition, for the reasons that follow.

The Tribunal has accepted the Commissioner's submission that there are three distinct product markets, and six geographic markets. Therefore, the Commissioner has the onus of establishing a substantial lessening or prevention of competition in eighteen separate markets. Yet the Commissioner has not established to the Tribunal's satisfaction that the SDP has led to substantial lessening or prevention of competition in any of these markets.

In Western Canada and in Ontario, which represent approximately 75 percent of Bibby's market, there is significant evidence of competitive pricing, notwithstanding the SDP. This competitive pricing is due to imports and to the emergence of a new manufacturer. Although imports still represent a relatively small portion of the cast iron DWV markets, they have been steadily increasing and have had a noticeable impact on prices of cast iron DWV products. In canadienne, de même que dans le but d'assurer aux consommateurs des prix compétitifs et un choix dans les produits.

Tous ces objets doivent trouver leur expression dans la méthode qu'adoptera le Tribunal en vue d'établir, sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)c), si la concurrence a été, est ou sera vraisemblablement empêchée ou diminuée sensiblement.

3) La décision rendue par le Tribunal sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)c)

[49] Après avoir formulé le critère juridique applicable dans le cas de l'alinéa 79(1)c), j'aborderai maintenant l'examen des conclusions que le Tribunal a effectivement établies dans la présente affaire. L'analyse du Tribunal qui concerne directement l'alinéa 79(1)c) est brève, de sorte que j'en citerai ici l'intégralité (aux paragraphes 263 à 266) :

Le Tribunal, comme nous le disions précédemment, constate que Bibby exerce effectivement un contrôle sur le marché. Ce contrôle s'explique par plusieurs facteurs, notamment par le fait que Bibby est le seul fournisseur canadien capable d'offrir des lignes complètes. Le PDS aide certes Bibby à commercialiser ses produits, mais le Tribunal estime qu'il n'a pas été établi que ce programme constitue une pratique d'agissements anticoncurrentiels. Toutefois, pour le cas où cette conclusion serait erronée, le Tribunal conclut aussi qu'il n'a pas été établi que le PDS soit une pratique qui ait eu pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence, et ce, pour les motifs que nous allons exposer.

Le Tribunal a accepté la conclusion de la commissaire selon laquelle nous avons ici affaire à trois marchés de produit distincts et à six marchés géographiques. Par conséquent, il incombait à la commissaire de prouver que la concurrence est empêchée ou diminuée sensiblement sur 18 marchés distincts. Or, elle n'a pas convaincu le Tribunal que le PDS ait eu pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence sur aucun de ces marchés.

Des éléments de preuve convaincants établissent que, malgré le PDS, des prix concurrentiels ont cours dans l'Ouest canadien et en Ontario, qui représentent environ 75 pour 100 du marché de Bibby. Cette concurrence des prix est attribuable aux importations et à l'émergence d'un nouveau fabricant. Si elles ne forment qu'une proportion relativement restreinte du marché des produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte, les importations progressent régulièrement et exercent un effet addition, a new competing manufacturer has emerged for the first time in thirty years and has succeeded in capturing 10 percent of the market in Canada within four years, while the SDP was in effect. There is clearly effective entry in the market by Vandem, as evidenced by the lowering of prices for cast iron DWV products in Ontario. As discussed earlier, in these reasons, its viability remains to be determined. It is the Tribunal's view, however, that the evidence shows that a number of factors, unrelated to the SDP, will bear on Vandem's future. In consequence, the Tribunal is of the view that the SDP has not brought about a substantial lessening or prevention of competition for the Ontario and Western markets.

The Tribunal acknowledges that for Quebec and the Maritimes, which represent 25 percent of the market, prices appear not to have been constrained by competition. This, however, does not necessarily lead to a conclusion that the SDP has caused the lack of competition. The data provided by the Commissioner relate only to the period of time when the SDP was operating. Dr. Ross based his arguments concerning market power on pricing information covering the period of January 1998 to September 2003. The Tribunal has no historical data which would allow it to measure the state of competition before and after the SDP came into effect. Canada Pipe bought the assets of Canada's only manufacturer of cast iron DWV products, the Gooding foundries, a well-established player with no significant rivals. As well, Bibby has been and continues to be the only producer of a full line of products. The Tribunal therefore finds that there is insufficient evidence for it to conclude that the SDP is responsible for a substantial lessening or prevention of competition. [Footnote omitted.] sensible sur les prix de ces produits. De plus, un nouveau fabricant est entré en lice pour la première fois en 30 ans et a réussi à s'emparer de 10 pour 100 du marché canadien en quatre ans, pendant que le PDS était en vigueur. L'entrée de Vandem sur le marché est manifestement productrice d'effet, comme le montre la baisse des prix des produits considérés en Ontario. Ainsi que nous le notions précédemment, la viabilité de Vandem reste à déterminer. Cependant, selon le Tribunal, la preuve montre que l'avenir de Vandem dépend de plusieurs facteurs, qui ne sont pas liés au PDS. En conséquence, le Tribunal conclut que le PDS n'a pas eu pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence sur les marchés de l'Ontario et de l'Ouest.

Le Tribunal reconnaît que, au Québec et dans les Maritimes, qui représentent 25 pour 100 du marché, les prix ne paraissent pas avoir subi l'effet de la concurrence. Mais ce fait ne mène pas nécessairement à la conclusion que l'absence de concurrence soit attribuable au PDS. Les renseignements produits par la commissaire ne portent que sur la période où le PDS était en vigueur. M. Ross a fondé son argumentation concernant la puissance commerciale sur des renseignements relatifs aux prix applicables à la période de janvier 1998 à septembre 2003. Le Tribunal ne dispose pas de données chronologiques qui lui permettraient de mesurer l'état de la concurrence avant et après l'entrée en vigueur du PDS. Tuyauteries Canada a acquis le capital des fonderies de Gooding, entreprise solidement établie et sans rivaux importants, qui était alors le seul fabricant canadien de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte. En outre, Bibby était et continue d'être la seule entreprise à produire une ligne complète. En conséquence, le Tribunal estime ne pas disposer d'une preuve suffisante pour conclure qu'il faille attribuer au PDS l'effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence. [Note de bas de page omise.]

[50] The Tribunal's substantive analysis for the purpose of paragraph 79(1)(c) is contained in two paragraphs, 265 and 266. Paragraph 265 considers the evidence with respect to the geographic markets of Western Canada and Ontario, and paragraph 266 considers that with respect to Quebec and the Maritimes. The Tribunal's stated reasons for concluding that substantial lessening of competition had not been established are very different for the two geographic groupings. In both cases, however, the Tribunal's reasoning evinces errors of law.

[50] L'analyse de fond du Tribunal, pour ce qui concerne l'alinéa 79(1)c), tient toute dans les paragraphes 265 et 266. Le paragraphe 265 examine la preuve en ce qui a trait aux marchés géographiques de l'Ouest canadien et de l'Ontario, et le paragraphe 266 fait de même pour le Québec et les Maritimes. Les motifs exposés par le Tribunal pour étayer sa conclusion qu'une diminution sensible de la concurrence n'a pas été établie sont très différents d'un groupement géographique à l'autre. Mais dans les deux cas, son raisonnement est entaché d'erreurs de droit.

[51] For Western Canada and Ontario, the reasons show that the Tribunal's conclusion was based upon its appreciation of three main factors: the existence of competitive pricing, the increasing presence of imported cast iron DWV products, and the effective entry of a new cast iron DWV manufacturer, Vandem. The Tribunal emphasized that these significant features have been observed "notwithstanding the SDP" and "while the SDP was in effect" (paragraph 265), and thus concluded that the SDP had not brought about a substantial lessening or prevention of competition in Western Canada or Ontario.

[52] The occurrence of entry, both by importers and a new manufacturer, was evidently the key consideration in the Tribunal's analysis with respect to the absence of substantial lessening of competition. In the context of its direct analysis of paragraph 79(1)(c), the Tribunal's explanation of its use, for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c), of the evidence concerning entry is very brief: it merely noted that "a new competing manufacturer has emerged for the first time in thirty years and has succeeded in capturing 10 percent of the market in Canada within four years, while the SDP was in effect", and concluded that "[t]here is clearly effective entry in the market by Vandem" (paragraph 265). The Tribunal also noted the "steadily increasing" presence of imports, which "[a]lthough imports still represent[ing] a relatively small portion of the cast iron DWV markets", are said to "have had a noticeable impact on prices" (paragraph 265).

[53] This analysis of the occurrence of entry in the Western Canada and Ontario markets provides no indication that the Tribunal considered expressly whether the SDP was responsible for a substantial increase in the difficulty of gaining entry in the market, and hence a substantial lessening of competition. The occurrence of entry and the consequent existence of a certain level of competition relate to an absolute evaluation of the state of the market in the presence of the SDP, which is neither an equivalent of nor a substitute for the relative and comparative assessment that is required by the statutory language of paragraph 79(1)(c). The fact that entry has been observed in the presence of the SDP, and that barriers to entry are principaux : l'existence de prix concurrentiels, la progression des importations de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte, et l'entrée effective d'un nouveau fabricant de tels produits, Vandem. Le Tribunal souligne que ces caractéristiques importantes ont été observées « malgré le PDS » et « pendant que le PDS était en vigueur » (paragraphe 265), et il en conclut que le PDS n'a pas eu pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence sur les marchés de l'Ouest canadien et de l'Ontario.

[52] L'entrée effective de concurrents (competitors), à savoir d'importateurs aussi bien que d'un nouveau fabricant, est à l'évidence le principal facteur que le Tribunal a pris en considération dans l'analyse qui l'amène à conclure à l'absence d'une diminution sensible de la concurrence. Dans le contexte de son analyse directe de l'alinéa 79(1)c), le Tribunal n'explique que très brièvement son utilisation, pour l'application de cet alinéa, de la preuve concernant l'entrée : « un nouveau fabricant est entré en lice pour la première fois en 30 ans et a réussi à s'emparer de 10 pour 100 du marché canadien en quatre ans, pendant que le PDS était en vigueur », se contente-t-il de noter, pour ensuite conclure que « [l']entrée de Vandem sur le marché est manifestement productrice d'effet » (paragraphe 265). Le Tribunal note aussi que les importations « progressent régulièrement » et que « [s]i elles ne forment qu'une proportion relativement restreinte du marché des produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte », elles « exercent un effet sensible sur les prix de ces produits » (paragraphe 265).

[53] Rien n'indique expressément dans cette analyse de l'entrée effective de concurrents sur les marchés de l'Ouest canadien et de l'Ontario que le Tribunal ait pris en considération le point de savoir si le PDS était la cause d'un accroissement sensible de la difficulté d'entrer sur le marché, et donc d'une diminution sensible de la concurrence. L'entrée effective de concurrents et l'existence qui s'ensuit d'un certain niveau de concurrence se rapportent à une évaluation dans l'absolu de l'état du marché où le PDS est appliqué, ce qui n'équivaut pas ni ne peut se substituer à l'appréciation relative et comparative que prescrit le libellé de l'alinéa 79(1)c). Le fait que l'entrée de concurrents ait été constatée alors que le PDS était en therefore not total, does not by itself address the question of whether, in the absence of the SDP, there would be substantially more competition in the relevant markets, in the past, present or future. In short, the Tribunal's analysis with respect to these geographic markets does not address the "but for" question.

[54] The Tribunal provided different reasoning for its conclusion in this regard concerning the Quebec and Maritimes markets (at paragraph 266). In these geographic markets, the Tribunal acknowledged that competitive pricing is absent, but cautioned that this "does not necessarily lead to a conclusion that the SDP has caused the lack of competition," as the Commissioner had not led any evidence concerning the period before the SDP was in effect. Without "historical data which would allow it to measure the state of competition before and after the SDP came into effect," and in light of other market considerations (Canada Pipe's acquisition of the assets of another cast iron DWV manufacturer, and Bibby's status as the only full-line supplier), the Tribunal concluded that "there is insufficient evidence for it to conclude that the SDP is responsible for a substantial lessening or prevention of competition" (paragraph 266).

[55] The legal error inherent in this portion of the Tribunal's paragraph 79(1)(c) analysis is manifest. As the Tribunal itself recognized in Laidlaw, substantial lessening "need not necessarily be proved by weighing the competitiveness of the market in the past with its competitiveness as present", for "[s]ubstantial lessening can also be assessed by reference to the competitiveness of the market in the presence of the anti-competitive acts and its likely competitiveness in their absence" (page 346). For the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c), it is insufficient to conclude that the Commissioner had not met her burden because no historical data was provided, for the Tribunal was required to also consider whether the evidence on record demonstrated that the SDP had the effect of substantially lessening competition in the past, present or future, as compared to the markets' vigueur et que les obstacles à l'entrée ne soient donc pas absolus dans ce contexte ne répond pas à la question de savoir si, en l'absence du PDS, il aurait existé dans le passé, ou existerait dans le présent ou l'avenir, sensiblement plus de concurrence sur les marchés pertinents. Bref, l'analyse du Tribunal concernant ces marchés géographiques ne prend pas en considération la question de l'« absence hypothétique ».

[54] Le Tribunal fonde sur un raisonnement différent sa conclusion à cet égard pour ce qui concerne le Québec et les Maritimes (paragraphe 266). Le Tribunal reconnaît que les prix ne sont pas concurrentiels sur ces marchés géographiques, mais ajoute que ce fait « ne mène pas nécessairement à la conclusion que l'absence de concurrence soit attribuable au PDS », la commissaire n'ayant pas produit d'éléments de preuve concernant la période où le PDS n'était pas encore en vigueur. Ne disposant pas de « données chronologiques qui lui permettraient de mesurer l'état de la concurrence avant et après l'entrée en vigueur du PDS » et s'appuyant sur d'autres caractéristiques des marchés (l'acquisition par Tuyauteries Canada du capital d'un autre fabricant de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte et le fait que Bibby soit la seule entreprise à fournir une ligne complète), le Tribunal déclare « ne pas disposer d'une preuve suffisante pour conclure qu'il faille attribuer au PDS l'effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence » (paragraphe 266).

[55] Cette partie de l'analyse effectuée par le Tribunal sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)c) est entachée d'une erreur de droit manifeste. Comme le Tribunal l'a lui-même reconnu dans Laidlaw, « pour établir qu'il y a eu diminution sensible de la concurrence, il n'est pas nécessaire de comparer, chiffres à l'appui, le niveau de concurrence qui régnait par le passé dans le marché avec celui qui y règne aujourd'hui », car « [o]n peut également évaluer la diminution sensible de la concurrence en mesurant le niveau de compétitivité qui existe dans un marché dans lequel une entreprise se livre à des agissements anti-concurrentiels, et estimer le niveau probable de compétitivité en l'absence de ces agissements ». Pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)c), il ne suffit pas de conclure que la commissaire ne s'est pas acquittée de sa charge au motif qu'elle n'a pas produit likely competitiveness in the absence of the practice. The failure to consider this possibility in this case constitutes an error of law.

[56] Can it be argued, as the respondent suggests, that the Tribunal implicitly took into account the relative and comparative considerations required under paragraph 79(1)(c)? In this vein, it could be argued that the Tribunal's paragraph 79(1)(c) reasoning depends implicitly upon its analysis undertaken in earlier sections of its decision, for the purposes of its determinations under paragraphs 79(1)(a) and (b), of the evidence concerning entry conditions and the effects of the SDP (paragraphs 141-156; and 204-254 and 260-261, respectively).

[57] However, the Tribunal's treatment in these earlier sections of its decision of the evidence concerning entry and effects reinforces my conclusion that it erred in law in its paragraph 79(1)(c) analysis. In general, this earlier analysis treats the question of entry in an absolute sense, and appears to be guided by such questions as, has entry been prevented completely, or is a certain level of competition observed in the presence of the SDP? The evidence of actual entry is explicitly accorded a dominant and even preeminent role in the Tribunal's analysis (see, for example, paragraphs 149, 156 and 161). Throughout the Tribunal's decision, evidence concerning entry or the effects of the SDP is considered against the standard of "prevention" in an absolute sense, rather than a more relative standard such as that implied by the words "impeding" or "lessening" (see paragraphs 150, 155, 207, 225, 226, 237, 241, 245, 254, 255, 260, 261). The decision does employ the words "impede" or "lessening" at several points (see paragraphs 2, 6, 53, 113, 162, 263-266, 280, 282), but these occur when the Tribunal is citing the text of the statutory provisions or paraphrasing the Commissioner's submissions, and not in the context of the Tribunal's own conclusions or analysis. In short, these earlier sections of the decision provide little if any support for the argument that the Tribunal implicitly took into account the relative and comparative considerations de données chronologiques : il incombait au Tribunal de se demander également si la preuve au dossier établissait que le PDS avait eu, avait ou aurait pour effet de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence, par comparaison au niveau de concurrence qui caractériserait vraisemblablement les marchés en cause en l'absence de la pratique attaquée. Le fait de ne pas avoir pris cette possibilité en considération constitue une erreur de droit.

[57] Cependant, l'utilisation que le Tribunal a faite dans ces sections antérieures de la preuve concernant l'entrée et les effets du PDS me conforte dans ma conclusion qu'il a commis une erreur de droit dans son analyse relative à l'alinéa 79(1)c). En général, ces analyses antérieures traitent le sujet de l'entrée dans l'absolu et paraissent être guidées par des questions telles que celles de savoir si l'entrée a été complètement empêchée ou si l'on observe un certain niveau de concurrence sur les marchés caractérisés par la présence du PDS. Le Tribunal attribue explicitement dans son analyse un rôle dominant, et même le rôle principal, à la preuve de l'entrée effective (voir par exemple les paragraphes 149, 156 et 161). Tout au long de sa décision, le Tribunal examine la preuve relative à l'entrée et aux effets du PDS en fonction du critère qu'exprime le verbe « empêcher » entendu au sens absolu, plutôt que d'un critère relatif tel que sous-entendu par l'expression « faire obstacle » ou le terme « diminuer » (voir les paragraphes 150, 155, 207, 225, 226, 237, 241, 245, 254, 255, 260 et 261). On trouve bien l'expression « faire obstacle » ou le terme « diminuer » dans certains passages de la décision (voir les paragraphes 2, 6, 53, 113, 162, 263 à 266, 280 et 282), mais c'est lorsque le Tribunal cite le texte des dispositions applicables ou paraphrase les conclusions de la commissaire, et non dans le contexte de sa propre required under paragraph 79(1)(c). To the contrary, a careful reading of the Tribunal's reasons indicates that the analysis throughout was conducted from the narrow, absolute perspective of preventing entry and competition, and not from the broader, relative and comparative perspective of "impeding" or "lessening".

(4) Conclusion with respect to paragraph 79(1)(c)

[58] In summary, the Tribunal should have turned its mind to the question of whether, in each of the relevant markets, competitiveness was substantially lessened in the presence of the SDP, as compared to the likely state of competition in the absence of this practice. In other words, the Tribunal should have considered whether, without the SDP, the relevant product market would be substantially more competitive. Proper examination of this question might include the following considerations: whether entry or expansion might be substantially faster, more frequent or more significant without the SDP; whether switching between products and suppliers might be substantially more frequent; whether prices might be substantially lower; and whether the quality of products might be substantially greater. In this regard, identification of the occurrence of entry, or reference to evidence of competition subsisting in the presence of the impugned practice, is insufficient. I conclude therefore that the Tribunal erred in law in its analysis, for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c), as to whether the SDP has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in the relevant markets.

(B) For the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b), did the Tribunal err in its determination with respect to whether the SDP constitutes an "anti-competitive act"?

[59] The statutory test for an abuse of dominant position set out in section 79 is a conjunctive one: each analyse ou de ses propres conclusions. Bref, ces sections antérieures de la décision n'étayent guère, si même elles le font tant soit peu, l'argument suivant lequel le Tribunal aurait implicitement pris en considération les facteurs relatifs et comparatifs dont l'alinéa 79(1)c) commande l'examen. La lecture attentive de l'exposé des motifs du Tribunal indique au contraire qu'il a effectué l'ensemble de son analyse du point de vue étroit et absolu de la question de savoir si l'entrée et la concurrence se trouvaient empêchées, et non du point de vue plus large, relatif et comparatif, que traduisent l'expression « faire obstacle » et le terme « diminuer ».

4) Conclusion relative à l'alinéa 79(1)c)

[58] En résumé, le Tribunal aurait dû orienter son attention vers le point de savoir si, sur chacun des marchés pertinents, la concurrence se trouvait sensiblement diminuée avec le PDS, en comparaison de l'état vraisemblable de la concurrence en l'absence de cette pratique. Autrement dit, le Tribunal aurait dû se demander si, en l'absence du PDS, le marché de produit pertinent aurait été sensiblement plus concurrentiel. L'examen de cette question tel qu'il doit être effectué pourrait comprendre l'analyse des points de savoir : si l'entrée ou le développement de concurrents pourrait se révéler sensiblement plus rapide, plus fréquent ou plus important en l'absence du PDS; si le changement de produits et de fournisseurs pourrait être sensiblement plus fréquent; si les prix pourraient être sensiblement plus bas; et si la qualité des produits pourrait être sensiblement supérieure. À cet égard, il ne suffit pas de constater l'entrée effective de concurrents ou d'invoquer les éléments tendant à prouver que la concurrence subsiste malgré la présence de la pratique attaquée. Je conclus donc que le Tribunal a commis une erreur de droit dans l'analyse qu'il a effectuée afin d'établir si, pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)c), le PDS a, a eu ou aura vraisemblablement pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence sur les marchés pertinents.

B) Pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)b), le Tribunal a-t-il formulé une conclusion erronée touchant le point de savoir si le PDS constitue un « agissement anti-concurrentiel »?

of the three distinct elements must be found if an order is to issue. The Tribunal found that the market control element required under paragraph 79(1)(a) was established, and this finding, which is the subject of the cross-appeal, is upheld by this Court in separate reasons. This Court must also determine whether the Tribunal erred in its findings with respect to paragraph 79(1)(b).

[60] Paragraph 79(1)(b) calls for a determination as to whether the respondent, through the SDP, "ha[s] engaged in or [is] engaging in a practice of anti-competitive acts". The Tribunal had no difficulty recognizing the SDP as a "practice". It wrote, at paragraph 171, that the term entails more than an isolated act but may be one occurrence that is sustained and systemic, or that has had a lasting impact on competition. It explained at paragraph 200 of its reasons that the SDP is structured, organized and applied throughout Canada, albeit with some variations in the multiplier and rebates in the different regions and that the various components of the program add up to a practice. The respondent does not appear to contest this particular finding. The dispute arises with respect to whether the SDP can be characterized as composed of "anti-competitive acts" ( agissements anti-concurrentiels).

[61] The Commissioner argued that while the Tribunal stated the correct legal test for anti-competitive acts, which was established in previous Tribunal decisions, this was not the test that it ultimately applied in its analysis of the SDP. The Tribunal erred in law, the Commissioner asserts, by requiring proof of a link between the SDP and a decrease in competition, and by improperly extending the scope of the valid business justification doctrine. As a result, according to the Commissioner, the approach to paragraph 79(1)(b) adopted by the Tribunal conflated the discrete statutory tests established by paragraphs 79(1)(b) and 79(1)(c).

[62] This question is further complicated in the case at bar by the fact that this appeal represents the first time that a court has considered the legal test applicable for nature conjonctive : chacune des trois conditions distinctes doit être remplie pour qu'une ordonnance puisse être rendue. Le Tribunal a conclu qu'était remplie la condition du contrôle du marché que prévoit l'alinéa 79(1)a), et cette conclusion, qui fait l'objet de l'appel incident, est confirmée par notre Cour dans un exposé de motifs distinct. Notre Cour doit aussi établir si le Tribunal a formulé une conclusion erronée pour ce qui concerne l'alinéa 79(1)b).

[61] La commissaire soutient que, si le Tribunal a formulé correctement le critère juridique applicable aux agissements anti-concurrentiels, qu'il a d'ailleurs établi dans des décisions antérieures, ce n'est pas là le critère qu'il a en fin de compte appliqué dans son analyse du PDS. Le Tribunal a commis une erreur de droit, affirme la commissaire, en exigeant la preuve d'un lien entre le PDS et un recul de la concurrence, et en étendant illégitimement la portée de la doctrine de la justification commerciale valable. Par suite, selon la commissaire, l'approche de l'alinéa 79(1)b) adoptée par le Tribunal pèche par la fusion des critères distincts que prévoient les alinéas 79(1)b) et 79(1)c).

the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b). The Tribunal has considered, in prior abuse of dominance cases, the legal test and analytic methodology applicable in ascertaining the existence of an "anti-competitive act". The Tribunal's jurisprudence on these questions cannot by itself be determinative in the current case, as its views on questions of law are not binding on this Court. The Tribunal's jurisprudence may however be indicative of what makes sense and what has been working in the past—if, at the same time, it corresponds to the wording of the Act.

(1) The legal test under paragraph 79(1)(b)

[63] The Act does not provide an express definition of "anti-competitive act". Section 78 provides a list of 11 anti-competitive acts, expressly "without restricting the generality of the term". These examples are thus illustrative only, and indeed the Tribunal has recognized in its previous decisions that conduct not specifically mentioned in section 78 can constitute an anti-competitive act (NutraSweet, at page 34; Laidlaw, at pages 331-332; D & B, at page 257; Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. (1997), 73 C.P.R. (3d) (Comp. Trib.), 1 at page 180 (Tele-Direct)). While clearly non-exhaustive, the illustrative list in section 78 provides direction as to the type of conduct that is intended to be captured by paragraph 79(1)(b): reasoning by analogy, a non-enumerated anti-competitive act will exhibit the shared essential characteristics of the examples listed in section 78.

[64] In NutraSweet, the Tribunal applied this interpretive approach to paragraph 79(1)(b), and suggested (at page 34) the following working definition of "anti-competitive act":

A number of the acts [mentioned in section 78] share common features but . . . only one feature is common to all: an anti-competitive act must be performed for a purpose, and evidence of this purpose is a necessary ingredient. The purpose common to all acts, save that found in paragraph 78(f), is an intended negative effect on a competitor that is applicable sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)b). Le Tribunal de la concurrence a lui-même examiné, dans des affaires antérieures d'abus de position dominante, le critère juridique et la méthode d'analyse à adopter pour établir l'existence d'un « agissement anti-concurrentiel ». Mais la jurisprudence du Tribunal sur ces questions ne peut en soi être considérée comme déterminante dans la présente espèce, puisque ses opinions sur les questions de droit n'ont pas valeur contraignante pour notre Cour. La jurisprudence du Tribunal peut cependant donner une idée des solutions logiques et qui se sont révélées efficaces dans le passé—à condition, toutefois, qu'elles soient conformes au libellé de la Loi.

1) Le critère juridique prévu à l'alinéa 79(1)b)

Certains de ces agissements [visés à l'article 78] ont des éléments communs mais [. . .] un seul est commun à tous : l'agissement anti-concurrentiel doit avoir un but particulier dont il est nécessaire de faire la preuve. Le but commun à tous ces agissements, sauf celui de l'alinéa 78*f*), est l'effet négatif intentionnel sur un concurrent et cet effet doit être abusif, predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary. [Emphasis added.]

[65] I adopt the above definition, which is very close in substance to the core characteristic of the enumerated list of section 78, save at paragraph 78(1)(f). This exception was noted by the Tribunal in NutraSweet.

[66] Two aspects of this definition should be noted. First, an anti-competitive act is identified by reference to its purpose. Second, the requisite purpose is an intended predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor. I will elaborate on each of these aspects in turn.

[67] First, the meaning of the term purpose deserves some comment. As the Tribunal observed in Tele-Direct, at page 180, "'[p]urpose' is used in this context in a broader sense than merely subjective intent on the part of the respondent . . . it might be more apt to speak of the overall character of the act in question" (emphasis added). In order to apply paragraph 79(1)(b), the purpose or character of the impugned conduct must therefore be determined. Relevant factors to be considered and weighed to determine this overarching "purpose" include the reasonably foreseeable or expected objective effects of the act (from which intention may be deemed, as I explain further below), any business justification, and any evidence of subjective intent, if available (see Tele-Direct, at page 180).

[68] The second aspect describes the type of purpose required in the context of paragraph 79(1)(b): to be considered "anti-competitive" under paragraph 79(1)(b), an act must have an intended predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor. The paragraph 79(1)(b) inquiry is thus focused upon the intended effects of the act on a competitor. As a result, some types of effects on competition in the market might be irrelevant for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b), if viser une exclusion ou une mise au pas. [Non souligné dans l'original.]

[66] Deux aspects de cette définition doivent retenir notre attention. Premièrement, l'agissement anti-concurrentiel est défini par rapport à un but (purpose). Deuxièmement, le but qu'il faut établir est un effet négatif intentionnel sur un concurrent, qui doit être abusif, ou viser une exclusion ou une mise au pas. Je vais maintenant examiner successivement chacun de ces aspects de manière détaillée.

these effects do not manifest through a negative effect on a competitor. It is important to recognize that "anti-competitive" therefore has a restricted meaning within the context of paragraph 79(1)(b). While, for the Act as a whole, "competition" has many facets as enumerated in section 1.1, for the particular purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b), "anti-competitive" refers to an act whose purpose is a negative effect on a competitor.

[69] Adopting this interpretive approach to section 79, it is conceivable that a practice might be found to be composed of anti-competitive acts within the meaning of paragraph 79(1)(b), but at the same time, for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(c), be held not to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in the market in question.

[70] A final comment should be made with respect to the evidence required to establish an anti-competitive purpose within the meaning of paragraph 79(1)(b). It is clear from the legislative history of paragraph 79(1)(b) that evidence of subjective intent, although certainly probative if available, is not required in order to find that a given act is anti-competitive within the meaning of paragraph 79(1)(b). When Bill C-91, which eventually became the Competition Act, was first introduced in Parliament in December 1985, the text of paragraph (b) of the abuse of dominance provision (then section 51) read as follows:

>
> . . .
>

Perceived problems with the subjective intent requirement implied by the latter part of the proposed s'ensuit que certains types d'effets sur la concurrence dans le marché pourraient se révéler dénués de pertinence pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)b), s'ils ne se traduisent pas par un effet négatif sur un concurrent. Il est important de bien voir que le terme « anti-concurrentiel » revêt par conséquent une signification restreinte dans le contexte de l'alinéa 79(1)b). Si, au regard de l'ensemble de la Loi, la « concurrence » présente de multiples aspects comme en témoignent les objets énumérés à son article 1.1, le terme « anti-concurrentiel », pour l'application particulière de l'alinéa 79(1)b), qualifie un agissement ayant pour but ou pour objet un effet négatif sur un concurrent (competitor).

[70] Une dernière remarque s'impose touchant la preuve nécessaire pour établir l'existence d'un but anti-concurrentiel sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)b). Il ressort à l'évidence de la genèse de l'alinéa 79(1)b) que, bien que de tels éléments soient certes probants si l'on en produit, il n'est pas nécessaire de disposer de preuve tendant à établir l'intention subjective pour conclure qu'un comportement donné est un agissement anti-concurrentiel au sens de l'alinéa 79(1)b). Au moment de la première présentation du projet de loi C-91, qui allait devenir la Loi sur la concurrence, au Parlement en décembre 1985, l'alinéa b) de l'article relatif à l'abus de position dominante (alors l'article 51) était libellé comme suit :

> [. . .]
>
> b) que cette personne ou ces personnes se livrent ou se sont livrées à une pratique d'agissements anti-concurrentiels dont le but est de réduire la concurrence, et [Non souligné dans l'original.]

Les personnes appelées à témoigner devant le Comité législatif sur le projet de loi C-91 ont été nombreuses à paragraph (b) were frequently raised in testimony before the House of Commons Legislative Committee on Bill C-91 (see Canada, House of Commons, Minutes of the Proceedings and Evidence of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-91, First session of 33rd Parliament, 1986 at pages 2:8-9, 3:7-9, 3:17, 5:13, 5:15, 5:63-64, 6:9-10; 9:20-21; note also the contrary view expressed at pages 4:55-56, 6:57-58; 7:55-57, 7:60-63 (Minutes of the Committee on Bill C-91)). In response, the reference to "the object of the practice" was deleted in paragraph (b), in order to remove any subjective intent requirement from the statutory test for abuse of dominant position (see Minutes of the Committee on Bill C-91, at pages 11:3 and 11:32-33).

[71] On the basis of this legislative history, I would endorse the following comment by the Tribunal in Laidlaw, at page 342, with respect to the proper role of evidence concerning subjective intent within paragraph 79(1)(b):

> Proof of subjective intention on the part of a respondent is not necessary in order to find that a practice of anti-competitive acts has occurred. Such intention is almost impossible of proof in many cases involving corporate entities unless one stumbles upon what is known as a "smoking gun". (A document which makes it clear that the purpose of the conduct in question was to exclude competitors from the market.) Section 79 of the Act provides for a civil proceeding and civil remedies. In that context corporate actors and individuals are deemed to intend the effects of their actions.

[72] Proof of the intended nature of the negative effect on a competitor can thus be established directly through evidence of subjective intent, or indirectly by reference to the reasonably foreseeable consequences of the acts themselves and the circumstances surrounding their commission, or both.

[73] Even though evidence of subjective intent is neither required nor determinative, intention remains an important ingredient of paragraph 79(1)(b). In particular, intention is relevant in the sense that while a évoquer les problèmes que poserait selon elles la condition de l'intention subjective impliquée par la dernière partie du texte proposé de l'alinéa b); voir Canada, Chambre des communes, Procès-verbaux et témoignages du Comité législatif sur le Projet de loi C-91, 1re session du 33e Parlement, 1986 (Procès-verbaux du Comité sur le projet de loi C-91), aux pages 2:8-9, 3:7-9, 3:17, 5:13, 5:15, 5:63-64, 6:9-10 et 9:20-21; voir aussi les pages 4:55-56, 6:57-58; 7:55-57, 7:60-63, où l'opinion contraire est exprimée. Par suite, on a rayé de l'alinéa b) la mention du « but » de la pratique, afin d'alléger de toute condition d'intention subjective le critère juridique relatif à l'abus de position dominante; voir Procès-verbaux du Comité sur le projet de loi C-91, aux pages 11:3 et 11:32-33.

> La démonstration de l'intention subjective de la défenderesse ne s'impose pas afin de conclure qu'il y a eu pratique d'agissements anticoncurrentiels. Démontrer qu'il y a eu intention subjective est souvent presque impossible lorsqu'on a affaire à de grandes entreprises, à moins de disposer d'éléments de preuve péremptoires (par exemple, un document qui établit, sans ambiguïté, que le but visé par la pratique en question est d'évincer des concurrents du marché). L'article 79 de la Loi prévoit et des poursuites et des redressements au civil. Dans ce contexte, qu'il s'agisse d'entreprises ou d'individus, ils sont réputés avoir eu l'intention de tirer profit des effets découlant de leurs agissements.

respondent cannot disavow responsibility for the reasonably foreseeable consequences of its acts, a respondent might nevertheless be able to establish that such consequences should not, in the context of the paragraph 79(1)(b) inquiry, be considered the intended "purpose" or "overall character" of the acts in question. In appropriate circumstances, proof of a valid business justification for the conduct in question can overcome the deemed intention arising from the actual or foreseeable effects of the conduct, by showing that such anti-competitive effects are not in fact the overriding purpose of the conduct in question. In essence, a valid business justification provides an alternative explanation as to why the impugned act was performed. To be relevant in the context of paragraph 79(1)(b), a business justification must be a credible efficiency or pro-competitive rationale for the conduct in question, attributable to the respondent, which relates to and counterbalances the anti-competitive effects and/or subjective intent of the acts. The appropriate application of the valid business justification doctrine in the context of paragraph 79(1)(b) will be further considered below, in my discussion of the Tribunal's analysis in the case at bar.

(2) The Tribunal's paragraph 79(1)(b) decision

[74] In the case at bar, it would appear that the Tribunal correctly articulated the legal test. At paragraph 171 of its reasons, at the outset of its review of the Tribunal's definition of "anti-competitive acts" in its previous cases, the Tribunal stated:

> In order to determine whether acts are anti-competitive, the Tribunal must consider the nature and purpose of the acts in question, as well as the impact they have or may have on the relevant market. (Nielsen at 257; Laidlaw at 333; NutraSweet at 34) In both Tele-Direct and Laidlaw, the Tribunal assessed the alleged anti-competitive practices by taking into account what effect they had had on competitors. [Emphasis added.]

se décharger de la responsabilité des conséquences raisonnablement prévisibles de ses actes, le défendeur pourrait néanmoins se révéler capable d'établir que ces conséquences, dans le contexte de l'analyse que commande l'alinéa 79(1)b), ne devraient pas être considérées comme le « but », l'« objet » ou la « nature générale » des actes en question. Si le contexte s'y prête, la preuve d'une justification commerciale valable du comportement en cause peut l'emporter sur l'intention réputée découlant des effets réels ou prévisibles de ce comportement, en montrant que ces effets anti-concurrentiels ne constituent pas en fait l'objet prépondérant dudit comportement. Essentiellement, la justification commerciale valable forme une autre explication possible des motifs du comportement attaqué. Pour être pertinente dans le contexte de l'alinéa 79(1)b), la justification commerciale doit être une raison fondée sur l'efficience ou proconcurrentielle du comportement en question, raison attribuable au défendeur, qui se rapporte aux effets anti-concurrentiels et/ou à l'intention subjective de ce comportement et leur fait contrepoids. Je reviendrai plus loin sur l'application appropriée de la doctrine de la justification commerciale valable au contexte de l'alinéa 79(1)b) lorsque j'examinerai l'analyse effectuée par le Tribunal dans la présente affaire.

2) La décision rendue par le Tribunal sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)b)

[74] Dans la présente espèce, il semblerait que le Tribunal ait correctement formulé le critère juridique applicable. On peut lire ce qui suit au paragraphe 171 de l'exposé de ses motifs, au début de son examen de la définition que donne sa jurisprudence de l'expression « agissements anti-concurrentiels » :

> Pour établir si des agissements donnés sont anti-concurrentiels, le Tribunal doit prendre en considération la nature et l'objet de ces agissements, ainsi que l'incidence qu'ils ont ou peuvent avoir sur le marché pertinent.(Nielsen, à la page 257; Laidlaw, à la page 333; et NutraSweet, à la page 34.) Dans Télé-Direct aussi bien que Laidlaw, le Tribunal a évalué les agissements dont on alléguait le caractère anti-concurrentiel en tenant compte de leurs effets sur les concurrents. [Non souligné dans l'original.]

the key sentence from NutraSweet, at page 34, to the effect that the feature common to anti-competitive acts is that they are all performed for a "purpose", namely "an intended negative effect on a competitor that is predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary". This formulation was also repeated in the concluding section of the Tribunal's decision (at paragraph 284).

[75] However, despite this correct articulation of the test, the Tribunal's analysis of the salient features of the applicable legal test is a cause for concern. At the end of the portion of its paragraph 79(1)(b) analysis entitled "The Law", the Tribunal summarized as follows its understanding of key aspects of the legal test (at paragraph 191):

> The Tribunal [in Tele-Direct] has stated that there must be a link between the impugned practice and a decrease in competition. Moreover, if a practice does not appear to have an exclusionary effect or cause detriment to the consumer, it cannot be said to be anti-competitive. [Emphasis added.]

[76] This statement is incorrect, in at least two respects.

[77] First, for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b), a link need not be proven between the impugned practice and a decrease in competition. Quite simply, such a causal link is not part of the legal test for an anti-competitive act. Moreover, an emphasis upon evidence of this type runs the risk of obscuring the correct focus of the paragraph 79(1)(b) test. An anti-competitive act is one whose purpose is an intended negative effect on a competitor that is predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary. The focus of analysis is thus on the act itself, to discern its purpose. The questions as to whether a decrease in competition in the market is evident, or whether any such decrease can be causally attributed to the impugned practice, are not directly relevant for this task. Certainly, such findings are not requisite elements of the test for an anti-competitive act.

à la page 65 de NutraSweet, comme quoi les agissements anti-concurrentiels ont pour caractéristique commune d'avoir un « but » particulier, à savoir d'entraîner un « effet négatif intentionnel sur un concurrent [. . .] [effet qui] doit être abusif, viser une exclusion ou une mise au pas ». Le Tribunal a aussi répété cette formule dans la conclusion de sa décision (au paragraphe 284).

[75] Cependant, bien que le Tribunal ait ainsi formulé correctement le critère juridique applicable, son analyse des caractères saillants de ce critère pose problème. À la fin de la partie de son analyse de l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)b) intitulée « Le droit », soit au paragraphe 191, le Tribunal résume comme suit son interprétation des aspects principaux de ce critère juridique :

> Le Tribunal a déclaré [dans Télé-Direct] qu'il doit y avoir un lien entre la pratique attaquée et la diminution de la concurrence. En outre, ne peuvent être considérées comme anti-concurrentielles les pratiques qui ne se révèlent pas avoir d'effet tendant à exclure ou causer de préjudice aux consommateurs. [Non souligné dans l'original.]

[77] Premièrement, pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)b), il n'est pas nécessaire d'établir un lien entre la pratique attaquée et une diminution de la concurrence. L'établissement d'un tel lien de causalité ne fait tout simplement pas partie du critère juridique applicable aux agissements anti-concurrentiels. En outre, en mettant l'accent sur la nécessité d'une preuve de cette nature, on court le risque de faire dévier ce qui doit rester l'axe du critère de l'alinéa 79(1)b). Un agissement anti-concurrentiel est un comportement ayant pour but un effet négatif intentionnel sur un concurrent, effet qui doit être abusif, ou viser une exclusion ou une mise au pas. L'analyse doit donc être axée sur le comportement lui-même, dont il s'agit de discerner le but. Les questions de savoir si l'on peut constater une diminution de la concurrence sur le marché ou si la cause d'une telle diminution peut être attribuée à la pratique attaquée ne sont pas directement pertinentes à l'égard de cette tâche. De telles conclusions ne sont certainement pas des éléments nécessaires du critère de l'existence d'un agissement anti-concurrentiel.

[78] Obviously, if an act is to be found anti-competitive, there must be evidence linking the impugned practice to the requisite intended negative effect on a competitor: the practice must be found to cause or at least contribute to the intended negative effect. Such a negative effect on a competitor must also be found to be the "purpose" of the practice in question, and to this end, all relevant factors must be taken into account and weighed to determine if the requisite purpose is established. One must remember, however, that in the context of paragraph 79(1)(b), evidentiary factors are relevant only in so far as they shed light upon the paragraph 79(1)(b) statutory test, that is upon the purpose of the act vis-à-vis competitors. Evidence concerning other types of effects of the impugned act that are not related to competitors—while perhaps pertinent in respect of the paragraph 79(1)(c) assessment of competition—are not directly relevant for paragraph 79(1)(b). Similarly, evidence concerning the general competitive state and structure of the relevant market, and whether such features can be causally attributed to the impugned act, are not the direct focus of the paragraph 79(1)(b) analysis, and are more properly considered under paragraph 79(1)(c). In short, paragraph 79(1)(b) simply concerns whether the act displays the requisite intended effect on competitors; it is not directly concerned with the state of competition in the market or the general causes thereof. In directing itself to the contrary, and requiring proof of a causal link between the impugned act and a decrease in competition, the Tribunal erred.

[78] À l'évidence, pour que la pratique attaquée puisse être déclarée anti-concurrentielle, il doit y avoir des éléments de preuve qui en démontrent le lien avec le facteur nécessaire qu'est l'effet négatif intentionnel sur un concurrent : il faut établir que cette pratique cause ledit effet ou, à tout le moins, y contribue. Il faut aussi établir qu'un tel effet négatif sur un concurrent constitue le « but » ou l'« objet » de la pratique en question, et il faut à cette fin prendre en considération et apprécier tous les facteurs pertinents. On doit cependant se garder d'oublier que, dans le contexte de l'alinéa 79(1)b), les facteurs de preuve n'ont de pertinence que dans la mesure où ils éclairent l'application du critère juridique de cet alinéa, c'est-à-dire le but de la pratique par rapport aux concurrents. La preuve concernant d'autres sortes d'effets du comportement attaqué qui ne sont pas liés aux concurrents, si elle peut se révéler pertinente à l'égard de l'évaluation du niveau de concurrence sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)c), n'a pas de pertinence directe relativement à l'alinéa 79(1)b). De même, les éléments de preuve concernant la structure et l'état généraux de la concurrence sur le marché pertinent et le point de savoir si la cause de ces caractéristiques peut être attribuée à la pratique attaquée n'intéressent pas directement l'analyse relevant de l'alinéa 79(1)b), et doivent plutôt être examinés sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)c). Bref, l'alinéa 79(1)b) pose purement et simplement la question de savoir si le comportement considéré a sur les concurrents l'effet intentionnel de la nature requise; il n'a pas de rapport direct avec l'état de la concurrence sur le marché ou ses causes générales. En orientant son analyse dans le sens contraire et en exigeant la preuve d'un lien de causalité entre la pratique attaquée et une diminution de la concurrence, le Tribunal a commis une erreur.

[79] Second, the Tribunal appears mistakenly to suggest in the above-quoted passage that the impugned practice's effects on the consumer should or could be considered within the paragraph 79(1)(b) analysis. However, contrary to what the Tribunal implies in the above quotation, "detriment to the consumer" is not a relevant independent consideration for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b), as evidence of this type does not relate directly to whether an act has the requisite defining characteristic of an intended negative effect on a competitor. The effect of an act on consumers may in some circumstances be relevant in assessing the credibility and weight of a proffered business justification, as I explain further below. Otherwise, however, such evidence is largely irrelevant for the purposes of the paragraph 79(1)(b) assessment, and is more appropriately considered under paragraph 79(1)(c). To the extent that the Tribunal suggests in the above-quoted sentence that "detriment to the consumer" is an independently relevant consideration for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b), the Tribunal therefore erred.

[80] The Tribunal thus embarked on its paragraph 79(1)(b) analysis from an incorrect foundation: it erroneously believed itself obliged to consider factors which are not relevant in the correct legal test. The Supreme Court stated in Southam, at paragraph 41 that "[i]f the Tribunal did ignore items of evidence that the law requires it to consider, then the Tribunal erred in law." Logically, this statement can be extended to encompass the situation of the case at bar: if the Tribunal considered items of evidence that the law requires it not to consider, then the Tribunal also erred in law. Moreover, these irrelevant factors may well have played a decisive role in this case: according to the Tribunal's own articulation, evidence of a link between the practice and a decrease in competition was considered to be required for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b). Thus, to the extent that the Tribunal misdirected itself as to the applicable legal test, and as a consequence considered irrelevant factors in making its paragraph 79(1)(b) determination, the Tribunal committed a reversible error of law.

[81] The Tribunal's erroneous interpretation of the paragraph 79(1)(b) test played a significant role in its analysis of the SDP. It is clear that in concluding that the un tel préjudice ne se rapportent pas directement au point de savoir si un comportement donné remplit la condition nécessaire d'avoir un effet négatif intentionnel sur un concurrent. L'effet d'un comportement sur les consommateurs peut dans certains cas se révéler pertinent aux fins d'évaluation de la crédibilité d'une justification commerciale invoquée et de son poids, comme je l'expliquerai plus loin. Autrement, la preuve de cette nature est dans une large mesure dénuée de pertinence aux fins de l'analyse qu'exige l'alinéa 79(1)b) et doit plutôt être prise en considération dans le cadre de l'alinéa 79(1)c). Dans la mesure où il donne à entendre dans la phrase citée plus haut que le « préjudice aux consommateurs » est un facteur pertinent indépendant à prendre en considération pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)b), le Tribunal a donc aussi commis une erreur.

[80] Le Tribunal a ainsi entrepris son analyse relative à l'alinéa 79(1)b) à partir d'un principe erroné : il s'est cru à tort obligé de prendre en considération des facteurs qui ne sont pas pertinents du point de vue du critère juridique applicable. La Cour suprême fait observer au paragraphe 41 de Southam, que « [s]i le Tribunal a effectivement fait abstraction d'éléments de preuves que le droit lui commande de prendre en considération, il a alors commis une erreur de droit ». Logiquement, on peut étendre le sens de cette proposition de manière qu'elle s'applique à la présente espèce : si le Tribunal a pris en considération des éléments de preuve dont le droit lui commande de ne pas tenir compte, il a alors aussi commis une erreur de droit. En outre, il se pourrait bien que ces facteurs non pertinents aient joué un rôle décisif dans l'affaire qui nous occupe; si l'on en croit sa propre formulation, le Tribunal estimait nécessaire, pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)b), que la preuve fût faite de l'existence d'un lien entre la pratique attaquée et une diminution de la concurrence. Par conséquent, dans la mesure où il s'est mépris sur le critère juridique applicable et a par suite pris en considération des facteurs non pertinents pour rendre sa décision sous le régime de l'alinéa 79(1)b), le Tribunal a commis une erreur de droit donnant lieu à révision.

[81] L'interprétation erronée par le Tribunal du critère de l'alinéa 79(1)b) a joué un rôle important dans son analyse du PDS. Il est évident que, pour conclure que le

SDP was not anti-competitive, the Tribunal relied heavily upon its mistaken understanding that a demonstrable link must exist between the impugned act and a decrease in competition. Indeed, the Tribunal expressly stated that this factor was "the most striking" basis for its conclusion (at paragraph 261):

> The most striking argument against the alleged anti-competitive effect of the SDP is the fact that it has not prevented entry nor competition in certain regions. The SDP has not prevented an increase in imports, nor has it prevented the emergence, for the first time in thirty years, of a new manufacturer of cast iron DWV products. For a practice to be found anti-competitive, it must have a negative effect on competition. As was stated in Tele-Direct, there has to be a link between the practice and its alleged anti-competitive effect. In the instant case, the link has not been established to the Tribunal's satisfaction. The Tribunal recognizes that entry may be difficult, but this appears unrelated to the SDP. Several other factors come into play: Bibby is a known manufacturer that offers a complete line of products; the market is not a growth market, thus limiting investment potential. Yet, it has been possible for competitors to match Bibby's price and offer a reliable supply, to the point of making it an interesting proposition for distributors or contractors to change suppliers. This has occurred, notwithstanding the SDP, as illustrated by new entrants such as Sierra and Vandem, and by new arrangements such as Wolseley's change of suppliers.

[82] As this passage shows, the Tribunal's incorrect assumption that a link to a reduction in competition was required under paragraph 79(1)(b) critically influenced its reasoning. Instead of enquiring as to whether the SDP's purpose was an intended negative effect on competitors, the Tribunal asked whether there was evidence of a decrease in competition in the relevant market, in the abstract, and whether the identified competitive problems could be causally attributed to the SDP and hence be considered its "effects". This approach, of focussing on the general state of competition in the market rather than on the purpose of the impugned act, led the Tribunal to adopt an unwarrantedly and incorrectly narrow test for paragraph 79(1)(b): essentially, the Tribunal's reasoning would imply that unless an impugned act prevents entry of PDS n'était pas anti-concurrentiel, le Tribunal s'est fondé dans une large mesure sur sa conception erronée qu'il doit exister un lien démontrable entre le comportement attaqué et une diminution de la concurrence. En fait, le Tribunal écrit en toutes lettres que ce facteur est l'argument « le plus fort » qui a déterminé sa conclusion (au paragraphe 261) :

> L'argument le plus fort avancé contre la thèse de l'effet anticoncurrentiel du PDS est le fait que celui-ci n'a pas empêché l'entrée ni la concurrence dans certaines régions. Le PDS n'a pas empêché la progression des importations, pas plus que l'émergence, pour la première fois en 30 ans, d'un nouveau fabricant de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte. Pour être déclarée anticoncurrentielle, une pratique doit avoir un effet défavorable sur la concurrence. Comme le Tribunal l'a fait observer dans Télé-Direct, il doit y avoir un lien entre la pratique attaquée et l'effet anticoncurrentiel qu'on lui attribue. Dans la présente espèce, un tel lien n'a pas été établi de manière à convaincre le Tribunal. Ce dernier reconnaît que l'entrée sur le marché considéré peut être difficile, mais cette difficulté ne paraît pas liée au PDS. D'autres facteurs jouent ici : Bibby est un fabricant bien connu qui offre une ligne complète; et le marché ne présente pas de perspectives de croissance, ce qui limite les possibilités d'investissement. Pourtant, il s'est révélé possible pour les concurrents de Bibby d'offrir des prix comparables aux siens, à tel point que le changement de fournisseur a pu paraître avantageux à certains distributeurs ou entrepreneurs. C'est ainsi que, malgré le PDS, de nouvelles entreprises telles que Sierra et Vandem ont pris pied sur le marché, et que Wolseley a accordé sa clientèle à un autre fournisseur.

[82] Comme le montre ce passage, l'hypothèse erronée du Tribunal que l'alinéa 79(1)b) exigeait la démonstration d'un lien avec une réduction de la concurrence a exercé une influence cruciale sur son raisonnement. Au lieu de se poser la question de savoir si le PDS avait pour but un effet négatif intentionnel sur les concurrents, le Tribunal s'est demandé s'il y avait des éléments de preuve établissant une diminution de la concurrence sur le marché pertinent, dans l'abstrait, et si l'on pouvait attribuer la cause des problèmes de concurrence constatés au PDS et par conséquent les considérer comme les « effets » de ce dernier. Cette approche consistant à orienter l'attention vers l'état général de la concurrence sur le marché plutôt que vers le but de la pratique attaquée a amené le Tribunal à adopter de manière injustifiable et erronée un critère competitors or otherwise prevents competition, or unless it is the (predominant) cause of the uncompetitive attributes observed in the market, the act cannot be considered anti-competitive. This result is clearly incorrect.

[83] In my view, the Tribunal's error of law with respect to paragraph 79(1)(b) is partly attributable to a conflation of the legal test for paragraph 79(1)(c) with that applicable for paragraph 79(1)(b). As I mentioned above at the outset of my analysis, the multi-element structure of section 79 suggests that upon proper interpretation, each statutory element must give rise to a distinct legal test. To repeat, paragraph 79(1)(b) relates to whether the impugned act exhibits the requisite anti-competitive purpose vis-à-vis competitors, while paragraph 79(1)(c) concerns the broader state of competition, and whether the practice has the effect of substantially lessening competition in the relevant market. A particular indirect evidentiary indicator may serve subtly different—yet importantly distinct—purposes in regard to paragraph 79(1)(b) as compared to paragraph 79(1)(c). Since paragraph 79(1)(b) focuses on whether the impugned act was performed for a particular purpose with respect to competitors, the relevant factors—that is, evidence concerning its foreseeable effects on competitors, business justifications for its adoption, and subjective intent—are to be interpreted in this particular light. By contrast, paragraph 79(1)(c) mandates an assessment of the substantiality of the practice's actual or likely effects on competition in the relevant market(s), a task that proceeds from the vantage point of the market as a whole and invites consideration of a wider range of effects of the practice in question. The approach adopted by the Tribunal in this case does not properly recognize or maintain these important conceptual distinctions between the statutory elements of paragraphs 79(1)(b) and 79(1)(c).

trop étroit pour l'application de l'alinéa 79(1)b); essentiellement, le raisonnement du Tribunal impliquerait que, à moins d'empêcher l'entrée de concurrents ou d'empêcher autrement la concurrence, ou à moins de constituer la cause (principale) des caractéristiques anti-concurrentielles observées sur le marché, le comportement attaqué ne peut être considéré comme un agissement anti-concurrentiel. Cette proposition est à l'évidence erronée.

[83] À mon sens, l'erreur de droit du Tribunal touchant l'alinéa 79(1)b) est en partie attribuable à une fusion du critère juridique applicable à l'alinéa 79(1)c) et de celui qui correspond à l'alinéa 79(1)b). Comme je le disais plus haut au début de mon analyse, la pluralité des conditions prévues à l'article 79 donne à penser que, si on l'interprète bien, à chacune de ces conditions doit correspondre un critère juridique distinct. Pour le redire encore une fois, l'alinéa 79(1)b) porte sur le point de savoir si la pratique attaquée a bien le but anti-concurrentiel qu'elle doit avoir à l'égard des concurrents, tandis que l'alinéa 79(1)c) concerne l'état général de la concurrence et la question de savoir si ladite pratique a pour effet de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence sur le marché pertinent. Un élément donné de preuve indirecte peut remplir des fonctions subtilement différentes—mais dont il est important de voir qu'elles restent bien distinctes— relativement aux alinéas 79(1)b) et 79(1)c). Comme l'alinéa 79(1)b) porte avant tout sur le point de savoir si le comportement attaqué avait un but particulier pour ce qui concerne les concurrents, les facteurs pertinents—c'est-à-dire la preuve concernant ses effets prévisibles sur les concurrents, les justifications commerciales de son adoption et l'intention subjective—doivent être interprétés dans ce cadre déterminé. L'alinéa 79(1)c), quant à lui, commande une appréciation du caractère sensible ou non des effets réels ou vraisemblables de ce comportement sur la concurrence dans le ou les marchés pertinents, tâche qu'il faut remplir à partir d'une vue d'ensemble du marché et qui appelle l'examen d'un ensemble plus vaste d'effets du comportement en question. Or, le Tribunal a adopté dans la présente affaire une approche qui ne prend pas en compte ou ne maintient pas comme il faudrait ces importantes distinctions conceptuelles entre les conditions que prévoient respectivement les alinéas 79(1)b) et 79(1)c).

(3) The valid business justification and paragraph 79(1)(b)

[84] The Tribunal's conflation of the legal tests for paragraphs 79(1)(b) and 79(1)(c) is also apparent in its discussion of the business justification arguments proffered by the respondent. The Tribunal noted two business justifications suggested by the respondent: first, that the SDP's uniform rebate structure encourages competition, by creating a level playing field between small and large distributors; and second, that the SDP makes possible the high-volume sales necessary to enable Bibby to maintain a full line of products.

[85] The Tribunal rejected the first business justification proposed by the respondent, but was persuaded by the second. With respect to the first justification, the Tribunal concluded (at paragrah 209) that although the creation of equitable opportunities for small- and medium-sized enterprises to participate in the Canadian economy is an objective of the Act set out in section 1.1, this is not a relevant consideration for the purposes of section 79:

> While the Tribunal acknowledges this to be an enunciated purpose of the Act, the Tribunal is of the view that this purpose is unrelated to the issue of abuse of dominance. Competition between distributors is not at issue. Rather, the case is about competition between Bibby and other suppliers of cast iron DWV products. The equitable characteristics of the SDP as it relates to distributors have little to do with whether Bibby is exercising its market power in a way that precludes competition between suppliers of the product. In consequence, this argument of business justification must fail.

[86] The Tribunal was persuaded, however, by the second business justification put forward by the respondent. It explained its reasoning as follows (at paragraphs 212 and 259):

> High-volume sales are also important in a business which is volume-driven, as Mr. Leonard, General Manager of Bibby, explained. Bibby argues that it needs the sales to ensure efficiencies and to lower its cost of production; the Commissioner did not challenge this assertion. The rebate

3) La justification commerciale valable et l'alinéa 79(1)b)

[84] La fusion opérée par le Tribunal entre les critères juridiques correspondant respectivement aux alinéas 79(1)b) et 79(1)c) est également manifeste dans son analyse des arguments présentés par l'intimée au titre des justifications commerciales. Le Tribunal note deux justifications commerciales avancées par l'intimée : premièrement, le fait que le système uniforme d'abattements et de ristournes du PDS favoriserait la concurrence en égalisant les chances pour les petits et les grands distributeurs; et deuxièmement, le fait que le PDS rendrait possible les ventes en grandes quantités dont Bibby a besoin pour maintenir une ligne complète de produits.

[85] Le Tribunal rejette la première justification commerciale proposée par l'intimée, mais accueille la seconde. Pour ce qui concerne la première, le Tribunal conclut (au paragraphe 209) que, si l'un des objets explicites de la Loi, énoncés à son article 1.1, est effectivement d'assurer à la petite et à la moyenne entreprise une chance honnête de participer à l'économie canadienne, cet objet n'est pas un facteur pertinent pour l'application de l'article 79 :

> Le Tribunal reconnaît qu'il s'agit là d'un objet explicite de la Loi, mais estime que cet objet n'est pas lié à la question de l'abus de position dominante. La concurrence entre les distributeurs n'est pas ici en question. La présente espèce concerne plutôt la concurrence entre Bibby et les autres fournisseurs de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte. Le caractère équitable du PDS par rapport aux distributeurs n'a pas grand-chose à voir avec le point de savoir si Bibby exerce sa puissance commerciale d'une manière qui entraverait la concurrence entre fournisseurs des produits susdits. En conséquence, cette justification commerciale n'est pas recevable.

[86] Le Tribunal se laisse cependant convaincre du bien-fondé de la seconde justification commerciale avancée par l'intimée. Il explique son raisonnement comme suit (aux paragraphes 212 et 259) :

> En outre, la vente de volumes considérables s'avère importante dans un secteur où la quantité de la production est un facteur déterminant, ainsi que l'a expliqué M. Leonard, directeur général de Bibby. Celle-ci fait valoir qu'elle a besoin de fortes ventes pour assurer son efficience et pour diminuer structure provided for in the SDP does encourage distributors to deal with Bibby for all three products if they choose Bibby to supply one of them and in consequence Bibby's sales are increased. As was stated in Laidlaw, the self-interest justification is not sufficient. However, in this case, the Tribunal accepts, based on Mr. Leonard's evidence, that high volumes allow Bibby to maintain in inventory smaller, less profitable but nevertheless important products. As a result, items that are used less often remain available in the market. This availability serves the interests of distributors and contractors, whether or not they belong to the SDP, and ultimately benefits the consumer.

The Respondent's business argument that Bibby needs to sell a certain volume in all three products to be able to maintain full production of all product lines is valid. There are certainly recognizable advantages in having a reliable source able to manufacture and supply a full line of cast iron pipe DWV products for the Canadian market.

[87] This analysis is problematic, as the Tribunal appears to have lost sight of the role of the valid business justification doctrine within paragraph 79(1)(b), and instead seems to grant it an independent role. A business justification for an impugned act is properly relevant only in so far as it is pertinent and probative in relation to the determination required by paragraph 79(1)(b), namely the determination as to whether the purpose for which the act was performed was a predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor. As I explained above in the discussion of the intentionality aspect of the paragraph 79(1)(b) test, a valid business justification can, in appropriate circumstances, overcome the deemed intention arising from the actual or foreseeable negative effects of the conduct on competitors, by demonstrating that such anti-competitive effects are not in fact the overriding purpose of the conduct in question. In this way, a valid business justification essentially provides an alternative explanation as to why the impugned act was performed, which in the right circumstances might be sufficient to counterbalance the evidence of negative son coût de production, affirmation que la commissaire n'a pas contestée. Or, la structure des abattements et ristournes que prévoit le PDS incite effectivement les distributeurs qui choisissent Bibby comme fournisseur d'un produit donné à acheter l'ensemble des trois à cette même entreprise, de sorte que les ventes de Bibby s'en trouvent augmentées. Comme le Tribunal l'a fait observer dans Laidlaw, l'intérêt propre n'est pas une justification commerciale suffisante. Cependant, dans la présente espèce, le Tribunal, se fondant sur le témoignage de M. Leonard, accepte l'argument que la vente de forts volumes permet à Bibby de garder en stock des produits qui se vendent moins et ne sont pas aussi rentables que les autres, mais qui restent néanmoins importants. Par suite, les articles d'usage peu fréquent demeurent disponibles sur le marché. Cette disponibilité sert les intérêts des distributeurs et des entrepreneurs, qu'ils soient ou non inscrits au PDS, et, en dernière analyse, les intérêts des consommateurs.

Le Tribunal estime valable l'argument commercial de la défenderesse selon lequel Bibby doit vendre un volume déterminé de chacun des trois produits pour pouvoir continuer la production intégrale de l'ensemble de ses gammes. On ne peut certainement s'empêcher de reconnaître les avantages que présente l'existence d'une entreprise fiable capable de fabriquer et de fournir une ligne complète de produits d'évacuation et de ventilation en fonte sur le marché canadien.

[87] Cette analyse fait problème, étant donné que le Tribunal paraît y avoir perdu de vue le rôle de la doctrine de la justification commerciale valable dans le cadre de l'alinéa 79(1)b), et semble plutôt lui attribuer un rôle indépendant. La justification commerciale d'une pratique attaquée ne peut être prise en considération que dans la mesure où elle est pertinente et probante par rapport à la décision qu'exige l'alinéa 79(1)b), soit celle du point de savoir si le comportement attaqué avait pour but un effet négatif sur un concurrent, effet qui doit être abusif, ou viser une exclusion ou une mise au pas. Comme je l'ai expliqué plus haut dans l'analyse de l'aspect relatif à l'intention du critère applicable à l'alinéa 79(1)b), une justification commerciale valable peut, si le contexte le permet, l'emporter sur l'intention réputée découlant des effets négatifs, réels ou prévisibles, du comportement attaqué sur les concurrents, en démontrant que ces effets anti-concurrentiels ne sont pas en fait le but prédominant de ce comportement. De cette façon, une justification commerciale valable constitue une autre explication possible des motifs du comportement attaqué, laquelle, si la situation s'y prête, effects on competitors or subjective intent in this vein.

[88] The valid business justification doctrine is not an absolute defence for paragraph 79(1)(b). Rather, a business justification is properly employed to counterbalance or neutralize other evidence of an anti-competitive purpose, prior to making a determination under 79(1)(b). As the Tribunal observed in D & B, a business justification proffered by a respondent must therefore be "weigh[ed]. . . in light of any anti-competitive effects to establish the overriding purpose" of the impugned act (at page 262, also quoted in Tele-Direct, at page 180). In D & B, the Tribunal properly emphasized this balancing exercise (at page 265):

> Proof of the existence of a business motive for long-term contracts [the impugned conduct] that was unrelated to an anti-competitive purpose would undoubtedly be relevant to an evaluation of an allegation of anti-competitive acts. The mere proof of some legitimate business purpose would be, however, hardly sufficient to support a finding that there is no anti-competitive act. All known factors must be taken into account in assessing the nature and purpose of the acts alleged to be anti-competitive.

[89] In the case at bar, the Commissioner argued that the business justification accepted by the Tribunal is actually a self-interest argument based on selling more product, and therefore cannot qualify as a business justification for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b). The respondent countered that this was a mischaracterization of the Tribunal's reasons, as in its view the business justification actually accepted by the Tribunal related to the maintenance of a full product line and the consequent benefits for consumers: according to the respondent, "it is crystal clear from the Tribunal's reasons that the Tribunal accepted the SDP's business purpose on the basis of its benefits to customers and end consumers, rather than Canada Pipe" (respondent's memorandum of fact and law, at paragraph 83, emphasis in original).

> La preuve de l'existence d'un motif d'ordre commercial justifiant les contrats à long terme [qui constituent le comportement attaqué], à l'exclusion de toute fin anti-concurrentielle, est sans aucun doute pertinente dans le cadre de l'évaluation d'une allégation d'agissements anti-concurrentiels. Toutefois, la seule preuve d'une quelconque fin commerciale légitime peut difficilement justifier une conclusion selon laquelle il n'y a pas d'agissements anti-concurrentiels. Tous les facteurs connus doivent être pris en considération pour déterminer la nature et la fin des agissements que l'on prétend être anti-concurrentiels.

[90] In my view, the respondent's interpretation of the Tribunal's reasons with respect to the second business justification is apt. However, this reasoning, which relies solely upon consumer welfare benefits to establish the business justification, is at the core of the Tribunal's error. Simply stated, improved consumer welfare is on its own insufficient to establish a valid business justification for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b). A valid business justification must provide a credible efficiency or pro-competitive explanation, unrelated to an anti-competitive purpose, for why the dominant firm engaged in the conduct alleged to be anti-competitive. The business justification must therefore be attributable to the respondent, for it is the latter's allegedly anti-competitive conduct which is sought to be explained.

[91] In the case at bar, the Tribunal's reasons do not establish the requisite efficiency-related link between the SDP and the respondent, and hence do not supply a legitimate explanation for the latter's choice to engage in the impugned conduct, unrelated to an anti-competitive purpose. Without such a link, self-interest remains as the only justification for the SDP which is attributable to the respondent for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b). The Tribunal thus erred in concluding, on the basis of the reasoning provided in its decision, that the respondent had established a valid business justification for the SDP. While this error may not ultimately have been determinative, in that a valid business justification is at most a factor to be balanced within the paragraph 79(1)(b) determination, it may well have played an important supporting role in the Tribunal's decision with respect to paragraph 79(1)(b).

(4) Conclusion with respect to paragraph 79(1)(b)

[92] In sum, the aspects of the Tribunal's decision discussed above admittedly represent short extracts of a long and complex analysis. However, the identified errors suggest a basic misapprehension and misapplication of the legal test for paragraph 79(1)(b),

4) Conclusion relative à l'alinéa 79(1)b)

and a troubling conflation between paragraphs 79(1)(b) and (c). Thus, at the very least, the extracts highlighted above render suspect the Tribunal's analysis of the relevant factors in the context of paragraph 79(1)(b). I can only conclude that the matter should be returned to the Tribunal for a reconsideration of its paragraph 79(1)(b) determination in light of the correct legal test.

impropre du critère juridique relatif à l'alinéa 79(1)b), ainsi que d'une fusion gênante des éléments respectifs des alinéas 79(1)b) et c). Par conséquent, les extraits relevés plus haut font à tout le moins peser un soupçon sur l'analyse proposée par le Tribunal des facteurs pertinents dans le contexte de l'alinéa 79(1)b). Force m'est donc de conclure que l'affaire devrait être renvoyée au Tribunal pour qu'il réexamine sa décision relative à l'alinéa 79(1)b) en fonction du critère juridique approprié.

(C) For the purposes of subsection 77(2), did the Tribunal err in its determination with respect to whether the SDP has the result that competition is or is likely to be lessened substantially?

C) Pour l'application du paragraphe 77(2), le Tribunal a-t-il formulé une conclusion erronée touchant le point de savoir si la concurrence est ou sera vraisemblablement réduite sensiblement en conséquence du PDS?

[93] As I described above at paragraph 21 of these reasons, there is a parallel structure and logic between the requisite statutory elements for exclusive dealing under subsection 77(2) and abuse of dominant position under subsection 79(1). The parties did not present separate arguments with respect to the substantial lessening of competition element of subsection 77(2), and instead simply referred the Court to their arguments concerning this element in the context of section 79. This same approach was adopted by the Tribunal, which concluded, "[f]or the same reasons. . . as in our analysis under section 79," that the Commissioner had failed to establish that the exclusive dealing practice has lessened competition substantially (paragraph 282).

[94] In NutraSweet, the Tribunal observed that "the fundamental test of substantial lessening of competition is the same in both sections of the Act [section 79 and subsection 77(2)]" (page 56). The similarity between this element in section 79 and subsection 77(2) is indeed strong, in that both provisions employ the key concepts of substantial lessening and competition. However, the two provisions also contain some differences in wording. In particular, the scope of section 79 appears to include events of the past, which are not expressly included for the purposes of subsection 77(2): paragraph 79(1)(c) encompasses three time frames ("has had, is having or is likely to have"), while subsection 77(2) refers to only two ("is or is likely to").

77(2); en effet, l'alinéa 79(1)c) englobe les trois divisions du temps (« a, a eu ou aura vraisemblablement »), tandis que le paragraphe 77(2) ne s'applique qu'au présent et à l'avenir (« est ou sera vraisemblablement »).

[95] For the purposes of this appeal, I need not consider whether the differences in wording between paragraph 79(1)(c) and subsection 77(2) might in particular cases properly yield substantively different results with respect to the substantial lessening of competition element. In the case at bar, it is clear that the Tribunal simply adopted the same legal test and analysis in respect of the substantial lessening of competition element for both section 79 and subsection 77(2). To the extent that the Tribunal erred in law in the context of paragraph 79(1)(c) in its interpretation of the test for substantial lessening of competition, the same errors of law apply with respect to subsection 77(2).

[95] Je n'ai pas à me demander, pour les besoins du présent appel, si les différences de libellé de l'alinéa 79(1)c) et du paragraphe 77(2) pourraient à bon droit, dans des cas particuliers, donner lieu à des conclusions de fond différentes touchant la condition de diminution sensible de la concurrence. Dans la présente espèce, il apparaît à l'évidence que le Tribunal a tout simplement appliqué le même critère juridique et la même analyse à la condition de diminution sensible de la concurrence considérée dans le cadre de l'article 79 et du paragraphe 77(2). Dans la mesure où le Tribunal a commis des erreurs de droit dans son interprétation du critère de la diminution sensible de la concurrence dans le contexte de l'alinéa 79(1)c), il peut être dit avoir commis les mêmes erreurs de droit relativement au paragraphe 77(2).

(D) For the purposes of subsection 77(2), did the Tribunal err in its determination with respect to whether the SDP is likely to impede entry or expansion of a firm or a product in a market or have any other exclusionary effect in a market?

D) Pour l'application du paragraphe 77(2), le Tribunal a-t-il formulé une conclusion erronée touchant le point de savoir si le PDS aura vraisemblablement, sur un marché, soit pour effet de faire obstacle à l'entrée ou au développement d'une firme, ou encore au lancement ou à l'expansion des ventes d'un produit, soit quelque autre effet tendant à exclure?

[96] The parallel structure of subsections 77(2) and 79(1) is also apparent in comparing the second elements required by the two statutory provisions: both provisions call for the identification of a particular type of impugned conduct, namely a practice of exclusive dealing with an exclusionary effect in the case of subsection 77(2), and a practice of anti-competitive acts in the case of paragraph 79(1)(b). The parties did not present separate arguments concerning this element of subsection 77(2), but rather appear to have assimilated this element into their arguments concerning section 79.

[96] Le parallélisme de structure entre les paragraphes 77(2) et 79(1) est également manifeste lorsque l'on compare les conditions qu'ils prévoient en second lieu : les deux paragraphes exigent du commissaire l'établissement d'un comportement déterminé, savoir une pratique d'exclusivité à effet tendant à exclure dans le cas du paragraphe 77(2), et une pratique d'agissements anti-concurrentiels dans le cas de l'alinéa 79(1)b). Les parties n'ont pas fait valoir de moyens distincts au sujet de cet élément du paragraphe 77(2), mais paraissent plutôt l'avoir incorporé dans leurs argumentations respectives touchant l'article 79.

[97] The Tribunal was satisfied that the SDP was a practice of exclusive dealing according to the statutory definition provided in paragraph 77(1)(b) (paragraph [97] La commissaire a convaincu le Tribunal que le PDS constituait une pratique d'exclusivité selon la définition de l'alinéa 77(1)b) (paragraphe 279).

279). However, the Tribunal concluded that an exclusionary effect had not been established, based on its analysis under section 79 (at paragraphs 281 and 282):

> We have concluded under section 79 that the SDP is not an anti-competitive practice because we found insufficient evidence to show that the SDP in itself had an exclusionary effect.
>
> For the same reasons therefore as in our analysis under section 79, we find that the Commissioner has failed to establish that the exclusive dealing practice impedes or is likely to impede entry of a new competitor or have any exclusionary effect. . .

Cependant, le Tribunal a aussi conclu, sur le fondement de son analyse relative à l'article 79, que la commissaire n'avait pas établi l'existence d'un effet tendant à exclure (aux paragraphes 281 et 282) :

> Nous avons conclu sous le régime de l'article 79 que le PDS n'est pas une pratique anticoncurrentielle, au motif de l'insuffisance des éléments produits pour établir que le PDS aurait en soi un effet tendant à exclure
> [. . .]
> Aux mêmes motifs, donc, que ceux que nous avons formulés dans notre analyse fondée sur l'article 79, nous concluons que la commissaire n'a pas établi que la pratique d'exclusivité ait, ou doive vraisemblablement avoir, soit pour effet de faire obstacle à l'entrée d'un nouveau concurrent, soit quelque autre effet tendant à exclure [. . .]

[98] For the purposes of this appeal, I need not decide the precise scope or nature of the similarity between the statutory element of subsection 77(2) concerning exclusionary effects, and paragraph 79(1)(b). There may well be differences between the two provisions, which could prove pertinent in a future case. However, it is sufficient in the circumstances of this case to note that the exclusionary effects required under subsection 77(2) are clearly of a relative nature, as indicated by use of the word "impede" in paragraphs 77(2)(a) and (b), rather than a more categorical verb, such as "prevent". I have already considered in detail the Tribunal's treatment of the evidence concerning barriers to entry and the effects of the SDP, and it is unnecessary to repeat this analysis here. My conclusion, stated above at paragraph 58, is equally applicable for the purposes of the Tribunal's determination with respect to the exclusionary effects element of subsection 77(2): the Tribunal's analysis of the evidence concerning barriers to entry and the effects of the SDP was conducted from the narrow perspective of prevention, and not the broader perspective implied by the word "impede". The adoption of this unduly narrow perspective constitutes reversible error.

[98] Je n'ai pas à décider, pour les besoins du présent appel, la portée ou la nature exactes de la similarité entre la condition relative aux effets tendant à exclure que prévoit le paragraphe 77(2) et la condition prévue à l'alinéa 79(1)b). Il se pourrait bien qu'il y ait des différences entre ces deux dispositions, et que ces différences se révèlent pertinentes dans une affaire ultérieure. Cependant, il suffit de noter, dans le contexte des faits de la présente espèce, que les effets tendant à exclure dont le paragraphe 77(2) exige l'établissement sont manifestement de nature relative, comme l'indique l'emploi, aux alinéas 77(2)a) et b), de l'expression « faire obstacle » plutôt que d'un verbe plus catégorique comme « empêcher ». J'ai déjà examiné en détail l'utilisation par le Tribunal des éléments de preuve concernant les obstacles à l'entrée et les effets du PDS, et il est inutile que je répète ici cette analyse. La conclusion que j'ai formulée au paragraphe 58 ci-dessus s'applique également à la conclusion du Tribunal touchant la condition relative aux effets tendant à exclure que prévoit le paragraphe 77(2) : le Tribunal a analysé la preuve concernant les obstacles à l'entrée et les effets du PDS du point de vue étroit qu'exprime le terme « empêcher » et non du point de vue plus large qu'appelle l'expression « faire obstacle ». L'adoption de ce point de vue indûment étroit constitue une erreur susceptible de révision.

[99] En outre, il est à noter que, comme le paragraphe 79(1), le paragraphe 77(2) énumère des conditions elements, each of which must be established before an order prohibiting exclusive dealing can issue. These distinct statutory elements must not be conflated: the existence of the various exclusionary effects described in paragraphs 77(2)(a), (b) and (c) must be considered separately from the question of whether there has been a substantial lessening of competition. Since the Tribunal relied, for the purpose of its subsection 77(2) determination concerning exclusionary effects, upon its erroneous paragraph 79(1)(b) reasoning, its conclusion in this regard cannot stand.

V. CONCLUSION

[100] For the above reasons, I would allow the appeal with costs, I would set aside the Tribunal's decision in this regard, and I would refer the matter back to the Tribunal for a redetermination in accordance with these reasons and on the basis of the evidence currently on record.

LÉTOURNEAU J.A.: I concur.

distinctes, dont chacune doit être remplie pour que puisse être rendue une ordonnance interdisant de pratiquer l'exclusivité. Ces conditions distinctes que prévoit la Loi ne doivent pas être fusionnées : l'existence des divers effets tendant à exclure que définissent les alinéas 77(2)a), b) et c) doit être examinée séparément de la question de savoir s'il y a eu diminution sensible de la concurrence. Or, comme le Tribunal a fondé la conclusion qu'il a formulée touchant les effets tendant à exclure dans le cadre du paragraphe 77(2) sur son raisonnement erroné à propos de l'alinéa 79(1)b), cette conclusion ne peut être maintenue.

V. CONCLUSION

LE JUGE LÉTOURNEAU, J.C.A. : Je souscris aux présents motifs.

LE JUGE PELLETIER, J.C.A. : Je souscris aux présents motifs.

Commissioner of Competition (Appellant)

Canada Pipe Company Ltd./Tuyauteries Canada Ltee (Respondent)

INDEXED AS: CANADA (COMMISSIONER OF COMPETITION) v. CANADA PIPE CO. (F.C.A.)

Federal Court of Appeal, Desjardins, Letourneau and Pelletier JJ.A.—Ottawa, February 7, 9 and June 23, 2006.

Competition — Cross-appeal from Competition Tribunal's dismissal of Commissioner of Competition's application for order under Competition Act, ss. 77, 79 — Tribunal holding respondent dominant in each of relevant markets in Canada for cast iron drain, waste and vent (DWV) products — Cross-appeal concerning Tribunal's assessment of product market definition, market power, both pertaining to finding respondent dominant in relevant markets — Tribunal's conclusion applicable market not including DWV products made from variety of different materials, because cast iron treated as separate market by distributors, not unreasonable — Conclusion respondent had market power in relevant markets also open to Tribunal — Cross-appeal dismissed, Pelletier J.A. dissenting as to issue of market power.

This was a cross-appeal from a decision of the Competition Tribunal dismissing the Commissioner of Competition's application for an order against the respondent under sections 77 and 79 of the Competition Act. The application related to the respondent's Stocking Distributor Program (SDP) for the sale and supply of its cast iron drain, waste and vent (DWV) products. The Tribunal held that the respondent was dominant in each of the relevant markets in Canada for cast iron DWV products, that it was a "major supplier" of cast iron products, and that by marketing its cast iron DWV products using the SDP, the respondent had engaged in a practice of exclusive dealing. At issue in the cross-appeal was the Tribunal's assessment of product market definition and market power (Competition Act, paragraph 79(1)(a)). The respondent submitted that if the Tribunal had followed the analytical approach it was required by law to adopt, it would have had to define the applicable market to include competing DWV products made from a variety of different materials. The issue of market power would not have arisen in such a properly defined product market as the respondent's market share would not have exceeded approximately 10 %.

Held (Pelletier J.A. dissenting), the cross-appeal should be dismissed.

Per Desjardins J.A. (Letourneau J.A. concurring): The Tribunal correctly identified the legal principles applicable to the determination of the product market, and adopted an appropriate methodology to apply these principles in the particular case of the respondent. The Tribunal considered "substitutability", that is, whether there exist sufficiently close substitutes to the product at issue, such that the market for that product includes those substitutes. As no direct evidence was presented to the Tribunal on the cross-elasticity of demand, the Tribunal proceeded to consider the indirect evidence by reference to the topics enumerated in the Enforcement Guidelines on the Abuse of Dominance Provisions. It concluded that cast iron still played a distinct role in the DWV industry and was treated as a separate market by distributors. Moreover, because of the significant price variation in cast iron DWV products, from region to region, the Tribunal found there were six geographic markets. Since the Tribunal considered the appropriate elements and arrived at a reasonable conclusion, these findings were immune from judicial intervention.

The Tribunal also correctly identified and articulated the principles applicable to the determination concerning market power, including both the direct and indirect approaches to this issue. It concluded that the evidence established the respondent could and did exercise market power in the relevant markets. Considering the evidence, it was open to the Tribunal to conclude on the direct approach that the respondent was pricing pipe and fittings with “hefty margins”, and that for pipe, fittings and mechanical joint couplings, it had a “significant ability to vary prices across the regions.” This indicated supra-competitive pricing. On the indirect approach, it was open to the Tribunal to conclude that the respondent had market power.

Per Pelletier J.A. (dissenting): The Tribunal’s conclusion with respect to market power was unreasonable. Given the Tribunal’s definition of market power as the ability to set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period, it was difficult to see on what basis the Tribunal could conclude that the respondent had market power in four of the six geographic markets identified. The respondent lowered its prices after the emergence of competing suppliers of cast iron products in those markets. The fact of lowering prices to respond to the emergence of new competitors is inconsistent with the definition of marker power.

[1] DESJARDINS J.A.: The Competition Tribunal (the Tribunal) dismissed an application by the appellant Commissioner of Competition (the Commissioner) seeking an order against the respondent (Canada Pipe or Bibby, which is a division of the respondent) under sections 77 [as am. by R.S.C., 1985 (2nd Supp.), c. 19, s. 45; S.C. 1999, c. 2, ss. 23, 37(y); c. 31, s. 52(F); 2002, c. 16, ss. 11.2, 11.3] and 79 [as enacted by R.S.C., 1985 (2nd Supp.), c. 19, s. 45; S.C. 1998, c. 37, s. 31; 1999, c. 2, s. 37(z); 2002, c. 16, s.11.4] of the Competition Act [R.S.C., 1985, c. C-34, s. 1 (as am. by R.S.C., 1985 (2nd Supp.), c. 19, s. 19)] (reported as (2005), 40 C.P.R. (4th) 453 (Comp. Trib.)).

[2] The application related to the marketing strategy—referred to as the Stocking Distributor Program or SDP—adopted by Canada Pipe for the sale and supply of its cast iron drain, waste and vent (DWV) products. The Tribunal held that Canada Pipe is dominant in each of the relevant markets in Canada for cast iron DWV products, that Canada Pipe is a "major supplier" of cast iron products, and that by marketing its cast iron DWV products using the SDP, Canada Pipe has engaged in a practice of exclusive dealing. The Tribunal further held, however, that the Commissioner had failed to establish that Canada Pipe has engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts that has, is or is likely to result in a substantial lessening or prevention of competition in the relevant markets, or that Canada Pipe's practice of exclusive dealing is likely to impede entry or expansion of a firm in a market or have any other exclusionary effect in a market such that competition is or is likely to be lessened substantially.

[3] The appeal by the Commissioner is disposed of in separate reasons [[2007] 2 F.C.R. 3 (F.C.A.)].

[4] We are seized of the cross-appeal whereby Canada Pipe claims that the Tribunal erred in its assessment of product market definition and market power.

[5] Canada Pipe's cross-appeal is confined to the Tribunal's treatment of paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act and to its determinations concerning the issues of product market and market power. (In a footnote to its memorandum of fact and law, paragraph 119, Canada Pipe adds, however, that these submissions have equal application to the exclusive dealings provisions of the Act in subsection 77(2). The determination of whether a market participant is a "major supplier" of a product in a market within the meaning of subsection 77(2) also hinges on the issues of market definition and market power.)

[6] The purpose of defining the relevant product market is to identify the possibility for the exercise of market power (Canada (Commissioner of Competition) v. Superior Propane Inc. (2000), 7 C.P.R. (4th) 385 (Comp. Trib.), at paragraph 47, revd on other grounds [2001] 3 F.C. 185C.A.)). Market power has been defined as the ability to set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period of time (Canada (Director of Investigations and Research) v. Southam, Inc. (1992), 43 C.P.R. (3d) 161 (Comp. Trib.), at page 177; Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. NutraSweet Co. (1990), 32 C.P.R. (3d) 1 (Comp. Trib.), at page 28).

[7] Canada Pipe submits that if the Tribunal had followed the analytical approach it was required by law to adopt in respect of these issues, it would have had to define the applicable product market to include competing DWV products made from a variety of different materials, including plastic, copper, stainless steel, asbestos cement and cast iron. Canada Pipe's market share in such a properly defined product market would not have exceeded approximately 10% at any relevant point in time. Canada Pipe says this is so regardless of the manner in which the applicable geographic markets are defined and regardless of whether the product market is further subdivided into pipe, fittings and couplings. The issue of market power, says Canada Pipe, simply does not arise in respect of a market participant having a market share in the range of 10%. There has never been, it says, an abuse of dominance case brought against a market participant having a market share of less than 10% (memorandum of fact and law of the respondent Canada Pipe, paragraph 119).

PRODUCT MARKET—ANALYSIS OF THE LAW AND THE EVIDENCE

[8] Defining the relevant product market is a necessary first step under paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act, as the Tribunal clearly recognized.

[9] Paragraph 79(1)(a) provides:

>
> (a) one or more persons substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business, [Emphasis is mine.]

[10] The Tribunal was careful in defining the operative terms of this provision of the Act (paragraphs 65, 66 and 67 of its reasons and order):

> A "class or species of business" has been interpreted by the Tribunal in abuse of dominance cases to mean the relevant product market. The expression "Canada or any area thereof" is to be understood as the geographic market, while "control" has been found to be synonymous with market power (Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. D & B Companies of Canada Ltd. ((1995), 64 C.P.R. (3d) 216 (hereinafter Nielsen decision)); Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd. ((1992), 40 C.P.R. (3d) 289, [1992] C.C.T.D. No. 1 (QL) (Comp. Trib.) (Laidlaw)); Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. NutraSweet Co. ((1990), 32 C.P.R. (3d) 1 (Comp. Trib.) (NutraSweet)); Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. ((1997), 73 C.P.R. (3d) 1 (Tele-Direct)). [Emphasis is mine.]

[11] The Tribunal further explained:

> The Act does not specify how the analysis under paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act is to proceed. However, in the above-mentioned cases, the analysis begins with a definition of the product market. This approach is also the one adopted by the Competition Bureau's (the "Bureau") Enforcement Guidelines on the Abuse of Dominance Provisions (the "Guidelines"). Although the Guidelines have no binding effect on the Tribunal, they are useful in that they serve to indicate how the Bureau will proceed in an abuse of dominance case. At section 3.2.1 the Guidelines underscore the importance of defining the product market:
> > This paragraph [79(1)(a)] of the Act contains a number of elements that need to be separately clarified: (i) the existence of a class or species of business in Canada or any area thereof; (ii) the meaning of "control"; and (iii) the meaning of "one or more persons."
> > 3.2.1(a) "Class or species ofbusiness"—Product Market Definition
> > A precondition for assessing market power is identifying existing competitors that are likely to constrain the ability of the firm or firms to profitably raise prices or otherwise restrict competition. The 1986 provisions adopted the term "class or species of business" rather than the term "market" in the context of the control element. The > Bureau approach is to consider defining a "class or species of business" as synonymous with defining a relevant product. The analysis begins by examining the product market(s) within which the alleged abuse of dominance has occurred or is occurring.

The Tribunal restates the same principle in Tele-Direct, and adds that the exercise is also necessary for the purposes of section 77:

> A necessary first step in deciding this case is to define the relevant market. This must be done for purposes of section 79 in order to determine if Tele-Direct, as alleged by the Director, "substantially or completely control[s] throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business". The Tribunal decided in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. D & B Companies of Canada Ltd. (1995), 64 C.P.R. (3d) 216, [1995] C.C.T.D. No. 20 (QL) (Comp. Trib.), that "class or species of business" means product market and "control" means market power …. [Emphasis is mine.]

[12] The Tribunal then explained (at paragraph 68 of its reasons and order) that in determining the relevant product market, it had to consider "substitutability". This meant whether there exist sufficiently close substitutes to the product at issue, such that the market for that product includes those substitutes.

[13] The Tribunal [at paragraph 68] adopted the definition of "substitutability" which is found in the decision of this Court in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc., [1995] 3 F.C. 557at pages 632 and 633, revd on other grounds [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748.

> In determining the relevant product market one considers substitutability—in other words, whether there exist sufficiently close substitutes to the product at issue, such that the market for that product includes those substitutes. In Tele-Direct, the Tribunal cites the market definition set out in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc.,([1995] 3 F.C. 557 63 C.P.R. (3D) I (F.C.A.)), where the Federal Court of Appeal defines what is meant by substitutability:
> Products can be said to be in the same market if they are close substitutes. In turn, products are close substitutes if buyers are willing to switch from one product to another in response to a relative change in price, i.e. if there is buyer price sensitivity. Direct evidence of substitutability includes both statistical evidence of buyer price sensitivity and anecdotal evidence, such as the testimony of buyers on past or hypothetical responses to price changes. However, since direct evidence may be difficult to obtain, it is also possible to measure substitutability and thereby infer price sensitivity through indirect means. Such indirect evidence focusses on certain practical indicia, such as functional interchangeability and industry views/behaviour, to show that products are close substitutes. (Ibid, at paragraph 161). [Emphasis is mine.]

[14] The Tribunal noted, at paragraphs 69 and 71, that no direct evidence was presented to the Tribunal on the cross-elasticity of demand—that is, whether increasing the price of DWV cast iron products would lead to an increased demand for DWV products made of other materials. Therefore, the product market could not be determined directly.

[15] Given the importance of determining whether other products would constrain price increases of cast iron DWV products, the Tribunal proceeded to consider the indirect evidence by reference to the topics enumerated in the Enforcement Guidelines on the Abuse of Dominance Provisions (the Guidelines), which include such headings as the views, strategies, behaviour and identity of buyers; trade views, strategies and behaviours; end use, physical and technical characteristics; price relationship and relative price levels; substitutability; and three product markets or one.

[16] The Tribunal thus correctly identified the legal principles applicable to the determination of the product market, and adopted an appropriate methodology to apply these principles in the particular case of Canada Pipe. The Tribunal considered the indirect evidence under each of the topics suggested in the Guidelines. Its conclusions on the basis of this evidence included the following findings.

[17] First, the Tribunal, at paragraph 82 of the reasons and order, under the heading "Trade Views, Strategies and Behaviour", made the finding that "in high-rise buildings, cast iron offers the advantage of meeting all requirements for fire and life safety purposes, and that only non-combustible materials, essentially cast iron, can be used in vertical shafts."

[18] Second, with respect to end use, other advantages of cast iron were noted, namely strength, durability and lower level noise. The Tribunal then indicated (at paragraph 92 of the reasons and order) that although plastic may eventually replace cast iron entirely, "this has vet to happen, and cast iron continues to be in a class of its own" (my emphasis).

[19] Third, the Tribunal noted, at paragraph 97 of the reasons and order, under the heading "Price Relationships and Relative Price Levels", that the evidence showed that Canada Pipe had reacted to the entry of new cast iron suppliers, whether manufacturers (Vandem) or imports (Sierra, New Centurion), by aggressively lowering its prices. In Quebec and the Maritimes, where no such competition exists, prices had increased since 1998.

[20] Fourth, at paragraphs 101 and 102 of the reasons and order, under the heading "Substitutability" with regard to paragraph 102, the Tribunal said the following:

> The competition with plastics appears to have had little effect on the prices of cast iron. Bibby devotes considerable effort to promoting the physical characteristics of cast iron products as compared to plastics, but these efforts do not lead to a reduction in price for cast iron products. From the evidence, it appears that the use of plastics is prevalent and increasing across the country. The prices of cast iron have not been decreasing with the increased use of plastics. Prices of cast iron DWV products have increased in Quebec and the Maritimes. They have decreased where Bibby has met cast iron competition—in Ontario with Vandem, in the West with importers. In other words, even though the Respondent claims that plastic is a competing material, there is no evidence that plastic products have had a constraining effect on prices of cast iron DWV products.
> The experts on both sides agreed that there was a lack of data for calculating the elasticity of the demand, such that a direct measure of substitutability was impossible. The > Tribunal does not have sufficient evidence to show whether consumers (in this case, distributors) would change their behaviour because of a rise in prices. In the present context, such an analysis is impossible, and not only because of a lack of data. The fact is that the choice to buy cast iron over other products is not only a matter of price; as seen earlier in these reasons, other important considerations come into play. From the evidence of Mr. Zorko and others, we find that for certain applications, such as in vertical shafts, non-combustible material remains the only acceptable material, which in practical terms means cast iron. In certain other applications, where considerations of safety and non-combustibility are paramount (based on use, occupancy, and height of building) the use of material other than metal will be constrained. For example, a sprinkler system may be compulsory or fire separation sealants will be required. The Respondent sought to convince the Tribunal that this situation was evolving, and that plastics in particular were offering true competition. On the evidence, the Tribunal is satisfied that for certain applications, cast iron has no economic substitute. [Emphasis is mine.]

[21] On the basis of its review of the indirect evidence, the Tribunal concluded as follows on product market and geographic markets (paragraph 112 of the reasons and order):

> The evidence reflects a market that is changing because of the increasing importance of plastics in the DWV industry. We find the American data presented by Dr. Ware on plastics replacing cast iron of limited assistance in the Canadian context, given the impact of Canadian regulations on the choice of materials and the absence of statistical evidence showing a similar trend in Canada. From the evidence we have heard, however, plastics seem to offer a number of advantages to the construction industry and appear to be increasingly used. Nevertheless, the Tribunal is of the view that cast iron still plays a distinct role in the DWV industry, and it is treated as a separate market by distributors and contractors. More importantly, it is treated differently by Bibby itself, in its marketing and its pricing policies. In consequence, the Tribunal finds that the product market is the cast iron DWV product market, within which three distinct markets can be identified: cast iron pipe and fittings and MJ couplings. Because of the significant price variations in cast iron DWV products from region to region, we find that there are six distinct geographic markets: British Columbia, Alberta, the Prairies, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes. [Emphasis is mine.]

[22] The Tribunal was therefore of the view (paragraph 112 of the reasons and order) that cast iron still played a distinct role in the DWV industry and was treated as a separate market by distributors and contractors, and by Canada Pipe itself. It found that the product market was the cast iron DWV product market, within which three distinct markets were identified: cast iron pipe, fittings and MJ couplings. Moreover, because of the significant price variations in cast iron DWV products, from region to region, the Tribunal found there were six distinct geographic markets: British Columbia, Alberta, the Prairies, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes.

MARKET POWER—ANALYSIS OF THE LAW AND THE EVIDENCE

[23] The Tribunal then addressed the issue of market power. Its analysis in this regard was divided into two sections, titled “Direct approach” and “Indirect approach”. The Tribunal explained the distinction between the two approaches as follows (at paragraph 122):

> Market power is defined as the ability to set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period. The direct approach involves showing that prices are indeed above the competitive level. In Tele-Direct, for example, the Tribunal found that the very large accounting profits were a direct indication of market power. However, as was the case in Laidlaw, Nielsen and NutraSweet, this approach is not always feasible. If a market is monopolized or not perfectly competitive because of a trade restraint imposed by a major supplier, it may be difficult to determine what would be the relevant competitive benchmark. In such a case, an indirect approach can be taken, which will consider such indicia as market share, barriers to entry and customer countervailing

[24] Later in its decision, the Tribunal explained the principles underpinning the indirect approach (at paragraphs 138 and 139):

> As stated in Laidlaw and Nielsen, a large market share leads to a prima facie conclusion that the firm likely has market power. In order to establish market power, this conclusion must be supported by other findings on issues such as the existence of barriers to entry, the number of other competitors, excess capacity and the state of the market. Where barriers to entry are non-existent, even a very large market share will not support a finding of market power. In the case of cast iron DWV products, it would appear that the following barriers to entry should be considered: sunk costs, cost of entry, incumbent advantage and the Stocking Distributor Program.
> The Tribunal must also review evidence of actual entry into the market, which would serve to negate the presence of barriers. Entry, of course, must be both effective and viable to be significant. In addition, the Tribunal must consider customer countervailing power and the state of the market. [Emphasis is mine.]

[25] It is apparent that the Tribunal correctly identified and articulated the principles applicable to the determination concerning market power, including both the direct and indirect approaches to this issue. The above-quoted passages show that the Tribunal properly understood the analytic purpose and role of the different types of direct and indirect evidence adduced with respect to the issue of market power.

[26] The Tribunal summarized the direct and indirect evidence adduced by the Commissioner on the issue of the market power (paragraphs 114 to 117 of the reasons and order) in the following manner:

> The Commissioner's case for market power relies heavily on Dr. Ross's analysis of the direct evidence—i.e. evidence that Bibby has the ability to raise and maintain prices above competitive levels for a significant period of time. Dr. Ross never defines what the competitive price levels would be; rather, he postulates that the direct information on prices and margins leads to the conclusion that Bibby's prices are supra-competitive. More specifically, Dr. Ross relies on three elements of direct evidence to conclude that Bibby has market power in the relevant markets: 1) high profit margins; 2) prices well above the landed prices of imports; and 3) Bibby's capacity to set prices, as shown by the high prices where no competition exists (Quebec and the Maritimes) and its capacity to lower its prices dramatically in the face of competition. (Expert Report of Dr. Ross at paragraph 31.)
> There are as well, according to Dr. Ross, indirect indicators of Bibby's market power: Bibby's considerable market share and little or no sustained and successful entry for the last several years. His conclusions on this last point are summarized as follows:

> While imports have made inroads periodically, they have been met by aggressive responses from Bibby, and Bibby's market share remains very high. Similarly, Vandem has been trying to establish itself as a largely domestic competitor, but has had considerable difficulty. (Expert Report of Dr. Ross at paragraph 32.)
> Dr. Ross is of the view that there are several barriers to entry. First, he states that it would be difficult to establish a new foundry, or adapt a current foundry to produce cast iron DWV pipe and fittings. Secondly, since there is excess capacity in the industry, the industry may not be likely to attract new investment. Adapting an existing foundry to produce DWV cast iron products could represent risky sunk costs. Given the fact that Bibby itself holds much of the excess capacity, it could use or threaten to use this capacity to produce large quantities to be sold at low prices. (Expert Report of Dr. Ross at paragraph 68.) In addition, although not a barrier per se, both parties agree that the cast iron DWV industry is a mature industry, not one in which one can expect great growth or innovation.
> Thirdly, Dr. Ross maintains that imports face barriers of their own. Bibby is a well-established manufacturer, offering complete lines of products. Imported product lines may be less complete, and buyers may be wary of their quality and of the warranties attached. Fourthly, Bibby's vigorous response to entry by imports and by Vandem may have had a chilling effect on potential entrants. Finally, and most importantly, the SDP program is itself a barrier to entry: entrants, whether importers or manufacturers, have difficulty having access to the distributors, already tied into Bibby's loyalty program. [Emphasis is mine.]

[27] The Tribunal then considered the direct and the indirect evidence concerning market power that was adduced before it, as the following summary and extracts demonstrate.

[28] The direct evidence related to Dr. Ross' submission in three main areas: high margins, prices substantially above import prices, and high prices absent competition with the corollary of being able to significantly lower prices where competition occurred.

[29] With regard to high margins, the Tribunal stated (at paragraph 124):

> When studied closely, Dr. Ross's [sic] presentation on high margins appears somewhat strained. The margins are based on cost of production (fittings and pipe) and do not include MJ couplings (which Bibby imports). In addition, the analysis is centred on margins, not profits. Dr. Ross cautions that marginal costs do not necessarily give us an exact idea of Bibby's profits, because the costs are extrapolated from Bibby data without complete information on how those costs were established. We have no information on whether the costs include only variable costs, or also fixed costs. (Expert Report of Dr. Ross at paragraph 17 and footnote 6.) However, the Tribunal is prepared to accept Dr. Ross' calculations of production costs and variable costs, from which he derives gross profit margins and contribution margins. (Expert Report of Dr. Ross at Appendix 3, p. 6.) We note that the marginal costs are only based on the cost of production of pipe and fittings; they therefore exclude MJ couplings, which Bibby does not manufacture but imports from a sister company. [Emphasis is mine.]

[30] The Tribunal was apparently very critical of Dr. Ross' analysis, as also shown in paragraphs 127, 131 and 135, but nevertheless noted at paragraph 137 that Canada Pipe had offered no evidence to rebut the Commissioner's assertions of high margins.

[31] Turning to the indirect evidence of market power, the Tribunal first considered Canada Pipe's market share. It stated (at paragraph 140 of the reasons and order):

> The concentration of the market in Bibby's hands, through the various buy-outs, consolidations and marketing arrangements with American sister companies, has given Bibby an overwhelming share of the market. Evidence shows that Bibby controls between 80 and 90% of the market in cast iron DWV products. Market share can be a significant indicator of market power, absent evidence of ease of entry for competitors (Tele-Direct). What needs to be considered, therefore, is whether the barriers to entry or other factors preclude other competitors from entering the market. [Emphasis is mine.]

[32] The Tribunal considered under the heading of "Barriers to Entry": sunk costs, cost of entry, incumbent advantage, stock distributor program, and actual entry. Under the heading "Other Factors", it considered countervailing power and the state of the market.

[33] Sunk costs were defined by the Tribunal as costs that cannot be recovered if investment is made to enter the market and that attempt fails. While sunk costs could be a significant barrier to entry, the Tribunal did not find them significant considering the paucity of explanation given by the Commissioner on the question (paragraph 141 of the reasons and order).

[34] The cost of entry, wrote the Tribunal, involved either refitting an existing foundry or buying imported goods. The Tribunal estimated that the viability of the current importers did not seem threatened and imports were steadily on the rise (paragraphs 142 and 143 of the reasons and order).

[35] On the topic of the incumbent advantage, the Tribunal noted that Canada Pipe was a well-known and well-established manufacturer and that a new entrant would probably have difficulty competing with the quality and quantity of products Canada Pipe was able to offer. No other supplier, it said, had a strong national presence (paragraph 144 of the reasons and order).

[36] With regard to the factor of the Stocking Distributor Program, the Tribunal was satisfied that it had an impact in the market. There was, however, no direct evidence that would support the conclusion that it was a barrier to entry (paragraph 149 of the reasons and order).

[37] With respect to the factor of actual entry, the Tribunal came to the conclusion that successful entry was possible—but limited, considering that Canada Pipe maintained a considerable market share (paragraph 156 of the reasons and order).

[38] The Tribunal was of the view that distributors had little countervailing power, considering that Canada Pipe had maintained its SDP since 1998 (paragraph 159 of the reasons and order).

[39] The Tribunal accepted that the market was mature, i.e., it was a market with little real growth potential. This factor could therefore discourage more active entry (paragraph 160 of the reasons and order).

[40] Ultimately, the Tribunal accepted Dr. Ross' analysis that the direct and indirect evidence together established that Canada Pipe could and did exercise market power in the relevant markets (paragraph 161 of the reasons and order). This conclusion of the Tribunal will be considered in more detail further below.

THE STANDARD OF REVIEW AND ITS APPLICATION

[41] I agree with Pelletier J.A. that to be successful on the cross-appeal, Canada Pipe must demonstrate that the Tribunal acted unreasonably, considering that product market and market power raise issues of mixed fact and law. As examined in detail above, the Tribunal articulated the correct legal tests in the course of its determinations concerning product market and market power. The Supreme Court's conclusion in Southam therefore applies with equal force in this case: "if the Tribunal erred, it was in applying the law to the facts; and that is a matter of mixed law and fact" (paragraph 44).

[42] The nature of the question is an important factor in determining the standard of review according to the pragmatic and functional approach. In general, all else being equal, a question of mixed fact and law attracts the reasonableness standard of review. However, the jurisprudence has recognized the existence of different types of questions of mixed fact and law: as McLachlin C.J. explained in Dr. Q v. College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 226, a question of mixed fact and law "will call for more deference if the question is fact-intensive, and less deference if it is law-intensive" (paragraph 34). In Law Society of New Brunswick v. Ryan, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 247, the Court applied this analysis, observing that the question of mixed fact and law at issue in that case contained fact-intensive elements which did "not involve easily extracted and discretely framed questions of law" (paragraph 41).

[44] I agree with Pelletier J.A. that the analysis of the categories or factors referred to in the Guidelines as indirect evidence for the determination of product market (namely the views, strategies, behaviour and identity of buyers; trade views, strategies and behaviours; end use; physical and technical characteristics; and price relationships and relative price levels) is a matter of weighing evidence. It therefore falls within the province of the Tribunal. Consequently, unless the Tribunal's conclusion is unreasonable, it is of no concern to this Court. Substitutability is always a question of degree (The Queen v. S.J. Mills & Sons Ltd. et al., [1968] Ex.C. R. 275, cited with approval in Canada (Director of Investigation and Reserach) v. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748). Since the Tribunal considered the appropriate elements and arrived at a reasonable conclusion, its finding on product market is therefore immune from judicial intervention.

[45] I do not share Pelletier J.A.'s view, however, that the Tribunal's findings on market power in four of the six geographic markets, namely British Columbia, Alberta, the Prairies and Ontario, are flawed and warrant the intervention of this Court.

[47] As stated earlier, the Tribunal was highly critical of Dr. Ross' analysis of the direct evidence of market power, as evidenced in paras 124 to 137 of the reasons and order, and of Canada Pipe's lack of response on the topic (paragraph 137 of the reasons and order).

[48] The Tribunal, with hesitation, I would say, accepted Dr. Ross' calculations of production costs and variable costs from which he derived gross profit margins and contribution margins. However, the Tribunal noted (at paragraph 124 of the reasons and order) that the marginal costs were only based on the cost of production of pipe and fittings: they therefore excluded MJ couplings which Canada Pipe did not manufacture but imported from its sister company. The Tribunal indicated that Dr. Ware, for Canada Pipe, cast some doubt on Dr. Ross' calculations.

> Notwithstanding the statistical debate between the two experts, the fact remains that prices in the West are significantly lower than prices in the East, and the obvious explanation, confirmed by witnesses appearing before the Tribunal, is the presence of imports. Prices for Bibby products are lower in British Columbia than in Quebec, yet the products are manufactured in Quebec, and the cost of transport has to be added to the cost of production for items sold in British Columbia. The Tribunal is therefore satisfied, from consideration of the price differentials, particularly in British Columbia and Alberta, that imports have had an impact on prices of cast iron DWV products. Similarly, the Tribunal is satisfied that Vandem's entry in Ontario has exerted downward pressure on the prices in that province. No such movement is noted in Quebec and the Maritimes.
> It is somewhat puzzling that Bibby offers no evidence to rebut the Commissioner's assertions of high margins. Dr. Ware and counsel for the Respondent certainly have shown the frailties of the Commissioner's position, but the Tribunal notes that no cost calculations are provided in response. It would have been within Bibby's power to present the true profitability of pipe and fittings sales. No such evidence is before us. We are left with Bibby's hefty margins and its significant ability to vary prices across the regions. [Emphasis is mine.]

[50] The Tribunal bolstered the conclusions derived from the direct evidence with a careful analysis of the elements contained in the indirect approach, stressing the positive elements and the drawbacks. The Tribunal then concluded (at paragraph 161):

> The Tribunal is of the view that Bibby can and does exercise market control in the three product markets and the six geographic regions. The evidence provided by the direct approach was incomplete, since the high margins dealt only with two of the three products. For those two products, the Tribunal finds that Bibby is pricing above marginal cost. For all three products, Bibby's ability to lower prices indicates supra-competitive pricing. With regards to the indirect approach, the Tribunal finds that on balance the evidence indicates that Bibby has market power. The evidence on barriers to entry is not entirely conclusive. However, Bibby's large market share, its range of products and national presence, the limited penetration of competitors and the fact that this market offers only limited growth potential are sufficient to establish that Bibby does control a substantial part of the cast iron

DWV products market. [Emphasis is mine.]

[51] Considering the evidence, with all its flaws, left uncontradicted by Canada Pipe, it was open to the Tribunal to conclude on the direct approach that Canada Pipe was pricing pipe and fittings with “hefty margins” (paragraph 137 of the reasons and order), and that for pipe, fittings and MJ couplings, Canada Pipe had a “significant ability to vary prices across the regions” (paragraph 137 of the reasons and order). This indicated supra-competitive pricing. On the indirect approach, it was open to the Tribunal, on the balance of the evidence, to conclude that Canada Pipe had market power.

CONCLUSION

[52] The Tribunal correctly interpreted and applied the law with respect to paragraph 79(1)(a) throughout in its reasons. Market power is not an easy concept to handle. In R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 606, at paragraph 101, the Supreme Court of Canada noted that with regard to paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act (formerly section 51 [Combines Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-23, s. 51 (as enacted by S.C. 1986, c. 26, s. 47)]), alleged holders of a dominant position must be shown to “substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any other area thereof, a class or species of business”. Gonthier J. for the Court added “The required degree of market power under s. 51 of the Act comprises ‘control’, and not simply the ability to behave independently of the market.” The Tribunal in the case at bar complied with this analysis.

[53] The factual analysis by the Tribunal is sometimes not as clearly stated and analyzed as one might have wished. This may be explained in part by the variety of factors the Tribunal was called upon to consider. But one cannot ignore, on the point raised by Pelletier J.A., that the Tribunal considered not only the direct evidence of market power, but also extensive indirect evidence. On both approaches, it was satisfied that Canada Pipe exercised market power. I cannot say that the Tribunal acted unreasonably in so concluding: the Tribunal demonstrably “had its reasons for doing so, and those reasons cannot be said to be without foundation or logical coherence” (S.C.C., Southam, at paragraph 68).

[54] Considering the standard of review and the intense fact-finding character of these issues, the further intervention of this Court is, in my view, unwarranted.

LETOURNEAU J.A.: I concur.

The following are the reasons for judgment rendered in English by

PELLETIER J.A. (dissenting):

INTRODUCTION

[56] In response to the Commissioner's appeal of the dismissal of her application, Canada Pipe has cross-appealed from the Competition Tribunal's (the Tribunal) finding that it dominated the market for cast iron DWV pipes, joints and fittings. Canada Pipe attacks both aspects of that finding, namely the definition of the product and geographic markets, as well as the finding that it has market power in the relevant markets.

[57] As my colleague Desjardins J.A.'s reasons allowing the Commissioner's appeal make clear, the Tribunal was required to decide a number of discrete questions in disposing of the Commissioner's application for an order against Canada Pipe pursuant to section 79 of the Competition Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-34 (the Act). The Commissioner's appeal deals with two of those questions, namely whether Canada Pipe's Stocking Distributor Program (SDP) was a practice of anti-competitive acts, and whether the SDP had the effect of substantially preventing or lessening competition in a market. This cross-appeal deals with the issue of whether Canada Pipe occupies a dominant position in that market; in other words, does Canada Pipe "substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business", to use the words of paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act?

[58] That question can be broken down into two other questions: the definition of the product and geographic markets in which Canada Pipe trades, and whether Canada Pipe exercises market power within those markets. The Tribunal decided that there were three product markets, namely the markets for cast iron pipe, cast iron fittings and cast iron joints, and six geographical markets, namely British Columbia, Alberta, the Prairies, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes. It also decided that Canada Pipe exercised market power in all those markets and that, as a result, the conditions of paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act were satisfied. It is those conclusions which are in issue in this cross-appeal.

[59] As an aside, the Tribunal decision refers to Canada Pipe as Bibby because the Stocking Distributor Program is operated by its Bibby Ste-Croix division. In these reasons, I will refer to the cross-appellant as Canada Pipe and to the respondent by cross-appeal as the Commissioner.

THE TRIBUNAL DECISION

[60] The first question which the Tribunal had to address was the definition of the product and geographic markets in which Canada Pipe trades. This question is fundamental because any finding of abuse of market dominance must be in relation to those markets.

[61] This Court took up the question of the definition of a product market in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc., [1995] 3 F.C. 557 (Southam, F.C.A.) where the following appears (at page 632):

> Products can be said to be in the same market if they are close substitutes. In turn, products are close substitutes if buyers are willing to switch from one product to another in response to a relative change in price, i.e. if there is buyer price sensitivity.

Whether products are close substitutes for one another can be proven either directly or indirectly (at paragraph 161):

> Direct evidence of substitutability includes both statistical evidence of buyer sensitivity and anecdotal evidence, such as the testimony of buyers on past or hypothetical responses to price changes. However, since direct evidence may be difficult to obtain, it is also possible to measure substitutability and thereby infer price sensitivity through indirect means. Such indirect evidence focusses on certain practical indicia, such as functional interchangeability and industry views/behaviour, to show that products are close substitutes.

The Tribunal noted that direct evidence of substitutability was not available and went on to examine the indirect evidence. It considered the views, strategies, behaviour and identity of buyers, the trade's views, strategies and behaviour, end use, physical and technical characteristics, price relationships and relative price levels, and substitutability.

[62] Under the heading of views, strategies, behaviour and identity of buyers, the Tribunal noted that while contractors used both plastic and cast iron products, cast iron was the product of choice for certain applications. As for the trade's views and strategies, the Tribunal found that the fact that the National Building Code specifies cast iron for certain applications, notably vertical shafts in highrise buildings, was an important consideration. The industry view appeared to be that there was no substitute for cast iron in that application, notwithstanding the development of non-combustible plastic pipe. The Tribunal's conclusion was that "in high-rise buildings, cast iron offers the advantage of meeting all requirements for fire and life safety purposes, and that only non-combustible materials, essentially cast iron, can be used in vertical shafts" (Tribunal reasons, paragraph 82).

[63] The Tribunal then considered the issue of functional interchangeability under the heading of "End Use". In other words, are plastic DWV (drain, waste and vent) products and cast iron DWV products interchangeable? The Tribunal reviewed the evidence as to the advantages and disadvantages of each material. It noted the growing prevalence of plastic products in Canada, but could draw no conclusion as to the pace of change, in the absence of detailed data for the Canadian marketplace. In the end, the Tribunal concluded that, by reason of its strength, durability, lower noise level as well as non-combustibility, cast iron "continues to be in a class of its own" (Tribunal reasons, paragraph 92).

[65] The Tribunal then considered the issue of price relationships and relative price levels. It quoted a passage from the Enforcement Guidelines on the Abuse of Dominance Provisions (Competition Bureau, 2001) (Enforcement Guidelines) to the effect that the absence of a correlation in price movements between two products over a significant period of time is an indication that the two products are not in the same market, while the presence of such a correlation is an indication that the two products compete in the same market (Tribunal reasons, paragraph 96).

[66] The Tribunal specifically noted the absence of evidence of relative price movement between cast iron DWV products and products made from other materials. However, it also noted that Canada Pipe's prices dropped where it faced competition from other cast iron product suppliers, whereas prices increased in those markets where there was no such competition (Tribunal reasons, paragraph 97). This is not to say that Canada Pipe ignored competition from plastic products; the Tribunal found that it devoted considerable marketing resources to persuading buyers of the advantages of cast iron over plastic. But these efforts did not include price reductions. The Tribunal's key conclusions on this issue are found in the following passage (at paragraph 101):

> The prices of cast iron have not been decreasing with the increased use of plastics. Prices of cast iron DWV products have increased in Quebec and the Maritimes. They have decreased where [Canada Pipe] has met cast iron competition—in Ontario with Vandem, in the West with importers. In other words, even though the Respondent [Canada Pipe] claims that plastic is a competing material, there is no evidence that plastic products have had a constraining effect on prices of cast iron DWV products.

[68] Having regard to the fact that "all three products [pipe, fittings and joints] can be bought separately from different suppliers and the pricing trends for each appear independent", [at paragraph 103] the Tribunal decided that there are three relevant product markets, namely cast iron pipe, cast iron fittings and cast iron joints.

[69] On the issue of geographic markets, the Tribunal attributed some importance to the fact that while Canada Pipe has a national presence, its competitors do not. The result is that competition is regionalized so that prices are constrained by competition from cast iron products in Ontario, for example, but they are not so constrained in Quebec and the Maritimes. This led the Tribunal to conclude that there are six geographic markets, defined by the competitive environment, namely British Columbia, Alberta, the Prairies, Ontario, Quebec, and the Maritimes.

[70] The Tribunal then turned to the second step of its inquiry under paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act, the issue of market power. Market power is defined as the ability to raise and maintain prices above competitive levels for a significant period of time: Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. (1997), 73 C.P.R. (3d) 1 (Comp. Trib.), at page 82.

[71] As in the case of close substitutes, market power can be proven directly or indirectly. In this case, the Tribunal considered both the direct and the indirect evidence of market power. It considered high margins, prices substantially above import prices, high prices absent competition (or lower prices in the presence of competition) as direct evidence of market power.

[72] The Tribunal found that the evidence of high margins was not persuasive. The Commissioner's expert purported to calculate Canada Pipe's profit margins on the basis of partial data supplied by Canada Pipe. However, there was no way of comparing Canada Pipe's margins with those of other vendors. In any event margins varied across geographic regions: consistently high in Quebec and the Maritimes, but dipping into the negative for considerable periods of time in Alberta, the Prairies and British Columbia (Tribunal reasons, paragraph 127).

[74] Finally, the Tribunal considered the argument that regional price disparities suggested that prices were above competitive levels in the high price regions. For example, certain Canada Pipe products cost the same in Ontario, where they are produced, and in British Columbia. It is clear that if prices were at competitive levels, the price would be higher in British Columbia given the cost of transporting the product from Ontario to British Columbia.

[75] The Tribunal was persuaded that the price differentials between those regions where Canada Pipe faced competition from cast iron products and those regions where it did not indicated that prices in the latter areas were above competitive levels.

[76] The indirect evidence of market power related to market share, barriers to entry and the state of the market.

[77] Based upon its definition of the product market, the Tribunal concluded that Canada Pipe had an overwhelming share of the market, somewhere between 80% and 90% of the market for cast iron products. However, market share alone does not indicate market power if there are no barriers to entry to that market. The Tribunal noted that there was little evidence of sunk costs as a barrier to entry. In particular, the importation of product does not require a significant physical plant.

[78] The Tribunal considered whether the SDP itself operated as a barrier to entry. The emergence of another cast iron manufacturer, Vandem, suggested that the SDP was not an effective barrier to entry. Entry is one thing, viability is another. The Tribunal did not have evidence before it of Vandem's viability but it did have evidence that it had captured a not insignificant share of the market in a relatively brief period of time. Canada Pipe, however, continued to have by far the largest market share. Importers had also succeeded in establishing themselves in the West. But both Vandem and the importers had achieved only limited market penetration.

[79] A final consideration is the state of the market. The market for cast iron DWV products is a mature market in the sense that there is not likely to be significant growth in the size of the market, which operates to discourage entry since growth potential is limited.

[80] The Tribunal concluded that Canada Pipe "can and does exercise market power in the three product markets and the six geographic regions" (Tribunal reasons, paragraph 161). In particular, the Tribunal found that Canada Pipe's ability to lower prices to meet competition indicated that prices in the areas where there was no competition were supra-competitive. As regards the indirect evidence of market power, the Tribunal found that Canada Pipe's "large market share, its range of products and national presence, the limited penetration of competitors and the fact that this market offers only limited growth potential are sufficient to establish that [Canada Pipe] does control a substantial part of the cast iron DWV products market" (Tribunal reasons, paragraph 161).

[81] In the end result, the Tribunal found that the conditions of paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act were satisfied.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

[82] Given that any challenge to the Tribunal's conclusions must be assessed through the lens of the appropriate standard of review, I propose to deal with that question first.

[83] It was in the course of disposing of a competition law case, Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748, (Southam, S.C.C.), that the Supreme Court of Canada recognized the possibility of a standard of review other the correct or the patently unreasonable decision, namely the reasonable decision. Given that this appeal raises many of the same questions as were raised in Southam, S.C.C., it seems to me that one can usefully refer to that case in undertaking the pragmatic and functional analysis with respect to this appeal.

[84] The Supreme Court noted at paragraphs 30 and 31 of its decision that there is a statutory right of appeal under the Act. In the same way, this case raises no issues of jurisdiction, save for one discreet argument by the Commissioner to the effect that since leave was not obtained to appeal questions of fact, this Court has no jurisdiction to consider an appeal on the question of the definition of the product and geographic markets because those determinations are findings of fact. That argument leads into the second question in the pragmatic and functional analysis, namely the nature of the question before the Court.

[85] In Southam, F.C.A., this Court held that the question of the analytical framework to be applied in defining a product market was a question of law, and therefore a matter on which the Court owed no deference to the Tribunal's decision. Before the Supreme Court, the argument turned on whether the Tribunal had in fact properly applied the test for defining the product market. In Southam, S.C.C., the Supreme Court held that if the Tribunal erred, it was in the application of the law to the facts, a question of mixed fact and law. It was therefore entitled some deference on the part of the Court.

[86] The question as to whether Canada Pipe exercised market power is, it seems to me, a question of the same order. There is no particular dispute as to the nature of the factors to be considered; the disagreement is as to whether those factors were properly considered. In the circumstances, I conclude that both questions raised by the cross-appeal are questions of mixed law and fact.

[87] The next issue is the purpose of the statute administered by the Tribunal. The Supreme Court referred to the purpose clause found at section 1.1 [as enacted by R.S.C., 1985 (2nd Supp.), c. 19, s. 19] of the Act to conclude that the aims of the legislation are more economic than legal. Concepts like “the efficiency and adaptability of the Canadian economy” and the effect of foreign competition on Canadian companies are better understood by businessmen and economists than by judges. This is as true in this case as it was in Southam, S.C.C.

[88] This led the Court to consider the expertise of the Tribunal. The Court recognized the Tribunal’s expertise in economics and commerce. The Court’s review of the Tribunal’s expertise in light of the problem which it had before it is particularly apposite to this case [Southam, S.C.C., at paragraph 52]:

> The particular dispute in this case concerns the definition of the relevant product market—a matter that falls squarely within the area of the Tribunal’s economic or commercial expertise. Undeniably, the determination of cross-elasticity of demand, which is in theory the truest indicium of the dimensions of a product market, requires some economic or statistical skill. But even an assessment of indirect evidence of substitutability, such as evidence that two kinds of products are functionally interchangeable, needs a variety of discernment that has more to do with business experience than with legal training. Someone with experience in business will be better able to predict likely consumer behaviour than a judge will be. What is more, indirect evidence is useful only as a surrogate for cross-elasticity of demand, so that what is required in the end is an assessment of the economic significance of the evidence; and to this task an economist is almost by definition better suited than is a judge.

The problem before this Court is exactly the same problem as was before the Court in Southam, S.C.C. I have little difficulty in coming to the same conclusion as the Supreme Court did on this issue, which is that the Tribunal is better equipped to decide such questions than are the courts.

[89] Having reviewed these factors, the Supreme Court found that they called for a standard less deferential than the patently unreasonable decision but more deferential than correctness. This led it to conclude that the standard of review of a decision of the Competition Tribunal on the issue of market definition was reasonableness. In my view, that conclusion applies equally well to this case in so far as the issue of market definition is concerned. The question of market power raises the same kinds of issues as does the question of market definition and leads to the same conclusion with respect to the standard of review.

[90] I therefore conclude that the standard of review of the Tribunal's decision with respect to the issues raised in this cross-appeal is that of the reasonable decision.

ANALYSIS OF CANADA PIPE'S GROUNDS OF APPEAL

[91] Canada Pipe's position on the issue of product market definition is that the relevant product market includes competing DWV products made from a variety of materials. In support of its position, it refers to a number of discrete arguments which I reproduce below in a summary way:

(a) the Tribunal ignored its own conclusion that there was competition between cast iron products and those made of other materials in all applications except vertical shafts in highrise buildings;

(b) the Tribunal ignored evidence that manufacturers market their products by comparing products made of different materials to each other;

(c) the Tribunal erred in requiring complete overlap in the applications in which competing DWV products can be used;

(d) the Tribunal failed to quantify the extent of the use of cast iron pipe in vertical shafts in highrise buildings in order to determine if it was material to the issue;

(e) the Tribunal failed to consider whether Canada Pipe is able to price discriminate based upon end use in applications for which it has no substitute; and

(f) the Tribunal ignored evidence of price relationships between cast iron and other materials.

[92] As noted earlier, the issue with respect to market definition is whether products are close substitutes for each other. All are agreed that there was no direct evidence on that issue. Consequently, the Tribunal proceeded on the basis of the indirect evidence of close substitutability. In Southam, S.C.C., the Court noted that the Tribunal considered the following as indicia of close substitutes (at paragraph 16):

> Accordingly, the members determined that recourse should be had to "indirect evidence" of substitutability. Indirect indicia of substitutability include (at p. 179) "the physical characteristics of the products, the uses to which the products are put, and whatever evidence there is about the behaviour of buyers that casts light on their willingness to switch from one product to another in response to changes in relative prices". Also relevant are "[t]he views of industry participants about what products and which firms they regard as actual and prospective competitors".

[93] At page 630 of the Court's reasons in Southam, F.C.A., the Competition Bureau's Enforcement Guidelines were quoted at length and were incorporated into the Court's analysis. I do not propose to reproduce them here due to their length but I note that they identify the following as indications that products are close substitutes: Views, strategies, behaviour and identity of buyers; trade views, strategies and behaviour; end use, physical and technical characteristics. These are the very criteria which the Tribunal applied in this case.

[94] The Enforcement Guidelines are not binding on this Court, but they are an indication of the Competition Bureau's views as to the factors to be considered. Given the Competition Bureau's role in the enforcement of the legislation, the Enforcement Guidelines are an element to be taken into account in the interpretation of the legislative requirements. The ultimate question is always one for the Court, but it may find some assistance in the Competition Bureau's views.

[95] If these are the appropriate factors to take into account in deciding whether products are close substitutes, then the weight to be assigned to those factors is a matter for the Tribunal. The parties, or this Court, might assign them more, or less, weight than did the Tribunal but in the end, it is the Tribunal's assessment which is to prevail. In this case, the Tribunal acknowledged that there was competition between DWV products made from different materials but discounted this apparent competition because it found it had no effect on prices (Tribunal reasons, paragraph 101). It treated the evidence of comparison marketing between products made from different materials in the same way (Tribunal reasons, paragraph 98).

[96] The Tribunal did not misapprehend the evidence when it noted that, for all practical purposes, cast iron is the only product to be used in vertical shafts in highrise buildings. The weight to be assigned to that evidence is a matter for the Tribunal. The fact that there was no quantitative evidence in support of that conclusion does not detract from the Tribunal's ability to take it into account.

[97] The fact that price discrimination by end-use may be evidence of different markets (as set out in paragraphs 148-150 of Canada Pipe's memorandum) does not mean that the opposite is true, namely that the inability to price discriminate according to end use indicates a common market.

[98] It is true that the Tribunal did not consider evidence of price relationships between cast iron and other products; it is not true to say that it ignored such evidence since even Canada Pipe agrees that there was no such evidence before the Tribunal (see Canada Pipe's memorandum of fact and law). The Tribunal cannot ignore what is not before it. The Tribunal did attach considerable significance to the fact that the price of cast iron products dropped in the presence of competition from cast iron products but that it remained high when there were no other cast iron suppliers in a given geographic market.

[99] As Iacobucci J. pointed out in Southam, S.C.C., "the weighing of criteria in a balancing test must be largely a matter of discretion. The very purpose of a multi-factored test, such as the one that the Tribunal used to determine the dimensions of the relevant product market, is to permit triers of fact to do justice in diverse particular cases" (paragraph 66). The Tribunal exercised its discretion in the weighing of the various factors which it considered and defined the product market accordingly. Having regard to the evidence and to its reasons, I cannot say that its conclusion was unreasonable.

>
> (a) one or more persons substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business,
>
> (b) that person or those persons have engaged in or are engaging in a practice of anti-competitive acts, and
>
> (c) the practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market,
> the Tribunal may make an order prohibiting all or any of those persons from engaging in that practice.

[102] The expression "market power" does not appear in section 79. What does appear is the requirement that a person "substantially or completely control … a class or species of business." The use of market power as a proxy for the element of control is one which has been developed in the jurisprudence, both that of the Tribunal and of this Court.

[103] That position is expressed with admirable concision in the Enforcement Guidelines:

> 3.2.1(d) "Substantially or completely control"? Market Power.
> Once the universe of existing competitors is delineated, it is necessary to assess the extent to which these rivals constrain any market power that the dominant fin-11(s) might otherwise possess. The Bureau considers control to be synonymous with market power, where market power is the ability to profitably set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period of time.

The same idea appears frequently in the Tribunal jurisprudence (Tele-Direct, at pages 33-34):

> A necessary first step in deciding this case is to define the relevant market. This must be done for purposes of section 79 in order to determine if Tele-Direct, as alleged by the Director, "substantially or completely control[s] throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business". The Tribunal decided in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. D & B Companies of Canada Ltd. ((1995), 64 C.P.R. (3d) 216, [1995] C.C.T.D. No. 20 (QL) (Comp. Trib.)), that "class or species of business" means product market and "control" means market power. The remaining phrase, "throughout Canada or any area thereof', refers to the geographic market. Therefore, in order for section 79 to apply, the Tribunal must first conclude that Tele-Direct has market power

> The respondent's view is that "control" is most meaningfully treated as synonymous with "market power". Market power is generally accepted to mean an ability to set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period. While this is a valid conceptual approach, it is not one that can readily be applied; one must ordinarily look to indicators of market power such as market share and entry barriers. The specific factors that need to be considered in evaluating control or market power will vary from case to case.
> The tribunal is persuaded that the respondent's position is in keeping with the logic of the section and the Act.

[104] The same theme is found in the Tribunal's decision in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd. (1992), 40 C.P.R. (3d) 289, at page 325:

> In deciding whether a firm has substantial or complete control of a market, one asks whether the firm has market power in the economic sense. Market power in the economic sense is the power to maintain prices above the competitive level without losing so many sales that the higher price is not profitable. It is the ability to earn supra-normal profits by reducing output and charging more than the competitive price for a product. As was said in the NutraSweet decision supra (at p. 28): "Market power is generally accepted to mean an ability to set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period." [Emphasis added.]

This Court has not been previously called upon to consider this question. It has addressed the question of market power, but in the context of the review of a transaction likely to substantially lessen competition. Market power was defined as follows in Southam, F.C.A. (at page 608):

> It is universally accepted that a merger must be examined in terms of its likely effect on competition within a relevant market. The central concern is with respect to exercise of market power by a single dominant firm or a group of firms acting collectively. In turn, market power is recognized as the ability to profitably raise prices above competitive levels without losing a significant portion of business to rival firms or firms that may become rivals as a result of the price increase: … [Emphasis added.]

[107] While there appears to be broad agreement as to the use of market power as a proxy for control of the market, there is some difference of opinion as to how that factor is to be proved. In the passage cited above from the NutraSweet decision, the Tribunal indicates that some regard must be had for market share and barriers to entry. These are regarded as indirect proof of market power. But where direct evidence of market power is available, it should be considered (Tele-Direct, at pages 82 and 83):

> …, the Tribunal also recognized that where the available evidence does not allow the definition of market power to be applied directly, it is necessary to look to indicators of market power, such as market share and barriers to entry. (NutraSweet, supra, footnote 3; Laidlaw, supra, footnote 24; D & B, supra.)
> The Tribunal has never ruled out the possibility, however, that direct indicators of market power might be available as evidence in an appropriate case. Direct indicators of market power relate to the performance of the firm or firms in question or to their behaviour. The broad question that is posed is whether the observed performance results (e.g., profits) or observed patterns of conduct (e.g., pricing policy) are more likely to be associated with a firm or firms that are competitive or with those that have market power. While there are difficulties in applying direct indicators of market power, if the evidence is available this avenue should not be excluded.

As will be seen, this is a case in which the direct evidence is available and, in my view, determinative.

[108] Canada Pipe’s attack on the Tribunal’s conclusions with respect to market power can be summarized as follows:

I- The Tribunal incorrectly relied upon evidence of high margins.

2- The Tribunal incorrectly relied upon Canada Pipe’s ability to lower prices.

3- The Tribunal erred in finding market power without conclusive evidence of barriers to entry.

[109] It is true that the Tribunal was critical of the evidence of high margins put forward by the Commissioner’s expert, Dr. Ross, as can be seen from the following paragraph in the Tribunal’s reasons (at paragraph 129):

> When looking at the summary of gross profits margins, the numbers seem high, though negative in some cases, as stated above. Dr. Ross himself, in his report, cautions the reader as to the interpretation of these figures. Dr. Ross made his calculations based on limited data provided by [Canada Pipe], but cannot say how those costs were established by [Canada Pipe] nor what they include. Moreover, he adds, even high margins do not necessarily lead to a conclusion of high economic profits, because the extra revenues (beyond marginal costs) might be necessary to cover fixed costs. Further, the Tribunal has no data on [Canada Pipe’s] ratio of fixed costs to variable costs.

It is also true that the Tribunal appears to have given this evidence some credit in that it relies upon it to conclude that in two of the product markets, Canada Pipe is pricing above marginal cost. The two markets in question are the markets for pipe and fittings (Tribunal reasons, paragraph 124).

[110] Looking at the evidence of high margins, I may not have come to the same conclusion as did the Tribunal. But as Iacobucci J. said in Southam, S.C.C. (at paragraph 79):

> It is possible that if I were deciding this case de novo, I might not dismiss so readily as the Tribunal did what is admittedly weighty evidence of inter-industry competition. In my view, it is very revealing that Southam's own expert, an American newspaper consultant, identified the community newspapers as the source of Southam's difficulties in the Lower Mainland. To find, in the face of such evidence, that the daily newspapers and the community newspapers are not competitors is perhaps unusual. In that sense, the Tribunal's finding is difficult to accept. However, it is not unreasonable. The Tribunal explained that, in its view, Southam was mistaken about who its competitors were; and though I may not consider that reason compelling, I cannot say that it is not a reason for which there is a logical and evidentiary underpinning. More generally, I notice that the Tribunal seems to have been preoccupied with the definition of the relevant market. It is possible that the members may occasionally have lost sight of the ultimate inquiry, which is whether the acquisition of the community newspapers by Southam substantially lessened competition. But again, I cannot say that the Tribunal's approach was unreasonable.

[111] Faulty as the evidence of high margins appears to be, it was for the Tribunal to assess it. The fact that I may have come to a different conclusion does not make its conclusion unreasonable.

[112] The more compelling argument against Canada Pipe's possession of market power in all 18 markets identified by the Tribunal is its reaction to the emergence of competitive suppliers. The Commissioner relied on the evidence of price reductions in response to competition to argue that the ability to reduce prices indicated that they were above competitive levels to begin with. But if prices have become competitive as a result of the emergence of competing suppliers, the significance of non-competitive prices at an earlier point in time is not obvious.

[113] Since market power is defined in terms of price, the best evidence of market power is a supplier's pricing following changes in the market. One would think that a supplier who is able to maintain prices above competitive levels (however defined) would be impervious to the emergence of competing suppliers. How did Canada Pipe react to the emergence of competing suppliers of cast iron DWV products (Tribunal reasons, at paragraph 97)?

> The evidence shows clearly that Bibby [Canada Pipe] has reacted to the entry of new cast iron suppliers, whether manufacturer (Vandem) or imports (Sierra, New Centurion) by aggressively lowering its prices. In Quebec and the Maritimes, where no such competition exists, prices have increased since 1998. Although it is shown that Bibby [Canada Pipe] monitors the prices for plastic DWV products, there is no evidence of the prices of plastic products having a disciplinary effect on the price of the cast iron products.

If Canada Pipe's prices were supra-competitive in the absence of competition, they became competitive when new suppliers of cast iron products emerged. What was the effect of these price reductions (Tribunal reasons, at paragraph 127)?

> The evidence on profit margins in the present case is not as clear as it was in Tele-Direct. Whereas in the latter case Tele-Direct was able to consistently pay 40 percent of its revenues to the telephone companies, in this case margins vary from one region to the next. They are consistently high in Quebec and the Maritimes, but dip in other regions, to the point of being negative for considerable periods of time in Alberta, the Prairies and British Columbia.

[114] In my view, this passage documents the Tribunal's acceptance of the fact that in some markets, margins were not high, though they were in others. It also shows that the Tribunal ultimately accepted that Canada Pipe's price reductions, in those regions where they occurred, were the result of competition from new suppliers (Tribunal reasons, at paragraph 136):

> Notwithstanding the statistical debate between the two experts, the fact remains that prices in the West are significantly lower than prices in the East, and the obvious explanation, confirmed by witnesses appearing before the Tribunal, is the presence of imports. Prices for Bibby [Canada Pipe] products are lower in British Columbia than in Quebec, yet the products are manufactured in Quebec, and the cost of transport has to be added to the cost of production for items sold in British Columbia. The Tribunal is therefore satisfied, from consideration of the price differentials, particularly in British Columbia and Alberta, that imports have had an impact on prices of cast iron DWV products. Similarly, the Tribunal is satisfied that Vandem's entry in Ontario has exerted downward pressure on the prices in that province. No such movement is noted in Quebec and the Maritimes.

Given the definition of market power, it is difficult to see on what basis the Tribunal could conclude that Canada Pipe had market power in British Columbia, Alberta, the Prairies and Ontario after the emergence of competing suppliers of cast iron products in those regions. The fact of reducing prices to respond to the emergence of new competitors is inconsistent with "the ability to set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period".

[115] Seen in this light, Canada Pipe is only in a position to exercise market power in Quebec and the Maritimes, where it faces no competition, and where prices have risen, not fallen. In the other four geographic markets, it is constrained by the presence of importers and manufacturers of cast iron products to reduce its prices significantly. Those reductions are inconsistent with possession of market power.

[116] In its concluding paragraph on this issue, the Tribunal summarizes its position on market power, as disclosed by the indirect evidence, as follows (at paragraph 161):

> The evidence on barriers to entry is not entirely conclusive. However, Bibby's [Canada Pipe's] large market share, its range of products and national presence, the limited penetration of competitors and the fact that this market offers only limited growth potential are sufficient to establish that Bibby [Canada Pipe] does control a substantial part of the cast iron DWV products market.

If there is a test of control other than market power, the Tribunal has not articulated it. If the test is market power, then the Tribunal's failure to recognize the significance of the price reductions which followed the emergence of new entrants in the market in Ontario and the western geographic regions is unreasonable.

[117] Canada Pipe also attacks the Tribunal's finding on barriers to entry. The Tribunal found that (at paragraph 152):

> Entry must be shown to be both effective and viable. In this instance, entry by various players, especially in the West and to a lesser extent in Ontario, has certainly had an effect on prices. From Bibby's reaction to these new entrants, it can be said that they are perceived as competitors. Thus entry has been effective where it has occurred. Its viability remains to be determined.

In my view, this passage incorporates two findings of fact which are conclusive against a finding of market power on the part of Canada Pipe. New suppliers did emerge, so that barriers to entry, if present, were not determinative, and the new suppliers had an effect on Canada Pipe's prices, which is inconsistent with the latter exercising market power.

[118] As a result, I find that the Tribunal's conclusion that Canada Pipe had market power in British Columbia, Alberta, the Prairies and Ontario is unreasonable as it is inconsistent with its own definition of market power, the test of whether Canada Pipe had control or substantial control of the 18 markets which the Tribunal defined. As a result, the Tribunal's finding as to market power applies only to the three product markets in two of the six geographic markets which it defined, namely Quebec and the Maritimes.

CONCLUSION

[119] Having regard to the evidence which the Tribunal had before it, as well as the standard of review applicable to these questions, I find that the Tribunal's definition of the product markets do not justify this Court's intervention. However, I am of the view that we must intervene with respect to the question of Canada Pipe's market power in British Columbia, Alberta, the Prairies and Ontario, four of the six geographic markets identified by the Tribunal. The fact that Canada Pipe was required to lower prices in response to competition from other suppliers of cast iron products in those markets is inconsistent with the definition of market power. Consequently, I would return the matter to the Competition Tribunal with a direction for reconsideration on the basis of these reasons.

COMPETITION TRIBUNAL

REASONS AND ORDER

The Director of Investigation and Research

v.

Chrysler Canada Ltd.

On December 14, 1988, the Director of Investigation and Research ("Director") filed an application with the Competition Tribunal ("Tribunal") pursuant to section 75 of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34, as amended ("Act"), requesting the following relief:

> 1. An order against the Respondent Chrysler Canada Ltd. (Chrysler) requiring that it forthwith and thereafter accept Richard Brunet (Brunet) as a customer on trade terms usual and customary to its relationship with Brunet for the supply of Chrysler Parts (as hereafter defined) to Brunet; and
> 2. Such other and further orders which in the circumstances may be just, including:
>  a) requiring and directing that Chrysler reverse all steps taken to dissuade any person (including Chrysler franchised dealers) in Canada from conducting business with Brunet with respect to Chrysler Parts;

b) restraining Chrysler from combining or arranging with any other person to refuse, suppress, hinder or delay the supply of Chrysler Parts to Brunet; and

c) directing that Chrysler take all such ancillary and necessary steps and actions to restore Brunet to the position he enjoyed before the actions herein complained of.

In 1977 Richard Brunet ("Brunet") opened and began to operate a business in the City of Montreal, Province of Quebec, commonly known as R. Brunet Company ("RBC"). The business was registered as a sole proprietorship.

Brunet's father had operated a similar business in New York City, State of New York, in the United States of America, under the name of G. Brunet Company. This business was involved in the export of automotive parts, including automotive parts of Chrysler Corporation, Ford Corporation and General Motors Corporation. The automotive parts were exported, in the main, to Colombia, Peru and Venezuela. In November 1974, following the death of his father, Brunet took over the operation of his father's business until 1976 when he came to live in Canada.

Brunet, as had his father, exported automotive parts to markets outside of North America, initially to South America, and later to the Middle East, Scandinavia and the United Kingdom.

Although RBC deals with the sale of automotive parts which it purchases from various suppliers, the present application pertains to the relationship between RBC and Chrysler Canada and the sale by RBC of Chrysler automotive parts in the export market.

Throughout the proceedings, certain terminology relating to the Chrysler parts has been used. The most frequent references are to two groups of Chrysler parts: "A Parts" and "B Parts". On its price lists, Chrysler[1] identifies its parts by a seven-digit number and by one of the above two letters.

B Parts are commonly known as "captive" parts. Mr. Clifford Roy Burnett ("Burnett"), the recently retired Vice-President of Parts and Service and Technical Programs of Chrysler Canada, who since 1974 had the responsibility through various positions for the parts distribution in Canada, testified that some automotive parts that are considered captive parts may in fact be available from a source other than Chrysler. Generally, however, if an owner of a Chrysler motor vehicle must replace a B Part, the part will have to be obtained from Chrysler. Sheet metal parts or interior mouldings were referred to as clear examples of captive parts that could only be supplied by Chrysler.

A Parts are commonly known as "competitive" parts since these parts are available from a variety of automotive parts manufacturers for a particular application. An example of a competitive part would be a shock absorber or a fan belt.

Automotive parts can also be divided according to the use to which the part is put. When reference is made to "service" parts, this is taken to mean parts that are used to repair a vehicle, consequent upon an accident or some other malfunction, as opposed to "aftermarket" parts which are replaced as a matter of course during routine maintenance. The breakdown according to application relates to the captive/competitive dichotomy in the following way: service parts may be both captive and competitive; aftermarket parts are competitive more than captive.

Certain brand names specific to the Chrysler organization also appear in the evidence. "Autopar" is a line of Chrysler parts which comprises only competitive parts and which is marketed only by Chrysler Canada. "Mopar" is a line of Chrysler parts which, in Canada, includes mainly captive parts.

Finally, mention should be made of the "Interparts" programs of Chrysler U.S. Interparts programs involve a bulk purchase of some minimum quantity of an automotive part from a special production run of that specific part. These programs include both captive and competitive parts and are only available through Chrysler U.S.

RBC had its first dealings with Chrysler Canada in 1977 and continued to buy from them until the events that led to the present application. Apart from selling Chrysler parts Brunet dealt with two major suppliers in the United States (described as "Other U.S." in Table 1 below). He has also purchased small volumes of auto parts from several suppliers in Canada. His principal supplier in the U.S. until 1983 was Ford Corporation. His relationship with this company ended in 1985. The "Other U.S." since 1985 consists, for practical purposes, of purchases from a single source of supply on behalf of a particular customer. The purchases from Chrysler Canada dealers relate to the present proceedings. Table 1 divides the sales of RBC by the aforementioned sources of supply since 1984.

It is uncontested that Brunet was encouraged by Chrysler Canada throughout his association with it to expand the sale of Chrysler Canada auto parts in the export market. A number of actions were taken by Chrysler Canada in its treatment of Brunet to allow for the needs of his customers who faced particular problems of exchange controls and import permits with time deadlines. The details of some of the particular services provided by Chrysler Canada will be discussed in connection with the definition of market. Brunet undertook to represent the Autopar line at trade shows in South America with posters supplied by Chrysler Canada. On occasion Chrysler Canada referred potential customers to Brunet.

On August 29, 1986, Brunet received a telephone call from a Mr. P.R. Williams, National Parts and Sales and Marketing Manager for Chrysler Canada, who informed Brunet that all his orders with Chrysler Canada had been placed on hold. By letter dated October 8, 1986, in reply to a letter from Brunet dated October 2, 1986, sent to Burnett and dealing with a matter referred to as "Requirement for Britain",[2] Burnett advised Brunet that there was "no longer any organizational responsibility for handling these orders in Canada". This letter went on to state that all orders currently in the system would be processed according to "normal practice and/or availability of supply":

Dear Richard:

Your letter of October 2, 1986 is received and since there is no longer any organizational responsibility for handling these orders in Canada I have referred your request to Mr. B.J. Lerner in the U.S. Chrysler Export Sales Office who will handle all of your requirements.

All orders currently in the system will be filled and shipped as per our normal practice and/or availability of supply.

Thank you for your inquiry. You will hear from Mr. Lerner's office in the near future.

Yours very truly,

The orders currently in the system were filled by Chrysler Canada over the following five to six months. No new orders were accepted by Chrysler Canada after October 8, 1986 causing Brunet to try to find alternative sources of supply. In January 1987, Brunet approached several Montreal-area Chrysler Canada dealers in order to source parts to service his customers. It did not take long for Chrysler Canada to become aware that Brunet was purchasing parts from its dealers. This information was relayed to Chrysler Canada's head office by Chrysler Canada field representatives through its Montreal office. Suspicion was also aroused by a large order placed by a Chrysler Canada dealer through the Chrysler Canada computer system. This order contained an unusually large number of older automotive parts, far in excess of normal domestic demand. A representative of Chrysler Canada (head office) contacted the Sales Manager of the Regional Office in Pointe Claire, Province of Quebec, a Mr. Jacques St. Pierre, and asked St. Pierre to have his district managers instruct their dealers not to sell Chrysler automotive parts for export.

This initiative was followed up by a bulletin to all Chrysler Canada dealers dated May 8, 1987:

Bulletin No. 87-37
May 8, 1987

TO ALL DEALERS AND AUTOPAR DISTRIBUTORS OF CHRYSLER CANADA LTD.

EXPORT PARTS SALES

We have received several inquiries recently from Dealers regarding the sale of Chrysler Parts for Export Sales purposes. The requests may have resulted from recent articles in the press that Chrysler would be expanding sales of some North American-built products into foreign markets.

The sales of Mopar and Autopar Parts by Chrysler Canada is strictly to service our Canadian customers, not for export. If you receive an inquiry concerning export sales, please contact your Regional Parts Sales Manager, for referral to our Export Sales Office in Detroit. All Chrysler Canada Export Sales will be handled in this manner.

We would appreciate your co-operation in this matter.

AUTOPAR DE CHRYSLER CANADA LTÉE

VENTE DE PIECES POUR L'EXPORTATION

Plusieurs concessionnaires nous ont récemment contactés au sujet de la vente de pièces Chrysler pour l'exportation. Les demandes sont peut-être reliées à la parution de certains articles dans la presse déclarant que Chrysler étendrait la vente de certains produits de fabrication nord-américaine aux marchés étrangers.

La vente des produits Mopar et Autopar par Chrysler Canada est strictement réservée à nos clients canadiens et non à l'exportation. Pour toute demande concernant la vente pour l'exportation, veuillez communiquer avec votre directeur régional, secteur vente des pièces, qui en référera au bureau des ventes pour l'exportation à Detroit. Toutes les ventes de pièces pour l'exportation de Chrysler Canada seront ainsi traitées.

Votre collaboration dans cette affaire sera grandement appréciée.

Despite the general language of this bulletin, the Tribunal is satisfied, from the testimony of Burnett, that the bulletin was aimed at preventing Brunet from obtaining Chrysler parts to service his customers.

> Q. Now, in the second sentence in that first paragraph, it says:
>
> "The request may have resulted from recent articles in the press that Chrysler would be expanding sales of some North American-built products into foreign markets."
>
> Given your evidence to this point on this bulletin, would you agree with me that the specific impetus for the bulletin was Mr. Brunet and not any articles that may have appeared in the press?
>
> A. That is true, although there were articles in the press about Chrysler entering the European market.
>
> Q. But I put it to you that, in the absence of Mr. Brunet's activities, you would not have sent this memorandum.
> A. Probably not, sir.[6]

Notwithstanding the issuance of the bulletin Brunet was still able to purchase, with difficulty, Chrysler parts from Chrysler Canada dealers. On September 27, 1987 a second bulletin was issued by Chrysler Canada.[7] This second bulletin was much the same as the first. It emphasized, as did the first, that parts were not to be sold for export and that all requests for parts for export should be referred to the dealer's Regional Manager who, in turn, would refer the matter to the office of Export Sales in Detroit.

Some time after the May 1987 bulletin, Chrysler Canada commenced a review of all of its dealer agreements which culminated in the re-signing of all the Chrysler Canada dealers to new dealer agreements. A clause was inserted in order to restrict parts sales to the domestic market in the following terms:

> Whereas the parties hereto have heretofore entered into a Sales and Service Agreement relating to, among other things, a means for the sale, in Canada, of parts and accessories and other products and services manufactured or distributed by CHRYSLER ... .
> And to provide parts to the Canadian domestic market to assure service to those vehicles sold in Canada for the full extent of their service requirements.[8]

Although no sanctions or penalties have as yet been applied against any of its dealers by Chrysler Canada for breach of the clause, Burnett is of the view that the new agreement gives Chrysler Canada the power to terminate the franchise of a dealer who sells parts to Brunet. Changes were also made to the computerized ordering system of Chrysler Canada to flag atypical orders involving large volumes or unusual parts.

Section 75 of the *Competition Act

On the basis of the above facts the Director instituted the proceedings pursuant to section 75 of the Act. Section 75 reads:

>
> (a) a person is substantially affected in his business or is precluded from carrying on business due to his inability to obtain adequate supplies of a product anywhere in a market on usual trade terms,
>
> (b) the person referred to in paragraph (a) is unable to obtain adequate supplies of the product because of insufficient competition among suppliers of the product in the market,
>
> (c) the person referred to in paragraph (a) is willing and able to meet the usual trade terms of the supplier or suppliers of the product, and
> (d) the product is in ample supply,
>
> the Tribunal may order that one or more suppliers of the product in the market accept the person as a customer within a specified time on usual trade terms unless, within the specified time, in the case of an article, any customs duties on the article are removed, reduced or remitted and the effect of the removal, reduction or remission is to place the person on an equal footing with other persons who are able to obtain adequate supplies of the article in Canada.
> (2) For the purposes of this section, an article is not a separate product in a market only because it is differentiated from other articles in its class by a trade mark, proprietary name or the like, unless the article so differentiated occupies such a dominant position in that market as to substantially affect the ability of a person to carry on business in that class of articles unless that person has access to the article so differentiated.
> (3) For the purposes of this section, the expression "trade terms" means terms in respect of payment, units of purchase and reasonable technical and servicing requirements.

In order for the Tribunal to exercise its discretion to make an order pursuant to the section the Director must establish all of the elements contained in each of the paragraphs (1)(a) to (1)(d). Paragraphs (1)(c) and (1)(d) are not in serious dispute. The Tribunal is satisfied that Brunet is willing and able to meet the usual trade terms of Chrysler Canada and that the product is in ample supply. No evidence was led to the contrary. Before turning to the determination of whether the elements of (1)(a) and (1)(b) have been met, it is necessary to establish the meaning of "product" and "market".

Product

Is the product in question Chrysler Canada auto parts as submitted by the Director, Chrysler auto parts, or auto parts in general as submitted by the respondent? The definition of market is closely tied to the answer to this question. The Tribunal is satisfied that the relevant product is, for the reasons explained below, Chrysler auto parts.

Products and markets can only be meaningfully defined in a particular context and for a particular purpose. The approach to defining these terms may be entirely different where, as in the case of a merger, the ultimate test is whether the merger will substantially lessen competition and the definition must be consistent with the attempt to determine whether the merger will result in an increase in prices or in other effects consistent with a lessening of competition. In the case of paragraph 75(1)(a), the ultimate test concerns the effect on the business of the person refused supplies. Where products are purchased for resale, the effect on the business of the person refused supply will depend on the demand of the person's customers and whether substitutes are acceptable to them. Therefore, the starting point for the definition of "product" under section 75 is the buyer's customers.

Although Brunet's business is the export of auto parts, the definition of the product in relation to Brunet's dealings with Chrysler Canada depends on the demand of customers who purchased Chrysler auto parts. The issue is whether they treated Chrysler auto parts as a distinct product or as one for which they would readily accept substitutes. The evidence shows that Brunet responded to direct orders of customers, that customers specified that they wanted genuine Chrysler parts, and that they used numerical codes specific to Chrysler's parts system when ordering. There was no question of substituting parts of other suppliers for those of Chrysler. The product in question is thus Chrysler auto parts.

The respondent submits that subsection 75(2) severely constrains the definition of the product as Chrysler auto parts: "the effect of subsection 75(2) with its reference to class of articles is that the Tribunal must define a product by a genus or class or kind description, unless the product meets the single exception thereto."[9] The applicant takes the position that the subsection "adds little to the analysis. In a buyer-derived demand situation alternative branded goods are of little utility and the particular sought branded goods will always be of importance."[10]

In the view of the Tribunal subsection 75(2) does not enter into the definition of the product as Chrysler auto parts. The product is Chrysler auto parts not "only because it is differentiated from the other articles in its class by a trade mark, proprietary name or the like".[11] It is not only the existence of the trademark that determines the definition but rather the demand of Brunet's customers. Subsection 75(2) forecloses reliance being placed on trademarks (save for the specified exception) to define products in spite of the existence of acceptable substitutes to customers. This factor, the presence or absence of acceptable substitutes to customers, is of paramount importance in arriving at the appropriate definition of the "product" and was the determining factor in the present case.

The evidence is that it is primarily service parts and within that group mainly captive parts that are ordered from Brunet. This is consistent with the designation of other parts as competitive because for these parts there are numerous alternative sources of supply and active price competition. Looking to the fact that sales by Brunet of the Autopar line, which consists only of competitive parts, were very limited, Chrysler Canada would have the Tribunal exclude the Autopar line from the product definition. The Director has stressed, through the evidence of Brunet, that in Brunet's experience competitive parts are ordered in the same way as captive parts (as a seven-digit number) and with the same insistence on genuine Chrysler parts. Virtually nothing turns on the finding of a distinction; no element of the decision depends on whether the product in question is Chrysler auto parts, captive and competitive, or exclusively captive Chrysler auto parts since the volume of competitive parts ordered from Brunet appears to have been minimal. A finding for Chrysler Canada would require that Brunet's sales and gross profits be modified to exclude sales of Autopar. This was not done by the Respondent's accounting expert. Given the foregoing and the fact that from Brunet's perspective (if not that of his customers insofar as they shop for cheaper sources of supply prior to ordering from Brunet) there is no difference between competitive and captive parts, the Tribunal makes no distinction between captive and competitive Chrysler parts.

The economist, Professor Ralph A. Winter, who appeared as an expert witness on behalf of the respondent, submits that the Tribunal should approach the definition of product and market not from the point of view of Brunet as a buyer, but from the viewpoint of determining whether Chrysler has substantial market power. This, he submits, can only be done by considering what Chrysler sells and with whom it competes. He concludes that the relevant market is synonymous with the worldwide sale of automobiles since the price of auto parts is established in conjunction with the pricing of vehicles. It is Winter's view that Chrysler's pricing of parts is constrained by the effect this can have on the sale of its vehicles and that it faces very stiff competition in the sale of its vehicles. Winter concludes that since Chrysler does not have substantial market power as a seller of vehicles, its decision to discontinue supplying Brunet was motivated by concerns for efficiency and not to increase its market power.

This argument is presented by Winter in relation to the definition of product and market and also in conjunction with the Tribunal's use of its discretion to grant an order in the event that it finds that all of the elements have been satisfied by the applicant. The Tribunal is satisfied that a broad consideration of Chrysler's market power is not required in determining whether the specific elements of section 75 of the Act have been satisfied but may be relevant in the Tribunal's exercise of its discretion.

Market

Having defined the product as Chrysler auto parts, the Tribunal must now determine the market in which Brunet buys

Chrysler auto parts. The applicant contends that the relevant market comprises Canada, that Chrysler Canada is the sole supplier and Brunet, in the event, is the sole buyer. The respondent submits that the market consists of both the U.S. and Canada, that Chrysler U.S. is the supplier and exporters of Chrysler auto parts are the buyers. The Tribunal is satisfied that the relevant market is Canada, and that the U.S. and Canada are separate markets. This conclusion is discussed in the following section that deals with the differences between purchases from Chrysler Canada and from Chrysler U.S. in small and large volumes.

(a) Parts Purchased in Small Volume

This refers to the number of units of each part and to the fact that the parts are individually packaged. It does not refer to the size of the total order.

The automotive parts purchased from Chrysler Canada or Chrysler U.S. are physically identical. However, Chrysler Canada and Chrysler U.S. each publish separate price lists for these parts. The evidence is that prices in Canada are established with respect to market conditions in Canada. According to the evidence of Burnett, Chrysler Canada used the U.S. price list as a point of departure and made its modifications to price in the light of domestic conditions, subject to meeting the financial tests within Chrysler.

The reason why prices (denominated in a common currency) for some parts are cheaper in Canada than in the U.S. was addressed in the evidence of Burnett and, more speculatively, in the evidence of Professors Schwindt and Winter. Burnett states that Canadian prices are primarily cheaper for parts used for older models of cars. He also said that Chrysler Canada tends not to change the prices of inventory until it is necessary to reorder and since the turnover of inventory is much slower in Canada than in the U.S., reordering occurs less frequently and thus price increases lag behind those in the U.S.

Winter hypothesizes that parts prices in Canada fell at the time of the decline in the Canadian dollar as compared to the American dollar in late 1970s. He reasons that Chrysler, in common with other companies, is reluctant to incorporate the effect of exchange rate changes in their prices because this would be too disruptive. Professor Richard Schwindt concludes that prices of vehicles and parts in Canada are more sensitive to import competition than in the U.S. and thus tend to be lower. All the explanations share the common feature that, whatever the cause, market conditions in the U.S. and Canada are different and the differences are reflected in different parts prices. The percentage of all Chrysler parts that were priced lower in Canada is not in evidence. The only specific evidence is that it is primarily older parts that are affected.

The evidence generally indicates that customers tended to buy exclusively or primarily from Brunet those parts that were cheaper to source through Chrysler Canada. Parts that were generally less expensive to source in the U.S. were purchased through other suppliers.

In addition to the price differences between Chrysler Canada and Chrysler U.S., there were several other important differences between them as sources of service parts. Chrysler Canada offered Brunet (and thus Brunet's customers) "price protection" against changes in prices between the time of order and delivery. This protection was offered for a period of up to four months, covering two bi-monthly changes in price lists. Only recently, in February 1989, was this protection made available to Brunet by Chrysler U.S.

Furthermore, when an order was sent to Chrysler Canada it responded with an "availability report" which identifies the parts that were immediately available and the length of the delay that would be required in supplying each of the remaining parts.

Brunet also asserts, with some corroboration from correspondence with customers, that Chrysler Canada offered superior service in other ways. Brunet claims that the percentage of orders immediately filled by Chrysler Canada was much higher than was the case with Chrysler U.S. and that the latter tended to fill orders through a series of relatively small shipments to Brunet's designated port. The result was slower shipment to Brunet's customers and higher costs. Brunet also claims that the accuracy with which orders were filled was higher in Canada than in the U.S. As a result there were fewer customer claims when supply was obtained from Chrysler Canada. The only evidence offered in contradiction is testimony by Burnett to the effect that the "fill rate" on orders received by Chrysler from dealers is 95 per cent in the U.S. compared to 96 per cent in Canada. This evidence does not, however, provide any information on Brunet's experience with Chrysler U.S. since Brunet is not a dealer and does not make typical dealer's orders.

The Tribunal does not accept Brunet's allegations that it is cheaper to ship to European destinations from a port in Montreal rather than a port in New Jersey. This evidence, given by Brunet, is contradicted by the evidence of a Mr. Jansson, a witness from Sweden who imports Chrysler Canada vehicles and Chrysler parts from Canada.

The importance to Brunet's customers of all of the foregoing differences between sourcing from Chrysler Canada and Chrysler U.S. that are not directly related to differences in the price lists cannot be accurately assessed. To do so would require evidence on whether Brunet's customers chose to source from Chrysler Canada when its prices were higher than those set by Chrysler U.S. In the absence of evidence of this kind, or at least evidence of customer statements that they clearly preferred to source from Chrysler Canada, the Tribunal concludes that these factors alone do not create two distinct sources of supply. This conclusion is supported by evidence that Brunet's customers tend to buy parts that are cheaper to source from Chrysler U.S. through other exporters than Brunet. This suggests that whatever problems there might have been in sourcing from Chrysler U.S., they could be overcome by price concessions or other advantages that these other exporters offered Brunet's customers. Insofar as Brunet's customers were concerned, he was a preferred source of supply primarily for parts that are cheaper to source in Canada.

Brunet earned a considerably higher profit margin on parts sourced from Chrysler Canada than on U.S. orders as the Canadian price list necessarily included Canadian federal sales tax and duty on parts imported into Canada. The duty and tax did not apply on parts exported from Canada. The duty and sales tax paid by Chrysler Canada were returned to Brunet and constituted the major part of his profit margin. The higher profitability Brunet earned on parts obtained in Canada put him in a position to offer discounts on the published price lists or to absorb some of the cost of higher prices, as may be the case when he buys from dealers. Thus, customers could be encouraged to purchase Canadian-sourced parts when list prices in the U.S. and Canada were similar. Whether discounts were in fact offered by Brunet is less important than his ability to do so.

Schwindt is of the view that the separate price lists in the two countries and the other differences discussed above create a separate "product bundle" with respect to Chrysler parts sourced in Canada and those sourced in the U.S., even though the parts are physically identical. He concludes that the differences are sufficiently great to create two distinct markets:

> When sourcing his purchases, Brunet considered a number of elements which were important to his purchase decision. These elements include: the physical characteristics of the automotive part; the delivery point; the probability that the order would be filled in a single delivery; the reliability of the supplier in meeting promised delivery dates; the predictability of trade terms; the probability of unauthorized substitutions; the probability of missing, misplaced or damaged goods; the supplier's cancellation policy; and price. Generally the physical characteristics of Chrysler automotive parts supplied by Chrysler Canada Ltd. were identical to those supplied by Chrysler U.S. However, the other elements of the product bundle could differ significantly between these suppliers.[12]

As indicated above, the Tribunal concludes that the critical difference between the two sources of supply is price.

Winter concludes that the physical identity of the parts obtained from the two sources is critical in establishing market boundaries, and since the only difference between the two sources is price (or other claimed advantages that can be translated into a price difference), parts supplied from Chrysler Canada and from Chrysler U.S. are in the same market:

> Products that are physically identical, and are perfectly substitutable in their end uses are properly regarded as in the same market unless geographical distance and directly related costs preclude their substitutability. Almost all of the items that Professor Schwindt lists, such as higher handling costs of U.S. sourced product, less price protection, less accommodation of timing requests, a stricter cancellation policy, and the unilateral substitution of technically equivalent parts, are equivalent to a higher cost of purchasing from Chrysler U.S., or a higher price paid to Chrysler U.S. The physical products from the two sources were identical; from the buyer's point of view all differences in terms of trade are equivalent to differences in price.[13]

He states that to conclude, as does Schwindt, that Chrysler Canada is in a different market than Chrysler U.S., is to arrive at the odd result that there is one supplier and one customer. He states that the effect of denying Brunet supply from Chrysler Canada is to place Brunet on the same footing as exporters operating from the U.S., whereas before he had the advantage of being able to sell from both price lists and to buy from both sources:

> The prices paid by Brunet to Chrysler U.S. and the trade terms available to Brunet from Chrysler U.S., were the same terms faced by every other distributor of Chrysler parts for export from North America (supra, Section II, paragraph 9). If a buyer of a particular article can obtain perfectly substitutable products at a modest or moderate price or cost increase, which price increase puts the buyer on an equal footing with other buyers of the product, then the substitute products should properly be included in the same market definition. The perfect

> substitutability of the parts from Chrysler U.S. and Chrysler Canada fulfils the essential criterion for inclusion of products in the same market.[14]

Whether Brunet is placed on the same footing as exporters in the U.S. (described by Burnett as the "level playing field") is not relevant to a determination of market definition, but may be relevant in deciding whether the Tribunal should exercise its discretion in issuing an order in the event that the applicant is successful in the present proceedings.

The existence of separate price lists in the U.S. and Canada and the fact that they are intended, according to the evidence of Burnett, to respond to different market conditions in the two countries strongly implies the existence of separate markets. No convincing evidence to the contrary has been presented. The price lists are used by the vast dealer networks in the two countries. It is difficult to believe that anyone would question that dealers in the U.S. and Canada are in separate markets with respect to the purchase of their parts. Yet Winter and the respondent submit that Brunet is in the same market as the numerous U.S.-based exporters with whom he competes for non-North American business. The Tribunal does not accept this conclusion, given that Chrysler Canada and Chrysler U.S. are in separate markets.

[14] Ibid. at para. 10.

In the case of Brunet it is clear that the market niche he occupies is based on the fact that some Chrysler auto parts are cheaper in Canada than in the U.S. The price differences are maintained by Chrysler for its own purposes. Similarly, the apparently anomalous situation where there is a single seller and a single buyer is also a result of Chrysler corporate policy. The decision to allow Brunet to address the non-North American markets from Canada was taken by Chrysler. It would similarly be able, apart from the question of the application of section 75 of the Act, to decide that all non-North American exports will originate in the U.S.

(b) Interparts - Parts Purchased in Large Volume

Are parts purchased under the Interparts programs in the United States in the same market as service parts purchased from Chrysler Canada? Although they are physically identical, parts purchased through Interparts and parts from Chrysler Canada are not generally substitutes and hence are not in the same market. This conclusion follows from the features of the Interparts programs: very large minimum purchase requirements; orders must be placed in advance for later manufacture and hence it may take considerable time for an order to be filled; parts are packaged in bulk rather than individually; prices are much lower than for parts ordered in small volumes. The dollar value of minimum purchases was recently raised by a large multiple in conjunction with the creation of Master Distributors of Interparts. The effect of this change is the virtual elimination of any substitution that may have occurred between sourcing of service parts in Canada and from Interparts.

The Law

As previously stated, the present application is made pursuant to section 75 of the Act. In order for the Director to succeed in his present application, he must satisfy the Tribunal of the existence of each element contained in the section.

(a) Business Substantially Affected

The establishment of the product and market as being Chrysler auto parts available in Canada allows a consideration of the element found in paragraph 75(1)(a), that is, whether Brunet was "substantially affected" in his "business" by the refusal of Chrysler Canada to supply Brunet with Chrysler auto parts.

The applicant submits that the "business" in issue relates to the "specific line or product within the overall enterprise affected by the refusal", that is, Brunet's business is exporting Chrysler Canada auto parts.[15] The respondent submits that a broader interpretation is required in light of the definition of "business" found in subsection 2(1) of the Act which states:

> "business" includes the business of
> (a) manufacturing, producing, transporting, acquiring, supplying, storing and otherwise dealing in articles, and > (b) acquiring, supplying and otherwise dealing in services.

The respondent submits that the evidence shows that Brunet's "business" is the "export business" or "conceivably his business of exporting automotive parts".[16]

A majority of the Tribunal agrees with the submission of the respondent that the effect on the entire activity of which the refused supplies are a part should be used. It is clear that a fair analysis of the situation in the present case requires that a broader interpretation is required than the one urged by the applicant. The submission of the applicant, if accepted, would be unnecessarily restrictive since this could preclude a proper understanding of the effects of the refusal to supply.

This does not mean, however, that the effect of the refusal to supply can be established solely by examining the overall sales and profit figures. To understand the effect of the refusal to supply, it is necessary to answer the following:

16 Respondent's Memorandum of Law at para. 25.

(a) does the product in issue account for a large percentage of the overall business?

(b) is the product easily replaced by other products sold by the business?

(c) does the sale of the product use up capacity that could be devoted to other activities?

(d) is the product used or sold in conjunction with other products and services so that the effect on the overall results of the business may be much greater than indicated by the volume of the product purchased?

Reliance on an examination of the overall business result may be appropriate where it is difficult to do a more disaggregated analysis. This is not necessary in the case of Brunet's business; it is very small, he has few customers and it is possible to inquire meaningfully whether there is a relationship between transactions. Under the circumstances the figures on his overall business provide information for only an initial step in the evaluation. The accountants called as expert witnesses by the parties did not have any particular familiarity with the auto parts export business in general, or with Brunet's business in particular. They were not, therefore, in a knowledgable position to give evidence on how the refusal of Chrysler Canada to sell to Brunet affected his overall sales and profits. Similarly, Winter, who stated the hypothesis that the capacity formerly used on the sale of Chrysler Canada-sourced parts was redirected to the sale of parts from other sources, was not in a position to confirm the factual validity of this submission.

The figures placed in evidence by the accountants for the two sides were similar and served to confirm that the records maintained by Brunet fairly represented his business transactions. There is agreement that the few discrepancies in their treatments are not of material importance in determining whether Brunet is substantially affected in his business.

The respondent stresses that Brunet had larger sales and profit after Chrysler Canada refused to supply Brunet in 1986 (referred to by the Director as the "cut-off") than in the years preceding it and therefore Brunet was not substantially affected by his inability to obtain supply from Chrysler Canada. As noted earlier, in some cases this type of evidence might be conclusive, but only where it is not possible to analyze how the separate parts of the business are related. The Tribunal is satisfied, through the evidence of Brunet, that the gross sales and profits earned from the sale of other products is totally unrelated, by way of the utilization of capacity or by way of demand, to the sale of Chrysler parts. The sale of other parts took very little of Brunet's time or that of his assistant and his business could easily have accommodated these additional sales if he had not lost sales of Chrysler parts as a result of his inability to obtain supplies from Chrysler Canada. Similarly, the demand for Chrysler auto parts was independent of the demand for other parts. Accordingly, any changes in the sales of other parts and the gross margins therefrom would have taken place whether or not Brunet's relationship with Chrysler Canada had changed. The same conclusion is applicable with respect to Interparts since service parts and Interparts represent separate markets. There is no reason to believe that Brunet's customers would be influenced to increase their demand for Interparts as a result of Brunet's inability to obtain supply from Chrysler Canada. If the cut-off had any effect on the sale of Interparts it would be a negative one to the extent that Brunet lost customers as a result of Chrysler Canada's refusal to supply auto parts.

Large sales of other auto parts to a single customer in 1987 and in 1988 virtually disappeared during the first four months of 1989. The large sales and resulting gross profits from these transactions were an essential part in the overall sales and gross profit figures that the respondent relies on to state that the cut-off does not have a substantial effect on Brunet's business because overall sales and gross profits did not fall after 1986. The most recent figures submitted show that overall sales and gross profits are much lower, on an annual basis, than before the cut-off.[17] This illustrates the danger of relying on aggregate data when more specific and relevant information is available. The Tribunal is satisfied that the evidence shows that both the increase in the sales of other auto parts and the subsequent decline are unrelated to the extent to which Chrysler parts are available to Brunet in Canada.

Following the cut-off Brunet was able to obtain parts from Chrysler Canada dealers. Under his arrangement with them he paid them their acquisition cost plus five per cent. It is noteworthy that Canadian-sourced parts were sufficiently more price attractive than those obtainable from Chrysler U.S. that Brunet and his customers preferred to pay the additional five per cent rather than purchase from Chrysler U.S.

A review of the extent to which Brunet was able to replace Chrysler Canada by its dealers must take into account the steps that Chrysler Canada took to discourage its dealers from selling to Brunet. The verbal warnings to particular dealers, the bulletins to all dealers and, finally the re-signing of all dealers to new contracts with a clause that is designed, according to the evidence of Burnett, to give Chrysler Canada the authority to discontinue supplying a dealer in the event that the dealer sells for export, have progressively changed the conditions under which Brunet can buy from Chrysler Canada dealers. Chrysler Canada has modified its computer software to more readily enable it to detect orders that may be intended for export. As a result of these efforts by Chrysler Canada, Brunet is forced to split his orders and to spread them over some time to attempt to avoid detection. There is evidence that three dealers openly sell to Brunet. The evidence is not clear on whether any of them have wholesale dealer status. If they do not, the prices that they pay for captive parts are more than those which Brunet paid to Chrysler Canada. In addition, it must be assumed that the dealers are earning some profit margin on their sales to Brunet, such as the five per cent referred to previously, thus causing Brunet to pay a substantially higher price for the auto parts than that paid by Brunet to Chrysler Canada.

Table 2 shows Brunet's gross profit and sales resulting from purchases from Chrysler Canada, Chrysler Canada dealers and Chrysler U.S. from 1984 to May 1989.

Notes:

* Gross profit (or gross margin or mark-up) is gross sales minus cost of goods sold. The Coopers & Lybrand report prepared on behalf of the applicant uses the terminology "mark-up" rather than "gross margin". There does not in fact appear to be any difference between the two terms except when expressed as a percentage, which involves the use of a different denominator. The principal discrepancy between the gross margins of Arthur Anderson and the mark-up of Coopers & Lybrand is with respect to dealers in 1988. Arthur Anderson arrived at a figure of $18,495, which compares to $14,706 in the table. The figures in all other cases are the same or very close. The Arthur Anderson study provided gross margins for fewer years for the categories shown in the table and thus the decision to use the Coopers and Lybrand information was, so to speak, by default.

Exhibit 10: Statement of Roman Boyko, C.A. / Richard Joly, C.A., Coopers and Lybrand for the Director of Investigation and Research, Schedules A to D; Exhibit 31: R. Brunet Company Sales, Cost of Sales and Gross Margin for the Period from January 1, 1989 to May 12, 1989.

The effectiveness of Chrysler Canada's efforts in preventing Brunet from exporting from Canada is shown in the above table. There is a marked decline in sales and profits on purchases of Chrysler auto parts in Canada between 1986 and 1988 and on through somewhat more than the first quarter of 1989. The figures for 1989 are taken as providing only an order of magnitude because the period is relatively short. The 1989 figures are based on an analysis by Mr. Reinke of Arthur Anderson & Co. who appeared as an expert witness on behalf of the respondent. Reinke prepared the figures in response to a request made to him during cross-examination. He examined the ledger cards used by Brunet and included only those transactions for which both a purchase and a sale were recorded. In the view of the Tribunal, this was the only reasonable course. Ledger cards on which only one part of a transaction are recorded cannot be included as part of sales for the period in question. Some transactions started in 1988 are part of the partial 1989 figures and it is to be expected that some transactions started between January 1 and May 12, 1989 will be completed and recorded as such after May 12, 1989. There is no obvious bias imported into the 1989 figures by this factor. The only legitimate concern that the volume of sales is understated relates to the possibility that Brunet failed to make entries on the ledger cards for completed transactions. No evidence of this was presented to the Tribunal.

The respondent points to variations in demand that are unrelated to the cut-off as a possible explanation for any decline in sales and gross margins experienced by Brunet. This is a possibility that must be taken into account. Variation in demand certainly accounted for swings in the sale of other auto parts. In considering this factor the Tribunal notes that neither party attempted to provide a benchmark against which the changes in Brunet's sales of service parts might be measured (such as, for instance, the total exports of Chrysler service parts from North America during the years in question). The Tribunal is not satisfied that the large changes in sales experienced by Brunet were caused by variations in demand that are unrelated to the cut-off.

To evaluate the changes in sales and profits experienced by Brunet, it is necessary to determine the meaning of "substantially affected". The applicant submits that "substantially affected" simply means more than a de minimis effect. This conclusion is based on the fact that an earlier draft of the Act required only that the person be "adversely affected" which could mean a negative effect to a small degree.

The respondent submits that "substantially" does not simply mean "some" or "to a degree" but rather "major" or "significant". The respondent takes the position that the ordinary dictionary definition should be used in the absence of strong reasons to the contrary. The Tribunal agrees that "substantial" should be given its ordinary meaning, which means more than something just beyond de minimis. While terms such as "important" are acceptable synonyms, further clarification can only be provided through evaluations of actual situations.

The cut-off resulted in a decline of over $200,000 in sales between 1986 and 1988. 1987 was a year of transition during most of which Brunet was able to obtain parts from Chrysler Canada dealers and Chrysler Canada continued to fill orders received by Brunet before October 1986. The slight rise in 1988 sales of Chrysler U.S.-sourced parts suggests that some substitution may have occurred between Chrysler Canada and Chrysler U.S. sourced parts, perhaps because of the increasing difficulty of obtaining parts in Canada. If such substitution did occur, it was far too limited to alleviate the decline in sales and gross profits from Chrysler auto parts. The decline in profits between 1986 and 1988 from sourcing Chrysler parts in Canada was in excess of $30,000. Losses of the order of magnitude of $200,000 in sales and $30,000 in gross profits constitute a substantial effect for a small business such as Brunet's. The figures for more than a third of 1989 and the fact that Chrysler Canada has put in place contracts that will permit it to discipline dealers who sell for export suggest that even greater losses may be anticipated in the future.

The issue as to whether Brunet is unable to obtain supplies because of inadequate competition in the market turns on whether Chrysler Canada dealers are in the same market as Chrysler Canada as suppliers to Brunet. The Tribunal concludes that the restrictions placed by Chrysler Canada on its dealers clearly make them inferior sources of supply to Brunet and that they therefore do not provide adequate competition to Chrysler Canada.

Exercise of Discretion

The Tribunal is satisfied that the Director has proven, through the evidence presented, all of the elements of section 75 of the Act. Once this prerequisite is met, the Tribunal has the discretion to issue an order requiring Chrysler Canada to resume supplying Brunet with Chrysler auto parts within a specified time on usual trade terms.

There are several areas of evidence and argument that bear on the exercise of the Tribunal's discretion. These are: the reasons behind Chrysler Canada's decision to discontinue supplying Brunet; the market position of Chrysler and the changes that it was making in its distribution system; the long association between Brunet and Chrysler Canada; the unquestioned encouragement that Chrysler Canada provided Brunet; and the manner in which the cut-off was implemented.

(a) The Decision to Discontinue Supply to Brunet

The respondent takes the position that the decision to no longer permit Brunet to buy from Chrysler Canada was taken in response to Brunet breaking one of the conditions attached to such supply, that Brunet not sell to franchised dealers outside of North America in competition with Chrysler U.S.

The existence of such a condition is in dispute. Burnett alleges that this condition, along with the condition that Brunet not divert supplies into the North American market, were clearly set out in a verbal arrangement between himself and Brunet. There is no written agreement between Chrysler Canada and Brunet. Brunet denies that it was ever understood that he was not to sell to Chrysler dealers outside of North America. The Tribunal accepts his evidence.

Associated documentary evidence supports Brunet's position. Correspondence between Chrysler Canada and Brunet corroborates that Chrysler Canada was concerned that parts sold to Brunet not be diverted into the domestic market. Procedures were established to ensure that such diversion was prevented. In contrast, there is no mention in any of the correspondence between Brunet and Chrysler Canada prior to 1986 that the latter was concerned about the possibility that Brunet might be selling to franchised dealers outside of North America. Concern about Brunet competing with Chrysler U.S. is first raised in May 1986 in connection with Brunet's approach to an "Interparts distributor" (rather than a franchised dealer) in Peru:

Mr. R. Brunet
R. Brunet Company
Suite 918
360 St. James Street West
Montreal, Quebec
H2Y 1P5

Dear Richard:

This letter will serve to confirm our telephone conversation regarding your letter of March 19, 1986, to Colonial Motors in Peru. Your letter suggests that in some cases, it is more advantageous to purchase parts from yourself than it is to purchase from Chrysler Corporation. Colonial Motors is an authorized Interparts Distributor.

I would like to remind you that when you are representing Chrysler Canada Ltd. in the export market, your objective is to compliment (sic) the Corporation's Interparts Division's sales activities, not to compete for their Distributors' business. We would appreciate your co-operation in this matter.

Yours very truly,

CHRYSLER CANADA LTD.

[18] Exhibit 3, Tab 134.

The context and the language of the letter create ambiguities. This sole written reference to the claimed Chrysler Canada understanding with Brunet is not persuasive.

Most importantly, sales to a Mr. Karlsson, a franchised dealer in Sweden, took place against a backdrop of a visit by Karlsson to the central Chrysler Canada parts depot. Brunet introduced Karlsson to the manager of the warehouse and sent Burnett a copy of a letter that Brunet sent to the manager following Karlsson's visit. Burnett passed on the letter to Williams, the author of the May 1986 letter referred to above.[19] It is difficult to believe that Brunet would have been so open in presenting and discussing Karlsson if he knew that sales to Karlsson's company would have been in contravention of a condition of purchase from Chrysler Canada. Furthermore, Brunet claims that he was referred to Karlsson by an employee of Chrysler Canada, a Mr. Barton, through a Mr. Hedlund who was acting as Canadian agent for Karlsson. This evidence is not contradicted. It is also undisputed that the same employee, Barton, had referred a Mr. Jansson, a non-franchised dealer in Sweden who had purchased vehicles from Chrysler Canada and needed parts, to Brunet. Burnett states that he did not know that Karlsson was a franchised dealer although Chrysler Canada had access to this information. More critical to the issue is the fact that Burnett never inquired, leaving the impression that whether Brunet was selling to franchised Chrysler dealers outside of North America was of no concern to Chrysler Canada.

(b) Consolidation of Control of Chrysler Exports

Although the evidence does not support the respondent's position that Chrysler Canada had an agreement with Brunet with respect to export to Chrysler franchised dealers, this does not mean that Chrysler was not concerned by such exports. It does not require specific evidence to conclude that the Chrysler export arm would find it embarrassing to have to compete with Brunet for the trade of its dealers. But beyond any such potential embarrassment, it is easy to accept that Chrysler would want to consolidate control of exports in one country and not be concerned with pricing differences between Canada and the United States affecting export markets. One does not have to go so far as Winter and conclude that the motive for consolidating exports is strictly to enhance efficiency in order to conclude that the decision is not solely intended to protect a separate price structure in Canada. Although Burnett denies that the Chrysler organization was in disarray in the early 1980s when Chrysler was in financial difficulty, the evidence shows that plants outside North America were sold off and the sale of Chrysler vehicles through (foreign) Chrysler franchised dealers was stopped. The evidence shows that, in recent years, Chrysler vehicles are once again being sold through (foreign) franchised dealers. It is easy to understand that Chrysler would want to make organizational changes that can better accommodate its changing distribution system.

The respondent has not attempted to provide a cohesive explanation of the Chrysler distribution system. The principal argument put forward is that Brunet was being placed in the same position as U.S.-based exporters who, according to the evidence of Burnett, numbered somewhat more than one hundred and had combined annual sales of $80 million (U.S.). No details were provided regarding who these firms are, who they sell to or their relation with Chrysler U.S.

The Tribunal must consider that the respondent has not presented any evidence that the granting of an order pursuant to section 75 of the Act would disadvantage the respondent. A point that has been raised in connection with the attempt to prevent dealers from selling for export is that exporting some parts that are in short supply (this applies particularly to older vehicles) could deprive domestic consumers. It strikes the Tribunal that this concern could most effectively be dealt with by having Brunet deal directly with Chrysler Canada. To the extent that Brunet is successful in buying from dealers, Chrysler Canada cannot identify the orders from dealers that are destined for export, which was not the case when it was selling directly to Brunet.

(c) Brunet's Long Association with Chrysler Canada

It is uncontested that Brunet was encouraged throughout his association with Chrysler Canada. A number of actions were taken by Chrysler Canada to accommodate its treatment of Brunet to allow for the needs arising from dealing with customers who faced problems of exchange controls and import permits with time deadlines. Burnett confirmed that Chrysler Canada had encouraged Brunet in his efforts to expand the sale of Chrysler Canada auto parts. Chrysler Canada on occasion referred potential customers to Brunet. In spite of this long and friendly relationship, no attempt was made by Chrysler Canada to resolve any problems that they perceived in Brunet selling to Karlsson in Sweden or attempting to sell to Colonial Motors, an Interparts dealer in Peru. There was no warning that he might be cut off and there was no face-to-face meeting to discuss the situation. Brunet was shown little consideration apart from Burnett agreeing to fill orders received by him prior to the cut-off date.

Conclusion

Section 75 is different than other sections in Part VIII of the Act. The test for whether the elements in the section are satisfied is not the effect on competition or efficiency. These considerations enter, where applicable, in the exercise of discretion.

The Tribunal accepts that Chrysler or Chrysler Canada does not occupy a very strong market position in the automobile industry (even though, as might be expected, it is in a very strong position with respect to the distribution of its products) and that it may have legitimate business interests that it is trying to protect. Weighing against this consideration is the long relationship between Brunet and Chrysler Canada, the manner in which sales to Brunet were terminated, and the fact that the respondent has not made any effort to establish that the granting of an order by the Tribunal would prejudice it in any way. Brunet has been substantially affected by the denial of supplies. He merits relief and it will be provided in the order.

The Tribunal is of the view that a proper balancing of interests in this case might be better accomplished with an order that was limited with respect to time, or perhaps with respect to the category of buyers that would be open to Brunet. Such an order could probably best be achieved through negotiations between the parties.

The Tribunal is satisfied, however, that its authority under section 75 is limited to the issue of an order that requires the respondent to supply Brunet Chrysler parts under the usual trade terms as it had done up to October 1986. Such an order shall issue.

There shall be no order as to costs. The Tribunal is satisfied that it does not have the jurisdiction to order the payment of costs.

FOR THESE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL ORDERS THAT Chrysler Canada Ltd. accept Richard Brunet as a customer for the supply of Chrysler parts on trade terms usual and customary to its relationship with Brunet as the said terms existed prior to August, 1986.

DATED at Ottawa, this 13th day of October, 1989.

Registry Document No.: 41

IN THE MATTER OF the Competition Act, RSC 1985, c C-34 as amended;

AND IN THE MATTER OF an application by CarGurus, Inc. for an Order pursuant to section 103.1 granting leave to make application under sections 75, 76 and 77 of the Competition Act.

CarGurus, Inc.

Trader Corporation
(respondent)

Decided on the basis of the written record.
Before Judicial Member: D. Gascon J. (Chairperson)
Date of Reasons for Order and Order: October 14, 2016

REASONS FOR ORDER AND ORDER DISMISSING AN APPLICATION FOR LEAVE

I. OVERVIEW

[1] On April 15, 2016, CarGurus, Inc. ("CarGurus") applied to the Competition Tribunal, pursuant to section 103.1 of the Competition Act, RSC 1985, c C-34 (the "Act"), for leave to bring an application under sections 75, 76 and 77 of the Act dealing respectively with refusal to deal, price maintenance and exclusive dealing. If leave is granted, CarGurus seeks an order directing Trader Corporation ("Trader") to accept CarGurus as a customer and to supply certain vehicle listings data to it on standard trade terms, and prohibiting Trader from continuing to engage in the practices forming the basis of CarGurus' application.

[2] On May 4, 2016, Trader submitted a request by letter for leave to file affidavit evidence as part of its representations in writing in response (the "Response") to CarGurus' application for leave. On June 9, 2016, the Tribunal partially granted Trader's request to file certain affidavit evidence as part of its Response. On June 23, 2016, Trader filed its Response and CarGurus subsequently filed its reply (the "Reply") on June 30, 2016.

[3] In support of its application for leave, CarGurus submitted an affidavit sworn on April 14, 2016 by Ms. Martha Blue, the Senior Vice-President Business Development for CarGurus (the "Blue Affidavit"). As an exhibit attached to the Blue Affidavit, CarGurus submitted another affidavit of Ms. Blue sworn on March 3, 2016 (the "Blue Copyright Affidavit") which had been filed in the context of an on-going copyright litigation between CarGurus and Trader before the Ontario Superior Court of Justice (the "Copyright Proceeding").

[4] In its Response, Trader submitted an affidavit sworn on June 23, 2016 by Mr. Roger Dunbar, Vice President of Marketing for Trader (the "Dunbar Affidavit"). Trader also relied on several affidavits filed in the Copyright Proceeding, and which were included by CarGurus as attachments to the Blue Affidavit, notably an affidavit of Mr. Dunbar sworn December 22, 2015 (the "Dunbar Copyright Affidavit").

[5] Pursuant to subsections 103.1(1) and (6) of the Act, the Tribunal has relied on these affidavits and the written representations of the parties in deciding this application for leave.

[6] CarGurus claims that it has provided sufficient credible evidence to satisfy the Tribunal that there is a reasonable possibility that its business is directly and substantially affected by Trader's practices, and that such practices could be the subject of an order under either section 75, 76 or 77 of the Act. Trader opposes CarGurus' application for leave and seeks an order denying it, with costs. Trader argues that CarGurus has failed to provide sufficient credible evidence for each of the requirements set out in sections 75, 76 or 77 as well as subsections 103.1(7) and 103.1(7.1) of the Act.

[7] For the reasons that follow, I am not satisfied that CarGurus has met its burden under subsection 103.1(7) to apply for relief under the refusal to deal and exclusive dealing provisions of the Act, nor under subsection 103.1(7.1) with respect to the relief sought under the price maintenance provision.[1]

II. BACKGROUND

A. THE PARTIES

a. CarGurus

[8] CarGurus owns and operates websites that enable potential purchasers of automobiles to research and compare vehicle listings for used and new automobiles within a geographic area, and to contact the sellers of those vehicles. In the context of this application, CarGurus refers to such websites as "Digital Marketplaces". CarGurus launched its website in the United States (known as cargurus.com) in 2007 and announced the launch of its Canadian website (i.e., cargurus.ca) on May 26, 2015.

[9] CarGurus asserts that it provides its vehicle listings services to dealers for free and operates on a lower-cost subscription model. It generates the leads to dealers and then follows up with those dealers to offer them additional services. CarGurus argues that it is this low-cost offering that has made it a very successful competitor in the United States.

b. Trader

[10] Trader operates a Digital Marketplace for vehicles in Canada and also offers other related services. Through its websites autotrader.ca and autohebdo.net, Trader advertises an inventory of new and used vehicles for sale in Canada. It sources its inventory of vehicle listings from private sellers and vehicle dealers. It does not buy or sell vehicles, but acts as an intermediary between buyers and sellers.

[11] In addition to offering its listing services, Trader also offers "capture services". If a dealer subscribes to Trader's capture service, Trader has one of its employees, or a contractor who has assigned his or her intellectual property rights to Trader, visit the dealership, consult with and gather information from the dealer and take photographs of the vehicles. The Trader representative then organizes this vehicle information and photographs and uploads all this data for display on one or more of Trader's and the dealer's websites (the "Trader Vehicle Listings").

[1] The Tribunal wishes to indicate that its decision was ready to be released in mid-September but that, further to Directions issued on September 14 and October 4, 2016, it had agreed to temporarily hold off releasing its decision in light of the parties' settlement discussions.

B. THE RELEVANT FACTS

a. The Industry

[14] CarGurus and Trader both carry on business in the online marketing of automobiles. They compete by offering Digital Marketplaces that allow consumers to search vehicle listings from automobile dealers and private sellers for new and used vehicles for sale. Consumers use the Digital Marketplaces to acquire information about vehicle availability, features and prices in the search and evaluation process leading to the purchase of a vehicle. However, although consumers conduct their search online, the actual purchase of vehicles still typically takes place when consumers visit the physical premises of automobile dealers or the private sellers.

[15] The vehicle listing information available on Digital Marketplaces normally includes, for each vehicle, the make, model, year, vehicle information number, mileage, price, photographs and other details. It is uncommon to market a vehicle without a photograph.

[16] Online marketing of vehicles involves the downstream market where Digital Marketplaces such as CarGurus and Trader offer their services as well as an upstream market for the supply of vehicle listing data (the "Vehicle Listings") used by those Digital Marketplaces to deliver their services. CarGurus describes Digital Marketplaces as a two-sided platform connecting sellers of vehicles and potential buyers of vehicles, where both sides benefit from the increase in the size of the group sitting on the opposite side of the platform.

[17] Vehicle Listings are commonly provided by original equipment manufacturers (i.e., the car manufacturers), automobile dealers, private sellers and Digital Marketplaces themselves. Entities known in the industry as feed providers (the "Feed Providers") also receive Vehicle Listings from dealers and provide data feeds of such Vehicle Listings to Digital Marketplaces.

[18] CarGurus, Trader and the other operators of Digital Marketplaces aggregate Vehicle Listings information from car manufacturers, automobile dealers and private sellers and make it accessible to consumers through search engines on their respective websites.

[19] CarGurus estimates that there are approximately 10 businesses in Canada operating Digital Marketplaces, including Trader. CarGurus further claims that Trader is the dominant supplier of Vehicle Listings to Digital Marketplaces. While CarGurus does not include Kijiji as a competitor in Digital Marketplaces, Kijiji represents itself as the largest automotive Digital Marketplace in Canada in its advertising materials.

[20] Given that consumers want to have access to comprehensive vehicle information when they are shopping for a vehicle, there is a direct correlation between Vehicle Listings, website traffic, specific inquiries from consumers to dealers about a vehicle (known as "leads" to dealers), and resulting revenues for the Digital Marketplaces. According to CarGurus, the ability to generate leads to dealers is the basis of its revenue model.

b. Relationship between CarGurus and Trader

[21] Trader claims that it owns copyright in the vehicle photographs that are included in its inventory of Vehicle Listings and more specifically in the Trader Vehicle Listings.

[22] In May 2015, Trader found that its vehicle photographs contained in the Trader Vehicle Listings appeared on CarGurus' website and advised CarGurus that it held the copyright on these photographs. In July 2015, Trader sent CarGurus a draft Syndication Agreement relating to the potential future supply of the Trader Vehicle Listings to CarGurus. CarGurus did not accept the terms of the Syndication Agreement proposed by Trader, as CarGurus claims that a number of its provisions would have prevented it from effectively competing with Trader in the Canadian marketplace.

[23] There were no further communications between the parties between July and December 2015.

[24] In December 2015, Trader commenced the Copyright Proceeding seeking declarations that CarGurus had infringed Trader's copyright in relation to some 217,856 photographs added to a website administered by Trader, as well as statutory damages in respect of those infringements.

[25] On December 8, 2015, CarGurus removed over 1 million photographs from its website for Vehicle Listings that were not obtained from Feed Providers.

C. THE PARTIES' ARGUMENTS

a. CarGurus

[27] In its application for leave, CarGurus argues that Trader is engaged in the following anticompetitive conduct in order to exclude or impede CarGurus' expansion in the downstream market for Digital Marketplaces in Canada (the "Trader Conduct"):

- Trader discriminates against CarGurus in respect of the Trader Vehicle Listings that Trader administers by refusing to syndicate those vehicle listings on the usual trade terms made available to other Digital Marketplaces;

- Trader refuses to syndicate to CarGurus Vehicle Listings from dealers who request that Trader does so;

- Trader instructs third parties not to syndicate to CarGurus by threatening to otherwise cut off its syndication to these third parties; and

- Trader improperly asserts copyright and has commenced litigation over thousands of non-copyrightable photographs, in an attempt to litigate CarGurus out of the market for Digital Marketplaces.

[28] On this final point, CarGurus adds that, even if Trader's copyright assertions are upheld, Trader's refusal to supply its copyrighted photographs is also violating the Act since such a refusal is more than a mere exercise of copyright because of its cumulative effect on Trader's market power in the provision of Digital Marketplaces.

[29] CarGurus contends that as a result of the Trader Conduct, it has been directly and substantially affected in its business through a significant decrease in leads generated for dealers, a reduced conversion rate (i.e., the percentage of visitors to the CarGurus website who contacted at least one dealer about a car for sale) and a drop in detailed views of CarGurus pages leading to a corresponding drop in advertising revenue. CarGurus estimates that the Trader Conduct has reduced CarGurus' revenue by 39% or $75,000 USD to date and that its forgone revenue through the end of 2017 is expected to be $3.7 million USD.

[30] CarGurus further argues that the Trader Conduct could be the subject of an order by the Tribunal under each of sections 75, 76 and 77 of the Act.

i. Section 75

[31] CarGurus first asserts that the five elements of section 75 on refusals to deal have been met in the following manner:

- CarGurus is substantially affected in its business and precluded from carrying on business due to its inability to obtain the Trader Vehicle Listings for inclusion on its website on usual trade terms (through a Syndication Agreement);

- CarGurus is unable to obtain adequate supply of Vehicle Listings because the Trader Vehicle Listings are in Trader's sole control and Trader controls at least 42.5% of all Vehicle Listings supplied in Canada;

- CarGurus is willing to meet the usual trade terms of Trader for the syndication of the Trader Vehicle Listings through a commercially reasonable agreement based on Trader's standard trade terms with other Digital Marketplaces;

- Vehicle Listings, and more specifically the Trader Vehicle Listings, are not in limited supply and are regularly supplied by Trader to Digital Marketplaces as a matter of course; and,

- Trader's refusal to deal is having an adverse effect on competition in the downstream market for Digital Marketplaces as Trader Conduct denies the expansion of CarGurus' innovative, consumer-focused website in the market.

ii. Section 76

[32] Turning to section 76 on price maintenance, CarGurus argues that the Trader Conduct could be caught under paragraph 76(3)(a) since Trader is engaged in the business of supplying a "product" (i.e., Vehicle Listings). Additionally, CarGurus pleads that if it is accepted that Trader holds copyright in the photographs appearing in the Trader Vehicle Listings, the Trader Conduct could also be caught under paragraph 76(3)(c) as Trader would have the exclusive rights and privileges conferred by the copyright.

[33] CarGurus contends that Trader Conduct breaches subparagraph 76(1)(a)(ii) since Trader has refused to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings to CarGurus in an attempt to keep CarGurus from competing in the downstream market for Digital Marketplaces. CarGurus alleges that Trader is doing so because of CarGurus' low pricing policy for various services, including the "Instant Market Value" produced by CarGurus' mathematical algorithms, and other innovative features.

[34] Furthermore, CarGurus argues that the Trader Conduct also falls within subparagraph 76(1)(a)(ii) because it has "otherwise discriminated" against CarGurus by denying it access to the Trader Vehicle Listings and by refusing to deal with it on the standard trade terms granted by Trader to other Digital Marketplaces.

[35] CarGurus also alleges that Trader has induced Dealer Dot Com ("DDC") and other Feed Providers not to syndicate the Trader Vehicle Listings to CarGurus as a condition of doing business with Trader, thus also contravening subsection 76(8) of the Act.

[36] Finally, CarGurus submits that the Trader Conduct has impeded its entry and expansion into the downstream market for Digital Marketplaces in Canada, thereby resulting, or likely to result, in a substantial lessening or prevention of competition.

iii. Section 77

[37] With respect to section 77 on exclusive dealing, CarGurus argues that, as a threshold element, Trader is a "major supplier" of Vehicle Listings in Canada since it is the sole supplier of the Trader Vehicle Listings. It also claims that the exclusivity provisions found in Trader's agreements with dealers and Feed Providers preclude those dealers and other Feed Providers from syndicating their inventory of Vehicle Listings to CarGurus without Trader's consent – which Trader refuses to grant.

[38] CarGurus submits that, as a consequence, Trader's exclusive dealing has impeded CarGurus' entry and expansion in the downstream market for Digital Marketplaces in Canada. It claims that this has resulted, and is likely to result, in a substantial lessening of competition in the market.

b. Trader

[39] Trader opposes CarGurus' application for leave. It argues that CarGurus has failed to provide sufficient credible evidence to give rise to a bona fide belief that it has been directly and substantially affected in its business by Trader's actions, or that Trader has engaged in conduct that could be subject to an order under sections 75, 76 or 77 of the Act.

i. Section 75

[40] Regarding refusal to deal, Trader submits that, in evaluating paragraph 75(1)(a), it is proper to query whether the applicant has "other options in terms of supply" and argues that where the applicant has access to an alternative source of supply which the applicant chooses not to pursue, it cannot be said that insufficient competition among suppliers is the "overriding reason" for the refusal. In terms of alternative source of supply, Trader argues that CarGurus can obtain Vehicle Listings from other Feed Providers and/or generate its own content (including photographs). By way of example, it refers to Kijiji as a company that has competed and grown by obtaining Vehicle Listings information from other Feed Providers. It also argues that there is no impediment to CarGurus replicating Trader's capture services.

[41] Trader also notes that CarGurus has experienced exponential growth even after Trader asserted its copyright on photographs and launched its Copyright Proceeding.

[42] Trader interprets paragraph 75(1)(b) to require that an applicant's inability to "obtain adequate supplies of the product" be causally linked to the "insufficient competition among suppliers of the product in the market". It argues that this provision requires the "insufficient competition among suppliers" be the "overriding reason" why the applicant is unable to obtain adequate supplies of the product. Trader further cites B-Filer Inc v Bank of Nova Scotia, 2006 Comp Trib 42 ("B-Filer") as stating that "any inference that insufficient competition led to a refusal to deal may be rebutted by evidence that shows an objectively justifiable business reason" that explains the respondent's conduct. In this regard, Trader submits CarGurus' blatant infringement of Trader's copyright is its objectively justifiable business reason.

[43] With respect to the criteria under paragraph 75(1)(c), Trader argues that it is customary for Trader and a potential syndication partner to negotiate the terms of their syndication agreement. It emphasized that it is willing to syndicate its copyright content to other competing Digital Marketplaces and does so regularly. It submits that, by choosing copyright infringement over negotiation, CarGurus is not willing to meet Trader's usual and customary trade terms.

[44] Trader relies on the Tribunal's decision in Stargrove Entertainment Inc v Universal Music Publishing Group Canada, 2015 Comp Trib 26 ("Stargrove") in support for its position that relief under paragraph 75(1)(d) is simply not available to CarGurus as the impugned conduct involves the refusal to grant a licence over copyrighted materials.

[45] Trader finally argues that CarGurus has failed to provide sufficient credible evidence that the alleged Trader Conduct is likely to have an adverse effect on competition, as required by paragraph 75(1)(e). It submits that the relevant market is (at its narrowest) the downstream market for Digital Marketplaces, which includes numerous websites such as Kijiji, eBay Motors U.S, Edmunds, Canadian Black Book, Cars.com, Wheels.ca, Auto123.com and AutoExpert. It notes that Trader and CarGurus are but two of many competitors in this market.

ii. Section 76

[46] With respect to price maintenance, Trader argues that CarGurus has failed to meet its burden under both subsections 76(1) and 76(8) of the Act.

[47] Trader submits that, given the decision in Commissioner of Competition v Visa Canada Corporation, 2013 Comp Trib 10 ("Visa"), subsection 76(1) requires a "resale" of a product that is "identical or substantially similar" to the product for which price is being allegedly maintained. In this regard, it pleads that CarGurus will oftentimes alter the Trader content before repackaging it and that section 76 does not cover the supply of an "input product".

[48] Trader adds that CarGurus has not presented any evidence beyond bald, unsubstantiated allegations that Trader has induced any supplier to refuse supply to CarGurus as required by subsection 76(8).

[49] With respect to CarGurus' argument that Trader had "otherwise discriminated" against it, Trader notes that the Stargrove decision interpreted that phrase to mean "treating a person differently than another without proper justification". Trader claims that it has not treated CarGurus any differently than any other competitor since it provided CarGurus with their standard form of Syndication Agreement and was anticipating a negotiation. To the extent it has treated CarGurus differently, it is solely because CarGurus had "scraped" Trader's copyrighted content.

[50] Trader also contends that CarGurus' application presents no evidence demonstrating that Trader has been motivated by a low pricing policy of CarGurus. Additionally, it denies being motivated by any alleged low pricing policy since it believes that CarGurus' price structure is simply different and not actually "low cost" as compared to Trader's model.

iii. Section 77

[51] With respect to exclusive dealing, Trader argues that CarGurus has failed to provide evidence to support a claim under either paragraph (a) or (b) to the statutory definition of "exclusive dealing" contained in subsection 77(1) of the Act.

[52] Trader asserts that it does not have exclusive control over Vehicle Listings and that many of its customers (i.e., automobile dealers) list their vehicles with Trader as well as with other Digital Marketplaces. Trader does not require dealers to deal exclusively or primarily with it. Furthermore, Trader does not preclude CarGurus from developing its own equivalent to Trader's data feed information in partnership with dealers.

[53] Trader submits that CarGurus' application contains no evidence, and provides no reasonable inference to suggest, that Trader has induced dealers to meet exclusivity conditions by offering to supply information on more favourable terms or conditions as a result. It argues that there is no evidence that dealers receive a financial benefit in return for dealing exclusively with Trader.

[54] Similar to its argument under section 75, Trader also submits that relief under section 77 is simply not available where the alleged exclusivity pertains to a refusal to licence intellectual property.

[55] Regarding the issue of the direct and substantial impact on CarGurus' business, Trader submits that CarGurus has not raised more than a mere speculation that its business has been substantially affected and has based its analysis on its own non-certified projections of revenue without providing a basis for those projections and whether they were commercially reasonable. It also claims that the measurements relied on by CarGurus assumes that they would be infringing Trader's copyright as a baseline.

[56] Finally, Trader submits that should the Tribunal find that CarGurus has met the leave requirements, the Tribunal should nonetheless decline to exercise its discretion to grant leave. In this regard, it argues that it is not commercially reasonable for CarGurus' infringement of Trader's copyright to be rewarded by an order of the Tribunal that would be tantamount to a compulsory licence.

III. ANALYSIS

A. The Leave Test

[57] Subsection 103.1(7) of the Act sets out the test for leave on an application under section 75 and 77 of the Act, whereas subsection 103.1(7.1) does the same for section 76 of the Act. They read as follows:

| 103.1(7.1) The Tribunal may grant leave to make an application under section 76 if it has reason to believe that the applicant is directly affected by any conduct referred to in that section that could be subject to an order under that section. | 103.1(7.1) Le Tribunal peut faire droit à une demande de permission de présenter une demande en vertu de l'article 76 s'il a des raisons de croire que l'auteur de la demande est directement gêné en raison d'un comportement qui pourrait faire l'objet d'une ordonnance en vertu du même article |

[58] Subsection 103.1(7) provides that leave may be granted under sections 75 or 77 if the Tribunal "has reason to believe that an applicant is directly and substantially affected in the applicant's business by any practice referred to in one of those sections that could be subject to an order under that section". Subsection 103.1(7.1) is similar but does not include the word "substantially".

[59] The approach to the granting of leave for relief under section 75 was recently set out in detail in Audatex Canada, ULC v CarProof Corporation, 2015 Comp Trib 28 ("Audatex") at paras 42-47. The Tribunal also summarized that approach in Stargrove at paras 17-21, in respect of an application relating to sections 75, 76 and 77. I adopt these principles for the purpose of this application for leave.

[60] As indicated in those decisions, leave applications under section 103.1 of the Act require the Tribunal to determine whether the application is supported by sufficient credible evidence to give rise to a bona fide belief that the applicant may have been directly (and substantially in the case of sections 75 and 77) affected in its business by the alleged practice, and that the alleged practice could be subject to an order. While the Tribunal's role at the leave stage is to perform a screening function and the evidence is assessed on a standard that is less than the balance of probabilities, the evidence must nonetheless show more than a mere possibility that the business may be directly and substantially affected (Symbol Technologies Canada ULC v Barcode Systems Inc, 2004 FCA 339 ("Barcode FCA") at para 19).

[61] With respect to the first part of the test under subsection 103.1(7) (i.e., being "directly and substantially affected"), it is worth citing the Audatex decision at para 45:

> For the "substantial" component, terms such as "important" are acceptable synonyms to considering whether there has been a "substantial" impact, which is ultimately assessed by reviewing the circumstances at issue (Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v Chrysler Canada Ltd (1989), 27 CPR (3d) 1 (Comp. Trib.), aff'd 38 CPR (3d) 25 (FCA) at para 64). In the Nadeau decision on the merits, Mr. Justice Blanchard specified that "the Applicant need not demonstrate that it is affected by the refusal to the point of it being unable to carry on its business. Rather, it is required to establish on a balance of probabilities that it is affected in an important or significant way" (Nadeau Poultry Farm Limited v Groupe Westco Inc et al, 2009 Comp. Trib. 6 ("Nadeau Final Order") at para 131, aff'd 2011 FCA 188).

[62] Turning to the second part of the test (whether the conduct "could be the object of an order"), all the elements of the practice must be addressed (Barcode FCA at para 19) and the Tribunal must be satisfied that "each of the elements set out in subsection 75(1) could be met when the application is heard on the merits" (B-Filer Inc v The Bank of Nova Scotia, 2005 Comp Trib 38 ("B-Filer Leave") at para 53). At the leave stage, it is understood that the question of whether the reviewable conduct "could" be subject to an order is being considered in an application which is not supported by a full evidentiary record (The Used Car Dealers Association of Ontario v Insurance Bureau of Canada, 2011 Comp Trib 10 ("Used Car Dealers") at para 32).

[63] Since the current application for leave filed by CarGurus relates not only to section 75 but also to section 76 on price maintenance and section 77 on exclusive dealing, I would simply add that the specific evidence which could be justified under these two other provisions similarly has to focus on the particular elements to be determined by the Tribunal under these restrictive trade practices. The approach under those provisions remains guided by the principles established in Audatex and B-Filer Leave.

B. CarGurus' Application under Sections 75 and 77

[64] For the reasons that follow, I am not satisfied that CarGurus has met its burden for leave to apply for relief under either section 75 or section 77, as it has not demonstrated that there is reason to believe that it has met the first part of the leave test, namely, that it has been or could be substantially affected in its business by the Trader Conduct. I instead find that CarGurus has failed to submit sufficient, non-speculative and cogent evidence to give me reasonable grounds to believe that the impact of the Trader Conduct on its business could reasonably be considered to constitute a "substantial" effect.

a. CarGurus' Evidence on Substantiality

[67] CarGurus' argument relating to this first part of the leave test is found at paragraphs 84 to 93 of its Memorandum of Fact and Law and at paragraph 27 of its Reply Memorandum. The evidence in support of that argument is set forth at paragraphs 46 to 54 of the Blue Affidavit and at paragraphs 120 to 124 of the Blue Copyright Affidavit.

[68] CarGurus submits that the removal of the Trader photographs and its inability to display the Trader Vehicle Listings has led to less traffic and is generating less leads to dealers, which has negatively affected its revenue realization. It submits that it is substantially affected in the following manner:

- The number of multiple leads CarGurus can generate for dealers has diminished significantly;
- CarGurus has lost 60% of leads for dealers whose Vehicle Listings are related to Trader;
- CarGurus has lost approximately 25% of its overall lead volume;

- CarGurus' conversion rate (i.e., the percentage of visitors to the CarGurus website who contacted at least one dealer about a car for sale) has decreased by 16%; and

- Detailed views of CarGurus' pages have dropped by 31%, leading to a corresponding 31% drop in advertising revenue.

[69] CarGurus estimates that, further to those reduced leads, conversion rates and page views, the Trader Conduct has reduced CarGurus' revenues by $75,000 USD or 39% up to the end of March 2016, and that its forgone revenues through the end of 2017 are expected to be $3.7 million USD.

[70] It appears that CarGurus assumes a direct (and linear) correlation between the lead volume, number of leads generated by CarGurus' website, the page views and its revenue realization generated through these indicators.

b. Shortcomings of CarGurus' Evidence

[71] There are five major problems with the evidence of substantial effect provided by CarGurus.

[72] First, there is no reliable evidence on the proportion of CarGurus' total inventory of Vehicle Listings which is represented by the Trader Vehicle Listings that were deleted from CarGurus' website and that Trader allegedly refuses to supply.

[73] The Blue Affidavit (at paragraphs 33, 34, 49 and 56) and the Blue Copyright Affidavit (at paragraphs 67 and 71) refer to Trader as being dominant and having a 42.5 % market share, but there is no clear explanation of how this figure is arrived at and what it actually represents.

[74] A review of the record leads the Tribunal to conclude that the 42.5% figure represents Trader's estimated market share in the downstream market where Digital Marketplaces offer their services. It appears that, in its assessment of the substantial effect attributed to the Trader Conduct, CarGurus assumes that this 42.5% market share of Trader in the downstream market can be used as a proxy for Trader's market share in the supply of Vehicle Listings in the upstream market. However, there is no evidence on the overall supply of Vehicle Listings which would allow the Tribunal to verify whether this assumption can be supported, or on the proportion of the overall supply of Vehicle Listings in the online marketing of automobile business that is accounted for by Trader. Nor is there evidence of the proportion of Vehicle Listings supplied to CarGurus that was actually accounted for by Trader and its Trader Vehicle Listings.

[75] In other words, the Blue Affidavit does not provide information on the actual supply of Vehicle Listings lost by CarGurus further to Trader's refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings, or on the proportion of CarGurus' total inventory of vehicle listings data represented by Trader. The Blue Affidavit only states that Trader has a dominant 42.5% market share. The Blue Affidavit does not describe the volume of Trader Vehicle Listings that is available or that was supplied by Trader (before CarGurus decided to delete the Trader photographs from its website).

[76] I appreciate that there will inevitably be incomplete information on some topics at the application for leave stage (Used Car Dealers at para 32). However, sufficient and credible information on the magnitude of the supply of the product at stake and on the proportion represented by the supplier refusing to supply are fundamental and basic elements needed by the Tribunal in order to be able to make a determination on whether the evidence provides the basis for the Tribunal to form a bona fide belief of a direct and substantial effect pursuant to subsection 103.1(7) of the Act (Audatex at para 68). As indicated in Audatex, this type of evidence was typically available to the Tribunal in those cases where it decided to grant an application for leave under section 103.1 of the Act. In Nadeau Poultry Farm Limited v Groupe Westco Inc et al, 2008 Comp Trib 7 ("Nadeau Leave Order") for example, the evidence of substantial effect was found sufficient by the Tribunal, as the applicant had provided figures showing that the exact supply held by the respondents represented 48% of the overall chicken processing business of Nadeau. This allowed the Tribunal to have a reliable measure of the impact of the intended cut-off in supply, which had not yet occurred in that case.

[77] In the current case, the evidence does not clearly indicate to the Tribunal the proportion of the supply represented by Trader in CarGurus' business, or in the upstream market as a whole. As indicated, the principal evidence adduced on this point is with respect to the market share that Trader allegedly represents in the downstream market for Digital Marketplaces where Trader and CarGurus compete.

[78] I pause to underline that even the 42.5% market share figure used by CarGurus raises significant concerns, as it appears to be based on a market estimate in which the competitor Kijiji has not been taken into account. Yet, the evidence on the record suggests that Kijiji may be, by far, the largest player in the Digital Marketplaces in Canada. According to CarGurus' own data contained in Exhibit 10 to the Blue Affidavit, Kijiji appears to be the most significant player in the supply of online automotive listings, being 2.5 times as large as Trader in terms of total unique visitors and even much larger if indicators such as total views or total visits are used. Other evidence indicates that Kijiji describes itself as the largest supplier of Vehicle Listings in Canada. Neither the Blue Affidavit nor the Blue Copyright Affidavit provides a satisfactory explanation for excluding that entity from CarGurus' market share estimate. If Kijiji were included in the downstream market for Digital Marketplaces, Trader's estimated market share of 42.5% would drop, by at least half. It remains puzzling to the Tribunal how Kijiji could have been entirely excluded from CarGurus' market share calculations and estimates without a more detailed explanation on its reasons for doing so.

[79] The second problem with CarGurus' evidence relates to the actual and expected "reduced revenues" identified by CarGurus, which do not represent an actual drop in existing or anticipated revenues of CarGurus. CarGurus is a new entrant in the Digital Marketplace business in Canada and its evidence on reduced revenues essentially reflects reductions compared to business projections it had initially made for its emerging business.

monthly projections made in April 2016, covering the same time period and allegedly reflecting the impact of the refusal to supply of the Trader Vehicle Listings (the "Revised Projections"). Finally, Exhibit 11 provides the actual revenues generated by CarGurus' Digital Marketplaces business for a period of six months, up to the month of March 2016.

[81] The $75,000 USD reduction in actual revenues as of March 2016 and the estimated anticipated loss of $3.7 million USD up to end of 2017 reflect the difference between actual and projected revenues, or between the two sets of projections made by CarGurus. These are not actual or real reductions in revenues. The reduced revenues claimed by CarGurus to be evidence of "substantial effect" on its business essentially portray projections which are not of the same magnitude as what was initially contemplated and expected.

[82] I further note that no support was provided to the Tribunal by CarGurus for these projections of anticipated sales. Indeed, neither Exhibit 11 nor the rest of the Blue Affidavit offer background or explanation on how CarGurus' projections were established, the basis for these projections and how the supply of Vehicle Listings by Trader was factored into these projections.

[83] I agree with CarGurus that it is only required to provide "sufficient credible evidence" to satisfy the Tribunal that there is a reasonable possibility that its business may be directly and substantially affected by a refusal to deal. I am also mindful of the fact that CarGurus does not have to wait until harm actually occurs before bringing an application under subsection 103.1 of the Act (Nadeau Leave Order at para 25). But sufficient, cogent evidence is needed, even for anticipated harm. Relying on projections to establish a substantial impact on a business under subsection 103.1(7) still requires support in the form of clear and convincing evidence, which CarGurus has not provided. A party relying on projections has the onus to at least provide a basis for those projections.

[84] This case is quite different from the situation in Nadeau Leave Order where the evidence of substantial effect was found sufficient by the Tribunal. In Nadeau Leave Order, supply had not yet ceased, but there was nonetheless sufficient and measurable evidence of the anticipated effects of the refusal. Nadeau had provided figures showing the exact supply held by the respondents, as well as solid financial evidence of the proportion of Nadeau's supply actually represented by the suppliers of chicken who intended to terminate supply. This allowed the Tribunal to find reliable evidence regarding the substantiality of the upcoming refusal on Nadeau's business.

[85] This type of evidence has not been offered by CarGurus in this case.

[86] In Mrs. O's Pharmacy v Pfizer Canada Inc, 2004 Comp Trib 24("Mrs. O's Pharmacy"), the Tribunal indicated that simple projections and forecasts are not enough to constitute convincing and credible evidence of substantial effect on an applicant's business. Similarly, CarGurus has not provided hard data on the supply of Vehicle Listings actually accounted for by Trader in the upstream market, nor any hard data on its own lost sales or reduced revenues, save for Exhibit 11 to the Blue Affidavit.

[87] It bears underscoring that, at the leave application stage, there must be credible evidence to give the Tribunal a reason to believe that a causal relationship exists between the action of the supplier and the business consequences for the applicant. When only unsupported projections or forecasts are used, causality becomes speculative as several factors could have an impact on the growth a new business (Mrs. O's Pharmacy at para 25). I find that the "projections" evidence adduced by CarGurus only amounts to a mere possibility of substantial effect and is speculative. In a situation like this where the contemplated detrimental effect of the Trader Conduct is through a series of projections for which the assumptions are unknown, I am not satisfied that CarGurus' evidence can be considered as sufficient.

[88] The third problem with CarGurus' evidence of substantial effect is that it is alleged to be occurring or to be likely to occur in a context in which CarGurus expects and forecasts its revenues to continuously increase until the end of December 2017. As a practical matter, this renders more difficult the Tribunal's assessment of the alleged substantial adverse effects.

[89] Whether one looks at the Initial Projections or at the Revised Projections contained in Exhibit 11 to the Blue Affidavit, CarGurus' revenues are projected to increase steadily, every single month, until December 2017. This is true even for the Revised Projections of revenues where the alleged refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings and more generally the Trader Conduct are taken into account. The evidence provided by CarGurus indicates that, under the Initial Projections, monthly revenues were expected to increase from $22,000 in December 2015 to $301,000 in December 2016, and then to $762,000 in December 2017. The Revised Projections represent 50% to 60% of the initial forecast, but CarGurus' revenues are nonetheless projected to increase to $192,000 in December 2016, and to $392,000 in December 2017. Even under those projections which allegedly reflect the impact of the refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings, the revenues generated by CarGurus' Digital Marketplace business are expected to increase every single month throughout the period, though at a slower pace than the initial December 2015 forecast.

[90] I appreciate that it is of course more difficult to demonstrate that a refusal to supply or other practice substantially affects a business when the applicant has not been historically supplied by the respondent. But some credible basis for assertions in this regard must nevertheless be provided. I underline that this is not a situation where supported projections of increased revenues did not eventually materialize because of a refusal to supply. CarGurus' case is about revised projections which have not yet been confirmed and have not yet happened.

[91] I agree with CarGurus and acknowledge that, in its assessment of the substantial effect, the Tribunal is essentially conducting a "but for" analysis. As the Tribunal recently elaborated in detail in The Commissioner of Competition v The Toronto Real Estate Board, 2016 Comp Trib 7 ("TREB") at paras 477-483, a "but for" approach involves comparing a situation in the presence of the impugned conduct with a scenario that likely would have prevailed in the absence of such conduct. Therefore, the fact that CarGurus has or would have managed to increase revenues despite the Trader Conduct, or is projecting increasing revenues, does not, in and of itself, act as a bar to CarGurus' case. However, even using a "but for" approach, I am not convinced that there is sufficient credible evidence to conclude that a "substantial effect" exists in this case.

[92] The test is not simply whether CarGurus' business would have substantially grown but for the Trader Conduct. The Tribunal must also determine whether the reduced projections attributable to the Trader Conduct are enough to conclude that CarGurus' business could be negatively affected in an important or significant way. Given the uncertainty about those projections and the lack of support on their basis, and in light of expected increased revenues, I am not persuaded that there is non-speculative evidence supporting such a finding. I am not convinced that CarGurus' evidence showing projections of continuing increasing revenues for a new entrant in the business, despite the refusal to deal or exclusive dealing being complained of, gives rise to a reasonable belief that it is substantially affected in its business.

[93] The fourth problem with CarGurus' evidence of substantial effect relates to the actual revenues posted by CarGurus since it entered the Digital Marketplace business in Canada. The limited data provided by CarGurus does not show an adverse effect caused by the Trader Conduct so far.

[94] While CarGurus claims in the Blue Affidavit that the 31% drop in detailed page views in December 2015 attributable to the loss of the Trader photographs corresponds to a 31 % decrease in advertising revenues, this is not what the actual revenues reported by CarGurus show. Quite the contrary.

[95] There was instead an increase in advertising revenues in the months following the termination of the supply of the Trader Vehicle Listings. Exhibit 11 to the Blue Affidavit indicates that CarGurus' monthly revenues coming from the dealer subscription revenues in fact grew from $2,602 in October 2015 to $10,471 in December 2015, and up to $43,895 in March 2016. It is also striking to note that those revenues have increased in each of January, February and March 2016 compared to the previous month, and that they were four times as large in March 2016 as they were in December 2015.

[96] In addition to Exhibit 11 to the Blue Affidavit, other evidence provided by CarGurus also suggests that, even after Trader's refusal to supply in December 2015, CarGurus' monthly revenues have continued to increase. The Blue Affidavit reports that CarGurus' monthly advertising revenues have increased from $16,000 in December 2015 to $80,000 in March 2016, despite the Trader Conduct. In the same four-month period, the number of Canadian dealers with advertising packages with CarGurus increased from 39 to 137, and the average amount paid by dealers went from $400/month to $500/month.

[98] I acknowledge that this evidence is limited to only a few months, but this suggests that other sources of supply of Vehicle Listings have remained and will remain available to CarGurus from Feed Providers and other potential sources. It also illustrates that, even without the Trader Vehicle Listings, CarGurus continued to post growing revenues. This undermines CarGurus' assertion that it has been or is likely to be substantially affected in its business. Furthermore, even the financial projections revised in April 2016 that apparently factor in the Trader Conduct which is the subject of this leave application show continuous growth in sales and revenues, month after month, between now and the end of 2017.

[99] It may be that the Revised Projections are not as optimistic as the Initial Projections made prior to December 2015, but such expected growing revenues make it much more difficult for me to form a bona fide belief that CarGurus' business is or may be being substantially affected by the Trader Conduct. As the financial evidence provided by CarGurus shows that actual revenues have been growing month after month since the inception of its business, and have continued to grow since the alleged refusal to deal and exclusive dealing practices are supposed to have affected its business, I am unable to find that the "substantially affected" requirement has been met.

[100] Finally, CarGurus claims that the difference between its Revised Projections and the Initial Projections reflects the impact of the Trader Conduct. The problem is that, when the limited evidence on CarGurus' actual revenues is looked at, it shows that the difference between the Initial Projections and the actual revenues posted until the end of March 2016 was of the same magnitude as the difference between the two sets of projections, even before the claimed effect of the Trader Conduct came into play. Looking at the November 2015 data reported by CarGurus (when CarGurus still enjoyed access to the Trader Vehicle Listings), actual revenues represented only 68% of CarGurus' Initial Projections, and that figure was 47% for the December 2015 revenues. It then stood at between 62% and 65% for the first three months of 2016. In other words, the gap between CarGurus' actual revenues and its Initial Projections is in the same range, before and after the Trader Conduct and the refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings.

[101] This suggests that the differential (or claimed reduction in revenues) identified by CarGurus may well originate from inaccurate projections of its revenue stream rather than from a decrease attributable to the loss of the Trader Vehicle Listings. This evidence also undermines CarGurus' assertion that the drop in anticipated revenues (and the alleged substantial effect on CarGurus' business) could be attributed to the Trader Conduct. Stated otherwise, the difference between the actual revenues and the forecast appears to be independent from the supply of the Trader Vehicle Listings or absence thereof.

c. Conclusion regarding Sections 75 and 77

[102] In light of the foregoing, I am not persuaded that, when all the evidence adduced by CarGurus is considered, it constitutes sufficient credible evidence to allow the Tribunal to reasonably believe that CarGurus may be directly and substantially affected in its business by the Trader Conduct. It is not sufficient that the evidence shows a mere possibility that the business may be substantially affected. The standard of proof requires the "existence of reasonable grounds for a belief" (National Capital News Canada v Milliken, 2002 Comp Trib 41 at paras 9-10). A baldly asserted decrease in the anticipated growth of revenues, compared to an earlier unsupported projection, does not rise to the level of providing the basis for a bona fide belief of an actual or likely substantial effect in the assessment of applications for leave under subsection 103.1(7) (Audatex at paras 80-84).

[103] In addition, on the particular facts of this case, the fact that CarGurus' own projections show a continuous growth in its business notwithstanding its revised figures attributable to the Trader Conduct instead suggests that CarGurus expects to be able to find supplies of Vehicle Listings from sources other than Trader.

[104] This finding is fatal to CarGurus' application under both sections 75 and 77 and is dispositive of the leave application with respect to those two provisions of the Act. Since CarGurus has failed to meet the requirement of "directly and substantially affected in the applicant's business", it is not necessary to consider whether CarGurus has adduced sufficient evidence to meet the second part of the test for leave, namely whether each of the elements of subsection 75(1) or section 77 could be met and an order could be issued under the refusal to deal or exclusive dealing provisions.

C. CarGurus' Application under Section 76

[105] Turning to section 76 on price maintenance, subsection 103(7.1) governing applications for leave under that provision only requires that a party has been "directly affected" by the alleged reviewable conduct. For purposes of this application for leave, that requirement is clearly met.

[106] I must now turn to the second part of the leave test, which requires that I be satisfied that each of the elements of the price maintenance provision could be met. For the following reasons, I find that CarGurus has not made the case for leave to seek relief under section 76. In brief, I am not persuaded, based on the evidence before me, that all elements set out in section 76 could be met if the application is heard on the merits.

a. The Section 76 Elements

[107] The primary purpose of the price maintenance provisions contained in section 76 of the Act is to allow greater price competition among retailers/dealers by freeing them from pricing restraints which would otherwise be imposed by their suppliers. Section 76 sets out three distinct reviewable trade practices. The first is resale price maintenance (paragraph 76(1)(a)(i)). The second is refusal to supply because of a low pricing policy (paragraph 76(1)(a)(ii)). The third is inducing a supplier to refuse to supply because of a low pricing policy (subsection 76(8)). In all three cases, the conduct can only be subject to an order if it has had, is having or is likely to have, an "adverse effect" on competition in a market.

[108] CarGurus' application relates to the second and third trade practices covered by section 76. These each essentially contain five basic requirements. In order to constitute reviewable conduct, there needs to be: 1) a person engaged in the business of producing or supplying a product in Canada (or a person described in paragraphs 76(3)(b) or (c)); 2) a direct or indirect refusal to supply the product, or other discrimination, by such person; 3) a low pricing policy by the person being denied supply; 4) a refusal to supply or other discrimination which is motivated, at least primarily, by such low pricing policy; and 5) and an actual or likely adverse effect on competition in a market. In the case of subsection 76(8), there also needs to be an inducement to another supplier.

[110] I am not satisfied that CarGurus has met the threshold for leave under section 76 of the Act on at least three of the elements of section 76: the requirement that CarGurus has a low pricing policy, the requirement that the refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings is due to CarGurus' low pricing policy, and the actual or likely adverse effect on competition in the downstream market for Digital Marketplaces where CarGurus compete.

b. The Low Pricing Policy

[111] First, I find that there is insufficient credible evidence of CarGurus' alleged low pricing policy and of CarGurus being a low-cost competitor.

[112] In order to support an application under section 76(1)(a)(ii) or 76(8), CarGurus must first provide evidence on its own low pricing policy. In this case, the evidence offered in that respect is limited, at best unclear and uncertain, and not convincing. CarGurus simply states in the Blue Affidavit and the Blue Copyright Affidavit that it offers its services either for free or for a lower cost than Trader. Surprisingly, no material evidence has been provided on the actual pricing offered by CarGurus, despite the fact that the existence of a low pricing policy is a key element of its application under section 76.

[113] Information regarding CarGurus' pricing is found in paragraphs 27 and 28 of the Blue Affidavit and at paragraphs 55 to 60 of the Blue Copyright Affidavit. At paragraph 27, Ms. Blue indicates that the amount charged by CarGurus varies based on the dealership size, the number the listings and the size of the market. In the following paragraph, Ms. Blue indicates that CarGurus had 39 customers and that their cost per month was "an average of $400".

[114] The low pricing policy contemplated by section 76 requires, at the very least, evidence of "low pricing" and of a "policy". Since subparagraph 76(1)(a)(ii) and subsection 76(8) refer to a "policy" rather than a "practice", I accept that an applicant's stated intent with respect to a future course of low pricing conduct may constitute a low pricing policy, even where that person has not yet engaged in the conduct. However, the "low pricing" element must be supported by evidence showing, for example, that an applicant's price is below a supplier's pricing suggestions, that it is less than the price the applicant charges for similar products elsewhere, or that it is lower than the price that other retailers typically charge for similar products. CarGurus has not provided such evidence.

[115] The only material evidence of pricing was in fact provided in the Dunbar Affidavit where Mr. Dunbar offered figures indicating that CarGurus' pricing was not lower than many of its competitors in the Digital Marketplaces business.

[116] This is a situation quite different from Used Car Dealers or Stargrove where the evidence provided clearly showed that the applicants in those cases were undoubtedly offering their respective products at a price lower than their competitors ($7 by listing in Used Car Dealers, and $5 per CD in the case of Stargrove).

[117] I am not persuaded that the evidence before me on the alleged low pricing policy of CarGurus constitutes sufficient credible evidence to allow the Tribunal to reasonably believe that CarGurus could meet this element of section 76 and that an order could be issued under that provision. It was CarGurus' burden to provide evidence on this element of section 76, and in fact CarGurus was best positioned to demonstrate the existence of its own low pricing policy. It has failed to do so.

c. The Causation Element

[118] Second, I do not find that there is sufficient credible evidence that the alleged refusal by Trader to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings is due to or motivated by any low pricing on the part of CarGurus.

[119] Paragraph 76(1)(a)(ii) only applies to refusals to supply imposed "because of the low pricing policy" of a person or class of persons. There must therefore be a causal connection between the low pricing policy and the refusal to supply or the discrimination. Historically, in decisions issued under the former criminal price maintenance provision contained in the old section 61 of the Act, Courts have held that the sole and effective reason for the refusal to supply had to be the retailer's low pricing policy (R v Griffith Saddlery & Leather Ltd. (1986), 14 CPR (3d) 389 (Ont Prov Ct) at para 24; R v Andico Manufacturing Ltd (1983), 4 CPR (3d) 476 (MBQB) at para 47). However, some later decisions moved away from the requirement that the low pricing policy be the only real driving concern. Two decisions involving the real estate industry indeed suggested that the person's low pricing policy could be the main reason behind the refusal to supply or one reason incidental to it, or one of many reasons regardless of priority (R v 41813 Alberta Ltd (February 4, 1994), No 9201-13366 (ABQB); R v Royal LePage Real Estate Services Ltd (October 28, 1994), No 9201-14125 (ABQB)). In other words, the low pricing policy had to be a proximate cause of the refusal to supply, but other proximate causes could exist. This approach appears to have been retained by the Competition Bureau in its Price Maintenance Guidelines issued in 2014 (Canada, Competition Bureau, Price Maintenance (Section 76 of the Competition Act) (September 15, 2014) (the "Guidelines") at section 3.1.3).

[120] This is the first time that the Tribunal has to interpret the terms "because of" the low pricing policy in the context of the new civil price maintenance provision now described at section 76 of the Act. I note that the words "because of" are also used in section 75 on refusal to deal, where relief can be granted if a person is unable to obtain adequate supplies of a product "because of" insufficient competition among suppliers. In the context of section 75, these words have been interpreted by the Tribunal as meaning that insufficient competition needs to be the "overriding reason" for the refusal (Nadeau Poultry Farm Ltd v Groupe Westco Inc, 2009 Comp Trib 6, aff'd 2011 FCA 188 ("Nadeau") at paras 228-229 and 247; Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v Xerox Canada Inc (1990), 33 CPR (3d) 83 (Comp Trib) at para 83).

[121] A similar approach must prevail under section 76. I am therefore of the view that, in order to be successful in an application under paragraph 76(1)(a)(ii) or subsection 76(8), the applicant must demonstrate that the low pricing policy is the overriding reason for the refusal, even though it may not be the only reason. Stated differently, it must be a principal reason for the refusal.

[122] In this case, no direct evidence has been provided by CarGurus, such as correspondence from Trader or internal notes reflecting discussions to that effect with Trader, showing that Trader's refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings is motivated or caused in any way by CarGurus' low pricing policy. I would add that not only has CarGurus failed to provide direct evidence bearing on Trader's motives, but its claim in that respect has been squarely contradicted by Mr. Dunbar in the Dunbar Affidavit, where Mr. Dunbar denied that Trader was motivated in any way by CarGurus' low pricing policy.

[123] This, once again, is a situation different from Stargrove where the respondents in that application for leave had not produced any evidence in rebuttal and where the Tribunal found that Stargrove had itself provided some circumstantial evidence of motive on the part of the suppliers involved (Stargrove at paras 38-39).

[124] The Tribunal can of course consider circumstantial evidence when no direct evidence is available (Used Car Dealers at paras 44-48). However, such circumstantial evidence must still meet the "requirement that there be sufficient credible evidence to give rise to a bona fide belief that the conduct could be subject to an order" (Used Car Dealers at para 48). In Used Cars Dealers, efforts had been made by the applicant to provide evidence of concerns with the low pricing policy being the driving factor for the termination of the supply. The affidavit submitted in that case referred to circumstantial evidence on price differentials, the actions of a competitor and connections that provided to the applicant reasons to believe that the refusal to supply occurred because of its low pricing policy (Used Cars Dealers at paras 46-47). The affidavit submitted tried to provide evidence on the reasons for the refusal to supply and referred notably to the absence of other reasons for terminating supply. The applicant argued that, in the absence of an alternative reason, a reasonable adverse inference could be drawn from such silence and that the low pricing policy could be considered as the driving factor for the refusal.

[125] Even though there were some details in the affidavit to support the affiant's belief that the refusal may have been motivated by the low prices of the applicant, the Tribunal was nevertheless not convinced by such circumstantial evidence and could not conclude that there was sufficient credible evidence to show the possibility that the termination was due to a low pricing policy (Used Cars Dealers at para 61). The Tribunal thus dismissed the application for leave.

[126] In the current case, not only has CarGurus not provided any direct evidence on Trader's motivation but there is no circumstantial evidence on Trader's motives. No efforts or attempts have even been made to refer to circumstantial evidence supporting the proposition that Trader's refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings was due to CarGurus' low pricing policy.

[127] It is worth citing the evidence provided by CarGurus in respect of that element of section 76. It is found at paragraphs 40 to 42 of the Blue Affidavit and reads as follows:

> 40. As noted in the First Affidavit at paragraph 110, I believe that Trader views CarGurus as its biggest competitive threat because the CarGurus Website is innovative and CarGurus drives considerable value to dealers and the public, as is proven by CarGurus' U.S. business. CarGurus' IMV ratings range drive consumer traffic and VDP views not only to the CarGurus' Website, but also dealers' websites based on CarGurus' rankings. This provides value to dealers that Trader cannot.

> 41. Moreover, CarGurus offers these services either for free or for a lower cost than Trader offers its own service. For example, CarGurus' basic package, which is offered to dealers free of charge, includes posting dealers' inventory on the CarGurus Website with up to 10 photographs, and allows CarGurus Website users to anonymously email such dealers about their available vehicles for sale.
> 42. I believe that Trader's different treatment of CarGurus and its refusal to deal with CarGurus on the usual terms with which it deals with other Digital Marketplaces stems from CarGurus' low pricing policy and from Trader's concern that CarGurus' expansion in the Canadian market would force Trader to compete by providing more innovative products and services and by lowering its prices.

[128] Similar wording appears at paragraph 99 of CarGurus' Memorandum of Fact and Law and at paragraphs 107 and 108 of its Proposed Notice of Application. I observe that paragraph 110 of the Blue Copyright Affidavit refers to CarGurus' innovative features and how it allows it to expand into the marketplace, but does not contain any reference to CarGurus' low pricing policy.

[129] I point out that this is the whole extent of the evidence provided by CarGurus on this causation element of section 76. Indeed, in its Reply Memorandum, when referring to the evidence to support a bona fide belief on that issue, CarGurus strictly refers to paragraph 107 of its Memorandum and to paragraphs 41-42 of the Blue Affidavit. No further evidence has been provided to support CarGurus' statements on Trader's motives or on the causal relationship between CarGurus' low pricing policy and Trader's refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings.

[130] More specifically, nowhere does the Blue Affidavit refer or allude to efforts or attempts made by CarGurus to obtain evidence of CarGurus' pricing policy being the cause or motivation of the Trader Conduct. Left with such limited evidence and assertions, I can only conclude that there is no credible evidence to support the causation element contained in section 76. True, these are factual issues that would be elaborated and developed in an application on the merits. However, an applicant still needs to provide at least a minimum level of credible evidence on this element of the practice to be granted leave. I am of course mindful that, at the leave stage, and prior to discovery, the means available to CarGurus to find such evidence are more limited. However, it is still a burden that it carries in order to be granted leave. Even at the leave stage, an applicant cannot simply repeat the wording of the Act, provide no evidence in support and expect that such orphaned statements can be sufficient to give the Tribunal the bona fide belief it needs to have.

[131] The statements contained at paragraphs 40 to 42 of the Blue Affidavit lead me to make two further observations.

[132] First, Ms. Blue states at paragraph 42 that she "believe(s)" that the Trader Conduct stems from CarGurus' low pricing policy. The belief of an affiant is not sufficient to establish the level of evidence needed under subsection 103.1(7) or 103.1 (7.1). The applicant has to provide sufficient credible evidence so that the Tribunal has the bona fide belief that an order could be made. But the Tribunal's belief cannot simply rely on the applicant's own belief. It has to rely on the applicant's evidence.

[133] In Brandon Gray Internet Services Inc v Canadian Internet Registration Authority, 2011 Comp Trib 17 ("Gray"), the Tribunal indeed stated that a "bald statement of belief" about adverse impact on competition in the market (such as simply stating that the termination of supply will result in reduced competition), without any supporting evidence, was not sufficient, and therefore leave was not granted (Gray at para 13).

[134] My second observation is this. I find it striking to note that paragraphs 40 to 42 of the Blue Affidavit, and all other references made by CarGurus to the reason for the Trader Conduct and its refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings, never suggest that CarGurus' low pricing policy could be the overriding factor for the Trader Conduct. In fact, the Blue Copyright Affidavit, as the source of the Blue Affidavit, does not even mention CarGurus' low pricing policy. In addition, in every sentence where CarGurus refers to this issue in its evidence, it always alludes to both its low pricing policy and to CarGurus' superior innovative features. There is never a reference made solely to the primary role of CarGurus' low pricing policy. Indeed, paragraphs 40 to 42 of the Blue Affidavit first refer to CarGurus' innovative feature as being the apparent driver of the Trader Conduct and use the word "Moreover" to introduce the concern about the low pricing policy.

[136] Section 76 is the price maintenance provision of the Act. Its purpose is to provide relief in respect of refusals to supply or discriminatory practice motivated by a person's low pricing policy. It aims at reducing the restrictions that a supplier can put on the ability of resellers to compete on price, where those restrictions have, or are likely to have, an adverse impact on competition. The provision cannot be resorted to in order to sanction refusals by a supplier which may be driven by other motives. It may be that a supplier refuses to supply a product based on other behavior which could be found to be anti-competitive. It may be that a supplier would refuse to supply or discriminate against a person because of that person's disrupting innovative marketing practices or products. But this is not what section 76 aims to address. Section 76 applies to refusals or discrimination motivated primarily by the low pricing policy of a person. Had Parliament intended, in section 76, to prohibit refusals to supply primarily motivated by a person's innovative practices, it would have said so. It has not. Section 76 is strictly concerned with a low pricing policy. Other provisions of the Act, such as abuse of dominance, can be invoked to challenge an anti-competitive practice aimed at eliminating or disciplining an innovative new entrant. But that cannot constitute a ground to justify a section 76 application.

[137] The low pricing policy must be the overriding or principal cause of the supplier's refusal or discrimination. The Tribunal accepts, as stated by the Competition Bureau in the Guidelines, that a person's low pricing policy need not be the only reason for the refusal or discrimination. However, such low pricing policy has to be the overriding or principal reason informing and motivating the supplier's decision. Even if a number of other factors contributing to the refusal are present, there still must be evidence that the low pricing policy plays a material and principal role in the refusal to supply.

[138] In this case, I do not find evidence allowing me to reasonably infer that CarGurus' low pricing policy could be the overriding or principal cause of Trader's refusal to supply, as opposed to CarGurus' status as a disruptive innovator. By systematically linking its claimed low pricing policy and its innovative features as the motives allegedly driving the Trader Conduct, CarGurus does not allow me to conclude that the low pricing policy could be the main or principal cause of the Trader Conduct. In fact, CarGurus' own evidence suggests that the overriding reason for the Trader Conduct is CarGurus' innovating features rather than its low pricing policy.

[139] This is the wording that CarGurus chose to use in its evidence and in the Blue Affidavit. Considering the evidence submitted, I am therefore not satisfied that CarGurus has met the evidentiary threshold on the causation element of section 76. There is no sufficient credible evidence to give me a bona fide belief that CarGurus' low pricing policy, separate and distinct from other competing and innovative features it may have, could be the principal motivation and the overriding factor behind the Trader Conduct and its refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings.

[140] I observe in closing that, in addition, there is also ample evidence on the record that the reason driving the Trader Conduct and its refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings is in fact its claim of copyright infringement by CarGurus and the ongoing litigation it commenced against CarGurus in the Copyright Proceeding. It may be that Trader's claim could be denied by the Ontario Superior Court of Justice and that its allegations of copyright infringement relating to the Trader photographs are not upheld by the Court. However, at this stage and in light of the evidence before me in this application for leave, the existence of the Copyright Proceeding provides an objective business reason for the refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings to CarGurus and is yet another factor pointing to an absence of sufficient credible evidence that Trader's refusal to supply is motivated by CarGurus' low pricing policy.

d. Adverse Effect on Competition

[141] Third, I am not convinced that there is sufficient credible evidence to form a bona fide belief that the Trader Conduct could have an actual or likely adverse effect on competition in a market.

[142] For the purposes of the adverse effect analysis (whether under paragraph 76(1)(b) on price maintenance or paragraph 75(1)(e) on refusal to deal), it is recognized that the relevant market is the market in which the applicant participates, namely the operation of Digital Marketplaces.

[143] In B-Filer, the Tribunal stated that paragraph 75(1)(e) "requires the assessment of the competitiveness or likely competitiveness of a market with, and without, the refusal to deal" (B-Filer at para 200). The Tribunal also considered the concept of "adverse effect on competition" in Nadeau. The Tribunal held that, in order to determine whether a refusal to deal would be likely to have an adverse effect, it was necessary to examine a series of indicators which could vary on a case-by-case basis. In Nadeau, these included factors such as market share and market concentration (requiring an assessment of the relevant product and geographic markets), barriers to entry, impact on prices, the effect on rivals' costs, the impact on the quality and variety of the product, possible foreclosure of supply to other processors in the market and the impact of the possible elimination of the applicant from the market.

[144] In each of B-Filer, Visa and Nadeau, the Tribunal stated that, in its view, even if the threshold for establishing an "adverse" effect on competition is lower than that for a "substantial" reduction, it still requires evidence that the refusal to deal or price maintenance would have the effect of creating or enhancing a supplier's "market power". For a refusal to deal to have an adverse effect on a market, the Tribunal stated that the "remaining market participants must be placed in a position, as a result of the refusal, of created, enhanced or preserved market power" (B-Filer at para 208). In other words, "without market power there can be no adverse effect in a market" (Nadeau at para 369; Visa at para 350).

[145] An assessment of an adverse effect on competition thus requires a consideration of whether the refusal creates, enhances or preserves the market power of the remaining market participants. In Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v NutraSweet Co. (1990), 32 CPR (3d) 1, the Tribunal noted that "[m]arket power is generally accepted to mean an ability to set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period". In that case, the Tribunal recognized that this valid conceptual approach is not one that can be readily applied. It held that the factors that need be considered in evaluating market power will vary from case to case but ordinarily include indicators such as market share and entry barriers (Nadeau at para 368). Market power has also been defined in the jurisprudence alternatively in terms of "an ability to set prices above competitive levels and to maintain them at that level for a significant period of time without erosion by new entry or expansion of existing firms," and "the ability to profitably influence price, quality, variety, service, advertising, innovation or other dimensions of competition" (TREB at para 165).

[147] The Tribunal could conservatively assume that the relevant market in this case is the narrowest market in which CarGurus operates, namely the Canadian Digital Marketplaces. Assuming that is the case, the evidence on the record shows that there are at least 10 businesses or competitors in Canada offering Digital Marketplace services and competing in this downstream "market," including Kijiji and Trader as the two major and leading players. The evidence provided does not allow the Tribunal to clearly measure the size of the downstream market which CarGurus claims will be affected by Trader's refusal to supply, or the market power of participants absent CarGurus' participation. However, looking at Exhibit 10 to the Blue Affidavit, the evidence indicates that the market for Digital Marketplaces is quite competitive, with two leading competitors (Kijiji and Trader) and a series of smaller ones.

[148] From the information on the number and size of competitors in Exhibit 10, it is apparent that CarGurus is a fairly minor competitor for the time being. There is also no evidence of the market share or relative size that CarGurus would likely achieve in the foreseeable future in the absence of the Trader Conduct. This is therefore not a situation where a major competitor would be eliminated by the Trader Conduct. In fact, CarGurus' own projections rather indicate that, even without access to the Trader Vehicle Listings, it will continue to expand and will arguably increase its presence and market share in the business, be it at a slower growth rate.

[149] I am therefore not satisfied that CarGurus has provided sufficient credible evidence that the refusal to supply the Trader Vehicle Listings could create, enhance or preserve market power of any entity in the Digital Marketplaces market. It is not a situation similar to Nadeau where evidence had been provided that the anticipated refusal to supply would displace a major competitor in the downstream market (Nadeau) and eliminate it as a main competitor of the leading players in the business.

[150] As the Tribunal indicated in Audatex, the requirement of an actual or likely adverse effect on competition is a key dimension of the private recourses available under sections 75 or 76 of the Act. The Tribunal stated the following at paragraph 50 of that decision:

> While sections 75 and 103.1 provide for a private right of action for refusals to deal, they are part of the Act and must be considered in the context of this legislation and what it aims to protect and accomplish. As Mr. Justice Rothstein said in Barcode FCA, "[the] basic purpose of the Competition Act as described in subsection 1.1 is 'to maintain and encourage competition in Canada' and the purpose of section 75 is in furtherance of that objective" (Barcode FCA at para 14). He elaborated on that point further in his reasons, restating the purpose of the Act to maintain and encourage competition and adding that "[i]t is not to provide a statutory cause of action for the resolution of a dispute between a supplier and a customer that has no bearing on the maintenance or encouragement of competition" (Barcode FCA at para 23).

[151] The requirement of an adverse effect on competition reflects the fact that the private application provisions of the Act are not there to arbitrate private contractual disputes relating to the supply of a product in circumstances where a refusal to supply does not have a market impact. The adverse competitive effect has to be more than an impact on CarGurus' business, as this is already captured by the requirement that the applicant be substantially affected by the refusal to supply. The evidence has to have a market dimension. As the Tribunal stated in Nadeau at para 368, the requirement that the practice is "likely to have" an adverse effect means that there is a requirement to establish the likelihood that an adverse effect is probable and not merely possible.

[152] Here, CarGurus is a new entrant. Evidence needed to demonstrate that there could be an adverse effect on competition in these circumstances is arguably more difficult to meet. But it is still the burden of the applicant to bring forward sufficient credible evidence to give the Tribunal a bona fide belief that this requirement of section 76 could be met. In light of the market structure for the operation of Digital Marketplaces in Canada, the presence of two leading competitors and numerous other smaller ones, and the relatively small, but growing, size of CarGurus, I am not satisfied that sufficient credible evidence has been produced by CarGurus to support a bona fide belief that holding CarGurus out of the Digital Marketplaces market or limiting its expansion could have an adverse effect on competition in the market.

e. Conclusion regarding Section 76

[153] For all these reasons, I conclude that the Tribunal "could" not make an order under section 76 requiring Trader to supply CarGurus when the application is heard on the merits, as insufficient evidence has been provided on at least three elements set out in the price maintenance provision.

IV. CONCLUSION

[154] For the reasons discussed above, CarGurus' application for leave is not supported by sufficient credible evidence to give rise to a bona fide belief that CarGurus may be or is substantially affected in its business by the alleged refusal to supply or exclusive dealing by Trader. Accordingly, CarGurus' application for leave to apply under section 75 and 77 of the Act is denied.

[155] Similarly, the Tribunal concludes that it could not make an order under section 76 of the Act as the evidence on at least three elements of the price maintenance provision is insufficient to give rise to a bona fide belief that CarGurus could meet them.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE TRIBUNAL ORDERS THAT:

[156] The application seeking leave for relief under sections 75, 76 and 77 of the Act is dismissed.

[157] The respondent Trader is awarded costs against the applicant CarGurus, at the mid-point of Column III of the table to Tariff B of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106.

DATED at Ottawa, this 14th day of October 2016.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

A. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

[1] The Tribunal has decided on a balance of probabilities that the Merger is likely to prevent competition substantially in the market for the supply of secure landfill services for solid hazardous waste from oil and gas producers in a geographic market which, at a minimum, is the area identified by CCS' expert, Dr. Kahwaty, as the "Potentially Contestable Area".

[2] The Tribunal has concluded that CCS is a monopolist in the geographic market and that it exercises significant market power which is being maintained as a result of the Merger.

[3] Although Dr. Baye, the Commissioner's expert, suggested a wide range of likely price decreases in the absence of the Merger, the Tribunal has found that a decrease in average tipping fees of at least 10% was prevented by the Merger.

[4] There is significant time and uncertainty associated with entry. The Tribunal has concluded that effective entry would likely take a minimum of 30 months from site selection to the completed construction and operation of a secure landfill in the relevant market.

[5] The Tribunal has also decided that, in the absence of the Merger, the Vendors would likely not have sold the Babkirk Facility in the summer of 2010 but would have operated it themselves and would have constructed a new secure landfill with a capacity of 125,000 tonnes by October of 2011. This landfill would likely have operated as a complement to the Vendors' bioremediation business until no later than October 2012.

[6] The Tribunal has also concluded that the Vendors' bioremediation business would likely have been unprofitable and that by October 2012, the Vendors would likely have changed their business plan to significantly focus on the secure landfill part of their business or would have sold the Babkirk Facility to a secure landfill operator. In either case, no later than the spring of 2013, the Babkirk Facility would have operated in meaningful competition with CCS' Silverberry secure landfill. It is the prevention of this competition by the Merger which constitutes a likely substantial prevention of competition.

[8] Divestiture is an effective remedy and is the least intrusive option.

[9] The application has been allowed. The Tribunal has ordered CCS to divest the shares or assets of BLS.

[10] In dealing with the facts of this case, the Tribunal's conclusions were all based on an analysis of whether the events at issue were likely to occur.

B. INTRODUCTION

[11] The Commissioner of Competition (the "Commissioner") has applied for an order under section 92 of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34, as amended (the "Act"), dissolving a transaction in which CCS Corporation ("CCS") acquired the shares of Complete Environmental Inc. ("Complete") and ownership of its wholly-owned subsidiary Babkirk Land Services Inc. ("BLS") on January 7, 2011 (the "Merger"). In the alternative, the Commissioner requests a divestiture order requiring CCS to dispose of the shares or assets of BLS in a manner to be directed by the Tribunal.

[12] In her application (the "Application"), the Commissioner alleges that the Merger is likely to prevent competition substantially in the market for hazardous waste disposal services in North-Eastern British Columbia ("NEBC") because, at the date of the Merger, Complete was a poised entrant by reason of having obtained the regulatory approvals needed to operate a secure landfill for hazardous solid waste on a site at Mile 115, Alaska Highway, Wonowon, B.C. (the "Babkirk Site").

[13] Pending the Tribunal's decision on this application, CCS undertook to maintain all approvals, registrations, consents, licenses, permits, certificates and other authorizations necessary for the operation of a hazardous waste disposal facility (the "Babkirk Facility" or "Babkirk") on the Babkirk Site. Complete's other assets and businesses were not subject to this undertaking.

C. THE PARTIES

[14] The Commissioner is the public official who is responsible for the enforcement of the Act.

[15] CCS is a private energy and environmental waste management company. Its customers are mainly oil and gas producers in Western Canada. CCS owns the only two operating secure landfills in NEBC that are permitted to accept solid hazardous waste. One is the Silverberry secure landfill ("Silverberry"). It opened in 2002. It is located approximately 50 km north-west of Fort St. John. The other is called Northern Rockies secure landfill ("Northern Rockies"). It opened in 2009 and is situated about 340 km northwest of Silverberry, about 260 km from the Babkirk Site and approximately 20 km south of Ft. Nelson. CCS also operates a variety of different types of secure landfills in Alberta and Saskatchewan and owns a separate waste management business called Hazco Waste Management ("Hazco"). Schedule "A" hereto is a map showing the locations of the landfills which are relevant to this Application.

[16] BLS was founded in 1996 by Murray and Kathy Babkirk (the "Babkirks"). BLS operated a facility which was not a secure landfill. It had a permit for the treatment and short-term storage of hazardous waste on the 150 acre (approx.) Babkirk Site. It is located approximately 81 km or 1 ½ hours by car, northwest of Silverberry. The Babkirks operated their facility for approximately six years under a permit from the British Columbia Ministry of the Environment

("MOE") which was issued in 1998. However, in 2004, they stopped accepting waste. Two years later, the Babkirks retained SNC Lavalin ("SNCL") to prepare the documents BLS needed to apply for permits for the construction of a secure landfill capable of accepting solid, hazardous waste at the Babkirk Site.

[17] The individual Respondents are the former shareholders of Complete who sold their shares to CCS in the Merger. Karen and Ron Baker are married and Ken Watson is their son-in-law. Tom Wolsey is Randy Wolsey's father. The former shareholders will be referred collectively as the "Vendors". All the Vendors, except Tom Wolsey, gave evidence in this proceeding.

[18] In November of 2006, Randy Wolsey, acting on his own behalf and on behalf of other individual Respondents, negotiated a "handshake agreement" with the Babkirks to purchase the shares of BLS. The deal was conditional on BLS obtaining approval for the secure landfill from the Environmental Assessment Office ("EAO"). In April 2007, the Vendors incorporated Complete (initially called Newco) to be the company that would eventually purchase the shares of BLS. After an extensive process of consultation and review, the EAO issued a certificate (the "EA Certificate") to BLS on December 3, 2008. Four months later, in April 2009, Complete acquired all the outstanding shares of BLS and it became a wholly-owned subsidiary of Complete. Thereafter, on February 26, 2010, BLS received a permit from the MOE authorizing the construction of a secure landfill, with a maximum storage capacity of 750,000 tonnes, and a storage and treatment facility with a maximum capacity of 90,000 tonnes (the "MOE Permit").

[19] At the time of the Merger, Complete had other business interests. It operated municipal solid waste landfills for the Peace River Regional District as well as a solid waste transfer station. In addition, it owned a roll-off container rental business (the "Roll-off Bin Business"). Since the Merger, those businesses have been operated by Hazco.

[20] CCS, Complete and BLS will be described collectively as the "Corporate Respondents".

D. THE PARTIES' POSITIONS

The Commissioner

[21] The Commissioner alleges that because CCS owns the only two operational secure landfills for solid hazardous waste in NEBC, it has a monopoly and associated market power which allows it to price discriminate between different customers and set the prices for hazardous waste disposal above a competitive level. These prices are known as "Tipping Fees".

[22] The Commissioner alleges that Complete was ready to enter the market for secure landfill services in NEBC and that it was likely that competition between Complete and CCS would have caused a decline in average Tipping Fees in NEBC of at least 10%. Alternatively, the Commissioner alleges that the Vendors would have sold Complete to a purchaser which would have operated a secure landfill in competition with CCS. Finally, the Commissioner maintains that any efficiencies associated with the Merger are likely to be de minimis.

The Respondents

[23] The Vendors submit that their sale of Complete was not a Merger under the Act because there was no business in operation at the Babkirk Site. They also deny (i) that Complete was poised to enter the market for the direct disposal of hazardous waste into a secure landfill and (ii) that, in the absence of the Merger, an alternative buyer would have purchased Complete and operated a secure landfill. The Respondents maintain that if the Vendors had not sold Complete to CCS, they would likely have processed hazardous waste at the Babkirk Facility using a treatment technique called bioremediation. This type of treatment would have been complemented by a half cell (125,000 tonnes) of secure landfill. The secure landfill would only have been used to store the small amount of hazardous waste that could not be successfully treated, and would not have been used to engage in meaningful competition with CCS in respect of the supply of secure landfill services.

[24] The Corporate Respondents challenge both the Commissioner's interpretation of CCS' pricing behaviour and her prediction of the anti-competitive effects she has alleged would likely result from the Merger. Among other things, they allege that the Commissioner's approach to market definition is fundamentally flawed and that the area in which there is scope for competition between the Babkirk and Silverberry facilities is, at best, limited to the very small "Potentially Contestable Area" identified by CCS' expert, Dr. Kahwaty (the "Contestable Area").

[25] The Corporate Respondents also submit that the efficiencies resulting from the Merger are likely to be greater than, and will offset, the effects of any prevention of competition brought about by the Merger. They further argue that the Commissioner failed to meet her burden of quantifying the deadweight loss as part of her case in chief. As a result, they say that the Tribunal should conclude that the Merger is not likely to result in any quantifiable effects.

[26] Finally, all the Respondents submit that if there is to be remedy, it should be divestiture, rather than dissolution.

E. THE EVIDENCE

[27] Attached as Schedule "B" is a list of the witnesses who testified for each party and a description of the documentary evidence.

F. INDUSTRY BACKGROUND

[28] The management of solid hazardous waste generated by oil and gas operators is regulated in British Columbia by the Environmental Management Act, SBC 2003, c 53 (the "EMA") and regulations. If the waste produced meets the definition of "hazardous waste" found in the Hazardous Waste Regulation, (B.C. Reg. 63/88) (the "HW Regulation"), oil and gas operators wishing to dispose of hazardous waste must do so within the confines of the legislative framework. The MOE is responsible for administering the EMA and HW Regulation.

Hereinafter, hazardous waste as defined in the HW Regulation which is solid will be described as "Hazardous Waste".

[29] Under the HW Regulation, a person must receive a permit from the MOE to operate a facility called a secure landfill that can accept Hazardous Waste for disposal. A "secure landfill" is defined in the HW Regulation as a disposal facility where Hazardous Waste is placed in or on land that is designed, constructed and operated to prevent any pollution from being caused by the facility outside of the area of the facility ("Secure Landfill").

Disposal at Secure Landfills

[30] Oil and gas drilling operators (also called waste generators) produce two major types of Hazardous Waste that can be disposed of at a Secure Landfill: contaminated soil and drill cuttings. The contaminants are typically hydrocarbons, salts, and metals.

[31] Hydrocarbons are categorized as light-end hydrocarbons and heavy-end hydrocarbons. The evidence shows that Hazardous Waste often includes hydrocarbons of both types.

[32] Oil and gas generators can contaminate soil with salt when, among other things, they inadvertently spill produced water or brine. Produced water is water that has been trapped in underground formations and is brought to the surface along with the oil or gas. Metals can be found in Hazardous Waste because they occur naturally or because they have been included in additives used in drilling.

[33] The HW Regulation states that a Secure Landfill cannot be used to dispose of liquid hazardous waste.

[34] Hazardous Waste from "legacy sites" can also be disposed of at Secure Landfills. Dr. Baye defined legacy waste as "accumulated waste from decades of drilling activity that has been left at the drilling site" ("Legacy Waste").

[35] Operators pay third-party trucking companies to transport Hazardous Waste to Secure Landfills. Transportation costs are typically a substantial portion of waste generators' overall costs of disposal. Dr. Baye estimated that a generator would pay $4 to $6 per tonne for every hour spent transporting waste from, and returning to a generator's site.

[36] At the hearing, Mr. [CONFIDENTIAL] and Mr. [CONFIDENTIAL], indicated that no ongoing liability is shown on their books once Hazardous Waste is sent to Secure Landfills, even though generators could be liable if a Secure Landfill operator goes bankrupt or if the landfill fails and Hazardous Waste leaches out of the facility.

[37] The MOE has issued five permits for Secure Landfills. Four of them are in NEBC and are currently valid: Silverberry, Northern Rockies, Babkirk and Peejay.

[38] Silverberry has a permitted capacity which allows it to accept 6,000,000 tonnes of waste. At 1.52 tonnes per cubic meter, which is the same figure used to calculate tonnes at Silverberry, Northern Rockies' permitted capacity is 3,344,000 tonnes. In 2010, [CONFIDENTIAL] tonnes of Hazardous Waste was tipped at Silverberry and, in that year, Northern Rockies accepted [CONFIDENTIAL] tonnes.

[39] Tipping Fees vary depending on the type of waste. According to the evidence given by Dr. Baye, the average Tipping Fee for all substances at Silverberry was [CONFIDENTIAL] per tonne in 2010 and the average Tipping Fee for all waste tipped at Northern Rockies in the same year was [CONFIDENTIAL] per tonne.

[40] Peejay is located in a relatively inaccessible area near the Alberta border. It was developed by a First Nations community to serve nearby drilling operators such as Canadian Natural Resources Limited ("CNRL"). Construction specifications and an operational plan for Peejay were approved by the MOE on March 11, 2009. However, the Secure Landfill has not yet been constructed and there may be financial difficulties at the project.

[41] There are presently no Secure Landfills in operation in NEBC which are owned by oil and gas generators.

Bioremediation - Methodology

[42] Bioremediation is a method of treating soil by using micro-organisms to reduce contamination. The microbes can be naturally occurring or they can be deliberately added to facilitate bioremediation. In NEBC, bioremediation usually takes place on an oil and gas producing site where the waste is generated. Bioremediation can also be undertaken offsite but the evidence indicates that there are no offsite bioremediation facilities currently operating in NEBC.

[43] A common bioremediation technique is landfarming. In landfarming, contaminated waste is placed on impermeable liners and is periodically aerated by being turned over or tilled. The landfarming technique the Vendors planned to use involves turning soil to create windrows which are [CONFIDENTIAL] triangular-shaped piles of soil [CONFIDENTIAL].

[44] The preponderance of the evidence showed that, given sufficient time, light-end hydrocarbons can be successfully bioremediated in NEBC despite the cold if the clay soil is broken up. However, the Tribunal has concluded that soil contaminated with heavy-end hydrocarbons is not amenable to cost effective bioremediation because it is difficult, unpredictable, and very time consuming. Further, waste contaminated with metals and salts cannot be effectively bioremediated with technologies currently approved for use in Canada.

[45] Once bioremediation is complete, an operator will normally hire a consultant to determine whether the Hazardous Waste can be certified as "delisted" in accordance with a delisting protocol. If so, there is no further liability associated with that particular waste.

[46] Mr. Watson testified that his company, Integrated Resource Technologies Ltd. ("IRTL"), had successfully bioremediated hydrocarbon-contaminated soil throughout the winter in NEBC and Northern Alberta. Since about 2002, he has been using a specially designed machine from Finland, the "ALLU AS-38H". This machine [CONFIDENTIAL] is capable of breaking up heavy clay so that bacteria can enter the windrow and consume the hydrocarbon contaminants.

G. THE ISSUES

[47] The following broad issues are raised in this proceeding:

1. Is CCS' acquisition of Complete a "merger"?
2. What is the product dimension of the relevant market?
3. What is the geographic dimension of the relevant market?
4. Is the Merger Pro-Competitive?
5. What is the analytical framework in a "prevent" case?
6. Is the Merger likely to prevent competition substantially?
7. What is the burden of proof on the Commissioner and on a Respondent when the efficiencies defence is pleaded pursuant to section 96 of the Act?
8. Has CCS successfully established an efficiencies defence?
9. Is the appropriate remedy dissolution or divestiture?

ISSUE 1 IS CCS' ACQUISITION OF COMPLETE A MERGER?

[48] As a threshold matter, the Vendors submit that the Application should be dismissed because, at the date of the Merger, Complete was not a "business" within the meaning of section 91 of the Act, given that it was not actively accepting and treating Hazardous Waste, and was not otherwise operational in relation to the supply of Secure Landfill services. Instead, they maintain that Complete was simply an entity which held the assets of BLS, i.e. permits and property. Accordingly, the Vendors' position is that, because CCS acquired assets which had not yet been deployed, it did not acquire a "business", as contemplated by section 91 of the Act. The Vendors also submit that the other businesses owned by Complete and acquired in the Merger are not relevant for the purposes of this Application because the Commissioner does not allege that they caused or contributed to a substantial prevention of competition.

|---|---|
| In sections 92 to 100, "merger" means the acquisition or establishment, direct or indirect, by one or more persons, whether by purchase or lease of shares or assets, by amalgamation or by combination or otherwise, of control over or significant interest in the whole or a part of a business of a competitor, supplier, customer or other person. | Pour l'application des articles 92 à 100, « fusionnement » désigne l'acquisition ou l'établissement, par une ou plusieurs personnes, directement ou indirectement, soit par achat ou location d'actions ou d'éléments d'actif, soit par fusion, association d'intérêts ou autrement, du contrôle sur la totalité ou quelque partie d'une entreprise d'un concurrent, d'un fournisseur, d'un client, ou d'une autre personne, ou encore d'un intérêt | relativement important dans la totalité ou quelque partie d'une telle entreprise.

[50] Business is defined as follows in subsection 2(1) of the Act (the "Definition"):

|---|---|
| "business" includes the business of | « entreprise » Sont comprises parmi les entreprises les entreprises : |
| (b) acquiring, supplying and otherwise dealing in services. | b) d'acquisition, de prestation de services et de tout autre commerce portant sur des services. |
| It also includes the raising of funds for charitable or other non-profit purposes. | Est également comprise parmi les entreprises la collecte de fonds à des fins de charité ou à d'autres fins non lucratives. |

[51] The Tribunal notes two features of the Definition. First, it uses the word "includes", which means that it is not exhaustive. Second, unlike the definitions of the term "business" found in statutes such as the Investment Canada Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 28 (1st Supp.), the Definition makes no reference to generating profits or revenues.

[52] Turning to the facts, it is the Tribunal's view that, for the reasons described below, Complete was actively engaged in the development of the Babkirk Site as a hazardous waste treatment facility.

[53] Before the Merger, Complete had taken the following steps:

- It had purchased the shares of BLS, thereby acquiring the EA Certificate and the Babkirk Site;
- It had continued the application process and had secured the MOE Permit;
- It had held numerous shareholders' meetings to plan how the Babkirk Site would be developed as a bioremediation facility and how that facility would operate in conjunction with other businesses owned by the Vendors;
- Its shareholders had discussed bioremediation with Petro-Canada and had solicited its interest in becoming a customer for both bioremediation and Secure Landfill services;
- It had hired IRTL and had paid it [CONFIDENTIAL] to bioremediate the soil in cell #1 at the Babkirk Facility. This work was undertaken because it was a condition precedent to the construction of the half cell of Secure Landfill;
- It was developing an operations plan for the Babkirk Facility.

[54] In the Tribunal's view, these activities demonstrate that Complete was engaged in the business of developing the Babkirk Site as a Hazardous Waste treatment service that included a Secure Landfill. Since the Definition is not exhaustive, the Tribunal has concluded that it encompasses the activities in which Complete and its shareholders had been engaged at the time of its purchase by CCS. Further, the absence of a requirement for revenue in the Definition suggests to the Tribunal that it covers a business in its developmental stage.

[55] For all these reasons, the Tribunal has concluded that Complete was a business under section 91 of the Act at the date of the Merger.

[56] In view of this conclusion, it is not necessary to decide whether Complete's Roll-off Bin Business or its management of municipal dumps could be businesses for the purposes of section 91 of the Act.

[57] However, in the Chairperson's view, a business being acquired in a merger must have some relevance to a Commissioner's application. In other words, it must have the potential to impact competition in the markets at issue. This observation means that, in this case, Complete's Roll-off Bin Business and its management of municipal dumps would not have been caught by the definition in section 91 because they are not involved in any way in the disposal or treatment of Hazardous Waste. In his separate reasons, Crampton C.J. has taken a different position on this point.

ISSUE 2 WHAT IS THE PRODUCT DIMENSION OF THE RELEVANT MARKET?

The Analysis

[58] In defining relevant markets, the Tribunal generally follows the hypothetical monopolist approach. As noted in Commissioner of Competition v. Superior Propane, 2000 Comp. Trib. 15, 7 C.P.R. (4th) 385 (Comp. Trib.) ("Propane 1"), at para. 57, the Tribunal embraces the description of that approach set forth at paragraph 4.3 in the Commissioner's Merger Enforcement Guidelines ("MEGs"), which state:

> Conceptually, a relevant market is defined as the smallest group of products, including at least one product of the merging parties, and the smallest geographic area, in which a sole profit-maximizing seller (a "hypothetical monopolist") would impose and sustain a small but significant and non-transitory increase in price ("SSNIP") above levels that would likely exist in the absence of the merger.

[59] The price that would likely have existed in the absence of or "but for" the merger in a "prevent case" is the Base Price. The burden is on the Commissioner to demonstrate the "Base Price". In this case, Dr. Baye has predicted a decrease in Tipping Fees in the absence of the Merger of at least 10% and in some of his economic modelling the price decrease is as large as 21%. In The Commissioner of Competition v. Canadian Waste Services Holdings Inc., 2001 Comp. Trib. 3; 11 C.P.R. (4th) 425; aff'd 2003 FCA 131, at para. 92, the Tribunal observed that, when a price change can be predicted with confidence, it is appropriate to delineate markets based on the likely future price even if the future level of that price cannot be predicted precisely.

In such cases, it may be sufficient for the Commissioner to demonstrate a range in which the likely future price would have fallen.

[60] However, if a reasonable approximation of the likely future price cannot be demonstrated, it may be difficult for the Tribunal to clearly define the boundaries of the relevant market. In such cases, it will nevertheless be helpful for the Tribunal to be provided with sufficient evidence to demonstrate why substitutes that appear to be acceptable at the prevailing price level would or would not remain acceptable at price levels that would likely exist "but for" the merger or anti-competitive practice in question. In any event, evidence about various practical indicia is typically required to apply the hypothetical monopolist approach. The Tribunal recognizes that, like other approaches to market definition, the hypothetical monopolist approach is susceptible to being somewhat subjective in its practical application, in the absence of some indication of what constitutes a "small but significant and non-transitory increase in price" (SSNIP). For this reason, objective benchmarks such as a five percent price increase lasting one year, can be helpful in circumscribing and focusing the inquiry.

[61] In the Application at paragraph 11, the Commissioner alleged that "[t]he anti-competitive effects of the Merger "primarily" affect oil and gas companies disposing of Hazardous Waste produced at oil and gas fields within NEBC." [our emphasis]. However, in his initial report Dr. Baye did not limit the product market to Hazardous Waste produced at oil and gas fields. Nevertheless, during the hearing, Dr. Baye and Dr. Kahwaty essentially agreed that the amount of solid hazardous waste generated by non-oil and gas sources and tipped at Secure Landfills in British Columbia is so small that it does not warrant consideration in these proceedings. Accordingly, in the Tribunal's view, the Commissioner's product market definition is "solid hazardous waste generated by oil and gas producers and tipped into secure landfills in NEBC".

[62] However, the Respondents deny that the product market is as narrow as the Commissioner suggests. They say that it also includes bioremediation and the storage or risk management of waste on the sites where the waste was generated. They assert that these options constrain any market power that CCS may have. We will deal with these positions in turn.

Evidence about the Use of Bioremediation

[63] Bioremediation has been described above and the evidence is clear that it is not an acceptable substitute for generators of Hazardous Waste if soil is contaminated with salts or metals. The Tribunal also accepts that, if heavy-end hydrocarbons are present, bioremediation is not cost effective or successful in a reasonable timeframe.

[64] Mr. Andrews gave evidence about the use of bioremediation. He joined the MOE in January 2011. At that time, he was asked to review the E-Licensing Database, which keeps track of the progress made by operators who are bioremediating Hazardous Waste. He found that approximately 50% of the operators who had entries in the Database had reported no annual activity. He said that this indicated that many operators "had stopped actively treating H[azardous] W[aste] at these sites, or at least had stopped reporting any activities to the MOE."

[65] He therefore contacted Conoco Philips Canada, Suncor Energy Inc. ("Suncor"), Progress, Devon Canada Corporation ("Devon") and Apache Canada Ltd. ("Apache"). They accounted for 80% of the registered sites with no reported activity. Among other things, he asked these operators to update their operations plans and submit annual reports.

[66] According to Mr. Andrews' witness statement, three of the operators reported that they had dealt with the Hazardous Waste they were bioremediating by sending it to a Secure Landfill and he anticipated that the remaining operators would do the same because bioremediation had failed. Mr. Andrews also said that Suncor filed an operations plan for its registered bioremediation sites which stated that, in the future, it would be sending all its Hazardous Waste to a Secure Landfill.

[67] Mr. Andrews also described his experience with onsite treatment before he joined the MOE. He stated the following in his witness statement [paragraphs 23-26]:

> I managed the HW at seven sites that CNRL had registered. These sites were allocated north of Fort St John and on existing oil and gas lease sites or on abandoned sites. There were approximately 50,000 tonnes of HW at these sites.
>
> Initially, we tried treating the HW onsite. At each of these sites we put the HW into windrows and used a turner to turn the HW three times per year at each site. Hazco Environmental Services was the contractor that provided the windrow turner. We also added fertilizers and nutrients in the soil to assist in the bioremediation process. The fertilizer is meant to add additional nutrients to aid the bacteria to process the hydrocarbons.
>
> CNRL pursued this treatment process for two years. While CNRL was able to reduce the contaminants in the HW at these sites, it failed to reduce the contaminants enough to "delist" the HW. Delisting HW means reducing the presence of contaminants low enough so that the soil is no longer considered to be HW. CNRL spent significant amounts of money on treatment because the sites required constant monitoring. The sites would get wet and require dewatering out to prevent berm overflow and enable equipment access.
> Ultimately, after two years of treatment, it was clear that bioremediation would not work to address the contamination issues. CNRL decided to send the remaining HW to a Secure Landfill, specifically Silverberry, which was the landfill closest to the sites. I was also responsible for this process. It took CNRL approximately 2-3 years and several million dollars to send all the waste to Silverberry.

[68] [CONFIDENTIAL], who works as a Contracting and Procurement Analysist for [CONFIDENTIAL], testified that its current operations in NEBC are in two fields called [CONFIDENTIAL]. He indicated that [CONFIDENTIAL] uses Secure Landfills to dispose of its Hazardous Waste and that it does not bioremediate because of the associated costs, the time necessary to bioremediate, and the manpower required to undertake bioremediation. He stated that liability has the potential to remain if the Hazardous Waste is not effectively bioremediated and that additional costs might be incurred if the Hazardous Waste, which is not effectively treated, must be tipped into a Secure Landfill. He added that there is ongoing uncertainty about whether bioremediation is effective or not.

[69] [CONFIDENTIAL], the Vice-President of Operations at [CONFIDENTIAL], testified that [CONFIDENTIAL] uses an oil-based mud system to reduce friction on horizontal wells and that the oil-based mud cuttings are typically tipped into Secure Landfills. He also stated that [CONFIDENTIAL] sees disposal at a Secure Landfill as the most economic alternative for dealing with the Hazardous Waste from drilling, as disposal eliminates the increased environmental risk and cost of long term storage and/or site remediation. He explained that "[c]ontainment, transport and disposal of hazardous waste generated from drilling operations is currently the only option used by [CONFIDENTIAL] for managing hazardous waste generated from drilling." Accordingly, it is clear that, at its current drilling sites, only Secure Landfills are used for disposal.

[70] However, with respect to the Legacy Waste in NEBC on drilling sites which [CONFIDENTIAL], Mr. [CONFIDENTIAL] testified that [CONFIDENTIAL] will bioremediate some of the waste on these sites. He explained that bioremediation of the Legacy Waste had already been started by [CONFIDENTIAL]. He stated that the decision to dispose of Hazardous Waste instead of treating it is taken on a case-by-case basis, and depends on the type and amount of Hazardous Waste present on the legacy site, the likelihood of successful remediation, and the cost of excavation, transport and disposal.

[71] During a review of the HW Regulation undertaken by the MOE, the MOE retained Conestoga-Rovers & Associates to conduct a report on Secure Landfill disposal. The report is entitled "Secure Landfill Disposal Policy Review" and dated March 2011. It states:

> Based on equal weighting of cost, cost variability, timeline, and treatment certainty landfilling [Secure Landfill] is the preferred option under all scenarios. Landfarming [bioremediation] can be an appropriate method for treating hydrocarbon contaminated soils given appropriate concentrations and a multi-year timeline.

[72] Devin Scheck, the Director of Waste Management and Reclamation at the British Columbia Oil and Gas Commission, testified that many operators still choose to dispose of their contaminated soils in Secure Landfills, even in situations where bioremediation is feasible, because of the associated costs and timeframe. He said the following in his witness statement [paragraphs 25-27]:

> In my experience, a significant number of the sites that Operators seek to remediate are remediated by the Operator disposing of the contaminated soils at a landfill. With sites that are only contaminated with light end hydrocarbons, Operators may seek to bioremediate the soil on site, but heavy end hydrocarbons tend to have a poor response to bioremediation. As well, tight clay (which is prevalent in North Eastern B.C. where the oil and gas activity is most prevalent) > makes bioremediation difficult, as does the relatively cold weather in the region. The presence of other contaminants, such as salts or metals that exceed CSR standards, prevent bioremediation from being an appropriate option, as salts and metals cannot be bioremediated.

> Accordingly, when dealing with anything other than light end hydrocarbons, my experience is that Operators will usually dig up the soil, and dispose of it at a Secure Landfill like Silverberry in B.C. or a closer landfill across the Alberta border, such as the CCS Class II Alberta Landfill at LaGlace.
> In my experience, even where bioremediation may be feasible, many Operators will still choose to landfill their contaminated soils. With bioremediation there is much uncertainty about costs, and the timeframe required for treatment is also uncertain. Weather conditions, site access issues, amount/type of treatment, future equipment and labour costs, as well as the costs of ongoing access for treatment and sampling to determine if the soils are remediated contribute to this uncertainty.

[73] Mark Polet, an expert environmental biologist with specialized knowledge in environmental assessment, remediation and reclamation, as well as waste facility management development, stated as follows in paragraph 17 of his expert report:

> Once an Operator in NEBC decides to clean up its waste, the two most practical options available are: 1) the disposal of the waste at an appropriate landfill; or 2) the treatment of the waste onsite through a process known as bioremediation. Operators do not have a uniform preference for either option but, in my experience, will choose an option based on cost, risk, efficacy and other reasons such as environmental stewardship.

> Once you define the types [of contaminants], you can decide on the most prudent response. And so, for instance, if I found on a site just the light end hydrocarbons with no other types of contamination mixed with it, I would look at bioremediation as an alternative. If it had salts and metals associated with the contamination, as well, then I would lean very strongly to landfill. If it had heavier end hydrocarbons, I would lean strongly to landfill, as well.
> In terms of cost, there -- can be quite comparable in price, but of course bioremediation is very limited in what it can be applied to. And the one thing that we've noticed in working in the field is that when bioremediation is not managed properly, then much material actually lands back up in the landfill, anyway. So it has to be well managed to work properly.

[75] There is also evidence about bioremediation in the Statement of Agreed Facts (the "Agreed Facts"). However, at the hearing it became clear that, contrary to the way in which they are presented, some of the facts were not actually agreed. The problematic evidence concerns bioremediation and was gathered in two ways. The evidence in paragraphs 63-67 of the Agreed Facts was given directly to the Commissioner's staff. This evidence will be called "Evidence A".

[76] Evidence A has two significant characteristics. The sources are not named and the Agreed Facts state in paragraph 63 that "…the Bureau has not confirmed the truth of the facts communicated to it by the operators…" Evidence A is in the Agreed Facts because CCS insisted that it be included and CCS asks the Tribunal to give it weight and assume it is true.

[77] Evidence A reflects that operator "F" bioremediates at least 70% of its waste in BC because it considers bioremediation to be better for the environment. Operators "H" and "J" bioremediate about 50% their waste. These operators appear to be bioremediating on their drilling sites to avoid the transportation charges and Tipping Fees associated with Secure Landfills.

[78] Although the Commissioner cannot confirm its truth, the Tribunal is nevertheless prepared to give Evidence A some weight because it can see no reason why industry participants would lie to the Commissioner about their use of onsite bioremediation. However, without knowing the volume of waste produced by "F", "H" and "J", it is impossible to determine whether bioremediation is being undertaken on a significant scale. In any event, it is clear that, even for these waste generators, there is a substantial portion of Hazardous Waste in respect of which bioremediation is not used.

[79] The second category of evidence is found in paragraphs 69-74 of the Agreed Facts. It was gathered in July 2011 by representatives of National Economic Research Associates ("NERA"). Dr. Baye works at NERA and it appears that NERA was retained by the Commissioner to interview industry participants. The Commissioner's staff attended these interviews and the six sources are named ([CONFIDENTIAL]). No concern is expressed about the reliability of this evidence. This evidence will be called "Evidence B".

[80] The Commissioner only called witnesses from [CONFIDENTIAL] and [CONFIDENTIAL] who, as discussed above, indicated that they do not bioremediate as a matter of policy [CONFIDENTIAL].

[81] CCS states the evidence of the other four operators, described in Evidence B, shows that they are active bioremediators and CCS asks the Tribunal to draw an adverse inference from the fact that they were not called by the Commissioner. However, in the Tribunal's view, no such inference should be drawn because the Commissioner had no obligation to adduce the evidence and it was open to CCS to do so.

[82] Evidence B shows that [CONFIDENTIAL] bioremediates 10-15% of its waste. [CONFIDENTIAL] engages in some bioremediation at about 70% of its sites and [CONFIDENTIAL] bioremediates about 75% of its treatable material onsite. (It also appears to treat the balance of treatable material offsite but this is not explained. Since there are no offsite bioremediation facilities in NEBC, the Tribunal has concluded that this statement must refer to offsite treatment elsewhere.) [CONFIDENTIAL] bioremediates onsite and sometimes moves waste between its sites for bioremediation. In the last 3-4 years, it has bioremediated 60-70% of its abandoned well waste.

[83] It is noteworthy that this evidence gives no volumes for treatable and Legacy Hazardous Waste. In these circumstances, and given that the Respondent did not call witnesses from these four operators or other operators, the Tribunal is not persuaded that bioremediation is being undertaken on a significant scale in NEBC.

Evidence about Storage and Risk Management

[84] Storage means that Hazardous Waste is left untreated on a drilling site which is still under lease. As long as the MOE does not order a cleanup, this option is available even though drilling has finished, as long as the operator continues to make the lease/tenure payments for the site. Since such payments are low compared to the cost of cleaning up the site, doing nothing may be an attractive option in some cases and the evidence from Trevor Mackay's examination for discovery is that "many" operators have waste stored on their sites. However, Mr. [CONFIDENTIAL] testified that [CONFIDENTIAL] does not store the Hazardous Waste generated from drilling operations for long periods of time, due to the cost and potential liability issues. He explained that the typical well site storage costs during drilling operations are [CONFIDENTIAL] per well.

[85] Risk Management is a process undertaken when drilling is finished and an operator wishes to terminate a lease. The operator must restore the site's surface as nearly as possible to the condition it was in before drilling. Once this has been accomplished, a Certificate of Restoration (also referred to as a Certificate of Compliance) is issued and the operator's lease is terminated. However, the operator remains liable for any issues arising from the Hazardous Waste that is left behind and is obliged to comply with conditions such as monitoring even after the certificate is issued.

> Based on my experience, Operators use risk management as a last resort if treatment or disposal are not practical. I rarely recommend it because even if approval is obtained, which in my experience is very difficult, the Operator retains liability and there is a recognition that the site may need to be revisited if issues arise.

[87] Pete Marshal, an expert in Hazardous Waste management, testified that, although disposal in a Secure Landfill, bioremediation and risk management are each potentially available methods for dealing with Hazardous Waste, he did not know how many operators choose risk management.

[88] This evidence leads the Tribunal to conclude that risk management is seldom used and is not considered to be an acceptable substitute for disposing of Hazardous Waste in a Secure Landfill.

Conclusions about the Product Market

[89] Although some operators with Hazardous Waste which is contaminated with light-end hydrocarbons consider bioremediation to be an acceptable substitute for disposal in a Secure Landfill, there is no evidence about the volumes of waste which are successfully bioremediated. More importantly, there is no evidence that the availability of bioremediation has any constraining impact on Tipping Fees in NEBC. In addition, the Tribunal finds that bioremediation is not considered by at least some waste generators to be an acceptable substitute for disposal in a Secure Landfill, particularly in respect of soil that is contaminated with heavy-end hydro-carbons, salts or metals.

[90] With regard to storage and risk management, there was no evidence about the volumes stored in NEBC and no evidence to suggest that the tenure payments or the cost to obtain a certificate of restoration have any impact on Tipping Fees at Silverberry.

[91] Because bioremediation is not cost effective and is slow for a substantial volume of contaminated soil in NEBC and because it does not work at all on salts and metals, the Tribunal is satisfied that a substantial number of generators do not consider bioremediation to be a good substitute for the disposal of such Hazardous Waste in a Secure Landfill and would not likely switch to bioremediation in response to a SSNIP. Accordingly, the Tribunal is satisfied that the relevant product is "solid hazardous waste generated by oil and gas producers and tipped into secure landfills in NEBC".

ISSUE 3 WHAT IS THE GEOGRAPHIC DIMENSION OF THE RELEVANT MARKET?

[92] The Tribunal and the courts have traditionally considered it necessary to define a relevant market before proceeding to assess the competitive effects of mergers under the Act. (See, for example, Director of Investigation and Research v. Hillsdown Holdings (Canada) Ltd. (1992), 41 C.P.R. (3d) 289, at 297; Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748, at para. 79). However, they have cautioned against losing sight of the ultimate inquiry, which is whether the merger being assessed prevents or lessens, or is likely to prevent or lessen, competition substantially. (Southam, above; "Propane 1", above, at para. 48). With this admonition in mind, it is the Tribunal's view that, in this case, the Tribunal may evaluate the competitive effects of the Merger without precisely defining the relevant geographic market.

[93] This conclusion is important because, as will be discussed below, the evidence that has been adduced does not permit the Tribunal to delineate the exact boundaries of the geographic market.

[94] The Tribunal agrees with the approach taken in the MEGs. The process begins with a small area around one of the merging parties' locations (in this case, a Secure Landfill site) and then asks whether all rivals operating at locations in that area, if acting as a hypothetical monopolist, would have the ability and incentive to impose a small but significant price increase (typically 5%) and sustain that increase for a non-transitory period of time (typically one year). If the postulated price increase would likely cause purchasers of the relevant product in that area to switch sufficient quantities of their purchases to suppliers located outside that area to render the price increase unprofitable, then the geographic dimension of the relevant market would be progressively expanded until the point at which a seller of the relevant product, if acting as a hypothetical monopolist, would have the ability and incentive to impose a SSNIP.

[95] In the case at bar, the evidence dealt with three geographic regions:

I. The Contestable Area – this was identified by Dr. Kahwaty on behalf of CCS.
II. All of NEBC – the Commissioner, supported by her expert Dr. Baye, submitted this definition of the geographic market.
III. The Babkirk Polygon – this area was identified in internal CCS documents dealing with the potential impact of the Babkirk Facility on CCS.

I. The Contestable Area

[96] In broad terms, the Contestable Area identified by Dr. Kahwaty encompasses an hourglass shaped area of 11,000 square kilometres which lies between the Babkirk Site and Silverberry. In his analysis, the road network in this area is such that there are some areas in which both Silverberry and a potential landfill at the Babkirk Site may be viable disposal options for customers with well sites in those areas. Dr. Kahwaty acknowledges that the transportation costs required to reach Silverberry or the Babkirk Site are such that both may be economic alternatives for these customers. In Dr. Kahwaty's view, the geographic scope of the relevant market should be limited to this area.

[97] Dr. Kahwaty used Dr. Baye's 10% predicted decline in Tipping Fees as his benchmark for defining the geographic scope of the relevant market. In short, he assessed every well site and calculated whether, if given a 10% reduction off the Tipping Fees paid at Silverberry, the customer would be indifferent as between tipping at Babkirk and Silverberry, having regard for the fact that their total disposal cost (transportation plus Tipping Fee) would be the same for each Secure Landfill. Twelve such customers were identified, accounting for approximately 41,900 tonnes in the Contestable Area. Dr. Kahwaty acknowledged that a larger critical price discount would produce a larger contestable area.

[98] The Tribunal is satisfied that a hypothetical monopolist supplying Secure Landfill services to these twelve customers in respect of the Hazardous Waste generated in the Contestable Area would have the ability and incentive to impose and sustain a SSNIP above levels that would likely exist in the absence of the Merger.

[99] Indeed, the Tribunal considers that the Contestable Area is likely understated and, in fact, smaller than the minimum area in which a hypothetical monopolist would have the ability and incentive to impose and sustain a SSNIP. The Tribunal has reached this view for several reasons. First, the Tribunal accepts Dr. Baye's position that "Babkirk need not have a location advantage for a customer – and the customer need not switch from Silverberry to Babkirk – for that customer to significantly benefit from the lower Tipping Fees stemming from competition". Second, the evidence suggests that new wells are likely to be drilled in the area between Babkirk and Northern Rockies, and that there is Legacy Waste sitting on abandoned well-sites in that region. Meaningful price and non-price competition between Babkirk and Northern Rockies for at least some of that waste likely would have developed in the absence of the Merger. Third, the geographic extent of the Contestable Area is necessarily limited by Dr. Kahwaty's assumption of a base price that is only 10% below prevailing levels. If that figure is too low Dr. Kahwaty admitted that the geographic market would be larger than the Contestable Area.

[100] In addition, the Tribunal notes that the volume of Hazardous Waste generated in the Contestable Area likely is greater than reported by Dr. Kahwaty because he only used data for 2010. Moreover, Dr. Kahwaty excluded CCS' national customers from his analysis and this may also have resulted in an understated geographic market.

[101] With respect to the possibility that Secure Landfills in Alberta might be economically accessible for generators of waste in the Contested Area, Dr. Kahwaty stated that "transportation costs are too great for [customers located to the south and east of Silverberry, who currently tip their waste in Alberta] to opt to dispose at a potential landfill at the Babkirk site (even with a significant discount) as compared to disposing at Silverberry at current prices." The Tribunal extrapolates from this and concludes that customers generating Hazardous Waste in the Contestable Area are unlikely to transport their waste to secure landfill sites in Alberta due to the significant transportation costs and potential liability that would be associated with hauling waste over such a long distance.

[102] For all these reasons, the Tribunal concludes that the geographic market is at least as large as the Contestable Area. We now turn to whether it could be as large as all of NEBC.

II. All of NEBC

[103] NEBC covers approximately 118,800 square kilometres and is vast in comparison to Dr. Kahwaty's Contestable Area. NEBC and the much smaller Contestable Area are compared on the map attached hereto as Schedule "C", which is taken from Tab 29 of Dr. Kahwaty's report of October 21, 2011.

[104] Dr. Baye concludes that the relevant geographic market is NEBC on the basis that this is the region where targeted customers are located, including current customers at both Silverberry and Northern Rockies Secure Landfills.

[105] In reaching this conclusion, Dr. Baye relies on an economic theory of market equilibrium which predicts that CCS would have an incentive to compete with an independently operated Babkirk Facility for customers located outside of Dr. Kahwaty's Contested Area. This theory is based on his understanding that CCS' average 2010 Tipping Fees at Silverberry were approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] per tonne and its average landfill costs were approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] per tonne, yielding a margin in excess of 60%. Using these figures, Dr. Baye assumes that CCS would be prepared to reduce its Tipping Fees by 25% or greater in some areas to retain business in the face of competition from an independent Babkirk Facility.

[106] However, among other problems, Dr. Baye's theory fails to take into account the opportunity cost to CCS that would be associated with substantially reducing its Tipping Fees to sell landfill capacity today, which could be sold in the future at higher Tipping Fees to customers located closer to Silverberry. In the absence of any analysis of how this opportunity cost would factor into CCS' current decision-making process, the Tribunal finds that the economic theory relied on by Dr. Baye is not particularly helpful in defining the geographic scope of the relevant market.

[107] In his initial report, Dr. Baye also provides estimates based on econometric regression models which he asserts are consistent with this theory and his definition of the geographic market as extending throughout all of NEBC. The first set of models, found at Exhibits 19 and 20 of Dr. Baye's initial report, test his hypothesis that the distance between a Secure Landfill and its closest competitor is a significant predictor of the average Tipping Fees at that landfill.

[108] Exhibit 20 predicts that the opening of an independent landfill at the Babkirk Site will result in a large decline in average Tipping Fees at Northern Rockies, because it would reduce the distance to Northern Rockies' nearest competitor to three hours and 49 minutes. However, this ignores (i) the substantial transportation costs that the vast majority of customers who tip at Northern Rockies would have to incur to transport their waste to Babkirk, (ii) the very small number of well-sites located between those two facilities, and (iii) the apparent absence of any incentive for CCS to alter its Tipping Fees at Northern Rockies in response to entry at Babkirk.

[110] To address the possibility that these substantial price reductions were purely coincidental, Dr. Baye developed "difference in difference" ("DiD") regression models, reported at Exhibit 26 of his initial report. The DiD approach controls for unobserved events, other than SES' entry at Willesden Green, which might have led to the observed decline in Tipping Fees at Rocky. In short, the DiD models include a "treatment" setting in which the event (in this case, entry) occurred and a "control" setting in which the event did not occur. Dr. Baye took the change in Tipping Fees that occurred in the treatment setting and subtracted any change that occurred in the control setting. He interpreted the difference in the change (or the "difference in difference") as the effect of entry at Willesden Green on Tipping Fees at Rocky.

[111] It is significant that, in selecting a control landfill, Dr. Baye considered it important to pick a site that "is unlikely to be affected by the treatment event – in this case entry at Willesden Green." One of the principal criteria that he employed in making that selection was that the control landfill had to be "at least 300 km away" from Willesden Green. The same logic would imply that entry at Babkirk would not likely affect Tipping Fees at Northern Rockies, which is situated 260 km away from the Babkirk Site. A key assumption underlying Dr. Baye's DiD models is therefore inconsistent with his definition of the geographic market as all of NEBC. This, together with the fact that Northern Rockies is almost four times further away from Babkirk than SES' Willesden Green facility is away from CCS' Rocky facility, lead the Tribunal to conclude that Dr. Baye's DiD analysis is not particularly helpful in defining the geographic scope of the relevant market. That said, as discussed in detail below, the transactions data which reveals substantial price reductions by CCS to seven of its customers following SES' entry at Willesden Green is relevant to the Tribunal's assessment of the likely competitive effects of the Merger.

[112] Finally, the Tribunal notes that Dr. Baye also points to internal documents of CCS which he says are consistent with his definition of the relevant geographic market. However, those documents simply: (i) make projections of the overall annual operating margin ([CONFIDENTIAL]) that CCS stood to lose at Silverberry and Northern Rockies were an independent landfill to open at the Babkirk Site; (ii) predict a pricing war if the Babkirk Facility was operated independently or acquired by a third party; (iii) discuss the likelihood of having to compete through "value propositions"; and (iv) reflect that CCS likely takes into account its customers' transportation costs to the next closest competing landfill in setting its Tipping Fees. While these types of statements assist in assessing whether the Merger is likely to prevent competition substantially, they are not particularly helpful to the Tribunal in defining the geographic scope of the relevant market.

III. The Babkirk Polygon

[113] The Babkirk Polygon is the third area that was discussed at the hearing. That area was identified by a member of CCS' business development team who was asked to project Babkirk's market capture area. The Tribunal has added a rough depiction of that area on Schedule "C" hereto.

[114] The Babkirk Polygon was apparently intended to identify the locations of existing Silverberry customers who would be likely to tip at Babkirk rather than at Silverberry, if Babkirk was operated as a Secure Landfill. In other words, the Babkirk Polygon was CCS' representation of the geographic locations of business it risked losing if Babkirk opened as a Secure Landfill. It includes territory north and west of Babkirk and is a larger area than Dr. Kahwaty's Contestable Area.

[115] The Tribunal is satisfied that the locational advantage that the Babkirk Facility would enjoy for customers with drilling operations situated to its north and west is such that those customers would not likely tip at Silverberry in the absence of a very substantial reduction in its Tipping Fees. Given the opportunity cost that CCS would incur by offering such a substantial reduction in its Tipping Fees, and given the absence of any analysis by the Commissioner or Dr. Baye of the impact of that opportunity cost on CCS's decision-making, the Tribunal is not persuaded that CCS would have an incentive to compete for those customers in the absence of the Merger.

[116] Likewise, the Tribunal has not been persuaded on a balance of probabilities that such customers who operate to the north and west of the Babkirk Facility would tip at Silverberry, in response to a SSNIP above the maximum average tipping fee level that it believes is likely to exist in the absence of the Merger. For the reasons discussed below, the Tribunal has concluded that such price level will be at least 10% below existing levels. However, transportation costs and the liability associated with transporting Hazardous Waste over the long distance to Silverberry are such that it would require more than a SSNIP to induce waste generators located in those regions to tip their Hazardous Waste at Silverberry.

[117] The Tribunal has concluded that the geographic scope of the relevant market is at least as large as the Contestable Area identified by Dr. Kahwaty, and likely falls between the limits of that area and the bounds of the Babkirk Polygon, which includes some of the Contestable Area, but adds significant territory north and west of Babkirk.

[118] The Tribunal is satisfied that it would not matter if the geographic scope of the relevant market actually includes additional customer locations in the Babkirk Polygon, beyond the Contestable Area, because CCS would remain the sole supplier of Secure Landfill services to any reasonably defined broader group of customers.

ISSUE 4 IS THE MERGER PRO-COMPETITIVE?

[119] CCS has suggested that the Merger is pro-competitive because it brings to the market a new Secure Landfill at the Babkirk Site. CCS further asserts that the Merger will most quickly transform the Babkirk Site into a Secure Landfill to complement CCS' existing business and serve the growing oil and gas industry in NEBC. CCS says that these facts explain its customers' failure to complain about the Merger.

[120] The Tribunal disagrees. In its view, a merger which prevents all actual or likely rivalry in a relevant market cannot be "pro-competitive," even if it expands market demand more quickly than might otherwise be the case. Such a merger might be efficiency-enhancing, as contemplated by the efficiency defence in section 96 of the Act. However, it has adverse consequences for the dynamic process of competition and the benefits that such process typically yields. In the absence of actual rivalry, or a very real and credible threat of future rivalry, meaningful competition does not exist.

ISSUE 5 WHAT IS THE ANALYTICAL FRAMEWORK IN A "PREVENT CASE?

[121] The "prevention" branch of section 92 was raised in three previous Tribunal cases: Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc. (1992), 43 C.P.R. (3d) 161 (Comp. Trib.), rev'd on other grounds (1995), 63 C.P.R. (3d) 1 (F.C.A.), rev'd, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748, Propane 1 and Canadian Waste Services. However, since those cases were primarily concerned with allegations involving a substantial lessening of competition, the Tribunal did not address in any detail the analytical framework applicable to the assessment of an alleged substantial prevention of competition.

[122] In determining whether competition is likely to be prevented, the Tribunal will assess whether a merger is more likely than not to maintain the ability of the merged entity to exercise greater market power than in the absence of the merger, acting alone or interdependently with one or more rivals. For the purposes of this case, this requires comparing a world in which CCS owns the relevant Secure Landfills in NEBC (i.e. Northern Rockies, Silverberry and Babkirk) with a world in which Babkirk is independently operated as a Secure Landfill.

[123] In assessing cases under the "prevent" branch of section 92, the Tribunal focuses on the new entry, or the increased competition from within the relevant market, that the Commissioner alleges was, or would be, prevented by the merger in question. In the case of a proposed merger, the Tribunal assesses whether it is likely that new entry or expansion would be sufficiently timely, and occur on a sufficient scale, to result in: (i) a material reduction of prices, or in a material increase in non-price competition, relative to prevailing price and non-price levels of competition, (ii) in a significant (i.e., non-trivial) part of the relevant market, and (iii) for a period of approximately two years. If so and if the entry or expansion likely would occur within a reasonable period of time, the Tribunal will conclude that the prevention of competition is likely to be substantial.

[124] The Tribunal also considers whether other firms would be likely to enter or expand on a scale similar to that which was prevented or forestalled by the merger, and in a similar timeframe. Where the Tribunal finds that such entry or expansion would probably occur, it is unlikely to conclude that the merger is likely to prevent competition substantially.

[125] As noted earlier and as recognized by all parties, the price against which the prevailing prices will be compared will be the price that would likely have existed in the absence of the merger. The burden will be on the Commissioner to demonstrate that price level, or the range of prices, that likely would have existed "but for" the merger.

[126] In final argument, the Commissioner and CCS suggested that helpful guidance on the approach that should be taken to prevention of competition cases can be provided by the U.S. jurisprudence pertaining to mergers that have been alleged to reduce potential competition. In the Tribunal's view, that jurisprudence is not particularly helpful to merger assessment under the Act, because it was developed in respect of a different statutory test and, for the most part, many years ago. (It appears that the US Supreme Court and the federal appellate courts have not had an opportunity to revisit that jurisprudence since the 1980s. See M. Sean Royall and Adam J. Di

ISSUE 6 IS THERE A SUBSTANTIAL PREVENTION OF COMPETITION?

A. The "But For" analysis

Introduction

[127] In Commissioner of Competition v. Canada Pipe Company Ltd., 2006 FCA 233, the Federal Court of Appeal decided that a "but for" analysis was the appropriate approach to take when considering whether, under paragraph 79(1)(c) of the Act, "…the practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially." The specific question to be asked is stated, as follows, at paragraph 38 of the decision "…would the relevant markets – in the past, present or future – be substantially more competitive but for the impugned practice of anti-competitive acts?"

[128] Language similar to that found in section 79 appears in section 92 of the Act. Section 92 says that an order may be made where "…the Tribunal finds that a merger or proposed merger prevents or lessens, or is likely to prevent or lessen competition substantially." For this reason, the parties and the Tribunal have determined that the "but for" approach is also appropriate for use in cases under section 92 of the Act. The parties recognize that the findings will be forward looking in nature and CCS has cautioned the Tribunal against unfounded speculation. With this background, we turn to the "but for" analysis.

[129] The discussion below will address the threshold issue of whether effective competition in the supply of Secure Landfill services in the Contestable Area identified by Dr. Kahwaty likely would have materialized in the absence of the Merger. Stated alternatively, would effective competition in the relevant market likely have emerged "but for" the Merger? After addressing this issue, the Tribunal will turn to the section 93 factors that are relevant in this case, as well as the issue of countervailing power.

[130] In undertaking the "but for" analysis, the Tribunal will consider the following questions:

(a) If the Merger had not occurred, what new competition, if any, would likely have emerged in the Contestable Area?
(b) If the Merger had not occurred, what would have been the likely scale of that new competition?
(c) If the Merger had not occurred, when would the new competition likely have entered the market?

[131] The Commissioner suggested that either June or July, 2010 be used as the timeframe for considering the "but for" world. CCS, on the other hand, was more precise and suggested that the relevant time for this purpose should be the end of July 2010, when CCS and Complete signed the letter of intent which led to the Merger. Since the parties have essentially agreed, the Tribunal will focus on the end of July.

[132] The Tribunal's view is that, as of the end of July 2010, there were only two realistic scenarios for the Babkirk Site absent the Merger. They were:

1. The Vendors would have sold to a waste company called Secure Energy Services Inc. ("SES"), which would have operated a Secure Landfill; or
2. The Vendors would have operated a bioremediation facility together with a half cell of Secure Landfill.

[133] Extensive evidence was adduced on these topics. The discussion below summarizes the most important aspects of that evidence.

Scenario #1 – A sale of Complete to SES

[134] In February of 2007 when the Vendors first met to organize Complete, they decided that their exit strategy would be to sell the company to Newalta Corporation or to CCS. Newalta is a waste company which operates Secure Landfills in Alberta. However, it was always the Vendors' intention to sell only when they could achieve an acceptable return on their investment.

[135] In November 2007, Canaccord Capital sent a four-person investment team to Fort St. John to investigate the purchase of a number of the Vendors' companies, including Complete. At that time, the Vendors' intentions about a sale of Complete were recorded in the company's minutes, which, among other things, stated:

> …consensus at Complete's meeting was to carry on the way we are going unless we are presented with a very attractive proposal from outside. We don't want to do all the work for the benefit of others – better to take a longer time, but to have higher rewards for ourselves…

[136] Subsequently, a Vision Statement, dated June 22, 2008, was prepared by Karen Baker. That document stated that they wanted to make a "good return on sale of company". The Statement also observed:

> The VISION of Complete Environmental Inc. is to become a diversified, highly efficient, environmental corporation in NEBC generating a high profit margin thus, presenting itself as an attractive acquisition to multiple potential purchasers.

[137] After Complete received its MOE Permit on February 26, 2010, Ken Watson's company, IRTL, offered to purchase Complete for [CONFIDENTIAL]. Before that offer was made, the Vendors had not been actively considering a sale. However, IRTL's offer spurred them to seriously consider the matter and, before they responded to IRTL's, they authorized Randy Wolsey to contact CCS and SES for expressions of interest.

[138] On March 23, 2010, Randy Wolsey spoke to SES but was told that it had no interest in making an offer because it was busy with its initial public share offering. However, SES did indicate a possible future interest and stated that it valued BLS at approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] in either mixed cash and shares or [CONFIDENTIAL] plus a share offering. In contrast, CCS expressed immediate interest and Dan Wallace of CCS verbally offered [CONFIDENTIAL] for BLS.

[139] The Vendors eventually decided to sell Complete to IRTL. However, IRTL's offer was withdrawn in early June 2010 after Ken Watson learned that, contrary to his expectations, Canaccord Capital would not finance IRTL's acquisition of Complete. After Cannacord declined, he did not have time to arrange alternative financing.

[140] According to Karen Baker, after IRTL's offer was withdrawn, the Vendors decided to try to sell Complete one last time. They concluded that, if they did not receive an interesting offer, they would operate the Babkirk Facility themselves. This would involve moving forward with an operating plan and constructing a half cell of Secure Landfill. To ascertain if a sale was possible, Randy Wolsey was again asked to contact CCS and SES. In addition, he was asked to contact Newalta. He did so, but Newalta did not respond to his email.

[141] At about that time, Dan Wallace of CCS apparently heard that IRTL's offer had fallen through and sent Randy Wolsey an email asking if CCS could renew its earlier offer. Mr. Wolsey responded by offering to sell BLS for [CONFIDENTIAL]. On June 22, 2010, CCS agreed to purchase the shares of BLS for that amount.

[142] Inexplicably, Randy Wolsey did not tell the other Vendors about his deal with CCS. Instead, he arranged a meeting with SES (the "Meeting"). It was held on June 29, 2010 and was attended by Rene Amirault, President and CEO of SES, Dan Steinke, SES' Vice-President of Business Development, and Corey Higham, SES' Business Development Representative (the "SES Group").

[143] According to the Vendors, the SES Group spent much of the Meeting giving a presentation to show that SES was an attractive investment. An SES brochure prepared for potential investors was used for this purpose. However, the Vendors were not interested in acquiring shares of SES and they testified that no price for BLS or Complete was ever suggested and no offer was discussed.

[144] According to Mr. Amirault, he indicated during the Meeting that an all cash offer could be made. The Vendors denied this. Since this evidence is significant and was not included in Mr. Amirault's witness statement, the Tribunal has concluded an all cash offer was not mentioned and that the Vendors understood that SES would only purchase Complete if it could use its shares to finance part of the purchase price.

[145] During the Meeting, the SES Group had questions about how to secure the necessary regulatory approvals to allow SES to expand the permitted capacity of the Babkirk Facility and to upgrade the design of the Secure Landfill cells (the "Questions"). The Vendors could not answer the Questions and Mr. Amirault testified that he asked for and was refused permission to speak to Del Reinheimer about the Questions. However, some Vendors could not remember anyone from the SES Group asking for permission to speak to Del Reinheimer about the Questions and other Vendors denied that anyone asked for such permission at that time. Mr. Reinheimer was the Section Head, Environmental Management in the Environmental Protection Division of the MOE.

[146] Mr. Amirault stated that following the Meeting, SES was actively interested in purchasing Complete and gave the following reasons to explain its failure to make an offer or submit a letter of intent in July 2010:

- The Questions had to be answered before a price could be established.
- There was no particular urgency about making an offer because there were no other buyers. Mr. Amirault testified that the Vendors had indicated at the Meeting that Complete had promised a First Nation that it would not sell to CCS and the SES Group knew that Newalta was not interested.

[147] Mr. Amirault acknowledged that the Questions were about process i.e. "how to" go about getting approvals for increased permitted capacity and enhanced cell design. He also stated that he had no doubt that the approvals would be forthcoming. In these circumstances and because, as described below, SES was actively engaged in the development of another Secure Landfill, it is the Tribunal's view that SES would have known what it needed to spend to increase the permitted capacity and upgrade the landfill cells at the Babkirk Site. Accordingly, the Tribunal does not accept Mr. Amirault's evidence that SES could not establish a purchase price without the answers to the Questions.

[148] There is a dispute about whether, on July 6, 2010, Corey Higham sent Ron Baker an email setting out the Questions which had been discussed at the Meeting. Mr. Amirault stated in hearsay evidence in his witness statement that Corey Higham had told him that the email had been sent. A photocopy of that alleged email was appended to Mr. Amirault's witness statement. However, after Ron Baker made a witness statement stating that he did not recall having received the email, no reply evidence was filed by Corey Higham to say that it had, in fact, been sent. The email is an important document to the extent that it evidences an ongoing interest by SES in receiving answers to the Questions. However, given that it was not properly adduced, the Tribunal gives it no weight.

[149] As mentioned above, Mr. Amirault testified that Ron Baker told the SES Group during the Meeting that he had promised a First Nation that the Vendors would not sell the Babkirk Facility to CCS. This meant that SES understood that the Vendors were not likely to receive a competing offer. However, this apparently significant detail did not appear in Mr. Amirault's witness statement and was not referred to in his examination-in-chief. It was mentioned for the first time in answer to a question posed by the Tribunal. For this reason, this evidence is not accepted as an explanation for SES' failure to show a more active interest in purchasing Complete.

[150] Mr. Amirault acknowledged that the window for undertaking construction in 2010 "…was closing, closing fast" and that SES wanted to begin construction at Babkirk at the end of August or by mid-September at the latest. This meant that, if SES had been actively interested in acquiring Complete, it would have moved quickly to present the Vendors with a letter of intent. Mr. Amirault also testified that, apart from updating its earlier market study of the Babkirk Facility, no further due diligence was required. In addition, he testified that he did not need the approval of his Board of Directors to deliver a letter of intent. In these circumstances, the Tribunal has concluded that SES' failure to follow up more quickly on its meeting with the Vendors and its failure to demonstrate any interest in making an offer at that time are attributable to a lack of active interest in acquiring BLS in July 2010.

[151] Ron Baker recalls that he was called by Corey Higham on July 28, 2010. However, Mr. Baker does not remember what Mr. Higham said during that telephone call. Since Corey Higham did not give evidence, the Tribunal considers it fair to assume that he did not make an offer to purchase Complete or propose a letter of intent. Although Mr. Baker does not recall much of his own side of the conversation, he does remember telling Mr. Higham that Complete had just signed a letter of intent with CCS.

[152] The Tribunal considers it noteworthy that, since 2007, SES had been developing a new Secure Landfill called Heritage. It was located approximately 153 km south of the Babkirk Site. However, it was not favourably received during public consultations because it was to be located near a populated area and on a site where a landslide had occurred. Corey Higham of SES was told on July 26, 2010 that the EA's review of the Heritage Project had been "suspended" pending further evidence from SES about the suitability of the site. SES eventually abandoned the project in December of 2010.

[153] Based on this evidence, the Tribunal has concluded that SES had an ongoing general interest in the Babkirk Facility. It had spoken to Murray Babkirk when he owned BLS and it had indicated possible future interest when Randy Wolsey contacted it in March of 2010. SES also sent its most senior executive to the Meeting in June 2010. However, the Tribunal has also concluded that SES was not actively interested in a purchase in July 2010. It never discussed a potential price, and, although it asked the Questions, the answers were not crucial to setting the price and SES already knew that it would be granted the additional approvals it sought. Finally, although Mr. Amirault testified that there was no due diligence of any consequence to be undertaken, SES did not send a letter of intent and there are no internal SES documents showing that it was preparing to make an offer. The Tribunal has concluded that SES' failure to take a more active interest in purchasing Babkirk is explained by the fact that it was still giving priority to its project at the Heritage site. This is understandable, since it had already invested three years and approximately $1.3 million in developing the project.

[154] In all these circumstances, the Tribunal has concluded, on a balance of probabilities, that SES likely would not have made an acceptable offer for Complete by the end of July 2010 or at any time in the summer of 2010 and that the Vendors would have moved forward with their own plans to develop the Babkirk Facility.

Scenario #2 – The Vendors Operate Babkirk

[155] The Vendors' position is that Complete was created to purchase BLS and to operate a bioremediation facility on the Babkirk Site. They assert that their plan was to accept only Hazardous Waste contaminated with light-end hydrocarbons which could be treated using bioremediation.

[156] However, the Vendors recognized that bioremediation might sometimes fail and that they might be left with clumps of contaminated soil ("Hot Spots") after the surrounding waste had been successfully treated. The Vendors understood that the contaminated soil would have to be placed in a Secure Landfill before the remaining soil could be tested and de-listed as non-hazardous waste.

[157] To enable BLS to permanently dispose of the contaminated soil from the Hot Spots and to attract customers to the Babkirk Facility, the Vendors proposed to construct a Secure Landfill on the Babkirk Site, which they described as "incidental" to their treatment operation. This meant that only soil that was not successfully treated using bioremediation would be moved into the Secure Landfill. The Tribunal will give this meaning to the term "Incidental" in the context of the Vendors' Secure Landfill in the balance of this decision.

[158] The Commissioner denies that the Vendors' Secure Landfill was only to be used on an Incidental basis. She maintains that the Vendors always intended to accept and directly and permanently dispose of all types of Hazardous Waste in their Secure Landfill. We will refer to this business model as a "Full Service" Secure Landfill. To support her position, the Commissioner relies, in part, on the documents used to obtain the EA Certificate and the MOE Permit. These documents will be described collectively as the Regulatory Approval Documents ("RADs"). As discussed below, the RADs clearly indicate that a Secure Landfill was to be opened on the Babkirk Site. The Commissioner also relies on the Draft Operations Plans (the "Operations Plan") for the Babkirk Site, which show that a Full Service Secure Landfill was planned.

[159] Finally, the Commissioner relies on statements in a variety of documents which she asserts reflect that the Vendors intended to compete with CCS. She submits that references in those documents to competing with CCS meant operating the Babkirk Facility as a Full Service Secure Landfill.

The Vendors' Documents

[160] The Vendors explained that they needed an EA Certificate and an MOE Permit for a Secure Landfill in order to accept Hazardous Waste of any kind for any type of treatment at the Babkirk Facility. However, they also stated that neither document required them to operate on a Full Service basis. In other words, although they were entitled to do so, they were not required to accept all types of Hazardous Waste for direct disposal. Instead, they were free to operate an "Incidental" Secure Landfill.

[161] The Vendors ask the Tribunal to focus on the documents which were prepared when Complete was being incorporated and when the MOE Permit was finally granted, as the best evidence of their intention, which they say was to use the Secure Landfill on the Babkirk Site only as Incidental to their bioremediation. The five documents in this category will be described as the "Vendors' Documents". We will deal with them in turn below.

[162] Minutes of a meeting that Randy Wolsey and Ken Watson attended with Del Reinheimer and other MOE and EAO officials on January 24, 2007. The minutes state:

> Ken [Watson] discussed the remediation side of the facility's operations, which will continue even after (if) the landfill is constructed. He stated that he has had interest expressed from companies who wish to pursue remediation as well as landfilling. Ken outlined some of the practices and equipment currently used in other operations with which he is involved, and showed some pictures and videos of the equipment (e.g. ALLU AS 38 composting machine) in action.
> Ken and Randy stated that their intention would be to have an ALLU AS 38 kept at the facility full-time. They cited that it would be capable of processing up to about 25,000m per day of Peace River region clay.

[163] In his testimony, Mr. Reinheimer agreed that his understanding was that the Vendors were going to operate a bioremediation facility and that it was an open question whether or not the Secure Landfill, for which application had been made, would ever be built. In the Tribunal's view, this evidence supports the Incidental nature of the Secure Landfill.

[164] Minutes of a Newco meeting dated in February 2007. These minutes record the Vendors' vision for their new business, which was to become Complete. The minutes make no mention of a Secure Landfill at the Babkirk Site. They speak only of processing waste. The document also describes CNRL and Petro-Canada as customers for treatment and indicates that Petro-Canada has been interested for years. In context, it is clear that Petro-Canada's interest was in bioremediation. The fact that a Secure Landfill is not mentioned even though the application for its approval was already underway, strongly suggests that it was to play an Incidental role in Complete's business at the Babkirk Site.

> Newco name should be "Environmental Services Co." not "Waste Management (Facility) Co." Services to be offered by Newco were suggested to include drilling for sites in the 115 area, remediation on clients' sites, excavation at client sites, and processing at 115 landfill. We could also coordinate the trucking to haul clients' contaminated dirt that we would excavate at client sites to Mile 115 for processing, although we would not own such trucks.
> The Target Market would be environmental engineering companies and end-user oil and gas companies such as PetroCanada and CNRL. It would be good if we could get a letter from PetroCan/Matrix regarding the potential amount of work. Our services are needed – PetroCan has been interested for years now. This should be a "Market Pull" rather than "Product Push" situation.

> There would considerable landfill preparation at Mile 115 [the Babkirk Site]. Randy suggested Tom would probably like to be involved here with heavy equipment operation. We expect to have the permit by Nov 1/07. It would probably take 1 year for money to come in from sales for the landfill itself since we have to build the cells.

[166] The Tribunal has studied the final passage quoted above and has concluded that, although the term "landfill" is used, the topic under discussion was actually bioremediation and the Vendors' plan to sell the successfully treated soil.

[167] A diagram outlining Newco's operation. This document shows how Complete's treatment facility on the Babkirk Site would complement other businesses operated by the Vendors. The diagram does not refer to the existence of a Secure Landfill. This omission also suggests that a Secure Landfill was not a significant part of Complete's business or of the Vendors' plan to integrate a number of their businesses.

[168] Minutes of January 20, 2010. This document describes a meeting that Ken Watson and Ron Baker attended with Del Reinheimer and other officials from the MOE to discuss the Vendors' plans for the Babkirk Site. By this time, Complete owned Babkirk and had received the EA Certificate. The issuance of the MOE Permit for the Secure Landfill was the next step. The relevant portions of the minutes read as follows:

> Ken [Watson] and Ron [Baker] both stressed that although they would rather not use Babkirk as a Landfill but as a treatment facility, industry demands that Babkirk is Permitted as a Secure Landfill prior to transporting materials to or using Babkirk in any way. The term "Secure" appears to be of utmost importance to all major oil and gas companies.
> - Although Del [Reinheimer of the MOE] didn't understand why industry perceives as such, he realized the concern.
> - He stated that even though the Permit may be approved, operation of a Secure Landfill may not begin until the Operating Plan is also approved and the landfill has been constructed.
> - Ken and Ron agreed it is rather the perception of the word "Secure" that is required at this time to entice clients, than the use of an actual operating landfill.
> - Ken suggested that prior to approved Secure Landfill operations, unacceptable material could be sent to CCS (small amount around contamination source) and the remainder could be accepted at Babkirk.
> All agreed construction of the landfill is to commence within 2 years of Permit issuance; and that the Landfill Operating Plan must be completed prior to construction but the issuance of the Permit itself is not affected by the existence or not of the Operating Plan.

> Ron [Baker] suggested that the Permit read that the construction phase of the landfill be completed in small segments of a ½ cell over a period of time rather than the construction of a full ½ cell at one time (as suggested by Reg).

[169] In the Tribunal's view, there are several reasons why this document indicates that the Secure Landfill at the Babkirk Site was to be Incidental. First, Ron Baker was suggesting that even a half cell was not needed and proposed that smaller segments be constructed. This approach makes sense only if the Secure Landfill was to be Incidental. No one intending to compete with CCS' Full Service Secure Landfill at Silverberry would contemplate the construction of a small segment of a half cell.

[170] Second, the Incidental nature of the Secure Landfill is disclosed when Ken Watson suggested that, before the Secure Landfill was operational at Babkirk, unacceptable material could be moved to CCS. The interesting point is that the unacceptable material is not material delivered by waste generators for direct disposal into the Secure Landfill at the Babkirk Site. Rather, it is only the "small amount around [the] contamination source" or, in other words, the material around Hot Spots. Once again, this confirms that the Vendors' intention was that their Secure Landfill would only be used on an Incidental basis.

[171] Minutes dated March 20, 2010. These minutes reflect the Vendors' thinking in response to the offer to purchase that they received from IRTL. The minutes indicate that, at that time, they believed they had the following three options:

1. Operate start first secure cell and bioremediate [inc salt];
2. Bioremediate without cell;
3. Sell ???

The Minutes also stated:

> "Need 12 month season to see how well bioremediation works."

[172] The Vendors ask the Tribunal to note that this evidence all predates CCS' purchase of Complete and the Commissioner's interest in the Merger. The Vendors also submit that their evidence at the hearing was consistent with their intention to operate only an Incidental Secure Landfill. Both the proposed manager of the Babkirk Facility (Randy Wolsey) and the man who would be in charge of daily operations (Ken Watson) testified that the only waste they intended to accept at Babkirk was waste which could be bioremediated.

The RADs

[173] There are numerous RADs, however, those which are particularly relevant are: the "Terms of Reference" dated August 29, 2007; the "Application for an Environmental Assessment Certificate" dated February 11, 2008; the "Babkirk Secure Landfill Project Assessment Report" dated November 12, 2008; and a "BC Information Bulletin" dated December 9, 2008.

[174] The first significant RAD is the Terms of Reference for the Babkirk Secure Landfill Project. It was approved by the EAO on August 29, 2007.

> The Proponent [Murray Babkirk] has experienced a considerable decline in the amount of waste brought to the existing facility for storage and treatment since the approval of the Silverberry Secure Landfill Facility application (north of Fort St. John, B.C.) as understandably, direct disposal forms a more cost effective option for clients than treatment and disposal. The conversion of the existing facility from a purely Short-term Storage and Treatment Facility to a Secure Landfill and Short-term Storage and Treatment Facility will allow fair competition between the Proponent and Silverberry facilities in providing responsible waste management solutions for local industry.
>
> This section will provide:
>
> □ a list of the materials to be accepted at the Project for disposal;
> □ a general description of the criteria that will be used to determine whether contaminated soil will be disposed of directly into the secure landfill or treated by bioremediation;
> […]

[176] This document suggests that the proposed facility on the Babkirk Site would accept Hazardous Waste for direct disposal into the Secure Landfill and that the Secure Landfill was being developed so that the Babkirk Site could compete with CCS at Silverberry. This document was first drafted by SNCL on the instructions of Murray Babkirk, who was effectively the proponent, since, with his wife, he owned BLS. However, as discussed below, some of the Vendors later reviewed it and they did not suggest changes to reflect their intention to operate only an Incidental Secure Landfill. Since the further RADs contain similar language, it is not necessary to describe them in detail. The Tribunal is satisfied that they all indicate that there would be a Full Service Secure Landfill on the Babkirk Site.

[177] It is clear that some of the Vendors were, in Karen Baker's words, "integrally involved" during the regulatory process leading to the EA Certificate. Some attended and assisted with information sessions, consultation meetings, and presentations to First Nations; some were included in correspondence regarding the EA Certificate; some participated directly in drafting or reviewing some of the RADs; and some assisted the Babkirks with technical matters. The Vendors also advanced funds which the Babkirks were able to use to finance the environmental assessment process and pay the fees charged by SNCL. This financial support totalled approximately $300,000 and was deducted from the purchase price that Complete eventually paid the Babkirks for the BLS shares. In all these circumstances, the Commissioner submits that the RADs reflect the Vendors' true intentions.

[178] However, the Vendors state that while the RADs authorized the construction of a Full Service Secure Landfill, they say nothing about the Vendors' intentions. Mr. Baker explained that, as far as the Vendors were concerned, as long as they had an approval for a Secure Landfill, no one would complain if they chose to operate it on an Incidental basis. He also stated that, if they had asked to amend the Terms of Reference, which is clearly the document on which the later RADs were based, it would have slowed down the approval process for changes that, in the Vendors' opinion, were unnecessary.

[179] The Tribunal has concluded that this explanation is reasonable and that it underpins Mr. Baker's response when he was asked why the Vendors didn't correct the Terms of Reference to reflect their intention to operate an Incidental Secure Landfill. He testified:

> […] There was nothing in it that was that onerous to us or important to us to warrant changing.

[180] In view of this explanation and in view of the Vendors' Documents which, starting in January 2007, consistently show that their plan was to operate an Incidental Secure Landfill, the Tribunal concludes that, although the RADs accurately described what could be offered at the Babkirk Facility, they did not accurately reflect the Vendors' intentions.

The Operations Plan

[181] The Vendors never completed an Operations Plan for the Secure Landfill on the Babkirk Site.

[182] The first Operations Plan was prepared by SNCL. An early and incomplete draft of that document is dated January 9, 2008. The evidence showed that a revision was prepared in December 2008. The Tribunal is satisfied that both versions provided in several places that the Secure Landfill could be operated on a Full Service basis. For example:

> […] The addition of secure landfill capabilities to this facility would allow for direct disposal in addition to treatment and remediation of contaminated soil. This addition would allow the Babkirk facility to compete with the nearby Silverberry Secure Landfill facilities. The proposed facilities would be contained entirely within the footprint of the former facilities.

[183] Mr. Baker's evidence was that the Vendors worked directly with SNCL on the Operations Plan and that they had worked "quite a little bit" on revisions to the first draft. However, he testified that when the Vendors reviewed the revised version they were not satisfied and decided to prepare their own plan. He added that writing a new plan would have taken "months" of work.

[184] However, other evidence makes it clear that the Vendors did not pursue the idea of rewriting the Operations Plan. Minutes of Complete's meeting, which Ron Baker attended in March 2010, show that the Vendors then thought that it was "mostly in order" and that only a couple of weeks were needed to put it in final form for the MOE. Minutes of a later meeting in May 2010 suggest that the Operations Plan needed "4-5 days work".

[185] Mr. Baker acknowledged that he understood the Operations Plan to be saying that waste generators could directly and finally dispose of untreatable Hazardous Waste into the Secure Landfill at the Babkirk Site. In this regard, the transcript of his cross-examination at p. 1212 reads:

> Mr. Iatrou: So you would accept waste. Some of it might be highly contaminated, not really treatable. That would stay in [the secure landfill], but the stuff that could be treated would come out of that cell as capacity and the bioremediation cell was freed up?
> Mr. Baker: That's correct.

[186] However, a review of Mr. Baker's entire cross-examination on the Operations Plan reveals, in the Tribunal's view, that when he gave that answer, he was not saying that the Vendors intended to operate a Full Service Secure Landfill. Rather, he was describing what was possible under the plan. This difference becomes clear in the following exchange:

> Mr. Iatrou: You would accept the same sort of material that you could take to Silverberry?
>
> Mr. Baker: Yes, correct. We could accept it. Our plan was not to accept the type of soil that can only go to Silverberry, if you get my drift here. I suppose I have to explain that slightly.

[187] Towards the end of his cross-examination, Mr. Baker began to answer questions from the Vendors' perspective. For example, when asked about the section of the Operations Plan that spoke about closing secure cells once they were filled, he stated "This was the concept, that if we ever got around to using the Secure Landfill section of our facility…" [our emphasis].

[188] And at the end of his examination, when asked whether or not all three secure cells had to be built at once, Mr. Baker said "No, no, no. This whole idea of graded construction was that we – our intention half of one cell and never have to do anything further. That was our intention. We would store so little of this landfillable material in that portion of a cell that it would last us the lifetime of our interest in this operation." [our emphasis].

[189] In the Tribunal's view, it is clear that the Vendors' approach to the Operations Plan was the same as it had been to the RADs. A plan that permitted the direct disposal of Hazardous Waste did not oblige the Vendors to accept it. It is obvious to the Tribunal that, from the early days of Newco in 2007, the Vendors wanted to make the Babkirk Facility as attractive as possible for sale and this meant that it had to be capable of being operated as a Full Service Secure Landfill. However, this does not mean that the Vendors intended to operate the Babkirk Facility in that manner given their long expressed preference for a bioremediation facility with an Incidental Secure Landfill.

Was Babkirk Going to Compete with CCS?

[190] The Commissioner also relies on what she describes as the Vendors' expressed intention to compete with CCS to support her allegation that Complete was poised to operate a Full Service Secure Landfill at the Babkirk Site. The statements on which she relies are found in the RADs, the Operations Plan and in Complete's minutes.

[191] There is no doubt that, in 2006 when the Babkirks approached SNCL to work on documents for the EA Certificate, they intended to operate a Full Service Secure Landfill on the Babkirk Site once the approvals were in place. As noted earlier, the original project description prepared by SNCL makes this clear when it says:

> The Proponent [BLS owned by the Babkirks] has reportedly experienced a considerable decline in his soil storage and treatment business since the approval of the Silverberry Secure Landfill Facility application (north of Fort St. John, BC) as understandably, direct disposal forms a more cost effective option for clients than treatment and disposal. The conversion of the existing facility from a purely Short-term Storage and Treatment Facility to a Secure Landfill and Short-term Storage and Treatment Facility will allow fair competition between the Proponent and Silverberry facilities in providing responsible waste management solutions for local industry.

[192] This language is repeated in the Terms of Reference and the point is made even more clearly in the application for the EA Certificate. It states that the proposed facility would allow the proponent to provide "market competition for direct disposal of waste soil" and speaks of the Babkirk Facility being in "direct competition" with CCS at Silverberry.

[193] The Vendors' Operations Plan also mentions that the Secure Landfill has been added to the Babkirk Site to allow it to compete with Silverberry and, in the Vision Statement she wrote for Newco, which is attached to minutes dated June 22, 2008, Karen Baker stated that the Vendors wanted Complete "…to become the Number One Competitor to the industry leader [CCS/Newalta]".

[194] In his cross-examination at the hearing, Randy Wolsey acknowledged an intention to compete with CCS. However, he testified that while landfilling and competing with Silverberry was “going to happen”, it would be on a “very different scale” because the Vendors were going to supply a “brand new service”.

[195] Mr. Baker also acknowledged in his testimony that the Vendors did intend to compete with CCS and others, but not on price. He stated that they were going to compete by offering a service that was different from anything offered by CCS or Newalta.

[196] The Tribunal has concluded that Complete intended to “compete” with Silverberry by offering a new bioremediation service, and that its statements about competition were not intended to mean that the Vendors planned to operate a Full Service Secure Landfill on the Babkirk Site.

Conclusions

[197] If the Merger had not occurred, it is the Tribunal’s view that, at the end of July 2010, in the absence of a letter of intent from SES, the Vendors would have proceeded to develop the Babkirk Facility. This would have involved:

- Completing the Operations Plan;
- Securing the MOE’s approval for the Operations Plan;
- Constructing a half cell of Secure Landfill capacity i.e. 125,000 tonnes; and
- Accepting Hazardous Waste for bioremediation and moving waste that could not be successfully bioremediated into the Incidental Secure Landfill.

[198] Although there was evidence to suggest that the Vendors might have decided to start accepting waste for bioremediation without any Secure Landfill capacity, the Tribunal has concluded that the Vendors would likely have built their half cell of Secure Landfill as soon as possible for two reasons. First, the Vendors told Del Reinheimer of the MOE on January 20, 2010 about the importance customers placed on having Secure Landfill capacity available. Indeed, Petro-Canada had refused to deliver waste for bioremediation until the Vendors opened a Secure Landfill. Second, Ken Watson testified that the plan was to store in the Secure Landfill all waste that was awaiting treatment. Presumably, this storage capacity would have been needed as soon as the business started in earnest.

[199] The Tribunal has also concluded that it is more likely than not that the Vendors would have had an approved operations plan by the end of October 2010 and that the three months of preparatory work, which Ken Watson testified was needed before the Babkirk Facility could accept waste, would have been substantially completed by the end of October 2010.

[200] This means that in the spring of 2011, the Vendors would have been able to accept waste for bioremediation. However, since generators had advised that they would not tip until a Secure Landfill was available, it is unlikely that any meaningful quantity of waste would have been delivered. Construction of the half cell of Incidental Secure Landfill would have begun as soon as the construction season opened in June 2011. Accordingly, given that the evidence showed that the construction would take three or four months, the Tribunal has concluded that the Babkirk Facility would have been fully operational by October 2011.

[201] The evidence establishes that the Vendors felt that a twelve month period was needed to see how well bioremediation would work. The Tribunal therefore considers it reasonable to project that the Vendors would have carried on with bioremediation as their principal focus through the fall of 2012. However, the Tribunal has also concluded that, notwithstanding Ken Watson's contacts and his experience with bioremediation, the Vendors' bioremediation business would have been unprofitable for the reasons discussed below.

[202] There would have been few if any customers for two reasons. First, while the evidence showed that there is a significant amount of treatable soil on drilling sites in the area around the Babkirk Facility, the bioremediation that presently occurs is done by generators on their own sites. There was no evidence that any companies are paying to transport waste to offsite bioremediation facilities in NEBC. Although Ken Watson testified that he expected that CNRL, Encana, and Bonavista would be interested in disposing of their waste in this fashion and, although Petro-Canada had been interested, the Vendors did not call evidence from any prospective customers to say that they would be prepared to truck their waste to the Babkirk Facility for bioremediation. Further, the Vendors provided the Commissioner with a list of potential customers and [CONFIDENTIAL] was first on that list. However, Mr. [CONFIDENTIAL], Vice-President, Operations at [CONFIDENTIAL], testified for the Commissioner that [CONFIDENTIAL] philosophy is "going to landfill". In other words, his company was not a significant potential customer for the Vendors' bioremediation facility.

[203] Second, the Vendors testified that the Tipping Fees they would charge for bioremediation would be significantly higher than Silverberry's Tipping Fees for Secure Landfill services. It is difficult to imagine that generators with waste that could be bioremediated on their own sites would pay large sums to transport their Hazardous Waste to Babkirk and tip there at rates higher than those at Silverberry, given that they could continue to bioremediate on their own sites or tip for less at Silverberry.

[204] Further, there was no evidence from any potential purchasers who might have bought treated waste from Complete for use as cover for municipal dumps or as backfill for excavations. It does not appear that any such sales would have been available to generate revenue for Complete.

[205] It is not clear how long the Vendors would have been prepared to operate on an unprofitable basis, without beginning to accept more waste at the Secure Landfill part of the Babkirk Facility. In their final written submissions, the Vendors ask the Tribunal to assume that they would have incurred losses for two years before they decided that their venture had failed.

[206] However, the Tribunal has concluded that, because there was no evidence that the Vendors have deep pockets or significant borrowing power, it is unreasonable to suppose that they would have been prepared to operate unprofitably beyond the fall of 2012, when they could have generated additional revenues by accepting more waste into the Secure Landfill part of their facility.

[207] Accordingly, it is the Tribunal's view that the Vendors would have started to operate a Full Service Secure Landfill at least by the spring of 2013. In other words, they would have begun to accept significant quantities of Hazardous Waste for direct disposal into Babkirk's Secure Landfill, in competition with CCS. In the alternative, they would have sold Complete or BLS to a purchaser which would have operated a Full Service Secure Landfill. Given that the Vendors had a valuable and scarce asset and given the evidence that demand for Secure Landfill services has, for some time, been projected to increase as new drilling is undertaken in the area north and west of Babkirk, the Tribunal is satisfied that such a sale would have been readily available to the Vendors. Finally, whether Babkirk was operated by the Vendors or a new owner, Babkirk and Silverberry would have become direct and serious competitors by no later than the spring of 2013.

[208] We have reached this conclusion notwithstanding CCS' submission that the Vendors' lack of experience and the smaller capacity of the Babkirk Facility would have constrained it from functioning as a serious competitor. In our view, as they had done in the past when they retained IRTL, the Vendors would have hired experts, if needed, to redress their lack of expertise. Moreover, 750,000 tonnes of permitted capacity was sufficient to allow the Vendors or a purchaser to compete effectively with CCS at Silverberry.

[209] To summarize, the Tribunal has decided that it is likely that the Vendors would have operated a bioremediation treatment facility with an Incidental Secure Landfill for approximately one year from October 2011 to October 2012 (the "Initial Operating Period"). Thereafter, in the spring of 2013, the Babkirk Facility would have become a Full Service Secure Landfill.

[210] Turning to the impact of these developments, it is the Tribunal's view that, as soon as the half cell of the Secure Landfill capacity at the Babkirk Facility was operational in October of 2011, waste generators who tipped at Silverberry would have seen that there was a potential alternative to Silverberry at the Babkirk Facility. The Tribunal cannot predict what would actually have happened. However, we can reasonably expect that, during the Initial Operating Period, some generators of Hazardous Waste would have asked the Vendors to take their waste for direct disposal, if only to use the possibility of disposing at Babkirk as a basis for negotiating lower Tipping Fees at Silverberry. This would have been possible because many oil and gas producers have one year non-exclusive contracts with CCS.

[211] As well, given that the Vendors would have needed revenue and given that it might have been convenient for some of their customers, it is reasonable to assume that the Vendors would have accepted at least some Hazardous Waste for direct disposal during the Initial Operating Period, in spite of their evidence that this was not their intention. This possibility was foreseen by Ron Baker when, in his cross-examination, he was asked about the decision matrix in the Operations Plan which reflected that soil which arrived and could not be bioremediated would be landfilled with other soil that could not be bioremediated. He said that, "if we had room", "chances are" such soil would be put in the Secure Landfill.

[212] The question is whether this competition afforded by Babkirk in the Initial Operating Period can be considered substantial. In Director of Investigation and Research v. Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. (1997), 73 C.P.R. (3d) 1, the Tribunal addressed the question of the potential importance of a small amount of competition, in the course of examining the impact on Yellow Pages consultants of Tele-Direct's discriminatory anti-competitive practices. In that case, the Tribunal was considering whether there had been a substantial lessening of competition.

[213] The Tribunal heard evidence that consultants, who charged fees to place Yellow Pages advertisements, had lost time and money and that their ability to attract new customers had been damaged by Tele-Direct's conduct. The Tribunal also found that, although the consultants only occupied a small segment of the market and had a limited and fragile ability to compete with Tele-Direct, they had had a significant positive influence on the level of service Tele-Direct provided to customers who were purchasing yellow pages advertisements. In this context the Tribunal stated at paragraph 758:

> Where a firm with a high degree of market power [Tele-Direct] is found to have engaged in anti-competitive conduct, smaller impacts on competition resulting from that conduct will meet the test of being "substantial" than where the market situation was less uncompetitive to begin with. In these circumstances, particularly Tele-Direct's overwhelming market power, even a small impact on the volume of consultants' business, of which there is some evidence, by the anti-competitive acts must be considered substantial.

[214] In contrast, in this case, the Tribunal has concluded that the competition offered by the Babkirk Facility in the Initial Operating Period would likely have had no material, let alone significant, impact on pricing at Silverberry, because any competition would have been offered on an extremely small scale. In our view, during the Initial Operating Period, Silverberry could have ignored any requests by customers for lower prices because the Babkirk Facility would not have been a viable alternative for the volumes of Hazardous Waste oil and gas producers tipped at Silverberry. This means that the prevention of any competition that would have developed in the Initial Operating Period would not have been "substantial".

[215] Turning to the spring of 2013, the competition that would have been offered by Babkirk as a Full Service Secure Landfill would have been direct and substantial and, as discussed below, it is this competition that was substantially prevented by the Merger.

B. What are the Relevant Assessment Factors?

Conditions of Entry

[216] The conditions of entry into a relevant market can be a decisive factor in the Tribunal's assessment of whether a merger is likely to prevent or lessen competition substantially. This is because, "[i]n the absence of significant entry barriers it is unlikely that a merged firm, regardless of market share or concentration, could maintain supra-competitive pricing for any length of time"( Hillsdown, above, at 324; see also Propane 1, above, at para. 127).

[217] To be effective, entry must be timely, likely and sufficient to ensure that any prevention of future competition will not be substantial.

[218] CCS maintains that the evidence in this case is that the Secure Landfill business is not characterized by significant entry barriers and that the conditions for entry are conducive for potential competitors. In this regard, CCS asserts that (i) the regulatory regime is permissive, as evidenced by the fact that a number of permits to operate a Secure Landfill have been granted in NEBC in recent years, (ii) there is a growing market in the NEBC region for oil and gas drilling and related services, coupled with a growing demand and pressure for socially responsible waste management alternatives, and (iii) the industry practice of engaging in short-term contracts is conducive to entry. CCS further asserts that the Commissioner's reliance on the fact that BLS took nearly four years to obtain its Secure Landfill permit is misplaced, most importantly because BLS did not pursue concurrent permitting. Concurrent permitting allows an applicant to pursue applications for EA Certificates and an MOE Permits (together the "Authorizations") in tandem. CCS also asserts that entry is much less time consuming if a remote area near Babkirk is selected. Thus, attempts to develop secure landfills in populated areas around Dawson Creek should not be accepted as precedents for the timing that entry might involve near Babkirk.

[219] Among other things, prior to seeking the Authorizations, a new entrant must spend several months selecting a site from among various potential sites. This involves drilling test holes to determine whether the site's subsurface characteristics are appropriate for Secure Landfilling. If so, a further assessment is undertaken which involves drilling multiple test holes and installing monitoring equipment. There is no evidence about the time needed to complete only a site selection. However, [CONFIDENTIAL] spent 15 to 18 months on site selection and the preparation of an application for a potential landfill.

[220] Once a potential entrant has completed the site selection described above, it must then obtain the required Authorizations. The evidence is that this process would likely take at least 18-24 months and that a further 3 to 4 months are needed for construction.

[221] Notwithstanding the time and money ($1.3 million) it spent during the development process, as described earlier, SES abandoned its plans to open the Heritage landfill and, after spending $885,000.00, CCS abandoned its proposed Sunrise Landfill in NEBC, due to opposition from local residents. These two incidents of site abandonment by knowledgeable industry participants underscore the risk and uncertainty associated with new entry, as well as the "sunk" nature of the entry costs in the event that an entry initiative is unsuccessful.

[222] Based on this evidence, the Tribunal has concluded that, even in a remote location and even with concurrent permitting, it would take a new entrant at least 30 months to complete the process of selecting a new site, obtaining the required Authorizations and constructing a new Secure Landfill. That said, the Tribunal notes that there is no evidence of any proposed entry in the Contestable Area.

Absence of Acceptable Substitutes/Effective Remaining Competition

[223] For the reasons given earlier, the Tribunal is satisfied that, for some product and for some generators, bioremediation does not compete in the same market as the supply of Secure Landfill services and does not exercise any constraining influence on price or non-price competition within the latter market.

[225] Dr. Baye provided extensive evidence with respect to CCS' alleged ability to price discriminate in order to show that it had market power. However, given the foregoing and because CCS is a monopolist in the relevant market and is not constrained by any actual or potential competition from within or outside the market, it is clear that CCS has significant market power. This conclusion is further supported by the discussion of countervailing market power immediately below. For this reason, it is not necessary to consider the allegation of price discrimination.

Countervailing Power

[226] CCS correctly notes that none of its customers have complained about the Merger. CCS encourages the Tribunal to infer from this that the Merger is not likely to prevent competition substantially. However, the Tribunal is not persuaded that this is a reasonable inference.

[227] The Tribunal recognizes that CCS' largest customers pay lower Tipping Fees than its smaller customers. However, the Tribunal notes that Dr. Baye's report indicates that even CCS' largest customers are forced to pay higher Tipping Fees in areas where CCS faces no competition than in areas where such competition exists and this evidence was not contested. In 2010, the average Tipping Fees at Silverberry and Northern Rockies were [CONFIDENTIAL] and [CONFIDENTIAL] respectively. However, Tipping Fees at CCS' South Grande Prairie [CONFIDENTIAL] and Rocky [CONFIDENTIAL] in Alberta were significantly lower because they both face competition from SES. This no doubt explains why Mr. [CONFIDENTIAL], who testified for the Commissioner, made it clear in his testimony that he would welcome competition for CCS in NEBC.

[228] The attenuated or limited nature of any countervailing power that may be in the hands of CCS' largest customers is also reflected in the evidence that written requests by them for price relief were rejected by CCS during the industry downturn in late 2008 and early 2009.

C. Conclusions

(i) Based on all of the foregoing, the Tribunal has concluded that the Merger is likely to prevent competition substantially. The Merger prevented likely future competition between the Vendors and CCS in the supply of Secure Landfilling services in, at the very least, the Contestable Area. Although the competition that was prevented in 2012 is not likely to be substantial, the Tribunal is satisfied that by no later than the spring of 2013, either the Vendors or a party that purchased the Babkirk Facility would have operated in direct and serious competition with CCS in the supply of Secure Landfill services in the Contestable Area.

(ii) In estimating the magnitude of the likely adverse price effects of the Merger, the Commissioner relied on expert evidence adduced by Dr. Baye. That evidence included economic theory and regression models. However, for reasons discussed below the Tribunal has not given significant weight to that economic theory or to those regression models in assessing the magnitude of the likely adverse price effects of the Merger. In reaching this decision, the Tribunal took into account the fact that the models do not control for costs, and the fact that, although Dr. Baye acknowledged that his theory of spatial competition should only be used if other data were unavailable, he used his theory even though he had actual CCS data.

(iii) Nevertheless, as discussed below in connection with the "effects" element of section 96, the Tribunal is satisfied that prices likely would have been at least 10% lower in the Contestable Area in the absence of the Merger.

(iv) The Tribunal therefore finds that the Merger is more likely than not to maintain the ability of CCS to exercise materially greater market power than in the absence of the Merger, and that the Merger is likely to prevent competition substantially.

ISSUE 7 WHEN THE EFFICIENCIES DEFENCE IS PLEADED, WHAT IS THE BURDEN OF PROOF ON THE COMMISSIONER AND ON THE RESPONDENT?

[230] CCS has alleged that the Commissioner failed to properly discharge her burden to prove the extent of the quantifiable effects of the Merger. CCS alleges that the Commissioner's failure to prove those effects in her case in chief has precluded CCS from being able to meet its overall burden to prove the elements of the efficiencies defence on a balance of probabilities. CCS asserts that the Commissioner's failure means that the effects should be zero and that the Application should therefore be dismissed.

[231] In paragraph 48 of its response to the Commissioner's Application, CCS pleaded the efficiencies defence in the following terms:

> The Acquisition has brought about or is likely to bring about gains in efficiency that will be greater than, and will offset, the effects of any prevention of competition that will result from the Acquisition, and the gains in efficiency will not likely be attained if the requested order or orders are made by the Tribunal.

[232] The burdens of proof under section 96 were established and applied over the course of the four decisions in Propane (Propane 1, at para. 48, rev'd on other grounds 2001 FCA 104, [2001] 3 F.C. 185 ("Propane 2"), leave to appeal to SCC refused, 28593 (September 13, 2001), redetermination, The Commissioner of Competition v. Superior Propane Inc., 2002 Comp. Trib. 16, 18 C.P.R. (4th) 417 ("Propane 3"), aff'd 2003 FCA 53, [2003] 3 F.C. 529 ("Propane 4")). "The effects of any prevention or lessening of competition" must be demonstrated by the Commissioner on balance of probabilities (Propane 1, above, at para. 402; Propane 2, above, at para. 177, Propane 4, at para. 17). Her burden is to prove (i) the extent of the anti-competitive effects in question where they are quantifiable, even if only roughly so (Propane 4, at paras. 35-38), and (ii) any non-quantifiable or qualitative anti-competitive effects of the merger. It also includes the burden to demonstrate the extent of any socially adverse effects that are likely to result from the merger, i.e., the proportion of the otherwise neutral wealth transfer that should be included in the trade-off assessment contemplated by section 96, as well as the weighting that should be given to those effects (Propane 4, above, at paras. 35-38, and 61-64). In this case, there being no socially adverse effects, the term "Effects" will be used to described quantifiable and non-quantifiable anti-competitive effects.

[235] Dr. Baye did eventually quantify the Effects but not until he wrote his reply report, which was only made available to CCS two weeks before the hearing. By then, the Tribunal's Scheduling Order did not permit CCS to bring a motion or file a further expert report. In addition, the Tribunal accepts that, in practical terms, there was insufficient time before the hearing to permit CCS to move to strike Dr. Baye's report or to seek leave to file a further report in response to the Commissioner's quantification of the Effects.

[236] The Commissioner maintains that her substantive burden to quantify the Effects only arises once a respondent advances its affirmative defence by proving efficiencies. She submits that any other result would require her to respond to every bald assertion of efficiencies, regardless of whether a respondent actually relies on efficiencies at the hearing. She asserts in her final written argument that this "would be an incredible waste of resources, and one that is antithetical to the notion of responding to an affirmative defence".

[237] In the Tribunal's view, the Commissioner's argument about resources does not justify her failure to meet her burden to prove the Effects as part of her case in chief. Once CCS pleaded section 96, the efficiencies defence became part of the fabric of the case and, if it had not been pursued by CCS, the Commissioner would have been entitled to costs fully compensating her for work done by her experts to calculate the Effects.

[238] The Commissioner also defended her approach by stating that, until CCS served Dr. Kahwaty's report on efficiencies ("Efficiencies Report"), it was an open question whether it was going to pursue the efficiencies defence at all. In this regard, she noted that prior to serving that report, CCS advanced no facts or proof of efficiencies, and provided no guidance on the types of efficiencies that Dr. Kahwaty planned to identify and quantify. She also observed that the Tribunal's Revised Scheduling Order, dated August 19, 2011, indicated that CCS might not pursue the efficiencies defence.

[239] The revised scheduling order required the "Corporate Respondents to serve expert reports, if any, on efficiencies and provide them to the Tribunal" on or before October 7, 2011 (our emphasis). However, since the phrase "if any" was proposed by the Commissioner and not by CCS, the Tribunal does not accept that it suggests that CCS had resiled from its pleading.

[240] In addition, the Tribunal can find no basis in the record for concluding that CCS did not intend to mount the efficiencies defence. The Tribunal notes that the Commissioner asked questions about efficiencies during examination for discovery and asked, during a case management teleconference on August 15, 2011, that CCS be ordered to produce documents relevant to the issue. During that teleconference, the Presiding Judicial Member stated that efficiencies were at issue and that, if relevant documents existed, their production was required.

[241] Given the pleading of section 96 and these developments, the Tribunal concludes that there was no reason to doubt that CCS would pursue an efficiencies defence.

[242] The Commissioner further asserts that the legislation and the case law do not dictate how she must meet her burden to prove the extent of the Effects. She submits that she is not obliged in every case to lead evidence about demand elasticities and provide detailed calculations about the range of likely Effects. This is particularly so in a case such as this in which she asserts that the efficiencies are "plainly so minimal that it was an open question whether [the efficiencies defence would even be pursued]".

[243] The Tribunal acknowledges that the legislation and the jurisprudence do not dictate how the Commissioner must meet her burden. However, as noted above, where it is possible to quantify the Effects of a merger, even if only in "rough" terms, the Commissioner has the onus to provide an estimate of such Effects (Propane 4, above, at paras. 35 – 38).

[244] Indeed, where the necessary data can be obtained, the Commissioner will be expected in future cases to provide estimates of market elasticity and the merged entity's own-price elasticity of demand in her case in chief. These estimates facilitate the calculation of the magnitude of the output reduction and price effects likely to result from the merger. They are also necessary in order to calculate the deadweight loss ("DWL") that will likely result from the output reduction and related price effects. DWL is the loss to the economy as a whole that results from the inefficient allocation of resources which occurs when (i) customers reduce their purchases of a product as its price rises, and shift their purchases to other products that they value less, and (ii) suppliers produce less of the product.

[245] Given that there will often be shortcomings in the data used to estimate market elasticities and the merged entity's own-price elasticity of demand, prudence dictates that a range of plausible elasticities should be calculated, to assist the Tribunal to understand the sensitivity of the Commissioner's estimates to changes in those elasticities. The Tribunal will be open to making its assessment of the quantitative extent of the Effects on the basis of persuasively supported "rough estimates" of those Effects, but only if the data required to reliably estimate elasticities cannot reasonably be obtained. Such rough estimates may be derived from evidence with respect to the magnitude of the likely price effects of the merger, including statements or projections made in the internal documents of the respondent or its advisors (including its investment bankers); persuasive estimates by customers, other lay witnesses, or expert witnesses; and persuasive evidence from "natural experiments."

[246] Although the Commissioner failed to meet her burden, in the unusual circumstances of this case, CCS was not prejudiced by that failure because, instead of doing the required independent analysis of elasticities, Dr. Baye relied on his assumed price decrease of at least 10% and on certain assumptions used by Dr. Kahwaty in calculating CCS' claimed market expansion efficiencies. In making that calculation, Dr. Kahwaty assumed that the opening of a Secure Landfill at Babkirk would lead waste generators to dispose of approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] additional tonnes of Hazardous Waste, as forecast in CCS' internal documents. Further, during the hearing. Dr. Kahwaty was able to effectively attack Dr. Baye's DWL calculations on various grounds, including his failure to base them on conventional calculations of elasticities when he could have obtained the data necessary to perform those calculations. In short, CCS was able to effectively assert the defence and argue that the efficiencies its expert presented were greater than the Effects (i.e. the DLW) calculated by Dr. Baye. For these reasons, the Tribunal declines to dismiss the Application.

[247] There is a second reason why CCS' request is being denied. CCS was also required to show that the cognizable efficiencies would be likely to offset the Effects. This means that even if the Tribunal had accepted CCS' submission that a zero weighting should be given to the quantifiable Effects, it would not necessarily follow that the Tribunal would find that the offset element of section 96 has been established on a balance of probabilities.

[248] This is so for two reasons. First, as noted in Propane 3, above, at para. 172, "it cannot be concluded that the Tribunal would find that efficiency gains (whether large or small) that marginally exceeded the effects (whether large or small) would necessarily offset those effects." This is because the loss of dynamic competition will always merit some non-trivial qualitative weighting in the trade-off assessment. Indeed, dynamic efficiencies and dynamic Effects can have a major impact on the trade-off assessment. Second, in this case, the Commissioner adduced evidence of qualitative Effects in Dr. Baye's expert report in chief. As well, CCS adduced evidence of qualitative efficiencies, such as improved service, reduced risk for customers and the environment, which put in play the issue of whether a substantial prevention of competition likely would adversely impact upon these matters.

[249] Accordingly, the Commissioner's failure to meet her burden to quantify the Effects, even in rough terms, at the appropriate time is not a sufficient reason to conclude that CCS is relieved of its obligation to meet its burden to meet the "offset" element in section 96.

ISSUE 8 HAS CCS SUCCESSFULLY ESTABLISHED AN EFFICIENCIES DEFENCE?

What are the Claimed Efficiencies?

[250] We now turn to summarizing the efficiencies claimed by CCS. In that regard, Dr. Kahwaty testified on behalf of CCS that the Merger would likely result in efficiencies that he grouped into the following five categories.

[251] Transportation efficiencies: These were described as being productive efficiencies realized by those customers presently serviced at Silverberry, who have an aggregate of [CONFIDENTIAL] locations that are situated closer to the Babkirk Facility than to Silverberry. Once CCS opens the Babkirk as a Secure Landfill, those customers will realize significant transportation cost savings, thereby freeing up resources for other uses. Based on what he described as the "going rate" of approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] for trucking services, the number of loads shipped from each of the above-mentioned [CONFIDENTIAL] locations in 2010, and the time saved by tipping at Babkirk instead of Silverberry, Dr. Kahwaty estimated the annual aggregate transportation cost savings for the aforementioned customers to be [CONFIDENTIAL]. Using a lower trucking rate of [CONFIDENTIAL] per hour per load (or $5 per tonne per hour of transport), Dr. Kahwaty provided a second estimate of those annual transportation cost savings, which totaled [CONFIDENTIAL]. Dr. Kahwaty also calculated that his two estimates represented approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] and [CONFIDENTIAL] respectively of CCS' 2010 revenue derived from the [CONFIDENTIAL] customer locations in question.

[252] Market expansion efficiencies: Dr. Kahwaty stated that, absent the opening of a Secure Landfill at Babkirk, a significant volume of existing Legacy Waste and newly generated Hazardous Waste, within the drawing area of the Babkirk Facility, would not have been transported to Silverberry due to the significant risk, and related financial liability, that would be associated with transporting such waste over the long distance to Silverberry. However, with the opening of a Secure Landfill at the Babkirk Site, CCS estimated that approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] tonnes per year of such waste ("Market Expansion Waste") likely would be transported for disposal at Babkirk. Dr. Kahwaty acknowledged that this estimate is "necessarily imprecise," and suggested that the incremental volume of Market Expansion Waste could substantially exceed CCS' estimate of [CONFIDENTIAL] tonnes per year. Based on the reported margin for Silverberry in 2009 of [CONFIDENTIAL] and a price of [CONFIDENTIAL] per tonne, Dr. Kahwaty estimated an increase in producer surplus from this incremental volume of [CONFIDENTIAL]. In addition, based on an estimated reduction in disposal costs of [CONFIDENTIAL] per tonne, Dr. Kahwaty estimated that customers would gain approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] per year in consumer surplus. This is only 50% of the product of multiplying [CONFIDENTIAL] by [CONFIDENTIAL], because Dr. Kahwaty felt that customers do not gain the full reduction in the costs of disposal when they are induced to dispose of their waste by virtue of a lower overall cost of disposition. The sum of the estimated [CONFIDENTIAL] in producer surplus gains and the estimated [CONFIDENTIAL] in consumer gains, was a total of [CONFIDENTIAL] of annual market expansion efficiencies.

[253] Overhead Efficiencies: Dr. Kahwaty estimated that the Merger would result in annual overhead savings of approximately [CONFIDENTIAL]. He stated that these savings likely would be achieved by virtue of the fact that CCS could draw upon its existing administrative staff (e.g., those persons who deal with legal, regulatory, marketing, engineering, financial and health & safety matters) in operating the Babkirk Facility. In the absence of the Merger, he stated that the Vendors likely would have had to incur expenses associated with these functions. In reaching his estimate of [CONFIDENTIAL], Dr. Kahwaty used the cost reductions that CCS has achieved in operating Complete's Roll-off Bin Business as a proxy. In addition, he submitted that some "qualitative" credit should be given to this category of efficiencies, because Complete would otherwise need to expend resources developing administrative systems and to deal with some of the matters identified above.

[254] Roll-off Bin Business Efficiencies: Dr. Kahwaty estimated that CCS's Merger of the Roll-off Bin Business has resulted in annual cost savings of approximately [CONFIDENTIAL]. These savings were described as having been achieved as a result of (i) the upgrading of its trucks to meet higher safety standards, (ii) investments in business development efforts, and (iii) the absorption of administrative functions, such as billing, into CCS' pre-existing corporate systems.

[255] Qualitative efficiencies: Dr. Kahwaty listed the following qualitative efficiencies as being likely to result from the Merger:

a. the landfill services to be offered by CCS at the Babkirk Site will be of higher (and known) quality and involve less risk for customers due to CCS's knowledge and experience in the operation and management of hazardous waste landfills;

b. customers will benefit from being able to purchase bundled packages of services that may include, for example, loading, trucking and tipping services;

c. the landfill services to be offered by CCS at the Babkirk Site will reduce risks for customers due to CCS's substantial financial resources, which provide assurance to customers regarding the long-term management of the Babkirk Facility and the potential continuing liability for wastes disposed in that landfill;

d. CCS will have the capability and resources necessary to expand the Babkirk Facility as necessary and to meet special customer needs (e.g., rapid responses to increased disposal needs);

e. since landfilling is CCS' business and since the Vendors were not planning to operate a Secure Landfill, CCS will promote landfilling services to a greater extent than the Vendors would have done, once the Babkirk Site is operational, making trucking cost efficiencies available to more customers;

f. the provision of Secure Landfill services by CCS at the Babkirk Site will reduce risks for generators, trucking firms, and other road users related to the transportation of Hazardous Waste on roads over long distances;

g. increased competition in the Roll-off Bin Business will benefit roll-off customers and may reduce the extent of any DWL in the roll-off industry, which will increase the total surplus generated in the roll-off marketplace; and

h. increased site remediation from reduced trucking costs will benefit area residents, wildlife, and the overall environment, and will also further the government's policy of expanding contaminated site remediations.

[256] Dr. Kahwaty also stated that some or all of the efficiencies identified above would likely be achieved sooner by CCS than by Complete or by any third-party who might acquire the Babkirk Facility pursuant to an order of the Tribunal.

[257] In addition, Dr. Kahwaty stated that CCS should be given credit for some of the efficiencies that it has already achieved in respect of the Roll-off Bin Business.

[258] Finally, Dr. Kahwaty provided reasoned estimates about the extent to which the above-mentioned trucking and market expansion efficiencies would increase under market growth scenarios of 1%, 2% and 4% compounded annually over the next 10 years. Based on this work, he suggested that these increased efficiencies ought to be considered by the Tribunal.

[259] After providing his annual estimates of the quantifiable efficiencies, Dr. Kahwaty calculated the net present value of those efficiencies as of January 1, 2012 using three different discount rates: (i) a risk-free interest rate of 1%, which he described as being the annual yield on one to three year government of Canada marketable bonds over the 10 week period preceding the date of his report (October 7, 2011); (ii) an interest rate of 10%, which he described as being "roughly equivalent to rates prevailing in the oil and gas industry"; and (iii) an intermediate rate of 5.5%.

[260] The Tribunal accepts the evidence of Mr. Harrington, the Commissioner's expert, that, in broad terms, the discount rate used in calculating the net present value of efficiencies typically does not matter, so long as the same discount rate is used to calculate the net present value of the Effects. That said, the Tribunal also accepts Mr. Harrington's evidence that, (i) as a general principle, the appropriate discount rate to use in discounting a set of future cash flows is a function of the risk of those cash flows being wrong, (ii) there is some uncertainty associated with the efficiencies identified and estimated by Dr. Kahwaty and CCS, and therefore (iii) the midpoint (5.5%) of the three discount rates identified by Dr. Kahwaty is the most defensible of the three rates to use in calculating efficiencies and Effects in this case.

The assessment of the claimed efficiencies

[261] In the initial stage of assessing efficiencies claimed under section 96 of the Act, the Tribunal applies five screens to eliminate efficiencies that are not cognizable under that section.

[262] The first screen eliminates claims that do not involve a type of productive or dynamic efficiency, or that are not otherwise likely to result in any increase in allocative efficiency. The second screen narrows the claimed efficiencies to those that the Tribunal is satisfied are likely to be brought about by the Merger. Efficiencies that cannot be demonstrated to be more likely than not to be attained in the Merger are filtered out at this stage. The third screen filters out claimed efficiency gains that would be brought about by reason only of a redistribution of income between two or more persons, as contemplated by subsection 96(3). These types of gains include savings that result solely from a reduction in output, service, quality or product choice, as well as from increases in bargaining leverage and reductions in taxes. The fourth screen filters out claimed efficiency gains that would be achieved outside Canada and would not flow back to shareholders in Canada as well as any savings from operations in Canada that would flow through to foreign shareholders.

[263] In the case at bar, the application of the first four screens does not result in the elimination of any of the claimed efficiencies.

[264] The fifth screen filters out claimed efficiencies that either (a) would likely be attained through alternative means if the Tribunal were to make the order that it determines would be necessary to ensure that the merger in question does not prevent or lessen competition substantially, or (b) would likely be attained through the Merger even if that order were made. This screen has a critical role to play in the case at bar.

[265] In this case, the fifth screen eliminates most of the efficiencies claimed by CCS. With three exceptions, being the one year of transportation efficiencies and the one year of market expansion efficiencies discussed at paragraph 269 below, as well as the overhead efficiencies discussed above, virtually all of the efficiencies claimed by CCS would likely be achieved even if the order referred to in the preceding paragraph is made. That order is an order for the divestiture of the shares or assets of BLS (the "Order").

[266] Although there is currently some uncertainty regarding the identity of a prospective purchaser, the Tribunal is satisfied that a divestiture will ultimately be made to a purchaser who will operate the Babkirk Facility and attract essentially the same volumes of Hazardous Waste as were assumed by Dr. Kahwaty in arriving at his estimates of transportation and market expansion efficiencies.

[267] The Tribunal has decided that, absent exceptional circumstances, it will not be prepared to conclude that the claimed efficiencies that would be realized by any acceptable alternative purchaser should be included in the trade-off assessment, on the basis that it is not possible to identify any particular likely purchaser of the shares or assets contemplated by the divestiture order.

Transportation and Market Expansion Efficiencies

[268] Based on the reasonable assumption that a purchaser under the Order will emerge and attract, in its first year of operation, the volume of Hazardous Waste that formed the basis for Dr. Kahwaty's estimates of CCS' claimed transportation and market expansion efficiencies, those efficiencies cannot be considered in the section 96 assessment because they are likely to be achieved even if the Order is made.

[269] A noteworthy exception to this conclusion concerns the transportation and market expansion efficiencies that CCS claims would be achieved more quickly by CCS than by a purchaser. In this regard, CCS asserted that it would already have been operating at Babkirk but for the Commissioner's intervention and that, in any event, it is likely to be in a position to operate a Secure Landfill at the Babkirk Site by the summer of 2012. In contrast, CCS stated that a purchaser following a divestiture is unlikely to be in a position to operate a Secure Landfill facility at the Babkirk Site before mid-2013, having regard to the time required (i) for the Tribunal to render a decision in this proceeding, (ii) to effect the actual sale of the shares or assets of BLS (which it estimates to will require "at least six months, or more," inclusive of due diligence), (iii) to modify or prepare an operations plan for the landfill, (iv) for the MOE to approve the operations plan, and (v) for the purchaser to construct the landfill, bearing in mind that construction can only be undertaken between June and September.

[270] In the Tribunal's view, claimed efficiencies that would not likely be achieved by a purchaser under the Order, but that would likely be achieved by CCS solely because of the types of delays identified immediately above and associated with the implementation of the Order, are not cognizable efficiencies under section 96. These will be described as "Order Implementation Efficiencies". In the case at bar, CCS and the Vendors completed the Merger after being advised that the Commissioner intended to apply to the Tribunal. To give the Respondents the benefit of Order Implementation Efficiencies in such circumstances, and thereby potentially preclude the Tribunal from issuing the Order in respect of their anticompetitive Merger, would be contrary to the purposes of the Act.

[271] In any event, even if CCS were given full credit for the Order Implementation Efficiencies, those efficiencies are only likely to be between [CONFIDENTIAL] and [CONFIDENTIAL] (which represents one year of transportation cost savings) plus [CONFIDENTIAL] (which represents one year of annual market expansion efficiencies). As discussed below in connection with the Tribunal's treatment of the "offset" element of section 96, these efficiencies are not sufficient to change the Tribunal's overall determination with respect to section 96.

The Roll-off Bin Business Efficiencies

[272] The divestiture of the shares or assets of BLS will not have any impact on the Roll-off Bin Business efficiencies claimed by CCS. Stated alternatively, those efficiencies will likely be attained even if the Order is made. Accordingly, those efficiencies cannot be considered in the trade off assessment contemplated by section 96.

[273] CCS has also submitted that certain productive efficiencies have already been achieved as a result of (i) its upgrading and sale of trucks to meet higher safety standards and to operate more efficiently, and (ii) CCS having absorbed certain administrative functions into its pre-existing corporate functions. However, as Mr. Harrington testified on behalf of the Commissioner, these efficiencies would only be lost if CCS were required to divest the Roll-off Bin Business. Given that the Order does not include the Roll-off Bin Business, those efficiencies will not be affected by the Order as contemplated by subsection 96(1) of the Act. Accordingly, they are not cognizable. In any event, given the value of these efficiencies, which Dr. Kahwaty estimated to be approximately [CONFIDENTIAL], the Tribunal's overall conclusion with respect to section 96, set forth below, would not change even if these efficiencies were given full value in the trade-off assessment.

[274] More generally, if certain efficiencies have already been achieved, they cannot be considered to be a potential "cost" of making the order contemplated by section 96. Therefore, they cannot be considered in the assessment under section 96. In other words, it cannot be said that those efficiencies "would not likely be attained if the order were made," as required by subsection 96(1).

The Overhead Efficiencies

[275] As has been noted, Dr. Kahwaty estimated that these efficiencies would likely total approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] per year. He arrived at this assessment by, among other things, using as a proxy the cost reductions that CCS has achieved in operating the Roll-off Bin Business. Those cost reductions amounted to approximately 21% of the overhead expenses that previously were incurred by Complete in operating the Roll-off Bin Business. Dr. Kahwaty applied this 21% to the overhead expenses incurred at Silverberry, to reach his estimate of approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] in annual overhead savings. Mr. Harrington took issue with this methodology, in part because the Roll-off Bin Business is different from the landfill business. In addition, he opined that if there is a divestiture, some of these savings, which he described as being equivalent to one-half of the annual cost of a full time back-office employee, would likely be achieved by the purchaser. The Tribunal is persuaded by this reasoning and therefore accepts Mr. Harrington's conclusion that the annual overhead efficiencies which are cognizable under section 96 are reasonable but are probably somewhat less than the [CONFIDENTIAL] that CCS has claimed.

[276] As a practical matter, given the conclusion that the Tribunal has reached with respect to the "offset" element of section 96, discussed below, the fact that a more precise estimate of the cognizable overhead efficiencies is not available does not affect the Tribunal's overall determination with respect to the efficiencies defence in section 96.

The Qualitative Efficiencies

[277] As discussed above, Dr. Kahwaty identified eight types of qualitative efficiencies that he claimed would likely result from the Merger. The Tribunal is not persuaded that any of these efficiencies "would not likely be attained if the Order were made," as provided in subsection 96(1). Ultimately, the answer to that question is dependent upon the expertise, financial resources, and reputation of the purchaser under the Order. Given that the purchaser may well have the same expertise, financial resources and reputation as CCS, the Tribunal cannot give significant weight to these claimed efficiencies. Indeed, given that the purchaser will have to be approved by the Commissioner, the Tribunal is of the view that all, or virtually all, of these claimed efficiencies are likely to be achieved by that purchaser.

[278] Regardless of the identity of the purchaser, some of the types of qualitative efficiencies identified by Dr. Kahwaty will be achieved, including those related to the Roll-off Bin Business, the reduction of risks related to the transportation of Hazardous Waste over long distances and the increased site remediation that will benefit residents, wildlife, and the overall environment. In fact, to the extent that the Merger is likely to substantially prevent competition, as the Tribunal has found, we conclude that it is entirely appropriate to take into account, in the trade-off assessment, the likelihood that there will be less site clean-up and tipping of Hazardous Waste in Secure Landfills than otherwise would have occurred if an Order were made. This will be described below when non-quantifiable effects are considered.

[279] The Tribunal concludes that the only efficiencies claimed by CCS that are cognizable under section 96 are a maximum of [CONFIDENTIAL] in annual overhead efficiencies, having a net present value of approximately [CONFIDENTIAL], using a discount rate of 5.5%.

[280] If, contrary to the Tribunal's conclusion, the Order Implementation Efficiencies are also cognizable under section 96, then it would be appropriate to include in the trade-off assessment further amounts of approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] to [CONFIDENTIAL] (i.e., one year of transportation cost savings) plus [CONFIDENTIAL] (i.e., one year of annual market expansion efficiencies).

What are the Effects for the Purposes of Section 96 of the Act?

[281] As CCS noted in its Final Argument, the total surplus approach remains the starting point in assessing the effects contemplated by section 96. Under that approach, the cognizable quantifiable efficiencies will be balanced against the DWL that is likely to result from a merger. In addition, the Tribunal considers any cognizable dynamic or other non-quantifiable efficiencies and anti-competitive Effects. Where there is evidence of important dynamic or other non-quantifiable efficiencies and anti-competitive effects, such evidence may be given substantial weight in the Tribunal's trade-off assessment.

[282] After the Tribunal has assessed the evidence with respect to the quantifiable (i.e., DWL) and non-quantifiable anti-competitive Effects of the merger, it will assess any evidence that has been tendered with respect to the other effects contemplated by section 96 and the purpose clause in section 1.1 of the Act. It is at this point that the Tribunal's assessment will proceed beyond the total surplus approach. In brief, at this stage of the Tribunal's assessment, it will determine whether there are likely to be any socially adverse effects associated with the merger. If so, it will be necessary to determine how to treat the wealth transfer that will be associated with any adverse price effects that are likely to result from the merger. In a merger among sellers of products, that wealth transfer will be from the merging parties' customers to the merged entity. Of course, to the extent that the merging parties' rivals may be likely to follow such price effects, the wealth transfer would need to be calculated across the sales or purchases of such rivals as well.

[283] The Tribunal expects that in most cases, it will be readily apparent that the wealth transfer should be treated as neutral in its analysis, because the socio-economic profiles of consumers and the merged entity's shareholders will not be sufficiently different to warrant a conclusion that the wealth transfer is likely to lead to socially adverse Effects. For greater certainty, the cognizable social Effects under section 96 do not include broader social effects, such as those related to plant-closings and layoffs (Propane 1, at para. 444).

[284] In these proceedings, the Commissioner adduced no evidence with respect to socially adverse effects. Indeed, in her Final Argument (at para. 208) she conceded that the Merger is not likely to result in any such effects, and that the wealth transfer should be treated as being neutral in this case. Accordingly, the discussion below will be confined to anti-competitive effects. In other words, in making its determination under section 96 in the case at bar, the Tribunal will adopt the total surplus approach.

Quantifiable Effects

[285] Quantifiable anti-competitive Effects are generally limited to the DWL that is likely to result from a merger.

[286] In this case, the DWL is the future loss to the economy as a whole that will likely result from the fact that purchasers of Secure Landfill services in the Contestable Area will purchase less of those services than they would have purchased had the Tipping Fees for such services declined due to the competition that would likely have materialized between CCS and Babkirk operated as a Full Service Secure Landfill.

[287] The DWL that is likely to result from a merger is likely to be significantly greater when there is significant pre-existing market power than when the pre-merger situation is highly competitive (Propane 3, above, at para. 165). In the case at bar, as in Propane, the Commissioner did not adduce specific evidence of pre-existing market power, for example, with respect to the extent to which prevailing Tipping Fees exceed competitive levels. Therefore, the Tribunal is not in a position to quantify the impact that any such pre-existing market power likely would have on the extent of the DWL. Where, as in this case, the pre-existing market situation is characterized by a monopoly and the Tribunal is not provided with sufficient persuasive evidence to enable it to quantify the Effects associated with such market power, it will be open to the Tribunal to give qualitative weight to those Effects. Given the very limited nature of the cognizable efficiencies in this case, it has not been necessary for the Tribunal to attribute such a qualitative weighing to those Effects in making its determination under section 96.

[288] As discussed above, CCS submitted that the Tribunal should conclude that there are no quantifiable Effects as a result of the Merger, because the Commissioner did not lead any evidence with respect to such Effects until she served Dr. Baye's reply report, on November 4, 2011. The Tribunal has rejected that position because CCS was not ultimately prejudiced in this regard. The Tribunal will therefore proceed to address the evidence adduced in Dr. Baye's reply report. As will be noted below, the Tribunal is satisfied that CCS would not have met its burden under section 96, even if the quantifiable Effects had been deemed to be zero.

[289] At the outset of his reply report, Dr. Baye summarized a number of the conclusions set forth in his initial report, dated September 30, 2011. These included the following:

a. the Merger likely prevents the prices for the disposal of Hazardous Waste generated in NEBC from falling significantly for many customers;
b. the effects of the Merger are unlikely to be uniform across all customers in the relevant market; and
c. the average reduction in the Tipping Fees throughout NEBC is likely to be at least 10%, but the effects are likely to be significantly higher for customers generating Hazardous Waste in the vicinity near Babkirk and Silverberry and lower for customers located near the southern and northern boundaries of NEBC.

[290] The Tribunal is satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, that with the exception of the geographic extent of the Effects, the foregoing conclusions are supported by the weight of the evidence that it has found to be credible and persuasive. As to the geographic region over which the aforementioned Effects are likely to result from the Merger, the Tribunal finds that, at a minimum, such Effects are likely to extend throughout the Contestable Area identified by Dr. Kahwaty. Given the conclusions that the Tribunal has reached regarding the minimal nature of the efficiencies claimed by CCS, it is unnecessary to define the scope of the anti-competitive Effects with greater precision.

[291] As Dr. Baye explicitly noted, his conclusions were based on a range of different sources of information and economic analyses, rather than on any specific source of information or economic methodology. Those sources included CCS' internal documents and a "natural experiment." The Tribunal has not placed weight on the economic models that are set forth in Dr. Baye's reports, for example, the tipping fee and DiD regressions presented at exhibits 20 and 26 of his initial Report, which are also briefly discussed in his reply report. In the Tribunal's view, some of the assumptions underlying those models are questionable. The same is true of some of the outcomes of those models, such as the prediction of greater adverse price effects for customers located closer to Northern Rockies than to Babkirk. In the Tribunal's view, those predictions of Dr. Baye's models are counterintuitive and are not supported by the weight of the other evidence adduced in these proceedings.

[292] More generally, as noted above, Dr. Baye's models do not account for the opportunity cost that CCS would incur if it were to lower Tipping Fees to the 20 - 25% range necessary to attract business from customers located farthest away from Silverberry and Babkirk, respectively, as discussed at paragraphs six and seven of his reply report. The Tribunal is not persuaded that it would be in CCS' interest to reduce prices to that extent in the near future, and to thereby deplete its finite Secure Landfill capacity at Silverberry, assuming that CCS would likely be able to attract business at higher Tipping Fees further in the future to fill that capacity.

[293] Notwithstanding the fact that the Tribunal has found the models at exhibits 20 and 26 to be unreliable, we are satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, that competition from an independently owned and operated Full Service Secure Landfill at the Babkirk Site likely would result in CCS reducing its prices by an average of at least 10% for customers in the geographic market described above. This conclusion is based on evidence from CCS' own internal documents, evidence given by [CONFIDENTIAL] of [CONFIDENTIAL] and the transactions data pertaining to the "natural experiment" at Willesden Green modelled in Dr. Baye's DiD analysis.

a. a slide presentation, dated August 26, 2010, which is attached at Exhibit K to Mr. D. Wallace's witness statement, [CONFIDENTIAL]

b. an e-mail, dated July 15, 2010, sent by Trevor Barclay to Ryan Hotston and Lance Kile, [CONFIDENTIAL]
c. a document, entitled [CONFIDENTIAL], containing several slides dated "3/9/2009/ [CONFIDENTIAL]
d. a financial analysis prepared by Dan Wallace, attached to an e-mail dated March 31, 2010, and at Exhibit C to his witness statement, [CONFIDENTIAL]
e. a document dated March 31, 2010, entitled [CONFIDENTIAL], attached at Exhibit D to Dan Wallace's witness statement, [CONFIDENTIAL]
f. a document, entitled [CONFIDENTIAL], dated September 15, 2009 and included at Tab 32 of the Parties' Admissions Brief, [CONFIDENTIAL].

[295] Turning to evidence from customers, there was, as mentioned earlier, an unusual paucity of such evidence in this case. However, Mr. [CONFIDENTIAL], Vice President, Operations, at [CONFIDENTIAL] testified that "competition, in our mind, provides a more competitive playing field in terms of your pricing setup" and that "in Northeast B.C. we currently don't have that same level of competition in this facet of our business."

[296] Lastly, the transactions data from the "natural experiment" at Willesden Green, which is found in Dr. Baye's initial report, demonstrates that CCS reduced its prices significantly to seven customers after SES' entry at South Grande Prairie.

[297] For all these reasons, we have concluded that, in the absence of the Merger, competition in the provision of Secure Landfill services at Silverberry and the Babkirk Site likely would have resulted in prices being, on average, at least 10% lower in the geographic market described above. This is a sufficient basis for concluding that the Merger likely will prevent competition substantially, particularly given that the Merger preserves a monopolistic market structure, and thereby prevents the emergence of potentially important competition.

[298] In his reply report, Dr. Baye opined that even if competition is only likely to be substantially prevented in the Contestable Area identified by Dr. Kahwaty, the welfare loss is likely to be significant. Specifically, Dr. Baye estimated that loss to be approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] annually. That estimate was based on an assumed price decrease of 10%, from [CONFIDENTIAL] to [CONFIDENTIAL] per tonne, and certain assumptions and estimates used by Dr. Kahwaty in calculating the market expansion efficiencies, discussed above. In making that calculation, Dr. Kahwaty assumed that the opening of a Secure Landfill facility at Babkirk would likely lead customers to dispose of approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] additional tonnes of Hazardous Waste, as forecast in CCS' internal documents. As discussed earlier in these reasons, that forecast increase in demand concerned Legacy Waste and future waste that would not otherwise be transported to Silverberry, due to (i) the level of the current disposal cost (Tipping Fees plus transportation cost) and (ii) the risk that would be associated with transporting Hazardous Waste to Silverberry. Dr. Kahwaty estimated that the total disposal costs of customers located in the Contestable Area that he identified likely would decline by approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] per tonne, due to the closer proximity of the Babkirk Facility, relative to Silverberry.

[299] Based on the foregoing numbers used by Dr. Kahwaty to estimate the market expansion efficiencies, and the linear demand that was assumed by Dr. Kahwaty, Dr. Baye estimated that a 10% price reduction (from [CONFIDENTIAL] to [CONFIDENTIAL]) for customers in the Contestable Area would increase the volume of waste disposed of by those customers from [CONFIDENTIAL] tonnes to [CONFIDENTIAL] tonnes, annually. He further estimated CCS' unit costs to be approximately [CONFIDENTIAL], based on the average 2010 price at Silverberry of [CONFIDENTIAL] across all substances, and the [CONFIDENTIAL] landfill margin reported for Silverberry in 2009, which was used by Dr. Kahwaty in estimating the market expansion efficiencies.

[300] Given the foregoing estimates, Dr. Baye calculated the area under the demand curve for the Contestable Area to be (i) a rectangle that is approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] tonnes multiplied by [CONFIDENTIAL], for a total of [CONFIDENTIAL], plus (ii) a right triangle that is [CONFIDENTIAL] high and [CONFIDENTIAL] wide, for an area of [CONFIDENTIAL]. Summing (i) plus (ii) yielded a figure of [CONFIDENTIAL]. From this latter amount, Dr. Baye deducted CCS' unit cost of [CONFIDENTIAL] multiplied by [CONFIDENTIAL], to arrive at an estimated welfare loss of [CONFIDENTIAL].

[301] The Tribunal is persuaded that, on a balance of probabilities, the approach adopted by Dr. Baye, and the numbers he used in reaching his estimate of the likely DWL, are reasonable for the purposes of the Tribunal's assessment of Effects under section 96 of the Act. In the Tribunal's view, the manner in which Dr. Baye proceeded in this regard is sound, and the inputs that he used are reliable and conservative. The fact that Dr. Baye relied on certain assumptions made by Dr. Kahwaty is not particularly important for the purposes of the Tribunal's assessment under section 96. What is important is that there is reliable evidence before the Tribunal that permitted the DWL to be estimated.

[302] The Tribunal acknowledges Dr. Kahwaty's testimony that, to calculate the DWL, it is necessary to know the shape of the demand curve, and that, when prices are likely to differ across customers, it is necessary to have customer-specific elasticity data. However, the Tribunal is persuaded that, in the absence of such information, a reliable "rough" estimate of the likely DWL can be obtained based on information such as that which was used by Dr. Baye in reaching his estimated annual welfare loss of approximately [CONFIDENTIAL].

[303] Accordingly, the Tribunal accepts Dr. Baye's estimate of [CONFIDENTIAL], as being the minimum annual DWL.

[304] Dr. Baye then speculated that, (i) if the average price decrease in that area was 21 percent, the annual DWL would be approximately [CONFIDENTIAL], (ii) if prices across all Hazardous Waste tipped at Silverberry in 2010 decreased by 10%, the DWL would be approximately [CONFIDENTIAL], and (iii) if prices across all such waste decreased by 21%, the DWL would be approximately [CONFIDENTIAL]. However, the Tribunal is not persuaded that these speculations about prices are reasonable.

Non-quantifiable Effects

[305] The Tribunal is satisfied that the Merger likely would result in certain important qualitative or other non-quantifiable Effects.

[306] In his initial report, Dr. Baye identified at least two important qualitative anti-competitive Effects of the Merger. First, at paragraph 157, he stated that lower Tipping Fees would induce waste generators to more actively clean up legacy sites in NEBC. At paragraph 91 of his report, he described this in terms of lower Tipping Fees inducing waste generators to substitute away from "delay," or bioremediation, towards disposal at a Secure Landfill. As Dr. Kahwaty noted at paragraph 96 of his Efficiencies Report, increased site remediation from lower disposal costs benefits "area residents, wildlife, and the overall environment."

[307] Second, at paragraph 137(c) of his initial report, Dr. Baye stated that, to retain its waste volumes in the face of competition from an independently owned and operated Babkirk Facility, CCS "would have had an incentive to compete through 'value propositions' that, among other things, link prices on various services to provide customers with a lower total cost for waste services." Although the services in question were not further discussed by Dr. Baye, they were addressed in "read-in" evidence adduced by the Commissioner and cited by Dr. Baye (at footnote 93 of his initial report). The Tribunal is satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, that competition between CCS and an independently owned and operated Babkirk Facility would have led to important non-price benefits to waste generators in the form of various "value propositions" that include either existing services being provided at lower prices, or new or enhanced services being provided that likely would not otherwise be provided if the Order is not made.

Are the Cognizable Efficiencies Greater than and do they Offset the Effects?

[308] Section 96 requires the Tribunal to determine whether the cognizable efficiencies "will be greater than, and will offset" the cognizable effects of any prevention or lessening of competition that will result or is likely to result from a merger.

[309] The Tribunal considers that the terms "greater than" and "offset" each contemplate both quantifiable and non-quantifiable (i.e., qualitative) efficiencies. In the Tribunal's view, "greater than" connotes that the efficiencies must be of larger magnitude, or more extensive than, the effects referred to in section 96. This contemplates a balancing of commensurables, even if some of the efficiencies being balanced are not capable of accurate or rough quantification. By contrast, the term "offset" is broad enough to connote a balancing of incommensurables (e.g., apples and oranges) that requires the exercise of subjective judgment to determine whether the efficiencies compensate for the likely effects referred to in section 96.

[310] In the case at bar, the Tribunal has found that the cognizable, quantifiable, efficiencies likely to result from the Merger will be a maximum of [CONFIDENTIAL] annually. Those are the overhead efficiencies estimated by Dr. Kahwaty. In addition, the Tribunal has found that CCS has not demonstrated, on a balance of probabilities, that the qualitative efficiencies it has claimed are cognizable. In other words, it has not demonstrated that those efficiencies would not likely be attained if the Order were made.

[311] On the other hand, the Tribunal has found that the quantifiable Effects are likely to be at least [CONFIDENTIAL] annually. That is the value of the minimum DWL associated with the Contestable Area.

[312] Based on these findings, it is readily apparent that CCS has not demonstrated that the cognizable, quantifiable, efficiencies likely to be brought about by the Merger will likely be "greater than" the quantifiable Effects that are likely to result from the Merger. Using a 5.5% discount rate, CCS estimated that the present value of these (overhead) efficiencies to be approximately [CONFIDENTIAL], in comparison with a present value of [CONFIDENTIAL] for the aforementioned Effects.

[313] Given the Tribunal's conclusion that the Merger would result in a number of important qualitative or other non-quantifiable effects, and that it would not likely bring about significant qualitative, cognizable, efficiencies, it is also readily apparent that the combined quantitative and qualitative efficiencies are not likely to be "greater than" the combined quantitative and qualitative Effects.

[314] In addition, the Tribunal is persuaded, on a balance of probabilities, that even if a zero weighting is given to the quantifiable Effects, as CCS submitted should be done, CCS has not satisfied the "offset" element of section 96. In short, the Tribunal is satisfied that the very minor quantitative efficiencies, ([CONFIDENTIAL] annually) that are cognizable, together with any qualitative or other non-quantifiable efficiencies that may be cognizable, would not "offset" the significant qualitative Effects that it has found are likely to result from the Merger.

[315] This conclusion would remain the same even if the Tribunal were to accept and give full weight to the Order Implementation Efficiencies, which only amount to a maximum of [CONFIDENTIAL] (which represents one year of transportation cost savings) plus [CONFIDENTIAL] (which represents one year of annual market expansion efficiencies).

[316] This is because, in the Tribunal's view, the qualitative Effects, when taken together merit substantial weight. That weight is greater than the weight attributable to the aggregate of the cognizable quantitative and qualitative efficiencies under any reasonable approach. In brief, those qualitative Effects are (i) reduced site clean-up and the benefits that such remediation would confer upon "area residents, wildlife, and the overall environment"; and, more importantly, (ii) reduced "value propositions" than would likely otherwise emerge in the relevant market, linking prices to various new or enhanced services.

[317] Most importantly, in the absence of the Order, the Merger will maintain a monopolistic structure in the relevant market. In other words, the Merger will not only give rise to the qualitative effects summarized immediately above, but it will also preclude benefits of competition that will arise in ways that will defy prediction.

[318] In summary, the Tribunal is satisfied that CCS has not met its burden to establish, on a balance of probabilities, the "greater than" or "offset" elements set forth in section 96.

ISSUE 9 WHAT IS THE APPROPRIATE REMEDY – DISSOLUTION OR DIVESTITURE?

[319] An important question under this heading is whether SES is currently a willing purchaser for the Babkirk Site. Surprisingly, when Mr. Amirault of SES testified for the Commissioner, neither her counsel during questioning in chief nor counsel for the Vendors during cross-examination asked Mr. Amirault if SES is still interested in acquiring BLS.

[320] The Commissioner's position is that, once she showed that dissolution was an effective and available remedy, the burden of proof shifted to the Vendors to demonstrate that divestiture was an available, effective and less intrusive remedy. The Commissioner maintains that the Vendors were obliged to ask Mr. Amirault if SES is still interested and, because they failed to ask that question and because they failed to lead any evidence about other prospective purchasers, they have no basis to argue that divestiture will be an effective remedy.

[321] The Tribunal does not accept the Commissioner's characterization of the onus. In the Tribunal's view, if the Commissioner proposes alternative remedies, as she did in this case, she bears the onus of showing that, although one may be preferable, each is available and effective. Accordingly, the Commissioner's counsel should have asked Mr. Amirault about SES' interest in purchasing the shares of BLS.

[322] The Tribunal notes that, in her written final argument, the Commissioner asks the Tribunal not to infer that SES is an interested purchaser. However, in contrast, in final oral argument, counsel for the Commissioner suggested that SES is an interested buyer.

[323] The Tribunal accepts the latter submission and has determined, for the following reasons, that SES is likely to make an offer to purchase the Babkirk Facility at some point during the divestiture process under the Order:

- SES has already decided to operate a Secure Landfill in NEBC. It tried unsuccessfully and at considerate expense to secure the Authorizations at its Heritage Site;
- Babkirk already has the necessary Authorizations and SES is confident that its plans to expand the permitted capacity at Babkirk and upgrade the cell design will be approved;
- SES has demonstrated an active and continuing interest in the Babkirk Facility since the Merger. Among other things, this is demonstrated by SES' lawyers' written submissions to the Commissioner and by the participation of its CEO, Mr. Amirault, as a witness in these proceedings.

[324] We now turn to the proposed remedies.

[325] The Commissioner wants the Babkirk Site operated as a competitive Full Service Secure Landfill and she believes that dissolution will produce this result more quickly than divestiture.

[326] Her submission is that, once the Vendors again hold the shares of Complete and have repaid CCS the purchase price, they will be highly motivated to resell Complete or the shares of BLS because this will enable them to recover their funds as soon as possible. However, this submission assumes that the Vendors will immediately be offered a price they are prepared to accept. In the Tribunal's view, there is no basis for this assumption. The evidence is clear that the Vendors have never been willing to be pushed into a quick sale.

[327] The Commissioner's submission also assumes that the Vendors will have an incentive to sell quickly because they will be short of funds as a result of having to repay CCS as soon as the shares of Complete are returned to them. This assumption is also questionable, in part because it appears that CCS has indemnified the Vendors against all claims arising from any investigation or actions by the Bureau with respect to the Merger. Given this background, it is possible that CCS may not insist on immediate payment.

[328] Even if the Commissioner is correct and the Vendors are cash-strapped and anxious to resell BLS or Complete, the Tribunal still anticipates that they will want an attractive price. It is also important to remember that all five individual Vendors must agree to accept an offer and they will not necessarily be like-minded, in part because some are near retirement and others are in mid-career.

[329] The Tribunal notes that two years will have passed since the Babkirk Facility was last for sale. This means that purchasers, other than SES, may show interest, especially given the increasing rate of gas production in the area northwest of Babkirk. Dr. Baye testified that he thought SES, Newalta and Clean Harbours were potential purchasers. As well, it is not unreasonable to think that an oil and gas producer may decide to own and operate a Secure Landfill. The Tribunal heard evidence that [CONFIDENTIAL] is considering becoming a part-owner of the Secure Landfill at Peejay. If the Vendors receive multiple offers, protracted negotiations may follow.

[330] Finally, if they do not receive an offer they consider attractive, the Vendors are free to change their minds and resurrect their plan to operate a bioremediation facility with an Incidental Secure Landfill. This would not result in the competition the Commissioner seeks because it will only be realized if the Babkirk Facility operates as a Full Service Secure Landfill.

[331] There is also the question of whether a purchaser after dissolution will be an effective competitor. In the proposed order for dissolution found at the conclusion of the Commissioner's final argument, she does not seek the right to approve a purchaser and she only asks for notice of a future merger if it is "among the Respondents". In our view, this makes dissolution a less effective remedy.

[332] Given all these observations, the Tribunal is concerned that dissolution may not be effective in that it may not lead to a prompt sale and a timely opening of the Babkirk Facility as a Secure Landfill.

[333] It is also the case that dissolution is the more intrusive remedy.

[334] Three of the Vendors testified about the financial hardship they would face if dissolution were ordered by the Tribunal. Ken Watson's share of the proceeds of the transaction was [CONFIDENTIAL]. He testified that if ordered to return the proceeds to CCS, [CONFIDENTIAL], he expects to face significant financial hardship.

[335] Randy Wolsey's share of the proceeds was approximately [CONFIDENTIAL]. He testified that almost half of the proceeds have been used to develop a property on which he is constructing a new family home. The balance has been invested in the purchase of various investment products. According to Mr. Wolsey, he expects to lose approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] if he is forced to make a quick sale on the residential property before the house under construction has been completed.

[336] Karen Baker testified that if required to return her share of the proceeds, approximately [CONFIDENTIAL], then her ability to continue to provide financial support to certain small business will be compromised. She also indicated that if the transactions were to be dissolved, she expects that the "work required to reverse the sale and calculate the adjustments required to account for changes in Complete's assets, working capital and lost opportunity costs, as well as the opportunity costs in time away from the other businesses in which [she is] involved, and cost to some of those businesses for replacement personnel to do the work that [she] should be doing, would cause [her] significant stress and emotional hardship."

[337] The Commissioner asserts that, in the particular circumstances of this case, hardship is irrelevant, because she warned the Vendors that she would seek dissolution before they sold Complete to CCS. However, in the Tribunal's view it is the right of private parties to disagree with the Commissioner and make their case before the Tribunal. Accordingly, they are not estopped from raising issues of hardship.

[338] The Tribunal is also of the view that dissolution is overbroad, since it involves Complete's other businesses and not just BLS.

[339] In the spring of 2007, Complete acquired the assets of a municipal waste management business based in Dawson Creek, British Columbia. As noted earlier, those assets included contracts for the management of the Fort St. John and Bessborough municipal landfills and the Dawson Creek Transfer Station, the supply and hauling of roll-off bins, and the provision of rural refuse collections and transfer services. At the time of the Merger, those contracts and related equipment were transferred to CCS. Hazco has been responsible for this business since then.

[340] Mr. Garry Smith, the president of Hazco, testified that Hazco has upgraded Complete's trucks and has sold some older equipment which it considered surplus. The two municipal landfill contracts have been extended and are now held directly by Hazco. Complete's employees are now employed by Hazco and there have been personnel changes. At the hearing, Mrs. Baker testified about the impact of the sale of some of the assets. She stated:

> Now, that equipment was older equipment. It wouldn't have brought big money, but the point is it was sufficient for us to do the work that we wanted it to do. Well, now the oil and gas industry is hot, hot up there. Trying to get equipment back, we certainly wouldn't get that equipment back. Any decent used equipment, I have no idea. The prices would be through the roof. Would we buy new equipment? I don't know. So right now, we don't even have the equipment to go back to work

[341] To conclude, the Tribunal has decided that dissolution is intrusive, overbroad and will not necessarily lead to a timely opening of the Babkirk Facility as a Full Service Secure Landfill.

[342] Turning to divestiture, the Tribunal finds that it is an available and effective remedy. If reasonable but tight timelines are imposed, it will not matter if, as the Commissioner alleges, SES and CCS are reluctant to negotiate because of their outstanding litigation. In the end, if they cannot agree, a trustee will sell the shares or assets of BLS, either to SES or another purchaser approved by the Commissioner. In other words, divestiture will be effective.

[343] A divestiture with tight timelines has other advantages. The Commissioner will have the right to pre-approve the purchaser, the person responsible for effecting the divestiture will ultimately be CCS or a professional trustee, rather than five individuals, the timing will be certain, a sale will ultimately occur and the approved purchaser will compete with Silverberry on a Full Service basis.

[344] For all these reasons, the Tribunal will order CCS to divest the shares or assets of BLS.

H. COSTS

[345] The Commissioner chose dissolution as her preferred remedy when she commenced the Application. She made this choice because she believed that at the time of the Merger, the Vendors were about to construct and operate a Full Service Secure Landfill. For this reason she concluded that the most timely way to introduce competition was to return Babkirk to the Vendors.

[346] However, for the reasons given above, the Tribunal has concluded that the Vendors did not intend to operate a Full Service Secure Landfill. This means that the Commissioner has failed to prove the premise which caused her to name the individual Vendors as parties to the Application. In essence she failed to prove her case against them and for this reasons she is liable for their costs.

[347] However, during the Vendors' motion for summary disposition which was heard two weeks before the hearing, they indicated that, if the motion was successful and they were removed as parties, four of them would nevertheless attend the hearing to give evidence. The Tribunal assumes that, had done so, they would have been represented by one counsel.

Accordingly, the Commissioner is to pay their costs less the legal fees which would have been incurred had they appeared as witnesses.

I. FOR THESE REASONS THE TRIBUNAL ORDERS THAT:

[348] CCS is to divest the shares or assets of BLS on or before December 28, 2012 failing which a trustee is to effect a sale on or before March 31, 2013. If possible, the terms for this process are to be agreed between the Commissioner and CCS and are to be submitted to the Tribunal on or before June 22, 2012. If the agreed terms are accepted by the Tribunal, they will be incorporated in a further order to be called the Divestiture Procedure Order. If the Commissioner and CCS cannot agree to terms, each party is to submit a proposed Divestiture Procedure Order on or before June 29, 2012. If necessary, the Tribunal will hear submissions about each party's proposal in early July and then make the Divestiture Procedure Order.

[349] CCS is to pay the Commissioner's costs and, because dissolution was not ordered, the Commissioner is to pay the Vendors' costs less the fees they would have paid for legal representation if they had attended as non-parties to give their evidence. The Commissioner is to prepare a bill of costs to be submitted to CCS and the Vendors are to submit a bill of costs to the Commissioner both on or before August 31, 2012. Both are to be prepared in accordance with Federal Court Tariff B at the mid-point of column 3. If by September 14, 2011 no agreement is reached about lump sums to be paid, the Tribunal will hear submissions and fix the awards of costs.

DATED at Ottawa, this 29th day of May, 2012.

SIGNED on behalf of the Tribunal by the Panel Members.

THE EVIDENCE

Witnesses who gave oral testimony (in alphabetical order)

For the Commissioner of Competition

- Rene Amirault
  President & CEO of Secure Energy Services Inc.
- Robert Andrews
  Section Head- Environmental Management, Government Unit in the British Columbia Ministry of the Environment.
- Michael Baye
  Expert Economist - Special Consultant at National Economic Research Associates, Inc. and the Bert Elwert Professor of Business Economics and Public Policy at the Indiana University Kelley School of Business.
- Chris Hamilton
  Project Assessment Director at the British Columbia Environmental Assessment Office.
- Andrew Harrington
  Expert on Efficiencies - Managing director of the Toronto office of Duff & Phelps.
- [CONFIDENTIAL]
  Contracting and Procurement Analyst for the [CONFIDENTIAL].
- [CONFIDENTIAL]
  Vice-President, Operations at [CONFIDENTIAL].
- Mark Polet
  Associate at Klohn Crippen Berger Ltd. ("KCB"). KCB is a private, specialized engineering and environmental consulting firm with its head office in Vancouver.
- Del Reinheimer
  Environmental Management Officer in the Environmental Protection Division at the British Columbia Ministry of the Environment.
- Devin Scheck
  Director, Waste Management & Reclamation at the British Columbia Oil and Gas Commission.

For the Vendors

- Karen Baker
  One of the founding shareholders of Complete Environmental Inc.
- Ronald Baker
  One of the founding shareholders of Complete Environmental Inc.
- Kenneth Watson
  One of the founding shareholders of Complete Environmental Inc.
- Randy Wolsey
  One of the founding shareholders of Complete Environmental Inc.

For the Corporate Respondents

- Trevor Barclay
  Landfill Manager of the Northern Rockies Secure Landfill.
- James Coughlan
  Director of Sales and Marketing of CCS Corporation
- Henry Kahwaty
  Expert economist - Director with Berkeley Research Group, LLC.
- Richard Lane
  Vice-President of CCS Midstream Services, a division of CCS Corporation.
- Pete Marshall
  Principal of Adelantar Consulting, an environmental consultancy based in Edmonton, Alberta.
- Daniel Wallace
  Manager, Business Development of CCS Corporation's Midstream Services division

Other Evidence

- The witness statements from those who testified.
- Read-ins from Examinations for Discovery of Karen Baker and Kenneth Watson for the Vendors, Daniel Wallace for the Corporate Respondents and Trevor MacKay for the Commissioner of Competition
- The statement of agreed facts.
- The witness statements of Robert Coutts, President of SkyBase Geomatic Solutions Inc. and Garry Smith, President of Hazco Waste Management (owned by CCS). On consent these witnesses were not called to give oral testimony.
- A Joint list of agreed documents.
- The exhibits marked during the hearing.

K. CONCURRING REASONS BY P. CRAMPTON C.J.

[351] Although I participated in the writing of, and signed, the Panel's decision in this case, I would like to comment on certain additional matters.

A. IS CCS'S ACQUISITION OF COMPLETE A MERGER?

[352] At paragraph 56 of the Panel's reasons, it is noted that it was not necessary to decide whether Complete's Roll-off Bin Business or its management of municipal dumps could be a business for the purposes of section 91 of the Act. That said, the conclusion reached by the Chairperson on this point was articulated at paragraph 57. That conclusion was stated as follows:

> "[A] business being acquired in a merger must have some relevance to a Commissioner's application. In other words, it must have the potential to impact competition in the markets at issue. This observation means that, in this case, Complete's Roll-off Bin Business and its management of municipal dumps would not have been caught by the definition in section 91 because they are not involved in any way in the disposal or treatment of Hazardous Waste."

[353] I respectfully disagree. In my view, the term "business", as contemplated by section 91 of the Act, is not, as the Vendors maintained, confined to a business that competes with a business of an acquiring party. There is no such limitation in section 91 or in the definition of the term "business" that is set forth in subsection 2(1) of the Act.

[354] The Vendors attempted to support their position by noting that section 92 of the Act requires that a "merger" prevent or lessen, or be likely to prevent or lessen, competition substantially. However, it is not necessary for a merger to involve two or more competing businesses to have the potential to prevent or lessen competition substantially. For example, the inclusion of the terms "supplier" and "customer" in section 91 reflects Parliament's implicit recognition that a vertical merger may have such an effect. The words "or other person" in section 91 reflect that Parliament also did not wish to exclude the possibility that other types of non-horizontal mergers may also have such an effect.

[355] Considering the foregoing, I am not persuaded that the Vendors' position is assisted by reading the words of section 91 "in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament" (E. A. Driedger, Construction of Statutes (2nd ed. 1983), at p. 87, quoted in Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27, at 41; and Canada (Canadian Human Rights Commission) v. Canada (Attorney General), 2011 SCC 53, at para. 33 ("Mowat")). In the absence of any apparent ambiguity, one must adopt an interpretation of section 91 "which respects the words chosen by Parliament" (Mowat, above). The principle that the Act be given "such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as best ensures the attainment of its objects" also supports the view that section 91 ought not be read in the limited manner suggested by the Vendors (Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, s. 12).

[356] Indeed, if anything, a reading of section 91 in a manner that is harmonious with the scheme and object of the Act and the intention of Parliament arguably further supports interpreting section 91 in a way that does not require the type of assessment of competitive effects that is contemplated by the interpretation advanced by the Vendors. That is to say, when viewed in the context of the scheme and object of the Act as a whole, it is arguable that section 91 was intended by Parliament to be a gating provision, in respect of which an assessment ordinarily is to be made relatively early on in the evaluation contemplated by sections 92 and 93.

[357] For example, all but one of the assessment factors in the non-exhaustive list that is set forth in section 93 refer to the "merger or proposed merger" in respect of which an application under section 92 has been made. In my view, this suggests that the merger or proposed merger in question should be identified before the assessment contemplated by sections 92 and 93 is conducted.

[358] If an agreement, arrangement or practice cannot properly be characterized as a merger, it will fall to be investigated under another provision of the Act, such as section 45, section 79, or section 90.1, each of which has a substantive framework which differs in important respects from the framework set forth in section 92. Indeed, in the case of agreements or arrangements that may be investigated under section 45, which is a criminal provision, there are important procedural implications associated with the decision to pursue a matter under that section, versus under section 90.1, 79 or 92. I recognize that there may be cases in which it may be appropriate to assess a matter under section 92 as well as under one or more of the other provisions mentioned immediately above, for a period of time before an election is made under section 98, 45.1, 79(7) or 90.1(10). However, the scheme of the Act and the interests of administrative efficiency arguably support the view that a determination as to whether a matter ought to be investigated as a merger, rather than a type of conduct addressed elsewhere in the Act, ordinarily should be made before the central substantive determinations under the applicable section of the Act are made. Among other things, such substantive determinations often take several months, and sometimes take much longer, to make.

[359] In summary, for all of the foregoing reasons, I have concluded that the term "business" in section 91 is sufficiently broad to include any business in respect of which there is an acquisition or establishment of control or a significant interest, as contemplated therein. In the case at bar, this would include Complete's Roll-off Bin Business, which was fully operational at the time of Complete's acquisition by CCS. It would also include Complete's management of municipal dumps.

B. MARKET DEFINITION

[360] Market definition has traditionally been a central part of merger analysis in Canada and abroad for several reasons. These include (i) helping to focus the assessment on products and locations that are close substitutes for the products and locations of the merging parties, (ii) helping to focus the assessment on the central issue of market power, (iii) helping to identify the merging parties' competitors, (iv) helping to understand the basis for existing levels of price and non-price competition, and (v) facilitating the calculation of market shares and concentration levels. In turn, changes in market shares and concentration levels can be very helpful, albeit not determinative, in understanding the likely competitive effects of mergers and in assisting enforcement agencies to triage cases and to provide guidance to the public.

[361] In recent years, developments in antitrust economics have reached the point that the United States Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission have begun to embrace approaches that "need not rely on market definition" (Horizontal Merger Guidelines (August 19, 2010), at § 6.1). Likewise, the MEGs, at paragraph 3.1, have been amended to stipulate that market definition is not necessarily a required step in the Commissioner's assessment of a merger.

[362] These developments can be accommodated within the existing framework of the Act and the Tribunal's jurisprudence.

[363] In discussing market definition, the Panel noted, at paragraph 92 of its reasons, that the Tribunal has in the past cautioned against losing sight of the ultimate inquiry, which is whether the merger being assessed prevents or lessens, or is likely to prevent or lessen, competition substantially. The Tribunal has also previously noted that the Act does not require that a relevant market be defined in assessing whether competition is likely to be prevented or lessened substantially (Propane 1, above, at para. 56). The logical implication is that defining a relevant market is not a necessary step in assessing whether a merger prevents or lessens, or is likely to prevent or lessen, competition substantially. Accordingly, it will be open to the Tribunal, in an appropriate case, to make this assessment without defining a relevant market.

[364] That said, at this point in time, it is anticipated that such cases will be exceptional. Indeed, failing to define a relevant market may make it very difficult to calculate, or even to reasonably estimate, the actual or likely DWL associated with a merger, for the purposes of the efficiencies defence in section 96 of the Act.

C. THE ANALYTICAL FRAMEWORK IN A "PREVENT" CASE

[365] At the outset of the Commissioner's final oral argument, her counsel urged the Tribunal to clarify the analytical approach applicable to three areas, namely, (i) the assessment of whether a merger prevents, or is likely to prevent, competition substantially, (ii) the efficiencies defence, and (iii) the circumstances in which the Tribunal will entertain the remedy of dissolution, and what factors will be taken into account in determining the appropriate remedy in any particular case.

[366] These topics are all addressed to some extent in the Panel's decision. I would simply like to add some additional comments, particularly with respect to the analytical framework applicable to the Tribunal's assessment of whether a merger prevents, or is likely to prevent, competition substantially.

[367] The Tribunal's general focus in assessing cases brought under the "substantial prevention of competition" and "substantial lessening of competition" branches of section 92 is essentially the same. In brief, that focus is upon whether the merged entity is likely to be able to exercise materially greater market power than in the absence of the merger. The same is true with respect to other sections of the Act that contain these words.

[368] In determining whether competition is likely to be lessened, the more particular focus of the assessment is upon whether the merger is likely to facilitate the exercise of new or increased market power by the merged entity, acting alone or interdependently with one or more rivals. In determining whether competition is likely to be prevented, that more particular focus is upon whether the merger is likely to preserve the existing market power of one or both of the merging parties, by preventing the erosion of such market power that otherwise likely would have taken place if the merger did not occur.

[369] In making its assessment in the latter context, and with respect to a proposed merger, the Tribunal compares (i) the state of competition that would likely exist if the merger were to proceed, with (ii) the state of competition that would likely exist if the merger did not proceed. Scenario (ii) typically is referred to as the "but for", or "counterfactual", scenario. In the case of a completed merger, that "but for" scenario is the market situation that would have been most likely to emerge had the merger not occurred.

[370] When the Tribunal determines that a merger is not likely to enable the merged entity to exercise greater market power than in the absence of the merger, the Tribunal generally will conclude that the merger is not likely to prevent or lessen competition at all, let alone substantially. With respect to allegations that competition is likely to be lessened, this conclusion generally will flow from a finding that the merger is not likely to enable the merged entity to enhance existing, or to create new, market power. With respect to allegations that competition is likely to be prevented, this conclusion generally will flow from a finding that the merger in question is not likely to enable the merged entity to maintain greater existing market power than in the absence of the merger. Once again, the foregoing also applies with respect to other sections of the Act that contain the "prevent or lessen competition substantially" test.

[371] With respect to sellers, market power is the ability to profitably maintain prices above the competitive level, or to reduce levels of non-price competition (such as service, quality or innovation), for an economically meaningful period of time. With respect to purchasers, market power is the ability to profitably depress prices below the competitive level, or to reduce levels of non-price competition, for such a period of time.

[372] In assessing whether market power is likely to be created, enhanced or maintained by a merger or a reviewable trade practice, the Tribunal assesses the intensity of competition, as reflected in its price and non-price dimensions. Competition is a dynamic, rivalrous process through which the exercise of market power is prevented or constrained as firms strive, among other things, to develop, produce, distribute, market and ultimately sell their products in rivalry with other firms. That rivalrous process generates the principal source of pressure on firms to innovate new or better products or business methods, and to deliver those products at competitive prices. In turn, those innovations and competitive prices serve to increase aggregate economic welfare in the economy, the economy's international competitiveness and the average standard of living of people in the economy.

[373] In assessing the intensity of price competition, the Tribunal focuses upon whether prices are likely to be higher than in the absence of the merger. In assessing the intensity of non-price competition, the Tribunal focuses upon whether levels of service, quality, innovation, or other important non-price dimensions of competition are likely to be lower than in the absence of the merger. This focus ensures that the assessment of the intensity of price and non-price dimensions of competition is relative, rather than absolute, in nature (Canada Pipe, above, at paras. 36 – 38). In short, the assessment of levels of price and non-price competition is made relative to the levels of price and non-price competition that likely would exist "but for" the merger. The same approach is taken with respect to non-merger matters that require an assessment of whether competition is likely to be prevented or lessened substantially.

[374] Competition may be said to be prevented when future competition is hindered or impeded from developing. Common examples of such prevention of competition in the merger context include (i) the acquisition of a potential or recent entrant that was likely to expand or to become a meaningful competitor in the relevant market, (ii) an acquisition of an incumbent firm by a potential entrant that otherwise likely would have entered the relevant market de novo, and (iii) an acquisition that prevents what otherwise would have been the likely emergence of an important source of competition from an existing or future rival.

[375] In determining whether a prevention or lessening of competition is likely to be substantial, the Tribunal typically will assess the likely magnitude, scope and duration of any adverse effects on prices or on non-price levels of competition that it may find are likely to result from the creation, enhancement or maintenance of the merged entity's market power. That is to say, the Tribunal assesses the likely degree of such price and non-price effects, the extent of sales within the relevant market in respect of which such effects are likely to be manifested, and the period of time over which such effects are likely to be sustained.

[376] With respect to magnitude or degree, the Tribunal has previously defined substantiality in terms of whether customers are "likely to be faced with significantly higher prices or significantly less choice over a significant period of time than they would be likely to experience in the absence of the acquisitions" (Southam, above, at 285, emphasis added). However, given that the Tribunal has now embraced the hypothetical monopolist framework and the SSNIP test for market definition, it is necessary to revisit this definition of substantiality. This is because if the degree of market power used to define relevant markets is the same as the degree of market power used to assess competitive effects, a merger would not be found to be likely to prevent or lessen competition substantially unless the degree of new, enhanced or maintained market power of the merged entity is the same degree of market power held by as the hypothetical monopolist that was conceptualized for the purposes of market definition.

[377] Accordingly, the degree of market power used in assessing whether competition is likely to be prevented or lessened substantially must be recalibrated downwards. That recalibrated degree of market power is a level of market power required to maintain prices materially higher, or to depress one or more forms of non-price competition to a level that is materially lower, than they likely would be in the absence of the merger. As a practical matter, in the case at bar, this distinction between "material" and "significant" is of little significance, because the Panel has found that prices are likely to be significantly (i.e., at least 10%) higher than they would likely have been in the absence of the Merger.

[378] Turning to the scope dimension of "substantiality", the Tribunal will assess whether the merged entity, acting alone or interdependently with other firms, likely would have the ability to impose the above-mentioned effects in a material part of the relevant market, or in a respect of a material volume of sales.

[379] With respect to the duration dimension of "substantiality", the Tribunal typically will assess whether the merged entity, acting alone or interdependently with other firms, likely would have the ability to sustain the above-mentioned effects for approximately two years or more, relative to the "but for" scenario. This explains why the Tribunal typically assesses future entry and the expansion of potential rivals to the merged entity by reference to a benchmark of approximately two years.

[380] When, as in this case, the merger has already occurred and the Commissioner alleges that the merger is likely to prevent competition substantially, the Tribunal's assessment of the duration dimension of "substantiality" will focus on two things. First, the Tribunal will assess whether the entry or expansion that was prevented or forestalled by the merger likely would have been sufficiently timely, and on a sufficient scale, to have resulted in a material reduction of prices, or a material increase in one or more non-price dimensions of competition, had the merger not occurred. If so, the Tribunal will assess whether the entry or expansion of third parties likely will achieve this result, notwithstanding the fact that the merger has occurred.

[381] Before assessing whether a likely prevention of future competition would be "substantial," the Tribunal also will assess whether that future competition likely would have materialized "but for" the merger in question. In this regard, the Tribunal will assess whether such competition likely would have developed within a reasonable period of time.

[382] What constitutes a reasonable period of time will vary from case to case and will depend on the business under consideration. In situations where steps towards entry or expansion were being taken by the firm whose entry or expansion was prevented or forestalled by the merger, a reasonable period of time would be somewhere in the range of time that typically is required to complete the remaining steps to enter or expand on the scale described above. Similarly, in situations where the entry or expansion was simply in the planning stage, a reasonable period of time would be somewhere in the range of time that typically is required to complete the plans in question and then to complete the steps required to enter or expand on the scale described above. In situations where entry on such a scale cannot occur for several years because, for example, a new blockbuster drug is still in clinical trials, a reasonable period of time would be approximately the period of time that it typically would take for such trials to be completed, relevant regulatory approvals obtained, and commercial quantities of the drug produced and sold. In situations where entry on the scale described above cannot occur for several years because of long term contracts between customers and suppliers, a reasonable period of time would be approximately one year after a volume of business that is sufficient to permit entry or expansion on that scale becomes available.

[383] In all cases, the Tribunal must be satisfied that the future competition that is alleged to be prevented by the merger likely would have materialized within a reasonable period of time. If so, the Tribunal will assess whether the prevention of that competition likely would enable the merged entity to exercise materially greater market power than in the absence of the merger, for a period of approximately two years or more, subsequent to that time.

[384] Notwithstanding the foregoing, it is important to underscore that the magnitude, scope and duration dimensions of "substantiality" are interrelated. This means that where the merged entity is likely to have the ability to prevent a particularly large price decrease that likely would occur "but for" the merger, the volume of sales in respect of which the price decrease would have had to be experienced before it will be found to be "material" may be less than would otherwise be the case. The same is true with respect to the period of time in respect of which the likely adverse price effects must be experienced – it may be less than the two year period that typically is used. Likewise, where the volume of sales in respect of which a price decrease is likely to occur is particularly large, (i) the degree of price decrease required to meet the "materiality" threshold may be less than would otherwise be the case, and (ii) the period of time required for a prevention of competition to be considered to be "substantial" may be less than two years.

[385] In conducting its assessment of whether a merger is likely to prevent competition substantially, the Tribunal also assesses whether other firms likely would enter or expand on a scale similar to that which was prevented or forestalled by the merger, and in a similar timeframe. Where the Tribunal finds that such entry or expansion likely would occur even if the merger proceeds, it is unlikely to conclude that the merger is likely to prevent competition substantially.

[386] In summary, to demonstrate that a merger is likely to prevent competition substantially, the Commissioner must establish, on a balance of probabilities, that "but for" the merger, one of the merging parties likely would have entered or expanded within the relevant market within a reasonable period of time, and on a sufficient scale, to effect either a material reduction of prices or a material increase in one or more levels of non-price competition, in a material part of the market, for approximately two years. Alternatively, the Commissioner must establish a similar likely effect on prices or on levels of non-price dimensions of competition as a result of the development of another type of future competition that likely would have occurred "but for" the merger.

D. WHEN EFFICIENCIES CAN BE CONSIDERED

[387] The Tribunal's decision in Propane 3, above, has been interpreted as suggesting that cost reductions and other efficiencies can never be considered prior to the triggering of the defence set forth in section 96. This appears to be a misreading of Propane 3. The source of this misunderstanding appears to be found in paragraph 137 of that decision. The focus of the discussion in that paragraph was on the differences between the Canadian and American approaches to efficiencies, and, specifically, whether section 96 requires the efficiencies likely to result from a merger to be so great as to ensure that there are no adverse price effects of the merger.

[388] There may well be situations in which any cost reductions or other efficiencies likely to be attained through a merger will increase rivalry, and thereby increase competition, in certain ways. These include: (i) by enabling the merged entity to better compete with its rivals, for example, by assisting two smaller rivals to achieve economies of scale or scope enjoyed by one or more larger rivals, (ii) by increasing the merged entity's incentive to expand production and to reduce prices, thereby reducing its incentive to coordinate with other firms in the market post-merger, and (iii) by leading to the introduction of new or better products or processes.

[389] There is no "double counting" of such efficiencies when it is determined that the merger in question is likely to prevent or lessen competition substantially and a trade-off assessment is then conducted under section 96. This is because, in that assessment, such efficiencies would only be considered on the "efficiencies" side of the balancing process contemplated by section 96. They would not directly or indirectly be considered on the "effects" side of the balancing process, because they would not be part of any cognizable (i) quantitative effects (e.g., the DWL or any portion of the wealth transfer that may be established to represent socially adverse effects), or (ii) qualitative effects (e.g., a reduction in dynamic competition, service or quality). Moreover, at the section 92 stage of the analysis, they typically would not be found to be a source of any new, increased or maintained market power that must be identified in order to conclude that the merger is likely to prevent or lessen competition substantially.

E. THE EFFICIENCIES DEFENCE

[390] The analytical framework applicable to the assessment of the efficiencies defence has been set forth in significant detail in the Panel's decision. I simply wish to make a few additional observations.

(i) Conceptual framework

[391] In broad terms, section 96 contemplates a balancing of (i) the "cost" to the economy that would be associated with making the order that the Tribunal has determined should otherwise be made under section 92 (the "Section 92 Order"), and (ii) the "cost" to the economy of not making the Section 92 Order. The former cost is the aggregate of the lost efficiencies that otherwise would likely be attained as a result of the merger. The latter cost is the aggregate of the effects of any prevention or lessening of competition likely to result from the merger, if the Section 92 Order is not made.

[392] Section 96 achieves this balancing of "costs" by (i) confining efficiencies that are cognizable in the trade-off assessment to those that "would not likely be attained if the [Section 92 Order] were made", as contemplated by subsection 96(1), and (ii) confining the effects that may be considered in the trade-off assessment to "the effects of any prevention or lessening of competition that will result or is likely to result from the merger or proposed merger".

[393] In short, the efficiencies that are eliminated by this language in subsection 96(1), which is referred to at paragraph 264 of the Panel's decision as the fifth "screen" established by section 96, are not considered in the trade-off assessment because they would not represent a "cost" to society associated with making the Section 92 Order. That is to say, the efficiencies excluded by this screen either would likely be achieved through alternative means in any event, or they would be unaffected by the Section 92 Order. This could occur, for example, because they would be attained in one or more markets or parts of the merged entity's operations that would be unaffected by the Section 92 Order. It is in this sense that the assessment contemplated by section 96 is heavily dependent on the nature of the Section 92 Order.

[394] That said, to the extent that there are efficiencies in other markets that are so inextricably linked to the cognizable efficiencies in the relevant market(s) that they would not likely be attained if the Section 92 Order were made, they are cognizable under section 96 and will be included in the trade-off assessment.

[395] In assessing whether efficiencies are likely to be achieved through alternative means, the Tribunal will assess the realities of the market(s) concerned, and will not exclude efficiencies from its analysis on the basis of speculation that the efficiencies could possibly be achieved through such alternative means.

[396] It bears emphasizing that, under section 96, the relevant counterfactual is the scenario in which the Section 92 Order is made. This is not necessarily the scenario in which the merger does not occur.

(ii) Socially adverse effects

[397] At paragraph 284 of the Panel's decision, it was observed that the Commissioner adduced no evidence with respect to what the Tribunal in the past has characterized as being socially adverse effects. The Panel also observed that the Commissioner conceded that the merger is not likely to result in any such effects. Accordingly, the Panel confined its assessment to the anti-competitive effects claimed by the Commissioner.

[398] However, given that the Commissioner requested, in her final oral submissions, that the Panel clarify the analytical approach applicable to the efficiencies defence, the following observations will be provided with respect to the potential role of socially adverse effects in the trade-off analysis contemplated by section 96, in future cases.

[399] At paragraph 205 of its final argument, CCS characterized the approach established by the Federal Court of Appeal in Propane 2, above, as being the "balancing weights approach." This is the same terminology that was used by Dr. Baye at footnote 14 of his reply report, where he referred to the approach established in Propane 3, above, and Propane 4, above. However, as the Tribunal noted in Propane 3, at para. 336, balancing weights "is incomplete [as an approach] and useful only as a tool to assist in its broader inquiry" under section 96. With this in mind, the Tribunal characterized that broader inquiry mandated by Propane 2 in terms of the "socially adverse effects" approach. However, on reflection, the term "weighted surplus" approach would seem to be preferable.

[400] As noted at paragraphs 281 – 283 of the Panel's decision, the total surplus approach remains the starting point for assessing the effects contemplated by the efficiencies defence set forth in section 96 of the Act. After the Tribunal has assessed the evidence with respect to the quantifiable (i.e., the DWL) and non-quantifiable anti-competitive effects of the merger in question, it will assess any evidence that has been tendered with respect to socially adverse effects. In other words, if the Commissioner alleges that the merger is likely to give rise to socially adverse effects, the Tribunal will determine how to treat the wealth transfer that is likely to be associated with any adverse price effects of the merger. The wealth transfer is briefly discussed at paragraph 282 of the Panel's decision.

[402] Where it is determined that the merger likely will result in a socially adverse transfer of wealth from one or more identified lower income group(s) to higher income shareholders of the merged entity, a subjective decision must be made as to how to weigh the relevant part(s) of the wealth transfer. (If the entire wealth transfer will involve a socially adverse transfer, then it would be necessary to decide how to weigh the full transfer.) If the income effect on some purchaser groups would be more severe than on others, different weightings among the groups may be required.

[404] For example, in Propane, the aggregate reduction in consumer surplus was estimated to be $43.5 million, i.e., the estimated $40.5 million wealth transfer plus the estimated $3 million DWL. By comparison, the aggregate increase in producer surplus was estimated to be $69.7 million, i.e., the sum of the efficiency gains accepted by the Tribunal, namely $29.2 million, plus the wealth transfer of $40.5 million. The balancing weight was therefore represented by w in the following formula: $1(69.7) - w\ ($43.5) = 0$. Solving for w yielded a value of 1.6, which was the weight at which the consumer losses and the producer gains just balanced. (See Propane 3, above, at paras. 102-104.) Accordingly, for consumer losses to outweigh producer gains, they would have had to be given a weight of greater than 1.6, assuming that producer gains were given a weight of 1.

[405] Professor Townley's helpful insight was that members of the Tribunal often would be in a position to subjectively determine, even in the absence of substantial information, whether there was any reasonable basis for believing that a weighting greater than the balancing weight ought to be applied to the socially adverse portion(s) of the wealth transfer. If not, then notwithstanding an insufficiency of the information required to accurately calculate a full set of distributional weights, it could be concluded that the efficiencies likely to result from the merger would outweigh the adverse effects on consumer surplus. Unfortunately, there was not sufficient information adduced in Propane to permit the Tribunal to assess whether the estimated balancing weight of 1.6 was reasonable, given the socio-economic differences between and among consumers and shareholders (Propane 3, above, at para. 338).

[406] Where the balancing weights tool does not facilitate a determination of the weights to be assigned to any identified socially adverse effects, other evidence may be relied upon to assist in this regard. For example, in Propane 3, the Tribunal relied upon Statistics Canada's report entitled Family Expenditure in Canada, 1996, which suggested that only 4.7% of purchasers of bottled propane were from the lowest-income quintile, while 29.1% were from the highest-income quintile. The Tribunal ultimately determined that the redistributive effects of the merger on customers in the lowest-income quintile would be socially adverse, and included in its trade-off analysis an estimate of $2.6 million to reflect those adverse effects. Although it found that it had no basis upon which to determine whether the DWL should be weighted equally with adverse redistribution effects, the Tribunal ultimately concluded that, even if the $2.6 million in adverse distribution effects were weighted twice as heavily as the $3 million reduction in DWL and a further $3 million to represent the adverse qualitative effects of the merger, the combined adverse impact on consumer surplus would not exceed $11.2 million (Propane 3, above, at para. 371). Since that estimate was still far below the recognized efficiency gains of $29.2 million, it concluded that the defence in section 96 had been met. This conclusion was upheld on appeal.

(iii) Non-quantifiable/qualitative effects

[407] The Panel's assessment of the non-quantifiable effects that were considered in the section 96 trade-off assessment in this case is set forth at paragraphs 305-307 of its reasons.

[408] I simply wish to add that where there is not sufficient evidence to quantify, even roughly, effects that ordinarily would be quantifiable, it will remain open to the Tribunal to accord qualitative weight to such effects. For example, in the case at bar, it would have been open to accord qualitative weight to the anti-competitive effects of the Merger expected to occur outside the Contestable Area, given that the evidence established that such effects were likely, but could not be calculated due to shortcomings in the evidence. As it turned out, it was unnecessary for the Panel to give those effects any weighting whatsoever.

[409] Similarly, had the Panel not accepted the Commissioner's evidence with respect to the quantitative magnitude of the DWL, such that there was then no evidence on this specific matter, it would have been open to the Panel to accord qualitative weight to the fact that there would have been some significant DWL associated with the adverse price effects which it determined were likely to result from the Merger. The same will be true in other cases in which either it is not possible to reliably quantify the likely DWL, even in rough terms, or the Commissioner fails to adduce reliable evidence regarding the extent of the likely DWL, at the appropriate time.

REASONS FOR ORDER AND ORDER

Table of contents

I. Executive summary

[1] The Commissioner of Competition (the "Commissioner") has filed an application pursuant to section 79 of the Competition Act, RSC 1985, c C-34, as amended (the "Act"), for an order prohibiting the Toronto Real Estate Board ("TREB") from engaging in certain anti-competitive acts in connection with the supply of residential real estate brokerage services in the Greater Toronto Area ("GTA").

[2] In brief, the Commissioner contends that, by restricting access to certain Multiple Listing Service ("MLS") information on the password-protected virtual office websites ("VOW") of its real estate brokers and salesperson members (the "Members"), and by restricting the manner in which its Members may display and use that information, TREB's conduct constitutes an abuse of dominant position under section 79. The Commissioner asks the Tribunal to remedy TREB's alleged substantial prevention of competition in two general ways: First, by prohibiting TREB from enforcing its current restrictions on the display and use of MLS data, and second, by requiring TREB to include certain data in an electronic data feed to its Members who use it for display on their password-protected VOWs. TREB responds that it opted to exclude the disputed information from its VOW data feed after careful consideration of privacy and copyright issues, and that its VOW policy does not substantially lessen or prevent competition. Among other things, it maintains that any incremental impact that its VOW policy may have on competition is not substantial.

[3] For the reasons that follow, the Tribunal has decided to partially grant the application brought by the Commissioner. The terms of the Tribunal's order (the "Order") will primarily address certain restrictive aspects of the rules and policy that TREB has adopted with respect to VOWs, which are defined below as the VOW Restrictions. The specific terms of the Order will be determined after the parties have provided written submissions addressing this issue of remedy and have had an opportunity to make oral submissions. A Direction to that effect will be issued by the Tribunal shortly following the issuance of these reasons.

[4] In the course of reaching its decision, the Tribunal determined that the Commissioner has established, on a balance of probabilities, that the three elements of section 79 have been satisfied. The Tribunal first concluded that TREB substantially or completely controls the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA, within the meaning of paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act. The Tribunal then found that TREB has engaged in, and continues to engage in, a practice of anti-competitive acts, as contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(b). In essence, that practice is comprised of the enactment and maintenance of the VOW Restrictions. In addition, the Tribunal concluded that the VOW Restrictions have had, are having and are likely to have the effect of preventing competition substantially in a market, as contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(c). The Tribunal reached that conclusion after finding, among other things, that the VOW Restrictions have substantially reduced the degree of non-price competition in the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA, relative to the degree that would likely exist in the absence of those restrictions. Most importantly, this includes a considerable adverse impact on innovation, quality and the range of residential real estate brokerage services that likely would be offered in the GTA, in the absence of the VOW Restrictions.

[5] The Tribunal observes that the Commissioner's application raised particular challenges for several reasons: (i) it involved an assessment of dynamic competition and innovation, (ii) significant developments have occurred in the relevant market since this application was initially filed in May 2011, and (iii) limited quantitative evidence was adduced regarding the impact of changes in certain local markets in the United States and in Nova Scotia, relative to other local markets where similar changes did not occur.

[6] Among other things, the remedy to be imposed on TREB under the Tribunal's Order will remove important restrictions on the ability of innovative, Internet-based brokerages and other competitors in the GTA residential real estate brokerage services market to offer new products and services to consumers, in competition with brokers and agents who rely on more traditional products and services.

II. Introduction and overview

A. Procedural history

[7] The Tribunal's decision in this proceeding follows a long procedural history going back to May 2011 when the Commissioner first filed a Notice of Application (the "Initial Application") for an order against TREB under the abuse of dominance provisions of the Act.

[8] In the fall of 2012, the Tribunal held an initial hearing over a period of six weeks (the "Initial Hearing"). In April 2013, the panel dismissed the Commissioner's application (The Commissioner of Competition v The Toronto Real Estate Board, 2013 Comp. Trib. 9 ("TREB CT")). However, in February 2014, the Federal Court of Appeal set aside the Tribunal's order dismissing the application and referred the matter back to the Tribunal for a reconsideration on the merits (Commissioner of Competition v Toronto Real Estate Board, 2014 FCA 29 ("TREB FCA"), leave to appeal to SCC refused, 35799 (24 July 2014)).

[9] The Commissioner's application was reconsidered on the merits by a differently-constituted panel, and a redetermination hearing was held by the Tribunal in the fall of 2015, over a period of eight days (the "Redetermination Hearing").

B. The parties' pleadings

[10] In May 2011, the Commissioner had applied to the Tribunal for an order under subsection 79(1) of the Act, prohibiting TREB from directly or indirectly enacting, interpreting or enforcing certain rules, policies and agreements (the "MLS Restrictions") that allegedly have excluded, prevented or impeded the emergence of innovative business models and service offerings in respect of the supply of residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA. Those business models and service offerings involve the use of a particular Internet-based data-sharing vehicle known as a VOW to offer new products and services to home buyers and home sellers.

[11] The Commissioner also sought an order under subsection 79(2), directing TREB to take certain actions to overcome the effects of its alleged practice of anti-competitive acts.

[12] The Commissioner's Initial Application focused on MLS Restrictions that exclude or prevent TREB's Members from innovating by using certain information in TREB's MLS system to operate a VOW. However, the relief sought by the Commissioner was cast in language that appeared to extend beyond the MLS Restrictions. In this regard, the statement of relief sought was couched in terms of "any restrictions, including the MLS Restrictions" that have the alleged anti-competitive effects. Other passages of the Initial Application expressed a concern about the impact of such effects on brokers who operate VOWs or other innovative business models, or who offer services similar to VOWs.

[13] That wording remained in the Amended Notice of Application (the "Application") filed by the Commissioner in July 2011. That version of the Application augmented the initial version primarily by addressing the VOW policy proposed by TREB and the provisions that were added to TREB's MLS rules in respect of VOWs (collectively, the "VOW Policy and Rules") and that TREB sent to its Members a few weeks after the Initial Application was filed. The Application was not modified for the Redetermination Hearing.

[14] As it turned out, the Commissioner's focus in this proceeding was primarily on the restrictive aspects of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules and terms included in TREB's VOW Data Feed Agreement (the "Data Feed Agreement") (collectively, the "VOW Restrictions"). These restrictions notably exclude certain types of information from the VOW data feed (the "VOW Data Feed") that TREB makes available to its Members. This excluded information concerns data with respect to: sold and "pending sold" homes; withdrawn, expired, suspended or terminated listings (the "WEST" listings); and offers of commission to brokers who represent the successful home purchaser, known as "cooperating brokers" (collectively, the "Disputed Data"). Two other principal aspects of the VOW Restrictions include prohibitions on (i) the use of the information included in the VOW Data Feed for any purpose other than display on a website, and (ii) the display on a VOW of the information contained in the Disputed Data, which TREB makes available to its Members in other ways.

[15] Nevertheless, at the end of his closing submissions at the Redetermination Hearing, the Commissioner confirmed that the relief being sought extends beyond a request for an order requiring TREB to include the Disputed Data in its VOW Data Feed, and to eliminate the above-mentioned prohibitions. The Commissioner maintained that his overarching objective is to ensure that there is no discrimination between the modes in which information is delivered by TREB to its Members.

[16] Accordingly, in addition to requiring the Disputed Data to be included in the VOW Data Feed, the order being sought by the Commissioner would reflect this general non-discrimination principle, as well as ensuring that the VOW Data Feed includes all MLS information that is available in other ways to TREB's Members, and that there are no restrictions on how VOW operators or other Members may use MLS information on the VOW portions of their websites.

[17] In brief, the Commissioner seeks an order that would, in his view, ensure a level playing field between more traditional "bricks and mortar" brokers and those who wish to provide new products and services based on MLS information in the manner that they think is appropriate, and in particular over the Internet.

[18] The Commissioner also acknowledged in his closing submissions at the Redetermination Hearing that no relief is being sought in this proceeding in respect of TREB's conduct prior to 2011. Accordingly, these reasons will not assess whether any of that conduct constituted a practice of anti-competitive acts that prevented or lessened competition substantially, or was likely to do so.

[19] In the Application, the Commissioner alleges that each of the three elements that must be satisfied under paragraphs 79(1)(a), (b) and (c) of the Act, respectively, before an order may be made by the Tribunal under section 79, are met. More specifically, the Commissioner contends that:

a. TREB substantially or completely controls the supply of residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA;

b. The MLS Restrictions constitute a practice of anti-competitive acts, the purpose and effect of which is to discipline and exclude innovative brokers who would otherwise compete with TREB's Members who use more traditional business methods; and

c. The MLS Restrictions have lessened and prevented, and will continue to lessen and prevent, competition substantially in the market for the supply of residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA. In particular, the Commissioner asserts that by restricting brokers' use of VOWs, the MLS Restrictions discourage entry and expansion by brokers wishing to offer innovative services, with the result that the positions of more traditional brokers are entrenched, their market power is maintained, and innovation is inhibited.

[20] In its Response, TREB asserts, among other things, that the Commissioner has ignored its copyright in the MLS database and that, under subsection 79(5) of the Act, an act engaged in pursuant only to the exercise of any right or enjoyment of any interest derived from the Copyright Act, RSC 1985, c C-42 is not an anti-competitive act for the purposes of section 79.

[21] Moreover, TREB maintains that none of the three elements set forth in subsection 79(1) is met. Specifically, TREB submits that:

a. It does not substantially or completely control the supply of residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA, primarily because it has no market power in that market and has no motivation to exercise any market power, due to the fact that it is not itself a supplier of residential real estate brokerage services;

b. Neither the VOW Policy and Rules nor any of the other conditions that TREB places on its Members' access to and use of the MLS system have the purpose of having a negative effect on a competitor that is predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary. Instead, they have been implemented for a number of legitimate purposes. These include preserving the value of the MLS system for the benefit of its Members, and safeguarding the privacy rights of its Members and their customers by ensuring that its Members are compliant with their respective obligations under privacy legislation and the Code of Ethics, O Reg 580/05 (the "Code of Ethics") established by the Real Estate Council of Ontario ("RECO"), pursuant to the Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, 2002, SO 2002, c 30, Sched C ("REBBA"); and

c. There is no basis for the Commissioner's allegation that, "but for" TREB's impugned conduct, there would likely be greater innovation, enhanced quality of service or increased price competition in the supply of residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA. TREB contends that the VOW Policy and Rules do not create, maintain or enhance market power. Furthermore, in the context of the broader competition that is occurring in the supply of real estate brokerage services to buyers and sellers of homes in the GTA, TREB submits that the incremental negative effect of its VOW Policy and Rules, if any, is not significant.

[22] In the Reply filed in September 2011, after the VOW Policy and Rules were formally adopted by TREB and its Members, the Commissioner rejects TREB's above-mentioned positions.

[23] With respect to TREB's alleged substantial or complete control of the supply of residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA, the Commissioner submits that TREB's position that it does not compete with brokers ignores the reality that TREB enacts and enforces its rules, policies and agreements for the benefit of its Members, most of whom pursue a traditional business model. The Commissioner maintains that the enactment of the VOW Policy and Rules demonstrates TREB's substantial or complete ongoing control of the relevant market, and that brokers cannot realistically compete without access to TREB's MLS system.

[24] With respect to TREB's alleged practice of anti-competitive acts, the Commissioner states that the purpose and effect of TREB's MLS Restrictions is to discipline and exclude innovative brokers who would otherwise compete with TREB's traditional member brokers using their VOWs. The Commissioner adds that by preventing its Members from providing certain MLS data through a VOW, including "highly valuable information" pertaining to the sold prices of homes, TREB discriminates against innovative brokers. This is because TREB imposes no corresponding restrictions on traditional brokers who provide the very same MLS information to consumers by means other than a VOW. The Commissioner submits that the ultimate effect of the MLS Restrictions is to exclude potential competitors who are not yet in the market as well as those innovative member brokers who are eager to compete using a VOW.

[25] The Commissioner further submits that TREB's business justifications for the MLS Restrictions should be rejected. Regarding privacy, the Commissioner argues that TREB's position is belied by the fact that the information at issue in this proceeding is currently and freely distributed by traditional brokers to consumers on a regular basis by means other than a VOW.

[26] Regarding TREB's copyright, the Commissioner asserts that the exception in subsection 79(5) of the Act does not apply because TREB has not established a copyright in the MLS database (including the Disputed Data) and because, even if it had, the MLS Restrictions go well beyond a mere exercise of any rights that TREB may have under the Copyright Act.

[27] Finally, the Commissioner maintains that the MLS Restrictions, and in particular the narrower VOW Restrictions, have lessened and prevented, and will continue to lessen and prevent, competition substantially in the market for the supply of residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA. The Commissioner affirms that this is so because, "but for" those restrictions, consumers would benefit from substantially greater competition in that market. Specifically, the Commissioner states that the MLS Restrictions effectively protect and perpetuate the static traditional brokerage model for the delivery of residential real estate brokerage services. The impugned restrictions on innovative, Internet-based business models such as VOWs thus have negatively affected the range and quality of services being offered over the Internet by brokers to their customers and have denied consumers the benefits of downward pressure on commission rates that would otherwise exist.

[28] Given that the parties' submissions and the evidence filed in this case centered almost entirely on the VOW Restrictions, those specific restrictions are the focus of this decision. However, the Tribunal will remain open to considering the inclusion of terms in its Order that go beyond the VOW Restrictions, after it has reviewed the parties' written submission on remedy and has considered the oral submissions that will be made during the hearing that will be scheduled with respect to the specific issue of the remedy to be imposed in this case.

C. Section 79 of the Act

[29] Pursuant to subsection 79(1) of the Act, the Tribunal may make an order prohibiting all or any of the persons described in paragraph 79(1)(a) from engaging in a practice described in paragraph 79(1)(b), where it finds, on a balance of probabilities, that the three elements described in that subsection have been met. Those are that:

a. One or more persons substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business;

b. That person or those persons have engaged in or are engaging in a practice of anti-competitive acts; and

c. The practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market.

[30] It is important to note that section 79 specifies three distinct elements that must each be determined independently. In Canada (Commissioner of Competition) v Canada Pipe Co, 2006 FCA 233 ("Canada Pipe FCA"), leave to appeal to SCC refused, 31637 (10 May 2005), the Federal Court of Appeal stressed that, in abuse of dominance cases, the Tribunal must avoid "the interpretive danger of impermissible erosion or conflation of the discrete underlying statutory tests" (Canada Pipe FCA at para 28). However, the same evidence can be relevant to more than one element (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 27-28).

[31] Pursuant to subsection 79(2), if an order is not likely to restore competition, the Tribunal may, in addition to or in lieu of making an order under subsection 79(1), make an order directing any or all of the persons against whom an order is sought to take such actions as are reasonable and necessary to overcome the effects of the practice in a market in which the Tribunal has found the three above-mentioned elements to have been met.

[32] In determining whether a practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market, subsection 79(4) further requires the Tribunal to consider whether the practice is a result of superior competitive performance.

[33] An exception to the Tribunal's order-making powers under subsections 79(1) and (2) of the Act is provided by subsection 79(5), which stipulates that for the purposes of section 79, an act engaged in pursuant only to the exercise of any right or enjoyment of any interest derived under certain legislation pertaining to intellectual or industrial property, including the Copyright Act, is not an anti-competitive act.

[34] The Commissioner bears the burden of establishing the three elements of subsection 79(1), and the Tribunal must make a positive determination in respect of each of those elements before it may issue an order. The burden of proof with respect to each element is the civil standard, that is, on the balance of probabilities.

[35] The full text of section 79 of the Act, and of section 78, which sets forth a non-exhaustive list of anti-competitive acts, is reproduced in Schedule "A" to this decision.

D. The Tribunal's initial decision

[36] In TREB CT, the initial panel of the Tribunal dismissed the Commissioner's Application.

[37] In brief, the panel concluded that the Commissioner had not met the requirements of paragraph 79(1)(b) for three reasons. First, it relied on its interpretation of Canada Pipe FCA at paragraph 68, where the Federal Court of Appeal held that "to be considered 'anti-competitive' under paragraph 79(1)(b), an act must have an intended predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor." The panel found that, because TREB does not compete with its Members, the MLS Restrictions could not have the negative effect on a competitor required by Canada Pipe FCA, as interpreted by the panel. It found that Canada Pipe FCA served as a binding precedent.

[38] Second, the panel found that the Application was inconsistent with the guidelines entitled The Abuse of Dominance Provisions, issued in September 2012 by the Commissioner (the "Guidelines"). The panel noted that while the Guidelines state, at section 3.2, that "certain acts not specifically directed at competitors could still be considered to have an anti-competitive purpose," the *Guideline*s do not clearly stipulate that a dominant firm's conduct might fall within the purview of section 79, even though that firm may not compete in the relevant market.

[39] Third, the panel stated that the language of subsection 79(4), which requires the Tribunal to consider whether an impugned practice is a result of superior competitive performance, makes it clear that paragraph 79(1)(b) applies only if the dominant firm in question is a competitor.

[40] The panel therefore concluded that the Application did not meet the requirements of paragraph 79(1)(b). The panel also observed, with respect to paragraph 79(1)(a), that even if it could be established that TREB had market power, the requirements of that paragraph would not be met because that market power would not be exercised by a firm that competes in the relevant market identified by the Commissioner, namely, the supply of residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA. Finally, the panel also observed that the requirements of paragraph 79(1)(c) had not been met, as there were no anti-competitive acts under paragraph 79(1)(b).

E. The Federal Court of Appeal's decision

[41] In February 2014, the Federal Court of Appeal set aside the Tribunal's order dismissing the Commissioner's Application and referred the matter back to the Tribunal for reconsideration (TREB FCA).

[42] In reaching its conclusion, the Court acknowledged that, in the passages of Canada Pipe FCA relied upon by the Tribunal, the panel interpreted the word "competitor" to mean "competitor of the person who is the target of the Commissioner's application for a subsection 79(1) order." Speaking for the Court, Sharlow JA stated that there was "nothing in the language or context of the Competition Act to justify the addition of those qualifying words" (TREB FCA at para 17). She added that the addition of those qualifying words also could not be justified by the facts as found in Canada Pipe FCA. With respect to the dispute between the Commissioner and TREB, Sharlow JA stated that she did not accept that the Court intended its decision in Canada Pipe FCA to preclude the application of subsection 79(1) to TREB in respect of a rule that it makes binding on its Members (TREB FCA at para 18).

[43] In further discussing that conclusion, Sharlow JA referred to paragraph 78(1)(f) of the Act. That specific provision describes one type of act that is deemed to be anti-competitive for the purposes of section 79. It appears as part of a non-exhaustive list of other acts contained at subsection 78(1) that are also deemed to be anti-competitive. Paragraph 78(1)(f) refers to the "buying up of products to prevent the erosion of existing price levels." Sharlow JA observed that, in Canada Pipe FCA, the Court recognized that this paragraph 78(1)(f) describes an act that is not necessarily taken by a person against that person's own competitor. She proceeded to note that the Court in that case did not reconcile this with its view that "to be considered 'anti-competitive' under paragraph 79(1)(b), an act must have an intended predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor" (TREB FCA at paras 15 and 19, referring to Canada Pipe FCA at paras 64-68). In expressing disagreement with the interpretation given to Canada Pipe FCA by the Tribunal, Sharlow JA stated that "paragraph 78(1)(f) is an indication that Parliament did not intend the scope of subsection 79(1) to be limited in such a way that it cannot possibly apply to [TREB] in this case" (TREB FCA at para 20). She added that if the Court had intended to adopt the contrary interpretation as a general rule, she "would be compelled to find that aspect of Canada Pipe to be manifestly wrong because it is based on flawed reasoning (specifically, the unexplained inconsistency in the reasons)" (TREB FCA at para 20).

[44] Sharlow JA then proceeded to briefly address two other points identified by the Tribunal in its reasons for dismissing the Commissioner's Application.

[45] With respect to the Guidelines, she simply mentioned that they provide no useful guidance to the Court in interpreting section 79 (TREB FCA at para 21). With respect to subsection 79(4), she agreed with the Commissioner that it only applies for the purpose of assessing whether a practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening of competition substantially in a market, as contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(c) of the Act. In other words, this provision does not support the view that, "as a matter of law, a subsection 79(1) order cannot be made against [TREB] simply because it does not compete with its members" (TREB FCA at para 22).

III. Parties and intervenors

[46] The Commissioner is the public official appointed by the Governor in Council under section 7 of the Act to be responsible for the enforcement and administration of the Act.

[47] TREB is a not-for-profit corporation that was incorporated in 1920 pursuant to the laws of Ontario. It is Canada's largest real estate board and serves approximately 42,500 Members. Its core purpose is to advance the continuing success of its Members. To that end, it provides a range of services to those Members, including access to and use of the MLS system. TREB's activities are guided by a 16-member Board of Directors elected by TREB's Members from among their ranks. Additional information regarding TREB's operations will be provided later at various points in these reasons.

[48] The Canadian Real Estate Association ("CREA") and Realtysellers Real Estate Inc. ("RRE") were granted leave to intervene in this proceeding.

[49] Prior to the Initial Hearing, the Tribunal was advised that RRE was no longer represented but was reserving its intervention rights. However, no one appeared for RRE throughout that hearing and no submissions were made on its behalf. Subsequently, the Tribunal issued an order quashing its prior order granting RRE leave to intervene (The Commissioner of Competition v The Toronto Real Estate Board, 2014 Comp. Trib. 5). Accordingly, no further references will be made to RRE as an intervenor.

[50] CREA is a not-for-profit trade association that represents over 110,000 real estate brokers and agents working through approximately 90 real estate boards and associations across Canada, including provincial and territorial associations. Among other things, it describes itself as the national voice for the Canadian real estate industry, including on competition law and technological issues. Membership in CREA is open to real estate boards and associations, as well as to their members in good standing, provided that they agree to be bound by, among other things, CREA's Realtor Code, and by various rules, by-laws and policies that it has issued.

IV. Industry background

A. Provincial legislation

[51] Each province/territory in Canada regulates and licenses the brokers and agents within its jurisdiction. In Ontario, brokers and agents are regulated by the REBBA. Among other things, the REBBA provides that no one may trade in real estate in Ontario unless they are registered under that legislation.

B. The Real Estate Council of Ontario

[52] RECO is responsible for administering the REBBA and the regulations promulgated thereunder, on behalf of the provincial government. One such regulation is RECO's Code of Ethics.

C. The Ontario Real Estate Association

[53] According to information on its website, the Ontario Real Estate Association ("OREA") was founded in 1922 to organize real estate activities across the province. It represents approximately 65,000 real estate broker and salesperson members of Ontario's 40 real estate boards. In addition to serving its members through a wide variety of publications, educational programs and special services, it apparently provides all real estate licensing courses in Ontario.

D. Brokers, agents, realtors and salespersons

[54] Real estate brokerages are businesses that are registered under the REBBA to trade in real estate. Brokerages can be independent but are often franchisees, operating one or more offices under the banner of a corporate franchise, such as RE/MAX, Royal LePage, Sutton Group or Century 21.

[55] Brokerage franchisees pay fees to their franchisor in exchange for the use of the latter's corporate brand.

[56] Each brokerage must have a broker of record. Among other things, that individual is responsible for all of the trading activities of a registered brokerage.

[57] The terms "broker" and "salesperson" are defined in the REBBA as persons who have the prescribed qualifications to be registered as such under the REBBA and who are employed by a brokerage to trade in real estate. A broker is subject to additional requirements under the legislation, typically supervises salespersons and may be the owner of the brokerage.

[58] The term "agent" is not defined by the REBBA. However, the Tribunal understands the term to mean a person who is registered as a salesperson and who is employed by a brokerage to trade in real estate.

[59] "REALTOR" is a certification trade-mark that is indirectly jointly owned in Canada by CREA and the National Association of Realtors ("NAR"). The NAR is essentially the equivalent of CREA in the United States.

[60] The Tribunal understands that a broker, salesperson or agent becomes a "realtor" in Canada when he or she becomes a member of CREA and agrees to be bound by CREA's Realtor Code, its by-laws, its rules and its policies.

[61] Although the terms "broker", "salesperson", "agent" and "realtor" appear to have been used interchangeably throughout these proceedings, the term "agent" will typically be used in these reasons when referring to individuals who trade in real estate.

E. The home purchase and sale process

[62] Although the involvement of an agent is not required in order for real estate transactions to be completed in Ontario, the majority of buyers and sellers choose to work with agents.

[63] Most agents routinely deal with both categories of clients, and sometimes represent both the seller and the buyer in the same real estate transaction.

[64] A home seller who retains an agent ordinarily will enter into a contractual arrangement known as a "listing agreement" with the agent's brokerage. Among other things, the standard listing agreement prepared by OREA (the "Listing Agreement") and recommended by TREB for use by its Members authorizes the brokerage to market and sell the home on behalf of the owner.

[65] Services typically provided by agents to home sellers include: (1) educating the seller about the real estate market; (2) assisting the seller to determine the asking price for his or her home; (3) preparing the listing; (4) marketing the home to potential buyers; (5) representing the seller in negotiations on behalf of the seller; and (6) finalizing the transaction.

[66] As with home sellers, residential buyers will often retain an agent to assist them with the purchase of a house. As noted earlier, the agent representing a buyer is known as a "cooperating broker."

[67] In most circumstances, and at the recommendation of TREB, the agent and buyer will enter into either OREA's standard Buyer Representation Agreement (the "BRA") or OREA's Buyer Customer Service Agreement (the "BCSA"). Services typically provided to home buyers by agents include: (1) educating the buyer about the real estate market; (2) assisting the buyer to determine the characteristics and price of the home he or she wishes to purchase; (3) identifying and showing homes which meet the buyer's objectives; (4) assisting the buyer to determine the price to be offered; (5) negotiating a purchase on the buyer's behalf; and (6) finalizing the transaction.

[68] In determining a recommended asking or offer price for a client, an agent usually conducts a comparative market analysis ("CMA"). A CMA typically compares a property which is listed or is about to be listed with nearby properties that have recently sold. This assists in determining the market value of the subject property. CMAs vary widely, and can involve a simple or a very detailed analysis.

[69] Agents typically receive compensation in the form of a commission payment calculated as a percentage of the sale price. Generally, home sellers pay a commission to the listing brokerage, which then offers a portion of that commission to the cooperating brokerage. Among other things, this encourages the cooperating broker to show the home.

F. The MLS system

[70] An important service provided by TREB to its Members is access to the MLS system. The MLS system is a cooperative selling system which allows agents to share information and provide maximum exposure of properties listed for sale. The MLS system is not accessible to members of the general public. TREB's Members access the MLS system by way of a secure log-in intranet website.

[71] CREA owns the Multiple Listing Service trade-mark, the MLS trade-mark and the associated logos, each of which is licensed to TREB and the other real estate boards that are members of CREA.

[72] In addition to providing agents with information about available properties listed for sale and the list prices of homes, the MLS system provides agents with a broad range of other information, including interior and exterior photographs, the time a property has been on the market, and historical and other data regarding the property. OREA's standard forms (including its Listing Agreement, its BRA and its BCSA) are also available on the MLS system.

[73] Not all residential properties that are for sale can be found on a MLS system. For example, information regarding exclusive listings, properties that are "for sale by owner" ("FSBO") and many newly constructed properties such as condominiums is not available to agents through a MLS system.

[74] To obtain and maintain access to the MLS system, TREB Members must execute and agree to be bound by the terms of an Authorized User Agreement ("AUA"), as well as TREB's MLS rules and policies (the "MLS Rules and Policies").

[75] Properties listed on the MLS system are included in an extensive database (the "MLS Database") that contains both current active listings and an archive of inactive listings on properties. TREB's MLS Database is a searchable repository of real estate listings that have been provided to the MLS system by its Members throughout the GTA and is accessible over an intranet on a Member-to-Member basis.

[76] Active listings include properties that have not been sold and are still available for sale. Inactive listings include sold listings, "pending sold" listings and WEST listings. Though the term is not always defined consistently, the Tribunal understands that "pending sold" refers to a sold property that has not yet closed and is "firm," in the sense that it does not have or no longer has any conditions to closing. Where there are such conditions to closing, the sale is considered to be a "sold conditional" home as opposed to a "pending sold," and the sale price is then not available in the MLS Database. A sale is conditional when the buyer and seller have executed an agreement of purchase and sale with conditions precedent. WEST listings are listings of homes that did not sell and, as such, there is no sale price associated with these inactive listings in the MLS Database.

[77] Pursuant to the MLS Rules and Policies, Members are obliged to report to TREB the existence of a conditional sale, but not the final selling price, within two business days of the execution of the agreement of purchase and sale. Two days after any stipulated conditions have been satisfied, the sale price must then be provided, along with the potential closing date.

[78] The listing information that is inputted in the MLS Database is collected by way of an "MLS Data Information Form" filled out by the seller and the agent. Certain fields are mandatory, including the address of the property, its list price, the number of rooms, the municipal taxes, the seller's name, information about the interior and exterior of the home, the cooperating brokerage commission, and whether permission has been given to display the address on the Internet. The form also has other fields that are optional, such as the approximate age of the building, estimated square footage information, and open house dates.

G. Stratus Data Systems Inc.

[79] The MLS Database is provided to TREB's Members through a platform operated by Stratus Data Systems Inc. ("Stratus"). Members can search for information about both unavailable and available properties on the MLS Database. The Stratus software can also generate a report which can be used to prepare CMAs, provide information to clients regarding listings, conduct market research, etc. The public has no access to the Stratus system. However, Members can arrange to have their clients automatically receive emails about new or changed listings in the neighborhoods in which they have expressed interest and that have been uploaded to the TREB MLS Database. Stratus also has a specific application to permit agents to conduct CMAs for consumers.

H. The U.S. antitrust investigation and 2008 settlement

[80] The Tribunal understands that TREB first began considering adopting a policy on VOWs in approximately 2003, when it obtained a copy of the draft VOW policy that NAR proposed to adopt in the United States at that time (the "2003 Draft NAR Policy").

[81] In 2005, the United States Department of Justice (the "U.S. DOJ") began proceedings against NAR in relation to NAR's then existing VOW policy. That version of NAR's VOW policy permitted individual listing agents in the United States to withhold their listings from display on VOWs, by means of an opt-out right. The U.S. DOJ alleged, among other things, that such an opt-out discriminated against VOWs and was anti-competitive.

[82] In late 2008, the U.S. DOJ and NAR settled their litigation. That settlement was ultimately embodied in a final judgment of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, to which was appended an amended NAR VOW policy (the "2008 NAR VOW Policy").

[83] The Tribunal understands that, among other things, the 2008 NAR VOW Policy effectively no longer allowed listing agents to opt-out or to otherwise refuse to share their MLS listings with operators of VOWs, or with real estate boards. It also effectively prohibited discrimination against VOWs by imposing requirements on them that were not imposed on agents accessing the MLS system through other means, including with respect to the Disputed Data.

I. The Commissioner's investigation

[84] Following the announcement of the possible settlement between the U.S. DOJ and NAR in mid-2008, the Competition Bureau (the "Bureau") approached TREB about implementing a similar VOW policy based on the principles of non-discrimination.

[85] Among other things, this led CREA to establish a VOW task force ("CREA's VOW Task Force"), as TREB believed that the VOW issue had national implications and should therefore be dealt with at a national level.

[86] However, CREA's VOW Task Force stalled after reaching a point of impasse with the Bureau in approximately 2010.

[87] In July 2010, TREB conducted a strategic planning exercise with its newly elected Board of Directors and decided to establish its own VOW task force ("TREB's VOW Task Force"). TREB did not actually begin to set up its task force until March of 2011.

[88] In the meantime, in November 2010, the Commissioner sent a voluntary information request to TREB concerning VOWs. That action appears to have spurned TREB to prepare a draft VOW policy, dated May 18, 2011, which tracked to a considerable extent the 2008 NAR VOW Policy. However, TREB eliminated from its draft VOW policy the provisions in the 2008 NAR VOW Policy that prohibited listing agents from discriminating against VOW operators, and added certain other provisions that are the subject of dispute in this proceeding.

[89] For example, whereas the 2008 NAR VOW Policy permitted the restriction on the display of certain information by VOWs only if the restriction applied to other delivery mechanisms (such as fax and telephone), TREB's draft VOW policy contained no restriction upon how its Members could communicate the Disputed Data through other delivery mechanisms.

[90] Nine days later, on May 27, 2011, the Commissioner filed the Initial Application with the Tribunal.

[91] In the wake of that action by the Commissioner, TREB made further revisions to its draft VOW policy in June 2011. However, that policy continues to prohibit VOWs from displaying the Disputed Data at all. Indeed, as discussed below, TREB also does not include the Disputed Data in its VOW Data Feed and prohibits the use of any information included in the VOW Data Feed for purposes other than display on a website.

[92] Following a 60-day period during which Members were invited to comment on the draft VOW policy, the VOW Policy and Rules were approved by TREB's Board of Directors in late August 2011. The VOW Data Feed discussed below then went "live" in mid-November 2011.

J. TREB's VOW Policy and Rules

[93] The term "virtual office website" is somewhat incongruous, as it refers neither to a website nor to a virtual office. Rather, the term is used to describe an area of a brokerage's website where MLS information is made available to potential home sellers and buyers in a particular searchable format. In the GTA, that information is received by TREB's Members over the VOW Data Feed. The fact that a VOW Data Feed is received does not reveal anything about the principal nature of an agent's office arrangements. Those arrangements may be based on the traditional "bricks and mortar" business model or they may simply be based on a model where a brokerage's agents log-in from home or other locations.

[94] The Tribunal will use the term VOW simply to describe a password-protected area of a brokerage's website where consumers can access and search a database containing MLS information.

[95] TREB's VOW Policy and Rules govern how Members can operate a VOW in the GTA. For the purposes of this proceeding, the key provisions of the VOW Policy and Rules include the following:

1. A member of the public may only access MLS information on a Member's VOW if: (1) the Member has first established a broker-consumer relationship; (2) the Member obtains the name and a valid email for a consumer; (3) the consumer has agreed to prescribed "terms of use"; and (4) the consumer creates a user name and password for the Member's VOW (Rules 800 and 805);

2. A Member's VOW may provide other features, information, or functions in addition to the display of TREB's MLS information (Rule 803);

3. A Member, whether through their VOW or by any other means, may not make available for search by, or display to, consumers the following MLS data intended exclusively for other Members and their brokers and salespersons, subject to applicable laws, regulations and the RECO rules:

    a. Expired, withdrawn, suspended or terminated listings, and pending solds or leases, including listings where sellers and buyers have entered into an agreement that has not yet closed;

    b. The compensation offered to other Members;

    c. The seller's name and contact information, unless otherwise directed by the seller to do so;

    d. Instructions or remarks intended for cooperating brokers only, such as those regarding showings or security of listed property; and

e. Sold data, unless the method of use of actual sales price of completed transactions is in compliance with RECO rules and applicable privacy laws (Rule 823).

K. The VOW Data Feed

[96] TREB Members receive data for their VOWs via TREB's VOW Data Feed. The VOW Data Feed is an electronic connection over the Internet between a Member's website and TREB's MLS third party database (the "Third Party Database"). The Third Party Database is a copy of TREB's MLS Database that TREB uses to transmit data to third parties pursuant to various agreements. The VOW Data Feed appears to contain all of TREB's MLS active listing data, except for cooperating broker commissions, listings which the seller has elected to withhold from the Internet, information that cannot be distributed by any mechanism of delivery, the seller's name and contact information (unless otherwise directed by the seller), and instructions or remarks intended for cooperating brokers only. For greater certainty, none of the Disputed Data is included in the VOW Data Feed, which is offered to TREB's Members at no charge.

[97] TREB's MLS data is transmitted to the VOW operator in a raw data format, to enable the Member to present the data to a customer in whatever manner the Member chooses, subject to the certain restrictions.

[98] Use of the VOW Data Feed is governed by the VOW Policy and Rules as well as by TREB's VOW Data Feed Agreement.

[99] To have access to TREB's VOW Data Feed, Members (and Affiliated VOW Partners ("AVPs"), where applicable) must sign the Data Feed Agreement. An AVP is an entity or person designated by a Member to operate a VOW on behalf of the Member, subject to the Member's supervision, accountability and compliance with the VOW Policy and Rules. For the purposes of this proceeding, an important provision of the Data Feed Agreement is the following:

> 4.1 Services and Licence. Subject to the terms and conditions of this Agreement and the VOW Policy and Rules, TREB will provide to Member or AVP, if operating Member's VOW(s) on behalf of Member, a VOW Data Feed to Member or AVP, solely and exclusively for the Purpose ("Services"). Subject to the terms and conditions of this Agreement, TREB hereby grants to Member and AVP, if operating Member's VOW on behalf of Member, a non-exclusive, non-transferable, non-sublicensable, revocable limited license to use such Listing Information as may be provided to Member or AVP through the VOW Data Feed solely and exclusively for the Purpose.

[100] The term Purpose is defined as follows in the Data Feed Agreement:

> "Purpose" means to permit a Member to display on the Member's VOW given Listing Information which is transmitted through a VOW Data Feed to the Member for the sole purpose of use by Consumers that have a bona fide interest in the purchase, sale, or lease of real estate of the type being offered through Member's VOW.

[101] The Data Feed Agreement also provides that access to the VOW Data Feed may be suspended or terminated if a Member or AVP breaches the Data Feed Agreement or TREB's MLS Rules and Policies.

V. Evidence – Overview

A. Lay witnesses

(1) For the Commissioner

[102] The Commissioner led evidence from the following lay witnesses:

a. William McMullin: Mr. McMullin is the Chief Executive Officer ("CEO") of ViewPoint Realty Services Inc. ("ViewPoint"). ViewPoint is an Internet-based, technology-driven, residential real estate brokerage based in Halifax, Nova Scotia that offers a broad variety of services through its website, www.viewpoint.ca. Those services include tools and features that make extensive MLS information available to potential home sellers and purchasers, as well as analyses of that information.

b. Urmi Desai: Ms. Desai is a co-founder of Realosophy Realty Inc. ("Realosophy"), a full-service brokerage in the GTA which provides services through two websites as well as a storefront office in the Leslieville area of Toronto. Ms. Desai is responsible for Realosophy's strategy and marketing.

c. John Pasalis: Mr. Pasalis is a co-founder and broker of record of Realosophy. In addition to working as a broker, he provides analytics and real estate commentary for Realosophy's website and in the public media.

d. Scott Nagel: Mr. Nagel is the CEO of real estate operations for Redfin Corporation ("Redfin"). Redfin is an Internet-based real estate brokerage based in the United States that operates in approximately 74 metropolitan areas throughout the United States.

e. Shayan Hamidi: Mr. Hamidi is a co-founder and a former CEO of TheRedPin.com Realty Inc. ("TheRedPin"). He left the company in 2014. TheRedPin is an online brokerage based in the GTA that operates through its website www.TheRedPin.com.

f. Tarik Gidamy: Mr. Gidamy is a co-founder and the broker of record of TheRedPin. He has been licensed to practice in real estate in Ontario and has been a Member of TREB since 1997. Since Mr. Hamidi left the company in 2014, Mr. Gidamy has shared the duties of TheRedPin's CEO with two other individuals.

g. Joel Silver: Mr. Silver is the Managing Director of Trilogy Growth, LP ("Trilogy Growth"), which strategically invests in early stage, innovative companies. In 2012, Trilogy Growth invested in TheRedPin. Mr. Silver is a member of TheRedPin's Board of Directors and has shared the duties of TheRedPin's CEO with Mr. Gidamy and another individual.

h. Mark Enchin: Mr. Enchin is a Guelph-area real estate agent with a history of developing technology-based tools for use by agents. He is a sales representative with Realty Executives Plus Ltd. ("Realty Executives") who has an interest in expanding into the GTA by licensing his VOW, which appears to be still in development, to agents located there. Prior to a development in 2007 that will be discussed later in these reasons, Mr. Enchin developed a VOW that was licensed to approximately 1,000 realtors, including many in the GTA.

i. Sam Prochazka: Mr. Prochazka is the founder and CEO of Sam & Andy Inc. ("Sam & Andy"), a real estate software company (also known as an AVP) that built websites for real estate professionals in Western Canada, the United States and the GTA prior to its sale to Ubertor, a Vancouver-based firm, in May 2015.

[103] Messrs. McMullin, Pasalis, Nagel, Gidamy and Prochazka testified at both the Initial Hearing in 2012 and the Redetermination Hearing in 2015, whereas the other witnesses identified above only testified at the Initial Hearing. The Tribunal generally found Messrs. McMullin, Pasalis, Nagel, Gidamy and Prochazka to be credible and forthright. Given that none of the members of the redetermination panel participated in the Initial Hearing, the Tribunal will refrain from making such observations regarding Ms. Desai, Mr. Hamidi, Mr. Silver and Mr. Enchin, who testified only at that hearing.

[104] The Tribunal pauses to note that further to an order issued in April 2014 (The Commissioner of Competition v The Toronto Real Estate Board, 2014 Comp. Trib. 4), all witness statements, expert reports, exhibits, transcripts, and opening and closing submissions from the Initial Hearing form part of the record of the Redetermination Hearing. The Tribunal's order further provided that the pleadings of the parties would not be amended and that opening and closing statements could refer to evidence given at both the Initial Hearing and the Redetermination Hearing.

(2) For TREB

[105] TREB led evidence from the following lay witnesses:

a. Donald Richardson: Mr. Richardson was TREB's CEO for approximately 14 years prior to his departure from TREB in 2014. He is now partially retired and currently holds the position of consultant for TREB. Before joining TREB as its CEO, he worked for approximately 20 years at OREA in a variety of roles, including CEO for the last six of those years.

b. Tung-Chee Chan: Mr. Chan has been the sole owner and broker of record of Tradeworld Realty Inc. ("Tradeworld") since 1985. Tradeworld is a brokerage with four offices in the GTA.

c. Pamela Prescott: Ms. Prescott is the owner and a broker at Century 21 Heritage Group Ltd. ("Century 21 Heritage"), an independently-owned brokerage with several offices in the northern part of the GTA and approximately 475 real estate agents. Century 21 Heritage operates under the Century 21 banner. Ms. Prescott served as a Director of TREB for a period of three years in the early 2000s.

d. Evan Sage: Mr. Sage is a Vice President and Sales Representative at Sage Real Estate, which describes itself as "Toronto's most philosophically and technologically advanced boutique brokerage." He was a member of TREB's VOW Task Force.

e. Timoleon (Tim) Syrianos: Mr. Syrianos is the principal owner, President and broker of record of Ultimate Realty Inc. ("Ultimate Realty"), a RE/MAX franchisee with two offices in the GTA and approximately 235 salespersons. Mr. Syrianos has been a Director of TREB since July 2012 and was previously a member of its VOW Task Force and of its MLS committee (the "MLS Committee").

[106] Messrs. Richardson, Sage and Syrianos, as well as Ms. Prescott, testified at both the Initial Hearing in 2012 and the Redetermination Hearing in 2015, whereas Mr. Chan only testified at the Initial Hearing. For the reason explained at paragraph 103 above, the Tribunal will refrain from making observations regarding the testimony of Mr. Chan during the Initial Hearing. With respect to the Redetermination Hearing, the Tribunal generally found Messrs. Sage and Syrianos to be credible, forthright, helpful and impartial. The Tribunal found Ms. Prescott to be somewhat less impartial and helpful. The Tribunal also had concerns about the reliability of certain aspects of Mr. Richardson's testimony, which are discussed at paragraphs 355 and 356 below. In addition, the Tribunal found some of his testimony on cross-examination to have been evasive in nature. Where Mr. Richardson's testimony was inconsistent with other evidence, the Tribunal therefore generally found such other evidence to be more reliable.

(3) For CREA

[107] Mr. Gary Simonsen testified on behalf of CREA. Mr. Simonsen is CREA's CEO. Prior to assuming that position in July 2011, he was CREA's Chief Operating Officer. The Tribunal generally found Mr. Simonsen to be credible and forthright.

B. Expert witnesses

(1) For the Commissioner

[108] Dr. Greg Vistnes testified on behalf of the Commissioner. Dr. Vistnes is an economist specializing in the fields of industrial organization and the economics of competition. He holds a Ph.D. in economics from Stanford University. He is a Vice President in the Washington, DC office of Charles River Associates. The Tribunal generally found Dr. Vistnes to be credible, forthright and more willing to concede weaknesses/shortcomings in his evidence or in the Commissioner's case, than was the case for Dr. Jeffrey Church, TREB's expert witness. Where his evidence was inconsistent with that provided by Dr. Church or by Dr. Fredrick Flyer (CREA's expert witness), the Tribunal found his evidence to be more persuasive, objective and reliable than that of the latter individuals. However, the Tribunal accepts TREB's position that Dr. Vistnes did not have a good understanding of the legal test for what constitutes a "substantial" prevention or lessening of competition, as contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(c) of the Act. For this reason, the Tribunal refrained from accepting Dr. Vistnes' evidence on that particular issue.

(2) For TREB

[109] Dr. Jeffrey Church testified on behalf of TREB. Dr. Church is a Full Professor in the Department of Economics at the University of Calgary. He holds a Ph.D. in economics from the University of California, Berkeley. The Tribunal found Dr. Church to be less forthright, objective and helpful than Dr. Vistnes or Dr. Flyer. The Tribunal also found Dr. Church to be evasive at several points during his cross-examination and to have made unsupported, speculative assertions at various points in his testimony and in his written expert reports.

(3) For CREA

[110] Dr. Fredrick Flyer testified on behalf of CREA. Dr. Flyer is an economist holding a Ph.D. in economics from the University of Chicago and an M.S. in labour and industrial relations from the University of Illinois. He is an Executive Vice President at Compass Lexecon. The Tribunal generally found Dr. Flyer to be objective and forthcoming. However, it also found that his testimony often remained general and high-level, and that he did not immerse himself in the details of the Canadian real estate industry and in the specific evidence and matters at issue in this proceeding to the same degree as Dr. Vistnes and Dr. Church.

C. Documentary evidence

[111] Attached at Schedule "B" is a list of the exhibits that were admitted in this proceeding.

VI. Issues

[112] The following broad issues are raised in this proceeding:

a. What is or are the relevant market(s) for the purposes of this proceeding?;

b. Does TREB substantially or completely control a class or species of business in any area of Canada, as contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act?;

c. Were the VOW Restrictions adopted for an exclusionary or disciplinary purpose, as contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(b) of the Act, or was their adoption motivated by legitimate business justifications? If so, does that continue to be the case?;

d. Have the VOW Restrictions had the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in the relevant market(s), or are they having or likely to have that effect, as contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(c) of the Act?;

e. Does TREB have a copyright over the MLS Database and, if it is the case, do the VOW Restrictions constitute the "mere" exercise of TREB's intellectual property rights?; and

f. What is the appropriate remedy, if any?

[113] Each of these issues will be discussed in turn.

VII. Analysis

A. What is or are the relevant market(s) for the purposes of this proceeding?

[114] The first issue to be determined by the Tribunal is the identification of the relevant market(s) for the purposes of this proceeding. For the reasons detailed below, the Tribunal concludes that the relevant market is the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA.

(1) Analytical framework

[115] The ultimate focus of the analysis contemplated by subsection 79(1) of the Act is upon whether a practice of anti-competitive acts by a dominant firm has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market. The market in question is the market in which the practice in question is alleged to have had, to be having, or to be likely to have such an impact.

[116] Where the firm that is the focus of an application under section 79 is alleged to substantially or completely control a different market, it will be necessary to define that other market for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(a). This is further discussed below, in section VII.B.(3) of these reasons, including at paragraphs 203-207.

[117] In defining relevant markets in proceedings brought under section 79 of the Act, the Tribunal has focused upon whether there are close substitutes for the product "at issue" (Commissioner of Competition v Canada Pipe, 2005 Comp. Trib. 3 ("Canada Pipe CT") at para 68). In the cases that it has considered to date, that product has been the same for the purposes of the Tribunal's analysis of both paragraph 79(1)(a) and paragraph 79(1)(c).

[118] In turn, "close substitutes" have been defined in terms of whether "buyers are willing to switch from one product to another in response to a relative change in price, i.e., if there is buyer price sensitivity" (Canada (Commissioner of Competition) v Canada Pipe, 2006 FCA 236 ("Canada Pipe FCA Cross Appeal"), leave to appeal to SCC refused, 31637 (10 May 2005) at paras 12-16, and Canada (Commissioner of Competition) v Tele-Direct Publications Inc (1997), 73 CPR (3d) 1 (Comp. Trib.) ("Tele-Direct") at p. 35, both citing the test adopted by the Federal Court of Appeal in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v Southam Inc, [1995] 3 FC 557, 63 CPR (3d) 1 (CA) ("Southam"), rev'd on other grounds [1997] 1 SCR 748, a merger case).

[119] Essentially the same approach has been adopted with respect to assessing whether supply at one geographic location is a close substitute for supply at another location.

[120] However, an objective benchmark for assessing "a relative change in price" or "buyer price sensitivity" was not provided in any of those cases.

[121] More recently, in merger cases, the Tribunal embraced the hypothetical monopolist approach, as defined at paragraph 4.3 of the Bureau's 2011 Merger Enforcement Guidelines (the "MEGs") (Commissioner of Competition v CCS Corporation, 2012 Comp. Trib. 14 ("CCS") at para 94). That approach has been defined as follows in the MEGs:

> Conceptually, a relevant market is defined as the smallest group of products, including at least one product of the merging parties, and the smallest geographic area, in which a sole profit-maximizing seller (a "hypothetical monopolist") would impose and sustain a small but significant and non-transitory increase in price ("SSNIP") above levels that would likely exist in the absence of the merger.

[122] This is the approach adopted by the Commissioner in this case and in the Bureau's Guidelines. It is also essentially the analytical framework adopted by the economic experts who testified on behalf of both the Commissioner and TREB, namely, Dr. Vistnes and Dr. Church, respectively.

[123] In CCS at paragraph 94, the Tribunal noted that in applying the "small but significant and non-transitory" components of the hypothetical monopolist approach, the Tribunal will typically use a test of a five percent price increase lasting one year. In other words, if sellers of a product or of a group of close substitute products in a provisionally defined market, acting as a hypothetical monopolist, would not have the ability to profitably impose and sustain a five percent price increase lasting one year, the product bounds of the relevant market will be progressively expanded until the point at which a hypothetical monopolist would have that ability and degree of market power. Essentially the same approach is applied to identify the geographic dimension of relevant markets.

[124] The Tribunal considers that the time has come to recognize that this analytical framework can make a conceptually helpful contribution to market definition in the context of proceedings under section 79 of the Act. This is in no small part because it supplies objective benchmarks (five percent, one year and the "smallest group" principle) that have been missing from the approach adopted in past abuse of dominance cases brought before the Tribunal under section 79. In the absence of such objective benchmarks, the exercise of assessing whether one product is a close substitute for another product can be highly subjective in nature.

[125] However, it must be recognized that the practical challenges associated with applying the hypothetical monopolist framework will often be greater in an abuse of dominance proceeding brought under section 79 than in the merger area. This is because of the difficulty associated with determining the "base price" for the purposes of that framework ("Base Price").

[126] In a proceeding brought under section 79 of the Act, the Base Price is the price that would likely have existed "but for" the alleged practice(s) of anti-competitive acts. It is the Commissioner's burden to demonstrate that price. Determining such a price in a section 79 proceeding will often be more difficult than determining the Base Price in a merger context, i.e., the price that would likely exist in the absence of a merger. This may be so notwithstanding that it is not necessary for the Commissioner to demonstrate the Base Price with precision (CCS at para 59).

[127] This is because, if a merger has not yet been completed, the Base Price frequently will simply be the prevailing price, especially if it is being alleged that the merger is likely to lessen competition. In addition, direct recent evidence of substitutability, for example in the form of evidence of competitive responses to recent price changes or promotional activities, will often be available.

[128] Even where it is being alleged that the merger is likely to prevent competition, there will often be direct evidence, for example in the form of one of the merging parties' business plans, regarding the likely future price in the absence of the merger. Alternatively, there may well be sufficient direct evidence to demonstrate a range over which the likely future price would have fallen (CCS at para 59).

[129] In a proceeding under section 79 of the Act, such direct evidence with respect to the Base Price will often not be available. This is especially so where, as in the present proceeding, the principal allegation is that the impugned conduct is preventing competition, or will prevent competition in the future. However, even in a case in which the principal allegation is that the impugned conduct is lessening competition, or has already lessened competition, the practical challenges associated with applying the iterative exercise contemplated by the hypothetical monopolist approach may be insurmountable. This is in part because products that may appear to be close substitutes at the prevailing price may not be close substitutes at the Base Price level, i.e., at the price that likely would have prevailed in the absence of the impugned conduct.

[130] Accordingly, it should be recognized that market definition in section 79 proceedings will largely involve assessing indirect evidence of substitutability, including factors such as functional interchangeability in end-use; switching costs; the views, strategies, behaviour and identity of buyers; trade views, strategies and behaviours; physical and technical characteristics; and price relationships and relative price levels (Canada Pipe FCA Cross Appeal at paras 15-16; Tele-Direct at pp. 36-82). In assessing such indirect evidence, functional interchangeability in end-use is a necessary but not sufficient condition for products to be included in the same relevant market (Tele-Direct at p. 38).

[131] In the geographic context, transportation costs and shipment patterns, including across Canada's borders, should also be assessed.

[132] In carrying out such assessments of indirect indicia of substitutability, it should be recognized that it will often neither be possible nor necessary to define the product and geographic dimensions of the relevant market(s) with precision. However, an assessment must ultimately be made (at the paragraph 79(1)(c) stage of the analysis) of the extent to which products and supply locations that have not been included in the relevant market provide or would likely provide competition to the products and locations that have been included in the market (CCS at paras 59-60 and 92; Director of Investigation and Research v NutraSweet Co (1990), 32 CPR (3d) 1 (Comp. Trib.) ("NutraSweet") at p. 20).

(2) The product dimension

[133] The Commissioner submits that the product dimension of the relevant market is the supply of residential real estate brokerage services that provide MLS accessibility.

[134] In his 2012 written closing submissions, the Commissioner recognized that sellers of homes require different services than purchasers of homes and that therefore, from a demand-side perspective, it might be more appropriate to define distinct relevant markets consisting of each of those distinct categories of purchasers of real estate brokerage services. This was also the position advanced by Dr. Vistnes.

[135] However, given that brokers and agents generally provide both sell-side and demand-side MLS-based services, and given that consumers sometimes retain the same agent or broker to sell their home and then to purchase another home, the Commissioner advanced, and continues to advance, a single relevant market comprised of both sell-side and buy-side residential real estate brokerage services. Dr. Vistnes also sometimes referred to essentially the same single relevant market in his expert reports.

[136] TREB acknowledges that the ultimate focus of the Tribunal's assessment should be upon the supply of residential real estate brokerage services. However, it alternately refers to both the "market" and the "markets" for real estate brokerage services in its written submissions.

[137] In discussing the relevant market, CREA generally used the same "residential real estate brokerage services" language used by the Commissioner. The same is true of Dr. Flyer, who explicitly declined to accept Dr. Vistnes' position that there are separate relevant markets for sell-side and buy-side real estate brokerage services.

[138] For the purposes of this proceeding, it does not appear to matter whether there is a single relevant market for the supply of MLS-based real estate brokerage services, or two separate relevant markets, consisting of the supply of real estate brokerage services to home sellers and home buyers, respectively. In brief, it appears to be common ground between the parties and CREA that competitive conditions in respect of the supply of real estate brokerage services to home buyers and home sellers are highly similar.

[139] Accordingly, for ease of reference, the Tribunal will define a single relevant market for the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services to home sellers and home buyers, respectively.

[140] The Tribunal is satisfied that this is a relevant market, for the following reasons.

[141] First, the evidence suggests that home buyers and sellers generally enter into contracts for the supply of a bundle of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services, rather than paying separately for unbundled services. Although there is evidence that some home buyers and sellers may prefer to contract for smaller bundles of such services if offered at a discount, the Tribunal accepts Dr. Vistnes' view that discount and limited-service brokerage services are in the same relevant product market as full-service brokerage services. The Tribunal notes that this view was not contested by TREB or CREA.

[142] Second, home buyers have not switched away from MLS-based services to a significant degree, despite the fact that the average absolute level of money they indirectly pay in commissions to purchase a home in the GTA increased by more than 20% (in nominal and adjusted terms) over the period 2008 to 2011, and has increased even further since that time. This, according to Dr. Vistnes, has occurred as a result of the increase in home prices, and not as a result of an increase in the commission rates.

[143] Dr. Vistnes testified that, between 2007 and October 2014, the percentage of home purchasers who have chosen to use MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services increased from approximately 89.7% to approximately 90.9 % of all home buyers. The Tribunal was not provided with evidence to suggest that home sellers have switched away from MLS-based real estate brokerage services in recent years, at a rate proportionate to the increase in total brokerage commissions paid. Indeed, Dr. Vistnes' uncontradicted testimony was that he is aware of no such evidence.

[144] Third, there is no readily available substitute for the full range of information and services that are provided to home buyers and sellers by suppliers of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services. Although some of that information is available separately or in much smaller bundles on the Internet or from some of the other sources discussed in the next section below, home purchasers and sellers have not switched away from MLS-based services to those other sources of supply. To the extent that the evidence suggests that home buyers and home sellers may be sourcing information that they value on the Internet, they are doing so in addition to procuring MLS-based real estate brokerage services, as confirmed by the figures immediately above. The same is true with respect to the complementary services offered by home appraisers, home inspectors, mortgage specialists and real estate lawyers. In other words, those services are used as complements, not substitutes, for the MLS-based real estate brokerage services.

[145] Fourth, the evidence provided in this proceeding by agents and brokers supports the view that their customers require access to a broad range of the information available on TREB's MLS system, and that those customers would not likely seek or be able to readily obtain that information from alternative sources.

[146] Fifth, industry documentation reflects a view that industry participants consider that there is a single and distinct market for MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services.

[147] Finally, TREB did not contest Dr. Vistnes' view, which the Tribunal accepts, that there would likely be significant substitution from agents' services to the services offered by brokers, if the price of agents' services were to rise relative to brokers' services, and vice versa.

[148] Dr. Church suggested that a market defined in terms of the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services may be too narrow. For example, he suggested that "exclusive listings" tend not be listed on the MLS system and that it is now much easier for alternatives to the MLS system, such as FSBO offerings, to meet consumers' demands for the range of services that they desire. He further suggested that Dr. Vistnes' evidence that substitution away from MLS-based brokerage services has not increased while the absolute level of money charged for commissions has increased in recent years, is undermined by his failure to take account of rising income levels during that period. He made a similar critique of Dr. Vistnes' failure to take account of substitution at the margins between rentals and home purchases, and between purchases of existing homes and new homes.

[149] The Tribunal takes Dr. Church's point regarding rising income levels. However, the fact remains that home purchasers appear to have increased their usage of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services over a period of time when the absolute level of commissions (in dollar terms) rose substantially, including in the years prior to both of the Tribunal's hearings in this proceeding. Moreover, no evidence was tendered by Dr. Church or TREB to suggest that there is a material degree of substitution at the margins between rentals and home purchases, or between purchases of existing homes and new homes. Likewise, no evidence was adduced to suggest that "exclusive listings" account for a significant percentage of overall listings in the GTA. Indeed, Mr. Syrianos suggested the contrary and indicated it was not a very high number of Ultimate Realty's business.

[150] Dr. Church also asserted that, in a proceeding under section 79 of the Act, the relevant markets for establishing dominance and competitive effects must be informed by the nature of the alleged exclusionary practices.

[151] Dr. Church's position with respect to the market contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(a) will be discussed in the next section below. The relevant market in which to assess competitive effects is the market referred to in paragraph 79(1)(c). The Tribunal is satisfied that an assessment of the alleged exclusionary practices in this case would not alter the conclusions that it has reached with respect to the product dimension of that market. Dr. Church's positions regarding the relevant market are discussed further below in section VII.B.(3) as well as at paragraphs 208-212 of these reasons.

[152] In conclusion, the Tribunal is satisfied, based on the considerations discussed above and the evidence on the record in this proceeding, that the product dimension of the relevant market contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(c) should be defined in terms of the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services.

(3) The geographic dimension

[153] It is common ground between the parties that the geographic scope of the relevant market for the supply of residential real estate brokerage services is local and likely is no broader than the GTA, which is comprised of the city of Toronto and the regional municipalities of Halton, Peel, York and Durham. This was not disputed by CREA. Indeed, the local nature of the market was acknowledged by its expert, Dr. Flyer. Dr. Church, on behalf of TREB, also agreed with this position.

[154] The local nature of the relevant market is generally supported by the following evidence.

[155] Dr. Vistnes' analysis of MLS data for the period of January 2010 to February 2012 indicates that approximately 76% of sell-side transactions and approximately 69% of buy-side transactions occurred within 10 kilometres of agents' principal bases of operations. At 20 kilometres from those bases, the corresponding figures are approximately 92% and 89%. At 30 kilometres, they increase to approximately 97% and 96%.

[156] The testimony of several agents, including Messrs. Gidamy, Pasalis and Enchin, as well as Ms. Prescott, confirms that agents tend to specialize at the local level, to meet consumer demand for local expertise. This appears to be confirmed by Dr. Vistnes' analysis, which indicates that even where there are differences in commissions between adjacent local areas, the geographic range within which agents conduct their business does not materially increase.

[157] However, Ms. Prescott also stated that since the Initial Hearing, agents are increasingly competing for business across the entire city of Toronto. No evidence was adduced to suggest that home buyers or home sellers in the GTA retain the services of agents whose principal base of operations is located outside the GTA.

[158] Although the foregoing evidence suggests that there may be several local relevant markets within the GTA, nothing in this proceeding turns on whether there is a single relevant geographic market that extends throughout the GTA, or several separate and discrete geographic markets within the GTA.

[159] Given that the focus of this proceeding is upon certain of TREB's practices, and given that TREB's focus and activities extend throughout the GTA, the Tribunal is of the view that it is appropriate to define a single geographic market consisting of the GTA. This will simplify the discussion and analysis below, without adversely impacting upon the interests of either party or CREA.

[160] The Tribunal observes in passing that the Commissioner confirmed in his closing argument at the Redetermination Hearing that he is not seeking relief that goes beyond the GTA, except to the extent that TREB's MLS data can be accessed outside the GTA, including through inter-board agreements that allow agents located outside the GTA to access that data.

(4) Conclusion

[161] For all the foregoing reasons, the Tribunal concludes that the relevant market for the purpose of this proceeding is the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA (the "Relevant Market").

B. Does TREB substantially or completely control a class or species of business in any area of Canada?

[162] The Tribunal now turns to the second issue to be determined in this proceeding, namely, whether TREB substantially or completely controls a class or species of business in any area of Canada, as contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act. For the reasons set forth below, the Tribunal finds, on the balance of probabilities, that TREB substantially or completely controls the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA.

(1) Analytical framework

[163] Paragraph 79(1)(a) deals with the "dominance" dimension of section 79. It requires the Tribunal to find that one or more persons substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business.

[164] The Tribunal has consistently interpreted the words "throughout Canada or any area thereof" and "class or species of business" to mean the geographic and product dimensions of the relevant market in which the respondent is alleged to have "substantial or complete control" (Canada Pipe CT at paras 65-67). This position was upheld by the Federal Court of Appeal in Canada Pipe FTA Cross Appeal at paragraphs 16 and 44.

[165] The Tribunal has also consistently interpreted the words "substantially or completely control" to be synonymous with market power. In turn, it has defined market power using various formulations, in particular "the ability to set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period" (Canada Pipe CT at para 122, aff'd Canada Pipe FCA Cross Appeal at paras 6 and 23-25; Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v D & B Companies of Canada Ltd (1995), 64 CPR (3d) 216 (Comp. Trib.) ("Nielsen") at pp. 232 and 254); "an ability to set prices above competitive levels and to maintain them at that level for a significant period of time without erosion by new entry or expansion of existing firms" (Tele-Direct at p. 82); and "the ability to profitably influence price, quality, variety, service, advertising, innovation or other dimensions of competition" (Commissioner of Competition v Canadian Waste Services Holdings Inc, 2001 Comp. Trib. 3 at para 7, aff'd 2003 FCA 131, leave to appeal refused [2004] 1 SCR vii). This latter definition was embraced by the Supreme Court of Canada in Tervita Corp v Canada (Commissioner of Competition), 2015 SCC 3 ("Tervita") at paragraph 44.

(a) The degree of market power required

[166] The jurisprudence to date leaves unanswered the question of what constitutes a "competitive level" of prices. It also does not appear to recognize that, except in perfectly competitive markets, firms often have some market power. Indeed, if paragraph 79(1)(a) simply requires a demonstration of some market power, even to a material degree, it would arguably be redundant. This is because an ability to exercise materially greater market power than in the absence of the impugned anti-competitive practice must be established to satisfy the requirement in paragraph 79(1)(c) that the impugned practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market.

[167] Fortuitously, the Supreme Court of Canada has shed some light upon the issue. Specifically, in R v Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society, [1992] 2 SCR 606 ("PANS"), the Court contrasted the level of market power required by former paragraph 32(1)(c) of the Combines Investigation Act, RSC 1970, c C-23 with the level required by what is now paragraph 79(1)(a). Paragraph 32(1)(c), which subsequently became paragraph 45(1)(c) of the Act, before it was repealed, made it an offence to conspire, combine, agree or arrange with another person to prevent or lessen competition unduly.

[168] In defining the degree of market power necessary to trigger the application of that criminal offence, the Supreme Court stated that it was less than what is contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(a). The Court held that the degree of market power required to trigger the application of paragraph 32(1)(c) was simply "the capacity to behave independently of the market, in a passive way" (PANS at p. 654). It characterized this as requiring a moderate degree of market power, and contrasted this with the greater degree of market power required to "influence the market" under paragraph 79(1)(a).

[169] Having a degree of market power that is more than "moderate" to trigger the application of paragraph 79(1)(a), and that is higher than the degree of increased or maintained market power generally required to demonstrate a substantial prevention or lessening of competition, would therefore appear to be required to give effect to the Supreme Court's observations in PANS and to avoid an interpretation of paragraph 79(1)(a) that arguably renders that provision redundant.

[170] Such an approach would also be more consistent with the view that subsection 79(1) is intended to apply to firms with dominant positions, as reflected in the jurisprudence (Canada Pipe FCA at para 21; Canada Pipe CT at para 7) and in the heading above section 78 ("Abuse of Dominant Position") (Commissioner of Competition v Visa Canada Corporation, 2013 Comp. Trib. 10 at para 112). The Tribunal observes that similar wording appears in the marginal notes above section 79, although it recognizes that, pursuant to section 14 of the Interpretation Act, RSC 1985, c I-21, marginal notes form no part of the enactment and are inserted for convenience of reference only. In brief, given that non-dominant firms often have some degree of market power, a firm with a "dominant" position should be considered to be a firm that has more than merely "some" market power, and more than the "material" degree of market power contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(c).

[171] Requiring a level of market power that is more than "moderate", and more than what is contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(c), would also be broadly consistent with the Tribunal's prior observation that "no prima facie finding of dominance would arise" when it is determined that the respondent's share of the relevant market is below 50% (Canada (Director of Investigation & Research) v Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd (1992), 40 CPR (3d) 289 (Comp. Trib.) ("Laidlaw") at p. 317).

[172] This approach would also make good sense, because having an intervention threshold under paragraph 79(1)(a) for single firm conduct that is higher than the threshold for mergers and agreements among competitors would avoid chilling potentially pro-competitive single firm behaviour.

[173] With all of the foregoing in mind, the Tribunal considers that the degree of market power contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(a) is a substantial degree of market power. This is greater than the material degree of increased or maintained market power (compared to the "but for" world) that is required to demonstrate a substantial lessening of competition under paragraph 79(1)(c) (Tervita at paras 50 and 80-81; CCS at para 377).

[174] In the Tribunal's view, a substantial degree of market power is a degree of market power that confers upon an entity considerable latitude to determine or influence price or non-price dimensions of competition in a market, including the terms upon which it or others carry on business in the market. This roughly approximates the degree of market power that is used to measure whether a firm has a "dominant position" under Article 82 of the Treaty Establishing the European Community (2002/C 325/01), namely, an ability to behave to an appreciable extent independently of its competitors (Communication from the Commission – Guidance on the Commission's enforcement priorities in applying Article 82 of the EC Treaty to abusive exclusionary conduct by dominant undertaking (2009/C 45/02) at para 10; Case 27/76 United Brands Company and United Brands Continental v Commission, [1978] ECR 207 at para 65; Case 85/76 Hoffman – La Roche & Co v Commission, [1979] ECR 461 at para 38; Case COMP/C-3/37.792 Microsoft at para 428).

(b) Exclusionary behaviour and market power

[175] The Commissioner and TREB dispute whether market power includes the ability to restrict the output of one's rivals. The Commissioner submits that market power includes the power to engage in exclusionary behaviour such as preventing rivals from introducing products to the market. However, TREB disputes that position, and maintains that the power to exclude is not a cognizable form of market power under the Act. It states that this is so because the power to exclude is not captured by the definition of market power articulated by the Supreme Court in Tervita at paragraph 44, namely, "the ability to profitably influence price, quality, variety, service, advertising, innovation or other dimensions of competition."

[176] The Tribunal disagrees with TREB's position. To the extent that the power to exclude comprises an ability to restrict the output of other actual or potential market participants, and thereby to profitably influence price, it falls squarely within the definition of market power articulated in Tervita. Indeed, it is often the exercise of the power to exclude that facilitates a dominant firm's ability to profitably influence the dimensions of competition referred to in Tervita.

[177] TREB further maintains that it cannot "profitably" influence price because it is a not-for-profit entity that does not participate in the relevant market for MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services. Rather, it is an input supplier to that market, and has no stake in who wins or who loses in that market. Contrasting the situation in which a dominant upstream supplier may exercise market power for the benefit of its downstream affiliated entity, TREB maintains that it has no "horse in the race."

[178] The Tribunal disagrees.

[179] To begin, the Federal Court of Appeal explicitly determined, in setting aside the Tribunal's initial decision in this proceeding, that the words used in paragraph 79(1)(a) are sufficiently broad to apply to a firm that does not compete in the market that it allegedly substantially or completely controls. This includes a firm that controls a significant input to competitors in the market, or that makes rules that effectively control the business conduct of those competitors (TREB FCA at para 13).

[180] The Court in that case proceeded to find that subsection 79(1) is sufficiently broad to be applicable to TREB in respect of a rule that it makes binding on its Members (TREB FCA at para 18). That is to say, "Parliament did not intend the scope of subsection 79(1) to be limited in such a way that it cannot possibly apply to [TREB] in this case" (TREB FCA at para 20). In making those findings, the Court refrained from determining whether TREB in fact substantially or completely controls any market. However, it recognized that the rule at the heart of this case is "a rule prohibiting members from posting historical data on a virtual office website" and that "[t]he effect of that rule is that a member who operates through a virtual office website cannot enable clients to access the historical data online" (TREB FCA at para 5). The statement that the Court made at paragraph 18 of TREB FCA must be read with that in mind.

[181] It follows from the foregoing statements of the Court that a trade association that does not participate in a market with its members can nevertheless be found to have market power, particularly when it acts on behalf of the majority of its members.

[182] Trade associations can exercise such market power in a broad range of ways, including by establishing or mandating product standards or other rules, by-laws or practices that insulate all or some of its members from one or more sources of actual or potential competition. To the extent that a trade association has such an ability, it has market power. To the extent that its actions can enable or facilitate the ability of its members to maintain higher prices, or to maintain lower levels of service, product quality, variety or advertising levels than would otherwise prevail in the absence of those actions, they meet the definition of market power set forth by the Supreme Court in Tervita. The same is true where a trade association has the ability to forestall the entry and expansion of innovative products and services.

[183] In such circumstances, trade associations can be said to have the ability to profitably influence price, quality, variety, service, advertising or innovation, within the meaning of Tervita, on behalf of some or all of their members. In this context, it is the members whose profits would be increased or maintained by the actions of their trade association.

[184] In the Tribunal's view, the definitions of market power set forth in Tervita and the other authorities on the meaning of market power mentioned at paragraph 165 above are sufficiently broad to encompass trade associations that act on behalf of some or all of their members, and in the manner described above. This was clearly the view of the Federal Court of Appeal in TREB FCA. Although that decision pre-dated Tervita, there is nothing in Tervita or any of the other authorities mentioned above to suggest that the definitions of market power that they articulated were intended to preclude their application to trade associations that do not directly participate in the relevant market.

[185] The Tribunal considers that such a result would be perverse, as it would enable competitors to do indirectly what they may be prohibited from doing directly, namely, agreeing or arranging among themselves to take action that prevents or lessens, or is likely to prevent or lessen, competition in a market. Trade associations often do indeed have "horses in the race," namely, members of the associations whose interests they may be endeavouring to protect from competition.

[186] Such a result would also be inconsistent with the various objectives set forth in the purpose clause of the Act (section 1.1), namely:

| to maintain and encourage competition in Canada in order to promote the efficiency and adaptability of the Canadian economy, in order to expand opportunities for Canadian participation in world markets while at the same time recognizing the role of foreign competition in Canada, in order to ensure that small and medium-sized enterprises have an equitable opportunity to participate in the Canadian economy and in order to provide consumers with competitive prices and product choices. | de préserver et de favoriser la concurrence au Canada dans le but de stimuler l'adaptabilité et l'efficience de l'économie canadienne, d'améliorer les chances de participation canadienne aux marchés mondiaux tout en tenant simultanément compte du rôle de la concurrence étrangère au Canada, d'assurer à la petite et à la moyenne entreprise une chance honnête de participer à l'économie canadienne, de même que dans le but d'assurer aux consommateurs des prix compétitifs et un choix dans les produits. |

[187] In the alternative, TREB submits that even if a respondent has market power, it cannot be said to substantially or completely control a market within the meaning of paragraph 79(1)(a) if it is a not-for-profit entity with no incentive to exercise market power against its members.

[188] The Tribunal disagrees. To the extent that a respondent trade association has the ability to exercise substantial market power to insulate all or some of its members from competition, and thereby enable them to maintain significantly higher prices, or significantly lower levels of non-price competition, than would otherwise be the case, it can be found to come within the purview of paragraph 79(1)(a).

[189] It bears underscoring, as a general proposition, that it is the ability to exercise the required degree of market power, not whether in fact a dominant firm finds it to be in its interest to exercise that power from time to time, that is relevant for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(a), and indeed of paragraph 79(1)(c).

[190] Of course, where a trade association actually exercises substantial market power, this would demonstrate that it has that requisite degree of market power. The same is true of any entity alleged to have substantial market power.

(2) Measuring market power

[191] Market power can be measured either directly or indirectly. The direct approach focuses upon whether profits are indicative of substantial market power. The indirect approach considers other indicia such as market share, entry barriers or the countervailing power of customers. However, neither approach is easy to apply in practice (Canada Pipe CT at para 122; Canada Pipe FCA Cross Appeal at para 52).

[192] To date, the Tribunal has only been able to establish market power pursuant to the direct approach on two occasions. The first was in Tele-Direct at page 101, where it concluded that evidence of economic rents in the form of consistent payments by the respondent to its parent company of 30% - 40% of its collective revenues provided a direct indication of the respondent's market power. The second was in Canada Pipe CT at paragraph 161, where the Tribunal found that the evidence of high margins on certain products and an ability to lower prices selectively indicated supra-competitive pricing.

[193] In the absence of direct evidence of market power, the Tribunal has endeavoured to measure market power indirectly. In so doing, it has invariably assessed market shares and barriers to entry and has sometimes concluded that the respondent substantially or completely controlled a market largely on the basis of those two factors (NutraSweet at pp. 28-31; Tele-Direct at pp. 85-96; Nielsen at pp. 254-255). However, it has also assessed other factors such as the excess capacity of other firms (Laidlaw at p. 327), pricing practices and accounting profits (Laidlaw at pp. 327-330), the limited penetration of competitors (Canada Pipe CT at para 161) and the limited growth potential of the market (Canada Pipe CT at para 161).

[194] With respect to market shares, the Tribunal has suggested that a prima facie finding of substantial control of a market will be made with a large market share exceeding 50% (Laidlaw at pp. 317 and 325; Nielsen at pp. 254-255; Canada Pipe CT at para 138). Such a presumption would become stronger as the disparity between the market share of the respondent and the market shares of the other firms in the market increases, or if the respondent's share is fairly stable over time. Of course, a high market share of another rival could indicate joint dominance, particularly as the market share of that rival rises above 25%, or if the shares of the top two firms remain stable over time. Relatively stable shares of the top three or four firms could also be an indicator of joint dominance.

[195] With respect to barriers to entry, the Tribunal has noted that, in the absence of barriers to entry, even a very large market share will not support a finding of market power (Canada Pipe CT at para 138) and even a single seller cannot exercise market power (Tele-Direct at p. 85).

[196] As a practical matter, a finding that the respondent has substantial market power would ordinarily be justified where the evidence demonstrates that prices were, are or likely would be significantly higher, or that non-price benefits of competition such as quality, service, variety or innovation were, are or likely would be significantly lower, than they would have been or would be in the absence of the impugned practice of anti-competitive acts.

(3) Class or species of business

(a) Overview

[197] The Commissioner submits that, for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(a), the "class or species of business" or product market that TREB controls is the relevant market that is the ultimate focus of this proceeding under section 79. That market is the market for MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services.

[198] The Commissioner asserts that TREB controls that relevant market because it controls how its Members compete through its rule-making ability. It controls access to the MLS system; it has the ability to discipline Members who do not follow its rules, including by withdrawing their access to the MLS system; it has imposed such discipline in the past; and it can and does insulate its Members from competition by excluding the innovative products of actual or potential competitors who threaten to disrupt the status quo.

[199] The Commissioner maintains that the foregoing enables TREB to dictate who can and cannot compete, and on what terms, and can prevent an entire class of competition from emerging in the relevant market. He adds that TREB is horizontally integrated by virtue of its structure as an association and joint venture between competitors and that TREB's control over the market is reinforced by its vertical and horizontal integration with its Members. He suggests that such integration is a practical reality because TREB is controlled by a Board of Directors, all 16 members of which are licensed and practising realtors, who assume their board duties on a volunteer basis.

[200] For its part, TREB submits that the assessment of market power for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(a) must take into consideration the conduct that is at issue in a particular case. In this case, that would primarily be its withholding of the Disputed Data from its VOW Data Feed, its prohibition of the display of the Disputed Data on a VOW, and its imposition of restrictions on an agent's ability to use the data in its VOW feed for purposes other than mere display to the public.

[201] The Tribunal does not accept the proposition that an assessment of market power at the paragraph 79(1)(a) stage of its analysis must always take into consideration the conduct that is at issue in a particular case. As the Federal Court of Appeal has noted, the three elements of subsection 79(1) of the Act are distinct. Although certain evidence may be considered in the assessment of more than one of those elements, the three elements themselves must remain conceptually distinct (Canada Pipe FCA at para 28).

[202] The conduct that is at issue in any particular case is the principal focus of the assessment at the second step of the three-step assessment contemplated by subsection 79(1), namely, the assessment of whether the respondent has engaged in or is engaging in a practice of anti-competitive acts, as contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(b). The actual or likely effects of such conduct are then the focus of the third stage of the analysis, as contemplated by paragraph

79(1)(c), although they may also be relevant at the second stage, as discussed in the next section of these reasons. However, at the first stage of the analysis, the focus is upon the existence of dominance and whether the respondent substantially or completely controls throughout Canada or any area thereof, any class or species of business. At that stage of the analysis, the conduct "at issue" in a proceeding is not necessarily relevant.

[203] In this particular case, TREB submits that there is one or more relevant market(s) for the purposes of the analysis contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(a), namely, the market(s) for the supply of the principal components of the Disputed Data. That is to say, TREB submits that, for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(a), there may be distinct relevant markets for the supply of information with respect to solds, "pending solds," WEST listings and the commissions of cooperating brokers. In any event, a separate assessment of the close substitutes for each of those types of information is required.

[204] In the Tribunal's view, it does not particularly matter for the purposes of the assessment contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(a) whether TREB controls what it characterizes as an "upstream input" to brokers, or the downstream market for the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services. If it controls or substantially controls either an upstream market or a downstream market, that is sufficient for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(a).

[205] Nothing turns on this particular issue in this proceeding, as the Tribunal is satisfied, for the reasons explained below, that (i) there are no close substitutes for the supply of any of the principal components of the Disputed Data, (ii) TREB therefore controls the supply of those inputs to agents in the GTA, and, in any event, (iii) TREB controls the market for the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services.

[206] TREB submits that it would have to be dominant in one or more "upstream markets" for it to be dominant in the downstream market for the provision of residential real estate brokerage services.

[207] The Tribunal disagrees. If it is established that TREB has substantial or complete control of either an upstream market or the downstream market for the supply of MLS-based residential real estate services, that is the end of the matter, for the purposes of the assessment contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(a).

[208] Dr. Church proposed the "essential facilities" framework as being conceptually useful to determine the question of whether TREB substantially or completely controls a relevant market. In his view, one of the remedies sought by the Commissioner (i.e., the inclusion of the Disputed Data in TREB's VOW Data Feed) amounts to a mandated access to what the Commissioner must consider is an essential upstream input.

[209] Accordingly, he submitted that the framework advanced by the Bureau in the past with respect to essential facilities should be applied. As a first step in that framework, it must be established that the respondent is dominant in both the upstream and downstream markets

(Submission by the Commissioner of Competition Before the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission – Telecom Notice of Consultation CRTC 2013-551 – Review of Wholesale Services and Associated Policies, at footnote 7, available at http://www.competitionbureau.gc.ca/eic/site/cb-bc.nsf/eng/03655.html).

[210] The Tribunal questions whether it is necessary to establish, in an "essential facilities" case, that the respondent is dominant in both an upstream and a downstream market. The Tribunal does not wish to preclude the possibility that a demonstration could be made, in a particular case, that the respondent substantially controls a market for an upstream input, that it has engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts in respect of that input, and that such practice has had, or is having the effect of preventing or lessening competition in a downstream market. This could include a downstream market in which the respondent is a new entrant or, in any event, a competitor that is not yet able to exercise market power in that market.

[211] It is not necessary to resolve this issue in this proceeding, because the Tribunal agrees with the Commissioner, Dr. Vistnes and Dr. Flyer that this is not an "essential facilities" case.

[212] In brief, this is not a case in which an upstream input supplier is denying customers access to an input. TREB's Members already have access to the Disputed Data through TREB's Stratus system. Rather, the withholding of that information from TREB's VOW Data Feed, and the rules that restrict the manner in which TREB's Members can use and display that and other information, are what is at issue in this case. As Dr. Vistnes testified, TREB is simply saying to its Members "who have always had the information, you're not allowed to compete with it in this way" (Transcript, October 5, 2015, at p. 578).

[213] Accordingly, access is not the issue. As CREA recognized in its closing submissions, the issue is how the Disputed Data is made accessible to TREB's Members.

(b) The supply of the Disputed Data

[214] Dr. Church's focus for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(a) was upon the upstream supply of the Disputed Data. He submitted that the Tribunal's focus ought to be on whether there are close substitutes for the Disputed Data. He then proceeded to identify several potential substitutes for the Disputed Data.

[215] For Dr. Church, the analysis of substitution depends upon whether the consumer is in the search phase or the valuation/offer phase of the home selling/buying process.

[216] He suggested that, at the search phase, consumers become informed about the market for homes. Among other things, they assess factors such as the relative characteristics of different communities, the relative values of homes in those communities, the relative values of different home characteristics, and price trends.

[217] By contrast, at the valuation/offer phase, home sellers and purchasers are much more advanced in their thinking and require information to, among other things, set the actual price of their home, or establish the price they are willing to offer for a home.

[218] By the time they reach that more advanced phase of the process of selling or purchasing a home, the vast majority of home sellers and buyers will have retained the services of an agent, who is able to supply them with the Disputed Data, which the agent will have obtained from TREB through the Stratus system. (As discussed at paragraph 364 below, there is persuasive evidence that there is a widespread practice among TREB's Members of providing Disputed Data to consumers in various ways other than through a VOW, such as in person, by fax or by email). Therefore, Dr. Church and TREB maintain that, at the valuation/offer phase, the existing source of the Disputed Data (i.e., TREB's Stratus system) provides a close substitute for potential purchasers and sellers of homes, as they are easily able to obtain that information from their agent.

[219] TREB and Dr. Church therefore submit that making the Disputed Data available over TREB's VOW Data Feed would, at most, only be useful to potential home sellers and home buyers at the initial search phase, when they are seeking a general ballpark sense of the value of a home.

[220] At this search phase, Dr. Church maintains that there are many substitutes for the Disputed Data, even though those substitutes do not necessarily provide entirely the same data that would be available through TREB's VOW Data Feed, if the Disputed Data were included in that data feed. These substitutes allegedly include list prices, and information available from Teranet Inc. ("Teranet"), the Municipal Property Assessment Corporation ("MPAC"), brokers, appraisers and other innovative data-sharing vehicles.

(i) List prices

[221] Dr. Church submitted that list prices are very good substitutes for sold and "pending sold" listings because they incorporate market information relevant to the search phase and there is a very stable relationship between list prices and sales prices. Based on an analysis that Dr. Church conducted of GTA area data, he found that list prices maintain a relationship of an average of 95% of sold prices over time. He inferred from this that the distribution of list prices is a good substitute for the distribution of sold prices. Accordingly, he suggested that list price information provides essentially the same information that consumers would extract at the search phase from the Disputed Data if it were available on an agent's VOW. In other words, information regarding the average list prices of homes in particular communities would enable potential purchasers and sellers of homes to obtain a good sense of the relative values of homes in those communities, the relative values of different home characteristics, and price trends.

[222] The Tribunal does not accept that list prices of homes in any particular community are a good substitute for information pertaining to "solds" and "pending solds" in that community. Among other things, while information pertaining to the average list prices of homes in the GTA or even in a community within the GTA, having a particular set of characteristics, may enable potential purchasers and sellers of homes to estimate the average selling prices of homes in that area that have those characteristics, such information will not assist buyers and sellers to estimate the value of the specific homes in specific neighbourhoods that they may find to be of potential interest. This is particularly so where the homes that are in their initial set of comparators have materially different characteristics from each other (as can frequently be the case), where communities have different types of homes (e.g., detached/semi-detached, three bedroom/four bedroom, homes near busy streets/quiet streets, etc.) or where sellers deliberately undervalue their home, in an effort to generate a "bidding war."

[223] More importantly, data with respect to average list prices in the GTA or in specific communities therein isn't a good substitute for "solds" or "pending solds" for innovative agents who want to be able to better compete with traditional agents, e.g., by preparing innovative forms of analysis or more accurate estimates of home prices than can be obtained by using a statistic such as 95% of the average list prices of homes in the GTA or a particular community.

[224] Similarly, the fact that consumers are able obtain information with respect to "solds" and "pending solds" directly from an agent, either in person, by fax or by email at the valuation/offer phase does not assist innovative agents who would like to be able to access such information over TREB's VOW Data Feed, and then provide it to their customers through products and services offered over the Internet.

(ii) Teranet, MPAC, brokers and appraisers

[225] Dr. Church also suggested that historical and current data with respect to sold prices is available from other sources, such as Teranet; MPAC; large real estate brokerages like Royal LePage, Century 21 and RE/MAX; and firms that provide appraisal services, such as Zoocasa and Centract Settlement Services (now Brookfield RPS).

[226] According to Dr. Church, Teranet is in the business of selling reports and analysis derived from Ontario's Land Registration System. In this regard, he noted that it runs a service called GeoWarehouse, which describes itself as a "web-based, centralized, property information source that provides state-of-the-art mapping and research tools, as well as professional reports." Based on information that it is able to access from the Land Registration System, GeoWarehouse has the potential to offer real estate agents and others access to sold information on particular homes, dating back many years. This includes sold prices of homes that were sold as recently as 60-90 days ago. In his 2012 expert report, Dr. Church hypothesized that there is nothing to suggest that any industry participant cannot contract with Teranet to be able to obtain and use information with respect to the sold prices of homes. He maintained this position at the Redetermination Hearing.

[227] Likewise, Dr. Church noted that MPAC's mandate includes providing property owners and business stakeholders with consistent and accurate property assessments, based on the recent sales prices of comparable properties. In his testimony, he maintained that MPAC is an alternative to MLS information with respect to sold prices. While acknowledging that the "raw data" may not be the same, he maintained that the content is sufficiently similar to constitute a good substitute for the supply of the Disputed Data from TREB.

[228] Dr. Church added that TREB currently provides its Members with access to Teranet and MPAC information through "portals" that it has specifically purchased for TREB's Members. However, neither Dr. Church nor TREB referred to any evidence which demonstrates that any agents actually source sold information from Teranet or MPAC, particularly as a substitute for MLS information.

[229] Dr. Church also suggested that there is a potential for large brokerages and corporate franchisors to self-supply information with respect to sold prices. In his 2012 expert report, he estimated that the top five such brokerages/franchisors collectively accounted for over 70% of the transactions in the GTA in 2011, and he speculated that such entities could compile or might be able to provide data that is statistically representative of the MLS sold data that is more broadly available through Stratus. To ascertain whether an agent might be able to make reasonable price estimates based only on [CONFIDENTIAL] internal data, relative to using the full MLS Database, he estimated two sets of simple hedonic price regressions on data for detached homes that sold between January 2007 and December 2011. He concluded that his analysis implied that [CONFIDENTIAL] data are a good substitute to the "full" MLS data, not just for [CONFIDENTIAL] own listings, but for all listings in the communities in question.

[230] However, based on the following evidence, which the Tribunal accepts, the Tribunal is satisfied that information available from Teranet/GeoWarehouse, MPAC and large brokerages/franchisors cannot be considered to be a good substitute for MLS sold information that the Commissioner submits should be available over TREB's VOW Data Feed.

[231] After assessing each of the above-mentioned potential substitutes for the Disputed Data, Dr. Vistnes concluded that none of them are good substitutes for the Disputed Data, and that there is no other alternative source for this information.

[232] With respect to Teranet/GeoWarehouse, Dr. Vistnes noted the following:

a. It does not currently allow the data that it makes available to TREB's Members to be "republished" by brokers, whether on their VOWs or otherwise;

b. It has demonstrated an unwillingness to enter into new contracts with brokers that would allow "republication" of that information on brokers' websites. This was corroborated by Mr. Enchin, who referred to his request to obtain square footage information, and stated that Teranet left him with "the clear impression that they were very reluctant to sell [him] this information" (Exhibit A-021, Reply Witness Statement of Mark Enchin dated August 17, 2012, at para 11);

c. It has not made its sold listings available to others in the real estate industry, such as ZooCasa;

d. The fact that Teranet charges TREB [CONFIDENTIAL] per year for its Members' access to the very limited scope of data available through its GeoWarehouse product, suggests that brokers might incur substantial costs to gain access to Teranet's sold data. This is further corroborated by the fact that Teranet's representatives apparently told Mr. Enchin that one or two data fields could cost as much as $5 per property, which would work out to approximately $37,500 per month (or $450,000 per year) to display information on 7,500 new sold listings per month;

e. The data available on GeoWarehouse is not as up-to-date as the information available on the MLS system. In addition to the medium time lag of over seven weeks from the time a home is sold to the time the sale agreement closes, it takes an additional 10-14 days before sold data is available to users of GeoWarehouse;

f. Even if Teranet had comprehensive sold data that it was willing to provide at minimal cost, brokers would still face costs associated with integrating that data into their VOWs; and

g. Teranet does not have the same extent of information that appears in the MLS system (e.g., days on the market, original price and price changes).

[233] With respect to MPAC, Dr. Vistnes noted that Dr. Church provided no evidence that MPAC can provide comprehensive information, that it would be willing to provide such data, that it would be willing to do so at a price brokers pay for the same information from the MLS system, or that the data would be timely, reliable and capable of being integrated into brokers' VOWs. He added that because much of MPAC's data appears to be derivative of Teranet's data, many of the same reasons that Teranet/GeoWarehouse would be a poor substitute for the information available from TREB's MLS system, would apply to MPAC.

[234] Dr. Vistnes' evidence with respect to Teranet/GeoWarehouse and MPAC is consistent with the evidence provided by several of the Commissioner's lay witnesses, who also maintained that there are no good substitutes to TREB's MLS system for information regarding sold listings or other Disputed Data, whether from Teranet/GeoWarehouse, MPAC or elsewhere. This includes the following evidence:

a. Mr. Hamidi indicated that Stratus and GeoWarehouse are weak and inflexible technologies that require agents to perform a lot of work in order to make sense of the information. He stated that with a complete data feed from TREB, TheRedPin "could put all of the information from several sources together, seamlessly and in innovative ways for [its] agents and [its] customers and not be limited by the information and pre-packaged format of Stratus and Geowarehouse" (Exhibit A-013, Witness Statement of Shayan Hamidi dated June 22, 2012 ("2012 Hamidi Statement"), at para 51);

b. [CONFIDENTIAL] Elsewhere, Mr. McMullin stated that there is no comprehensive source of information for residential properties for sale and sold, other than TREB's MLS system. He noted that, among other things, Teranet does not even have information with respect to sold data (except for sold prices, though Mr. McMullin understands that there is a time lag), "pending solds," WEST listings, and other status changes that are vital to ViewPoint's value proposition. At the Redetermination Hearing, he added that Teranet representatives "were not willing to license the sales data they had or have in their possession" (Transcript, September 22, 2015, at p. 102);

c. In addition to the evidence discussed at paragraphs 232-233 above, Mr. Enchin stated that Teranet and MPAC do not have information with respect to "pending solds" and that their sold information is not as up to date and therefore not as useful to realtors and their customers as data in a real estate board's MLS system; and

d. Mr. Prochazka testified that he attempted to obtain information from Teranet on at least two occasions but never heard back from them.

[235] With respect to the potential for large brokerages and corporate franchisers to "self supply" sold data, Dr. Vistnes once again disagreed with Dr. Church. In this regard, he noted that even the largest franchises and brokerages would have only limited sold listings, i.e., only their own sold listings. By way of example, he estimated that by relying solely on sold information from its own listings, [CONFIDENTIAL] would lose access to approximately 70 percent of sold listings in the GTA. Smaller brokerages would have even less coverage of the market. He further observed that this possibility of "self supply" was mere speculation.

[236] Turning to appraisers, Dr. Vistnes noted that they do not collect all of their own information, but instead rely on the same data sources that brokers rely upon, including the MLS system, Teranet and MPAC. Insofar as the MLS system is concerned, it is not realistic to believe that appraisers would be able to obtain the same Disputed Data that TREB is prohibiting its Members from displaying on their VOWs. Likewise, there is no reason to believe that appraisers would be any more successful than brokers/agents have been at obtaining sold information from Teranet/GeoWarehouse and MPAC.

[237] With respect to the possibility that the websites operated by brokers offering FSBO services might be a possible source of supply of sold information to other brokers/agents, Dr. Vistnes appropriately noted that FSBO sales appear to constitute a small share of all sales in the GTA, and thus would be unable to provide much coverage of the market.

[238] In summary, based on the evidence discussed above, the Tribunal accepts Dr. Vistnes' conclusion that Teranet's GeoWarehouse, MPAC, large brokerages and other sources are not good substitutes for the sold information that is available on TREB's MLS system. Moreover, if Teranet's GeoWarehouse or MPAC were acceptable substitutes for the sold information that is available on TREB's MLS system, one would expect to see at least some brokers sourcing sold information from one or both of those sources, instead of sourcing exclusively from the MLS system. TREB provided no evidence that this is occurring or ever has occurred to any meaningful degree in the GTA. The same is true with respect to the potential for brokerages to self-supply, or to share their "sold data" between themselves, and with respect to the proposition that sold information available on the websites of brokerages offering FSBO services are an acceptable substitute for the MLS sold information that is available from TREB.

[239] Dr. Church also observed that innovative agents can obtain information with respect to "solds" the same way that other agents obtain that information. However, the Tribunal accepts the evidence provided by Dr. Vistnes and certain innovative agents, who stated that there are no good substitutes for obtaining the Disputed Data, whether over the Stratus system or otherwise. Specifically:

a. Mr. Pasalis stated that the information that TREB currently makes available to its Members (including over the Stratus system) requires agents to engage in a time consuming and costly manual process of assembling and uploading sold information to their websites. He added that this process is prone to human error, and that this can undermine the reliability of the analysis produced. If sold information were available in TREB's VOW Data Feed, Realosophy "could automate the assembly of the information, reduce [its] costs, eliminate human error, and ensure that the information [its] agents are relying on is as up-do-date as possible" (Exhibit A-120, Second Witness Statement of John Pasalis dated February 2, 2015, at para 11);

b. Mr. McMullin stated that the VOW Data Feed offered by TREB lacks content and that without an ability to access all of the MLS data through an efficient means, ViewPoint has "no realistic basis for competing effectively" in the GTA (Exhibits A-100 and CA-099, Second Witness Statement of William McMullin dated February 5, 2015 ("2015 McMullin Second Statement"), at paras 49-50). Mr. McMullin testified that ViewPoint, "to do [its] business, [requires] the data in both real-time through a data feed which use [sic] as [sic] protocol known as RETS, Real Estate Transaction Standard, and also in the bulk format" (Transcript, September 11, 2012, at pp. 246-247); and

c. Dr. Vistnes stated that "since brokers cannot practically turn to other equivalent sources of information regarding the excluded data fields, brokers are effectively prevented from providing that information on their VOWs." He added that "to the extent that substitution is possible, it would be to an inferior, more costly, alternative" (Exhibits A-136 and CA-137, Reply Expert Report of Dr. Greg Vistnes dated August 4, 2015 ("2015 Vistnes Reply Expert Report"), at pp. 9 and 13). Elsewhere, he observed that by being unable to offer the Disputed Data over a VOW, "brokers must incur the costs of serving as an information intermediary in which consumers ask for particular information, the broker conducts the necessary search, and then the broker transmits the information via a phone call, email or fax to the consumer" (Exhibits A-138 and CA-135, Expert Report of Dr. Greg Vistnes dated February 6, 2015, at p. 6).

(iii) Other innovative vehicles

[240] TREB also submitted that it has a demonstrated history of innovation and that VOWs are simply one tool that real estate professionals can use to deliver real estate services over the Internet. CREA makes a similar argument. According to TREB, another effective tool is the centralized Internet Data Exchange ("IDX") program that it launched in January 2010. That program enables brokers who participate in the IDX to advertise each other's listings on their respective websites. This effectively creates a large pool of shared listings. Participation is optional and reciprocal and, according to TREB, over 90% of its Members have subscribed to its IDX program, which is quicker, easier and less expensive to operate than a VOW.

[241] However, the Tribunal understands that IDXs cannot show any of the Disputed Data fields.

[242] The same is also true for other Internet-based data-sharing vehicles such as CREA's IDX, realtor.ca (a public website operated by CREA), or CREA's data distribution facility ("DDF"). Realtor.ca was developed by CREA and displays for free active listings from across the country. The information found on realtor.ca is a subset of listing content from MLS systems across the country. The website does not display the Disputed Data and does not require registration. Likewise, the Tribunal understands that the information available through DDF does not include the Disputed Data.

[243] Dr. Church further suggested that any attempt by TREB to exercise market power in respect of the Disputed Data might elicit a supply-side response similar to what has occurred in the United States. He noted that there are three suppliers of national assessor and recorder bulk data in that country (CoreLogic, RealtyTrac and Black Knight), as well as several additional regional suppliers, which have commercialized their real estate data, including by licensing data to provide automated valuation models, home price indexes, or to power consumer-facing tools. He suggested that the popularity of valuation tools and information on search portals suggests that MLS-sourced "sold" price information is unlikely to be uniquely useful.

[244] In this latter regard, Dr. Church noted that the most visited real-estate websites in the United States are search portals, namely, realtor.com, Zillow and Trulia. He observed that the latter two entities obtain their data on sold prices from non-MLS sources, including public records, and display that data to the public on their websites. He asserted that there is no evidence that any of these websites are perceived by consumers to be less valuable or useful than VOW sites using MLS-sourced information such as the Disputed Data.

[245] The Tribunal finds three principal shortcomings with these submissions. The first is that they are speculation. They are simply assertions that are not supported by any evidence that any of these U.S. entities has ever considered expanding into Canada, notwithstanding that TREB has consistently refused to provide the Disputed Data over its VOW Data Feed for several years. The second shortcoming is that Dr. Church did not indicate where those potential entrants would obtain information with respect to the sold prices of homes in the GTA. Finally, Dr. Church's arguments are focused on consumers, rather than agents, particularly innovative agents who would like to be able to disrupt the market by offering the Disputed Data over a VOW.

[246] Dr. Church further maintains that concrete conclusions regarding the availability of substitutes to MLS information, including the Disputed Data, cannot be based on what can be currently witnessed in the market, because MLS information "may actually be priced at an infra-competitive level, consistent with TREB's non-profit status on non-commercial pricing" (Exhibits R-079 and CR-080, Expert Report of Dr. Jeffrey Church dated July 27, 2012, at para 222). He refers to this as a "reverse cellophane problem." In this regard, he notes that TREB's Members pay an annual membership fee that provides access to many resources and benefits, only one of which is access to the MLS system. According to Mr. Richardson, TREB's brokers and salespersons pay annual membership dues of $611.80, as well as an initiation fee ($4,960 for businesses and $460 for individuals) that, in part, reflects the fact that new Members gain access to the information that has been "built up over years" in TREB's MLS Database (Exhibits R-141 and CR-142, Updated Witness Statement of Donald Richardson ("2015 Richardson Statement"), at paras 11-12).

[247] In this context, Dr. Church observes that the marginal access price of the MLS system is zero. He suggests that other potential suppliers of sold information might begin to make that information available to agents, if TREB were to increase the price of MLS access beyond a competitive level.

[248] The Tribunal does not consider it necessary or appropriate to speculate upon what might happen if TREB were to exercise a different form of market power (increasing the price of MLS access) than those alleged in this application (i.e., withholding of the Disputed Data over its VOW Data Feed, restrictions on how the data from the VOW Data Feed may be used, and the prohibition of the display of Disputed Data). The question is whether the latter conduct constitutes a practice of anti-competitive acts that has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in the market for the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services. For the purposes of answering that question, it is not necessary to engage in the exceptionally difficult exercise that would be required to ascertain what the economically "competitive" price of access to MLS information is or should be.

[249] Dr. Church also speculates that the fact that commercial supply of sold information does not currently exist could reflect a lack of consumer demand for such data. However, once again, this fails to recognize that the focus of this application is upon whether there is significant agent demand for this information, and, if so, whether TREB's withholding of that information from the VOW Data Feed, together with the other VOW Restrictions, meets the requirements of paragraphs 79(1)(b) and (c) of the Act. Moreover, the evidence in the record suggests that wherever sold information is not arbitrarily restricted from display over the Internet, that information is obtained by brokers and made available to potential home buyers and sellers over the Internet. For example, this is the case in the Halifax Regional Municipality ("HRM") of Nova Scotia, where ViewPoint has availed itself of this opportunity. The same is true in a large number of U.S. states, where Redfin has done the same. Mr. Prochazka's AVP also used the sold data provided by the boards in Edmonton and three jurisdictions in British Columbia before its access to such information was discontinued around 2008-2010. He testified that he "pressed them for a long time, for over a year, to give [the sold data] back to [them]" (Transcript, September 18, 2012, at p. 933).

[250] In summary, for the reasons discussed above, the Tribunal concludes that there are no acceptable substitutes for the sold information in the MLS system. In addition, neither Dr. Church nor TREB provided any persuasive evidence to demonstrate that there are acceptable substitutes for the other components of the Disputed Data, namely, "pending solds," WEST listings and cooperating broker commissions.

[251] Accordingly, even if, as suggested by Dr. Church, it were necessary to define markets in which the Disputed Data, or the distinct components thereof, is supplied, the Tribunal would conclude there are no acceptable substitutes for the Disputed Data, in aggregate or individually, and that therefore TREB substantially or completely controls one or more markets for the supply of those inputs.

[252] However, it is not necessary to define such markets, because as discussed below, the Tribunal is satisfied that TREB controls the market for the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services.

(c) The supply of MLS-based brokerage services

[253] As noted at paragraph 198 above, the Commissioner submits that TREB controls the market for the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services because it controls how its Members compete through its rule-making ability. In brief, the Commissioner contends that TREB controls access to the MLS system; it has the ability to discipline Members who do not follow its rules, including by withdrawing their access to the MLS system; it has imposed such discipline in the past; and it can and does insulate its Members from competition by excluding the innovative products of actual or potential competitors who threaten to disrupt the status quo.

[254] The Tribunal agrees for the following reasons:

a. To obtain and maintain access to the MLS system, TREB's By-Laws (the "By-Laws") prescribe that TREB's Members must execute and agree to be bound by TREB's MLS Rules and Policies as well as its AUA (By-Laws at Article 2, s. 3.01(a));

b. In the event that a Member breaches the terms of the AUA and its breach is not cured within two weeks after receipt of a notice from TREB, the latter may terminate the AUA pursuant to s. 12(a) of the AUA;

c. Such action would effectively terminate a Member's access to the MLS system;

d. Members' access to the MLS system, and indeed their membership in TREB, can also be terminated if they breach TREB's MLS Rules and Policies (By-Laws at Article 3, s. 4.02(f));

e. TREB's MLS Rules and Policies establish a detailed code "for the orderly, competitive and efficient operation of TREB's MLS System" (MLS Rules and Policies, Introduction, at p. 1). Among other things, that code establishes rules that: regulate the solicitation of home buyers and sellers who have signed exclusive agreements with another Member; mandate the type of information that must or may be uploaded to the MLS system and when information must be posted to that system; mandate when listings on the MLS system must be available for showings, inspections and registration of offers; regulate and limit certain aspects of property advertising that are not covered by RECO's rules pertaining to advertising; regulate the reporting of transactions; limit when offers of commissions to cooperating agents can be altered; and restrict what information may be displayed on a Member's VOW, as well as the conditions under which a consumer may search for or retrieve any listing information on a Member's VOW;

f. Pursuant to the AUA, TREB's Members agree, among other things, to access and use the MLS Database and other services provided by TREB in accordance with the AUA and only in the manner and for the purpose expressly specified in the AUA;

g. Messrs. Pasalis, McMullin and Enchin testified that access to the MLS system is critical to providing residential real estate brokerage services. This was not disputed by TREB, although it represented that an unspecified number of agents/brokers in the GTA are not Members of TREB, which now has approximately 42,500 Members;

h. TREB has described the MLS system as "one of the most important tools used by virtually every REALTOR" (Exhibit A-004, Document 382, at p.1);

i. Dr. Vistnes noted that a board's MLS system was described on a CREA-sponsored website as "the single most powerful tool for buying and selling a home" (Exhibits A-030 and CA-029, Expert Report of Dr. Greg Vistnes dated June 22, 2012 ("2012 Vistnes Expert Report"), at para 148);

j. In 2006, CREA reported that approximately 87% of home buyers and 89% of home sellers in Toronto used the services of a realtor during their last home transaction in 2005 or 2006 (Exhibit A-004, Document 869, at pp. 42 and 50);

k. Dr. Vistnes, whose testimony on this point the Tribunal accepts, stated: "Without access to the MLS the broker effectively cannot compete in the market." Dr. Vistnes added that "because [TREB] controls access to the MLS … it's effectively dictating the rules under which brokers are allowed to compete and not compete. It's dictating whether they can compete and it's dictating the forum in which they can compete" (Transcript, October 5, 2015, at pp. 458-459);

l. Dr. Vistnes also stated: "Consumers expect their broker to have access to the MLS: absent MLS access, buy-side brokers will be unable to show prospective clients the full range of homes available for sale or provide all the information about those homes, and sell-side brokers will be unable to expose the seller's home to the full range of buyers" (Exhibits A-032 and CA-031, Reply Expert Report of Dr. Greg Vistnes dated August 23, 2012 ("2012 Vistnes Reply Expert Report"), at para 23);

m. TREB has demonstrated its willingness to terminate a Member's access to the MLS. For example, in 2007, it terminated the access of Mr. Fraser Beach, who was the broker of record for BNV Real Estate Inc. ("BNV"); and when BNV later partnered with RRE, TREB terminated the latter's access. This was not disputed by TREB. More recently, in October 2014 and February 2015, TREB threatened to stop providing MLS access to Members who were violating its VOW Policy and Rules or its AUA; and

n. TREB has effectively prevented some innovative brokers who wish to enter or expand within the market for MLS-based supply of residential real estate brokerage services, based on an innovative VOW-based business model, from doing so.

[255] The Tribunal observes that the Ontario Superior Court of Justice reached a similar conclusion as Dr. Vistnes in 2009 when it noted that it was a "practical reality of the market that a realtor who wishes to trade in resale residential properties in the GTA requires access to the MLS Database to carry on an effective business and, therefore, needs to be a member of TREB" (Beach v Toronto Real Estate Board, [2009] OJ No 5227 ("TREB OSCJ") at para 10). On appeal, the Ontario Court of Appeal noted that without access to TREB's MLS system, the appellant "was not able to carry on business as a real estate broker" (Beach v Toronto Real Estate Board, [2010] OJ No 5541 ("TREB OCA") at para 3).

[256] TREB maintains that it does not substantially or completely control the Relevant Market for several reasons. These include a number of legal arguments that were addressed and rejected at paragraphs 175-190 of these reasons.

[257] In addition to those arguments, TREB states that it has no financial or other interest in how competition occurs among its Members. In oral argument, this was put in terms of TREB having no "horse in the race" (Transcript, November 2, 2015, at p. 1270). TREB adds that its governance structure provides a constraint on the exercise of any market power that TREB could have or might otherwise wish to exercise against its Members.

[258] However, TREB's mission is to act for the benefit of its Members. This includes acting in ways that its Board of Directors, all of whom are licensed and practising brokers/agents in the GTA, direct it to act, whether it be to insulate them from new and disruptive forms of competition, or otherwise.

[259] In this context, the Tribunal is satisfied that TREB does indeed have an interest in how competition occurs among its Members, and does indeed have a "horse in the race," namely, the Members whose success TREB pursues as its "core purpose" (2015 Richardson Statement, at para 5). The Tribunal is also satisfied that TREB can and does exercise the substantial market power that it derives from its control over access to the MLS system, as well as under the terms of the By-Laws, the MLS Rules and Policies, and the AUA, for the benefit of its traditional brokers, who comprise the vast majority of TREB's membership. As noted by Dr. Vistnes, TREB's control of the MLS system "gives TREB the opportunity to dictate who can compete and who cannot compete, and that provides it with significant market power" (Transcript, October 5, 2015, at p. 458).

[260] The Tribunal also agrees with the following observation made by Dr. Vistnes:

> As long as TREB serves as a vehicle through which its members can act to promote their own self-interest, TREB's conduct can be expected to largely mimic those members' collective preferences. Thus, from an economic perspective, it does not matter that TREB uses its market dominance to benefit its members rather than itself (…).
> (2012 Vistnes Reply Expert Report, at para 28)

[261] TREB asserts that paragraph 79(1)(a) of the Act "is directed at determining whether a firm has substantial or complete control over a market, not whether a firm controls how competition occurs in a market" (TREB's 2012 Closing Submissions, at para 199). The Tribunal disagrees. The wording in paragraph 79(1)(a) is sufficiently broad to bring within its purview situations where a firm controls how competition occurs in a market. There is nothing in that wording, or in the scheme of the Act, to suggest otherwise.

[262] TREB also maintains that it cannot substantially or completely control the Relevant Market because it does not have the ability to set prices above competitive levels therein. However, the Tribunal finds that, through its ability to exclude disruptive innovators, including those who would like to become full-information VOWs, TREB has the ability to indirectly influence important non-price dimensions of competition in the supply of real estate brokerage services.

[263] TREB further suggests that it cannot substantially or completely control the Relevant Market because there are insignificant barriers to entry into the market, as evidenced by the large number of brokers who become Members of TREB each year.

[264] However, this misses the point. The source of TREB's substantial market power is its control over its MLS system and how information on that system can be used. As noted above, TREB's control over that system is reinforced by the By-Laws, by TREB's MLS Rules and Policies, and by the terms of the AUA. In this context, the potential entry that is relevant is the entry of a competing MLS system, not the potential entry of new Members. The Tribunal accepts Dr. Vistnes' evidence that, due to the important network effects associated with TREB's MLS system, the entry of a competing MLS system "is extremely unlikely" (2012 Vistnes Reply Expert Report, at para 23). The Tribunal also accepts that even in a market with a large number of competitors, a dominant firm can engage in conduct that "results in a market that is less competitive than it would have been otherwise" (2015 Vistnes Reply Expert Report, at p. 6).

[265] Finally, TREB submits that its ability to exercise market power is constrained by innovative forces in the Relevant Market. In this regard, TREB notes that its Members "are eager adopters of new technology generally, and of VOWs in particular" (TREB's 2015 Closing Submissions, at para 210). It adds that hundreds of member firms, representing the substantial majority of its salespersons and broker Members, are subscribed to its IDX feed and that over 300 Members have subscribed to its VOW Data Feed.

[266] However, notwithstanding these developments in the market, the Tribunal is satisfied that the evidence demonstrates, on a balance of probabilities, that TREB substantially or completely controls the Relevant Market through its control over its MLS system and how information on that system can be used.

(4) Area of Canada

[267] As noted at paragraph 164 above, the Tribunal has consistently interpreted the words "throughout Canada or any area thereof" to mean the geographic dimension of the relevant market in which the respondent is alleged to have "substantial or complete control." For the reasons discussed at paragraphs 153-161 above, the Tribunal considers it appropriate to define the geographic dimension of the market as extending throughout the GTA.

(5) Conclusion

[268] For the reasons set forth above, the Tribunal thus concludes that the Commissioner has demonstrated, on a balance of probabilities, that the requirements of paragraph 79(1)(a) are met and that TREB substantially or completely controls, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business, namely, the market for the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA.

C. Has TREB engaged in, or is it engaging in, a practice of anti-competitive acts?

[269] The Tribunal will therefore turn to the third issue to be determined in this proceeding. This is whether TREB has engaged in, or is engaging in, a practice of anti-competitive acts, as contemplated by subsection 79(1)(b) of the Act. For the reasons detailed below, the Tribunal finds, on a balance of probabilities, that TREB has engaged and continues to engage in a practice of anti-competitive acts, namely, the VOW Restrictions. In that regard, the Tribunal concludes that the evidence of TREB's subjective anti-competitive intent and reasonably foreseeable exclusionary effects outweighs the evidence provided in support of its asserted legitimate business justifications.

(1) Analytical framework

(a) The purpose-focused assessment

[270] The second element of the Canadian abuse of dominance provision is the "abuse" dimension of the conduct contemplated by section 79. Pursuant to paragraph 79(1)(b), this is expressed in terms of whether the person or persons in question have engaged or are engaging in a "practice of anti-competitive acts."

[271] Almost two decades ago, the Tribunal observed that "distinguishing between competition on the merits and anti-competitive conduct … is not an easy task" (Tele-Direct at p.179). That remains as true today as it was then. However, an analytical framework has gradually emerged.

[272] The Federal Court of Appeal dealt extensively with this element in Canada Pipe FCA. As a result, it is now settled law that the focus of the assessment under paragraph 79(1)(b) of the Act is upon the purpose of the impugned practice, and specifically upon whether that practice was or is intended to have a predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 67-72 and 77).

[273] The term "practice" in paragraph 79(1)(b) is generally understood to contemplate more than an isolated act, but may include an ongoing, sustained and systemic act, or an act that has had a lasting impact on competition (Canada Pipe FCA at para 60). In addition, different individual anti-competitive acts taken together may constitute a "practice" (NutraSweet at p. 35).

[274] In this context, subjective intent will be probative and informative, if it is available, but it is not required to be demonstrated (Canada Pipe FCA at para 70; Laidlaw at p. 334). Instead, the Tribunal will assess and weigh all relevant factors, including the "reasonably foreseeable or expected objective effects" of the conduct, in attempting to discern the "overall character" of the conduct (Canada Pipe FCA at para 67). In making this assessment, the respondent will be deemed to have intended the effects of its actions (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 67-70; Nielsen at p. 257).

[275] It bears underscoring that the assessment is focused on determining whether the respondent subjectively or objectively intended a predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor, as opposed to on competition. While adverse effects on competition can be relevant in determining the overall character or objective purpose of an impugned practice, it is not necessary to ascertain an actual negative impact on competition in order to conclude that the practice is anti-competitive, within the meaning contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(b). The focus at this stage is upon whether there is the requisite subjective or objective intended negative impact on one or more competitors. An assessment of the actual or likely impact of the impugned practice on competition is reserved for the final stage of the analysis, contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(c) (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 74-78).

[276] To the extent that past pronouncements of the Tribunal may have suggested that it is necessary for an adverse impact on competition be demonstrated before it can be concluded that impugned conduct is anti-competitive within the meaning of paragraph 79(1)(b), (e.g., Canada Pipe CT at para 171; Nielsen at p. 257; Laidlaw at p. 333), they should be disregarded. However, to the extent that those cases held that an adverse impact on competition can be relevant to the assessment of the overall character or objective purpose of an impugned practice, they remain good law (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 74-79).

[277] Likewise, although past jurisprudence may have suggested that it is necessary to demonstrate the requisite negative impact on a direct competitor of the respondent, it is now clear that this is not the case. The meaning of the word competitor in the phrase "predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor" means a person who competes in the relevant market, or who is a potential entrant into that market. It does not mean a competitor of the respondent (TREB FCA at paras 17-20).

[278] Accordingly, a trade association may be found to have engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts if those acts are found to have been intended, subjectively or objectively, to have a predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on one or more persons who compete in the relevant market, or who would like to enter that market. The same is true of an entity situated upstream or downstream from the relevant market.

[279] However, before a practice engaged in by a respondent who does not compete in the relevant market can be found to be anti-competitive, the Commissioner will be required to satisfy the Tribunal that the respondent has a plausible competitive interest in the market.

[280] In the case of a trade association, this may be as straightforward as demonstrating that it has a plausible interest in protecting some or all of its members from new entrants or from smaller disruptive competitors in the market. In such circumstances, the complete or partial exclusion of potential or actual competitors or new products will be assessed in essentially the same way as similar conduct engaged in by a joint venture (see, for example, Herbert Hovenkamp, "Exclusive Joint Ventures and Antitrust Policy," (1995) Columb Bus L Rev 1 at pp. 64-66).

[281] In the case of an entity that is upstream or downstream from the relevant market, this may involve demonstrating that the entity has a plausible competitive interest that is different from the typical interest of a supplier in cultivating downstream competition for its goods or services, or the typical interest of a customer in cultivating upstream competition for the supply of the goods or services that it purchases. Among other things, this will ensure that garden-variety refusals to supply or other vertical conduct that has no link to a plausible competitive interest by the respondent in the relevant market will not be mistaken for the type of anti-competitive conduct that is contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(b).

[282] For greater certainty, if a respondent, who is a dominant supplier to, or customer of, participants in the relevant market, is found to have no plausible competitive interest in adversely impacting competition in the relevant market, other than as described immediately above, its practices generally will not be found to fall within the purview of paragraph 79(1)(b). This is so regardless of whether that entity's conduct might incidentally adversely impact upon competition. For example, an upstream supplier who discontinues supply to a customer because the customer consistently breaches agreed-upon terms of trade typically would not be found to have engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts solely because that customer is no longer able to obtain supply (perhaps because of its poor reputation) and is forced to exit the market, or becomes a weakened competitor in the market.

[283] In any event, there must be evidence linking an impugned practice to the requisite subjectively or objectively intended negative effect on a competitor. Where such an effect has already occurred, it must be demonstrated that the practice caused or contributed to those effects (Canada Pipe FCA at para 78).

[284] However, the required anti-competitive purpose can also be demonstrated from evidence establishing that there was a subjective intent to engage in predatory behaviour against, to completely or to partially exclude or to discipline one or more competitors; or that one of these types of effects was a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the conduct.

(b) Weighing evidence of anti-competitive purpose and legitimate business justifications

[285] In considering all of the relevant circumstances relating to the purpose of the impugned practice, a critical part of the Tribunal's assessment involves evaluating any legitimate business considerations that may be advanced by the respondent, and then weighing them against any predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effects on firms participating in the market that it finds were subjectively intended or reasonably foreseeable (Canada Pipe FCA at para 67).

[286] The Tribunal emphasizes the weighing aspect of the assessment to underscore that the demonstration of a legitimate business justification does not necessarily provide an absolute defence to an allegation that an impugned practice is anti-competitive, within the meaning of paragraph 79(1)(b). Instead, "a business justification is properly employed to counterbalance or neutralize other evidence of an anti-competitive purpose, prior to making a determination under 79(1)(b)" (Canada Pipe FCA at para 88).

[287] Where any predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary motivations are found to have played a more important role in the respondent's overall subjective intentions than one or more asserted legitimate business justifications, the overall character of the impugned practice typically will be found to have the anti-competitive purpose contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(b). Likewise, where it is determined that any predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary effects that are objectively deemed to have been intended outweigh one or more legitimate business justifications, the impugned practice typically will be found to have an anti-competitive purpose.

[288] As is the case for all components of section 79 of the Act, in conducting this balancing exercise, the Tribunal assesses the evidence on the "balance of probabilities" standard. The Tribunal notes that, in FH v McDougall, 2008 SCC 53 ("McDougall"), the Supreme Court held that there is only one civil standard of proof in Canada, a balance of probabilities. Speaking for a unanimous Court, Mr. Justice Rothstein further stated in his reasons that the only legal rule in all cases is that "evidence must be scrutinized with care by the trial judge" and that "evidence must always be sufficiently clear, convincing and cogent to satisfy the balance of probabilities test" (McDougall at paras 45-46). He concluded by saying that, in all civil cases, "the trial judge must scrutinize the relevant evidence with care to determine whether it is more likely than not that an alleged event occurred" (McDougall at para 49). The Supreme Court reaffirmed this in Tervita, at paragraph 66.

[289] Therefore, in assessing the balancing test under paragraph 79(1)(b), the Tribunal must determine whether sufficiently clear, convincing and cogent evidence exists to demonstrate that the overriding purpose of the impugned practice was anti-competitive. If it is not satisfied that such evidence has been adduced, the Tribunal will conclude that this element has not been demonstrated by the Commissioner. The Tribunal considers this to be particularly important in section 79 cases, to avoid chilling unilateral conduct that is primarily motivated by legitimate business justifications, but may also be objectively expected to have some adverse impact on competition. That being said, while "sufficiently clear, convincing and cogent" evidence is required to meet the evidentiary burden on this weighing test, it is still the balance of probabilities standard of proof that applies.

[290] It is implicit in the foregoing that the existence of some business justification will not shield conduct that was principally motivated by predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary objectives, or that has predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary effects that are deemed to have been intended by the respondent.

[291] The Tribunal further observes that the balancing exercise contemplated above is not the type of quantitative assessment contemplated by the efficiency exception in section 96 of the Act. No similar exception or defense exists in section 79, for good reason: it would be much more difficult, and perhaps even completely intractable, in the section 79 context.

[292] Rather, the weighing exercise under paragraph 79(1)(b) involves determining whether there is clear and convincing evidence, quantitative or otherwise, that establishes that the actual or reasonably foreseeable predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary effects and/or subjective intent outweigh the efficiency or pro-competitive rationales of the respondent (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 73 and 88). In this exercise, the efficiency or pro-competitive benefits actually obtained or likely to be realized by the respondent can provide helpful and relevant evidence bearing on the respondent's intentions.

[293] In conducting this balancing exercise, the Tribunal will endeavour to ascertain whether, on a balance of probabilities, the actual or reasonably foreseeable anti-competitive effects are disproportionate to the efficiency or pro-competitive rationales identified by the respondent; or whether sufficiently cogent evidence demonstrates that the respondent was motivated more by subjective anti-competitive intent than by efficiency or pro-competitive considerations. In other words, even where there is some evidence of subjective anti-competitive intent on the part of the respondent, such evidence must convincingly demonstrate that the overriding purpose of the conduct was anti-competitive in nature. If there is evidence of both subjective intent and actual or reasonably foreseeable anti-competitive effects, the test is whether the evidence is sufficiently clear and convincing to demonstrate that such subjective motivations and reasonably foreseeable effects (which are deemed to have been intended), taken together, outweigh any efficiencies or other pro-competitive rationale intended to be achieved by the respondent. In assessing whether this is so, the Tribunal will assess whether the subjective and deemed motivations were more important to the respondent than the desire to achieve efficiencies or to pursue other pro-competition goals.

(c) Defining and identifying legitimate business justifications

[294] To be considered "legitimate" in the context of paragraph 79(1)(b), a business justification must involve more than a respondent's self-interest. Rather, it "must be a credible efficiency or pro-competitive rationale for the conduct in question, attributable to the respondent, which relates to and counterbalances the anti-competitive effects and/or subjective intent of the acts" (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 73 and 90-91). The business justification must also be independent of the anti-competitive effect of the practice concerned. Of course, there may be legal considerations, such as privacy laws, that legitimately justify an impugned practice, provided that the evidence supports that the impugned conduct was primarily motivated by such considerations.

[295] The Commissioner has interpreted this test for what constitutes a "legitimate business justification" to include cost reductions in production or other aspects of a firm's operations, improvements in technology or production processes that result in innovative new products, and improvements in product quality or service (Guidelines at section 3.2). The Tribunal typically would be inclined to consider these types of business justifications to be legitimate. However, all of the circumstances must be considered. For example, the cost reductions that might be contemplated or realized by driving one's rivals from the relevant market would not suffice to shield conduct that was primarily motivated by a predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary purpose.

[296] Insight into the requirement that there be a credible efficiency or pro-competitive rationale that is attributable to the respondent, and that goes beyond the respondent's self-interest, can be provided by considering the two business justifications that were advanced by the respondent in Canada Pipe CT. First, the respondent asserted that the uniform rebates that it offered through its impugned stocking distributor program ("SDP") encouraged competition by creating a level playing field between small and large distributors. Second, it claimed that the SDP permitted it to achieve the high volume of sales necessary to enable it to maintain a full line of cast iron drain, waste and vent ("DWV") products. Put differently, the respondent maintained that, to be able to continue to offer distributors a complete line of DWV products, including less frequently sold items, it needed to ensure a high volume of sales on other (higher volume and higher margin) DWV products (Canada Pipe CT at paras 208-210).

[297] The Tribunal rejected the first of the respondent's justifications on the basis that competition between distributors in the downstream market was not at issue, and had no bearing on whether the respondent was exercising its market power in a way that precluded competition between suppliers of DWV products (Canada Pipe CT at para 209). However, the Tribunal accepted the second business justification, on the basis that maintaining smaller, less profitable, but nevertheless important products in inventory served the interests of distributors, contractors and ultimately consumers (Canada Pipe CT at para 212). The Federal Court of Appeal rejected this reasoning, on the ground that "improved consumer welfare is on its own insufficient to establish a valid business justification" (Canada Pipe FCA at para 90 (emphasis added)). The Court elaborated by stating:

> In the case at bar, the Tribunal's reasons do not establish the requisite efficiency-related link between the SDP and the respondent, and hence do not supply a legitimate explanation for the latter's choice to engage in the impugned conduct, unrelated to an anti-competitive purpose. Without such a link, self-interest remains as the only justification for the SDP which is attributable to the respondent for the purposes of paragraph 79(1)(b).
> (Canada Pipe FCA at para 91)

[298] The Tribunal does not understand the Court, in making the above-quoted statement, to have put into question the conventional view that, absent an anti-competitive purpose, a desire to gain competitive advantage by offering something new and of value to consumers constitutes legitimate competition on the merits. Indeed, the Court appeared to recognize this when it observed that "[t]he effect of an act on consumers may in some circumstances be relevant in assessing the credibility and weight of a proffered business justification" (Canada Pipe FCA at para 79). This recognition is also arguably reflected in the Court's observation that a "valid business justification must provide a credible efficiency or pro-competitive explanation, unrelated to an anti-competitive purpose, for why the dominant firm engaged in the conduct alleged to be anti-competitive" (Canada Pipe FCA at para 90 (emphasis added)).

[299] The very essence of competition involves finding new and innovative ways to make one's products more attractive to one's customers. So long as such practices are unrelated to an anti-competitive purpose, whether subjective or deemed, they are pro-competitive in nature and constitute legitimate competition on the merits. However, where this is not obvious, an explanation needs to be provided as to how an impugned practice assists or is likely to assist the respondent to better compete in the relevant market.

[300] The Federal Court of Appeal appears to have rejected the second business justification asserted by the respondent in Canada Pipe CT on the basis that the Tribunal's rationale for accepting that justification did not provide the requisite link between the interests of "distributors and contractors … and ultimately … the consumer" (Canada Pipe CT at para 212), on the one hand, and the respondent, on the other hand (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 90-91). In reaching that conclusion, the Court did not comment on the fact that, earlier in the same paragraph of the Tribunal's reasons, the Tribunal noted that the respondent had asserted that it needed the additional sales volume expected to result from the SDP, to ensure efficiencies and to lower its cost of production. The Tribunal also noted that the Commissioner had not challenged that assertion.

[301] It thus appears that the Court interpreted the Tribunal's failure to mention these facts again, in explaining why it accepted the respondent's second business justification, as indicating that its sole rationale for accepting the justification was the fact that the SDP "serves the interests of distributors and contractors … and ultimately benefits the consumer." Without any stated link between this and the respondent, the Court concluded that there was no acceptable, credible, efficiency or pro-competitive rationale for the SDP. In addition, the Court may have concluded, on the particular facts of that case, that the sole rationale identified by the Tribunal could not be said to be "unrelated to an anti-competitive purpose" (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 90-91).

[302] It follows from the foregoing that to be acceptable under paragraph 79(1)(b), a business justification for an impugned practice must not only provide either a credible efficiency or a credible pro-competitive rationale for the practice, it must also be linked to the respondent (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 90-91). This is subject to the important caveat that legal considerations, such as privacy, may provide a legitimate justification for an impugned practice.

[303] For efficiencies to be linked to the respondent, they must have been intended to be attained, at least in part, by the respondent itself. In other words, there must be persuasive evidence that the respondent intended that the impugned practice would likely result in the attainment of efficiencies by the respondent. These efficiencies may include cost reductions in production or other aspects of its operations, improvements in technology or production processes that result in innovative new products or product enhancements, or improvements in quality or service.

[304] Likewise, for other types of pro-competitive rationales, the respondent must provide a credible and persuasive explanation of how the impugned practice was intended to enable it to compete on the merits. While it will often be the case that a practice intended to benefit consumers will assist a firm to compete on the merits, that is not necessarily always the case. Indeed, examples of anti-competitive practices that may have benefited consumers, at least in the short-run, can be found in the Tribunal's jurisprudence (e.g., some of the impugned practices in NutraSweet at pp. 38-43; and the inducements paid to retailers in Nielsen at pp. 263-264 and 266). Accordingly, an explanation should be provided as to how an impugned practice assists, or is likely to assist, the respondent to better compete in the relevant market.

[305] In determining whether a practice was intended to have this result, the Tribunal ordinarily will focus on determining whether the practice was intended to assist the respondent to compete more effectively with its rivals, whether in terms of prices or of non-price competition. To the extent that a practice may eliminate rivalry altogether, it cannot be "pro-competitive" (CCS at para 120), unless the practice is a manifestation of superior competitive performance, or what might more aptly be called "decisive" competitive performance.

[306] In determining the overall character of a practice, the Tribunal will also assess the extent to which anti-competitive effects and justifications based on benefits to consumers will be manifested beyond the short-term. This is because practices, such as targeted practices that exclude new competitors, may have ambiguous effects in the short-term, but may be likely to harm consumers and competition in the longer term (Tele-Direct at p. 199).

[307] Competing on the merits is one thing. Pre-empting meaningful competition from emerging over a sustained period of time may be quite another thing, particularly where the respondent faces little present competition.

[308] Nevertheless, targeted practices that merely "meet" the competition, as opposed to "beating" it, typically will be considered to constitute "competition on the merits," and be legitimately justified. Likewise, the introduction of a new or better quality product typically will be considered to constitute competition on the merits, even if that initiative can be said to "beat" the competition.

[309] This is not intended to imply that other practices that involve "beating" the competition will necessarily be considered to be anti-competitive, if they have a predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor. It bears underscoring that the Tribunal will assess and weigh all of the relevant factors, including the reasonably foreseeable effects of the conduct, in attempting to discern the overall character of an impugned practice.

[310] In considering arguments based on "competition on the merits," the Tribunal does not apply a safe-harbour for practices which a non-dominant firm would likely have undertaken in similar circumstances. On the contrary, any conduct that is subjectively intended or deemed to have been intended to have a predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on a competitor can be found to be anti-competitive within the meaning of section 79, even if the same conduct would be considered to constitute "competition on the merits" if pursued by a non-dominant firm (Tele-Direct at pp. 180-181).

[311] In assessing the overall character of a practice that has reasonably foreseeable anti-competitive effects on one or more competitors, the Tribunal may consider whether the practice has involved or would likely involve a sacrifice of short-term profits that would not likely be recouped by the respondent, "but for" such effects. As an alternative, the Tribunal may consider whether the practice would make economic sense, "but for" such anti-competitive effect. The Tribunal is aware that the latter approach has been advocated by the U.S. DOJ in several proceedings under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 USC §§ 1-7 (Gregory J Werden, "Identifying Exclusionary Conduct under Section 2: the 'No Economic Sense' Test" (2006) 2:73 Antitrust LJ 413).

[312] In considering whether a practice has involved or would likely involve a sacrifice of short-term profits that would not likely be recouped by the respondent "but for" any reasonably foreseeable anti-competitive effect, the Tribunal will attempt to determine and weigh the avoidable costs incurred in pursuing the practice as well as the cognizable benefits likely to be obtained by the firm as a result of the practice. Cognizable benefits can include any cost savings or other efficiencies attained or likely to be attained by the firm, as well as revenues from additional units of products sold as a result of the practice, plus increased revenues that may be attributable to quality improvements.

[313] In conducting this latter assessment of cognizable benefits, the hypothetical "but for" world will be the one in which there were no predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary effects on competitors. For greater certainty, if actual or future competition likely would have driven down the price of the relevant product "but for" the impugned practice, the relevant price in the assessment will be that lower future price, rather than the price that prevailed immediately prior to the commencement of that practice.

[314] The alternative approach of assessing whether a practice made economic sense "but for" any actual or reasonably foreseeable anti-competitive effects may be more helpful and straightforward to apply than the profit-sacrifice approach in a range of circumstances. This is in part because the former approach does not require a determination that there has been, or is likely to be, a sacrifice of short-term profits. Instead, the Tribunal would simply assess whether it made economic sense to incur the costs associated with the practice, "but for" the anti-competitive effects in question.

[315] In other words, the Tribunal would attempt to determine whether the respondent likely would be able to recover the costs incurred in pursuing the practice, solely with profits that do not depend on the actual or reasonably foreseeable anti-competitive effects in order to be realized. If those costs are such that it would not have made economic sense for the respondent to have engaged in the practice absent the profits or other benefit obtained by excluding or disciplining one or more established competitors or new entrants, then the Tribunal likely would conclude that the objective purpose of the practice was anti-competitive in nature.

[316] For greater certainty, as with the profit-sacrifice approach, in assessing whether an impugned practice made economic sense, the Tribunal will consider in its assessment profits that do not depend on anti-competitive effects in order to be attained. However, in contrast to the profit-sacrifice approach, no adverse conclusion would be drawn where there may appear to have been a profit sacrifice, if the conduct otherwise made economic sense.

[317] In assessing whether an impugned practice made economic sense, the Tribunal would attempt to determine the reasonably anticipated impact of the challenged conduct at the time it was initiated, rather than focusing upon the actual impact of the conduct. Among other things, this would assist to avoid unwarranted conclusions being drawn in situations where there have been unforeseen, unfavourable developments for the respondent or its rivals in the intervening period. Nevertheless, the Tribunal would also consider the actual impact of the conduct in assessing what the reasonably anticipated impact of the conduct would have been, at the time it was initiated.

[318] Inquiring into whether a practice made economic sense at the time it was initiated is helpful even where the costs associated with pursuing the practice are minor or trivial. Even in such circumstances, this analysis may assist to reveal that it would have made no economic sense to engage in the practice, "but for" its predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effects on one or more established competitors or new entrants.

(2) Did TREB have a subjective intention to exclude actual or potential participants in the relevant market(s) by adopting the VOW Restrictions, or were those restrictions motivated by legitimate business justifications?

[319] The Commissioner submits that TREB had a subjective intention to exclude, through the VOW Restrictions, potential entrants into the relevant market and existing TREB Members who were poised to disrupt the traditional residential brokerage business model that is followed by TREB's other Members in the GTA. The Tribunal agrees.

[320] The Commissioner asserts that the VOW Restrictions comprise at least three acts that individually and collectively constitute a practice. These are:

i. The exclusion of the Disputed Data from TREB's VOW Data Feed;

ii. Provisions in TREB's VOW Policy and Rules that prohibit Members who want to provide services through a VOW from using the information included in the VOW Data Feed for any purpose other than display on a website; and

iii. Prohibiting TREB's Members from displaying certain information, including the Disputed Data, on their VOWs, notwithstanding that, in practice, there is no similar limitation on the Members' ability to share essentially the same information with consumers, when Members access such information through the Stratus system, or otherwise. This prohibition is reinforced by terms in TREB's Data Feed Agreement that limit the use of the MLS data in the VOW Data Feed to a purpose that is narrower than the corresponding provision in the AUA that applies to Members using the Stratus system. Among other things, the Commissioner maintains that those terms severely restrict the ability of VOW operators to use certain MLS data to improve the efficiency of their operations and to provide enhanced services to their customers and clients through their VOWs.

[321] TREB maintains that it ultimately decided to exclude the Disputed Data from its VOW Data Feed because of concerns about consumer privacy. It asserts that those concerns were central to the decision-making process that it followed in discussing and implementing its VOW Policy and Rules. However, this is not borne out by the evidence.

[322] The Tribunal finds that each of the above-mentioned acts challenged by the Commissioner is in fact anti-competitive and that, individually and collectively, they constitute a practice. In carefully calibrating the parameters of its VOW Policy and Rules, in deliberately eliminating provisions from the corresponding U.S. VOW policy that served as a "good starting point for the development of a TREB policy," and in ultimately implementing the VOW Restrictions, TREB was motivated primarily by a desire to insulate its Members from disruptive competition.

(a) Background and development of the VOW Policy and Rules

[323] Mr. Richardson states that TREB first became aware of, and began monitoring, the VOW concept as early as 2002. Around that time, TREB sent some of its Members to attend conferences in the United States to stay up to date on developments there. However, TREB appears to have been content to let CREA take the lead with respect to the study of VOWs.

(i) The EDU Task Force

[324] Roughly contemporaneously, CREA established its Electronic Data Usage Task Force ("EDU Task Force"), which included two Members of TREB, namely, Mr. DiMichele, TREB's then Chief Information Officer ("CIO") (now TREB's CEO) and Mr. Silver, who was president of TREB in 2011-2012. (This is a different Mr. Silver from the Commissioner's lay witness mentioned earlier in these reasons.)

[325] In early 2003, two of the members of the EDU Task Force were deputized to review the 2003 Draft NAR Policy and to make recommendations to the rest of the group. Shortly afterwards, CREA obtained a copy of the 2003 Draft NAR Policy and sent it to the members of the EDU Task Force. Two weeks later, they circulated a revised draft of the policy to the full group. It appears that the one noteworthy change they made to the draft document was to remove the ability of local real estate boards to choose whether to permit VOWs to display sold data.

[326] Specifically, the following language from the 2003 Draft NAR Policy was deleted from the "proposed guidelines" that were circulated to the EDU Task Force:

> An MLS may permit Participants to make "Sold" data available on a VOW for search by Registrants. If "Sold" data is made available, the MLS may establish reasonable limits on the number of listings that Registrants may retrieve or download in response to an inquiry.

[327] Subsequent email exchanges between the members of the EDU Task Force reflected ongoing concerns. For example, one member reported back that he had received "the distinct feeling that clear guidelines [were] wanted by everyone who [had spoken to him] but [had] a feeling from some that [they] should not tolerate any kind of VOW" (Exhibit CA-003, Document 10026, at p. 1). Another member suggested that "[b]rokers must have the choice of opting in or out and full disclosure to the VOW visitor is also very important" (Exhibit CA-003, Document 10026, at p. 1). A third person observed: "I see that NAR is proposing fairly extensive restrictions on VOW's [sic]. We would be advised to do the same" (Exhibit A-004, Document 865, at p. 1). Another person mentioned that "no matter what type of rules we put in for VOW's [sic]- the second they are adopted - many people will try to find a way around the rules. Has the idea of not allowing VOW's [sic] been set aside?" (Exhibit A-004, Document 10033, at p. 1).

[328] Ultimately, revisions were made to the draft guidelines that were prepared by the EDU Task Force which contained two important restrictions. First, VOWs were limited to displaying active listings – the same data available on CREA's website (MLS.ca, which was later renamed realtor.ca). One EDU Task Force member appears to have been referring to this provision when he observed: "Why would anyone use a password and jump through hoops when he can get the same information directly from mls.ca without going through it" (Exhibit CA-003, Document 52, at p.1).

[329] Second, the guidelines permitted any agent to opt out of having its listings displayed on a VOW. As a result, VOWs would not be as useful or attractive as they were in the United States.

[330] The purpose of the guidelines proposed by the EDU Task Force was stated to be as follows:

> This discussion paper is for the purpose of developing guidelines for the effective, efficient and beneficial use of electronic data for Boards, Associations and REALTORS.
>
> There is a legitimate fear on one hand of capitulating to misuse of REALTORS' hard-earned data banks, and on the other hand of being left behind in an electronic revolution moving at the speed of light.
>
> The objective always is to ensure the REALTOR remains central to the real estate transaction and that efforts to guide the use of MLS® data are to that end.
>
> (EDU Task Force Report, Exhibits IC-084 and CIC-085, Witness Statement of Gary Simonsen dated August 3, 2012 ("2012 Simonsen Statement"), Exhibit 18, at p. 494)

[331] The italicized words in the foregoing statement of purpose essentially reflect a concern about "disintermediation." That concern was reflected later in the report of the EDU Task Force, as follows:

> We have heard dire predictions of disintermediation, which basically implies removal from involvement in the transaction. We have heard wild projections of financial windfalls. These have not come to pass. Nonetheless, the Internet has had a profound effect on us.
> The threat of disintermediation has certainly affected other industries. Travel agents and stock brokers have been heaviest hit. Bankers are scrambling to change with the new technologies.

> Others offering homogeneous products have and will continue to be affected as well. The major determination of disintermediation seems to be the type of product and the degree of complication in the transaction. If the consumer can be sure of getting exactly the same thing from various sources, like an airline ticket or even an automobile, the likelihood of using the Internet increases dramatically.
> (EDU Task Force Report, 2012 Simonsen Statement, Exhibit 18, at pp. 495-496)

[332] Rather than concerns about privacy, it was this concern about disintermediation and, more broadly, the unknown disruptive impact of being unable to control how the MLS data might be utilized, that appears to have been of principal concern to the EDU Task Force and to other Members of TREB who expressed their views on this matter during that period.

(ii) Development of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules

[333] In the following years, TREB opted not to make a VOW Data Feed available to its Members. Instead, to display MLS listings on their websites, TREB's Members were required to sign data transfer agreements ("DTAs") with each brokerage whose listings the Member wished to have appear on their website. Mr. Hamidi testified that this proved to be very labour intensive and difficult, and created a practical barrier to making a complete set of listings available on TheRedPin's website.

[334] During that period, Mr. Enchin continued to develop a VOW product that included an appraisal feature that used MLS data sourced from TREB's MLS Database. After he presented his product to Mr. DiMichele, the latter informed him that "politics" likely would prevent him from pursuing his vision for his product. Mr. Enchin was subsequently informed by TREB's then President, Ms. Cynthia Lai, that she doubted she would have time to "put this through with all the other things that were on her mandate to do" (Transcript, September 14, 2012, at p. 758).

[335] In the years following the U.S. DOJ's initiation of proceedings against NAR in 2005 in relation to NAR's then existing VOW policy, TREB monitored that dispute and was reluctant to proceed with its own VOW policy pending its resolution.

[336] One of the contentious issues in the U.S dispute was the provision in NAR's then existing VOW policy that permitted individual agents to opt out or withhold their listings from display on VOWs.

[337] In 2007, while the dispute was ongoing in the United States, TREB disabled a bulk download feature that had previously enabled its Members to download a large volume of listing information in a single transfer from TREB's MLS system. This action was taken after two brokerages allegedly "scraped" TREB's MLS Database to create their own online databases, in violation of the AUA. Among other things, this led to the termination of those brokers' access to the MLS system. TREB asserts that its position that such scraping violated the AUA was upheld by the Ontario Superior Court in TREB OSCJ.

[338] The DOJ and NAR ultimately settled their dispute in November 2008 after NAR agreed to make certain changes to its VOW policy. Those changes included eliminating the requirement for VOW operators to seek the permission of listing brokers to display information on a VOW (Exhibit A-004, Document 233, NAR VOW Policy attached to Final Judgment ("Proposed Final Judgment"), at p. 14 of 26). As a practical matter, this effectively precluded agents from opting-out or otherwise refusing to share their MLS listings with VOW operators.

[339] Equally importantly, NAR's amended VOW policy included principles of non-discrimination. In brief, operators of MLS systems could only prohibit VOWs from displaying certain listing information if that prohibition applied equally to non-VOW operators:

1. An MLS may impose any, all, or none of the following requirements on VOWs but may impose them only to the extent that equivalent requirements are imposed on Participants' use of MLS listing data in providing brokerage services via all other delivery mechanisms:

    a. A Participant's VOW may not make available for search by or display to Registrants the following data intended exclusively for other MLS Participants and their affiliated licensees:

        i. Expired, withdrawn or pending listings.

        ii. Sold data unless the actual sales price of completed transactions is accessible from public records.

        iii. The compensation offered to other MLS Participants.

        iv. The type of listing agreement, i.e., exclusive right to sell or exclusive agency.

        v. The seller(s) and occupant(s) name(s), phone number(s) and email address(es), where available.

        vi. Instructions or remarks intended for cooperating brokers only, such as those regarding showing or security of the listed property.

    (Proposed Final Judgment, at pp. 20-21 of 26)

[340] This non-discrimination principle was reinforced in Part IV of the Proposed Final Judgment, which, among other things, prohibited NAR from adopting, maintaining or enforcing any rule, or entering into or enforcing any agreement or practice, that directly or indirectly:

a. Prohibits a Broker from using a VOW or prohibits, restricts, or impedes a Broker who uses a VOW from providing to Customers on its VOW all of the Listing Information that a Broker is permitted to Provide to Customers by hand, mail, facsimile, electronic mail, or any other methods of delivery;

b. Unreasonably disadvantages or unreasonably discriminates against a Broker in the use of a VOW to Provide to Customers all of the Listing Information that a Broker is permitted to Provide to Customers by hand, mail, facsimile, electronic mail, or any other methods of delivery.

(Proposed Final Judgment, at p. 5 of 26)

[341] As discussed further below, notwithstanding that TREB used the 2008 NAR VOW Policy as a "good starting point" for its own policy, it made important modifications to the language above.

[342] In July 2008, following the announcement of the possible settlement between NAR and the U.S. DOJ, the Bureau approached TREB to discuss the adoption of a similar VOW policy. However, TREB believed that this was a national issue that should involve CREA, which then established its own CREA's VOW Task Force. TREB therefore waited to see what would come out of that initiative.

[343] Even before that time, references to VOWs, which had appeared in TREB's 2004 and 2005/2006 Strategic Plans, disappeared from TREB's Strategic Plan, beginning with its 2006/2007 Strategic Plan.

[344] Shortly after being approached by the Bureau in July 2008, CREA's then President, Mr. Calvin Lindberg, described forced data sharing with VOWs as a "line in the sand" and predicted a backlash if brokerages were forced to "open what they have spent years creating to just any REALTOR to frame on their VOW, and not offer them an opt out." Among other things, he observed that:"[This] is not something I could accept in my business and neither could my company agree to change their [sic] business model, and I believe there are numerous companies across the country that have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars creating their very successful niche market" (Exhibit A-004, Document 1148, at p. 1).

[345] Mr. Lindberg's concerns appear to have been shared by at least some of the members of CREA's VOW Task Force. Ultimately, that group's work "stalled after reaching a point of impasse with the Bureau" in approximately 2010, "around the same time that the Commissioner commenced a proceeding against CREA regarding a different matter" (Exhibits R-039 and CR-040, Witness Statement of Donald Richardson dated July 27, 2012 ("2012 Richardson Statement"), at para 116; Exhibit IC-177, Updated Witness Statement of Gary Simonsen ("2015 Simonsen Statement"), at para 75). The minutes of the third meeting of CREA's VOW Task Force reflect that "opt-outs and sold data" were the most contentious issues (Transcript, October 10, 2012, at p. 2329; Exhibit A-087, Minutes from CREA's VOW Task Force, December 1-2, 2008, at p. 4).

[346] In the meantime, Mr. Hamidi met with Mr. DiMichele of TREB to discuss the website platform that he and his business partners had developed. He was told by Mr. DiMichele that TREB did not have a policy to permit Mr. Hamidi's brokerage to receive MLS data in an electronic data feed, as he had hoped. Instead, he would have to collect signatures "from each and every individual brokerage" to be able to display their listings on his website. After he and his partners tested their platform using a data feed transfer from two brokerages, they realized that "it would take a lot of work trying to get other brokerages to provide [them] with listings in a data feed format." Without "all the resale home listings data in a feed from the TREB MLS," they decided to abandon the home resale business and focus on new condominiums (2012 Hamidi Statement, at paras 18-22).

(iii) TREB's VOW Task Force

[347] According to Mr. Richardson, TREB revived its own efforts to establish its VOW Task Force in July 2010, during a strategic planning exercise with its newly elected Board of Directors. Names of potential task force members were subsequently submitted to the TREB Board in March 2011 for ratification. Mr. Richardson, who was then TREB's CEO, acted as the staff liaison to the task force, while Mr. DiMichele, its CIO (and now CEO) acted as the group's advisor. The mandate of TREB's VOW Task Force was "to investigate and recommend to the Board of Directors, the feasibility of TREB adopting a VOW Policy" (2012 Richardson Statement, at para 458).

[348] During that period (July 2010 – March 2011), no action was taken by TREB in connection with VOWs.

[349] However, it appears that the impetus for action increased after the Commissioner sent TREB a voluntary information request concerning VOWs, in November 2010.

[350] TREB's VOW Task Force met for the first time on March 31, 2011. The minutes of that meeting reflect that the group's members were supplied with a copy of the 2008 NAR VOW Policy that was appended to NAR's settlement agreement with the U.S. DOJ, and that the members of TREB's VOW Task Force agreed that the NAR Policy "was a good starting point for the development of a TREB policy rather than starting from scratch" (2012 Richardson Statement, Exhibit CC, at p. 495).

[351] According to Mr. Richardson, it was also agreed that "the NAR VOW Policy would need to be modified in light of Canadian laws, including PIPEDA [Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act, SC 2000, c 5], and RECO's code of ethics" (2012 Richardson Statement, at para 125). However, that is nowhere reflected in the minutes of that meeting.

[352] TREB's VOW Task Force met three more times in 2011, on April 21, May 12 and May 20. The minutes of those meetings reflect that the group agreed upon a need for "Terms of Use for VOW Operators" and for VOW "Visitors." Among other things, it was recommended that website visitors be required to register, validate, agree to terms of use and then enter the VOW area of the website with a time-limited password. The minutes reflect that other issues addressed included: the nature of information that could be provided to a "consumer" as opposed to a "client;" whether advertisements could be included in a VOW; whether brokers and home sellers could be given the option to "opt-out" of providing information to a VOW operator (this was considered to be "essential" for home sellers); whether CMAs could be provided online, and if so, on what conditions; whether brokerages could have their own policies regarding their agents' use of VOWs; and whether universal participation by all brokers would be required – subject to an opt-out for home sellers.

[353] In the minutes of the May 20 meeting, it was also noted that the VOW "[i]ssue is reminiscent of "white label" ATMs – In the end, they were in [the] best interest of Consumers – VOWs are an "extra" service for Members to offer Consumers" (2012 Richardson Statement, Exhibit GG, at p. 538).

[354] In addition, for what appears to be the first time in the documentation on the record in this proceeding, there was a reference in the minutes of the May 12 meeting to the need to ensure that information with respect to "solds" was treated "in accordance with RECO and PIPEDA requirements" (2012 Richardson Statement, Exhibit EE, at p. 507). In this regard, it was noted that ""pending solds" were not appropriate for VOW display", that there were "consents issues" with regards to "other solds" (2012 Richardson Statement, Exhibit EE, at p. 508) and that "information or systems which did not identify specific properties should be ok" (2012 Richardson Statement, Exhibit EE, at p. 507).

[355] The minutes of the May 20 meeting noted that concerns continued to exist with respect to "solds" and that "clarification under PIPEDA and RECO Rules [was] necessary," and that, while consistency in treatment between "bricks and mortar" and Internet operations was desirable, the Internet "is a little more 'out there' re: Privacy" (2012 Richardson Statement, Exhibit GG, at pp. 537-538). According to Mr. Richardson, privacy law concerns were also raised at the April 21 meeting of TREB's VOW Task Force. However, there is no reference to such discussions in the minutes of that meeting, which address a broad range of other issues. This inconsistency, together with the corresponding inconsistency regarding whether privacy issues were discussed at the initial meeting of TREB's VOW Task Force on March 31, gives the Tribunal significant doubts regarding the reliability of Mr. Richardson's evidence in respect of this issue. Those doubts are reinforced by the fact that Mr. Richardson stated that TREB's VOW Task Force also discussed concerns regarding WEST listings, at its final meeting on May 20. However, while the minutes of that meeting reflect a desire to obtain greater clarification regarding the potential application of the PIPEDA and RECO's rules to "solds," they do not mention WEST listings.

[356] The Tribunal's concerns regarding the reliability of Mr. Richardson's evidence in respect of TREB's motives in relation to its VOW Policy and Rules are further reinforced by the fact that he initially strongly denied that TREB's Members were concerned about having to share TREB's MLS information with VOW operators. In cross-examination, he stated that he was "sure" of his position in this regard. However, when confronted with emails addressed to him reflecting such concerns, Mr. Richardson admitted that his memory was not accurate on this point (Transcript, September 27, 2012, at pp. 1683-1685). That said, he maintained that such concerns were not widespread within TREB's membership.

[357] On May 19, 2011, prior to the final meeting of TREB's VOW Task Force, Mr. Richardson circulated a draft of the VOW policy to its Members and to TREB's Board of Directors. That draft was in the form of a blackline against the 2008 NAR VOW Policy, so that readers could readily ascertain the differences between what was being proposed by TREB and NAR's VOW policy. Among other things, that draft removed the language that prohibits NAR's MLS members from discriminating against VOW operators, by refusing to make available information that is provided to brokers in other formats, and by restricting what can be done with certain MLS data. As a result of that change, TREB's Members would not be able to make certain information, including the Disputed Data available for search by, or display to, consumers, and it was made clear that the Disputed Data was "intended exclusively for other Members and their brokers and salespersons" (2012 Richardson Statement, Exhibit FF, at p. 521).

~~1. An MLS may impose any, all, or none of the following requirements on VOWs but may impose them only to the extent that equivalent requirements are imposed on Participants' use of MLS listing data in providing brokerage services via all other delivery mechanisms:~~

~~a.~~ A ~~Participant's~~ Member's VOW may not make available for search by or display to ~~Registrants~~ Consumers the following data intended exclusively for other ~~MLS Participants~~ Members and their ~~affiliated licensees~~ brokers and salespersons:

i. Expired, withdrawn, suspended or ~~pending~~ terminated listings.

ii. Pending solds or sold data unless the method of use of actual sales price of completed transactions is ~~readily publicly accessible. from public records.~~ in compliance with RECO Rules and Privacy Laws.

iii. The compensation offered to other ~~MLS Participants~~ Members.

iv. ~~The type of listing agreement, i.e., exclusive right to sell or exclusive agency.~~

v. The seller(s) and occupant(s) name(s), phone number(s) and email address(es), where available.

vi. Instructions or remarks intended for cooperating brokers only, such as those regarding showing or security of the listed property.

(2012 Richardson Statement, Exhibit FF, at p. 521)

[359] It is also noteworthy that although the issue of "privacy laws and consents" was mentioned in the May 18, 2011 Task Force Report to TREB's Board of Directors, it was simply noted in that report that this issue was "of particular concern" and that the "Task Force felt some additional legal research would be appropriate on both the PIPEDA and RECO requirements" (2012 Richardson Statement, Exhibit FF, at p. 512).

[360] There does not appear to be any evidence on the record as to whether that legal research or any legal advice regarding privacy law and the adequacy of the existing consents signed by home sellers and buyers was ever sought and provided, although Ms. Prescott subsequently provided the Tribunal with her interpretation of those consents. Likewise, there is no evidence that the advice of the Privacy Commissioner was ever sought and obtained prior to the finalization of the VOW Policy and Rules. (The Tribunal acknowledges that TREB explained that it was subjected to pressure by the Commissioner to act very quickly during that timeframe).

(iv) Events surrounding the adoption of the VOW Policy and Rules

[361] On May 27, 2011, the Commissioner filed the Initial Application seeking relief under section 79.

[362] Three days later, [CONFIDENTIAL] a member of TREB's Board of Directors, sent an e-mail to [CONFIDENTIAL] colleagues on the Board stating: "This is worse than a knee replacememt [sic] … I say let them start their own VOW.. [sic] let them get their own information and show us how great it is.. [sic] never mind all the privacy issues […] and what type of mess would we all be in if they have their way …" (Exhibit CA-056, [CONFIDENTIAL] RE: Competition Bureau and TREB- Notice of Application, at p. 1; Transcript, September 27, 2012, at pp. 1689-1694).

[363] On June 1, 2011, after both TREB's VOW Task Force and TREB's Board of Directors approved a draft of the VOW Policy and Rules, TREB's MLS Committee met to initiate the process necessary to change TREB's MLS Rules and Policies to permit the use of VOWs. The minutes of that meeting reflect that the draft was adopted for recommendation to TREB's Board of Directors, after some apparently minor changes were made. Although those minutes reflect that the proposal would be "sent for legal review and to CREA to ensure that these are in adherence to the Competition Law," they did not refer to privacy issues or to the PIPEDA. The same is true of the minutes of the meeting of the MLS Committee that took place on June 13, 2011, as well as the meetings of TREB's Board of Directors, which took place on June 9, 2011 and June 23, 2011, at which the VOW Policy and Rules, as amended, were endorsed once again. The latter minutes reflect that a "legal review and CREA input with respect to competition law" occurred during the in camera portion of that meeting. However, there was no reference in the minutes to privacy issues or to the PIPEDA.

[364] Following the June 13, 2011 meeting of the MLS Committee, changes were made to what is now Rule 823 of the VOW Policy and Rules as part of the review with the MLS Committee, and after input was received from legal counsel. Specifically, the opening language of that Rule was changed to include the words "or by any other means," as well as the words "subject to applicable laws, regulations and the RECO rules." While the first of those changes ostensibly addressed the discriminatory nature of the VOW Policy and Rules, the evidence on the record makes it abundantly clear that it is commonplace among TREB's Members to share sold data with their clients in person, by fax and by email on a fairly widespread basis, and that this practice is at least tolerated by TREB. The Tribunal notes that TREB and CREA have referred to some evidence to the contrary, but it is satisfied that the practice exists (Transcript, September 13, 2012, at pp. 638-641; Transcript, September 25, 2012, at pp. 1452-1455; Transcript, October 6, 2015, at pp. 750-751; Exhibits R-079 and CR-080, Expert Report of Dr. Jeffrey Church dated July 27, 2012 at paras 15, 179 and 263; Exhibits IC-182 and CIC-183, Expert Report of Dr. Fredrick Flyer dated June 2, 2015 at paras 10-11 and 14-17; 2015 Vistnes Reply Expert Report at page 3, footnote 3; Exhibit IC-088, Expert Report of Dr. Fredrick Flyer dated August 13, 2012 at para 25; and 2012 Vistnes Expert Report at paras 268-270).In addition, TREB tools such as Toronto MLS Contacts & CMA (Exhibit A-004, Document 1348) and Appraisal for Superior Sales and Listings (Exhibit A-004, Document 1345) teach TREB Members how to use sold and other MLS data to create CMAs for actual and potential clients. In their testimony, Messrs. Richardson and Syrianos confirmed that CMAs containing sold information can and are provided by TREB's Members to their clients, provided that the appropriate consent has been obtained. As to the second change, one is left to speculate as to what specifically it was intended to address.

[365] TREB notes that the press release that it issued on June 24, 2011 to launch a 60-day consultation process with its Members stated that its new VOW policy gave "due consideration to TREB's legal responsibility to ensure the protection of consumer data" and that TREB "took great sensitivity and care" in balancing this consideration with its desire to avoid "restricting Members' ability to provide the highest level of service to their customers." However, this does not appear to be borne out by the minutes of the meetings discussed above, or by TREB's prior history with the VOW issue, dating back to 2003. There is also no mention of privacy concerns or PIPEDA in the minutes of the meeting of TREB's Board of Directors dated August 25, 2011, following the expiry of the 60-day consultation period with TREB's Members. Those minutes simply reflect that, after legal counsel "entertained [a] round table Q&A regarding TREB's VOW Policy and Rules," TREB's Board of Directors approved the final VOW Policy and Rules and commenced the process of developing the technological infrastructure to implement the VOW Data Feed, which ultimately was launched on November 15, 2011.

[366] Indeed, in a report entitled "MLS Focus Group Report," dated June 27, 2011, which was considered by TREB's MLS Committee at its meeting of September 13, 2011, it was noted that rulings from the Privacy Commissioner and from RECO were still needed in respect of VOWs (Exhibit CA-003, Document 1304, at p. 6). Mr. Richardson confirmed that such a ruling from RECO was never sought or obtained. Mr. Richardson also confirmed that TREB's VOW Task Force did not obtain any additional information about the PIPEDA or RECO, even though the minutes of the May 12, 2011 meeting stated that the task force "felt some additional legal research would be appropriate on both PIPEDA and RECO requirements" (Transcript, September 27, 2012, at pp. 1667-1668). There is no evidence on the record to suggest that such a ruling from the Privacy Commissioner was ever sought or obtained. Nevertheless, TREB argued that the decision to exclude the Disputed Data from the VOW Data Feed was "prudent given the requirements of PIPEDA, and in particular given the 2009 decision from the Office of the Privacy Commissioner, which was known to and considered by the Task Force in its deliberations" (TREB's 2015 Closing Submissions, at para 239).

[367] That same MLS Focus Group Report also reflected a concern that data "should be safeguarded and consumers should not be allowed to copy and paste into other sites." This suggests that a "display only" form of the Disputed Data on VOW operators' websites might well have satisfied TREB's Members, and that their concerns related more to the uses to which the data might be put, than to privacy.

[368] In fact, when the Tribunal asked Mr. Richardson whether allowing the Disputed Data to be seen on a VOW operator's website in a "read only" manner would be a possible solution to TREB's concerns, he replied that every time a compromise such as that was offered to the Commissioner, it was rejected. He added: "If there is a technological solution to things like CMAs and demonstrating sold information that does not involve data transfer over to another computer, it's worthwhile pursuing" (Transcript, October 6, 2015, at pp. 748-751).

[369] This makes it very apparent to the Tribunal that TREB's real concern, at least as understood by TREB's CEO during the relevant period, was with losing control over the Disputed Data, rather than with that data being simply displayed to anyone who might visit a VOW operator's website. Stated differently, to the extent that there was any concern about safeguarding the Disputed Data, the evidence indicates that such concern related more to the loss of control over the data, rather than to privacy.

[370] When pressed during the Initial Hearing as to why TREB's Members appeared to be so concerned about the emergence of VOW brokerages in the GTA, Mr. Richardson simply responded that "[s]ome may be a little fearful of new technology" (Transcript, September 27, 2012, at pp. 1741-1742).

[371] On cross-examination, Mr. Sage admitted that some TREB Members were concerned that the "introduction of more and more technology will put pressure on commission rates" (Transcript, September 28, 2012, at pp. 1873-1874). This concern was also reflected in the Concise Statement of Economic Theory that was attached to TREB's Response in this proceeding. At paragraph 24 of that document, it is stated that "[u]nrestrained VOWs may create excessive incentives for price competition among buyers' brokers and divert the focus away from non-price competition," and that "[r]ather than compete over price (by offering a discount) to a buyer already in the market, sellers may prefer instead to provide incentives for finding new buyers by promising a large commission."

(v) Recent developments

[372] The Tribunal also considers it noteworthy that TREB did not take any action against two large, traditional brokerages that made sold information available on their websites for an extended period of time in 2014/2015. In particular, Bosley Real Estate Ltd. Brokerage ("Bosley") and RE/MAX Hallmark Realty Ltd. Brokerage ("RE/MAX Hallmark") displayed sold information on their respective websites for at least ten months in 2014/2015, in apparent violation of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules.

[373] This was particularly noteworthy because TREB's President, Marc McLean, has a management position with Bosley, and Bosley's President, Mr. Tom Bosley, is a former President and Director of TREB, CREA, RECO and OREA. It was not until Mr. Pasalis complained about this, while defending himself in the face of a threatened suspension of his MLS account for allegedly failing to comply with TREB's VOW Policy and Rules, and then reported this in his 2015 witness statement in this proceeding, that TREB eventually took action. Although there does not appear to be evidence of prior communications between TREB and the two brokerages in question, TREB sent a letter to all of its Members on February 4, 2015 reminding them that the use, distribution, and/or display of sold data in whatever form and on the Internet without all appropriate consents constitutes a violation of their obligations under their AUA with TREB, as well as violation of the PIPEDA and RECO's Code of Ethics. A short while later, [CONFIDENTIAL] sent an email message to [CONFIDENTIAL] at TREB, confirming that [CONFIDENTIAL] brokerage had pulled the offending sold information and expressing hope that TREB would "take the appropriate action or those of us following the rules will have no choice but to follow [the] lead" of those who were posting such information. There was no reference whatsoever in [CONFIDENTIAL] email message to any concerns about privacy, and no mention of TREB's position that such information might violate the PIPEDA.

[374] The Tribunal further notes that, according to the testimony of Ms. Prescott, and despite a decision of Century 21 Heritage to stop sending sold price information to the Century 21 website, the practice was still going on in 2015 and that more than 290 properties with sold prices were posted on the website of Century 21 Heritage at some point that year.

(vi) Alleged privacy concerns

[375] The Tribunal recognizes that TREB implemented privacy policies in 2004 in an effort to ensure that its and its Members' practices conformed with the requirements in the PIPEDA, and that TREB has a Chief Privacy Officer who is its designated representative under the PIPEDA. TREB also educates and provides resources and support to its Members on issues of privacy through a variety of methods. In addition, the Tribunal acknowledges that TREB sought input from the Office of the Privacy Commissioner ("OPC") in August 2012 in respect of its "Questions and Answers" document, which addresses a variety of privacy-related topics, including the distribution of CMAs, the disclosure of sold prices, and the use of expired listings. However, TREB was informed by the OPC that it did not provide advance rulings regarding the statutes that it enforces, such as the PIPEDA, and that it was unable to comment on the accuracy of interpretations of that legislation by external parties.

[376] Those communications with the OPC post-dated the development of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules and, in any event, were not principally concerned with that policy. Moreover, there is no evidence that TREB's privacy policies received much, if any, consideration during the development of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules.

[377] While TREB led evidence from two of the members of its VOW Task Force, Mr. Sage and Mr. Syrianos, neither one was able to shed any light on reasons why important provisions in the 2008 NAR VOW Policy were eliminated from TREB's final VOW Policy and Rules.

[378] TREB similarly did not lead evidence from anyone who was on its Board of Directors during the relevant period, to testify and be cross-examined regarding what occurred at the meetings of the Board at which the VOW Policy and Rules were discussed on May 26, June 9, June 23 and August 25, 2011. (The Tribunal understands that, while he acted as the staff liaison to TREB's VOW Task Force, Mr. Richardson is not a Director of TREB, he did not attend the final hour-long discussion of the Board at which it discussed and voted on the final VOW Policy and Rules, he was not a member of TREB's VOW Task Force, and he did not vote on the issues discussed by the task force.)

[379] TREB also did not put forward Mr. Palmer, its Chief Privacy Officer, or Mr. DiMichele, who was TREB's CIO during the development of its VOW Policy and Rules, and who is now its CEO, to testify on this privacy issue.

[380] In short, TREB had ample opportunity to lead evidence to establish its alleged privacy justification for the VOW Restrictions. However, it failed to do so. Given that it was TREB's burden to establish that justification on a balance of probabilities, it is not necessary for the Tribunal to draw an adverse inference from this failure by TREB to adduce evidence from the persons mentioned in the two immediately preceding paragraphs, as the Commissioner requested.

[381] In any event, for the reasons explained at paragraphs 355-356 above, the Tribunal does not find Mr. Richardson's evidence regarding the intentions of the members of TREB's Board of Directors, its MLS Committee and its VOW Task Force to be persuasive or reliable. The Tribunal also agrees with the Commissioner that Mr. Richardson's testimony regarding such intentions is not particularly probative of such intentions.

[382] TREB also led evidence by Ms. Prescott, who is the owner and a broker at Century 21 Heritage, an independently owned real estate brokerage with offices in Thornhill, Richmond Hill, Newmarket and Bradford in the GTA. In her 2015 witness statement, Ms. Prescott states: "At the time of the initial hearing before the Competition Tribunal, Century 21 Heritage Group sales representatives obtained the consent of clients for th[e] sold information to be posted on the Century 21 website by way of schedule "B" to the agreement of purchase and sale. As I testified at the initial hearing, only about 5-10% of our brokerage's clients were giving consent to post sold price information on the Century 21 website" (Exhibits R-132 and CR-133, Updated Witness Statement of Pamela Prescott, at para 12). She added that since the Initial Hearing, her brokerage made a decision to stop sending sold price information to the Century 21 website and now has a standalone "Permission to Advertise the Sale of the Property" document that her sales representatives ask the parties to a residential real estate transaction to sign. Less than 5% of her brokerage's clients sign that form.

[383] However, there is no evidence that any of Century 21 Heritage's customers ever complained to Ms. Prescott or her colleagues, or otherwise communicated concerns regarding the privacy of their information, prior to when TREB's VOW Policy and Rules were finalized. Ms. Prescott also did not explain what information was and is given to her brokerage's clients at the time they were and are asked to sign the documents referred to immediately above.

[384] TREB mentions that Mr. Gidamy of TheRedPin testified that he didn't think that TREB was concerned about him expanding his share of the market. However, that is simply Mr. Gidamy's impression. It is not direct evidence of TREB's lack of subjective intent to exclude disruptive competitors such as TheRedPin.

[385] The Tribunal also observes that Mr. Richardson testified that TREB typically receives two complaints per year from members of the public throughout the GTA regarding the privacy of the information that they provide to TREB's Members, including sold information that is subsequently shared extensively, as described in paragraphs 395-398 below.

[386] This evidence of an absence of significant consumer concern about privacy issues is supported by Mr. McMullin, who testified in 2012 that there had only been nine occasions when a person had contacted ViewPoint to request that information be removed from the website. Mr. McMullin testified at the Redetermination Hearing that, since June 2012, ViewPoint had received a "couple of dozen a year" privacy complaints (Transcript, September 23, 2015, at p. 171). He explained that "most of the complaints that [ViewPoint gets] are about information that is readily available on many websites." He added that "[i]t just so happens that because ours is really popular we get more complaints" (Transcript, September 23, 2015, at p. 172). Mr. McMullin further explained the few number of complaints relative to the utilization of www.viewpoint.ca by stating that there is a "give-and-take", and that "most consumers […] believe that it's necessary [for ViewPoint to have the information that they provided] there because someday they are going to be on the other side of the trade and that this information is imperative to enable them to make a quality decision" (Transcript, September 22, 2015, at p. 98). He added that there was one complaint made to the OPC by an individual who alleged that ViewPoint had disclosed personal information without consent by publishing the purchase price of the person's home on www.viewpoint.ca for view by registered users. The complaint was resolved during the course of the investigation and ViewPoint was advised that no further action would be taken. ViewPoint did not take any action and was not asked by the OPC to remove any information from the website.

[387] The evidence that few consumers have complained regarding the privacy of the Disputed Data extends to the United States where sold information is widely available. According to Mr. Nagel, Redfin receives only "limited complaints about privacy concerns about information displayed on redfin.com" and those "usually revolve around taking photos of sold homes down from Redfin's website" (Exhibits A-129 and CA-130, Second Witness Statement of Scott Nagel dated February 5, 2015 ("2015 Nagel Statement"), at para 32(a)).

[388] Finally, TREB asserts that its decision to exclude the Disputed Data from the VOW Data Feed was prudent given the requirements of the PIPEDA and a 2009 decision of the OPC which essentially held that the publication of an advertisement stating that a property had sold for 99.3% of the asking price contravened the PIPEDA, because it enabled the public to calculate the sold price. Although the sold price of the home was available on the public property register, the OPC held in that decision that the exception for public information in paragraph 7(3)(h.1) of the PIPEDA did not apply because the information in question was obtained pursuant to the purchase agreement to which the salesperson was privy, and was not actually collected from a publicly available source.

[389] Mr. Richardson testified that this decision influenced the ultimate recommendation by the members of TREB's VOW Task Force regarding sold and "pending sold" information. However, this is not borne out by the minutes of the task force's meetings. More importantly, the evidence as a whole suggests that privacy considerations were not a principal motivating factor behind TREB's VOW Policy and Rules.

[390] In summary, the Tribunal has determined that the evidence on the record in this proceeding demonstrates that TREB's motivations in initially resisting the emergence of VOWs in the GTA, and then in adopting and maintaining a more restrictive and discriminatory policy than what is reflected in the settlement reached between NAR and the U.S. DOJ, were primarily to limit or at least restrict a potentially disruptive form of competition in the GTA, and to retain full control of TREB's MLS data. Among other things, TREB appears to have been concerned that VOWs could lead to increased price and non-price competition, to reducing TREB's and its Members' control over MLS data, and to reducing the role played by TREB's Members in residential real estate transactions. Privacy played a comparatively small role, and only towards the end of TREB's process. Based on the evidence adduced, the Tribunal has concluded that the privacy concerns that have been identified by TREB were an afterthought and continue to be a pretext for TREB's adoption and maintenance of the VOW Restrictions.

[391] To insulate its Members from the full force of the disruptive competition posed by VOW operators, TREB deliberately modified in a number of ways the 2008 NAR VOW Policy that had served as "a good starting point" for its own policy. It did so by modifying that policy to include the VOW Restrictions, which include: (i) excluding the Disputed Data from its VOW Data Feed; (ii) prohibiting its Members from using the information included in the VOW Data Feed for any purpose other than display on a website (Rules 802 and 824), notwithstanding the fact that, in practice, there is no similar de facto limitation on its Members' ability to make available or use in other ways the exact same information when it is obtained from TREB in other ways, such as over the Stratus system; and (iii) prohibiting its Members from displaying certain information, (including sold, "pending sold," WEST listings and cooperating broker commissions) on their VOWs (Rule 823), again, notwithstanding that in practice, there is no similar limitation on its Members' ability to share essentially the same information with consumers, when Members access such information through the Stratus system, or otherwise.

[392] The Tribunal is satisfied that these changes from the 2008 NAR VOW Policy were crafted primarily for an exclusionary purpose, and not out of privacy concerns.

(b) TREB's approach to the consents used by its Members

[393] TREB asserts that the consent clauses in the Listing Agreement, the BRA and the BCSA that it recommends be used by its Members, and that the Tribunal understands are typically used by TREB's Members, are not sufficient for the purposes of the PIPEDA.

[394] In brief, TREB's position appears to be that, while those consent clauses are sufficient to enable the confidential information of home buyers and home sellers to be disclosed to its Members and to their customers if done in person, by fax or by email, they are not sufficient to permit the wide display of that information on a VOW and over the Internet. In other words, TREB maintains that there is a "practical obscurity" of personal information that exists under TREB's current rules that would be lost with the vast reach of the Internet.

[395] The Tribunal acknowledges that making the Disputed Data available over the Internet through TREB Members' VOWs would result in that information being much more widely distributed than is currently the case. However, the Tribunal finds it difficult to reconcile the privacy concerns that TREB now expresses with the fact that TREB previously appeared to be unconcerned about privacy, as reflected by the fact that it made the Disputed Data available to:

a. Its 42,500 Members over its Stratus system;

b. The members of most other real estate boards in Ontario, through a data sharing program known as CONNECT, which was available to approximately 92% of Ontario realtors in August 2012 and to 98% in June 2015;

c. The clients of its Members and the clients of members of those real estate boards mentioned immediately above (provided such information is disclosed to those clients in person, by fax or by email); and

d. Certain appraisers.

[396] TREB also admitted in 2012 that it was aware of the fact that one of its Members had a practice of providing an email subscription service that sent emails with current MLS sales data, the day following its posting on TREB's MLS system. Moreover, one of TREB's witnesses, Mr. Sage, acknowledged that his brokerage sends monthly reports to its customers by email that include very detailed transaction information, including sold prices, which can be forwarded by their customers to whomever they choose. Although the address of sold homes is now redacted, those addresses are provided upon request to customers, and in any event can often easily be deduced if a customer knows what the list price of a home was or approximately how long it was on the market.

[397] The Tribunal further notes that TREB makes all or part of the Disputed Data available to various third parties, such as CREA (for statistical purposes), Altus Group Limited (for the purposes of preparing a House Price Index), the CD Howe Institute (as part of a research project on the impact of the Toronto Land Transfer Tax), and Interactive Mapping Inc. (for the purpose of its MLS Data Verification System known as ICHECK). However, it appears that the information disclosed to those parties does not wind up being available to the public in a manner that would allow the confidential information of an individual home buyer or seller to be ascertained.

[398] Moreover, TREB's own intranet system enables TREB's Members to forward by email up to 100 sold listings at a time to anyone.

[399] The Tribunal agrees with the Commissioner that if TREB were truly concerned about privacy, it would, at a minimum, have taken steps to ensure that the Disputed Data is not distributed beyond its Members. It has not done so.

[400] TREB asserts it would contravene the PIPEDA to create a tie between buying or selling a house on the MLS system, and a mandatory consent to the wide dissemination of sold information over the Internet. However, TREB's past actions with respect to consents reinforce the Tribunal's view that TREB's privacy justification is largely a pretext to attempt to legitimize its practice of anti-competitive acts. For example, in 2004, TREB refused a request by a home seller to remove the seller's MLS Listing Information from TREB's MLS system, on several grounds. For example, TREB maintained that the "retention of the MLS Listing history on the system is important and the retention of 'expireds' is just as important as retaining 'solds,' especially in a quick moving market and the option of 'exclusives' is available to those who do not wish to list on the MLS system." TREB added that, "due to the 'holdover' clause, it is important to keep track of and to retain 'expireds' on the MLS system for legal and other reasons which benefit the consumer." In addition, TREB stated that "the integrity of TREB over the years has been based on its ability to serve the public through a cooperative system and [it] cannot allow encroachment on a good service that has evolved to serve both Realtors and the public well, while respecting PIPEDA requirements" (Exhibit A-004, Document 89, at pp. 1-2).

[401] TREB's existing "Questions and Answers" on privacy issues reflects essentially the same position. The same is true of Frequently Asked Privacy Questions and answers that CREA developed for its members, which states: "Both current and historical data is essential to the operation of the MLS® system and by placing your listing on the MLS® system, you are agreeing to allow this ongoing use of listing and sales information" (2012 Simonsen Statement, Exhibit 8, at p. 350). The Tribunal observes that TREB's Policy 102 and Policy 103 add that, apart from inaccurate data: "No other changes will be made in the historical data" (2012 Richardson Statement, Exhibit D, at p. 168).

[402] In addition, when TREB received legal advice that the posting of interior home photos raised privacy issues, TREB's MLS Committee recommended to TREB's Board of Directors that it "[CONFIDENTIAL]" (Exhibit CA-003, Document 1192, at p. 2). Subsequent versions of that consent provision contained express language to address the retention and use of interior photos in TREB's MLS system. However, there is no evidence that TREB ever considered taking similar action to address the privacy concerns that it now advances with respect to sold and "pending sold" information.

[403] The Tribunal observes in passing that interior photos and other highly personal information, including virtual tours, are not only available on the websites of TREB's Members, but are also available on popular and frequently visited websites, such as realtor.ca, which not only display such information, but also allow it to be emailed to "a friend."

[404] TREB also appears to have obtained legal advice with respect to its Members' ability to provide CMAs containing sold data to their clients. That advice seems to be reflected in the "Questions and Answers" document that it has prepared for its Members. Among other things, that document states as follows:

> Although it cannot be said with absolute certainty given the lack of precedents or case law on the ultimate interpretation of many aspects of PIPEDA, a strong argument can be made that the words "conduct comparative market analyses" contained in the consent clause of the OREA standard form listing agreement can be interpreted broadly enough to include the essential part of "conducting a CMA", that is, providing that information to a prospective seller or prospective buyer.
> (2015 Richardson Statement, at p. 494)

[405] Notwithstanding TREB's lack of certainty regarding the privacy law issues related to the display of the Disputed Data on a VOW, it admitted that no written legal opinion was ever received on this point. (The Tribunal recognizes that TREB's admissions related to the time frame "prior to June 24, 2011.") Moreover, in contrast to the action it took to reinforce the consent language in the Listing Agreement to cover the posting of interior home photos, there is no evidence that such action was ever considered to address the privacy issue that TREB now raises as a justification for the restrictive aspects of its VOW Policy and Rules.

[406] In summary, the approach that TREB has taken with respect to the consents in the standard Listing Agreement that it recommends its Members sign, and in the agreements typically signed by home buyers (namely either the BRA or the BCSA), suggests that TREB has not in the past been concerned about privacy. On the contrary, it has resisted attempts by consumers to have their information removed from the MLS system or even altered, unless such information is inaccurate; it has sought to expand its consents when it has received advice that they might not be sufficiently broad to include highly personal and confidential information such as pictures of the inside of homes; and it interprets its existing consents as being sufficiently broad to enable sold information to be provided to potential customers.

[407] Indeed, Mr. Richardson testified that the existing language in Section 11 of the Listing Agreement likely is sufficiently broad to permit the disclosure of WEST listings, even though there are some concerns or sensitivities from homeowners about such information, and that the existing language in the BRA is also sufficient to permit the disclosure of sold information to a prospective purchaser. Mr. Richardson also acknowledged that other solutions, such as using a separate consent form, are available to permit "pending sold" and sold listings to be included in the VOW Data Feed.

(c) RECO's advertising policy

[408] TREB maintains that, as with the PIPEDA, RECO's Code of Ethics requires informed consent to be obtained by TREB's Members before they advertise the "sold" price of a client's home, or other confidential information. TREB asserts that because one of the central functions of a VOW is to help to generate "leads" for VOW operators, a VOW is by definition an advertising tool. For greater certainty, TREB submits that the fact that a VOW might also be a method of delivering real estate services does not necessarily imply that it is not an advertising vehicle.

[409] At the time of the Initial Hearing, "advertising" was defined in RECO's 2011 Advertising Guidelines (see Exhibit R-083, at p. 450) in the following terms:

> Any notice, announcement or representation directed at the public that is authorized, made by or on behalf of a registrant and that is intended to promote a registrant or the business, services or real estate trades of a registrant in any medium including, but not limited to, print, radio, television, electronic media or publication on the internet (including websites and social media sites). Business cards, letterhead or fax cover sheets that contain promotional statements may be considered as "advertising."

[410] Pursuant to subsection 36(8) of RECO's Code of Ethics, a registrant shall not include anything in an advertisement that could reasonably be used to identify specific real estate unless the owner of the real estate has consented in writing. Pursuant to subsection 36(9), a registrant shall not include anything in an advertisement that could reasonably be used to determine any of the contents of an agreement that deals with the conveyance of an interest in real estate, including any provision of the agreement relating to the price, unless the parties to the agreement have consented in writing.

[411] The Commissioner notes that the Ontario Superior Court of Justice decided in 2009 that the publication of MLS listing information on a website did not constitute advertising in contravention of TREB's Rule R-430 or subsections 36(8) or (9) of RECO's Code of Ethics (TREB OSCJ at paras 109 and 112).

[412] Be that as it may, it is not immediately apparent to the Tribunal how the inclusion of sold information on a VOW would constitute advertising, irrespective of how that sold information is displayed (including in the form of a CMA), when providing that same information in a "conventional" CMA would not constitute advertising. It is also not clear why the provision of sold information would constitute "advertising," when the provision of other MLS information regarding a home would not. The Tribunal observes that the minutes of TREB's VOW Task Force which are discussed at paragraph 352 above drew a distinction between "advertisements" and other information that would be included in a VOW, presumably including raw data.

[413] As discussed at paragraphs 354-355 and 359 above, TREB's VOW Task Force identified the need to ensure that information with respect to "solds" was treated in accordance with RECO's requirements and noted that clarification in that regard should be sought.

[414] However, Mr. Richardson confirmed in cross-examination that no one on TREB's VOW Task Force requested RECO's position on whether posting any of the Disputed Data on a VOW would constitute advertising.

[415] There is no other evidence that TREB's VOW Policy and Rules may have been adapted from the 2008 NAR VOW Policy, or were otherwise crafted, to ensure compliance with RECO's Code of Ethics. The Tribunal notes that TREB did not lead evidence from TREB's Director and former President Ms. Cynthia Lai, even though she was a member of RECO's Board of Directors at the time of the Initial Hearing. (The Tribunal also notes that TREB sought to have RECO's CEO, Mr. Wright, attend the Initial Hearing and produce certain decisions made by RECO's disciplinary tribunal as well as certain interpretations that RECO had adopted in respect of the Code of Ethics. After Mr. Wright retained counsel to quash the subpoena served by TREB's counsel, the Commissioner and TREB agreed to permit those documents to be introduced without the need for them to be proved by Mr. Wright or another representative of RECO.)

[416] The Tribunal further observes that Bosley disclosed sold prices on its website for approximately one year in 2014/2015, in apparent violation of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules, notwithstanding that its President and co-founder, Mr. Bosley, is a former RECO Chairperson, and notwithstanding that another Bosley broker, Keith Tarswell, is also a former RECO Chairperson and has been a member of its Board of Directors for several years. In fact, as mentioned at paragraph 373 above, when [CONFIDENTIAL] agreed to stop posting sold information on its website, [CONFIDENTIAL] informed Mr. Richardson that he hoped that TREB would "take the appropriate action or those of us following the rules will have no choice but to follow [the] lead" of those who were posting such information. This suggests that Messrs. Bosley and Tarswell did not think that their brokerage was violating RECO's Code of Ethics or its advertising policy.

[417] Moreover, although RECO investigated a number of agents at Sage Real Estate when they sent daily email communications containing sold information for approximately one year to anyone who provided an email address, its investigation was confined to the failure of those agents to include the Sage logo on their website. That investigation did not concern the daily communication of sold information. Likewise, Mr. Enchin stated that although he was contacted by a representative of RECO after a realtor complained that he advertised listings on his VOW without permission, RECO did not pursue any disciplinary action after he explained that his VOW had a registration and password requirement and that he did not advertise MLS listings to the public at large.

[418] TREB maintains that the Tribunal should accord significance to the fact that RECO has since taken action to clarify that VOWs constitute advertising. However, the support that it provides for this assertion is a RECO Publication entitled For The RECOrd, which was published in the Winter of 2013, and which simply states that RECO's Advertising Guidelines apply to all forms of advertising, including electronic media, websites and social media sites. That document proceeds to add that VOW operators have an obligation to ensure that their VOWs are compliant with those guidelines. It is far from clear that RECO has clarified that providing sold information or other Disputed Data over a VOW would constitute advertising, in contravention of its Code of Ethics.

[419] In any event, the fact that RECO may have adopted this position in 2013 does not help to persuade the Tribunal that the principal motivation, or even a principal motivation, of TREB at the time that it developed and finalized its VOW Policy and Rules in 2011, including by adapting them from NAR's 2008 VOW Policy, was, or now is, to ensure compliance with RECO's Code of Ethics.

[420] The same applies to the fact that TREB took the position in a notice sent to its Members in February 2015 that the use, distribution, and/or display of sold data in whatever form and on the Internet without all appropriate consents is in violation of their obligations under their AUA and in violation of the PIPEDA and RECO's Code of Ethics. The Tribunal further notes that TREB's own Rules and documentation do not suggest that it considers VOWs to constitute advertising.

(d) Other business justifications

[421] TREB states that, in addition to privacy, there are several other justifications, which it labels "efficiency justifications," for the VOW Restrictions. However, there is no persuasive evidence that any of these other justifications played a principal role in the development and implementation of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules, let alone the VOW Restrictions. Indeed, for some of them, there is no evidence that they played any role whatsoever. Moreover, those alleged justifications appear to relate solely to TREB's restrictions on the display of individual sold and "pending sold" prices.

[422] First, TREB asserts that its VOW Policy and Rules promote the liquidity of the MLS system in three ways: by protecting privacy, by preventing strategic advantage, and by preventing potential interference with contractual relations.

[423] With respect to the protection of privacy, TREB suggests that if the use of its MLS system to sell a property is tied with automatic inclusion of sold information on its VOW Data Feed, consumers may choose to sell their homes through non-MLS channels. However, TREB provided no evidence to suggest that this has occurred to any meaningful degree in Nova Scotia or in areas of the United States where MLS sold information is available on VOWs. Indeed, a recent survey conducted by NAR reflects that the percentage of consumers in the United States who retain the services of a realtor to sell their home has increased from 84% in 2008 to 88% in 2014. This happened notwithstanding the growth of VOWs displaying sold information since the release of the 2008 NAR VOW Policy (Exhibit IC-140, NAR 2014 Profile of Home Buyers and Sellers ("NAR 2014 Profile"), at pp. 92-93 and 117). In the absence of any persuasive evidence to support this justification put forward by TREB, the Tribunal concludes that it is simply a speculative assertion.

[424] Concerning the protection of strategic advantage, TREB states that the disclosure of WEST and "pending sold" listings on a VOW would provide sensitive information to purchasers that could be used to the disadvantage of sellers. For example, if a purchaser knew what price a seller had conditionally accepted, the purchaser would know the seller's "reserve" price and be able to use that to the seller's disadvantage, if the conditional sale fell through. However, the only evidence that this was a concern for TREB at the time it was developing its VOW Policy and Rules is a brief statement contained in the minutes of one of the four meetings of TREB's VOW Task Force during which the VOW Policy and Rules were developed. Specifically, the minutes of the May 12, 2011 meeting state: "It was the consensus of the Task Force that 'pending solds' were not appropriate for VOW display …" The same statement was included in the VOW Task Force's draft report, dated May 18, 2011, to TREB's Board of Directors. Those documents however do not elaborate upon the reasons why TREB's VOW Task Force concluded that "pending sold" listings were not appropriate for display on a VOW. (The Tribunal notes that there is a difference between a conditional sale and a "pending sold," and that the sale price of conditional sales is not available on the MLS system at all. It is only once the conditions have been met that the sale price will be entered into the MLS Database.)

[425] Even if the Tribunal were to give TREB the benefit of the doubt on this point, the Tribunal remains persuaded, considering the totality of the evidence, that TREB's principal motivation for not including any of the Disputed Data in its VOW Data Feed was to prevent potential and existing TREB Members from being able to make sold information and various innovative offerings derived from that information available on their VOWs.

[426] The same is true with respect to TREB's assertion that the VOW Restrictions promote the liquidity of the MLS system by preventing potential interference with contractual relations. However, the Tribunal accepts TREB's claim that the display of "pending sold" information would expose home sellers to being targeted by unsolicited approaches by other service providers, or even unsolicited offers by other purchasers.

[427] In addition, TREB maintained that the VOW Restrictions preserve the incentives of its existing Members to invest in its MLS database, by continuing to contribute listings. It suggested that, if, as the Commissioner appears to contemplate, the inclusion of the Disputed Data in its VOW Data Feed were to have the effect of assisting VOW-based brokers to gain market share at the expense of its traditional Members, large traditional brokerages and franchise groups would have an incentive to leave TREB's MLS system to establish a rival MLS. However, once again, TREB provided no evidence to support the proposition that this was a concern for TREB at the time it developed its VOW Policy and Rules. In addition, there is no evidence that this has occurred in Nova Scotia, where information on "solds" and other components of the Disputed Data has been available for several years. With respect to the United States, Dr. Church acknowledged in cross-examination that there was only one example of real estate agents leaving a MLS system to establish a rival one, and that was in 2004, before NAR's existing VOW policy came into effect. There is no evidence as to why those agents took that action.

[428] Finally, in its Concise Statement of Economic Theory, at paragraph 24, TREB further asserted that its VOW Policy and Rules may be pro-competitive, in part because they reduce the scope for VOW operators to "free ride" on the efforts of full-service brokers "because they do not contribute appropriately to the cost of maintaining the TREB MLS® and because they do not contribute to the number of listings." However, Mr. Richardson confirmed in questioning from the Tribunal during the 2012 hearing that TREB is not suggesting that new Members should not have access to all of the information in TREB's MLS system on the ground that they did not contribute to the MLS system in the past. He also acknowledged that the initiation fee paid by all new Members, including new VOW-based operators, essentially represents a purchase of the equity in the MLS system, or a payment "for the work that has been done [in the past] and the service that has been generated …" (Transcript, September 27, 2012, at pp. 1740-1741).

[429] In summary, it was TREB's burden to establish that there were legitimate business justifications for the restrictive aspects of its VOW Policy and Rules and that those justifications were at least as important as any subjective or deemed anti-competitive intent that it is demonstrated to have had. The Tribunal's review of TREB's subjective motivations alone leads it to conclude that TREB did not meet that burden.

[430] Indeed, the Tribunal concludes, on a balance of probabilities, that TREB's principal motivation in implementing the VOW Restrictions was to insulate its Members from the disruptive competition that innovative, Internet-based brokerages such as ViewPoint wished to bring to the Relevant Market. The Tribunal is satisfied that the business justifications TREB now advances are without persuasive evidentiary support.

[431] The Tribunal's conclusion in this regard is reinforced by its view that, "but for" the exclusionary effects on disruptive competitors that were intended by TREB, the VOW Restrictions did not make economic sense. In this regard, the Tribunal was not provided with any persuasive evidence to demonstrate that, "but for" the anti-competitive effects of the VOW Restrictions on VOW-based rivals or others who might otherwise challenge the traditional approaches to business adopted by the vast majority of TREB's Members, the VOW Restrictions conferred any other benefit on those Members. That is to say, there is no persuasive evidence before the Tribunal that TREB's Members benefitted from the VOW Restrictions, except to the extent that those restrictions insulated them from the new forms of competition.

(3) Was it reasonably foreseeable that the VOW Restrictions would have an exclusionary effect on one or more competitors?

[432] TREB submits that it was not reasonably foreseeable that the VOW Policy and Rules would have a predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary negative effect on its Members, or on potential entrants who wished to operate brokerages offering a VOW. On the contrary, it maintains that the reasonably foreseeable consequence of the VOW Policy and Rules was that brokerages would be able to offer VOWs in the GTA; and that this is exactly what actually happened.

[433] The Commissioner replies that it was reasonably foreseeable that the VOW Restrictions would have an exclusionary effect on VOW-based competitors. The Tribunal agrees.

[434] Notwithstanding that TREB's VOW Task Force was well aware of the 2008 NAR VOW Policy, and indeed considered it to be a "good starting point" for TREB's VOW policy, it intentionally modified important provisions, including with respect to "sold" data, that NAR included in its VOW Policy to reach a settlement with the U.S. DOJ.

[435] TREB's Board of Directors can be presumed to have been well aware of the significance of these modifications when they met to discuss the draft VOW Policy and Rules in June and August 2011, because TREB had been closely monitoring the U.S. dispute and the Commissioner's detailed Initial Application in this proceeding was filed on May 27, 2011.

[436] In any event, as noted at paragraph 328 above, after the EDU Task Force modified the 2003 Draft NAR Policy to limit VOWs to displaying active listings – the same data that is available on realtor.ca –, one EDU Task Force member observed: "Why would anyone use a password and jump through hoops when he can get the same information directly from mls.ca without going through it" (Exhibit CA-003, Document 52, at p.1).

[437] In the Tribunal's view, this statement reflects that the EDU Task Force member who made the statement was well aware that limiting the information available on TREB's VOW Data Feed to largely the same information that was already generally available on the Internet, and imposing limitations on how information displayed on VOWs can be accessed by potential home buyers and sellers, would make it difficult for VOW-based competitors to attract potential home buyers and sellers to their websites.

[438] A key provision of the VOW Policy and Rules is paragraph 24, which is essentially duplicated in Rule 823. The most relevant changes between the final text of that Rule and the corresponding provision in the 2008 NAR VOW Policy were mentioned above and are reproduced below for convenience:

> ~~An MLS may impose any, all, or none of the following requirements on VOWs but may impose them only to the extent that equivalent requirements are imposed on Participants'use of MLS listing data in providing brokerage services via all other delivery mechanisms:~~
> A Member, whether through a Member's VOW or by any other means, may not make available for search by, or display to, Consumers the following MLS® data intended exclusively for other Members and their brokers and salespersons, subject to applicable laws, regulations and the RECO Rules:

a. Expired, withdrawn, suspended or terminated Listings, and pending solds or leases, including Listings where sellers and buyers have entered into an agreement that has not yet closed;

b. Sold data, unless the method of use of actual sales price of completed transactions is in compliance with RECO Rules and applicable privacy laws;

c. The compensation offered to other Members

d. The seller's name and contact information, unless otherwise directed by the seller to do so; and

e. Instructions or remarks intended for cooperating brokers only, such as those regarding showings or security of listed property.

[439] These changes that were made to the language in the 2008 NAR VOW Policy effectively removed the principle that local real estate boards could not discriminate against VOW operators by preventing them from displaying or making available for search information described in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) above, while allowing that same information to be communicated to actual and potential home buyers and sellers by alternative means, including in person, by fax or by email. As discussed at paragraph 364 above, the Tribunal is satisfied that although TREB's VOW Policy and Rules prevent TREB's Members from displaying and making available that information for search on a VOW, TREB does not in fact prevent its Members from communicating such information to actual home buyers in person, by fax or by email. The Tribunal acknowledges that both Rule 823 and Policy 24 prevent TREB's Members from making certain information, including the Disputed Data, available for search by or display to consumers (subject to applicable laws, regulations and RECO's Rules). However, the evidence demonstrates that the practice of the Disputed Data being available to potential home purchasers and sellers remains commonplace in the GTA.

[440] TREB further discriminated, and continues to discriminate, against VOW operators by excluding the Disputed Data from its VOW Data Feed. This appears to be effected pursuant to Policies 15 and 17. Members who wish to provide that information to their actual or potential customers must continue to do so in the traditional manner, namely, in person, by fax or by email. This exclusion, together with the elimination from the VOW Data Feed of information on a home as soon as it becomes a "sold" or a "pending sold," will be discussed in section VII.D of these reasons.

[441] In addition, the VOW Policy and Rules prohibit TREB's Members from using the information included in the VOW Data Feed for any purpose other than display on a website, notwithstanding the fact that, in practice, there is no similar limitation on its Members' ability to make available or use the exact same information when it is obtained from TREB in other ways, such as over the Stratus system. For example, pursuant to Rule 802, TREB's Members are limited to displaying MLS information supplied by TREB, in accordance with the VOW Policy and Rules. The Tribunal understands that this prevents Members from using the information obtained over the VOW Data Feed to provide statistical analyses or other innovative services that are based on such information.

[442] This restriction is reinforced by section 4.1 of TREB's VOW Data Feed Agreement, which specifies that the VOW Data Feed is provided by TREB to a Member or an AVP that operates a Member's VOW on the Member's behalf, "solely and exclusively for the Purpose." In turn, "Purpose" is defined in terms of "permit[ing] a Member to display on Member's VOW given Listing Information which is transmitted through a VOW Data Feed to Member for the sole purpose of use by Consumers that have a bona fide interest in the purchase, sale, or lease of real estate of the type being offered through Member's VOW."

[443] The Tribunal understands that this language operates to prevent TREB's Members from doing more than simply displaying on their VOWs the MLS information received from TREB over the VOW Data Feed. This was also Mr. Richardson's understanding. In addition, Mr. Pasalis testified that his understanding is that Members cannot use that information to perform statistical analysis and share that analysis online with potential home buyers and sellers. This general restriction is further reinforced by section 6.2(f) of the VOW Data Feed Agreement, which explicitly prohibits TREB's Members from directly or indirectly duplicating, altering, modifying or transferring any information transmitted through a VOW Data Feed. That provision also prohibits TREB's Members from merging such information with other data; and from publishing any Listing Information in any form, or creating any derivative work(s) or adaptations(s) based on such information.

[444] Such restrictions do not apply to Members wishing to use MLS information in these or other ways, so long as the information is used "for the purpose of and directly related to the [Member's] ordinary carrying on if its business" (AUA, section 2). For greater certainty, Members who obtain access to MLS information pursuant to the AUA are simply restricted from using that information "in any manner not directly related to the business of real estate," as defined in the REBBA (AUA, section 4(a)). The Tribunal understands that this effectively leaves TREB's Members free to perform and share with potential home sellers and purchasers sophisticated analysis of MLS information obtained over TREB's Stratus system, as Sage Real Estate does.

[445] The Tribunal is satisfied that any person acquainted with the residential real estate brokerage market in the GTA would have been able to foresee the objective impact that the VOW Restrictions, as reinforced by the VOW Data Feed Agreement, would have on VOW operators. That is to say, such persons would have reasonably foreseen that the VOW Restrictions, as reinforced by the VOW Data Feed Agreement, likely would have an exclusionary effect on VOW operators, by severely restricting their ability to differentiate themselves from traditional brokers, and by raising their costs of doing business.

[446] As a direct consequence of the more restrictive nature of the VOW Policy and Rules, as reinforced by the VOW Data Feed Agreement, relative to the 2008 NAR VOW Policy, potential competitors such as ViewPoint have not entered the Relevant Market in the GTA. The evidence demonstrates that TREB was very aware of many of the innovations that ViewPoint had introduced to the residential real estate brokerage market in the HRM and elsewhere in Nova Scotia, and that TREB recognized the impact that its VOW Restrictions would have on ViewPoint and other VOW-based operators.

[447] The VOW Restrictions are also having a significant adverse impact on Redfin's ongoing assessment of potentially entering the GTA, [CONFIDENTIAL].

[448] In addition, the VOW Restrictions have prevented other competitors, such as the TheRedPin and Realosophy, from expanding by offering new and innovative products and have effectively imposed higher costs of doing business on them.

[449] Moreover, two AVPs, Sam & Andy (which was sold in May 2015) and Mr. Enchin, were not able to offer brokerages the website and VOW products that they would have been able to provide, but for the VOW Restrictions. As a result of those restrictions, Sam & Andy focused its efforts on other markets and ultimately sold its business. However, its co-founder Mr. Prochazka testified that if the Commissioner obtained the relief he is seeking in this proceeding, he would contact people such as Mr. McMullin, with a view to assisting them to offer the products that they have been prevented from offering in the GTA as a result of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules.

[450] Furthermore, the VOW Restrictions have resulted in increasing the costs of doing business for those who are attempting to offer new products and services over their websites. As Mr. Pasalis testified, assembling sold information manually from the MLS system is a time consuming and costly process. It is also prone to human error, which can undermine the reliability of the analysis produced. In addition, Mr. Enchin stated that he was able to show approximately 30% fewer homes, and spend less time responding to client requests, during the period of time, between 2001 and 2007, when he was able to download data from the MLS system in bulk and was able to display sold and "pending sold" listings on his VOW. He added that having to manually enter new TREB listings was too time consuming, costly and inefficient, once the option of downloading MLS data in bulk was no longer available. Mr. Nagel indicated on his part that his VOW-based model saves customers and agents lots of time and effort.

[451] Based on all of the foregoing, the Tribunal is satisfied that the exclusionary impacts of VOW Restrictions were reasonably foreseeable. They can therefore be deemed to have been intended by TREB.

(4) Does the evidence of subjective anti-competitive intent and reasonably foreseeable exclusionary effects outweigh the evidence of legitimate business justifications?

[452] For the reasons set in sections (2) and (3) immediately above, the Tribunal concludes that the evidence of subjective anti-competitive intent and reasonably foreseeable exclusionary effects outweighs the very limited evidence that was adduced in support of the alleged legitimate business justifications that TREB claims underpinned the development and implementation of the VOW Restrictions.

[453] The Tribunal further concludes that the VOW Restrictions, as reinforced by the VOW Data feed Agreement, constitute ongoing, sustained and systemic acts that individually and collectively amount to a practice of anti-competitive acts, within the meaning of paragraph 79(1)(b) of the Act (Canada Pipe FCA at para 60).

(5) Conclusion

[454] Based on the foregoing, the Tribunal concludes that the Commissioner has demonstrated, on a balance of probabilities, that the requirements of paragraph 79(1)(b) are met and that TREB has engaged in, and continues to engage in, a practice of anti-competitive acts.

D. Have the VOW Restrictions prevented or lessened competition substantially, or are they likely to have that effect?

[455] The Tribunal will now turn to the fourth issue to be determined in this proceeding. This is whether TREB's VOW Restrictions have prevented or lessened competition, or are preventing or lessening competition, substantially in the Relevant Market, or are likely to have that effect, as contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(c) of the Act. For the reasons detailed below, the Tribunal finds, on a balance of probabilities, that they have indeed had such effect and that, in the absence of an order of the Tribunal, they are likely to continue to do so.

(1) Analytical framework

(a) Overview

[456] Paragraph 79(1)(c) deals with the third component of the abuse of dominance provision, the anti-competitive effect of the impugned conduct.

[457] Paragraph 79(1)(c) has two distinct and alternative branches. The first requires the Tribunal to find that an impugned practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing competition substantially in a market. The second requires the Tribunal to find that the practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of lessening competition substantially in a market.

[458] The test in assessing cases brought under each of those two branches is essentially the same. In brief, paragraph 79(1)(c) contemplates an approach that emphasizes comparative and relative considerations of past, present and future time frames, as opposed to absolute ones (Canada Pipe FCA at para 44).

[459] In conducting this assessment, the Tribunal will assess both the degree of the prevention or lessening of competition as well as its duration (Tervita at paras 45 and 78). Where a prevention or lessening of competition does not extend throughout the relevant market, the Tribunal will also assess whether it extends throughout a "material" part of the market (CCS at paras 375 and 378).

[460] With respect to the degree, or magnitude, the Tribunal assesses whether the impugned practice has enabled, is enabling or is likely to enable the respondent to exercise materially greater market power than in the absence of the practice (Tervita at paras 50-51 and 54). In brief, a practice that enables a firm to exercise a materially greater degree of market power than it otherwise have been able to exercise, is a practice that prevents or lessens competition substantially. What constitutes "materially" greater market power will vary from case to case. The Tribunal has not found it useful to apply rigid numerical criteria in conducting this assessment. When the respondent is a trade association, the Tribunal's focus will include whether the impugned practice has enabled the association's members to exercise materially greater market power in the relevant market than in the absence of the practice.

[461] As discussed at paragraph 165 above, market power has been defined in the jurisprudence alternatively in terms of "the ability to set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period," "an ability to set prices above competitive levels and to maintain them at that level for a significant period of time without erosion by new entry or expansion of existing firms," and "the ability to profitably influence price, quality, variety, service, advertising, innovation or other dimensions of competition." In the first two variations of these tests, the term "price" is considered to be shorthand for all of the dimensions of competition mentioned in the third variation.

[462] These price and non-price dimensions of competition are assessed because they are generally reliable proxies for the intensity of rivalry. In the absence of rivalry, competition does not exist and cannot constrain the exercise of market power, unless the threat of potential competition is particularly strong. It is therefore the process of rivalry that ordinarily prevents or constrains the exercise of market power, as firms strive, among other things, to develop, produce, distribute, market and ultimately sell their products in competition with other firms.

[463] In turn, the competitive prices, non-price offerings and innovations that result from that process of rivalry generally serve to increase aggregate economic welfare in an economy, the economy's international competitiveness and the median standard of living of people in the economy. This is particularly true of the innovations that result from the competitive process.

[464] When assessing whether competition with respect to prices has been, is or is likely to be prevented or lessened substantially, the test applied by the Tribunal is to determine whether prices were, are or likely would be, materially higher than in the absence of the impugned practice. With respect to non-price dimensions of competition, such as quality, variety, service, advertising or innovation, the test applied is to determine whether the level of one or more of those dimensions of competition was, is or likely would be materially lower than in the absence of the impugned practice (Tervita at para 80; CCS at paras 123-125 and 376-377).

[465] With respect to the duration aspect of its assessment, the test applied by the Tribunal is whether this material increase in prices or material reduction in non-price dimensions of competition resulting from an impugned practice has lasted, or is likely to be maintained for, approximately two years (Tervita at para 80; CCS at para 123).

[466] Where it is alleged that future competition has been, is, or is likely to be prevented by an impugned practice, this period will run from the time when that future competition would have likely materialized, in the absence of the impugned practice. If such future competition cannot be demonstrated to have been, or to be, likely to materialize in the absence of the impugned practice, the test contemplated by paragraph 79(1)(c) will not be met.

[467] To be likely to materialize, the future competition must be demonstrated to be more probable than not to occur in the absence of the impugned practice (Tervita at para 66). To meet this test, the Commissioner is required to demonstrate that the future competition, whether in the form of entry by new competitors or expansion by existing competitors (including in the form of the introduction of new product offerings), likely would have materialized within a discernible time frame. This time frame need not be precisely calibrated, but must be based on evidence of when the entry or expansion in question realistically would have occurred, having regard to the typical lead time for new entry or expansion to occur in the relevant market in question. The farther into the future predictions are made, the less reliable and more speculative in nature they will be (Tervita at paras 68-74). This demonstration can be made with respect to either identified or unidentified potential or actual competitors, although it may be easier to adduce the requisite evidence with respect to identified potential or actual competitors (Tervita at paras 61-63). In any event, it must be demonstrated that the future competition that was, is or is likely to be prevented by the impugned practice would have been sufficiently important to have a substantial impact on competition in the relevant market (Tervita at para 78).

[468] In addition to all of the foregoing, in assessing whether the degree or magnitude of a prevention or lessening of competition is sufficient to be considered "substantial," the Tribunal will consider the overall economic impact of an impugned practice in the relevant market. For example, the Tribunal may conclude that a large price increase, or a large reduction in non-price benefits of competition, constitutes a substantial prevention or lessening of competition, even if that anti-competitive effect is likely to last less than two years, relative to the level of price or non-price competition that likely would have prevailed in the absence of the practice.

[469] "Substantiality" can be demonstrated by the Commissioner through quantitative or qualitative evidence. CREA contends that a qualitative assessment of the anti-competitive effects is only appropriate when these effects cannot be quantitatively estimated, and that the Commissioner has the burden to demonstrate that the effects cannot be quantified before turning to qualitative evidence. The Tribunal disagrees. In contrast to merger cases in which the efficiency exception is invoked by the respondent(s), there is no obligation on the Commissioner to quantify the anti-competitive effects of an impugned practice of anti-competitive acts (Tervita at para 166). In Tervita, the Supreme Court clearly distinguished between the measurement of anti-competitive effects under section 92 and the balancing exercise under section 96 on efficiencies. Quantification is only mandatory for the latter. In the context of a merger, the Court found that the "the statutory scheme does not bar a finding of likely substantial prevention where there has been a failure to quantity deadweight loss" (Tervita at para 166). The Tribunal is of the view that such analysis similarly applies to a finding of substantial prevention of competition in the context of an abuse of dominant position.

[470] Therefore, in order to meet the requirements of paragraph 79(1)(c), the Commissioner can resort to either quantitative or qualitative evidence, or both. However, the Commissioner must always adduce sufficiently clear and convincing evidence to demonstrate, on a balance of probabilities, that competition is likely to be prevented or lessened substantially (Tervita at paras 65 and 76). The Tribunal recognizes that it may be more difficult to meet this burden when the Commissioner relies largely on qualitative evidence, in part because quantitative evidence can be more probative to demonstrate the presence or absence of anti-competitive effects. In any event, the Tribunal will be entitled to draw an adverse inference if evidence that would or could be available has not been adduced.

[471] The Tribunal also recognizes that there may be a greater need for the Commissioner to rely on qualitative evidence in innovation cases like this one. This is because dynamic competition is generally more difficult to measure and to quantify. Indeed, when dealing with innovation, reliable statistical or empirical evidence is sometimes not available and the Commissioner may need to resort to more qualitative tools and instruments to demonstrate the competitive effects of a challenged conduct. Such evidence can take the form of business documents, witness statements and testimonies, industry analyses, etc. As long as such qualitative evidence collectively meets the requirements of the applicable standard of proof of balance of probabilities, it can be sufficient to support an application, even with limited quantitative evidence, or indeed none at all. In other words, no particular type of evidence is necessarily required. However, it bears repeating that the Commissioner ultimately bears the burden of proof and the Tribunal must be convinced on a balance of probabilities (Canada Pipe FCA at para 46).

[472] Despite the similarity in the general focus of the Tribunal when considering the two branches of paragraph 79(1)(c), there are nevertheless important differences in its assessment of the "lessen" and "prevent" dimensions of competition (Tervita at para 55).

[473] Specifically, in assessing whether competition has been or is likely to be lessened, the more particular focus of the assessment is upon whether the impugned practice has facilitated, or is likely to facilitate, the exercise of new or increased market power by the respondent. In this assessment, the Tribunal typically will endeavour to determine whether the intensity of rivalry has been, or is likely to be, diminished or reduced, as a result of the impugned practice. Where the Tribunal determines that this is not likely to be the case, it generally will conclude that competition is not likely to be lessened at all, let alone substantially. This is subject to the caveat discussed below regarding a trade association respondent.

[474] By contrast, in assessing whether competition is likely to be prevented, the Tribunal's more particular focus is upon whether the impugned practice has preserved, or is likely to preserve, any existing market power enjoyed by the respondent, by preventing or impeding new competition that otherwise likely would have materialized in the absence of the impugned practice. In this assessment, the Tribunal typically will endeavour to determine whether the intensity of rivalry likely would have increased, "but for" the implementation of that practice. Where the Tribunal determines that this is not likely to be the case, it generally will conclude that competition is not likely to be prevented at all, let alone substantially. Once again, this is subject to the caveat regarding a trade association respondent.

[475] Where the respondent is a trade association, the Tribunal will consider whether the impugned practice is likely to facilitate the exercise of new or increased market power by some or all of the members of the association, or to preserve their market power, relative to the situation that would likely have prevailed in the absence of the respondent's impugned practice. Where the Tribunal determines that this is not likely to be the case, it generally will conclude that competition is not likely to be prevented or lessened at all, let alone substantially.

[476] Finally, where a respondent with a high degree of market power is found to have engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts, smaller impacts on competition resulting from that practice will meet the test of being "substantial" (Tele-Direct at p. 247).

(b) The "but for" approach

[477] In comparing the level of competition in the presence of the impugned practice with the level of competition that likely would have prevailed in the absence of the impugned practice, the Tribunal typically asks what likely would have occurred "but for" the impugned practice (Tervita at paras 50-51; Canada Pipe FCA at paras 44 and 58).

[478] Where the practice has been in place for a significant period of time and its effects have already been fully manifested, the Tribunal will begin its assessment by comparing the state of competition that prevailed before the implementation of the practice, with the state of competition at the time the Tribunal hears the application. The Tribunal may also compare the former state of competition with that which existed at a particular time prior to the hearing of the application, if that is relevant to its consideration of the Commissioner's application and the relief sought. However, where the state of competition was in any event likely to change, regardless of the implementation of the impugned practice, the Tribunal will compare the state of competition at the time of its hearing with the state of competition that likely would have prevailed "but for" the implementation of the practice.

[479] Similarly, where the effects of the practice on competition have not yet fully manifested themselves, the Tribunal will compare the state of competition that existed prior to the implementation of the practice, with the state of competition that likely will exist once the effects of the practice on competition have been fully manifested (Canada Pipe FCA at para 55). Once again, this assessment may be adjusted where the state of competition was in any event likely to change, regardless of the implementation of the impugned practice.

[480] As is apparent from the foregoing, the Tribunal's analysis under paragraph 79(1)(c) is relative in nature. That is to say, the Tribunal compares, on the one hand, the level of competition that exists, or would likely exist, after the implementation of the impugned practice, and on the other hand, the level of competition that likely would have existed "but for" the impugned practice. As stated in the preceding section of these reasons, the test contemplated by this paragraph is whether the difference between those two levels of competition is, was, or would likely be, substantial; and this test is met when the price of the relevant product is likely to be materially higher, or the level of one or more significant dimensions of non-price competition is likely to be materially lower, than in the absence of the impugned practice.

[481] It follows from the foregoing that the absolute level of competition in, or entry into, the relevant market, is not the focus of the Tribunal's assessment. Stated differently, the issue is not whether competition continues to be intense, or whether some new entry continues to occur. The issue typically is whether competition likely would have even been more intense, perhaps as a result of even more entry or innovation, "but for" the implementation of the impugned practice (Canada Pipe FCA at paras 36-37, 53 and 57-58).

[482] It also follows from the foregoing that the failure of the Commissioner to provide historical data comparing the competitiveness of the relevant market in the past with its competitiveness at the time of the hearing (or other relevant intermediate time), is not necessarily fatal to the Commissioner's application. The Commissioner can also succeed by adducing evidence to establish a substantial difference between the level of actual or likely competition in the relevant market in the presence of the impugned practice and the level of competition that likely would have prevailed in the absence of that practice (Tervita at paras 50-51; Canada Pipe FCA at paras 55 and 58). However, it bears emphasizing once again that the burden to demonstrate both the substantial nature of the alleged prevention or lessening of competition, and the basic facts of the "but for" scenario that are required to make that demonstration, lies with the Commissioner (Tervita Corporation v Commissioner of Competition, 2013 FCA 28 at paras 107-108).

[483] Although the Tribunal ordinarily applies this "but for" approach, it maintains the right to adopt a different approach in appropriate cases (Canada Pipe FCA at para 44).

(2) The alleged anti-competitive effects

(a) Summary and commentary

[484] In his Concise Statement of Economic Theory, the Commissioner submits that TREB's practice of anti-competitive acts constitutes a significant barrier to entry and expansion for brokers who would like to offer brokerage services over the Internet. He asserts that, by limiting the degree to which TREB's Members compete with one another, the positions of TREB's traditional brokers are entrenched and their market power maintained.

[485] More specifically, the Commissioner maintains that the VOW Restrictions negatively affect the range of brokerage services being offered to consumers by VOWs and other innovative business models in the Relevant Market.

[486] In addition, he maintains that the VOW Restrictions reduce the overall level of innovation in the Relevant Market, including the development of more efficient business models by brokers who would otherwise offer new forms of competition to traditional "bricks and mortar"-based brokerages. Among other things, he asserts that this has prevented innovative brokers from increasing their efficiency and productivity, for example, by reducing their costs, working with more customers at a time and specializing in providing a subset of brokerage services in respect of which they have a comparative advantage.

[487] In his Application, the Commissioner elaborates by stating that TREB's practice of anti-competitive acts prevents agents from providing over the Internet information that otherwise would be labour-intensive to assemble for clients. In the absence of that anti-competitive practice, agents would be freed up from those labour-intensive tasks, and would therefore be able to focus on providing additional value to consumers.

[488] The Commissioner adds that the exclusion of VOWs and other innovative business models denies consumers the benefits of the downward pressure on commission rates that would likely otherwise exist. For example, he maintains that, by preventing increases in efficiency and productivity, TREB is preventing VOW-based operators and other innovative brokerages from passing the cost savings that would be realized from such efficiencies on to their customers through reduced commission rates or through increased rebates, as is being done by some VOWs operating in the United States.

[489] Moreover, the Commissioner submits that, in the absence of the VOW Restrictions, the quality of services in the Relevant Market would be substantially greater, and consumers would benefit from substantially greater choice.

[490] In his 2015 Closing Submissions, the Commissioner added that the adverse impact of those restrictions on non-price competition have reduced the total output of residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA, relative to what it would otherwise be "but for" those restrictions.

[491] Finally, the Commissioner's expert, Dr. Vistnes, asserts that TREB's refusal to permit VOW operators to display the Disputed Data on their VOWs helps to maintain agents' incentives to steer consumers into inefficient matches, at the expense of the home buyer, the seller or both. Stated differently, he maintains that with the better information that full-information VOWs would provide regarding a home's market value, buyers would be less vulnerable to being encouraged to offer an excessive price, and sellers would be less vulnerable to being encouraged to accept too low a price.

[492] In its Response, TREB begins by stating that it has no market power in the Relevant Market, that the VOW Restrictions do not create, enhance or maintain any market power for TREB and that, in any event, TREB has no motivation to exercise any market power that it may have. For the reasons discussed in section VII.B.(3) of these reasons above, including at paragraphs 256-266, the Tribunal disagrees with these propositions.

[493] In its written and oral submissions, TREB also maintained that its Members do not have market power. Among other things, it asserted that competition in the Relevant Market has only intensified since the Initial Hearing.

[494] With respect to the range of brokerage services being offered in the Relevant Market, TREB states that its policies do not materially reduce the broad array of services that continue to be offered, including new services that continue to be introduced over the Internet and otherwise.

[495] Regarding price competition, TREB maintains that its VOW Policy and Rules do not prescribe the commission structures that must be adopted by its Members, and that in any event, there is clear evidence of price competition among participants in the Relevant Market. In this regard, TREB notes that negotiations can and routinely do occur regarding the level of commissions on both the "sell" and the "buy" side of residential real estate transactions, and that agents often give rebates or other consideration that effectively reduces the level of their commission.

[496] Turning to innovation, TREB maintains that a VOW is only one type of a wide range of innovation initiatives that are ongoing in the Relevant Market, as manifested by a plethora of new service offerings that continue to be introduced by new and existing market participants on an ongoing basis.

[497] Regarding the total output of brokerage services in the Relevant Market, Dr. Church testified, in response to questioning from the Tribunal, that demand for residential real estate brokerage services is inelastic, because it is derived from the demand for buying and selling homes, and that therefore any change in the quality of such services probably has no impact on that demand for buying and selling homes. More generally, TREB objected to the fact that this allegation of the Commissioner was raised too late in the proceeding to permit it (TREB) to fully respond.

[498] Finally, with respect to buyer steering, TREB submits, among other things, that the Commissioner has not demonstrated that this behaviour occurs in the Relevant Market, or that it has harmed competition.

[499] CREA supported many of the positions taken by TREB. It also raised concerns regarding the potential effect of the remedy requested by the Commissioner on its trade-marks (which include the Multiple Listing Service trade-mark, the MLS trade-mark and the associated logos), as well as on the REALTOR trade-mark, REALTORS trade-marks and the associated logos that CREA indirectly co-owns with NAR.

[500] The Tribunal acknowledges that individual real estate brokers and agents in the Relevant Market do not have market power. However, that is not the issue raised by this proceeding. The issue is whether the VOW Restrictions have insulated, are insulating, or are likely to insulate TREB's Members from new forms of rivalry that, in aggregate, would likely substantially increase competition in their absence, as reflected in materially lower prices or in materially greater non-price benefits of competition. When a group of rivals, whether through their trade association or otherwise, insulates itself from increased competition, they are in essence exercising a cognizable form of market power. In brief, to prevent a material increase in quality, variety or innovation, or a material reduction in price, is to prevent a material reduction in one's market power, whether such market power exists at the individual or group level. For the reasons discussed in section VII.D.(3) of these reasons below, the Tribunal is satisfied that TREB has exercised, and continues to exercise, such market power on behalf of its Members who sought to be insulated from innovative forms of competition.

[501] The Tribunal also acknowledges that there is a high degree of competition in the Relevant Market, as reflected in considerable ongoing entry and exit, a significant degree of discounting activity with respect to net commissions, and a significant level of ongoing technological and other innovation, including with respect to quality and variety and through Internet-based data-sharing vehicles.

[502] However, as noted at paragraph 481 above, the absolute level of competition in, or entry into, a relevant market is not the focus of the Tribunal's assessment. Instead, that focus is upon whether competition likely would have been substantially even more intense "but for" the VOW Restrictions. The fact that other aspects of the VOW Policy and Rules might increase competition, for example, by virtue of the fact that they now enable VOWs to operate in the GTA, albeit in a limited way, is irrelevant.

[503] Nevertheless, the Tribunal agrees with TREB and CREA that the appropriate focus of assessment under paragraph 79(1)(c) of the Act should be upon the incremental effect of the VOW Restrictions on competition. More specifically, the specific focus of this stage of the assessment is upon whether competition would likely be substantially greater in the absence of the VOW Restrictions than it is at the present time, or is likely to be in the future, if they remain unchanged.

[504] For the reasons discussed below, the Tribunal concludes that the incremental adverse effect of the VOW Restrictions on competition has been, is, and is likely to continue to be substantial, relative to the "but for" world in which those restrictions did not exist. These anti-competitive effects take the form of increased barriers to entry, increased costs for VOWs, reduced range and quality of brokerage services, and reduced innovation.

(b) Increased barriers to entry and expansion

[505] In assessing whether competition has been, is or is likely to be substantially prevented or lessened by a practice of anti-competitive acts, one of the factors to consider is whether entry or expansion into the relevant market likely would have been, or likely would be, substantially faster, more frequent or more significant "but for" that practice (Canada Pipe FCA at para 58). This factor has played a central role in several cases that the Tribunal has dealt with under section 79 of the Act (NutraSweet at pp. 27 and 47-48; Laidlaw at pp. 347-348; Nielsen at p. 277).

[506] The Commissioner submitted that TREB's MLS Restrictions, including the VOW Restrictions, constitute a significant barrier to entry or expansion for brokers who would like to be able to operate a full-information VOW in the Relevant Market.

[507] TREB acknowledged that an assessment of whether an impugned practice impedes entry or expansion in a market can assist the Tribunal to determine whether market power has been or is likely to be created, enhanced or preserved by an impugned practice. However, it submitted that there are no significant barriers to entry into the Relevant Market, and this is confirmed by the fact that its membership grew from approximately 35,000 to approximately 42,500 in the period between the Initial Hearing and the Redetermination Hearing in this proceeding.

[508] In the absence of evidence that some of TREB's new Members have entered the Relevant Market as full-information VOWs, the fact that TREB's membership continues to grow does not significantly assist the Tribunal to determine whether the VOW Restrictions constitute a significant barrier to entry or expansion for brokers who would like to be able to operate a full-information VOW in the Relevant Market. Moreover, the Tribunal notes that data provided by Dr. Church suggests that approximately 30% of those who register for access to TREB's MLS system cease accessing that system within three years.

[509] TREB further submitted that VOW technology has been popular with "brand name" affiliated brokerages, and can be easily adopted by any TREB Member. In this regard, TREB stated that its VOW Data Feed has been adopted by 322 brokerages, including by several that are affiliated with large franchise-affiliated brokerages.

[510] However, once again, this evidence does not significantly assist the Tribunal to address whether the VOW Restrictions have had, are having or are likely to have an exclusionary effect on brokers who would like to be able to operate a full-information VOW in the GTA. By contrast, several of the Commissioner's witnesses provided credible and persuasive evidence regarding the exclusionary impact that the VOW Restrictions have had on them. This evidence includes the following.

(i) ViewPoint

[511] Mr. McMullin stated in 2012 that ViewPoint would like to expand into the GTA but could not do so in a commercially viable way due to TREB's VOW Restrictions, including the lack of certain content in TREB's VOW Data Feed. Specifically, he stated that ViewPoint requires data about properties that have sold (including recently sold properties) and other Disputed Data that are provided in "real time," in order to compete effectively using its brokerage model. He added that if ViewPoint could access all of the MLS data that is currently available to brokers through non-VOW channels, it would have a basis for competing in the GTA. Without such information, he stated that ViewPoint has no realistic basis for competing effectively in that market. In his updated 2015 witness statement, Mr. McMullin confirmed that the above statement remains true.

[512] Mr. McMullin elaborated on the foregoing as follows:

> In the case of both potential buyers and potential sellers, convenience and transparency are key ingredients in being able to use viewpoint.ca to attract customers. We have to be able to compete for consumers' business with traditional brokerages. Unless we can provide the same MLS information through our website as those traditional brokerages can through conventional means (in person, by phone, email, etc.), then we will rarely succeed to convince a customer to list or buy with ViewPoint. Without a full dataset from the MLS system, we would be unable to compete effectively. With access to the same information and the ability to display it on our website, the consumer can compare and choose between the convenience and transparency of using our website to obtain information about their potential purchase or sale, and the personal relationship of a traditional Realtor to obtain that same information.
> (Exhibits A-002 and CA-001, Witness Statement of William McMullin dated June 18, 2012 ("2012 McMullin Statement"), at para 78)

[513] Mr. McMullin added that without the ability to provide innovative products and services based on the MLS system and other property-related information over the Internet, it would have required "years of work [to] overcome the advantages of the incumbent traditional brokerages" and to gain the amount of business that ViewPoint has achieved in Nova Scotia (2012 McMullin Statement, at para 28).

[514] ViewPoint's interest in the GTA dates back to December 2010, about a year after it launched its website in Nova Scotia, in January 2010. At that time, Mr. McMullin sent a lengthy email to Mr. DiMichele, who was TREB's CIO, to express his interest in the GTA market. After failing to receive a response to that communication and after several subsequent unsuccessful attempts to meet with Mr. DiMichele, ViewPoint became a Member of TREB in August 2011. Contemporaneously, Mr. McMullin wrote an email to TREB's President at the time, Mr. Richard Silver. Among other things, Mr. McMullin requested a meeting with Mr. Silver. After further unsuccessful attempts to reach Messrs. Silver and DiMichele by email or by telephone, Mr. McMullin went to TREB's offices in November 2011, where he had an unproductive meeting with TREB's Chief Privacy Officer, Mr. Von Palmer.

[515] Shortly after TREB's VOW Data Feed became available in November 2011, ViewPoint executed TREB's Data Feed Agreement. However, in the absence of the Disputed Data, ViewPoint still has not entered the GTA.

[516] In the six years of its existence, ViewPoint has grown to become the largest independent real estate brokerage in Nova Scotia, with 22 agents in the field. (The term "independent" in this sense means that it is not part of one of the large franchise systems, such as RE/MAX or Royal LePage.) Its gross revenues have risen from $[CONFIDENTIAL] in 2012 to $[CONFIDENTIAL] in 2013, and then to $[CONFIDENTIAL] in 2014, including revenues from advertising (which went from $[CONFIDENTIAL] to $[CONFIDENTIAL] between 2012 and 2014). It continues to register approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] new users each day. Over that same period, the number of total page views on www.viewpoint.ca rose from approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] million in 2012 to [CONFIDENTIAL] million in 2013 and then [CONFIDENTIAL] million in 2014. Since the launch of www.viewpoint.ca in January 2010, registered and unregistered visitors have viewed more than [CONFIDENTIAL] million pages of property and listing information. The Google Analytics reports attached to the 2015 McMullin Second Statement indicate that, in 2014, there were [CONFIDENTIAL] sessions, [CONFIDENTIAL] users (Google's estimate of the number of persons who accessed www.viewpoint.ca), and [CONFIDENTIAL] page views on www.viewpoint.ca.

[517] According to Mr. McMullin, registered users account for approximately 90% of the traffic on ViewPoint's website. ViewPoint had [CONFIDENTIAL] new registered users in 2012; [CONFIDENTIAL] in 2013; and [CONFIDENTIAL] in 2014. It participated in [CONFIDENTIAL] brokered transactions in the HRM in 2012, [CONFIDENTIAL] in 2013, and [CONFIDENTIAL] in 2014. This represented growth in its share of total brokered transactions in the HRM from [CONFIDENTIAL] to [CONFIDENTIAL] over that period, notwithstanding overall yearly declines in the total number of brokered transactions in the region of 12.9% in 2013 and a further 3% in 2014. During the Redetermination Hearing, Mr. McMullin estimated that ViewPoint was on track to realize growth of approximately 25-28% in the total number of its brokered transactions (for the whole of Nova Scotia) in 2015.

[518] The foregoing figures were not disputed by TREB or CREA.

[519] Mr. McMullin further testified that if the VOW Restrictions were eliminated, ViewPoint would enter the Relevant Market within three to four months. The Tribunal accepts that this would be a likely result of the elimination of the VOW Restrictions.

(ii) TheRedPin

[520] TheRedPin evolved out of an entity known as Realty Teller, which started operations in 2008. In 2009, TREB's refusal to make resale home listings data available in an electronic data feed led Realty Teller to focus its efforts on the new condominium market, by creating an online platform to connect builders and developers with potential buyers. In September 2010, the Realty Teller website was launched publicly.

[521] In June 2011, soon after TREB launched its 60-day consultation process in relation to its VOW Policy and Rules, Mr. Hamidi and his partners decided to move forward with their original Realty Teller vision from 2008, by becoming an official brokerage and a Member of TREB. TheRedPin was launched later that month and was, according to Mr. Hamidi, one of Canada's first online brokerages at that time.

[522] In December 2011, shortly after TREB launched its VOW Data Feed, TheRedPin became the first brokerage to launch a website using TREB's VOW Data Feed.

[523] Since its initial launch, TheRedPin has focused on being a web-based brokerage oriented towards meeting customer desires and needs, all in a single user-friendly website. In particular, TheRedPin endeavours to provide a single online source of information that home buyers and sellers value. In addition to simply displaying that information, TheRedPin seeks to innovate with the MLS data and other information that it is able to obtain.

[524] However, the VOW Restrictions have limited TheRedPin's ability to "get better traction as a brokerage." Among other things, TheRedPin believes that obtaining access to the Disputed Data would enable it to offer better and more services to attract a greater number of people to its brokerage. Mr. Gidamy elaborated as follows:

> Because potential customers already have access to current listing information online on realtor.ca, TheRedPin has to offer potential customers more than just current listings to attract them to TheRedPin.com over realtor.ca, and to convert them into clients of our brokerage. Having sold information in the VOW datafeed and the innovative tools we expect to develop using it, would provide powerful new ways of first attracting and then of converting website visitors into clients. For example, on the listing side, heatmaps and other neighbourhood-specific sold information could help us show home sellers how TheRedPin's technology can help them value and ultimately sell their home.

(Exhibits A-113 and CA-114, Second Witness Statement of Tarik Gidamy dated January 30, 2015 ("2015 Gidamy Statement"), at para 21)

[525] Mr. Gidamy also stated that the VOW Data Feed remains critical to his ability to generate traffic on TheRedPin website and use it to generate leads, since "TREB's VOW data feed enables website users to see 100% of current MLS® listings on TheRedPin.com" (2015 Gidamy Statement, at para 7). Mr. Gidamy however admitted that realtor.ca does post or show the current MLS listings from real estate boards across the country.

[526] Mr. Gidamy also stated that, with access to the Disputed Data, and the freedom to use it in innovative ways, TheRedPin would be in a much better position to prepare accurate and in-depth advice and CMAs; and to more generally better distinguish TheRedPin from its competitors by putting MLS data to its best and highest use for home sellers and buyers. By contrast, without that data and freedom, he believes that TheRedPin is at "a serious competitive disadvantage" with other brokerages, which are able to provide the Disputed Data such as sold information to their clients in conventional ways (Exhibit A-015, Witness Statement of Tarik Gidamy dated June 22, 2012, at para 22). He added that if TheRedPin is not able to achieve greater efficiencies such as those that would flow from the innovations described below, and to achieve the increased brand recognition that it believes would be generated by its new products, it will have to scale down its business and operate at a much smaller size to remain in operation. Mr. Silver added that the likely effect of providing brokerages with a data feed containing more key information held closely by the real estate industry would be to allow brokerages to compete more effectively in providing real estate brokerage services.

(iii) Realosophy

[527] Mr. Pasalis asserted that the absence of sold, "pending sold," status change and geomapping data in TREB's VOW Data Feed is constraining Realosophy's growth.

[528] Mr. Pasalis explained that Realosophy's business model depends on having access to data, particularly from TREB's MLS system. As a result, its inability to obtain a data feed with sold and "pending sold" data limits Realosophy's ability to provide services to consumers online and to its clients.

[529] Among other things, he asserted that the limitations in TREB's VOW Data Feed are impeding Realosophy's ability to provide more advanced analytics and commentaries online and through the media, and to engage with clients more frequently by providing more updates of information. In addition, Ms. Desai and Mr. Pasalis stated that the registration requirement in the VOW Policy and Rules is having a significant chilling effect on potential clients who are reluctant to register to access the innovative services provided by Realosophy. Although Mr. Pasalis has less objection to requiring potential home buyers and sellers to register on his website to access specific sold and "pending sold" data on an individual listing basis, he believes that there should be no need to register to access aggregated information about sold property prices.

(iv) Redfin

[530] According to Mr. Nagel, Redfin is the leading real estate brokerage website in the United States. Between early February 2015, when he signed his second witness statement, and the end of September 2015, when he testified at the Redetermination Hearing, Redfin expanded from 48 metropolitan areas in 24 states to 74 metropolitan areas in 35 states. In addition, it expanded from 1,102 agents to approximately 1,800 agents, and from approximately 1,600 partner agents to over 2,300 partner agents, during that same period. However, it is not clear from the evidentiary record what this growth translates into, in terms of Redfin's share of brokered residential real estate transactions in any given urban market. The Tribunal was left with the sense that Redfin may remain well under 5%. Nevertheless, over the first nine months of 2015, Redfin had approximately 1,045,000 registrations on its website.

[531] In 2012, Mr. Nagel stated that Redfin had been considering expanding into Canada because it has "several metropolitan areas with strong housing markets and a tech-savvy population." In particular, Redfin was considering expanding into Vancouver, Toronto and possibly Calgary (Exhibit A-008, Witness Statement of Scott Nagel dated June 20, 2012, at para 56). However, it had not yet done a detailed analysis in respect of such potential expansion. Mr. Nagel added that the lack of available sold, recently sold and other current information about specific properties would have a significant impact on whether Redfin enters a market.

[532] In his 2015 witness statement, Mr. Nagel stated that [CONFIDENTIAL] (2015 Nagel Statement, at paras 26-28).

[533] When pressed by the Tribunal on this issue during his testimony, Mr. Nagel explained that Redfin decided "to take an active look again" at expanding into Toronto after the Commissioner's Application was remitted to the Tribunal. He reiterated that one of the factors that is relevant to Redfin's decision regarding a potential expansion into Toronto is whether it will be able to provide information with respect to "sold" properties, which is required "to provide our full customer experience in Canada." He added that one of the reasons why he was participating in the Tribunal's proceedings "is because [Redfin would] prefer to provide everything, just like [it does] in the vast majority of U.S. jurisdictions" (Transcript, September 24, 2015, at pp. 429-430).

[534] Based on Mr. Nagel's evidence, the Tribunal cannot conclude that the VOW Restrictions have prevented Redfin from expanding into the GTA, or that Redfin likely would expand into the GTA "but for" those restrictions. Accordingly, the Tribunal will not consider the adverse effect that the VOW restrictions appear to be having on Redfin's decision in this regard, in determining whether those restrictions have prevented or lessened, or are preventing or lessening competition substantially in the Relevant Market, or are likely to have that effect.

[535] However, the Tribunal observes in passing that those restrictions are having a deterring effect on Redfin, and that if they were eliminated, the potential for Redfin to expand into the GTA would increase.

(v) Other full-information VOW operators

[536] Two witnesses representing AVPs gave evidence on behalf of the Commissioner, namely, Mr. Prochazka, one of the founders of Sam & Andy, and Mr. Enchin, a sales representative with Realty Executives.

[537] Sam & Andy was an AVP that operated turnkey websites, including with VOWs, for agents in various cities in Canada and the United States, prior to its sale to Ubertor, a Vancouver-based firm, in May 2015.

[538] The VOW product that Mr. Prochazka provided was called Platinum Clicksold. For $45 per month, clients were provided with an unlimited number of active listings, photos per listing and custom domains as well as some additional technical features.

[539] As of February 2015, Sam & Andy had 90 Platinum Clicksold customers in the GTA. However, by the time Sam & Andy was sold to Ubertor in May 2015, this number may have been reduced by approximately half.

[540] Between 2005 and 2011, Sam & Andy contacted TREB up to twice per year to explore obtaining access to its MLS data, so that it could begin offering its services to realtors in the GTA. However, it was not until TREB issued its VOW Policy and Rules, and began to provide a VOW Data Feed, that Sam & Andy was able to obtain access to TREB's MLS data. In Mr. Prochazka's words, it was not until "this case was launched that TREB kind of started to play ball a little bit, give us a little bit of access to VOW and IDX data" (Transcript, September 23, 2015, at p. 306).

[541] However, the information provided in TREB's VOW Data Feed fell short of what Sam & Andy was able to obtain from MLS entities in the United States, which provided historical listing information (including sold data), mapping coordinates, status changes and identification codes in their data feeds.

[542] Moreover, various terms in TREB's VOW Policy and Rules increased Sam & Andy's operating costs and created barriers for agents who wished to purchase its products and services. For example, the VOW Data Feed did not contain fields with listing changes, mapping coordinates or agent identification codes to link agents with their listings agents. In addition, agents who wished to obtain a website with a VOW were required to obtain a signed agreement from their supervising broker. Mr. Prochazka testified that TREB is the only MLS entity with which he has dealt which imposes this requirement. At the time of the Initial Hearing, supervising brokers had refused to permit approximately 20 agents from obtaining a Clicksold website. By the time of the Redetermination Hearing, the requirement that agents obtain a signed agreement from their supervising broker had "arrested [Sam & Andy's] growth in the GTA" (Transcript, September 23, 2015, at p. 307).

[543] After concluding that "there really was no big opportunity for expansion and that [they] had run into too many barriers" in the GTA and other areas of Canada (Transcript, September 23, 2015, at p. 318), the majority shareholders of Sam & Andy sold the firm to Ubertor. As a result of those barriers, the GTA had become Sam & Andy's "worst-performing market" (Transcript, September 23, 2015, at p. 324).

[544] When Mr. Prochazka evaluated the potential to open a web-based brokerage in Edmonton and Calgary, he determined that it was necessary to provide sold data to be able to assist the public to gain insights into the property market, for example, through statistical tools such as price trends and sales velocity. This is because a web-based brokerage must be able to provide something more than what is already available on realtor.ca. He testified that it is "impossible to compete" as a web-based brokerage based on what is currently in TREB's VOW Data Feed (Transcript, September 23, 2015, at p. 311).

[545] Mr. Prochazka testified that if the Commissioner were to obtain what he is seeking in his Application, he would seek an opportunity to invest in, and sit on the board of, a web-based brokerage such as ViewPoint.

[546] Turning to Mr. Enchin, he created his first VOW in 2001, which he licensed to approximately 1,000 other realtors. That VOW was created at a time when TREB permitted its Members and certain others, including Mr. Enchin, to download its MLS listings in bulk. Mr. Enchin's VOW displayed MLS listing data, including sold and pending sold information, until TREB disabled its Members' ability to download TREB's MLS data in large quantities in 2007. He then sold his software and contracts with brokers to another company.

[547] In the summer of 2011, after becoming aware of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules, Mr. Enchin contacted TREB to obtain more details about its VOW policy and data feed. He then began to develop a new VOW and retained the assistance of a third-party, Adpioneers, which specialized in website development. He and his partners committed to a $100,000 contract to complete the initial version of his 2012 VOW. At the time of the Initial Hearing, he had demonstrated his 2012 VOW to five large brokerages in the GTA, who had all committed to adopting it for their approximately 4,000 agents once it became available. Smaller brokerages, representing approximately 1,000 agents, had also expressed interest in or committed to adopting Mr. Enchin's 2012 VOW, once it became available. Mr. Enchin stated that he believed his 2012 VOW would have been more popular with realtors and their clients if he could have offered the appraisal feature, which required sold and "pending sold" data.

[548] Unfortunately for Mr. Enchin, Adpioneers admitted in October 2012, after Mr. Enchin testified at the Initial Hearing, that it lacked the expertise to complete the VOW. Mr. Enchin and Adpioneers then terminated their relationship. After investing additional time and money to develop his VOW with the assistance of another third-party (who was also unable to complete the task), Mr. Enchin paused the development of his VOW for a period of time. In February 2015, he stated that he was working with a new software developer and hoped to have a trial version of his VOW completed by the end of that month.

[549] The Tribunal was not provided with any update regarding Mr. Enchin's efforts to launch his new VOW, as he did not appear at the Redetermination Hearing. As a result, the Tribunal cannot conclude that it is more probable than not that Mr. Enchin will actually launch that VOW and begin making it available. With respect to the VOW Restrictions, the Tribunal cannot conclude that they have had any adverse impact on the development of Mr. Enchin's current VOW or that, "but for" those restrictions Mr. Enchin likely would launch that VOW and begin making it available to agents in the GTA. In other words, any impact that those restrictions may have had on Mr. Enchin's re-entry into the GTA will not be considered by the Tribunal in assessing whether they have prevented or lessened, or are preventing or lessening, competition substantially in the Relevant Market, or are likely to have that effect.

(vi) Conclusion

[550] Based on the foregoing, the Tribunal concludes that the VOW Restrictions have had a significant adverse impact on entry into, and expansion within, the Relevant Market by web-based and other brokerages that would like to offer full-information VOWs in the GTA. Stated differently, "but for" those restrictions, such entry and expansion likely would have been faster or more significant (Canada Pipe FCA at para 58).

[551] In summary, those restrictions have prevented ViewPoint, a very disruptive and substantial potential competitor, from entering into the Relevant Market; and have prevented two additional disruptive brokerages, TheRedPin and Realosophy, from expanding within that market. Those restrictions also prevented Sam & Andy from expanding within the market, and prevented their brokerage customers from doing the same.

(c) Increased costs imposed on VOWs

[552] The Commissioner also submitted that the VOW Restrictions undermine the ability of full-information VOWs to compete because they have the effect of raising their costs. TREB replied that the evidence does not demonstrate that the VOW Policy and Rules have had, or are likely to have, the effect of raising these costs at all, let alone substantially. The Tribunal disagrees with TREB.

[553] With respect to ViewPoint, TREB noted that Mr. McMullin testified that his agents complete approximately 20 to 22 transactions per year, as compared with what he characterized as being a "provincial average" of 10 to 12 transactions per year per agent. Among other things, Mr. McMullin mentioned that while the traditional brokerage model is based on recruiting agents who will then go out and find customers, his model is based on minimizing, rather than on maximizing, the number of agents, and then using ViewPoint's website to attract prospects who are then connected with its agents. However, TREB and CREA pointed out that Mr. McMullin's calculations were given during the Redetermination Hearing for the first time and were not adequately supported or proven. TREB added that the Tribunal was not provided with any evidence to demonstrate that ViewPoint's agents complete more transactions per year than the average number completed by brokerages operating in the Relevant Market under TREB's existing VOW Policy and Rules. The Tribunal accepts this latter point.

[554] The Tribunal nonetheless also accepts Mr. McMullin's testimony that the costs associated with having to manually upload information with respect to price or other listing status changes would be prohibitive. In addition, the Tribunal accepts his testimony that ViewPoint uses its website www.viewpoint.ca as a lead generating device and that this frees up time for its agents to complete other tasks.

[555] Turning to TheRedPin, TREB and CREA noted that Mr. Gidamy stated that the inclusion of sold information in TREB's VOW Data Feed would enable TheRedPin to develop automated CMA tools that would save its agents time. Mr. Hamidi also testified to the time saving aspect. Nonetheless, TREB and CREA estimated that this time saving would be less than five hours per month per agent. On cross-examination, Dr. Vistnes did not dispute this particular estimate, and he agreed that this specific cost saving was not substantial.

[556] What TREB and CREA omit to mention, though, is that Dr. Vistnes was careful to confine his agreement on this point to this particular example of cost saving that Mr. Gidamy had identified. He did not resile from his broader point that the VOW Restrictions have the effect of raising the operating costs and reducing the productivity of VOW-based competitors in various ways.

[557] Each of TheRedPin's representatives who testified stated that the VOW Restrictions are imposing higher costs on TheRedPin, or are preventing it from reducing its costs. Generally speaking, Messrs. Hamidi, Gidamy and Silver supported the Commissioner's position that empowering the customer to do more assists the brokerage in becoming more efficient, in part because less time is spent generating leads in the time-consuming manner that is adopted by traditional brokerages, thereby freeing agents up to focus on work that adds value to customers. In addition, TheRedPin could provide more automated and other tools to make its agents more efficient and responsive. Mr. Gidamy further noted that such automated tools would not be confined to CMAs.

[558] With respect to Realosophy, TREB observed that Mr. Pasalis testified on cross-examination that the "dashboard" tool recently launched by Realosophy had already enabled Realosophy to achieve considerable time saving for its agents by automating the assembly and display of certain information. However, TREB failed to note that Mr. Pasalis also testified that because that information is manually uploaded, it must be double checked before its agents make any offers on a home, to ensure that important information was not missed. Therefore, Realosophy's agents end up duplicating much of the work that is required to produce the existing dashboard, at least for the particular property that its customer decides to make an offer on.

[559] More broadly, Mr. Pasalis stated that, with access to sold, "pending sold," live update and other information in TREB's VOW Data Feed, Realosophy's agents would need to spend less time merely gathering data for their clients, which would free them up to assist clients to understand the data and reports they are getting, and to better understand the options available to them. In addition, he maintained that much of the preparatory and education work required to prepare CMAs could be automated if sold and "pending sold" data were included in the VOW Data Feed.

[560] In addition to the foregoing, as discussed at paragraph 542 above, Mr. Prochazka stated that certain aspects of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules increased Sam & Andy's operating costs. For example, the absence of agent identification codes in TREB's VOW Data Feed forced Sam & Andy to create a workaround solution that required its clients to manually associate themselves with their listings.

[561] Mr. Enchin also testified that his ability to provide home buyers with access to sold and "pending sold" data through his VOW prior to 2007, when TREB stopped permitting its Members and others such as Mr. Enchin to download its MLS listings data in bulk, contributed to him showing approximately 30% fewer homes to his clients and assisted him to spend less time responding to client requests. During the Initial Hearing, he added that having access to sold information contributed significantly to saving him a significant amount of time when preparing CMAs for his clients.

[562] Based on the foregoing, the Tribunal concludes that the VOW Restrictions have increased the costs of TheRedPin, Realosophy and Sam & Andy to a non-trivial degree in the Relevant Market, and have increased the costs that ViewPoint would have to incur to compete effectively in the GTA. Stated differently, "but for" those restrictions, their costs of doing business likely would have been lower.

[563] The Tribunal also accepts Dr. Vistnes' evidence that the VOW Restrictions discriminate against full-information VOW operators, place those brokerages at a significant competitive disadvantage, reduce their competitive viability and diminish the likelihood that they will succeed in the marketplace.

(d) Reduced range of brokerage services

[564] The Commissioner further submitted that the exclusion of full-information VOWs and other innovative business models has negatively affected the range of brokerage services being offered to consumers. In other words, he maintained that "but for" TREB's MLS Restrictions, including the VOW Restrictions, the range of real estate brokerage services offered in the Relevant Market likely would be substantially greater.

[565] CREA responded that VOWs do not and were never intended to replace brokers. They simply provide a means by which a broker can partially provide over the Internet one of the services a broker normally provides in person to a client, namely, the provision of relevant property information that a client needs or wants. VOWs do not physically show homes, negotiate prices, close a transaction or perform various other important functions that are performed by brokers and their agents, including the refinement of listing and offer prices at the final stages of the listing and offer process. Moreover, a lot of the content available on VOWs is readily available to consumers elsewhere, including on a broad range of websites operated by brokerages and others.

[566] The Tribunal agrees that VOWs do not, and were never intended to, replace brokers. Messrs. McMullin, Silver and Pasalis were very clear on this point, both to the Tribunal and to TREB.

[567] Indeed, the experience in the United States reflects that even as VOWs have become more popular since the 2008 NAR VOW Policy came into force, the percentage of home purchasers who use a real estate agent or broker had increased from 81% to 88% by 2014. The corresponding statistic for those who used the Internet at some point in their search for a home was 92% in 2014 (NAR 2014 Profile, at pp. 45, 53, 58 and 60).

[568] However, the question remains whether the VOW Restrictions are nevertheless materially reducing the range of brokerage services that would likely be offered in the Relevant Market, "but for" those restrictions, such that competition has been or is being prevented substantially, or is likely to be prevented substantially.

[569] TREB and CREA assert that brokerages in the GTA currently offer a broad array of services, including on the Internet. In addition to the services mentioned above and in the discussion on innovation below, they note that Realosophy's website already offers features such as geocoding, school ranking profiles, a "Neighborhood Match" product, public transit information, local business information, demographic information and "walk scores." [CONFIDENTIAL] In a similar vein, Sage Real Estate's website features videos and professional photographs, floor plans and 3D tours, and a variety of information about properties, including asking price, neighbourhood information and proximity to shopping and schools.

[570] For the reasons discussed below, the Tribunal has concluded that, notwithstanding the broad array of brokerage services currently offered in the Relevant Market in the GTA, the range of such services available in that market likely would be considerably broader "but for" the VOW Restrictions.

[571] In understanding why this is so, it is important to keep in mind that those restrictions not only prevent TREB's Members from displaying the Disputed Data on a VOW in raw form, but also exclude this data from the VOW Data Feed and prevent them from using any data from the VOW Data Feed to create new features, tools and other services. This is readily apparent from a review of some of the services currently offered in other markets by ViewPoint and that TheRedPin and Realosophy would like to offer, which they are being prevented from offering in the Relevant Market by the VOW Restrictions.

(i) ViewPoint

[572] ViewPoint launched its website in January 2010. That website included detailed information on MLS listings across Nova Scotia, although ViewPoint only had agents in the HRM. It currently provides services to three different types of users:

a. Unregistered users, who are anonymous visitors who are able to access basic information such as the lot size and assessment value of every property in Nova Scotia, as well as current listing information on those MLS listings which are part of the IDX program;

b. Registered users, who are visitors who have created a user account by providing their name and email address and then verifying their email address. In addition to being able to view all of the information that may be seen by unregistered users, they are able to view all active MLS listings, as well as important information that TREB's VOW Restrictions prohibit in the GTA, including sold prices, WEST listings information, other historical information pertaining to sold properties, such as price and other listing status changes, and number of days on the market;

c. Client Advantage users, who are able to receive additional information, if they are willing to make a soft commitment to using a ViewPoint agent, and then provide more detailed information regarding their needs (such as when they intend to buy and sell), as well as their contact information. Among other things, these users have access to additional information that cannot currently be made available in the GTA, including:

    i. a professional valuation tool that, among other things, incorporates information pertaining to recent "sold" listings, thereby enabling the client to prepare a more accurate CMA than can be prepared without such information, and to do so before they meet with a broker, so that they have a better understanding of the market going into that meeting;

    ii. land registry information; and

    iii. property reports that provide detailed information summarizing real estate and click activity around a subject property.

[573] In addition, ViewPoint also offers a popular "Followed Properties" feature, which allows its registered users to ask to be alerted whenever there are any changes to the status of one or more properties, such as a change in price, a new or updated listing, or a delisting.

[574] Furthermore, for agents, ViewPoint has streamlined the process of booking showings, providing feedback to listing agents after a showing, and settling a transaction on closing. When they receive a showing request, buying agents no longer have to look up information to initiate contact with the listing agent, because ViewPoint's software immediately dispatches that information to the buyer's agent. And following a showing, the buyer's agent can initiate feedback with the click of a mouse, without having to enter any of the contact information for the listing agent. If the client proceeds to purchase the property, the agent simply has to enter the property identifier (or MLS number), and ViewPoint's software will bring up a wealth of information to pre-populate the transaction documentation. Mr. McMullin's sales coordinators have informed him that this latter innovation has led to a dramatic increase in efficiency.

[575] Mr. McMullin stated that in the absence of the VOW Restrictions, the website services that ViewPoint would offer in the GTA would be cutting-edge and would include many of the same features already available on www.viewpoint.ca.

(ii) TheRedPin

[576] Messrs. Gidamy, Hamidi and Silver each testified that, "but for" the VOW Restrictions, the TheRedPin would likely offer many new brokerage services on its website.

[577] For example, Mr. Hamidi stated that with access to the Disputed Data, TheRedPin would be able to provide better and more services, including automatic notifications to customers of price reductions in neighbourhoods of interest and information regarding trends in the relationship between sold and list prices, including aggregates to show trends to users in different formats. He added that TheRedPin would also provide more tools for its agents to make them more efficient, more responsive and able to provide better information to the brokerage's clients. Mr. Gidamy added that he expects that having sold information in TREB's VOW Data Feed would enable TheRedPin to develop "powerful new ways of first attracting and then of converting website visitors into clients" (2015 Gidamy Statement, at para 21). This includes by supplementing its existing potential client nurturing programs with various automated tools and other innovations. On the listing side, those tools would include heat maps, graphs, charts and other neighbourhood specific information on sold properties, as well as automated and tailored prospect matches or neighbourhood analyses that could be sent to potential buyers to make them more knowledgeable about neighbourhoods that might be a good fit for them. Mr. Gidamy mentioned creating a tool which would pull out home prices in areas that typically have bidding wars. Some of the above-mentioned tools are already being used by TheRedPin for non-MLS new home and condominium sales. These include heat maps of condominiums, and tools that enable potential investors to ascertain which views would sell better than other views and which floors offer a better return on money. In addition, TheRedPin would like to be able to provide greater transparency regarding commissions, better information regarding whether a pending sale is likely to become a firm sale, and whether there is a pattern or trend of conditions not being fulfilled in a particular neighbourhood.

[578] Although the heat maps and some of the other neighbourhood specific tools and analyses mentioned by Mr. Gidamy may already be offered by Realosophy, as suggested by CREA, the Tribunal accepts, based on the evidence provided, that the VOW Restrictions are preventing TheRedPin from offering the enhanced variations of those innovations that it would like to introduce to the Relevant Market, and from offering them in a more timely manner through a VOW. They are also preventing the greater variety of service offerings that would exist if the VOW Restrictions did not prevent such innovations from being introduced to the Relevant Market.

[579] Mr. Pasalis stated that, with access to more data, including sold and "pending sold" information, Realosophy could provide a more complete and precise picture of the particular property by aggregating all information in much the same way as it has done with its neighbourhood profiles. It would likely also provide automatic updates of its neighbourhood profiles on a monthly or more frequent basis, automatic updates of changes in particular listings, innovative price trend and comparable home tools, and more accurate price trend analyses. This was confirmed by Ms. Desai, who stated: "[Realosophy] has the business model, technology, and skill set to be able to use additional data such as solds, pending solds, and price changes in a way that allows us to generate more original content to attract and educate consumers" (Exhibit A-007, Witness Statement of Urmi Desai dated June 20, 2012, at para 30).

[580] In addition, Mr. Pasalis noted that with access to that information, Realosophy would be able to determine and better advise customers with respect to price changes in the market, the percentage of homes selling for more than list price, how "hot" a neighbourhood area might be, when the property last sold, what it was listed for that time, how long it sat on the market, how many times it has been listed in the last year, recent comparable sales and how their homes are doing from an investment perspective.

[581] More broadly, he stated that Realosophy would be able to provide more advanced analytics and commentaries online and through the media. Among other things, this would allow customers to educate themselves better about property prices and market trends in neighbourhoods, and would permit Realosophy to engage with its clients more frequently.

(iv) Sam & Andy

[582] Mr. Prochazka testified that if historical listing data had been available in TREB's VOW Data Feed prior to Sam & Andy's exit from the market in May 2015, Sam & Andy would have offered its clients more products and services for their websites, including statistical neighbourhood analysis, listing price history and automatic property valuations. In addition, he testified that his firm would have been able to offer performance metrics for agents so that, for example, agents could be alerted if a listing had performance metrics that fell outside of certain parameters. He added that, in the United States, his firm provided trending tools and graphs similar to what ViewPoint provides on its website, and tools based on price history and historical transaction rates.

(v) Conclusion

[583] Based on all of the foregoing, the Tribunal concludes that, notwithstanding the broad array of brokerage services currently offered in the Relevant Market in the GTA, the range of such services likely would be considerably broader "but for" the VOW Restrictions.

[584] Although the information contained in the Disputed Data appears to be widely available to home sellers and home buyers from brokers in the Relevant Market today (in person, by fax, by email or by phone), the evidence demonstrates that "but for" the VOW Restrictions, firms such as ViewPoint, Realosophy and TheRedPin likely would have offered by now, and likely would offer in the future, a range of additional innovative and value-added tools, features and other services on a VOW based on that information. As Mr. Gidamy testified: "[It's] not about the piece of data itself, it's how you display and how you engage and how you create stickiness …" (Transcript, September 23, 2015, at p. 293).

(e) Reduced quality of brokerage service offerings

[585] The Commissioner also submitted that "but for" TREB's MLS Restrictions, including the VOW Restrictions, the quality of various real estate brokerage services that are currently offered in the Relevant Market would be substantially greater.

[586] CREA maintained that there is no evidence before the Tribunal that the quality of services is suffering because of TREB's VOW Restrictions. TREB added that any alleged substantial increase in quality of service would be manifested in more customers hiring a brokerage, which is not borne out by the evidence. This is discussed in section VII.D.(3) below.

[587] TREB further asserted that the majority of the content displayed on a website with a VOW comes from sources other than the VOW Data Feed, and that the "real value of these websites is not the provision of information itself, but rather in the analysis of that information." TREB maintains that "the facilitation of some additional data analysis" by full-information VOWs would not represent a significant increase in quality of service. It states that this is particularly so given that brokerages in the GTA already provide analysis based on sold data, as does TREB through its Market Watch publication. In this regard, TREB referred to Sage Real Estate's Market Report newsletter, which provides statistical trends over the previous month for a variety of neighbourhoods in Toronto, aggregated statistics for the neighbourhood, and some individual transaction-level information about properties that sold in the neighbourhood. Those statistical trends include average sold prices for homes in the neighbourhood, trend lines depicting the relationship between sold prices and list prices, and a chart comparing the average number of days on the market each month over a three-year period. TREB also referred to various analytics provided by Realosophy on its blog, including a comparison of buyers' purchasing power across Toronto neighbourhoods. In addition, TREB noted that its Market Watch publication includes aggregated statistics on transactions processed through TREB's MLS system for the month, as well as a statistical break-down of sold house prices by type and by various regions of the city that appear to approximate large neighbourhoods. That publication also contains year-to-date statistics and year-over-year statistical comparisons.

[588] However, the Tribunal agrees with the Commissioner that the additional data analysis which TREB acknowledges would be provided by full-information VOW operators is an important part of what full-information VOWs likely would introduce to the Relevant Market, in the absence of the VOW Restrictions. Another important part of what those VOW operators would introduce would be other innovative service offerings that would be based on manipulation of the Disputed Data and that would be quickly accessible through the VOW. For example, full-information VOW operators would be in a position to provide the type of information that is available in TREB's Market Watch and in Sage Real Estate's Market Report much more quickly than is currently the case. (The Tribunal understands that this is monthly.)

[589] Moreover, the Tribunal disagrees with TREB's position that the additional data analysis that full-information VOWs would likely introduce to the Relevant Market in the absence of the VOW Restrictions would not likely represent a significant increase in quality.

[590] The Tribunal has discussed in section VII.D.(2)(d) above some of the additional innovative services that the Commissioner's witnesses have testified they would likely offer in the absence of the VOW Restrictions. In addition to those new services, those witnesses testified that, in the absence of the VOW Restrictions, they would likely be able to provide better quality versions of existing services, such as better, more accurate and more complete CMAs; more timely and automated notifications of price reductions; and more accurate, timely and complete other information regarding homes with particular characteristics in a specific neighbourhood, or other matters. Such other information includes detailed historical MLS listing information (including with respect to "solds," "pending solds," and WEST listings), dating back many years; statistical analysis tools that, among other things, would assist buyers to determine how long a property might take to sell, or what the sales price-to-listing price ratios are in a particular neighbourhood; and "live" status-change or other information that would enable customers to react quickly to developments in the market. The Tribunal considers the enhancement of CMAs to be particularly significant, as the evidence suggests that it is one of the more valuable sales tools used by agents.

[591] TREB also submitted that if sold data were to become available on its VOW Data Feed, it would be relatively easy for any brokerage in the GTA to display that data on its website. It therefore suggested that in examining the significance of the potential availability of that information to full-information VOWs, the Tribunal should focus on the incremental value that such information would have for full-information VOWs, by virtue of the value added that they would provide to that sold information.

[592] Once again, the Tribunal disagrees. In assessing whether TREB's practice of withholding sold data from its VOW Data Feed and prohibiting the display of sold data on its Members' websites is preventing competition, it is relevant to consider the incremental value that this would have for the Relevant Market as a whole, not just for full-information VOWs. To the extent that other brokerages, in addition to full-information VOWs, can be expected to respond to the enhanced quality offerings of the full-information VOWs, that is a further effect that must be taken into account in the Tribunal's assessment. For example, the Tribunal considers it likely that many other brokerages in the Relevant Market would respond to the more accurate CMAs mentioned above, by offering more accurate CMAs of their own. A failure to do so would make it more difficult for them to effectively compete. In any event, the Tribunal considers it reasonable to infer that many of the 322 brokerages that are already offering VOWs in the GTA likely would respond to the enhanced service quality offerings of ViewPoint, Realosophy and TheRedPin, with improved service offerings of their own. In brief, if the Disputed Data were included in TREB's VOW Data Feed, it is reasonable to expect that at least some of those brokerages would use that information on their VOWs to compete with those who will be using that information.

[593] TREB asserts that a brokerage website with the Disputed Data on its VOW would not provide a significant increase in quality at either the search phase or the valuation/offer phase of the home sale and purchase process, which are discussed at paragraphs 215-220 of these reasons. Although TREB acknowledges that the Disputed Data is valuable to potential home sellers and purchasers during the latter phase, TREB insists that there is no significant incremental value associated with that data being available on a VOW versus other delivery mechanisms, including orally or by hand from an agent, particularly since a consumer must in any event work with an agent in person at that stage. TREB adds that the Disputed Data is much less valuable to consumers during the search phase, because home buyers at that stage are just generally attempting to learn about the home buying market.

[594] TREB's position is contradicted by the testimony of several of the Commissioner's witnesses, whose testimony the Tribunal finds persuasive and credible.

[595] For example, Mr. McMullin testified that registered users on www.viewpoint.ca view the sales history of a property more often than anything else and have confirmed in surveys and verbally that they consider the sales history of a home, including with respect to sold and WEST listings information, to be the information that is most important to them. Among other things, this information enables them to make more informed decisions and to better understand the marketplace before they contact a broker or an agent. As an indication of the level of interest of ViewPoint's registered users in sales history, Mr. McMullin stated that ViewPoint's analysis of user activity on www.viewpoint.ca indicated that about [CONFIDENTIAL] of the distinct users who had accessed the website over a 30-day period had reviewed the sales history of at least one sold property; and that this percentage increased to [CONFIDENTIAL] over a 90-day period. Similarly, Mr. Nagel stated that the sold listings pages on Redfin's website are one of the most viewed types of pages, ranking only after the main home page, the main map for each metropolitan area and current listings.

[596] In addition, Mr. Gidamy stated that having the Disputed Data available in TREB's Data Feed would significantly improve the accuracy, timeliness and quality of service that TheRedPin provides to its customers. A similar point was made by Ms. Desai.

[597] Mr. Enchin observed that, prior to 2007, when TREB disabled the download function that allowed him to download MLS listings in bulk form from its MLS system, he offered a sophisticated appraisal tool on his VOW that, among other things, used sold and "pending sold" data to predict the actual selling price of homes within $1,000-$2,000. Mr. Enchin testified that this tool assisted home sellers to determine if their homes were listed at the appropriate price. He added that having access to sold information also helps people to determine how long a home might take to sell and to estimate sales to listing ratios. In addition, he stated that this tool was of value in assisting home purchasers to determine the appropriate price to offer for a home.

[598] Based on the foregoing, the Tribunal concludes that, "but for" the VOW Restrictions, the quality of some important service offerings in the market likely would be significantly greater (Canada Pipe FCA at para 58).

[599] For example, CMAs likely would be based on more comprehensive information, and therefore would be more helpful and accurate. Mr. Hamidi indicated it would be possible to create a CMA with sold data on homes with indoor swimming pools or certain school, neighbourhood or lifestyle information. Furthermore, interactive maps and other features that may currently exist in the Relevant Market would reflect sold prices and other updates (including with respect to WEST listings, and the fact that a conditional offer has been placed on a home), and would do so in "real time."

[600] In addition to the foregoing, having access over the Internet to the Disputed Data, and to analyses incorporating that information, would provide value to those home sellers and purchasers who prefer to have that information prior to meeting with a broker; or who may wish to choose between the convenience and transparency of obtaining that information over a full-information VOW and obtaining it directly from an agent in the traditional manner.

(f) Reduced innovation

[601] The Commissioner submitted that TREB's MLS Restrictions, including its VOW Restrictions, have stifled innovation or shielded its Members from innovative forms of competition, by excluding innovative brokerage models from the Relevant Market and by preventing existing brokerages from offering innovative hybrid or mixed-model services to consumers.

[602] In response, TREB and CREA maintained that there is and will continue to be a high degree of innovation in the Relevant Market, and that the overall extent of innovation in the market has not been materially reduced by the VOW Restrictions. They insisted that this is particularly so with respect to the Internet, which they stated has become and will remain an intensely competitive arena for brokers and agents.

[603] Among other things, TREB noted that its Members use technology for a variety of purposes, including: promoting individual listings through property-specific and general brokerage websites; using social networking in promoting listings; automating real estate transaction paperwork; and providing "live chat" capability with the brokerage over the Internet.

[604] TREB added that not all "innovative brokerages" choose to implement a VOW Data Feed within their brokerage website. For example, Sage Real Estate was recognized in the media as "the most philosophically and technologically advanced brokerage in the city of Toronto" despite not using a VOW Data Feed in its website. Using TREB's IDX feed and CREA's DDF feed, Sage Real Estate is turning its website into a home search portal for buyers not only in Toronto, but across Canada. Likewise, Ultimate Realty has four separate websites and two different mobile apps. Once again, its website that is geared towards residential real estate uses TREB's IDX feed and the DDF feed. (However, the mobile app that is geared towards residential real estate uses TREB's VOW Data Feed.) Between 75 and 125 leads are generated each month through these online tools. CREA noted that a number of other brokerages in the GTA, including TheRedPin, Realosophy, Zolo and Spring Realty, are using their websites to distinguish themselves from their competitors and as their primary lead generation tool.

[605] More broadly, TREB noted that brokerages covering well over 90% of its membership are subscribed to its IDX feed; and that nationally, 73% of CREA's membership is subscribed to its DDF feed, notwithstanding that provincial regulation limits the participation of realtors in Québec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Among other things, the listing information available on the DDF is comparable to that found on realtor.ca, and therefore does not include the information included in the Disputed Data fields.

[606] For its part, CREA noted that its website realtor.ca is highly popular and, among other things, allows consumers to search active listings and obtain detailed information and photos about properties across Canada, without the need to call a broker or to provide their identity through a log-in requirement. In 2014 alone, realtor.ca provided approximately 1 million leads to Canadian realtors. Mr. Simonsen testified in September 2015 that year-to-date data indicated that this number was likely to approximately double in 2015. Moreover, for purchasers planning on making a real estate decision within three months, 60% of the people who responded to a survey on realtor.ca were using the website as their primary source for searching properties, 70% were working with a realtor and 72% planned to do so. Among other things, users of realtor.ca are able to keyword search or search using a map function, view listing information including up to 99 photographs for each listing (with more available by link), take virtual tours, compare properties, review neighbourhood demographic information, get directions to a property, assess the property's "walkability" by its "walk score," email the listing to others and contact an agent. CREA plans to add additional innovations in the near future.

[607] The Tribunal acknowledges that TREB and its Members have developed various Internet-based and other innovations that provide new and valuable offerings to home sellers and buyers. However, the question is not whether there are highly innovative participants in the Relevant Market, a high degree of acceptance of innovative technology, and offerings that are popular with consumers in the existing environment, notwithstanding the VOW Restrictions. The question is whether innovation would likely be, or have been, materially greater in the absence of those restrictions. In other words, notwithstanding that TREB and its Members continue to move along the innovation ladder, would the removal of the VOW Restrictions allow innovative residential real estate brokerages to move further or more quickly up on that ladder? The Tribunal is persuaded that this is likely to be the case.

[608] Several of the innovations that have already been developed by ViewPoint, and that representatives of Realosophy and TheRedPin have stated they would likely launch or would be able to launch in the Relevant Market with a full-information VOW and access to the Disputed Data, have been discussed at various points in these reasons above (see for example paragraphs 572-581 above).

[609] Another innovation that ViewPoint has introduced is the automation of its "trade accounting." According to Mr. McMullin, ViewPoint replaced what he described as the "legacy system" that is provided by a third party, Lone Wolf, and used broadly across the residential real estate industry. Apparently, that system is not fully integrated with the MLS system. As a result, ViewPoint extended the capabilities of its platform to encompass all of the functionality that Lone Wolf had previously provided. The sales coordinators who are responsible for managing and entering trades have reported that this has resulted in a dramatic increase in efficiency because, for example, to begin the entry of a trade they simply have to enter the property identifier or the MLS number and it will bring up a screen with a wealth of pre-populated information fields that enables them to settle transactions much more efficiently.

[610] More generally, ViewPoint is an innovative company that the Tribunal expects will continue to develop innovative service offerings that likely would be, and likely would have been, made available in the Relevant Market "but for" the VOW Restrictions. The Tribunal bases its view in this regard not only on the impressive array of innovative products that were described in Mr. McMullin's initial witness statement, but also on those additional products that it launched between the time of that statement and the time of his two subsequent 2015 statements, some of which are described in the immediately preceding section above. The Tribunal recognizes that many of those products, some of which are identified in the paragraphs immediately below, would not be adversely affected by the VOW Restrictions per se. However, to the extent that those restrictions are preventing ViewPoint's entry into the Relevant Market, they are indirectly preventing ViewPoint from being able to introduce the full range of its existing innovations to the Relevant Market. Those restrictions are also preventing an important innovator from further disrupting the Relevant Market. In this regard, Mr. McMullin's uncontradicted testimony is that ViewPoint "continuously and from the outset until … this day look[s] for ways to use software, the internet and data to streamline and make more efficient the delivery of what we will call brokerage services. That's everything from acquiring customers to handling their inquiries to facilitating trade on the street in terms of showings and then, finally, through to actually accounting for trades that [it] assist[s] buyers and sellers in completing" (Transcript, September 22, 2015, at p. 71). The Tribunal is satisfied that ViewPoint would continue to behave in this manner if it were to enter the Relevant Market.

[611] Apart from some of the innovative offerings that have already been described at various points in these reasons, additional offerings currently available to one or more categories of users on www.viewpoint.ca include:

a. A "property rating" feature, which allows ViewPoint's clients to see comments that other visitors to the home have posted about the property;

b. Photographs of the home taken from a helicopter or a low flying aircraft and from the street, which provide more detail and are often more recent than those typically available, which are taken from a satellite;

c. Historical tax assessment information;

d. Colour coded identifiers on ViewPoint's local maps, that allow registered users to readily identify properties that have sold or are the subject of price changes – all of which are available in "real time," and in some cases depict changes that were made on that day;

e. A standard feature that places registered users on the map at the last place they were before they logged off;

f. A monthly mortgage calculator;

g. Extensive information from the province's land registration system;

h. A side-bar list of recent listings in chronological order, which gets automatically updated in "real time";

i. A feature that enables registered users to constrain the presentation of listings to only those ones that are in the map view, together with an accompanying side-bar of new or changed listings corresponding to that constrained area, which may be expanded or narrowed at the user's discretion;

j. A feature that allows registered users to follow developments with respect to a significant number of properties, including those that are not currently listed for sale; and

k. A "Property Clicks" tool that allows registered users and registered clients to track the number of followers and clicks on a property.

[612] In addition, ViewPoint offers its listing clients information about the number of web-based visitors who have looked at their property, as well as enhanced profile on its website. Its Full Service Listing service provides further features, including providing their properties with four distinct differences from other properties identified on its interactive map and a comprehensive weekly report regarding the website activity on their property.

[613] Another innovative offering currently available from ViewPoint is an optional $1,000 "flat fee" service that it offers to sellers who want to represent themselves and reduce their selling costs. As previously noted, Mr. McMullin stated that in the absence of the VOW Restrictions, the website services offered by ViewPoint would be cutting-edge and would include many of the same features already available on www.viewpoint.ca. The Tribunal acknowledges that some of these features could perhaps be developed or offered through Internet-based data-sharing vehicles other than VOWs. But the Tribunal is satisfied, based on the evidence before it, that without access to the Disputed Data, ViewPoint is not likely to enter the GTA and to offer such other features, whether on a full-information VOW or simply in the non-VOW area of its website.

[614] Turning to TheRedPin, Mr. Hamidi testified that TREB has been preventing him and his partners from innovating using TREB's MLS data for several years. In 2009, TREB's refusal to make resale home listing data available in a feed led them to focus their efforts on new condominiums. Although they subsequently entered the Relevant Market by launching TheRedPin shortly after TREB announced its VOW Policy and Rules in June 2011, he and Mr. Gidamy each stated that, "but for" the VOW Restrictions, TheRedPin would offer additional tools and services for their clients. Mr. Silver conveyed essentially the same view.

[615] In addition, as discussed at paragraphs 576-577 above, Messrs. Gidamy and Hamidi testified that if the VOW Restrictions were eliminated, TheRedPin would develop innovative new tools to assist its agents to be more efficient and serve potential customers.

[616] Based on all of the foregoing, the Tribunal concludes that "but for" the VOW Restrictions, there likely would have been, and likely would be, considerably more innovation in the Relevant Market, including as yet unidentified innovations that would be in addition to those described in these reasons above. Some of that innovation would be in the form of the additional brokerage services and enhance quality described in the two immediately preceding sections above. Additional innovation would be in the form described in this section. However, the Tribunal wishes to emphasize that it has been careful not to "double count" these anti-competitive effects in assessing whether, together, they constitute, or are likely to constitute, a "substantial" prevention of competition.

[617] The Tribunal also accepts Dr. Vistnes' evidence that VOWs represent an important form of dynamic competition, including innovation, that offer the potential to change the manner in which competition among real estate agents and brokers occurs.

[618] The Tribunal embraces the classical definition of dynamic competition offered by Joseph Schumpeter, who defined competition as a dynamic process wherein firms strive to survive under an evolving set of rules that constantly produce winners and losers. Schumpeter added that, in this process, the basic instrument that allows firms to be ahead of their competitors is the introduction of informational asymmetries which result primarily from innovation. A framework for antitrust analysis that favors dynamic competition over static competition "puts less weight on market share and concentration in the assessment of market power and more weight on assessing potential competition and enterprise-level capabilities" (J Gregory Sidack & David J Teece, "Dynamic Competition in Antitrust Law" (2009) 5:4 J Competition L & Economics 581 at 581).

[619] The Tribunal is satisfied that, "but for" the VOW Restrictions, full-information VOWs likely would have an important impact on the manner in which such dynamic competition occurs. For this reason, and the reasons provided above in respect of the range and quality of brokerage services, the Tribunal also agrees with Dr. Vistnes that the VOW Restrictions have substantially reduced, and continue to substantially reduce, dynamic competition, including innovation. This will be discussed in section VII.D.(3) below.

(g) Reduced pressure on commission rates

[620] The Commissioner, supported by Dr. Vistnes, submitted that in the absence of TREB's MLS Restrictions, including the VOW Restrictions, customers in the Relevant Market would be more likely to be offered discounts or rebates on their commissions paid to brokers, as brokers use VOWs to deliver services more efficiently, reduce their costs, and then pass those cost savings along to home sellers and home buyers. The Commissioner maintained that the aggregate savings to home sellers and buyers in the GTA would likely be very substantial over a period of years.

[621] TREB responded that the Commissioner has not demonstrated that full-information VOWs would likely offer materially lower commissions or increased discounts in the Relevant Market than VOWs currently competing there. The Tribunal agrees with TREB on this point.

[622] TREB notes that TheRedPin and Realosophy already offer discounts/rebates in the GTA with their current VOWs, and that there is no persuasive evidence that they would reduce their net commissions further, if the VOW Restrictions were prohibited by the Tribunal. Indeed, Mr. Gidamy stated that TheRedPin has been moving in the opposite direction, reducing its cash-back rebate from 25% to 15% effective June 1, 2014.

[623] TREB also notes that ViewPoint and some full-information VOWs in the United States have ceased their practice of offering discounts in recent years. With respect to ViewPoint, Mr. McMullin stated that it stopped offering rebates to buyers in recent years after determining that it was detrimental to ViewPoint's ability to attract new agents and that there was not a clear competitive advantage associated with offering such rebates. With respect to sellers, he added that they often fear that lower-priced brokerages do not provide the same level of sales and marketing exposure and that in a buyers' market, they may even wind up not selling their home.

[624] Likewise, the U.S. experience does not reflect that commission rates have decreased with full-information VOWs. ZipRealty stopped offering rebates in the United States after tests and focus-group studies revealed that its rebate program was not the primary driver of its business. A second U.S. full-service VOW that used to offer significant rebates (eRealty Inc.) was purchased by Prudential Financial Inc. which apparently ceased offering such rebates. In addition, Redfin reduced the level of its rebates/discounts in 2007 and then again in 2012. Mr. Nagel testified that he is not aware of whether commissions in the United States have been reduced since the 2008 settlement between the DOJ and NAR.

[625] Based on the foregoing evidence, and in the absence of any persuasive evidence supporting the Commissioner's position, the Tribunal concludes that it has not been demonstrated that the VOW Restrictions have had, or are likely to have, the effect of materially impacting in a negative way net commissions in the Relevant Market. Stated differently, the evidence does not establish on a balance of probabilities that, "but for" those restrictions, competition with respect to net real estate commissions likely would be more intense, and reflected in materially lower commissions or larger rebates for home sellers or home purchasers in the Relevant Market. Indeed, this appears to have been recognized by the Commissioner, who acknowledged in his 2015 Closing Submissions that the focus of the evidence in the Redetermination Hearing has been on non-price competition, even though he continued to maintain that the evidence of lower brokerage costs "is consistent with the expectation that lower costs will be passed on to home buyers and sellers in the form of lower prices over time" (Commissioner's 2015 Closing Submissions, at paras 168-169). Of course, to the extent that the elimination of the VOW Restrictions would lower the costs of participants in the Relevant Market, one would expect that this should ultimately lead to lower net commissions or lower fees for accessing services on VOWs. However, that possibility will not be considered by the Tribunal in its assessment of whether the VOW Restrictions meet the test set forth in paragraph 79(1)(c) of the Act.

(h) Reduced output

[626] After the Tribunal raised a question at the Redetermination Hearing regarding the impact of TREB's impugned conduct on the output of residential real estate brokerage services, the Commissioner made submissions on this issue in closing argument. In brief, the Commissioner submitted that the VOW Restrictions likely have the effect of materially reducing the level of total output of brokerage services in the Relevant Market, relative to the level of output that likely would exist "but for" those restrictions.

[627] In response to questioning from the Tribunal, Dr. Church stated that he did not agree with that submission. He based his position on his view that the demand for residential real estate brokerage services in the Relevant Market is highly inelastic, because that demand is derived from consumer demand for buying and selling homes, and the latter demand is not likely going to change based on changes in price or non-price competition with respect to brokerage services.

[628] However, the evidence demonstrates that the amount of brokerage services consumed by home purchasers and sellers is not fixed to the number of underlying home purchase and sale transactions. This is corroborated by the evidence indicating that a very high percentage of persons consume brokerage services over the Internet and that a high percentage of such persons nevertheless ultimately retain the services of a different broker to assist them to consummate the purchase or sale of a home. In this latter regard, Mr. McMullin readily acknowledged that many consumers who visit www.viewpoint.ca retain someone other than ViewPoint to be their broker.

[629] Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Tribunal excluded this issue from its consideration of whether competition has been, is, or is likely to be prevented or lessened substantially. This is because this was not part of the Commissioner's Application and TREB did not have an opportunity to respond to the Commissioner's written submissions on this point. In addition, paragraph 16 of the Order issued by the Tribunal on April 23, 2014 expressly stipulated that "[t]he economic theory of the case will not change" for the Redetermination Hearing.

(i) Maintenance of incentives to steer buyers away from inefficient transactions

[630] In his initial report, Dr. Vistnes took the position that TREB's refusal to permit VOW operators to display the Disputed Data on their VOWs helps to maintain agents' incentives to steer consumers into inefficient matches, at the expense of the home buyer, the seller or both. In his view, buyers would be less vulnerable to being encouraged to offer an excessive price, and sellers would be less vulnerable to being encouraged to accept too low a price, if they had access to the more comprehensive information that TREB's VOW Restrictions are preventing VOW operators from making available on their VOWs.

[631] Dr. Vistnes offered several examples of situations in which agents might have an incentive to steer potential home sellers or buyers into inefficient matches. For instance, he postulated that an agent may care less about a $10,000 difference in the selling price of a home, because this will only change the agent's commission by approximately $250, if the agent was splitting a 5% commission with another broker. As a result, the agent may encourage a seller to accept a lower offer (or to set a lower initial price), even if it might be in the seller's interest to wait for a higher offer to come along. Likewise, an agent might encourage a buyer to offer a higher price in order to close a sale, even if it might have been in the buyer's interest to keep looking.

[632] Another example provided by Dr. Vistnes in his 2012 expert report concerned the incentive for a buyer's agent to steer their client away from homes offering a lower buy-side commission rate, so as to protect their own commission. Using the hypothetical of two $500,000 homes on the market, offering cooperating broker commissions of 2.5% and 2.0%, respectively, he noted that the agent would earn an extra $2,500 by steering their buyer towards the higher commission home. Dr. Vistnes produced analysis which appears to provide some support for his view that this type of behaviour may be occurring in the GTA, because the frequency of different brokerages being used on both the sell-side and the buy-side of a transaction is greater when the buy-side commission exceeds 1% than when it is less than 1%.

[633] A third example provided by Dr. Vistnes concerned dual agency situations where an agent represents both buyers and sellers. Dr. Vistnes postulated that when agents have opportunities to produce dual agency outcomes, they have a strong incentive to do so, regardless of whether that may be in the interest of the buyer or seller. In this regard, Dr. Vistnes prepared a statistical analysis of sales by the five largest corporate brokerages in the GTA, which appears to show that dual-agency outcomes are more common than expected.

[634] While informative, the evidence provided by Dr. Vistnes with respect to steering does not assist the Commissioner to demonstrate that TREB's VOW Restrictions have prevented or lessened, or are likely to prevent or lessen, competition between brokers in the Relevant Market.

[635] The Tribunal notes that this theory was not mentioned in the Application, was not addressed to any material degree in the Commissioner's 2015 Closing Submissions, and was not supported by any significant additional evidence. For example, the Commissioner did not adduce evidence to demonstrate that full-information VOWs have ever competed in specific ways to reduce steering, let alone to demonstrate that such efforts have had a material impact on price or non-price dimensions of competition.

[636] As a practical matter, the Tribunal agrees with TREB's position that the scope for agents to act in the ways described by Dr. Vistnes is reduced, relative to what it once may have been, by the availability of substantially more information on the Internet and elsewhere regarding homes that are for sale or have sold in the Relevant Market.

[637] The Tribunal also notes that RECO's Code of Ethics appears to address the principal concerns raised by Dr. Vistnes. Specifically, section 19 states:

> If a brokerage has entered into a representation agreement with a buyer, a broker or salesperson who acts on behalf of the buyer pursuant to the agreement shall inform the buyer of properties that meet the buyer's criteria without having any regard to the amount of commission or other remuneration, if any, to which the brokerage might be entitled.

[638] For the foregoing reasons, the Tribunal thus concludes that the Commissioner did not demonstrate that the VOW Restrictions are preventing or lessening competition between brokers by maintaining steering incentives that would be materially diminished in the absence of those restrictions.

(j) Conclusion

[639] The Tribunal therefore concludes, on a balance of probabilities, that "but for" the VOW Restrictions, there likely would be a considerably broader range of services in the Relevant Market, the quality of some services in the Relevant Market likely would be significantly better, and there likely would be considerably more innovation in the Relevant Market. There would also be reduced barriers to entry and costs. However, the Tribunal is not satisfied that, "but for" the VOW Restrictions, commission rates, output or the incentive to steer buyers away from inefficient transactions would be reduced in the Relevant Market.

(3) Substantiality of anti-competitive effects

[640] The Tribunal must now determine whether the anti-competitive effects attributable to the VOW Restrictions and identified above raise to the level of "substantiality" required by paragraph 79(1)(c) of the Act.

[641] TREB and CREA submitted that the VOW Restrictions do not result in prices that are materially greater, or in levels of non-price competition that are materially lower, than the levels of price and non-price competition that would likely exist "but for" the VOW Restrictions. In taking this position, TREB emphasized that the Tribunal's assessment should be narrowly focused upon the incremental impact of an order requiring the Disputed Data to be made available for search and display on its Members' VOWs.

[642] The Tribunal's focus has indeed been upon the incremental impact of the VOW Restrictions. However, in determining whether the "substantiality" element is met, the Tribunal must assess the aggregate incremental impact of the three aspects of the VOW Restrictions that the Commissioner alleges constitute a practice of anti-competitive acts, namely (i) excluding the Disputed Data from TREB's VOW Data Feed; (ii) prohibiting TREB's Members from using the information included in the VOW Data Feed for any purpose other than display on a website; and (iii) prohibiting TREB's Members from displaying certain information (including the Disputed Data) on their VOWs.

[643] For the reasons set forth in section VII.D.(2) above, the Tribunal has concluded that, "but for" that practice of anti-competitive acts, there would likely have been, and would likely be in the future:

- more and faster entry and expansion by new and existing competitors than is currently the case;
- lower costs for operating a VOW;
- a considerably broader range of brokerage service offerings;
- an increase in the quality of various product offerings; and
- a considerably greater degree of innovation.

[644] The question that therefore remains is whether, taking all these factors together (and regardless of whether they individually meet the "substantiality" threshold), the aggregate impact of these incremental anti-competitive effects of TREB's VOW Restrictions constitutes, or is likely to constitute, a substantial prevention of competition. It bears underscoring that, in addressing this question, the issue is not whether innovative brokers can compete without a VOW that includes the Disputed Data. Rather, the issue is whether the VOW Restrictions have prevented, are preventing, or are likely to prevent competition substantially in the Relevant Market. This "substantiality" is assessed in terms of magnitude and scope.

(a) Magnitude and degree

[645] TREB and CREA suggest that the issue of substantiality cannot be answered in the affirmative unless the evidence establishes that full-information VOW-based brokerages would likely be hired by significantly more clients as a real estate brokerage, as a result of being able to display the Disputed Data. TREB adds that it is not relevant for the Tribunal's analysis if a website becomes more popular with "real estate voyeurs" or consumers who are ultimately going to hire another brokerage.

[646] The Tribunal considers that the first of these propositions by TREB and CREA must be recast in terms of whether full-information VOW brokerages likely would be hired by significantly more clients as a real estate brokerage, "but for" the aggregate impact of the three components of TREB's practice of anti-competitive acts described at paragraph 642 above.

[647] Moreover, the Tribunal's analysis cannot be confined to the impact of that practice on full-information VOW-based brokerages. It is also important and relevant for the Tribunal to consider whether those existing TREB Members who wish to offer full-information VOWs, while also continuing to compete as traditional "bricks and mortar" brokerages would likely be hired by significantly more clients as a real estate brokerage, as a result of being able to operate as full-information VOWs in addition to their more traditional offerings. (The Tribunal understands that to the extent that many of the 322 Members of TREB who are now offering VOWs continue to also conduct business in the traditional manner, they are not considered to be full-information VOW-based brokerages.)

[648] Turning to "real estate voyeurs," TREB submits that to the extent that those consumers proceed from a VOW to use another brokerage to complete their real estate transactions, the fact that they may have visited the VOW before that point in time is without competitive significance under paragraph 79(1)(c).

[649] The Tribunal disagrees. To the extent that such other brokerages likely would have to compete to a greater degree to prevent the consumers in question from becoming clients of the full-information VOW brokerages whose websites they have visited, the fact that the latter do not ultimately win the patronage of such clients is not irrelevant to the Tribunal's assessment. Stated differently, as a general principle, innovation is not only relevant to the Tribunal's assessment under paragraph 79(1)(c) to the extent that it assists the innovator to win business. It is also relevant to the extent that it prompts rivals in the relevant market to respond with competitive initiatives of their own, in order to retain such business or to win it away from either the innovator or another rival.

[650] A good example of this is the evidence that Bosley and RE/MAX Hallmark displayed sold information on their respective websites for at least ten months in 2014/2015. As discussed in paragraph 373 above, when requested by TREB to cease displaying sold information, Bosley's President, Mr. Tom Bosley, expressed the hope that TREB would "take the appropriate action or those of us following the rules will have no choice but to follow [the] lead" of those other brokerages who were posting such information. Another example, on a much broader scale, is realtor.com's decision to begin posting sold information subsequent to the widespread posting of such information on other websites in the United States (see paragraph 700 below). A third example would be the approximately 322 brokerages that TREB has stated now operate VOWs in the GTA, as a result of the introduction of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules, which were pushed by a smaller number of innovators.

[651] To further buttress its position that the VOW Restrictions have had no material adverse impact on the Relevant Market, TREB noted that TheRedPin and Realosophy have continued to grow their business despite the VOW Restrictions, as confirmed by Messrs. Gidamy and Pasalis, and to expand their respective presence in the media.

[652] However, this is beside the point. What is pertinent for the Tribunal's analysis is the testimony of Messrs. Gidamy, Hamidi and Pasalis and Ms. Desai regarding the significant value of sold information, and how the ability to display and use such information would enable TheRedPin and Realosophy to offer a range of additional new services to their clients and agents. The Tribunal is satisfied that this ability to offer a range of additional new services to their clients and agents would assist TheRedPin and Realosophy to be able to better compete, and therefore to grow, materially more than they have been growing.

(i) The limited quantitative evidence

[653] TREB and CREA submitted that if full-information VOWs were as much of a disruptive technology as the Commissioner has suggested, the impact of their presence on residential real estate brokerage markets in the United States and in Nova Scotia would be observable. However, TREB and CREA noted that the Commissioner and Dr. Vistnes failed to conduct any empirical analysis of any of those markets, notwithstanding the fact that full-information VOWs have existed in the United States for over seven years and have existed in Nova Scotia for a number of years. TREB and CREA also stated that the Commissioner failed to adduce any quantitative analysis of the relative effectiveness of VOWs with sold data and VOWs without sold data in converting website users to clients. In other words, they asserted that the Commissioner failed to present empirical evidence of the incremental effect of sold and other Disputed Data in increasing a full-information VOW operator's ability to generate clients. TREB requested the Tribunal to draw an adverse inference from the Commissioner's failure to conduct such empirical analysis.

[654] TREB further argued that information comparing Redfin's conversion rates in local markets where it can display sold information on its website, with its rates in local markets where it cannot display that information on its website, was available to Mr. Nagel, yet was not provided. Once again, TREB requested the Tribunal to draw an inference that is unfavourable to the Commissioner, because Mr. Nagel was the Commissioner's witness.

[655] During the Redetermination Hearing, the Tribunal pressed Dr. Vistnes on the Commissioner's failure to conduct an empirical assessment comparing the nature and extent of competition in areas of the United States where sold data is available on VOWs, with the level of competition in areas where sold data is not available on VOWs. Dr. Vistnes explained that he advised the Commissioner against attempting to subpoena MLS information from real estate boards in the United States because, to conduct a legitimate study, it would have been necessary to obtain "a tremendous amount of data from a significant number of MLSes." Based on his experience with the dispute that led to the 2008 settlement between the U.S. DOJ and NAR, this would have required "a huge outlay of effort" that may not "have been particularly reliable or particularly informative," given the difficulty of having to properly control for all of the differences in the local markets in question. He therefore advised the Commissioner that he did not believe that that would be the best way in which to advance the case.

[656] The Tribunal acknowledges that, as a statutory authority, the Commissioner has to be prudent with, and make difficult decisions regarding the allocation of, the limited public funds available for administering and enforcing the Act at any given time. The Tribunal also accepts that Dr. Vistnes' experience with the dispute between the U.S. DOJ and NAR provided a legitimate basis upon which to draw conclusions about the costs and utility of a comparative analysis between local markets where sold information is available and other local markets where it is not available. Therefore, the Tribunal is not prepared to draw an adverse inference from the Commissioner's failure to conduct the empirical assessment in question regarding the U.S. experience. That said, the Tribunal notes that the Commissioner continues to bear the burden of supporting his Application on the balance of probabilities, which may well be a more challenging task in the absence of quantitative evidence.

[657] However, the Tribunal is prepared to draw some adverse inference from the failure of Messrs. Nagel and McMullin to adduce evidence regarding the experience of Redfin and Viewpoint, respectively, in areas of the United States and Nova Scotia where sold information or the "pending sold" price is and is not permitted to be displayed on its website. That is to say, the Tribunal is prepared to infer that Redfin's and ViewPoint's conversion rates in areas where they are not permitted to display "sold" information or "pending sold" prices on their website are not lower than they are in areas where those entities are permitted to display that information on their websites. However, given that this may well be explainable by the local differences mentioned by Dr. Vistnes, the Tribunal does not accord great significance to this inference. The more significant points, in the Tribunal's view, are that both Mr. Nagel and Mr. McMullin persuasively testified that sold information is critical to potential home sellers and buyers (see discussion at paragraphs 595 and 675 of these reasons), and that being prohibited from providing that information to consumers in various innovative formats is significantly impeding them from distinguishing themselves from their rivals.

[658] That being said, the Tribunal observes that even a limited comparison between one local U.S. market where sold information is available and one local U.S. market where such information is not available may have been at least somewhat helpful. The same is true with respect to Nova Scotia and the HRM, with regards to "pending sold" prices. The Tribunal further notes that in other parts of his testimony, Dr. Vistnes confirmed that the U.S. experience since 2008 could be instructive, so long as the analysis controlled for differences that might exist between the markets being compared. The absence of any such comparison, including a quantitative comparison of markets with and without full-information VOWs, rendered much more difficult the Tribunal's assessment of the "substantiality" element of paragraph 79(1)(c), and resulted in this case being much more of a "close call," than it otherwise may have been.

(ii) Conversion rates

[659] In addition to the foregoing, both TREB and CREA raised the issue of the low "conversion rates" of full-information VOWs. The Tribunal pauses to note that this term was sometimes used to describe the conversion of website visitors to registered users on a VOW and sometimes used to describe the subsequent conversion of registered users on a VOW to actual clients of the brokerage.

[660] TREB and CREA maintained that the available evidence on "conversion rates" indicates that full-information VOWs have not had a substantial impact on competition in the United States or in Nova Scotia. While full-information VOWs have been successful in attracting a large number of visitors to their respective websites, they have been much less successful in converting those visitors to clients who retain them on actual purchase and sale transactions.

[661] TREB noted that Redfin and ViewPoint have "conversion" rates of only [CONFIDENTIAL], and [CONFIDENTIAL] respectively, whereas TheRedPin's conversion rate is [CONFIDENTIAL] even though it does not have a full-information VOW. For Redfin, this figure represents the percentage of unique website visitors who registered on its website over the three-year period 2012-2014. For ViewPoint, it represents the number of transactions that it brokered during the period from January 1, 2015 to September 19, 2015 [CONFIDENTIAL] divided by the total number of new registered users during that period [CONFIDENTIAL]. However, if one were comparing "apples to apples," ViewPoint's "conversion" rate appears to have been [CONFIDENTIAL] in 2014, as there were [CONFIDENTIAL] new registrations out of [CONFIDENTIAL] users that year (Exhibit CA-103, ViewPoint Realty Business Metrics; 2015 McMullin Second Statement, at p. 28). For TheRedPin, the "conversion rate" represents the "current" percentage of registered users on its VOW who hired TheRedPin on a completed transaction, although the specific period in relation to which this percentage pertains was not provided. TREB observed from these statistics that TheRedPin is approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] times as successful in converting clients as Redfin, and over [CONFIDENTIAL] times as successful as ViewPoint.

[662] The Tribunal does not accord much significance to the fact that the low conversion rates of firms such as ViewPoint, Redfin and TheRedPin suggest that many consumers are evidently treating the information available on their websites as complements to the information available from the (different) broker they ultimately use to list or purchase their home. The fact remains that the innovative tools, features and other services available on those websites is assisting them to compete, and is forcing traditional brokerages to respond.

[663] TREB invited the Tribunal to conclude from this evidence on conversion rates that there is no causal relationship between having a full-information VOW and being able to convert website users into clients. TREB asked the Tribunal to draw a similar conclusion from the fact that technology-based competitors such as TheRedPin and Realosophy continue to grow, even though they do not have access to a VOW containing the Disputed Data.

[664] The Tribunal is not prepared to reach such conclusions. The Tribunal acknowledges that conversion rates are low and that the quantitative evidence provided by the Commissioner in this proceeding is limited. The Tribunal also recognizes that there is no quantitative evidence comparing markets where VOW operators have access to sold listings or other Disputed Data with markets where they do not. However, the Commissioner's case is focused on dynamic competition and innovation. In such cases, reliable quantitative evidence is often not available or cannot easily be obtained. In the absence of quantitative evidence comparing the performance of Redfin or ViewPoint in markets where, on the one hand, they are able to display and use the Disputed Data to offer services that are based on that information, and on the other hand, they are not able to display and use some or all of the Disputed Data, the Tribunal must make its determination on the basis of the available evidence, in this case primarily qualitative, on the record.

(iii) Qualitative evidence

[665] The qualitative evidence adduced by the Commissioner demonstrates six important things.

[666] First, as discussed in greater detail below, the Disputed Data is very important, if not critical, in assisting Internet-based brokerages to distinguish themselves from incumbent traditional brokerages. And being able to distinguish themselves from more traditional brokerages is an essential element to allow VOW operators like ViewPoint, TheRedPin or Realosophy to enter the Relevant Market, or to expand within it to the degree that otherwise likely would be the case.

[667] Second, home purchasers and sellers value being able to obtain information with respect to sold prices, the conditional sale status of homes in the market, firm "pending sold" information, WEST listings and cooperating broker commissions prior to meeting with their broker/agent, or in any event prior to finalizing the listing price of their homes or making an offer on a home.

[668] Third, an inability to display and use the Disputed Data to develop innovative products has been preventing, and is likely to continue to prevent, ViewPoint from entering the Relevant Market. This has also prevented Realosophy and TheRedPin from growing as much as they likely would have grown, and is likely continuing to prevent them from growing as much as they likely would grow, "but for" the VOW Restrictions. Moreover, this also prevented Sam & Andy from expanding within the Relevant Market, and prevented their brokerage customers from doing the same.

[669] Fourth, ViewPoint, Realosophy and TheRedPin are Internet-based innovative brokerages that, in aggregate, likely would have introduced a considerably broader range of brokerage services, increased the quality of some important services (such as CMAs), benefited from lower operating costs and considerably increased the overall level of innovation in the Relevant Market, "but for" the VOW Restrictions. The cumulative impact of these anti-competitive effects resulting from the VOW Restrictions is such that the level of non-price competition would likely be substantially greater in the absence of the impugned practice.

[670] Fifth, the VOW Restrictions have erected barriers to the entry and expansion of innovative brokers in the Relevant Market. ViewPoint's disruptive, innovative approach to its business has assisted it to become the largest independent brokerage in Nova Scotia, and to continue growing even during the downturn in the real estate business that has occurred in 2013 and 2014. Although the Tribunal cannot predict whether ViewPoint likely would achieve a share of the Relevant Market that is similar to what it has achieved in the HRM [CONFIDENTIAL], the Tribunal is satisfied that, in the absence of the VOW Restrictions, ViewPoint likely would enter, grow and become an important competitor in the Relevant Market. To put ViewPoint's [CONFIDENTIAL] share into perspective, the Tribunal observes that Dr. Church reported in 2012 that the largest brokerage in the GTA at that time had a market share of approximately 4%. Dr. Vistnes estimated that even a 3% market share would make ViewPoint roughly the sixth or seventh largest firm in the GTA. The Tribunal notes that Mr. McMullin testified in September 2015 that ViewPoint was on track to finish the year with a 25-28% increase in its number of brokered transactions in Nova Scotia. The Tribunal is also satisfied that the VOW Restrictions are preventing TheRedPin and Realosophy from growing and becoming significantly more important competitors in the GTA.

[671] The Tribunal considers that its conclusion regarding the ability of these entities to enter into and expand within the GTA is supported by the experience of Redfin in the United States, which continues to expand and grow. Although its absolute share of the overall residential real estate brokerage business in the United States is small (i.e., well below [CONFIDENTIAL]% in the areas where it operates), it was ranked 13 out of the 500 top real estate brokerages in the United States in 2011, based on the number of closed transactions per sales associate. Redfin's continued growth and expansion demonstrates that its business model is successful.

[672] Sixth, the VOW Restrictions have stifled innovation in the supply of Internet-based real estate brokerage services in the GTA.

[673] The Tribunal is satisfied that that the qualitative evidence provided by the Commissioner in respect of the foregoing matters is not speculative and is specific enough to meet, on a balance of probabilities, the substantiality threshold set forth in paragraph 79(1)(c).

(iv) Importance of the Disputed Data

[674] Furthermore, the Tribunal accepts the qualitative evidence of several of the Commissioner's witnesses who testified regarding the importance of information pertaining to the Disputed Data (i.e., sold, "pending sold," WEST listings and cooperative broker commissions), both to them and to home sellers/purchasers.

A. Sold data

[675] Regarding sold information, Messrs. Nagel, McMullin, Pasalis, Gidamy, Hamidi and Enchin all testified that this information is very important to home sellers and buyers; and that being able to display and use that information on their VOWs would assist them to convert visitors to their VOWs into clients. The Tribunal also accepts Mr. McMullin's testimony that sold prices are "the single most reliable piece of evidence of market activity in the real estate business, because a listing price is nothing more than an advertisement, a solicitation, an aspiration of a seller, whereas a sold price is indicative of market value for a property" (Transcript, September 22, 2015, at p. 91).

[676] The Tribunal concludes that being able to obtain sold information from the VOW Data Feed, and to work with that data as they see fit, would likely enable full-information VOWs, including ViewPoint and those such as TheRedPin who would like to become full-information VOWs, to convert an increasing and significant number of website users into clients.

[677] Parenthetically, an important aspect of "sold" price data is information about the number of days that a sold home was on the market. Although days on the market ("DOM") information is available in TREB's VOW Data Feed for current listings, it is not available for homes that have sold. Given that homes that have not yet sold sometimes spend more DOM on average than homes that have sold, Dr. Vistnes indicated that having access only to DOM information about current listings can give consumers a misleading sense of how long a home may spend on the market. Moreover, not having access to DOM information for "sold" homes can deprive consumers of potentially very valuable information, particularly in a "hot" market.

B. Pending sold information and conditional sold status

[678] With respect to "pending sold" information, TREB noted that it is not available on Redfin's website, and that the Commissioner has not provided evidence to demonstrate that the lack of that information impedes Redfin's ability to compete in the United States at all, let alone substantially. It added that ViewPoint has not been able to display "pending sold" information outside the HRM since 2013, yet no evidence has been adduced that this has impeded ViewPoint's ability to compete outside the HRM in any manner.

[679] However, the Tribunal accepts Mr. McMullin's evidence that the fact that a conditional offer has been accepted on a home, together with "real time" access to the sold price of that home, is information that is "of enormous value" for home buyers and sellers, and therefore for ViewPoint. Among other things, this information gives consumers important information regarding the value of a comparable home at a particular moment in time, which can be extremely valuable in a market that is rising or falling. Mr. Enchin made essentially the same point during his cross-examination, and observed that "pending sold" information is "as important, if not more important, than actual sold data" (Transcript, September 14, 2012, at p. 779).

[680] Dr. Vistnes analyzed TREB's MLS data and determined that the median duration between the "sale date" and the "close date" for sold homes in the GTA from 2007 to 2011 was approximately seven weeks. Therefore, providing home sellers and home buyers with "pending sold" information eliminates an important information lag that would otherwise exist. Timely access to this information can be very important in a rising or declining market. In the GTA, the significance of a seven-week lag can perhaps best be appreciated by considering that, between June 2010 and June 2011, market prices in the GTA increased at an average annual rate of about 10%. Thus, prices in any given two-month period increased approximately 1.5%, on average, across the GTA, with some neighbourhoods experiencing even greater increases. On the price of $500,000 home, this works out to approximately $8,000 per two-month period.

[681] Mr. McMullin added that conditional sold information also permits agents and their clients to avoid spending their time seeing or further considering a property that is the subject of a conditional sale. In addition, knowing the date by which the conditions must be satisfied enables other potential buyers who are still interested in the home to check whether the deal actually went "firm" on that date, and to act accordingly.

[682] The Tribunal also accepts Mr. Gidamy's evidence that a buyer may well continue to be interested in a property that has just changed from an active listing to a conditionally sold listing; and that having information regarding the conditions of a purchase enables TheRedPin to better advise such buyers as to the likelihood of the conditions being met and whether there is a pattern or trend of conditions in a particular neighbourhood or building not being met.

[683] The Tribunal further notes that the NAR 2014 Profile reported that information with respect to "pending sales/contract status" was considered by 69% of those who participated in the study to be "very useful" or "somewhat useful" information to obtain on a website.

C. WEST listings

[684] With respect to WEST listings, TREB reiterated a number of the same arguments that it made with respect to "pending solds." However, once again, the Tribunal accepts Mr. McMullin's evidence that this information is very important to both ViewPoint and its users, and that this has been confirmed through surveys and discussions with its users. This is because it assists potential home sellers and buyers to make a well-informed decision. Stated differently, Mr. McMullin testified that this information assists clients to rationalize the marketplace and to possibly measure the motivations of the seller.

[685] In an attempt to estimate how much information a consumer would fail to see if his or her CMA excluded WEST listings and pending sales, Dr. Vistnes conducted an analysis of all past sales during the six month period preceding March 1, 2012, all WEST listings during that period, and all sales that were pending as of March 1, 2012 that had not yet closed. That analysis, set forth in his 2012 reply report, revealed that, for the top 100 communities in the GTA, consumers would lose information on approximately 46% of listings that they otherwise would be able to consider, "but for" the unavailability of the Disputed Data.

D. Cooperating broker commissions

[686] Turning to cooperating broker commissions, the Commissioner's submissions were largely focused on his buyer steering argument, which the Tribunal has concluded was not demonstrated on a balance of probabilities.

[687] However, the Commissioner also submitted that TREB's prohibition on the display of offers of commissions on a VOW and the exclusion of this information from its VOW Data Feed increases the costs of VOW operators and reduces their ability to distinguish themselves from their competitors. The Tribunal agrees.

[688] With respect to the impact of these restrictions on VOW operators' costs, Messrs. Gidamy and Hamidi testified that TheRedPin would like to use offer of commission data to calculate more tailored rebates. At the present time, TheRedPin advertises rebates based on an assumed 2.5% cooperating commission, because achieving greater precision would require manually entering the offers of commission for every active listing, which would be prohibitively time consuming.

[689] Regarding the ability of VOW operators to distinguish themselves, Messrs. McMullin, Silver, Hamidi and Pasalis each stated that being able to provide this information would enable them to increase transparency in the market. Mr. Silver added that this would improve the customer experience created on TheRedPin's website, while Mr. Pasalis observed that this would improve consumers' trust and confidence in real estate agents. Mr. Enchin testified that educated customers would find this information to be valuable.

[690] To the extent that increasing transparency is an important aspect of their Internet-based business models, the Tribunal accepts that being able to display this offer of commission would assist full-information VOWs and other Internet-based brokerages to better distinguish themselves from traditional brokerages, who appear to prefer to disclose this information in person (to keep the broker/agent "at the centre of the real estate transaction"), if at all.

E. Conclusion

[691] The Tribunal concludes that information with respect to sold data, "pending sold," the conditional sale status of a home, WEST listings and cooperating broker commissions is very valuable to those Internet-based brokerages who testified in this proceeding and to home purchasers and sellers. The Tribunal accepts the evidence that this information is very important, if not critical, in assisting Internet-based brokerages to distinguish themselves from incumbent traditional brokerages. The Tribunal also finds persuasive the evidence that home purchasers and sellers value being able to obtain this information prior to meeting with their broker/agent, or in any event, prior to finalizing the listing price of their homes or making an offer on a home.

[692] CREA submitted that the Commissioner's witnesses consistently testified that their websites, and not their VOWs, were their principal source of lead generation or means of attracting customers. Upon reviewing the evidence, the Tribunal is satisfied that those witnesses, who are all web-based brokerages, were simply stating that they rely entirely or primarily on their websites to generate leads or attract customers. Those same witnesses made it also very clear that having a full-information VOW is or would be an important tool in assisting them to better compete with other brokerages.

(v) Other considerations

[693] In addition to the foregoing, TREB noted that some brokerages in Nova Scotia have stopped using VOWs. TREB appeared to suggest that the Tribunal should infer from this that VOW-based operators are not as competitively significant as the Commissioner has suggested. However, the Tribunal is satisfied, based on the above-mentioned evidence, that the elimination of the VOW Restrictions likely would result in at least some full-information VOWs collectively having a substantial positive impact on the level of non-price competition in the Relevant Market. The fact that some other market participants might try, and then abandon, full-information VOWs does not alter this conclusion.

[694] TREB and CREA further maintained that the display of the Disputed Data does not rank highly among the various types of information that consumers seek. In support of this position, CREA referred to statistics in the NAR 2014 Profile, which reported that detailed information about recently sold properties ranked eighth among website features that home purchasers who responded to NAR's survey found to be "very useful." Those same home purchasers ranked "pending sales/contract status" sixth. The five highest ranked features were photographs, detailed information about properties for sale, interactive maps, virtual tours and neighbourhood information.

[695] TREB considers its position in this regard to have been corroborated by Mr. Hamidi, who testified that the straight provision of information to consumers (such as on a VOW) is at the lower end of importance, among the various services that consumers typically seek from a realtor. However, as discussed at paragraphs 595-597 and 675-677 above, the foregoing evidence was contradicted by Messrs. McMullin, Enchin, Nagel, Hamidi and Gidamy, as well as by Ms. Desai, all of whom testified that sold information is highly valued by home buyers and sellers.

[696] Moreover, activity data pertaining to visitors to ViewPoint's website indicates that, during the period December 20, 2014 to January 18, 2015 (30 days), approximately [CONFIDENTIAL] of the [CONFIDENTIAL] distinct users (by account ID) who accessed the site during that period reviewed the sales history of at least one sold property. Over a 90-day period, [CONFIDENTIAL] of users clicked on at least one sold property. Likewise, Mr. Nagel testified that Redfin's metrics indicate that pages showing sold listing information are among the most viewed pages on Redfin's website, ranking only behind the homepage, the map view and current listings. In addition, the NAR 2014 Profile reported that 75% of buyers considered detailed sold information to be somewhat or very useful on a website.

[697] In addition, TREB and CREA submitted that the Relevant Market is highly competitive and innovative, as reflected in part by the large number of very popular websites, the large number of active agents and brokers, the substantial number of agents and brokers who enter the GTA every year, and the high degree of technological innovation that is ongoing and widespread in the Relevant Market. The Tribunal does not dispute that the Relevant Market, as it currently exists, displays these various characteristics, to varying degrees.

[698] However, as noted elsewhere in these reasons, the focus of this proceeding is not on the absolute level of competition in the Relevant Market. It is upon whether, "but for" VOW Restrictions, the Relevant Market would likely be, or likely would have been, substantially more competitive. In the course of assessing this issue, the Tribunal has determined that information with respect to sold properties (including the selling price), "pending sold" properties, WEST listings and cooperating broker commissions is important, not only for full-information VOWs, but also for home sellers and purchasers.

[699] The Tribunal notes that wherever the display of sold information on brokers' websites is not prevented by a MLS system, it would appear to be displayed, not just by VOW operators, but by traditional brokers, such as Bosley and RE/MAX Hallmark. Ms. Prescott also testified that sold information is displayed on Century 21's website even if it is contrary to the office policy of her brokerage Century 21 Heritage. No persuasive evidence to the contrary was submitted.

[700] Indeed, in the United States, it would appear that the wide availability of sold information ultimately led realtor.com, which appears to be the official listing website of NAR, to make sold information available on its website. Although CREA took the position that there was insufficient evidence to prove the Commissioner's assertion that this development was caused by competitive forces, the fact remains that realtor.com commenced displaying sold information after that information was being widely displayed by competitor websites, such as Zillow. The fact of sold information being available on realtor.com was recognized by each of Dr. Vistnes, Dr. Church and Dr. Flyer.

[701] The Tribunal is also satisfied that information with respect to the sold prices of homes, together with derivative analytical and statistical information, is made available by agents and brokers wherever they are not prevented by their local MLS system from doing so, because potential home purchasers value that information. The Tribunal accepts the Commissioner's submission that, if it were otherwise, one would expect that fewer brokers would provide that information on their websites, when free to do so.

(vi) Conclusion on magnitude

[702] For the reasons set forth above, the Tribunal concludes that the VOW Restrictions have adversely affected non-price competition in the Relevant Market to a degree that is material. Indeed, the Tribunal concludes that the aggregate adverse impact of the VOW Restrictions on non-price competition has been substantial, having regard to the considerable negative effect on the range of brokerage services, the negative effect on the quality of service offerings, and the considerable adverse impact on innovation in the Relevant Market. In the absence of an order, this substantial adverse impact is likely to continue. The Tribunal has reached this conclusion despite the fact that, the quantitative evidence on commission rates does not indicate that net commissions for real estate brokerage services were, are or likely would be, materially higher than in the absence of the VOW Restrictions.

(b) Duration and scope

[703] Regarding the time dimension of the anti-competitive effects discussed above, the Tribunal concludes that those adverse effects have been manifested since the implementation of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules in the fall of 2011. In brief, they have been manifested for a period longer than the two-year benchmark referred to in Tervita. Moreover, those adverse effects are likely to continue to manifest themselves in the absence of an order that appropriately addresses the VOW Restrictions. Stated differently, the Tribunal has concluded that the duration of those adverse effects on non-price competition is substantial.

[704] With respect to the scope of the adverse effects within the Relevant Market, the Tribunal is satisfied that the anti-competitive effects of TREB's VOW Restrictions are impacting, and in the absence of an order will continue to impact, competition throughout the GTA, and therefore are impacting a substantial part of the Relevant Market. Indeed, the fact that the VOW Restrictions extend throughout the GTA was acknowledged by TREB's expert, Dr. Church. In addition to the fact that a VOW is available to anyone throughout the GTA, the evidence indicates that VOWs typically offer information in respect of listings throughout the area covered by the local MLS system, in this case the GTA, and that VOWs target customers throughout that same area. This is consistent with evidence from Ms. Prescott that realtors are increasingly competing for business across the GTA, as opposed to staying put within a neighbourhood or a part of the city. Further evidence that the VOW Restrictions are impacting a substantial part of the Relevant Market is that, as of May 8, 2015, there were approximately 322 brokerages that had signed up to receive TREB's VOW Data Feed.

(4) Conclusion

[705] For all the foregoing reasons, the Tribunal concludes, on a balance of probabilities, that the requirements of paragraph 79(1)(c) are met and that the VOW Restrictions have prevented, are preventing and, in the absence of an order, are likely to continue to prevent competition substantially in the supply of MLS-based residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA.

[706] In summary, those restrictions have resulted, are resulting and, in the absence of an Order, likely will continue to result, in a material, important and substantial incremental reduction in the degree of several non-price dimensions of competition in the Relevant Market, relative to the level of those dimensions of competition that likely would have prevailed, and that would likely prevail, "but for" the VOW Restrictions. These dimensions of competition include the range of brokerage services, the operating costs of VOWs, the quality of those services and the level of innovation. The qualitative evidence pertaining to the adverse effects of the VOW Restrictions on these dimensions of competition, as well as the barriers to entry and expansion, is sufficient to persuade the Tribunal that those restrictions have prevented, are preventing and, in the absence of an order, are likely to continue to prevent competition substantially in the Relevant Market.

[707] While the Tribunal acknowledges that demonstrating the anti-competitive effects caused by dynamic changes in the market raises more challenges and difficulty (Canada (Director of Investigation & Research) v Hillsdown Holdings (Canada) Ltd (1992), 41 CPR (3d) 289 (Comp. Trib.) at pp. 330-331), it is satisfied that, having considered the evidence as a whole, the Commissioner has met his burden under paragraph 79(1)(c) in this case.

[708] In addition, those anti-competitive effects have been occurring throughout the Relevant Market for a substantial period of time, namely, since the launch of TREB's VOW Policy and Rules in the fall of 2011. In the absence of an order from the Tribunal, those anti-competitive effects are likely to continue to manifest themselves throughout the GTA.

[709] The Tribunal observes that the scope of data covered by the VOW Restrictions may appear modest at first sight, given that they relate to Disputed Data forming only a small subset of all data available in TREB's MLS Database. However, to the extent that the VOW Restrictions insulate TREB's Members from increased competition from new entrants and from Members who would like to provide additional service offerings through their existing VOWs, or through new VOWs, those restrictions are maintaining what is in essence the collective market power that TREB's Members are able to exercise through their control of TREB and its rule-making functions. This collective market power is manifested in the form of materially less brokerage service offerings, innovation, quality and variety than would exist "but for" the VOW Restrictions.

[710] One of TREB's objections to the Commissioner's theory of market power maintenance is that the Guidelines state the following: "[v]igorous price and non-price rivalry among firms is an indicator of competitive markets. If the firms in the allegedly jointly dominant group are, in fact, competing vigorously with one another, they will not be able to jointly exercise market power" (Guidelines at p. 9).

[711] The Commissioner's Guidelines are not binding upon the Tribunal or the Courts, although they may assist them to determine the appropriate approach to adopt in general or in particular cases (Canada Pipe CT at para 66, aff'd, Canada Pipe FCA Cross Appeal at para 94; Tele-Direct at pp. 36-37). In any event, the Tribunal is satisfied that this statement was not intended to apply to a situation, such as here, where a trade association enacts rules and policies to shield its members from new forms of competition. This is so even if the members continue to compete "vigorously" on terms that they themselves have established through their trade association.

[712] In closing, the Tribunal notes that this case focuses on dynamic competition, including innovation, the most important type of competition. As observed by Dr. Vistnes, VOWs constitute an important new means by which brokers compete and an important way in which competition can provide consumers with better services. By shielding its Members from important forms of that disruptive competition, and thereby depriving consumers of the benefit of those enhanced services, TREB engaged in a discriminatory practice of anti-competitive acts that has prevented, and continues to prevent, competition substantially. In the absence of an Order from the Tribunal, that substantial prevention of competition is likely to continue.

[713] By preventing competition from determining how innovation should be introduced to the supply of residential real estate brokerage services in the GTA, TREB has substantially distorted the competitive market process and prevented innovative brokers such as Viewpoint, TheRedPin and Realosophy from considerably increasing the range of brokerage services, increasing the quality of existing services, and considerably increasing the degree of innovation in the Relevant Market.

[714] Although "organized real estate" recognizes that consumers are demanding "new ways of doing business, more choices, more flexibility, transparency, communication and more information quicker than ever before," and want to have greater control over the process of buying and selling homes, TREB has decided to limit what information can be disclosed by innovative brokerages who threaten the majority of its Members (2012 Vistnes Expert Report, at para 252, quoting "Exploring Possible Futures for Organized Real Estate in Canada: Insights from Cross-Canada Dialogues," CREA, 2011, at pp. 13-14).

[715] Markets are most efficient, and consumers best served, when competing firms are free to decide how to compete and whether to try to better compete by offering a new product or service. In the absence of legitimate regulatory concerns, the market and consumers, rather than competitors or their trade associations, are the best judge of whether new products or services are valued by consumers and whether such products should be offered in the market.

VIII. TREB's Copyright

[716] The fifth issue to be decided in his proceeding relates to TREB's copyright.

[717] TREB claims that it owns copyright in the TREB MLS Database and therefore holds valid intellectual property rights over the overall arrangement of the information in that database. Relying on subsection 79(5) of the Act, TREB submits that its VOW Policy and Rules are a mere exercise of that copyright, such that this is a complete defence to an application by the Commissioner alleging an abuse of dominance, even if the impugned practice is or is assumed to be exclusionary in effect. In other words, TREB contends that its VOW Restrictions do not constitute a practice of anti-competitive acts under section 79 because those restrictions are merely the exercise of its copyright in its MLS system, as contemplated by subsection 79(5). In any event, TREB maintains that the Tribunal does not have jurisdiction to order TREB to grant a compulsory licence of its intellectual property in this proceeding.

[718] The Tribunal notes that TREB does not claim copyright in respect of the individual components of the MLS Database, including the Disputed Data.

[719] Subsection 79(5) of the Act states:

| For the purposes of this section, an act engaged in pursuant only to the exercise of any right or enjoyment of any interest derived under the Copyright Act, Industrial Design Act, Integrated Circuit Topography Act, Patent Act, Trade-marks Act or any other Act of Parliament pertaining to intellectual or industrial property is not an anti-competitive act. | Pour l'application du présent article, un agissement résultant du seul fait de l'exercice de quelque droit ou de la jouissance de quelque intérêt découlant de la Loi sur les brevets, de la Loi sur les dessins industriels, de la Loi sur le droit d'auteur, de la Loi sur les marques de commerce, de la Loi sur les topographies de circuits intégrés ou de toute autre loi fédérale relative à la propriété intellectuelle ou industrielle ne constitue pas un agissement anti-concurrentiel. |

[720] The Commissioner responds that TREB's argument must fail for two reasons. First, TREB has not led sufficient evidence to establish copyright in the MLS Database. Second, even if the MLS Database is protected by copyright, TREB's conduct amounts to more than the "mere exercise" of its intellectual property rights under subsection 79(5).

[721] For the reasons detailed below, the Tribunal agrees with the Commissioner. Based on the evidence on the record, the Tribunal is not persuaded, on a balance of probabilities, that TREB has established the existence of copyright in the MLS Database, including the Disputed Data. In any event, even assuming that such copyright exists, two of the three principal VOW Restrictions constitute more than the mere exercise of TREB's intellectual property rights, namely, the prohibitions on (i) the use of the information included in the VOW Data Feed for any purpose other than display on a website, and (ii) the display on a VOW of the information contained in the Disputed Data, which TREB makes available to its Members in other ways.

A. The Copyright Act

[722] Copyright is a creature of statute. In Canada, the rights and remedies in that respect are set forth in the Copyright Act, which constitutes a comprehensive regime (Compo Co v Blue Crest Music Inc, [1980] 1 SCR 357 at pp. 372-373). "Copyright" refers to the bundle of rights conferred by the Copyright Act on the author of a work and owner of the copyright in the work. It provides protection for literary, artistic, dramatic or musical works and other subject-matter including performer's performances, sound recordings and communication signals. The owner of copyright has the sole right to produce or reproduce a work (or a substantial part of it) in any form, and has the sole right to exhibit the work in public (section 3). Furthermore, pursuant to subsection 13(4) of the Copyright Act, the owner of copyright has the right to assign or licence the copyrighted work. However, such assignment must be in writing to be valid. If a work is unpublished, copyright includes the right to publish the work or any substantial part of it.

[723] Copyright subsists in all original literary, dramatic, musical and artistic works, including paintings, drawings, maps, photographs, designs, musical compositions, sculptures and plans, provided the conditions set out in the Copyright Act have been met, namely: 1) the work must be original, in that it involves some intellectual effort or skill; and 2) the author was at the date of the making of the work a citizen of, or a person ordinarily resident in, Canada or some other countries to which rights under the Copyright Act extends.

[724] Under the Copyright Act, the term "every original literary, dramatic, musical and artistic work" is defined in section 2 to include "compilations." A compilation is defined in section 2 to mean "(a) a work resulting from the selection or arrangement of literary, dramatic, musical or artistic works or of parts thereof, or (b) a work resulting from the selection or arrangement of data."

B. The existence of copyright in the MLS Database

(1) TREB's submissions

[725] TREB submits that, as the author of the TREB MLS system, it owns the copyright in the TREB MLS Database. According to TREB, its copyright claim is based on its arrangement of real estate data. TREB further specifies that its copyright claim is in the MLS Database, not the MLS system itself.

[726] In the case of a compilation, the arranger may not have copyright in the individual components, but may have copyright in the overall arrangement of the components, if there is sufficient originality in that arrangement. TREB thus argues that it is this overall arrangement that must be considered, not the individual fragments that make up the compilation (CCH Canadian Ltd v Law Society of Upper Canada, 2004 SCC 13 ("CCH") at para 33; Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc v American Business Information, Inc, [1998] 2 FC 22 (CA) ("Tele-Direct ABI") at para 5).

[727] For a work to be sufficiently "original" to qualify for copyright protection, the work must have been the subject of at least a minimum degree of skill, judgment and labour in its overall selection or arrangement (CCH at para 16; Tele-Direct ABI at para 28). According to TREB, this threshold is an "incredibly low bar" to meet in respect of a compilation. In that regard, TREB refers to ITAL-Press Ltd v Sicoli, [1999] FCJ No 837 (TD) at para 110, where the Federal Court found that there was copyright in telephone listings in Italian-Canadian phone books, consisting of the names of people who appeared by their names to be of Italian origin. Mr. Justice Gibson found there to be an element of skill and judgment as well as labour, although not of the highest order, in the selection of Canadian residents who can reasonably be thought to be of Italian origin.

[728] TREB also relies on a series of U.S. decisions where courts have held that MLS operators own the copyright in their MLS databases, because the MLS database compilations in question met the test for originality in light of the efforts made by the MLS operator to oversee and control the quality and accuracy of the content of the database (Metropolitan Regional Information Systems Inc v American Home Realty Network Inc, 2012 US Dist LEXIS 121352 at pp. 22-23 (of Lexis) ("Metropolitan"); Metropolitan Regional Information Systems Inc v American Home Realty Network Inc, 2012 US Dist LEXIS 162111 at pp. 7-8 (of Lexis); Metropolitan Regional Information Systems Inc v American Home Realty Network Inc, 2013 US App LEXIS 14445 at pp. 10-11 (of Lexis); Montgomery County Association of Realtors Inc v Realty Photo Master Corporation, 1995 US Dist LEXIS 2111 at p. 7 (of Lexis)). TREB notes in particular that, in view of the Metropolitan decision, its MLS database compilation cannot be characterized as the mere entry of data on the computer. In Metropolitan, the argument to the effect that the MLS system is on "automatic pilot" was considered and rejected, and the U.S. Court instead found that the overall system, its structure and its rules ought to be considered in deciding the issue of copyright.

[729] TREB further asserts that in TREB OSCJ at paragraphs 100-101 and TREB OCA at paragraph 21, both the Ontario Superior Court of Justice and the Court of Appeal for Ontario alluded to TREB's copyright in the MLS Database, with the Court of Appeal describing TREB as having a "proprietary ownership interest" in the database.

[730] TREB also submits that the record in this proceeding is replete with evidence as to TREB's skill, judgment, and labour with respect to the MLS Database. TREB refers in particular to the following:

a. The use of TREB's MLS Database is governed by a comprehensive set of rules that are enacted and administered by TREB to ensure the accuracy and quality of the information and the orderly operation of the database, and to cover updating and uploading of data;

b. TREB provides its Members with a "MLS Data Information Form" to be used as part of the data entry process, to ensure that certain characteristics of properties are entered into the database for any listing, including some mandatory fields identified by TREB and which may differ from other MLS systems;

c. TREB ensures the accuracy of the listings in the MLS Database by way of proprietary software and encourages its Members to report any inaccuracies found in the listings;

d. TREB's AUA provides that the MLS Database is proprietary to TREB and that TREB's Members grant TREB a content licence with respect to the listings they upload into the database. Under the AUA, the user agrees to grant TREB a perpetual, worldwide, royalty-free, non-exclusive, sub-licensable and transferable right and license including all related intellectual property rights; and

e. TREB's software licence agreement with Stratus (the owner of the software that runs TREB's MLS Database) (the "Stratus Licence Agreement") provides that TREB owns the intellectual property associated with the data inputted into the MLS system.

(2) Analysis

[731] The Tribunal is not persuaded that TREB owns copyright in the MLS Database, including the Disputed Data. In brief, the Tribunal has concluded that TREB has not led sufficient evidence to establish the level of skill, judgment and labour required for the MLS Database to benefit from copyright protection.

(a) General principles

[732] Copyright applies to a database only if the "selection or arrangement of data" is original. For a work (including a compilation of data) to be "original," it needs to be an intellectual creation (Tele-Direct ABI at paras 8-18). That is to say, the work must be the result of an exercise of "skill" and "judgment" (CCH at para 16). While the Tribunal acknowledges that the threshold is low, that threshold nonetheless does exist (CCH at para 16; Tele-Direct ABI at para 28). As stated by the Commissioner, in compilation situations, drawing a line between what signifies a minimal degree of skill, judgment and labour and what indicates an absence of creative element is not an easy task (Édutile Inc v Automobile Protection Assn, [2004] FC 195, 6 CPR (4th) 211 at para 13). But sufficient evidence must be adduced to convince the Tribunal, on a balance of probabilities, that such a determination can be made. This is especially the case here, since TREB does not benefit from the presumptions found at section 34.1 of the Copyright Act, which apply only to civil proceedings in which the defendant puts in issue either the existence of the copyright or the title of the plaintiff to it.

[733] Simply capturing and compiling data supplied by real estate agents into the MLS Database does not suffice to produce a copyrighted work. To attract copyright protection, a work must add some non-trivial intellectual substance to the raw data. The test for originality in Canadian copyright law was extensively reviewed by the Supreme Court of Canada in CCH, where the Court found that skill and judgment are essential to a finding of originality (at para 16):

> For a work to be "original" within the meaning of the Copyright Act, it must be more than a mere copy of another work. At the same time, it need not be creative, in the sense of being novel or unique. What is required to attract copyright protection in the expression of an idea is an exercise of skill and judgment. By skill, I mean the use of one's knowledge, developed aptitude or practised ability in producing the work. By judgment, I mean the use of one's capacity for discernment or ability to form an opinion or evaluation by comparing different possible options in producing the work. This exercise of skill and judgment will necessarily involve intellectual effort. The exercise of skill and judgment required to produce the work must not be so trivial that it could be characterized as a purely mechanical exercise.

[734] The assessment of such skill, judgment and labour is highly fact-specific and depends on the evidence provided. But there must be a meaningful degree of intellectual effort by the author in the work that is worthy of protection and reward (Tele-Direct ABI at para 29). The use of the word "auteur" in French conveys a sense of inventive labour, "creativity and ingenuity." A particular amount of labour is not in itself a determinative of originality (Tele-Direct ABI at para 29).

[735] In Tele-Direct ABI, the Federal Court of Appeal upheld the Federal Court's finding that Tele-Direct arranged its information, the vast majority of which was not subject to copyright, according to accepted, commonplace standards of selection in the industry. In doing so, it exercised only a minimal degree of skill, judgment and labour in its overall YellowPages arrangement, which was found to be insufficient to support a claim of originality in the compilation so as to warrant copyright protection (Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc v American Business Information, Inc, (1996) 74 CPR (3d) 72 (FC) at paras 52-54). The Court thus rejected Tele-Direct's assertion that the YellowPages directories were protected by copyright.

(b) The evidence

[736] The Tribunal agrees with the Commissioner that, like the YellowPages in Tele-Direct ABI, TREB's MLS Database is little more than information (the vast majority of which is not subject to copyright) arranged according to accepted, commonplace standards of selection in the real estate industry. Copyright cannot exist in these circumstances, neither in the manner in which TREB has compiled the MLS Database nor in the manner of presenting or organizing the data on its website or on VOWs. The Tribunal is not persuaded that identifying certain mandatory fields or deciding what confidential information may be displayed on a VOW is sufficient to constitute the required degree of exercise of skill and judgment.

[737] The Tribunal recognizes that TREB takes the real estate listings data provided by its Members and presents the information on its intranet in a prescribed fashion. However, while TREB claims that the MLS Database is a compilation of data resulting from significant labour, as well as skill and judgment, the evidence suggests otherwise. More specifically:

a. None of TREB's witnesses testified about how TREB arranges the factual information that it receives from its Members, the effort that it takes, or the skill or judgment involved in determining what particular arrangement is appropriate;

b. Mr. Richardson simply testified that TREB contracts with a third-party to verify certain mandatory fields for errors. However, making sure that data is correct is not equivalent to exercising skill or judgment in its arrangement;

c. Mr. Richardson also testified on the functionality of TREB's intranet system and explained in his witness statement how to distinguish that system from the MLS Database. However, Mr. Richardson did not demonstrate to the Tribunal how TREB's MLS Database was constructed and works, but he rather discussed the software leased from Stratus and how it permits TREB’s Members to interact with the MLS Database and retrieve information from it;

d. TREB's contracts with third parties refer to its copyright, but that does not amount to proving the degree of skill, judgment or labour needed to show originality and to satisfy the copyright requirements;

e. The fact that third parties have acknowledged TREB's asserted copyright or proprietary work is not sufficient to demonstrate the existence of such copyright. For example, the recognition in the Stratus Licence Agreement that TREB owns the intellectual property associated with the data inputted into the MLS system, or that such information is proprietary, does not establish that the MLS Database is in fact subject to copyright;

f. Mr. Richardson testified that once Members upload information to TREB's MLS system by completing the Data Information Form, the listing appears on TREB's intranet system almost instantaneously. On the particular facts of this case, this suggests that there is little skill, judgment, labour or originality involved in arranging the information in the MLS Database;

g. Real estate boards across Canada operate MLS databases containing factual information on real estate listings. Far from being original, TREB also collects “home facts” in the same way that boards across Canada do, save for the mandatory fields which may vary between MLS systems. There is not sufficient evidence that TREB's MLS Database is original in comparison to those of other boards; and

h. The fact that TREB's MLS Database may be governed by a comprehensive set of rules enacted and administered by TREB to ensure the accuracy and quality of the information and the orderly operation of the database is not sufficient to confer copyright protection on what is subsequently displayed in the database. Ensuring the accuracy of the listings in the MLS Database and encouraging the Members to report any inaccuracies found in the listings does not amount to evidence reflecting the originality of the work.

[738] The process of inputting listings to the MLS system involves the listing broker directly inputting the listing information into the database through a fill-in-the-blank Data Information Form. The broker completes the form in consultation with the seller of the property, if the seller consents to having that property uploaded to TREB's MLS Database. The form has certain fields that are mandatory, such as the street name and number, the list price, and the number of rooms. The form also has other fields that are optional, such as the approximate age of the building, the approximate square footage, and open house dates. In addition, the form has a field for "remarks for brokerages," often containing information that is private or sensitive in nature, such as when the owner will be absent from the property. As stated by Mr. Richardson, the TREB MLS system "is set up to allow the listing broker, or office designate, to directly input the listing information into the database, as opposed to requiring TREB to centrally input all new listings into the database" (2012 Richardson Statement, at para 41).

[739] Merely aligning factual data in such a non-original way is not sufficient to attract copyright protection (Distrimedic Inc v Dispill Inc, 2013 FC 1043 at para 323). Further, where the information is arranged according to industry standards, the amount of skill, labour and judgment exercised is minimal and will not meet the originality threshold (Denturist Group of Ontario v Denturist Assn of Canada, 2014 FC 989 at para 65). Similarly, when an idea can only be expressed in a limited number of ways, the expression will not be protected (Red Label Vacations Inc v 411 Travel Buys Ltd, 2015 FC 18 at para 98). The Supreme Court of Canada has observed that, when determining what embodies the originality of a collective work (that is capable of attracting copyright), it is "whether a substantial part of a protected work has been reproduced, […] not the quantity which was reproduced that matters as much as the quality and nature of what was reproduced" (Robertson v Thomson Corp, 2006 SCC 43 at para 38).

(3) Conclusion

[740] Based on the foregoing, the Tribunal finds that, in essence, TREB's specific compilation of data from real estate listings amounts to a mechanical exercise that does not attract copyright protection. No evidence was adduced to demonstrate that the actual compilation of the database is more than a matter of simply assembling raw facts and routine elements from the listings in a mechanical fashion and posting them to the MLS system, without adding something original or creating elements unique to TREB's MLS system.

[741] Furthermore, the Stratus Licence Agreement suggests that, through that agreement, TREB is not protecting the specific form of selection or arrangement employed on its website, but the MLS data itself.

[742] The Tribunal acknowledges that some U.S. decisions, including Metropolitan, have recognized that, in light of the efforts made by the MLS operator in overseeing and controlling the quality and accuracy of the content of the database, MLS operators in the United States have been found to own the copyright in their respective MLS databases. These decisions were based on the evidence presented in these various cases. However, the Tribunal finds that the evidence provided in this proceeding does not allow it to conclude, on a balance of probabilities, that clear, convincing and cogent evidence has been provided to demonstrate the necessary degree of skill, judgment and labour required to support TREB's claim of copyright under Canadian law. In brief, TREB has not demonstrated the degree of intellectual effort required in this regard.

[743] TREB further contends that the Commissioner's submissions on the issue of copyright are completely inconsistent with his submissions on the issue of market power. According to TREB, the Commissioner is saying, on the one hand, that TREB's MLS Rules and Policy are sufficiently robust, comprehensive, and pervasive to grant them control over the market for residential real estate services in the GTA, while on the other hand the Commissioner takes the position that the MLS Database does not demonstrate sufficient skill and judgment to grant TREB copyright protection of that database. The Tribunal considers that these are two distinct issues and does not agree that this reflects an inconsistency or a contradiction.

[744] TREB rightly points out that the primary concerns expressed by the initial panel with the copyright argument revolved around the fact that the licence agreement between TREB and Stratus was not in the evidence at the time. The Tribunal acknowledges that TREB has since filed the most recently amended version of the licence agreement with Stratus. However, this Stratus Licence Agreement does not provide evidence of TREB's skill, judgment, and labour.

[745] Finally, the Tribunal observes that TREB's copyright argument is made in respect to the MLS Database as a whole, whereas TREB's practice of anti-competitive acts relates primarily to the VOW Restrictions, which concern only a small subset of the MLS Database. There is no evidence that the Disputed Data involve any degree of skill, judgment and labour on the part of TREB, and that a copyright claim could be made by TREB on this subset of the MLS Database.

C. Mere exercise of intellectual property rights

[746] TREB also contends that the provisions contained in TREB's VOW Policy and Rules are a mere exercise of its intellectual property rights. Given the Tribunal's conclusion on the absence of copyright, this issue does not need to be addressed. However, for completeness, the it will be briefly discussed below.

[747] Subsection 79(5) of the Act essentially states that the mere exercise of rights derived under the Copyright Act is not an anti-competitive act. Relying on the Tele-Direct decision of the Tribunal at paragraphs 60-70, TREB submits that something more than the mere exercise of statutory rights, even if such exercise is exclusionary in effect, must be present before there can be a finding of misuse of intellectual property. In Tele-Direct, the Tribunal found that inherent in the very nature of the right to license a trade-mark is the right for the owner of the trade-mark to determine whether or not, and to whom, to grant a licence. Selectivity in licensing is fundamental to the rationale behind protecting trade-marks, and this principle was applied to copyright by the Tribunal in Director of Investigation and Research v Warner Music Canada Ltd, [1997] CCTD No 53 (Comp. Trib.) ("Warner Music") at paragraph 32.

[748] In Warner Music, the Commissioner (then known as the Director) brought an application against Warner Music Canada Ltd. and its affiliates ("Warner") alleging that their refusal to grant copyright licences to BMG Canada to make sound recordings from their master recordings was an impermissible refusal to deal contrary to section 75 of the Act. Warner contracted with artists to make master recordings and had an exclusive copyright over these master recordings in Canada. In that decision, the Tribunal recognized that Parliament grants to copyright holders the right to exclude others from the use of the copyrighted work, and that this aspect is fundamental to copyright. The Tribunal found that it would be inconsistent to hold that Warner was engaging in anti-competitive practices by simply exercising a right that had been specifically granted by Parliament. Moreover, given the exclusive nature of the copyright enjoyed by Warner, it could not be considered a "product" that was in "ample supply," within the meaning of section 75.

[749] Relying on Warner Music, TREB further contends that its motivation for the decision to refuse to licence its intellectual property is irrelevant for the application of subsection 79(5). TREB submits that its decision not to licence the Disputed Data as part of the VOW Data Feed is squarely within the reasoning of the Tribunal in Tele-Direct.

[750] According to TREB, the licensing process includes choosing the mode of delivery of intellectual property rights, because intellectual property can be licensed to be used in different ways for different purposes. In support of that argument, TREB refers to Eli Lilly and Co v Apotex Inc, 2005 FCA 361 ("Eli Lilly"), where Eli Lilly Canada Inc. ("Lilly") received the assignment of a patent from another company which, in combination with its own related patents, gave Lilly a monopoly in the antibiotic cefaclor. In that case, it was argued that patent assignments could lessen or prevent competition unduly within the meaning of section 45 of the Act, as it then was. The "something more" was found to be the increased power of Lilly in the market for bulk cefaclor, "as a result of [the addition of the assigned patents to] its existing ownership of the patents for the other known, commercially-viable processes for manufacturing the medicine" (Eli Lilly at para 18). In the current case, TREB argues that there is no similar "something more," as the conduct at issue here is the mere denial of access to intellectual property through a refusal to licence.

[751] TREB also maintains that the argument that TREB's conduct goes beyond the mere exercise of its intellectual property rights because its conduct creates, enhances, or maintains market power, if accepted, would render meaningless the defence in subsection 79(5) of the Act, because by definition the only conduct covered by subsection 79(1) is conduct that creates, enhances, or maintains market power. For the reasons set forth above, including at paragraphs 500 and 709, the Tribunal is satisfied that, by insulating its Members from important forms of increased non-price competition, TREB's VOW Restrictions have maintained, and are continuing to maintain, a form of market power that TREB and its Members collectively enjoy. Among other things, that market power is manifested in TREB's control of its MLS system and its power to prevent innovative rivals from entering into, or expanding within, the Relevant Market.

[752] TREB also relies on the Bureau's Intellectual Property Enforcement Guidelines (September, 2000) ("IPEGs"), where the Bureau says at p. 7: "The unilateral exercise of the IP right to exclude does not violate the general provisions of the Competition Act no matter to what degree competition is affected. To hold otherwise could effectively nullify IP rights, […] and be inconsistent with the Bureau's underlying view that IP and competition law are generally complementary."

[753] The Commissioner responds that even if the MLS Database or the Disputed Data was protected by copyright, TREB's conduct amounts to more than the "mere exercise" of its intellectual property rights. Subsection 79(5) of the Act does not state that "the exercise of those rights is not an anti-competitive act", nor does it exclude from the definition of anti-competitive act "the lawful exercise of intellectual property rights." The Commissioner maintains that only an act that is the mere exercise of a right, and nothing else, may fall within the statutory exception under subsection 79(5). He claims that TREB's conduct is more than a mere exercise of a copyright. He states that this is particularly so with respect to TREB's prohibitions on (i) the use of the information included in the VOW Data Feed for any purpose other than display on a website, and (ii) the display on a VOW of the information contained in the Disputed Data, which TREB makes available to its Members in other ways.

[754] The Tribunal agrees with the Commissioner. Subsection 79(5) attempts to balance the extraordinary statutory monopoly rights conferred by intellectual property with the public interest in competition. To strike the right balance, the Tribunal and Federal Court of Appeal have interpreted that provision narrowly. In Tele-Direct at page 32, the Tribunal distinguished a refusal to licence. However, where a respondent attaches anti-competitive conditions to the use of its intellectual property, subsection 79(5) will not immunize it from scrutiny. In this case, the two prohibitions mentioned at the end of the immediately preceding paragraph above constitute anti-competitive conditions that TREB has attached to the use of intellectual property.

[755] TREB's VOW Restrictions do not simply restrict its Members' access to the Disputed Data. They instead control how TREB's Members display certain information sourced from the MLS Database, and how they use that information to deliver services to their customers. At the same time, TREB effectively permits or condones the dissemination of this information through more traditional means.

[756] Through its VOW Restrictions, TREB has used its control over the MLS Database to shield some of its Members from competition from innovators who would like to enter into, or expand within, the Relevant Market. Just as the respondent in Eli Lilly used its statutory rights to increase its market power beyond whatever initial power it may have enjoyed under its original patent rights, TREB is using its control over the MLS Database to insulate from innovative forces those of its Members who prefer to continue doing business in the traditional manner. This goes beyond a "mere exercise" of any intellectual property rights that TREB may have in the MLS Database.

[757] Put differently, the VOW Restrictions confer on TREB and its above-mentioned Members advantages beyond those derived from the Copyright Act.

[758] Based on all of the foregoing, the Tribunal concludes that, even if it were to assume that TREB owns a valid copyright on the MLS Database or on the Disputed Data, the VOW Restrictions are more than a mere exercise of its intellectual property rights. This is particularly the case with respect to the prohibitions on (i) the use of the information included in the VOW Data Feed for any purpose other than display on a website, and (ii) the display on a VOW of the information contained in the Disputed Data, which TREB makes available to its Members in other ways.

D. *Jurisdiction

[759] Finally, TREB claims that the Tribunal does not have the jurisdiction to order TREB to grant a compulsory licence with respect to its intellectual property. In that respect, TREB distinguishes between sections 32 and 79 of the Act. TREB contends that, in the absence of clear language in section 79, it would be wrong to conclude that the Tribunal has been given the power to order a respondent to grant what are, in effect, compulsory licences, when, pursuant to section 32, the Federal Court can make such an order only after the applicant meets a competition impact test and only after defences based on international treaty rights are considered (Warner Music at paras 26-28).

[760] The Tribunal considers that this case does not involve the imposition of a compulsory licence, as conventionally understood. TREB already makes each of the components of the Disputed Data available to its Members in other ways. More importantly, the VOW Restrictions go far beyond a refusal to include the Disputed Data in the VOW Data Feed, and include prohibitions on (i) the use of the information included in the VOW Data Feed for any purpose other than display on a website, and (ii) the display on a VOW of the information contained in the Disputed Data, which TREB makes available to its Members in other ways.

[761] In any event, it is settled law that the Tribunal has the jurisdiction to order the supply of a proprietary product.

[762] In brief, outside the narrow context that was at issue in Warner Music, the Tribunal has not hesitated to exercise its jurisdiction to issue an order in respect of intellectual property.

[763] For example, in NutraSweet, the Tribunal found a number of the respondent's practices to have been anti-competitive, including trade-mark allowances offered by NutraSweet for displaying its swirl logo, exclusive supply and use clauses, cooperative marketing allowances, meet-or-release clauses and most favoured-nation-clauses. The Tribunal held that the trade-mark allowances and advertising discounts created an "all-or-nothing" choice for customers and were "essentially inducements to exclusivity" (NutraSweet at pp. 41-43). It therefore issued a broad remedial order prohibiting NutraSweet from enforcing, or entering into, contractual terms relating to the exclusivity of supply or use of financial inducements for trade-mark display or other allowances, meet-or-release clauses and most-favoured-nation clauses.

[764] Likewise, in Nielsen, the respondent was found to have engaged in anti-competitive practices with respect to its historical scanner data. In the result, it was ordered, among other things, to provide that data to Information Resources Inc. ("IRI") upon request, provided that IRI was willing to pay for 50% of the reasonable, documented expenses associated with gathering that data and 100% of the reasonable cost of making a copy and providing it to IRI (Nielsen at p. 282).

[765] Similarly, in Southam, a merger case, the remedial order issued by the Tribunal required the divestiture, at Southam's option, of either the North Shore News or the Real Estate Weekly newspapers, including the copyright in the newspapers and the trade-marks associated with those newspaper businesses.

[766] In addition, in Director of Investigation and Research v Bank of Montreal. (1996), 68 CPR (3d) 527 (Comp. Trib.) ("Bank of Montreal"), a consent order was issued under the abuse of dominance provisions of the Act requiring the charter members of an electronic banking network to "provide a commercially reasonable trade mark license without charge upon request to any member participating in the shared services that use the trade marks" (Bank of Montreal (Consent Order)).

[767] Finally, in Director of Investigation and Research v AGT Directory Limited, [1994] CCTD No 24 (Comp. Trib.), another consent order case under the abuse of dominance provisions, the respondents were prohibited from refusing to license the "Yellow Pages" trade-marks to certain companies for use in the sale of advertising in telephone directories, provided these companies entered into and maintained commercially reasonable standard form trade-mark licensing agreements.

[768] The Tribunal is satisfied that the expressio unius principle of statutory interpretation does not preclude it from exercising jurisdiction in respect of intellectual property rights, simply by virtue of the fact that section 32 of the Act sets forth specific provisions with respect to intellectual property. Among other things, this is because the language of section 32 is explicitly confined to the narrow situation of "where use has been made of the exclusive rights and privileges conferred by" the types of intellectual property protection mentioned therein (emphasis added). Situations that go beyond the use of the exclusive privileges conferred by one or more statutes creating intellectual property fall to be addressed by other provisions of the Act. Those include section 79 of the Act. In brief, where a dominant firm engages in a practice of anti-competitive acts that goes beyond the mere exercise of such rights and privileges, for example by imposing anti-competitive restrictions that materially increase or maintain any market power that would otherwise exist (having regard to intellectual property rights) "but for" those restrictions, the Tribunal has the jurisdiction to issue a remedial order to address that practice. The Tribunal is satisfied that there is nothing in the scheme of the Act to suggest otherwise. Indeed, if this were the case, firms would be free to extend any market power that may be conferred by a statute conferring rights over intellectual property beyond that which is contemplated by the statute. In the absence of clear language curtailing the Tribunal's broad remedial jurisdiction to address abuses of dominant position, the Tribunal does not accept the suggestion that this is what Parliament intended.

IX. Remedy

[769] The Commissioner, in his final written submissions of 2015, seeks an Order that would:

a. Prohibit TREB from enforcing certain terms of its VOW Policy and Rules and its VOW Data Feed Agreement, related to the display and use of the MLS data;

b. Require TREB to include, in its VOW Data Feed, all unavailable listings in the MLS Database (including the data fields for sold listings, "pending sold" listings and WEST listings), and the data fields for offers of commission for available (current) listings, all for use by TREB's Members and to provide services over the Internet, including display of such listings on a VOW; and

c. Require TREB to amend certain of its rules and contract terms, to maintain and support its data feed and not to reverse course or exercise its rule-making powers to discriminate against its Members that use the data feed.

[770] At the Redetermination Hearing, counsel for the Commissioner re-emphasized its overarching concern that there should be no discrimination between the modes in which the information is delivered by TREB to its Members, and that what the Commissioner is seeking is a level playing field. He thus clarified that he is seeking the inclusion in the VOW Data Feed of all listing information on a non-discriminatory basis, and not just the Disputed Data. He also confirmed that he is not seeking any relief beyond the GTA. In other words, the Commissioner is not requesting an order against any other real estate board in the country.

[771] TREB asserts that the Tribunal should exercise care in crafting a remedy to ensure that the personal information of individuals is not widely disclosed on the Internet without their informed consent. It seeks the opportunity to make further submissions on the appropriate remedy.

[772] The Tribunal agrees that further submissions on the remedy are necessary in the present circumstances.

[773] As a result, the Tribunal will, shortly following the issuance of these reasons, issue a Direction providing a schedule for the filing of written representations by the parties and a date for a hearing on the remedy to be issued.

[774] That being said, the Tribunal nonetheless makes the following remarks regarding the remedy to be imposed further to its conclusions.

[775] CREA, in accordance with the terms of the Tribunal order granting it leave to intervene in these proceedings, has made submissions on the impact of the Commissioner's proposed remedies on CREA and its members, including its trade-marks (Commissioner of Competition v Toronto Real Estate Board, 2011 Comp. Trib. 22 ("CREA Intervention Order") at para 40). CREA asserts that it has a significant concern about the negative effect of the remedy sought by the Commissioner on CREA's trade-marks and also asserts that the accessibility of the Disputed Data on a VOW may serve to diminish the credibility of a MLS system in the eyes of the consumer as well as the credibility of realtors. CREA further submits that the Tribunal's remedy should be expressly limited to the GTA.

[776] More specifically, CREA states that consumers are concerned about their property information being disclosed on a public website and adds that realtors who placed such information on the MLS system and who provide services using that system may negatively affect the credibility of CREA's trade-marks. However, as discussed at paragraphs 382-387 of these reasons, the evidence that consumers may be concerned about the display of the Disputed Data on VOWs was very limited and not persuasive. In any event, the Tribunal has not been persuaded that existing consents in the standard Listing Agreement that TREB recommends its Members to execute with their clients do not extend to the display of historical information such as the sold price of their home and WEST listings information, after their homes have been sold.

[777] CREA also submits that the Tribunal should assess both the likely benefits and the likely harm to consumers of the remedy that the Commissioner has requested. The Tribunal agrees with this approach. However, the Tribunal finds that CREA did not identify any significant harm, beyond the privacy-based concerns addressed in these reasons.

[778] The Tribunal further notes that VOWs are simply one part of one type of Internet-based data-sharing vehicles, being broker operated websites. The Tribunal agrees with CREA that any remedy resulting from this proceeding should not have the harmful effect of endorsing one type of innovative tool over another. The remedy to be imposed in this case will therefore not endorse one type of innovative tool over any other. It will simply address the restrictions applicable to VOWs, and participants in the Relevant Market will remain free to compete by offering whatever innovative services they deem appropriate, without any bias in favour or against full-information VOWs.

[779] TREB submits that conditional solds data should not be included in the VOW Data Feed because this would cause prejudice to home sellers who are parties to such "pending sold" transactions, based on the fact that it would disclose their reservation price to potential home purchasers. The Tribunal agrees that this is a very real and legitimate concern and will need to be addressed in calibrating the remedy.

[780] The Tribunal is also mindful of the fact that its orders pursuant to subsections 79(1) and 79(2) must only go as far as it considers necessary in order to restore competition in the relevant markets (Laidlaw at p. 351). The Tribunal will therefore look for the least intrusive remedy and determine what will be necessary to restore competition on the basis of the evidence put before it as to how the Relevant Market operates and the effects the VOW Restrictions have had and are having.

[781] Finally, the Tribunal must also maintain the flexibility to modify the remedies proposed to it in order to achieve an order that it believes will be effective (Nielsen at p. 285).

X. Costs

[782] At the end of the Redetermination Hearing, the Tribunal encouraged the parties to reach an agreement as to the quantum of costs without knowing the outcome of the case. The Tribunal explained that if no agreement could be reached, the parties could make submissions in due course on costs. The Tribunal observes that it is increasingly favouring this approach. This is because asking the parties to agree on the issue of costs before they know the outcome is more likely to result in a reasonable and expeditious resolution of the question of costs. The Tribunal further notes that it will typically favor lump sum awards of costs over formal taxation of bills of costs.

[783] By way of letter January 28, 2016, counsel for the Commissioner and for TREB notified the Tribunal that they had reached an agreement with respect to Tariff B legal costs and a partial agreement with respect to disbursements. According to the agreement, if the Tribunal awards costs payable by TREB to the Commissioner, TREB shall pay to the Commissioner $215,000 in respect of Tariff B legal costs, and $113,000 in respect of disbursements other than those relating to expert witnesses. The Commissioner and TREB further agreed to consult with each other, after the release of the Tribunal's final decision, in order to agree upon the quantum payable by one to the other in respect of disbursements for expert witnesses. If no agreement can be reached, either party may seek the Tribunal's assistance or ruling.

[784] The Tribunal will therefore order TREB to pay to the Commissioner $215,000 in respect of Tariff B legal costs, and $113,000 in respect of disbursements other than those relating to expert witnesses. The Tribunal further directs the Commissioner and TREB to consult with each other in order to agree upon the quantum payable by TREB in respect of disbursements for expert witnesses. If no agreement can be reached within two weeks of this decision, the Commissioner and TREB are to file written submissions not exceeding five pages with the Tribunal [785] The Tribunal understands that the Commissioner and CREA have had no discussions about costs since the Redetermination Hearing ended, and the Commissioner has reserved his position on this issue. The Tribunal, in its decision granting CREA leave to intervene, refused to order that CREA would not be liable for costs, as the Tribunal did not want to "fetter the discretion of the panel" should unforeseen circumstances develop (CREA Intervention Order at para 43). The Tribunal therefore directs the Commissioner and CREA to consult with each other in order to agree upon the quantum of costs payable by CREA, if any. If no agreement can be reached within two weeks of this decision, the Commissioner and CREA are to file with the Tribunal written submissions (not exceeding five pages) outlining their respective positions.

XI. Order

[786] For the reasons given above, the Tribunal partially grants the application brought by the Commissioner. The specific terms of the Tribunal Order will be determined and issued following the Tribunal's review of the parties' written submissions on remedy and the hearing at which they will be provided an opportunity to make verbal submissions on that issue.

[787] These reasons are confidential. In order to enable the Tribunal to issue a public version of this decision, the Tribunal directs the parties to attempt to reach an agreement upon the redactions to be made to these reasons in order to protect confidential evidence and information. The parties are to jointly correspond with the Tribunal by no later than the close of the Registry on Friday, May 13, 2016, setting out their agreement and any areas of disagreement concerning the redaction of the confidential version of the decision. If there is any disagreement, the parties shall separately correspond with the Tribunal setting out their respective submissions with respect to any proposed, but contested, redactions from these confidential reasons. Such submissions are to be served and filed by the close of the Registry on Monday, May 16, 2016.

DATED at Ottawa, this 27th day of April, 2016.

SIGNED on behalf of the Tribunal by the Panel Members.

Schedule "A" – Relevant provisions of the *Competition Act

| 78 (1) For the purposes of section 79, anti-competitive act, without restricting the generality of the term, includes any of the following acts: | 78 (1) Pour l'application de l'article 79, agissement anti-concurrentiel s'entend notamment des agissements suivants : |
| (a) squeezing, by a vertically integrated supplier, of the margin available to an unintegrated customer who competes with the supplier, for the purpose of impeding or preventing the customer's entry into, or expansion in, a market; | a) la compression, par un fournisseur intégré verticalement, de la marge bénéficiaire accessible à un client non intégré qui est en concurrence avec ce fournisseur, dans les cas où cette compression a pour but d'empêcher l'entrée ou la participation accrue du client dans un marché ou encore de faire obstacle à cette entrée ou à cette participation accrue; |
| (b) acquisition by a supplier of a customer who would otherwise be available to a competitor of the supplier, or acquisition by a customer of a supplier who would otherwise be available to a competitor of the customer, for the purpose of impeding or preventing the competitor's entry into, or eliminating the competitor from, a market; | b) l'acquisition par un fournisseur d'un client qui serait par ailleurs accessible à un concurrent du fournisseur, ou l'acquisition par un client d'un fournisseur qui serait par ailleurs accessible à un concurrent du client, dans le but d'empêcher ce concurrent d'entrer dans un marché, dans le but de faire obstacle à cette entrée ou encore dans le but de l'éliminer d'un marché; |
| (c) freight equalization on the plant of a competitor for the purpose of impeding or preventing the competitor's entry into, or eliminating the competitor from, a market; | c) la péréquation du fret en utilisant comme base l'établissement d'un concurrent dans le but d'empêcher son entrée dans un marché ou d'y faire obstacle ou encore de l'éliminer d'un marché; |

(d) use of fighting brands introduced selectively on a temporary basis to discipline or eliminate a competitor;

d) l'utilisation sélective et temporaire de marques de combat destinées à mettre au pas ou à éliminer un concurrent;

(e) pre-emption of scarce facilities or resources required by a competitor for the operation of a business, with the object of withholding the facilities or resources from a market;

e) la préemption d'installations ou de ressources rares nécessaires à un concurrent pour l'exploitation d'une entreprise, dans le but de retenir ces installations ou ces ressources hors d'un marché;

(f) buying up of products to prevent the erosion of existing price levels;

f) l'achat de produits dans le but d'empêcher l'érosion des structures de prix existantes;

(g) adoption of product specifications that are incompatible with products produced by any other person and are designed to prevent his entry into, or to eliminate him from, a market;

g) l'adoption, pour des produits, de normes incompatibles avec les produits fabriqués par une autre personne et destinées à empêcher l'entrée de cette dernière dans un marché ou à l'éliminer d'un marché;

(h) requiring or inducing a supplier to sell only or primarily to certain customers, or to refrain from selling to a competitor, with the object of preventing a competitor's entry into, or expansion in, a market; and

h) le fait d'inciter un fournisseur à ne vendre uniquement ou principalement qu'à certains clients, ou à ne pas vendre à un concurrent ou encore le fait d'exiger l'une ou l'autre de ces attitudes de la part de ce fournisseur, afin d'empêcher l'entrée ou la participation accrue d'un concurrent dans un marché;

(i) selling articles at a price lower than the acquisition cost for the purpose of disciplining or eliminating a competitor.

i) le fait de vendre des articles à un prix inférieur au coût d'acquisition de ces articles dans le but de discipliner ou d'éliminer un concurrent.

(j) and (k) [Repealed, 2009, c.

j) et k) [Abrogés, 2009, ch. 2,

2, s. 427]

79 (1) Where, on application by the Commissioner, the Tribunal finds that

(a) one or more persons substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business,

(b) that person or those persons have engaged in or are engaging in a practice of anti-competitive acts, and

(c) the practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market, the Tribunal may make an order prohibiting all or any of those persons from engaging in that practice.

(2) Where, on an application under subsection (1), the Tribunal finds that a practice of anti-competitive acts has had or is having the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market and that an order under subsection (1) is not likely to restore competition in that market, the Tribunal may, in addition to or in lieu of making an order under subsection (1), make an order directing any or all the persons against whom an order is sought to take such actions, including the

art. 427]

79 (1) Lorsque, à la suite d'une demande du commissaire, il conclut à l'existence de la situation suivante :

a) une ou plusieurs personnes contrôlent sensiblement ou complètement une catégorie ou espèce d'entreprises à la grandeur du Canada ou d'une de ses régions;

b) cette personne ou ces personnes se livrent ou se sont livrées à une pratique d'agissements anti-concurrentiels;

c) la pratique a, a eu ou aura vraisemblablement pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence dans un marché, le Tribunal peut rendre une ordonnance interdisant à ces personnes ou à l'une ou l'autre d'entre elles de se livrer à une telle pratique.

(2) Dans les cas où à la suite de la demande visée au paragraphe (1) il conclut qu'une pratique d'agissements anti-concurrentiels a eu ou a pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence dans un marché et qu'une ordonnance rendue aux termes du paragraphe (1) n'aura vraisemblablement pas pour effet de rétablir la concurrence dans ce marché, le Tribunal peut, en sus ou au lieu de rendre l'ordonnance prévue au paragraphe (1), rendre une ordonnance enjoignant à l'une divestiture of assets or shares, as are reasonable and as are necessary to overcome the effects of the practice in that market.

ou l'autre ou à l'ensemble des personnes visées par la demande d'ordonnance de prendre des mesures raisonnables et nécessaires dans le but d'enrayer les effets de la pratique sur le marché en question et, notamment, de se départir d'éléments d'actif ou d'actions.

(3) In making an order under subsection (2), the Tribunal shall make the order in such terms as will in its opinion interfere with the rights of any person to whom the order is directed or any other person affected by it only to the extent necessary to achieve the purpose of the order.

(3) Lorsque le Tribunal rend une ordonnance en application du paragraphe (2), il le fait aux conditions qui, à son avis, ne porteront atteinte aux droits de la personne visée par cette ordonnance ou à ceux des autres personnes touchées par cette ordonnance que dans la mesure de ce qui est nécessaire à la réalisation de l'objet de l'ordonnance.

(3.1) If the Tribunal makes an order against a person under subsection (1) or (2), it may also order them to pay, in any manner that the Tribunal specifies, an administrative monetary penalty in an amount not exceeding $10,000,000 and, for each subsequent order under either of those subsections, an amount not exceeding $15,000,000.

(3.1) S'il rend une ordonnance en vertu des paragraphes (1) ou (2), le Tribunal peut aussi ordonner à la personne visée de payer, selon les modalités qu'il peut préciser, une sanction administrative pécuniaire maximale de 10 000 000 $ et, pour toute ordonnance subséquente rendue en vertu de l'un de ces paragraphes, de 15 000 000 $.

(3.2) In determining the amount of an administrative monetary penalty, the Tribunal shall take into account any evidence of the following:

(3.2) Pour la détermination du montant de la sanction administrative pécuniaire, il est tenu compte des éléments suivants :

(a) the effect on competition in the relevant market;

a) l'effet sur la concurrence dans le marché pertinent;

(b) the gross revenue from

b) le revenu brut provenant des sales affected by the practice;

ventes sur lesquelles la pratique a eu une incidence;

(c) any actual or anticipated profits affected by the practice;

c) les bénéfices réels ou prévus sur lesquels la pratique a eu une incidence;

(d) the financial position of the person against whom the order is made;

d) la situation financière de la personne visée par l'ordonnance;

(e) the history of compliance with this Act by the person against whom the order is made; and

e) le comportement antérieur de la personne visée par l'ordonnance en ce qui a trait au respect de la présente loi;

(f) any other relevant factor.

f) tout autre élément pertinent.

(3.3) The purpose of an order made against a person under subsection (3.1) is to promote practices by that person that are in conformity with the purposes of this section and not to punish that person.

(3.3) La sanction prévue au paragraphe (3.1) vise à encourager la personne visée par l'ordonnance à adopter des pratiques compatibles avec les objectifs du présent article et non pas à la punir.

(4) In determining, for the purposes of subsection (1), whether a practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market, the Tribunal shall consider whether the practice is a result of superior competitive performance.

(4) Pour l'application du paragraphe (1), lorsque le Tribunal décide de la question de savoir si une pratique a eu, a ou aura vraisemblablement pour effet d'empêcher ou de diminuer sensiblement la concurrence dans un marché, il doit évaluer si la pratique résulte du rendement concurrentiel supérieur.

(5) For the purpose of this section, an act engaged in pursuant only to the exercise of any right or enjoyment of any interest derived under the Copyright Act, Industrial Design Act, Integrated Circuit Topography Act, Patent Act, Trade-marks Act or any other

(5) Pour l'application du présent article, un agissement résultant du seul fait de l'exercice de quelque droit ou de la jouissance de quelque intérêt découlant de la Loi sur les brevets, de la Loi sur les dessins industriels, de la Loi sur le droit d'auteur, de la Loi

Act of Parliament pertaining to intellectual or industrial property is not an anti-competitive act.

sur les marques de commerce, de la Loi sur les topographies de circuits intégrés ou de toute autre loi fédérale relative à la propriété intellectuelle ou industrielle ne constitue pas un agissement anti-concurrentiel.

(6) No application may be made under this section in respect of a practice of anti-competitive acts more than three years after the practice has ceased.

(6) Une demande ne peut pas être présentée en application du présent article à l'égard d'une pratique d'agissements anti-concurrentiels si la pratique en question a cessé depuis plus de trois ans.

(7) No application may be made under this section against a person on the basis of facts that are the same or substantially the same as the facts on the basis of which

(7) Aucune demande à l'endroit d'une personne ne peut être présentée au titre du présent article si les faits au soutien de la demande sont les mêmes ou essentiellement les mêmes que ceux qui ont été allégués au soutien :

(a) proceedings have been commenced against that person under section 45 or 49; or

a) d'une procédure engagée à l'endroit de cette personne en vertu des articles 45 ou 49;

(b) an order against that person is sought by the Commissioner under section 76, 90.1 or 92.

b) d'une ordonnance demandée par le commissaire à l'endroit de cette personne en vertu des articles 76, 90.1 ou 92.

Competition Tribunal | Tribunal de la Concurrence

Reference: Construx Engineering Corporation v. General Motors of Canada, 2005 Comp. Trib. 21
File no.: CT-2005-004
Registry Document no.: 0007a

IN THE MATTER OF the Competition Act R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34, as amended;

AND IN THE MATTER OF an application by Construx Engineering Corporation for an order pursuant to section 103.1 granting leave to make application under sections 75 and 77 of the Competition Act;

AND IN THE MATTER OF an application by Construx Engineering Corporation for an interim order pursuant to section 104 of the Competition Act.

BETWEEN:

Construx Engineering Corporation
(applicant)

And

General Motors of Canada Ltd
(respondent)

Decided on the basis of the written record.
Member: Simpson J. (Chairman)
Date of reasons and order: Monday June 13, 2005
Signed by: Simpson J.

REASONS AND ORDER IN LEAVE APPLICATION UNDER SECTIONS 75 AND 77

[I] This application, pursuant to section 103.1 of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 195, c. C-34, as amended, (the "Act") is for leave to apply to the Competition Tribunal (the "Tribunal") for orders under section 75 of the Act - refusal to deal - and section 77 - market restriction. Construx Engineering Corporation ("Construx") alleges that General Motors of Canada Ltd. ("GM") is refusing to supply it with new GM motor vehicles (the "Vehicles"). Construx also alleges that this practice amounts to market restriction.

[2] GM acknowledges that its policy is to prohibit authorized GM dealers in Canada from selling Vehicles to persons or businesses who will resell or export. This policy is clearly stated in the agreements between GM and its authorized dealers. Those agreements also provide for various enforcement mechanisms which are designed to ensure that dealers will respect the prohibition. These include loss of rebates and allowances, loss of warranty coverage for the vehicle sold, etc. GM also acknowledges its policy of prohibiting the import of Vehicles manufactured outside Canada by persons other than its authorized dealers. For ease of reference, these policies will collectively be described as the "Policies".

[3] Construx filed its application for leave on April 25, 2005. The Commissioner certified on May 3,2005, pursuant to subsection lO3.l(3), that the matter was not the subject of an inquiry and had not been the subject of an inquiry which was discontinued because of a settlement. On May 5, 2005, the Tribunal issued a notice stating that it could hear the application for leave. GM filed its response on May 20, 2005. Counsel for Construx inquired about the possibility of filing a reply, and was given 7 days to do so. No reply was filed.

I. BACKGROUND

[4] On leave applications, an applicant must provide the Tribunal with sufficient information about its business to allow the Tribunal to grant leave. The affidavit of Construx' president, affirmed on April 1 I, 2005, discloses that:

(i) Construx describes itself as a "wholesale dealer and broker of transportation products, including automobiles". Historically, once Construx purchased atransportation product, it either exported it to a buyer outside Canada or resold it to buyers in Canada. Construx' president states that, to the best of his knowledge, those buyers "generally" exported the product.

(ii) In the course of its business, Construx has purchased Vehicles primarily from authorized GM dealers in Ontario. However, Construx has also acquired Vehicles from other suppliers which had previously purchased them from authorized Ontario GM dealers.

(iii) Construx states that it cannot purchase Vehicles from authorized GM dealers because of GM's Policies which prohibit the export of Vehicles from Canada and the resale of Vehicles in Canada. As well, Construx would like to begin importing Vehicles but this option is also precluded by GM's Policies.

(iv) Construx alleges that the Policies have had a "devastating" effect. Between 1997 and 2003, Construx' Vehicle sales figure was $6.8M, representing 38% of its total sales. Construx says that in 2003, it sold 53 Vehicles, which represented 67% of all its new motor vehicle sales in 2003. However, in 2004, by contrast, Construx was unable to acquire any Vehicles.

(v) Construx states that GM's efforts to prevent the export of Vehicles from Canada has meant that Construx has been unable to fill a number of purchase orders described as orders for 120 sport utility vehicles and other similar vehicles and 200 Chevrolet Avalanche and heavy duty pickup trucks, for a total loss of $490,000.

(vi) Construx also claims that if allowed to do so, authorized GM dealers would place orders with Construx to purchase Vehicles manufactured outside Canada. Since Construx cannot import Vehicles from outside Canada, it says that it is also losing those prospective sales. Also because of the import prohibition, Construx was unable in 2003 to satisfy orders of 15 Chevrolet SSRs for a total loss of $75,000.

[5] The Tribunal notes the following serious deficiencies in the evidence presented by Construx:

(i) There is no evidence, except in relation to the Vehicles, concerning either the nature of or the volume of the transportation products Construx sells.

(ii) There is no evidence setting out Construx' annual sales figures for the Vehicles in the period from 1997 to 2003.

(iii) There is no evidence of Construx' total annual sales of transportation products in those years.

(iv) There is no evidence about the geographic market, except that Construx primarily purchased fiom authorized GM dealers in Ontario, and resold mainly for export.

(v) There is no evidence about how many Vehicles sold by Construx remained in Canada and how many were exported.

(vi) There is no evidence about what constitutes the product market. In particular, no attempt is made to show that the Vehicles constitute a separate product.

(vii) Finally, there is no evidence that the Policies have led to a substantial lessening of competition.

II. DISCUSSION

[6] The starting point in the consideration of a leave application is subsection 103.1(7) which states:

| 103.1(7) The Tribunal may grant leave to make an application under section 75 or 77 if it has reason to believe that the applicant is directly and substantially affected in the applicants' business by any practice referred to in one of those sections that could be subject to an order under that section. | 103.1(7) Le Tribunal peut faire droit a une demande de permission de prhsenter une demande en vertu des articles 75 ou 77 s'il a des raisons de croire que l'auteur de la demande est directement et sensiblement gent dans son entreprise en raison de l'existence de l'une ou l'autre des pratiques qui pourraient faire I'objet d'une ordonnance en vertu de ces articles. |

[7] The threshold in a leave application is low, but there must be some evidence presented that would, if the facts were proven, justify an order requiring supply or prohibiting market restriction (Symbol Technologies Canada ULC v. Barcode Systems Inc. 2004 FCA 339). In that case, the Federal Court of Appeal confirmed the test for leave under section 103.1 first enunciated by Madam Justice Dawson in National Capital News Canada v. Milliken, 2002 Comp. Trib. 41 at paragraph 14:

> Accordingly, on the basis of the plain meaning of the wording used in subsection 103.1(7) of the Act and the jurisprudence referred to above, I conclude that the appropriate standard under subsection 103.1(7) is whether the leave application is supported by sufficient credible evidence to give rise to a bona fide belief that the applicant may have been directly and substantially affected in the applicant's business by a reviewable practice, and that the practice in question could be subject to an order.

[8] In the present case, the Tribunal need not consider whether Construx is "directly" affected, because even if it is assumed that it is directly affected by GM's Policies, there is no evidence that it is "substantially" affected. As noted in the list of deficiencies above, Construx' evidence does not provide sufficient information about its business and the impact of the Policies on its business. Construx claims that the sale of Vehicles represented 38% of its total sales from 1997 to 2003, but given the absence of a yearly breakdown, the Tribunal cannot assess the significance of those sales. Construx claims that the sales of Vehicles in 2003 represented 67% of the sales of new motor vehicles, but since the business of Construx is "transportation products" and no total sales figure has been provided, the Tribunal cannot know what this means for the whole enterprise. There is therefore no reasonable basis for the Tribunal to believe that Construx has been substantially affected as required by subsection 103.1(7).

[9] The Tribunal therefore concludes that the application for leave is not supported by "sufficient credible evidence" to give it reason to believe that the applicant is substantially affected in its business. That being so, it is not necessary to consider sections 75 and 77 of the Act, nor the submissions made by GM.

I. INTRODUCTION

An application is brought by the Director of Investigation and Research ("Director") pursuant to section 79 of the Competition Act ("the Act"),[1] for orders prohibiting Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd. ("Laidlaw") from engaging in certain anti-competitive acts and for orders to redress the anti-competitive situation created by those acts. Subsection 1 of section 79 provides:

> 79. (1) Where, on application by the Director, the Tribunal finds that
>
> (a) one or more persons substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business,
> (b) that person or those persons have engaged in or are engaging in a practice of anti-competitive acts, and
> (c) the practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market,
>
> the Tribunal may make an order prohibiting all or any of those persons from engaging in that practice.

[1] R.S.C., 1985, c. C-34, as amended.

Subsection 2 of section 79 authorizes the Tribunal to make orders to restore competition to the market. This is the second case brought under section 79 since its enactment in 1986. The first was Director of Investigation and Research v. The NutraSweet Company. [2]

II. CLASS OR SPECIES OF BUSINESS - PRODUCT MARKET

There is no dispute in this case as to the relevant product market. It is a specific category of waste collection and disposal service.

Solid waste collection and disposal services can be classified into three categories: the collection and disposal of garbage which has been placed in bags or cans, usually at curbside; the collection and disposal of garbage which has been placed in bins which remain on the customer's premises at all times; the collection and disposal of garbage which has been placed in very large containers which are transported to the dump site to be emptied.

The first type of service is usually required by residences, small apartments and those establishments which generate relatively small quantities of garbage. The vehicles used for this service are often of a rear- or side-load configuration, usually containing a compactor, into which the bags of garbage are loaded manually.

The third type of service (roll-off or giant-haul service) is required by customers who generate large amounts of waste, some of it non-compactible. These customers are often industrial undertakings such as large factories or construction sites. The large containers (up to forty cubic yards in size) are loaded onto a flat-bed roll-off truck and, as has been noted, taken to the dump site for emptying. The empty container is then returned to the customer's premises unless it has been rented for one occasion only.

It is the second type of service which is the product in issue in this case. While it is sometimes referred to in the evidence as commercial service or front-end service, it is common ground that a more accurate description is lift-on-board service. This service is required by customers who generate a significant quantity of solid waste. These customers are often commercial enterprises such as restaurants, office buildings and campgrounds. The bins may be as small as two cubic yards or as large as twelve cubic yards. The vehicles used for collection are often front-load vehicles which lift the bin over the front of the truck by a hydraulic hoist. The waste material is thus emptied into the vehicle where it is compacted. These trucks while usually of a front-load configuration may also be of either a side-load or rear-load variety.

Lift-on-board customers can be subdivided with respect to their size and method of purchasing. Some, who most likely sign the standard form contracts which are in issue in this case, are small enterprises often requiring no more than one bin for service. Others, who either because of the volume of service they require or because as public entities they are bound by certain purchasing standards, seek service only through a process of public tender. No argument has been made that a distinction should be made for product market definition purposes between these two and the Tribunal does not make any.

III. LAIDLAW'S CONDUCT

A. Acquisitions and Related Activity

Laidlaw's conduct which is the subject of this application can be described by reference to a number of geographic areas[3] on the eastern side of Vancouver Island: the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area; the Nanaimo area; the Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland area; and the Campbell River area.

(1) Cowichan Valley (Duncan) Area

In 1986 there were three lift-on-board disposal service companies in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area: C.W. Disposals Ltd. ("C.W."), Fox's Disposal

[3] More fully described infra at 46-48.

Service (1977) Ltd. ("Fox"), and PAN Garbage Disposal ("PAN"). C.W. was by far the largest player in the market. It held a municipal contract with the Corporation of the District of North Cowichan. Fox held a five-year contract with the Village of Lake Cowichan which it served together with some outlying areas. PAN was and is a very small family-run business operating to the south of Duncan.

(a) Acquisition of C.W. Disposals Ltd. - Restrictive Covenant

In May 1986, Laidlaw acquired the assets of C.W. The acquisition agreement included a restrictive covenant obligating the shareholders and chief operating officers of the company not to engage directly or indirectly in any waste disposal business, for a period of five years after the acquisition, anywhere within the province of British Columbia. The covenant provides alternatively for non-competition within a 300-mile radius of Duncan and in the further alternatives within a 200-mile radius, a 100-mile radius or a 50-mile radius of Duncan. An internal memorandum, dated May 21, 1986 and prepared by Laidlaw's in-house counsel, indicated that it was a 300-mile radius which had been agreed to despite the fact that the signed contract provides for a covenant extending over the whole province of British Columbia.

(b) Municipal Contract of C.W. Disposals Ltd. - Pre-emption by Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd.

The acquisition agreement also provided for the assumption by Laidlaw of the contract which C.W. held with the Corporation of the District of North Cowichan. That contract had been signed first in 1975. It had a one-year term which renewed automatically each year in the absence of notice by either party terminating the contract. The municipal council annually approved the prices to be charged to those who used the lift-on-board garbage disposal service. In December 1985 the council approved the rates which were to be charged for 1986.

While initially the municipality had billed the customers for the lift-on-board service, there is some evidence that in early 1986 it was expecting C.W. to take over this administrative task. This does not mean that the municipality was withdrawing from the contract but merely that it expected C.W. to assume certain administrative tasks related thereto. The council accepted Laidlaw as the successor to C.W. under this contract. It was known by June 1986 that the council planned, in the fall, to call for public tenders with respect to the contract. Before this could occur, however, Laidlaw managed to have many of C.W.'s ex-customers sign individual contracts with Laidlaw even though Laidlaw was at the time serving these customers pursuant to its contract with the Corporation. The council had asked Laidlaw to cease the practice but Laidlaw did not comply.

When the tender for the municipal contract was called, Laidlaw suggested to the council that this process was futile since most of the individuals to whom the service was being provided were by this time directly under contract with Laidlaw. The council proceeded with the tendering process. Laidlaw took part in that process. Laidlaw was the high bidder. Fox was the low bidder. Laidlaw then questioned the authority of the council to award the contract since Laidlaw had individual contracts with many of the users of the service. Laidlaw threatened the council with a lawsuit. The council cancelled the tendering process and did not award a contract. The council took this course of action because it did not want the expense and political embarrassment of being involved in a lawsuit with Laidlaw.

(c) Fox's Disposal Service (1977) Ltd. Leaves the Market

In April 1987 the contract which Fox held with the Village of Lake Cowichan came up for retender. The Village decided to provide its own lift-on-board collection and disposal service for its inhabitants. This left only the outlying areas to be covered by the tender. Fox was the low bidder for the lift-on-board service but Laidlaw was the low bidder with respect to the residential portion of the collection service covered by the contract. Fox lost the contract to Laidlaw. Fox was thereafter out of business.

(d) Advance Waste Systems Inc. - A New Entrant

Advance Waste Systems Inc. ("Advance") entered the lift-on-board business in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area in April 1987. Advance was financed by Daniel Jack McLeod. He had been operating a roll-off waste disposal service in the Duncan area for many years. The lift-on-board service of Advance was run on a day-to-day basis by Michael Wallace. After commencement of the business, Mr. Wallace was approached on several occasions by a representative of Laidlaw, Dean Woods, seeking to purchase the Advance lift-on-board business. Mr. Wallace was also harassed by Mr. Woods with verbal taunts regarding the future of Advance.

Part of Advance's marketing strategy was to emphasize the fact that it was a local company. In a communication to Laidlaw's customers, Mr. Wallace mistakenly referred to Laidlaw as "of Chicago, Illinois".[4] He had seen Laidlaw referred to in that way in a newspaper article even though he thought Laidlaw originated in Hamilton, Ontario. In fact, Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd. did go through several metamorphoses and, at one point in the early 1980s, it was listed as Laidlaw Industries Inc. on the NASDAQ Exchange in Chicago. Laidlaw responded to the Advance letter in a wildly overly aggressive manner by launching an action against Advance seeking damages for libel, injurious falsehood and interference with contractual relations. Mr. Woods again approached Mr. Wallace and sought to buy the Advance lift-on-board business. Mr. Wallace was told that if this business was not sold to Laidlaw, Laidlaw would ensure that Advance was put out of business. Mr. Wallace understood that part of the strategy for doing so involved the pursuit of legal action against Advance for the support of which Laidlaw was willing to spend $100,000.

Eventually, on February 28, 1990, Mr. McLeod sold the Advance lift-on-board business to Laidlaw; it had been suggested to him that Laidlaw might begin operating in the roll-off business in the Duncan area.

(e) Acquisition of Advance Waste Systems Inc. - Restrictive Covenants

The acquisition agreement pursuant to which Laidlaw purchased the Advance lift-on-board assets in February 1990 requires Advance and its principal officers not to engage either directly or indirectly in the lift-on-board business, for a period of five years after the acquisition, within a geographic area commencing 15 miles north of Victoria and ending at the northern city limits of Nanaimo and extending 30 miles westward from the coastline of Vancouver Island between those limits.[5] Laidlaw agreed not to operate any roll-off business within this same

[5] The actual text of the covenant, although different in wording, is not different in substance:

Commencing at Goldstream Provincial Park, then following northward up the coastline of Vancouver Island to Parksville, then inland a distance of thirty miles, then returning down the Island staying a distance thirty miles from the coast until at the same parallel as Goldstream area for the same period of time. In fact, undoubtedly unknown to Mr. McLeod, Laidlaw was already under a restrictive covenant not to engage in the roll-off business in this area as a result of an agreement signed with Jones Disposal Services Ltd. in May 1986.[6] Under the agreement with Advance, Laidlaw also obtained a right of first refusal to purchase Advance's roll-off business, should it decide to sell.

With the withdrawal of Advance from the lift-on-board business in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area, Advance ceased a small amount of business which it had been doing in Nanaimo for ex-customers of another company which had been purchased by Laidlaw, SCS Waste Systems Inc.[7] After the acquisition of Advance the only competitor to Laidlaw in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area was and is PAN.

(f) Attempted Acquisition of PAN Garbage Disposal

Laidlaw tried on several occasions to acquire PAN. On one occasion Mr. McLeod was asked by Laidlaw to purchase PAN and turn it over to Laidlaw.

Provincial Park and then across to the Park. (Joint Book of Documents, vol. II, tab A-5-8 at 93 (Exhibit II)).

PAN had refused to deal with Laidlaw. Mr. McLeod refused. Mr. McLeod was left with the impression that Laidlaw intended to move into the residential garbage collection business in the area in which PAN operates in order to bring prices down so low that Niko Pfaffe, who together with his wife owns and operates PAN, would be driven out of business. Mr. Pfaffe who has met Laidlaw as a competitor in the residential collection business has also been left with that message.

(2) Nanaimo Area

In 1986 there were three businesses providing lift-on-board service in the Nanaimo area: Nanaimo Disposal Service (1980) Ltd. ("Nanaimo Disposal"); Jones Disposal Services Ltd. ("Jones"); and United Disposal Ltd. ("United"). Laidlaw purchased Nanaimo Disposal in March 1986. It purchased the lift-on-board businesses of Jones and United in May and August respectively of the same year.

(a) Acquisition of Nanaimo Disposal Service (1980) Ltd.
- Restrictive Covenant

The acquisition agreement respecting Nanaimo Disposal contains a non-competition clause whereby the vendors (the company and its two principals) are obligated not to carry on either directly or indirectly any waste disposal business, for a period of five years after the acquisition, within a 300-mile radius of the City of Nanaimo or within a 300-mile radius of the City of Vancouver. An exception to this restriction allowed one of the principals, Kalvin Fox, to continue to carry on a garbage disposal business in the District of Port Hardy. Port Hardy is 391 kilometres (250 miles) north of the City of Nanaimo.

(b) Acquisition of Jones Disposal Services Ltd. - Restrictive Covenants

The May 1986 acquisition agreement with Jones contained a non-competition clause obligating both the company and Norman Jones not to carry on directly or indirectly any commercial lift-on-board service or any residential side- or rear-load collection and disposal service, for a period of ten years after the acquisition, anywhere within the province of British Columbia. Laidlaw's in-house counsel's reporting letter indicates that a ten-year 300-mile radius had been agreed upon.[8] At the same time, Laidlaw signed a companion agreement not to compete with Jones in the roll-off waste disposal business for ten years within a 50-mile radius of Nanaimo.[9] Laidlaw sold the roll-off equipment it had acquired when it purchased Nanaimo Disposal to Jones and obtained a right of first refusal, [8] The restrictive covenants are again set out in a step arrangement, both in terms of time and in terms of area (within a 500-mile radius, a 400-mile radius, a 300-mile radius of the City of Nanaimo or anywhere on Vancouver Island; the alternative time periods descend in one year decrements to one year). There is some uncertainty from the materials in evidence as to exactly what covenants were in fact signed. Both executed and unexecuted versions exist and these differ. Also, the executed version does not seem to contain a time dimension but it is clear from the asset purchase agreement (Joint Book of Documents, vol. XIII, tab L-2 at 276 (Exhibit XIII (confidential)) and vol. II, tab A-5-4 at 56 (Exhibit II)) that a covenant for ten years was agreed upon.

[9] This covenant was also of a "step" variety going from a 50-mile radius downward in decrements of ten to a ten-mile radius and in time from ten years to one year.

for a ten-year period, to purchase Jones' roll-off business or assets should that company decide to sell.

(c) Acquisition of United Disposal Ltd. - Restrictive Covenant

The August 1986 acquisition agreement with United obligated that company and its two principals, Peter Kupiak and Ivan Paquette, not to compete either directly or indirectly in the waste disposal business, for a period of five years after the acquisition, within a 300-mile radius of Parksville (Parksville is 36 kilometres northwest of Nanaimo).[10] After that acquisition there were no competitors to Laidlaw in the lift-on-board service in the Nanaimo area.

(d) SCS Waste Systems Inc. - A New Entrant - Acquisition
- Restrictive Covenant

In April 1987, SCS Waste Systems Inc. ("SCS Waste Systems") commenced business in the Nanaimo area. This business was started by Charles Saunders in conjunction with a steel container manufacturing business he operated under the name of SCS Steel Container Systems Inc. ("SCS"). That company manufactured a variety of steel containers used for waste disposal services including the bins used for lift-on-board service. Mr. Saunders approached Laidlaw when he first started his container manufacturing business to see if that company would purchase containers from him. He was told that Laidlaw was not buying anything at the time and in any event it had its own source of supply for containers.

[10] This covenant was also a "step" variety going from a 300-mile radius downward to a 50-mile radius.

After SCS Waste Systems had been in the business for four months, a Laidlaw representative approached Mr. Saunders and he understood from that meeting that Laidlaw had $265,000 for the purchase of new containers. He understood that Laidlaw would be willing to deal with SCS, but not while SCS Waste Systems was a competitor to Laidlaw.

SCS Waste Systems was sold to Laidlaw in August 1987. The acquisition agreement contains a non-competition clause obligating SCS Waste Systems, SCS and Mr. Saunders not to engage either directly or indirectly in the solid waste collection and disposal business, for a period of five years after the acquisition, within a 400-mile radius of the City of Nanaimo.[11] Since that time Laidlaw has purchased steel containers for its business from SCS. After SCS Waste Systems went out of business, as noted above, some of its customers approached Advance to see if that company would provide lift-on-board collection and disposal services in the Nanaimo area.

[11] This covenant was also of a "step" variety going from a radius of 400 miles downward to a 50-mile radius.

(e) West Coast Waste Systems Inc. - A New Entrant - Invoking a Restrictive Covenant

In April 1989, Peter Kupiak's brother, Jerry Kupiak, started West Coast Waste Systems Inc. ("West Coast"). Jerry Kupiak tendered on a recycling contract with the Regional District of Nanaimo. The details are not important; it is sufficient to note that on a retender, which included both lift-on-board service and the recycling service, West Coast was the low bidder.

It was assumed by the Kupiak brothers that Peter Kupiak could be involved in the business as recycling manager. They were aware of the restrictive covenant which Peter Kupiak had signed with Laidlaw in connection with its acquisition of United but did not believe that the covenant prevented Peter Kupiak's involvement in recycling as opposed to the traditional type of garbage collection in which United had been engaged. Laidlaw commenced an action against both Peter and Jerry Kupiak as well as against West Coast, seeking an interim injunction to prevent any of them from engaging in the waste disposal business.

After obtaining legal advice the Kupiak brothers realized that Peter Kupiak's involvement in recycling was covered by the covenant. A letter, dated October 31, 1989, was written to the Regional District recognizing this obligation and giving a commitment that Peter Kupiak would not be involved in the business. Jerry Kupiak also signed an affidavit, dated November 29, 1989, in response to Laidlaw's application for an interim injunction, stating that he and his brother now understood the scope of the covenant and that Peter Kupiak would not be involved in the business. Despite this commitment, Laidlaw pursued the action and had a consent judgment issued against Peter Kupiak on February 20, 1990. There is no evidence that Laidlaw communicated with the Kupiak brothers regarding its concerns about the covenant prior to starting its action for an injunction.

A Laidlaw manager also wrote to the Regional District on September 11, 1989:

> I am writing in follow up to the opening of Tender 89-102.
>
> I am quite concerned, as in the past I have seen a similar situation where a low bidder was chosen when there was reason to believe they would be unable to perform.
>
> The situation took place in Delta where Laidlaw had been serving for a number of years. ...
>
> We attempted to explain to the decision makers that it was below cost for the service they were anticipating but they went with the low bid.
>
> Since then, the poor performance and lack of funds has been headline news in that community.
> ...
>
> The Council has had a political problem on its hands and is now contemplating retendering in lieu of the requested increase.

> The stress on the system and inconvenience on the taxpayer has left those involved with a desire to roll back the clock.
>
> Here in Nanaimo there is a chance to avoid the same problem. ...
>
> ...
> I would suggest that the Regional District of Nanaimo does not want the problems attendant with an underbid contract that is so significant.[12]

Employees of the Regional District received a subsequent communication from Laidlaw, dated October 31, 1989, suggesting that it would be reasonable if the District decided to retender, particularly given the fact that Peter Kupiak was now not going to be involved in West Coast. The contract was not retendered. West Coast was awarded the contract. West Coast is still in business in the Nanaimo area. The uncertainties created by Laidlaw's legal action against the Kupiak brothers and West Coast, however, delayed the signing of the contract with the Regional District for over a year. The contract was not finally signed until September 24, 1990 and service thereunder was not begun until January 8, 1991.[13]

In addition to West Coast, Browning-Ferris Industries ("B.F.I.") is also presently attempting to establish itself as a competitor in the Nanaimo area. In the spring and summer of 1990 it obtained two tendered contracts: one is a Department of National Defence contract and the other a Regional and City School Board contract. There is evidence that these were bid not with the primary objective of making a profit but in order to get a foothold in the market in that area.[14]

(3) Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland Area

(a) Attempted Acquisition of Lacey Garbage Disposal Limited

There are two disposal services in the Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland area: Lacey Garbage Disposal Limited ("Lacey") and Valley Disposal Limited. Lacey is by far the larger company, holding contracts with the City of Courtenay, the Town of Comox and Canadian Forces Base Comox. Laidlaw approached Lacey on several occasions to see if that company was interested in selling. This initiative was temporarily dropped. Lacey was given to understand that its asking price was too high. Laidlaw had learned that in the event of a purchase it was unlikely that the City of Courtenay would assign the Lacey garbage collection contract to Laidlaw. Laidlaw has on subsequent occasions sought to purchase Lacey, often just before one or other of the contracts that Lacey holds came up for retender.

(4) Campbell River Area

(a) Acquisition of Borgfjord Trucking (1986) Ltd. and Campbell River Sanitation Service Ltd. - Restrictive Covenants

In the spring of 1986 there were two competitors in the Campbell River area: Borgfjord Trucking (1986) Ltd. ("Borgfjord") and Campbell River Sanitation Service Ltd. ("Campbell River Sanitation"). Laidlaw purchased Borgfjord and Campbell River Sanitation on the same day, May 1, 1986. The agreement with Borgfjord contained a non-competition clause under which that company and its two principals agreed not to directly or indirectly engage in any solid waste disposal business, for a period of five years after the acquisition, within a 500-mile radius of Campbell River. The agreement with Campbell River Sanitation contained a clause which required the company and its three principals not to carry on directly or indirectly any waste disposal business in competition to Laidlaw, for a period of five years after the acquisition, anywhere within the province of British Columbia. Laidlaw's in-house counsel's reporting letter indicates that only a 300-mile radius had been agreed to in the case of Campbell River Sanitation even though the signed contract provides for the broader term.[15]

(b) B & D Disposal Ltd. - A New Entrant

[15] Both covenants are of a "step" variety descending in 100-mile decrements with a 50-mile radius being the smallest.

In March 1988 a new company commenced offering lift-on-board service in the Campbell River area: B & D Disposal Ltd. ("B & D"). This company was run by Dwight Bakken and Brian Preston. Mr. Bakken was motivated to get into the business by an experience he had had with Laidlaw. He had spoken to a Laidlaw representative to obtain garbage pick-up for his residence. He was asked to pay for service twelve months in advance. He did not consider this request appropriate and was further outraged by remarks which he remembers as indicating that there was no competition to Laidlaw in the market and therefore he had no choice.

(c) Acquisition of B & D Disposal Ltd. - Restrictive Covenant

In any event, Mr. Bakken and Mr. Preston commenced business and the business grew, initially at least. In June 1989, Mr. Bakken was forced to leave the business as a result of personal financial difficulties. Mr. Preston decided he could not carry on alone. His new partner was not as experienced as Mr. Bakken. Mr. Preston had other businesses and could not afford the time and effort to make B & D a viable operation. He attempted to find a purchaser other than Laidlaw and was unable to do so. He sold B & D to Laidlaw on September 1, 1989. The agreement contained a non-competition clause obligating B & D and its two principals (at the time Brian Preston and Kenneth Pople) not to engage either directly or indirectly in the solid waste disposal business, for a period of five years after the acquisition, within a 100-mile radius of the municipal boundaries of Campbell River.

In May 1990, Bernard Bakken, brother of Dwight Bakken, and his partner Claude Vermette started a lift-on-board disposal business in Campbell River under the name Camvest Disposals ("Camvest"). They are presently trying to establish this business in that area.

B. Laidlaw's Contracting Practices

(1) Signing the Contracts

Immediately after acquiring the lift-on-board collection and disposal assets of the above companies, Laidlaw approached the customers of those firms to have them sign service contracts (customer service agreements) with Laidlaw. This was done, when possible, by using the locally known owner/operator of the acquired company.[16] That individual was asked to approach his "ex-customers" to explain that he had sold his business to Laidlaw and that Laidlaw's corporate practice was to obtain a signed container service agreement from its customers. In addition, Laidlaw would at times organize "sales blitzes" and bring in sales personnel from outside the local area to assist in signing customers to contracts or to assist in obtaining renewals of existing contracts. Laidlaw would seek the renewal of contracts, at times, long before their expiry date. A disturbingly recurring theme through much of the evidence before the Tribunal was that signatures on many of these contracts had been obtained by representing to the customers that the documents they were being asked to sign were "a mere formality", or because it was "the national corporate practice which Laidlaw followed", or because Laidlaw simply wanted "to up-date its information", or because the acquisition entailed switching information to Laidlaw's computer system and it was necessary "to verify where the various containers were located". The issue in this case does not require a determination as to how many of these contracts were obtained through misrepresentation. The above details are set out merely for the purpose of setting the context within which many signatures were obtained.[17]

(2) Terms of the Contracts

The contracts thus signed were for a three-year term. After three years the contract would automatically renew ("evergreen clause") unless notice had been given by registered mail 60 days before the expiration of the three-year period. There is no provision limiting the number of times the contracts are to roll over in this way. If the customer wished to terminate because he or she was going out of business or was relocating to an area in which Laidlaw did not provide lift-on-board service, then the contract could be terminated on 30 days notice.[18] If Laidlaw wished to terminate because a customer refused to accept a proposed price increase, then this could be done by giving the customer 30 days written notice under some contract forms, or ten days written notice in more recent versions. The most recent version has no notice provisions.

Laidlaw's standard form contract changed from time to time and all versions presently exist in the market as a result of the evergreen clause and because, even after the issuance of new contract forms, the older forms were often used until the supply was exhausted.

The contracts used in 1986 contained a clause which obligated the customer, even if the contract had been terminated, to take service from Laidlaw if Laidlaw was willing to meet a competitor's terms and conditions of service (right of first refusal clause):

> If, during the term of this Agreement or of any renewal period (and regardless whether the Customer has given notice of termination under this Agreement) or during a period of 90 days after the termination of this Agreement, the Customer receives a bona fide offer from another supplier for the provision of solid waste disposal services or if the Customer wishes itself to make a bona fide offer to another supplier, then the Customer shall not accept or make such offer unless the Customer first offers to enter into an agreement with the Company [Laidlaw] on the same or > equivalent terms and conditions with respect to monthly charges, number and size of bins, frequency of service, date of service, and term (including renewal periods) as are contained or are to be contained in such bona fide offer. The Customer's offer to the Company shall be in writing, delivered by hand or by registered mail, and shall be open for acceptance for 14 days following actual receipt by the Company. If the Company accepts the Customer's offer, the Customer shall execute the Company's then standard Container Service Agreement containing the terms and conditions agreed to.... [19] (underlining added)

This was subsequently changed to a right to compete clause:

> Customer grants the Company the right to compete with any bona fide offer which Customer receives or intends to make during the term of this Agreement or of any renewal period relating to the provision of non-hazardous solid waste disposal services after the termination of this Agreement. Customer shall notify Company forthwith in writing if Customer receives or intends to make any such bona fide offer, disclosing to the Company all of the terms and conditions thereof. Customer shall not accept or make such offer for the period of fourteen (14) days after such notification and, if the Company within fourteen (14) days of such notification submits an offer of its own Customer shall consider the Company's offer, but is not bound to accept it. Nothing stated in this clause shall be interpreted as relieving the Customer of its obligation to comply strictly with the provisions of this Agreement until such time as this Agreement has been terminated in accordance with its terms.[20] (underlining added)

This clause was eventually dropped from Laidlaw's standard form contract in 1991 insofar as the Vancouver Island markets are concerned. Laidlaw took the position before the Tribunal that it did not intend to try to enforce the clauses in existing contracts. However, no notice of this had been given to Laidlaw's customers in the markets under consideration prior to the hearing of this application.

[19] Joint Book of Documents, vol. V, tab D-1 at 1 (Exhibit V).

[20] Ibid. at 3.

Certainly, there is no disagreement that these clauses are anti-competitive. Requiring a customer to provide information about bids from other companies allowed Laidlaw to know who was competing with it and on what terms before the competitor could succeed in obtaining a single customer from Laidlaw. Laidlaw therefore did not have to respond to competition by lowering prices generally. It could target price reductions only on the customer that a competitor was seeking to acquire, thereby reducing the costs of using predatory or disciplinary pricing to discourage price competition. In addition, these kinds of clauses prevent secret price-cutting which is widely recognized to be an important means of maintaining competitive markets. Since it has been agreed that these clauses will be dropped, they will not be referred to again for the purposes of these reasons except when the remedies which are requested are discussed.

Although the contracts with customers specifically mention the number of bins, the size thereof and the frequency per week with which they were to be emptied, the contracts also purport to bind the customer to employ Laidlaw for all its garbage disposal purposes:

> Customer agrees that the Company shall have the sole and exclusive right to pick up and dispose of all > garbage and other refuse during the currency of this agreement.[21] (underlining added)

Other versions read:

> This agreement shall include collection and disposal of all solid waste generated by Customer excluding radioactive, volatile .... [22](underlining added)

and

> During the term of the Agreement, Customer shall solely and exclusively use Company's Equipment and Service for the collection, removal and disposal of all of its non-hazardous solid waste.[23]

This was used, for example, to prevent one customer (Bayside Inn Resort) from participating in a pilot recycling project with respect to part of its garbage at a time when Laidlaw did not provide such service.[24] It was used to attempt to prevent another customer (Island Hall Beach Resort) from using a competitor to service two bins located close to the hotel kitchen when that customer's contract with Laidlaw, on its face, only referred to service for one bin located close to the Crossroads Pub[25] which was also part of the resort complex.

The price to be charged under the contracts can be increased automatically if landfill site dumping fees charged to Laidlaw are increased. Price increases for reasons not covered by the automatic price increase clause can be charged if the customer consents. Customers are assumed to consent unless on receipt of notice they specifically notify Laidlaw that they object to the price rise (a negative option clause). The early contract forms required Laidlaw to give the customer a 30-day notice of a proposed price rise. The 30-day notice requirement was changed in later contract forms to a 15-day notice. On some occasions at least the notice given to customers was nothing more than a statement in the bottom corner of one month's invoice that a price rise was going to be added to the following month's bill. If the customer did nothing to object and the invoice containing the price rise was paid, the customer was deemed under the contract to have agreed to the price rise.

The most recent of the contract forms is structured differently. The automatic price increase clause covers not only increases in landfill site dumping fees but also increases in taxes, duties, levies, fuel costs, certain administrative fees and "other costs of doing business". No notice of proposed increases is required to be given with respect to price rises for other reasons. The forms simply state that price increases which the company proposes and which are agreed to by the customer will be incorporated into the contract. Consent to increases is said to be "evidenced by the action and practices of the parties." If Laidlaw interprets the customer's paying of a bill to which a price increase has been added as an action implying agreement, then this contract also contains a negative option clause. A negative option clause under this most recent standard form contract will of course be less important because of the increased number of items and their open-ended nature for which automatic cost increases may now be charged.

There is evidence to indicate that Laidlaw used the occasion of landfill dumping fee increases to raise its price to customers in an amount which considerably exceeded a straight flow-through of the increased dumping fees charged to Laidlaw.[26]

If a customer, despite the three-year term, insists that the contract be terminated, some versions of the contract provide for the payment of liquidated damages in an amount six times the customer's average monthly charge.[27] This clause was changed in more recent contracts to provide for an amount equal to 30% of the customer's charge for the month preceding default multiplied by the number of months remaining under the contract.

[26] Based on Mr. Woods' evidence regarding measured weight and the comparison of Laidlaw's additional costs and those required to be paid by the customer.

[27] Again, the early standard form contracts do not contain this provision.

Although the details differ, Laidlaw's contracts contain many elements which are also found in the standard form contracts used by the two other major international garbage collection firms, Browning-Ferris Industries ("B.F.I.") and Waste Management Inc. ("W.M.I."). Indeed, some forms of contracts were adopted by Laidlaw in response to B.F.I.'s contracting practices.

(3) Enforcement of the Contracts

As has been noted, often customers did not know they had signed a contract with Laidlaw. One such form contains almost no indication on its face that it is a contract. There is an indication in very minute printing that general conditions concerning the agreement are found on the reverse side of the paper. It is on this reverse side that one finds the terms of the contract described above. Since customers were not always aware that they had a written contract with Laidlaw, when they were approached by a Laidlaw competitor seeking their business or if disgruntled by Laidlaw's service or price and seeking an alternate supplier, they would purport to cancel what they thought to be their verbal contract with Laidlaw and hire the competitor. It would then be brought to their attention that a written three-year contract existed.

In the meantime it is possible that the competitor had placed a bin on the customer's premises and started to provide service to that customer. Both the customer and the competitor would then be told by Laidlaw that a contract with Laidlaw existed and the potential competitor would have to remove its bin and cease serving the customer. The chilling effect this had on competition is amply illustrated by the evidence of Peter Kupiak concerning the experience of West Coast,[28] Jack McLeod concerning the experience of Advance,[29] and Brian Preston concerning the experience of B & D.[30] The difficulties encountered as a result of the Laidlaw contracts led them to discontinue actively seeking new customers. Instead they waited to be approached by potential customers.

When a customer attempted to obtain service from another hauler, the customer was likely to receive a letter from Laidlaw as follows:

> We are forwarding a copy of your existing contract to your attention, on the off chance that you were not aware of the service contract.
> We would ask you to review terms and conditions governing the contract which is in force.
>
> We are continuing and will continue to provide service as per our contractual obligation and respectfully request that you, our customer do the same.
>
> ...
> Thank you in advance for your continued business.[31]

Alternatively or additionally, if the customer persisted, a letter would be sent by Laidlaw's local legal counsel to the customer's lawyer:

> I act for Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd. and have been provided with a copy of your letter to my client's Nanaimo division, dated November 1, 1988.
>
>
> It is apparent that your client has contrived an excuse to cancel its Container Service Agreement and that it has done so because of a competitive price quote from Advance Waste Systems Inc. This occasionally happens and has consistently prompted Laidlaw to sue for damages for breach of its Container Service Agreement. I have personally handled several such actions and can tell you that none has been dismissed to date. If Mr. Andrinopolos winds up paying Laidlaw damages for breach of contract, he will inevitably find that the expected short-term price reduction will disappear.
> I am writing in the hope that your client can be persuaded to abide by his Container Service Agreement with Laidlaw to the end of its current term on February 16, 1990. The alternative is an action by Laidlaw for damages for breach of contract, in the context of which we do not believe your client's complaints of poor service will stand up to scrutiny.[32] (underlining added)

In fact, Laidlaw's practice in the Vancouver Island markets seems to have been one of not pursuing litigation against customers. No evidence was adduced of any action against a customer having been commenced to enforce the contracts. Only the threat of litigation was used.

[33.1] The Tribunal thinks it is important to point out that the counsel who wrote these letters was not in any way connected to or associated with the counsel who appeared for Laidlaw in these proceedings.

In addition to writing to the customer or the customer's lawyer, Laidlaw's local legal counsel[33.1] would also write to the competitor. An example of this type of letter follows:

> I have been asked to bring to your attention two recent incidents of unlawful competition by Advance. First, Advance has initiated service to Katerina's Place at 15 Front Street, in Nanaimo, notwithstanding that the customer has a valid and subsisting Container Service Agreement with Laidlaw. The customer has purported to cancel the Laidlaw Container Service Agreement on the ground of poor service, but this excuse is entirely contrived. ...
>
> I enclose for your reference copies of the two Container Service Agreements in question. You will see that both contracts are for terms of three years and can be cancelled only at the end of a contract period and only by 60 days' prior written notice by registered mail. Both contracts remain in force, and Laidlaw intends to see that they are enforced, if necessary by litigation against both the customers and your client. Laidlaw has pursued many such actions against its customers over the last few years and has not been unsuccessful to date. ...
>
> Unless Advance's containers are removed from these two sites immediately, Laidlaw will have no alternative but to take action against the two customers in question for breach of contract and against Advance for inducing breach of contract. In addition, Laidlaw will seek an injunction against
>
> Advance, if a pattern of unlawful interference becomes apparent.[34] (underlining added)

Another such letter reads as follows:

> Almost all of Laidlaw's customers have entered into written Container Service Agreements, virtually all of which have a minimum term of three years. This is standard in the industry. This means that, any time your client calls on a prospective customer and finds that the customer is at present being serviced by Laidlaw, there is a very high probability that the customer has an existing contract with Laidlaw. It would therefore be unlawful for your client to invite such a customer to enter into a service contract with your client, unless of course the term of your client's contract was not to commence until the expiration of the existing Laidlaw contract. Such unlawful competition has been the subject of litigation between major waste disposal suppliers in the Lower [34] Joint Book of Documents, vol. IX, tab H-4 at 137-38 (Exhibit IX).

> Mainland, and I am aware of at least two injunctions that have been pronounced to restrain unlawful interference in a competitor's contractual relations.
> Laidlaw does not want to have to sue to protect its patronage, but it is certainly prepared to do so. Would you kindly raise this matter with your client and urge your client not to interfere with any of Laidlaw's existing contracts. Your client can safely assume that there is an existing contract in all cases where a Laidlaw container is on site. If either your client or the customer in question is uncertain whether a Laidlaw contract exists, the customer or your client need only contact Mr. Dean Woods at Laidlaw's office in Nanaimo to be provided with an answer.[35] (underlining added)

As has already been noted, in May 1990, Claude Vermette and Bernard Bakken started a lift-on-board service in Campbell River under the name Camvest Disposals. Vermette and Bakken began to solicit customers for this business before its May 3, 1990 opening by placing advertisements in the local newspaper and by calling on potential customers. They received a number of favourable responses and on commencement of their business placed bins on the premises of those individuals who had decided to become their customers. Many of these individuals had contracts with Laidlaw and did not realize it. Camvest began to get letters from Laidlaw with copies of contracts attached and, in general, removed its bin unless the customer indicated otherwise. On May 16, 1990, Camvest received a letter from Laidlaw's local legal counsel indicating that he had been advised by Laidlaw that Camvest was inducing Laidlaw's customers to breach their contracts:

[35] Ibid., tab H-1 at 25.

> We demand that you remove your waste containers from the customers' premises immediately. If the waste containers are not removed immediately, we will seek our client's instructions to bring an injunction application against you. We will seek an Order that you be prevented from placing any of your waste containers on premises where Laidlaw already has waste containers in place. We will also be seeking an Order that the containers already placed on the premises of Laidlaw customers be removed forthwith. Of course, we will also seek damages and costs of the action against you.[36]

On June 7, 1990, Laidlaw commenced an action against Camvest seeking both an interlocutory and a permanent injunction to prevent Camvest from placing containers on premises where a Laidlaw container existed and to require Camvest to remove the bins it had already placed. Damages for inducing breach of contract were also sought. This was supported by an affidavit listing eleven customers who had allegedly been induced to breach their contracts with Laidlaw. Attached were the relevant copies of the Laidlaw contracts. The eleven customers responded by filing affidavits stating that Camvest had not induced any of them to break their contract with Laidlaw. One such affidavit reads, in part, as follows:

> 4. THAT in about March, 1990, I advised Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as "Laidlaw") that I would no longer be requiring their services. I advised Laidlaw that I would be using the services of Camvest Disposals it started (sic).
> 5. THAT at the time I cancelled, Laidlaw claimed that I had a contract with them but I do not believe that I had any contract with Laidlaw. If I had one, I was unaware of it.

[36] Joint Book of Documents, vol. X, tab H-7 at 14-15 (Exhibit X).

> 6. THAT approximately one month after I had advised Laidlaw I would not need their services any longer, a representative of Laidlaw attended at our office and had my wife sign a three year contract, a copy of which is marked as Exhibit "P" to the Affidavit of William Alexander Muise. My wife attends the office only about once per week. She was unaware of what she was signing. Laidlaw obtained a contract signed by my wife knowing full well that Greenstone Creek Logging Ltd. was no longer going to be using their services.[37]

Another affidavit reads in part:

> 1. THAT I am the owner/operator of M & H Kitchens.
>
> 2. THAT I deny advising William Alexander Muise that I was under any pressure to enter into a contract with Camvest Disposals.
>
> 3. THAT I terminated my contract with Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as "Laidlaw") after obtaining legal advice by reason of Laidlaw's breach of that contract by raising monthly charges without authorization. A copy of my lawyer's letter dated May 29, 1990 is attached hereto and market Exhibit "A".
>
> 4. THAT neither Camvest Disposals nor any of its agents or representatives in any manner induced, persuaded, encouraged, pressured or suggested that I breach my contract with Laidlaw. There was no interference by Camvest Disposals with any contractual relations between Laidlaw and M & H Kitchens.
> 5. THAT I asked Laidlaw to remove their waste container from my premises but Laidlaw has failed or refused to do so. I wish their waste container removed.[38]

Laidlaw's application for an interlocutory injunction was refused but the judge who heard that application indicated that there was a serious issue to be tried with respect to the dispute. This would be dealt with on the hearing of the claim for a permanent injunction and damages. Laidlaw filed an appeal of the decision refusing an interlocutory injunction. In reporting to Messrs. Vermette and Bakken on these developments, their counsel indicated that he was making an attempt to negotiate a settlement with Laidlaw and to come to "some agreeable manner of doing business". The attempt to reach a negotiated settlement was prompted by the fact that a considerable amount of money had already been spent by Camvest in defending the application for an interlocutory injunction and Camvest could not support extended legal fees. Camvest's costs to that point were in excess of $8,000 and are now in excess of $14,000. Camvest's counsel reported that the response he received to his attempt to obtain a settlement was: "Laidlaw's lawyer feels they have to proceed with the appeal and injunction application". Negotiations for settlement did continue, however, but before either a settlement could be agreed upon or the appeal could be heard, Camvest became aware of the Bureau of Competition Policy's investigation into Laidlaw's activities. Neither the appeal nor the application for a permanent injunction has been pursued.

IV. AN AREA OF CANADA - GEOGRAPHIC MARKET

Subsection 79(1) of the Act only applies if the respondent "substantially or completely controls" the relevant class or species of business "throughout Canada or any area thereof." In order to determine whether complete or substantial control exists it is necessary to define the market, both its product and geographic dimensions, within which the control is alleged to operate. As has been noted above, the product market dimensions are not in dispute. The product is the provision of lift-on-board garbage collection and disposal service. There is considerable dispute, however, about the geographic dimensions of the market.

A. Description of the Area

The geographic area relevant for the purposes of this case is a longitudinal portion of the eastern side of Vancouver Island. It stretches, in general, along Highway No. 1 (north from the City of Victoria to the City of Nanaimo) and Highway No. 19 (from the City of Nanaimo to the District of Campbell River and then to the Village of Sayward). Population is clustered at intervals along the spine created by these highways. The first significant population centre north of Victoria is the City of Duncan (population approximately 4,100). It is 60 kilometres from Victoria. A dump site is located south of Duncan (TRP No. 2).[39] North of Duncan are a number of small communities which fall into the District of North Cowichan (population approximately 20,000) and immediately north of that is the Town of Ladysmith (population approximately 5,000). Ladysmith is 28 kilometres from Duncan. A landfill site exists just south of Ladysmith (TRP No. 3).[40] Directly to the west of Duncan and not on Highway No. 1 is the Village of Lake Cowichan. It is 30 kilometres from Duncan. A dump site is located approximately a further 20 kilometres northwest of that village (TRP No. 1).[41] The communities of Duncan, the District of North Cowichan, the Village of Lake Cowichan and the Town of Ladysmith are all located in the Cowichan Valley Regional District.

[39] Thermal Reduction Plant ("TRP") No. 2, Koksilah Road.

The next significant population centre north of Ladysmith along the longitudinal route defined by Highway No. 1 is the City of Nanaimo (population approximately 56,000). Nanaimo is 23 kilometres northwest of Ladysmith. It is 51 kilometres from Duncan. A dump site is located south of Nanaimo, the Cedar Road landfill site. The City of Parksville (population approximately 6,800) and the Town of Qualicum Beach (population approximately 4,100) are 36 and 47 kilometres, respectively, northwest of Nanaimo along Highway No. 19. Until recently a landfill site existed at Qualicum Beach. It was closed at the beginning of September 1991 and a transfer station was opened just west of Parksville, the Church Road transfer station. Garbage which is collected in the Parksville/Qualicum Beach area is taken to this transfer station and dumped into rail cars. The Nanaimo Regional District then transports this garbage south to the Cedar Road dump outside Nanaimo. The communities of Nanaimo, Parksville and Qualicum Beach are all located in the Nanaimo Regional District.

[41] Meads Creek.

The next major population cluster along the spine created by Highway No. 19 is formed by the Town of Comox (population approximately 7,800), the City of Courtenay (population approximately 11,000) and the Village of Cumberland (population approximately 2,000). Courtenay is 73 kilometres from Parksville and 108 kilometres from Nanaimo. A landfill site exists south of the Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland area, the Pigeon Lake disposal site. The District of Campbell River (population approximately 20,000) is 45 kilometres northwest of the Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland area along Highway No. 19. Quadra Island is located to the east of Campbell River and is reached by ferry. The Village of Sayward (population approximately 400) is located 79 kilometres northwest of Campbell River. A dump site is located in the vicinity of this community. A dump site exists to the southwest of Campbell River. The communities of Courtenay, Comox, Cumberland, Campbell River, Quadra Island and Sayward are located in the Comox-Strathcona Regional District.

B. Positions of the Parties

While the Director has alleged in his application that anti-competitive acts lessened competition substantially in the Cowichan Valley Regional District, the Nanaimo Regional District and the District of Campbell River, the dimensions of the geographic markets are more specifically delineated by his expert as being within a radius of 50 kilometres or less from each of Laidlaw's hubs in the

Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area, the City of Nanaimo and the District of Campbell River.

The respondent argues that the relevant geographic markets are two in number. It is its position that the Cowichan Valley Regional District and the Nanaimo Regional District together form one geographic market and that the eastern portion of the Comox-Strathcona Regional District forms the other. This eastern portion of the Comox-Strathcona Regional District includes not only the District of Campbell River and the Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland area but also the community of Sayward and the whole of Quadra Island. There is no dispute that the geographic markets, however they may be defined, do not include the City of Duncan and the Village of Lake Cowichan. These two communities employ their own crews and trucks to provide lift-on-board garbage collection and disposal service.

C. Market Definition and Determination

The general test for determining the geographic dimensions of a market is the same as that used to determine the product dimensions: identification of the universe of effective competition. That is, insofar as the relevant geographic dimensions are concerned, for the purposes of this case one asks what are the boundaries of the geographic area within which competitors must be based if they are to provide effective competition to Laidlaw. Effective competition means that the competitor provides a significant restraint on Laidlaw's ability to raise prices above the competitive level.

The Director's position is that the determination of the geographic boundaries of the market should be based on a review of how the market in the relevant areas operated in the past as well as on observation of the existing market: the past and present conduct of the customers and providers of lift-on-board service. The respondent's position is that the conceptual test, found in the Director's Merger Enforcement Guidelines,[42] should be used: could a provider of the service (as a hypothetical monopolist) impose a significant non-transitory price increase without causing the buyers of the service to purchase the service from suppliers located in other regions. A significant price rise is sometimes considered to be 5%; non-transitoriness is sometimes said to exist if the rise can be sustained for a two-year period.[43]

(1) Essential Issue - Dimensions of Market in which Campbell River is Located

It must first of all be noted that whether the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area and the Nanaimo area are classified as one market or as two is not of great [42] Director of Investigation and Research, Information Bulletin No. 5, March 1991 (Supply and Services Canada, 1991).

[43] [U.S.] Justice Department Merger Guidelines 49 Fed.Reg. 26,823 (1984); J. Whalley, "Department of Justice Merger Enforcement" (1988) 57 Antitrust L.J. 109.

import in this case. It was agreed at the opening of the hearing that however that market(s) is(are) defined, Laidlaw's market share is extensive. It is so high under either classification that it will give rise to a prima facie conclusion that Laidlaw is dominant in that(those) market(s). The main dispute respecting geographic dimensions is whether the communities of Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland are in the same geographic market as the District of Campbell River. If they are, then Laidlaw's share of that market is probably below 50% and no prima facie finding of dominance would arise. If they are not, then Laidlaw's market share is considerably higher.

(2) Hypothetical Monopolist

The expert opinion, filed on behalf of the respondent, that a hypothetical monopolist would be restrained by a competitor based more than 50 kilometres away, relies upon evidence respecting the incremental cost of operating a garbage disposal service at a distance equal to 50 kilometres from the base. This analysis is based on information obtained from Laidlaw as to its cost of providing service into the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area from Nanaimo, which it does once a week, and the revenue received therefrom. The analysis assumes a route density for the one-day service in the remote region equal to the route density in what might be called the home area.

With respect to the use of Laidlaw cost and revenue information in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) - Nanaimo areas, if the Director's position is correct and Laidlaw is without effective competition in those areas, then there is no reason to assume that the revenue figures which have been provided are ones which would exist if Laidlaw were constrained by a competitive market ("the cellophane fallacy").[44] Accordingly, an analysis of the incremental costs, which a provider of the service could sustain and still compete effectively in the remote market, based on such figures is not persuasive.

Counsel for Laidlaw argues that the criticism of commentators on the holding in United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (the cellophane case) does not apply because that case was concerned with the product boundaries of a market, not its geographic boundaries. It is noted that different sets of evaluative criteria are used for defining the geographic boundaries and the product boundaries of a market (e.g., transportation costs and shipment patterns are particularly relevant to the former). He also argues that the revenue figures ($20 per pick-up) on which Laidlaw's experts founded their analysis is a competitive price. He maintains that this is so because Laidlaw's competitors did not attempt to compete with Laidlaw on that price.[45]

The alleged non-competition on price does not demonstrate that the price is a competitive one. Such behaviour can be explained in two ways: (1) the competitors did not wish to engage in price competition with Laidlaw because they were afraid that Laidlaw's market power would enable it to undercut them selectively with respect to price and thus force them out of the market; (2) they were exhibiting normal pricing behaviour in a concentrated market and sheltering under the price being charged by the dominant firm.

With respect to the arguments concerning the applicability of the "cellophane fallacy", different evaluative criteria may be relevant for determining the product and geographic market dimensions. This does not lead to the conclusion, however, that the logic of the criticism (using prices or revenue as they exist in a non-competitive market as a surrogate for competitive prices) is invalid.

Counsel for Laidlaw argues that it is not open to the Director to argue that the model used by Laidlaw's experts is flawed on the basis of the "cellophane fallacy" when he did not adduce any expert evidence to this effect. The Director's objection to the evidence relates to the weight to be given to it in the absence of evidence by Laidlaw that the cost and revenue information contained therein relates to the competitive level. This criticism can be made without support by expert evidence. It is Laidlaw which is relying on the opinion in question and therefore Laidlaw has the responsibility of providing the factual basis to support it.

In addition, to analyze the Campbell River market area with respect to Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland, one should be using prices and costs from those areas. And, in any event, it is not at all clear that all relevant costs have been included in the analysis. For example, no allocation is made for the extra costs involved in the initial delivery of the container to the customer and related sales representative or service calls to the extent that these might require physical attendance at the customer's premises. No allocation is made for contingencies such as the breakdown of a truck in the remote area. With respect to the assumption that the route density (for the one-day a week service) in the remote area is the same as in the home area, this does not mirror the initial competitive situation which exists when a new supplier attempts to provide service in the remote market. It assumes that the new supplier has obtained customers in a tight geographic area, comparable to that which exists where the supplier is well established. It is likely that customers would be scattered and far more dispersed for a new competitor than they are for Laidlaw in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area. The model, therefore, does not demonstrate that the remote supplier of the service could be an effective competitor.

Also missing from the analysis is a consideration of further costs and strategic factors that a Courtenay based firm would have to contend with in trying to operate in Campbell River. The 5% hypothetical increase is imposed on a volume base derived from the pick-up of 74 bins in a single day. The assumption is that the distant firm is able to attract that volume of business for a particular day. The evidence is that customers often have a preference with regard to the day that their bins are picked up. This factor would add to the difficulties facing the Courtenay seller in attracting a sufficient number of customers who were not tied by Laidlaw contracts. Based on the experience of entrants in Campbell River, there is no reason to believe that the Courtenay firm would quickly attract the required volume of business. During the period that fewer than 74 bins were being picked up the firm would be experiencing losses compared to operating in Courtenay. For these losses to be recovered the price differential would have to be more than the 5% difference assumed by the respondent's experts. Additionally, it is clear from the evidence that prices for garbage disposal are not uniform. Selective price-cutting by Laidlaw would be another factor that could confront the would-be entrant.

Indeed, as counsel for the Director argues, it is not obvious that a significant non-transitory price increase test for determining market boundaries is useful in an abuse of dominant position case. In an abuse of dominant position case it is not the potential dominant position or the increase in dominance of a firm which is at issue. The respondent firm is alleged already to have a dominant position in the relevant market. The market definition issue relates to an existing situation rather than a prospective one.

The Tribunal wishes to emphasize that the above discussion of the respondent's expert evidence should not be taken as an acceptance that the 5% price rise criterion is necessarily a useful one even in a merger case. While the test of a non-transitory significant price increase may be conceptually useful, what percentage will be significant and what period of time will satisfy the test of non-transitoriness can only be determined by reference to the facts of a particular case.

(3) Regulatory Constraints on Dump Sites

All three regional districts have by-laws or rules which require that only solid waste from certain areas is to be dumped in the various landfill sites. The Cowichan Valley Regional District requires that only waste from that district may be deposited in its dump sites (TRP No. 1, TRP No. 2 and TRP No. 3). In addition, conditions attached to the permits authorizing the operation of the sites require that only refuse collected from its vicinity be deposited in the particular site.

The Nanaimo Regional District requires with one exception that only refuse generated within its boundaries is to be disposed of at its dump sites. That district prescribes dump site usage by reference to school district boundaries. Refuse collected from residents of School District No. 68 (located in the southern portion of the district) must be disposed of in the Cedar Road landfill site located south of the City of Nanaimo. School district boundaries in British Columbia are not necessarily coincident with regional district boundaries. School District No. 68 takes in part of the northern area of the Cowichan Valley Regional District and thus refuse collected in that area may also be disposed of at the Cedar Road dump. Refuse collected from residents of School District No. 69 (the northern part of the Nanaimo Regional District) was required to be dumped at the Qualicum Beach landfill site until it was closed at the beginning of September 1991. It now may be deposited at either the Church Road transfer station or taken to the Cedar Road site south of Nanaimo.

In the Comox-Strathcona Regional District the use of dump sites is also restricted to residents of the district. With respect to the Pigeon Lake disposal site located in the Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland area, only refuse collected from those municipalities is to be disposed of at that site. Insofar as the Campbell River dump is concerned, the District of Campbell River (By-Law No. 1261) allows only residents of that district and the surrounding electoral areas D, E and F as well as a defined portion of J to dispose of garbage at that dump site. Electoral areas E and F are small areas adjacent to the District of Campbell River. Electoral area D is larger in size but apart from the area close to the District of Campbell River is sparsely populated; indeed, much is completely uninhabited. The "defined portion of J" refers to a small part of Quadra Island closest to Campbell River. The dump site at Sayward is limited to refuse collected from the vicinity of that village.

While the regulations respecting the use of dump sites are factors which constrain the geographic market, these regulations do not prevent a hauler operating in one area on one day and dumping at the appropriate site, and operating in another area on another day and dumping at the site appropriate to that area. Also, it is clear that arrangements can be made with dump site operators to allow for the dumping of small volumes which have been collected outside their area.[46]

(4) Past and Present Behaviour of Market Participants

The Director relies heavily on evidence respecting the past and present behaviour of the providers of lift-on-board service in the areas in question. He uses that evidence to support a conclusion that the outer boundaries of the geographic market are generally within 50 kilometres or less from a hauler's hub of operation. Such hubs are usually located in close proximity to a substantial population centre and a disposal site.

The evidence discloses, for example, that Fox[47] operated around the Village of Lake Cowichan and sought business no further afield than the District of North Cowichan. Advance[48] operated in the Duncan and North Cowichan area. On the sale of SCS Waste Systems[49] to Laidlaw, Advance attempted to service some customers in the City of Nanaimo but this was found to be uneconomical.[50] The market in that area was more difficult to penetrate because of Laidlaw's contracts than was the case in the Cowichan area.

Nanaimo Disposal[51] operated in the Town of Ladysmith and the City of Nanaimo.[52] (It faced some competition in Ladysmith from C.W. which at the time operated out of Duncan). United[53] and its predecessors, Mid-Island Disposal Co. Ltd. and B & B Garbage Disposal Ltd., operated in the Parksville-Qualicum Beach area (from Nanoose Bay to Qualicum Beach). SCS Waste Systems served customers located in the Ladysmith-Nanaimo area and West Coast similarly limits its scope of operation[54].

B & D[55] operated in the Campbell River District area,[56] never going south of the Oyster River. The Oyster River crosses Highway No. 19 approximately halfway between Courtenay and Campbell River. Camvest operates within a 15-mile radius of Campbell River. Insofar as the Campbell River area is concerned, it is most significant that Lacey, which operates in the Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland area, does not consider it economical to operate north of the Oyster River. It is significant that Laidlaw does not operate south of it.

Evidence respecting past and present players in the market must of course be considered carefully. The conduct may result from characteristics particular to those players (e.g., a decision to run a family business and remain small) rather than being evidence of the actual geographic scope of possible effective competition. In this case, however, the evidence of the historical and present conduct of what might be called the small collection and disposal participants in the market is buttressed by other evidence.

In a written submission to the Bureau of Competition Policy with respect to another transaction, Laidlaw itself described the geographic markets in the solid waste services industry as being:

[56] "... we wanted to concentrate as close to the dump as possible." (Transcript at 1152 (4 November 1991)).

> ... generally local in nature essentially defined by political jurisdictions and transportation economics. They tend to cluster around metropolitan areas.[57]

Laidlaw also continued to operate hubs in both Nanaimo and Duncan despite its claim that these two areas fall into one market. Laidlaw's evidence that in the future it might conduct itself differently is not persuasive. Laidlaw does service the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area once a week with a truck sent from Nanaimo. However, this does not demonstrate that the two areas are one market. The conduct is more properly characterized as cost minimization behaviour by a participant who operates in two adjacent markets and has excess capacity in one of them. The evidence that Laidlaw serves Sayward from Campbell River is unconvincing as evidence that the communities of Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland and Campbell River are in the same geographic market. Sayward is a small (population 400) and remote area. It is considerably farther from Campbell River than is Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland. As far as is known Laidlaw is the closest supplier of garbage disposal services to Sayward. It would be out of the question to station equipment in Sayward; the volumes could not support it. The fact that Laidlaw now apparently finds it profitable to service Sayward provides no information about the economies of Laidlaw competing in Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland or Lacey competing in Campbell River. There is simply insufficient information regarding this new service to allow the Tribunal to give that development much weight. There is no information, for example, concerning the price that is being charged to the residents of Sayward.

It is significant that when the Nanaimo Regional District closed the Qualicum Beach landfill site, the Church Road transfer station was opened. The Regional District did not require haulers in the Parksville-Qualicum Beach area to transport the refuse they collected to the Cedar Road site. The Regional District had received advice that it was uneconomical to expect a hauler to serve customers located more than 30 kilometres from a landfill site.

The Tribunal accepts the proposition that when assessing the boundaries of the geographic market, the place at which the trucks are parked is relevant as a hub. In the case of the small local businesses this is likely to be the place at which the administrative functions are also carried out. In the case of a firm such as Laidlaw the administrative functions (e.g., billing, accounting, etc.) may take place many miles away, in Victoria, Edmonton or Hamilton, but such functions are not relevant to the geographic dimensions of the lift-on-board service market. These dimensions must be assessed by reference to factors relevant to the geographic scope of the market, primarily transportation costs, and not by reference to factors which are independent of such costs.

(5) Conclusion

One does not expect to be able to define the geographic dimensions of a market with precision. The boundaries will necessarily overlap with adjacent markets and be indistinct from those adjacent markets at many points.

The Tribunal's conclusion is that the Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland area is not in the same market as Campbell River. This conclusion is based in part on the evidence respecting the conduct of the past and present market participants in all three areas under consideration: the fact that the providers of lift-on-board service generally did not, and do not, on a regular and on-going basis attempt to provide service to customers located more than 50 kilometres from the base of operation at which their trucks are parked, is a response to the higher cost of operating at further distances. Laidlaw's retention of the two hubs, one in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area and the other in the Nanaimo area, is significant, as is the evidence of Lacey. If one found that Laidlaw operated at greater distances in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) and Nanaimo areas, then one might be prepared to accept the argument that Lacey's view of the boundaries of its market, operating from Royston (between Comox and Cumberland) was based on considerations particular to it and was too limited but that is not the case.

In addition, there is virtually no credible evidence that prices charged in the Campbell River area are or would be disciplined by the prices which pertain in the Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland area or that customers in the Campbell River area look outside that area for providers of the service.

One of the most significant factors in the determination of the geographic boundaries of the market is that the area between Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland and Campbell River is sparsely populated. This creates a significant barrier to effective overlapping competitive areas by firms operating in the two different localities. The geographic boundaries of a market cannot be glibly defined by reference to a certain kilometre or mileage distance. A more careful analysis is required. In this case the extensive, sparsely populated area between the communities of Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland and Campbell River together with the locations of the dump-sites which serve those areas are significant to the conclusion that the two population centres are not in the same geographic market with respect to the provision of the lift-on-board garbage collection and disposal service.

V. SUBSTANTIAL OR COMPLETE CONTROL

In deciding whether a firm has substantial or complete control of a market, one asks whether the firm has market power in the economic sense. Market power in the economic sense is the power to maintain prices above the competitive level without losing so many sales that the higher price is not profitable. It is the ability to earn supra-normal profits by reducing output and charging more than the competitive price for a product. As was said in the NutraSweet decision:

> Market power is generally accepted to mean an ability to set prices above competitive levels for a considerable period.[58] (underlining added).

As was also stated in the NutraSweet decision:

> While this [the ability to set prices above the competitive level] is a valid conceptual approach, it is not one that can readily be applied; one must ordinarily look to indicators of market power such as market share and entry barriers. The specific factors that need to be considered in evaluating control or market power will vary from case to case.[59]

A prima facie determination as to whether a firm is likely to have market power can be made by considering the share of the relevant market held by that firm. If that share is very large the firm will very likely have market power.[60] But other considerations must also be taken into account including: how many competitors there are in the market and their respective market shares; how much excess capacity the firms in the market have; how easily a new firm can establish itself as a competitor.

[59] Ibid.

[60] See, for example, H. Hovenkamp, Economics and Federal Antitrust Law (St.Paul, Minn.: West, 1985) at 58 for a discussion of this assumption.

A. Market Share

There is no dispute that the most appropriate method of measuring market share is by comparing the revenues earned by each of the providers of lift-on-board service in the relevant geographic markets. Such information was not available to the expert witnesses of either party when their affidavits of expert evidence were filed.

Two alternative methods of measuring market share were used by the experts: a comparison of the respective weights of refuse dumped at the various dump sites and a physical count of the number of containers of each provider which could be seen within the relevant geographic markets. Both these measures were recognized to be flawed. A customer is charged for lift-on-board service by reference to the size of the bin and the frequency with which it must be emptied. Since the weight of the refuse emptied from one bin may vary considerably from that emptied from another, weight is not necessarily an accurate surrogate for revenue. The weight of the garbage dumped by one hauler vis-à-vis others may not precisely reflect market share. More important, however, is the fact that this kind of data is not available for all dump sites. No weight data is available from the Campbell River dump site nor from the Lake Cowichan (TRP No. 1) site. Tipping fees are not charged at those locations and weight information was not collected. Also, with respect to the Lake Cowichan dump, Laidlaw's experts did not include in their calculations Laidlaw's estimate of the amount of material dumped by Laidlaw at that site. Information obtained by the experts from the dump site operator indicated that no commercial lift-on-board waste was deposited at that location. The operator of the dump did not realize that Laidlaw was using side-load (or rear-load) vehicles to service the lift-on-board customers in that area.

Insofar as assessing market share by container count is concerned, there is no guarantee that all bins will be located and counted. Some may not be easily visible (i.e., they may be located inside buildings). In addition, the bins were only counted in a sample area and there is no reason to believe that the sample area is truly representative. Another flaw in this technique arises because counting containers does not provide information as to how often they are emptied. Assumptions in this regard must be made.

During the course of the hearing, information concerning the gross revenue of the various suppliers of lift-on-board service was sought. Some of this data may lack precision to the extent that the information given relates to the gross revenue of a hauler's total operation (if that operation includes both lift-onboard service and residential collection service or other services).[61] Nevertheless, any inaccuracies that might arise from the inclusion of mixed revenues by the smaller firms can only operate to Laidlaw's benefit.

The data collected indicates that in the District of Campbell River area Laidlaw's market share exceeds 87%. The only other provider of lift-on-board service in that area is Camvest, a company, as previously noted, that commenced business on May 3, 1990. There is also a small hauler on Quadra Island but little information about that firm was placed before the Tribunal and its scope of operation is not of great import.

In the combined markets of Cowichan Valley (Duncan) and Nanaimo, Laidlaw's market share, according to the gross revenue figures, also exceeds 87%. Three firms hold the remaining share. PAN, the small family business operating in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area has 1.3%. West Coast and B.F.I. operate in the Nanaimo area and hold 6.4% and 4.7% respectively.

B. Excess Capacity

Share of sales may overstate a firm's market power when there is excess capacity since other firms are able to increase their market shares by increasing output and sales. With respect to waste removal, capacity is probably best measured in terms of the capacity of trucks. However, capacity cannot be measured simply by counting the number of trucks; age, type of equipment and state of repair have to be taken into account. Bins too must be considered when measuring capacity, but this input does not have the "lumpiness" of trucks (i.e., a truck has to be bought regardless of the number of bins to be serviced) and therefore the operator can avoid expanding the number of bins too far ahead of actual need.

In any event, the evidence is clear that Camvest in the District of Campbell River area, West Coast in the Nanaimo area and B.F.I. in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area are servicing far fewer bins than their truck capacity allows. The pressure on them to expand to more fully utilize their truck capacity is not in doubt. Their share of truck capacity is probably greater than their share of current sales and, if they survive, can be taken as an indicator of their future share of sales. However, the importance of excess capacity is tempered by the extent to which customers are bound by long-term contracts and by the apparent unwillingness of Laidlaw's competitors to use price as an inducement to attract customers.

C. Pricing Practices

Counsel for Laidlaw argues that there is no convincing evidence that Laidlaw is dominant in the markets in question because there is no evidence that it has been charging prices above the competitive level.

Insofar as tendered contracts are concerned, in 1987 Laidlaw held the Campbell River School Board contract. The Board paid $22,440 to Laidlaw under that contract. When B & D entered the market, it bid for this contract. It bid $18,780 for the 1988 year and was awarded the contract. This was a profitable price for B & D. The following year, 1989, B & D tendered the same bid. Laidlaw won the contract with a tender of $14,580. Laidlaw claims that its ability to reduce its price so dramatically was the result of its adoption of a computerized grid routing system. This is not convincing. The computer program would appear to be a fairly standard and simple routing program which replaced what had previously been a manual task. It is not believable that the adoption of this system or the installation of a computer system for Laidlaw's administrative functions generally result in cost savings leading to the price reductions which occurred. Also, there was no lowering of prices generally to all customers in this regard.

In 1987, Laidlaw held the North Cowichan School District contract. When the contract came up for tender in 1987, Advance bid $2,600 per month. It was lower than Laidlaw's bid. When the contract again came up for tender in 1989, Advance lowered its bid to $1,750 per month because it had heard of what had happened in Campbell River. Laidlaw's tender on the contract was $1,760 per month. Mr. Paquette, who worked for Laidlaw at the time, was told to write up another contract and take it to the individual in charge (the Maintenance Superintendent) to try to resubmit a bid at a lower price: "I was just told to lower the contract rate under the pretence that the original bid was charging them for extra pick-ups which they would normally have got for free"[62]. This initiative was not successful; Advance was retained on the contract.

With regard to pricing pursuant to the standard form contracts, it must first be noted that there was no evidence from Laidlaw as to its pricing policies during most of the years in question. Its representatives and ex-employees could give no guidance as to how prices were set or what costs Laidlaw took into account when deciding how to price its services. More recently (since January 1990 in Nanaimo, January 1991 for Campbell River) price lists have been available but still no analysis of costs has been provided. The price lists contain A, B and C levels of pricing for the use of sales representatives. Laidlaw's representative, Dean Woods, indicated that in general Laidlaw was successful in getting customers to agree to the highest level, the A level.

It is argued that Laidlaw's financial statements demonstrate that Laidlaw was not exercising market power. For the fiscal year ending August 31, 1991, the [62] Transcript at 528 (30 October 1991).

Campbell River Divisional Income Statement shows a net income of $27,481 as against a total revenue of $1,027,720 (50% of which is for commercial accounts). Net income on that basis is 2.7% of total revenue. The Nanaimo Divisional Income Statement (which includes the Cowichan Valley area) shows a net income of $23,021 on total revenue of $2,889,468 (82% of which is for commercial accounts). The net income shown by these figures then is only 0.8% of total revenue.

There is a general concern that accounting profits or net income is not a reliable indicator of economic profit.[63]In the case of Laidlaw there is a more specific problem. It relates to the numerous acquisitions made by Laidlaw and the amortization of the goodwill as an expense in its statements. Since most of the cost of the acquisitions appears to have been a payment for goodwill rather than for tangible assets, it is reasonable to conclude that the amortizations represent significant amounts. These are not part of the normal cost of waste disposal and including them totally clouds even accounting net income.

Customers gave evidence as to the rises in price which Laidlaw kept imposing pursuant to the terms of the standard form contracts and the negative option price clauses contained therein. Mr. Thomson of Muffy's Muffins Ltd. gave evidence that he tried to terminate his contract with Laidlaw because "we were getting a little tired of the rates going up constantly".[64] Mr. Thomson sought a quotation from Advance for provision of the same service that he was getting from Laidlaw and discovered that Advance's prices were 20-25% below Laidlaw's.

Mr. Clarke, property manager for School District No. 69 in the Regional District of Nanaimo, also experienced repeated efforts to raise prices. In October 1990 he received a notice that Laidlaw's price was going to rise as a result of a "temporary fuel surcharge". After obtaining legal advice, he wrote back to Laidlaw noting that the contract between them did not provide for an automatic price rise on that basis. Laidlaw responded that a mistake had been made and the price increase was rolled back.[65] Shortly thereafter a notice was received stating that a price rise was to occur as a result of increased landfill site dumping fees being charged to Laidlaw. Mr. Clarke wrote back asking for supporting documentation. At the time, refuse collected from School District No. 69 was deposited at the Qualicum Beach disposal site where no dumping fees were charged. Laidlaw responded saying a mistake had been made and the price increase was rolled back. More recently, Laidlaw has moved to a flat rate[66] format with respect to customer charges in conjunction with increases imposed as a result of the dumping fees now being charged at the Church Road transfer station.[67] Mr. Clarke has not paid the most recent invoices but has asked for a breakdown of the flat rate fees in comparison to the previous method of charging. He notes that there appears to be at minimum a 100% increase as a result of these changes.

Donald Bruce, who was Maintenance Supervisor for Pat Carson Bulldozing, noted that Laidlaw would often "slip ... a price increase through without notifying me ahead of time". He would then phone Laidlaw to get the increase rolled back. He gave evidence:

> If I spent my energy chasing them I could keep it [the price] where I felt it was reasonable. The minute you turned your back and a raise got through, it was too late to fight it. This is what happened in the last, I can't remember the increase, but it was quite a jump ....[68]

Mr. Paquette who worked for Laidlaw between 1986 and 1989 gave evidence that Laidlaw asked its various divisions to aim for a 20-25% profit margin. He noted, however:

> In Parksville we had no competition at all. I believe we hit ... 42 per cent in one month.[69]

While, as counsel for Laidlaw argues, there is no firm evidence that Laidlaw was charging monopoly prices in the markets in question, the anecdotal evidence is more consistent with a firm exercising market power than the reverse.

D. Barriers to Entry

Market share is only a prima facie indication of market power. As has been noted, other considerations must also be taken into account. One of these is barriers to entry: how easily can a firm commence business in the relevant market and establish itself there as a viable competitor? The term "entry" for an economist when used in the phrase "barriers to entry" is a term of art which carries with it the connotation of sustainability. The term "entry" will be used in that sense in these reasons. Related words such as "to enter" or "entrant" are used in their non-technical sense as meaning "to begin" or "to commence".

In general, in this industry barriers to entry are very low.[70] The amount of equipment required is limited: a truck and some containers. The capital to purchase these can easily be obtained: the equipment will itself serve as security for a loan. There is no requirement for extensive technical training or expertise although experience as a mechanic is useful. There are limited administrative and overhead expenses. Many of the providers of the service have operated and still operate out of their homes.[71] The most significant barrier to entry is acquiring a sufficient customer base within a reasonable period of time to allow the business to become profitable.

While barriers to entry in the industry are low, much higher barriers exist in the markets under discussion as a result of the contracting practices of Laidlaw. It is these contracting practices, along with other allegedly anti-competitive acts, which it is argued lead to both Laidlaw's dominant position and a substantial lessening of competition in the markets in question.

VI. ANTI-COMPETITIVE ACTS RESULTING IN A SUBSTANTIAL LESSENING OF COMPETITION

A. Anti-Competitive Acts

There is no general definition in the Act as to what characterizes an anti-competitive act. Section 78 contains a list of examples of behaviour which are included in that definition.[72] There is no dispute that this list is not exhaustive. The various acts of Laidlaw which are alleged to be anti-competitive, that is, a

[72] Section 78 reads:

78. For the purposes of section 79, "anti-competitive act", without restricting the generality of the term, includes any of the following acts:
(a) squeezing, by a vertically integrated supplier, of the margin available to an unintegrated customer who competes with the supplier, for the purpose of impeding or preventing the customer's entry into, or expansion in, a market;
(b) acquisition by a supplier of a customer who would otherwise be available to a competitor of the supplier, or acquisition by a customer of a supplier who would otherwise be available to a competitor of the customer, for the purpose of impeding or preventing the competitor's entry into, or eliminating the competitor from, a market;
(c) freight equalization on the plant of a competitor for the purpose of impeding or preventing the competitor's entry into, or eliminating the competitor from, a market;
(d) use of fighting brands introduced selectively on a temporary basis to discipline or eliminate a competitor;
(e) pre-emption of scarce facilities or resources required by a competitor for the operation of a business, with the object of withholding the facilities or resources from a market;
(f) buying up of products to prevent the erosion of existing price levels;
(g) adoption of product specifications that are incompatible with products produced by any other person and are designed to prevent his entry into, or to eliminate him from, a market;
(h) requiring or inducing a supplier to sell only or primarily to certain customers, or to refrain from selling to a competitor, with the object of preventing a competitor's entry into, or expansion in, a market; and pattern of acquisitions designed to create and maintain a monopoly position together with contracting practices designed to preserve that position, are not among those enumerated in section 78.

The principle underlying section 79 is that the public interest is best served when markets are competitive. The refusal of the common law courts to enforce contracts which contain unreasonable restraints of trade is one manifestation of that principle. Such contracts are deemed to be contrary to public policy. In Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns & Ammunition Co. Ltd., Lord Macnaghten said:

> The true view at the present time I think, is this: The public have an interest in every person's carrying on his trade freely: so has the individual. All interference with individual liberty of action in trading, and all restraints of trade of themselves, if there is nothing more, are contrary to public policy, and therefore void. That is the general rule. But there are exceptions: restraints of trade and interference with individual liberty of action may be justified by the special circumstances of a particular case. It is a sufficient justification, and indeed it is the only justification, if the restriction is reasonable -- reasonable, that is, in reference to the interests of the parties concerned and reasonable in reference to the interests of the public, so framed and so guarded as to afford adequate protection to the party in whose favour it is imposed, while at the same time it is in no way injurious to the public.[73]

Useful descriptions of the antecedents of competition law can be found in: Competition Law by R. Whish;[74] and Canadian Competition Policy by B. Dunlop et al.[75] Part of that history includes the Sherman Act[76] in the United States; it was enacted in 1890. Read literally it condemns every contract in restraint of trade (although subject to statutory and judicially developed exceptions). Another manifestation in more recent times is article 85 of the Treaty of Rome.[77] It prohibits acts:

> which may affect trade between the member states [of the European Economic Community] and which have as their object or effect the prevention, restriction or distortion of competition within the common market ...

A review of the literature indicates that attempting to establish some general criteria as to when an act or practice is anti-competitive and should be restrained, as opposed to when it is a sign of healthy or at least normal commercial competition, is not easy. As has often been said, every contract is a contract in restraint of trade: the commercial freedom of the contracting parties is limited by their obligations to perform the contract. To the extent that any general criteria exist they seem to require an assessment of the nature and purpose of the acts which are alleged to be anti-competitive and the effect that they have or may have on the relevant market. An analysis is required which takes into account the commercial interests of both parties served by the conduct in question and the degree of restraint or distortion of competition which results.

(1) Acquisitions

[77] 298 U.N.T.S. 11 (25 March 1957).

It is agreed, as counsel for Laidlaw argues, that acquisitions by themselves are not anti-competitive acts. That does not mean, however, that they might not be used as such and thereby become so. An acquisition can be a legitimate method of entering a market; it can be a legitimate method of growing in a market. The pattern of acquisitions and attempted acquisitions in this case together with the evidence respecting their surrounding circumstances make it clear that Laidlaw's practice of acquiring firms in the lift-on-board business was for the purpose of initially acquiring a monopolistic position in the markets in question and then eliminating competitors from those markets. This characterization results from a number of factors.

(a) Frequency, Timing and Result of Acquisitions

One important factor is the time frame within which the acquisitions occurred. In the Campbell River area the only two competitors were acquired on the same day. In the Nanaimo area the only three competitors were acquired within five months of each other. Not only were all the existing firms acquired in those two areas, but there was a clear pattern of attempting to acquire any new entrant which appeared on the scene both in those areas and in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area. The attempted acquisition of Lacey in the Courtenay-Comox-Cumberland area and of PAN in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area also supports the conclusion that the acquisitions and attempted acquisitions were entered into for the purpose of monopolizing the markets. The effect of the acquisitions was to give Laidlaw at times 100% of the market.

(b) Expressions of Subjective Intent

While subjective intent may not be a required element in order to find that a given practice (series of acts) is of an anti-competitive nature in this case such exists. It can therefore be taken into consideration as part of the relevant evidence. Charles Saunders was encouraged to sell SCS Waste Systems to Laidlaw on the promise that Laidlaw would thereafter purchase bins from him. Michael Wallace was given to understand that if Advance was not sold to Laidlaw, Laidlaw would see it put out of business by causing Advance extensive and expensive litigation costs. PAN, which has not been acquired, was left with the impression that if it refused to sell, Laidlaw would use its market power to ensure that it was put out of the market by way of price competition. Lacey was left with the message that if it would not sell to Laidlaw, Laidlaw had other methods of achieving what it wanted. Laidlaw argues that the activity of some of its employees in these markets, for example, in leaving the above-described messages with SCS Waste Systems, Advance, PAN and Lacey, should not be taken as evidence of intent on Laidlaw's part. It may be that there will be occasions when an employee is off on a "frolic of his own" and his conduct will not be taken as evidence of the intent of his corporate employer but that will rarely be the case and it is not the case here.

Indeed, one acquisition was undertaken at the specific direction of a senior corporate officer after he saw a non-Laidlaw bin in the market when visiting the Nanaimo area.

(c) Laidlaw's Business Purpose Explanation - Not Convincing

It is argued that the acquisitions were not anti-competitive acts but were merely a manifestation of Laidlaw's general corporate policy to enter markets and achieve growth through acquisitions. In support of this position it was stated that the acquisitions in question were subjected to the same pro forma financial analysis as other acquisitions and were completed after it was determined that they made good business sense. Yet, the only acquisition for which any analysis was provided was that of B & D on September 1, 1989 and some relating to the possible acquisition of Lacey. No pro forma analysis was available with respect to the acquisition of Advance which occurred in February 1990 after the standardized pro forma spread sheets were allegedly in use by Laidlaw. The pro forma analyses for the acquisitions supposedly determine whether an acceptable rate of return would be garnered from the acquisitions. One assumption which enters into these pro forma analyses is that there will be no competition in the market place over the length of the pay-back period.[78] In addition, the length of that period (eight years) is itself an indication of the fact that the acquisitions were proceeding on the assumption that Laidlaw would face no or at least little competition in the future in the markets in question. The fact that so much of the purchase price for these acquisitions is related to goodwill could very well be an indication that a premium might have been paid by Laidlaw for the firm being acquired.

(d) Restrictive Covenants

Finally, the overly restrictive covenants in the acquisition agreements also demonstrate an intent to monopolize the markets. It is trite law that in order to be enforceable restrictive covenants must be reasonable. The leading case on this subject is the Nordenfelt decision.[79] Restrictive covenants must be reasonable with reference to both the interests of the parties themselves and the interests of the public. As stated by Blair J.A. in Tank Lining Corp. v. Dunlop Industrial Ltd., Nordenfelt essentially established a four stage inquiry:

> Firstly, is the covenant under review in restraint of trade? ... Secondly, is the restraint one which is against public policy and, therefore, void? ... Thirdly, can the restraint be justified as reasonable in the interests of the parties? Fourthly, can it also be justified as reasonable with reference to the interests of the public?[80]

[79] Supra, note 73.

[80] (1982), 40 O.R. (2d) 219 (C.A.) at 223.

With respect to the geographic scope of such covenants, reasonable boundaries are usually determined by the location of the customers of the business which is sold[81]. Covenants preventing a vendor from operating within a 300-mile radius with respect to the purchase of a business which operated generally within an area having less than a 30-mile radius, are clearly unreasonable.

Counsel for Laidlaw argues that restrictive covenants are a normal and usual part of acquisition agreements and that it is not unusual to find these drafted in a series of step-type decrements. He argues that the covenants used in these acquisitions were a standard type used by Laidlaw with respect to a variety of acquisitions and that the overbreadth of the covenants was simply an oversight. While some of the covenants, at least, are of a "standard form" format, it is clear that a representative of Laidlaw did address his or her mind to their application in the relevant markets. Reporting letters by Laidlaw's in-house counsel specifically note the scope of the covenants which were agreed to. These, in general, were of a 300-mile radius. It is also significant that when Laidlaw was the party giving covenants these were always very carefully limited in scope.

[81] M.J. Trebilcock, The Common Law of Restraint of Trade: A Legal and Economic Analysis (Toronto: Carswell, 1986) at 240:

> ... the covenantee [the purchaser] must typically show that the business sold previously operated throughout the area subject to restraint, although not necessarily in every community within that area.
> ... in cases where the customers of the business sold are concentrated in one part of the geographic area subject to restraint, the courts will commonly strike a covenant down, if it cannot be severed.

The reciprocal agreements with Jones and Advance by which Laidlaw agreed to stay out of the roll-off market in return for the vendor's agreement to stay out of the lift-on-board market are the type of acts (market sharing arrangements) that fall under section 45 of the Act. Whether or not these result in a substantial lessening of competition in the roll-off market for the purposes of section 79 is not clear from the evidence adduced in this case. Whether they results in an "undue lessening" of competitive in the roll-off market for the purposes of section 45 is also not clear. While intuitively one would expect this to be so, given the small size of the markets in question, there is simply insufficient evidence with respect to the roll-off markets for the purposes of section 79 to enable the Tribunal to come to any conclusion in that regard.

Regardless of the conclusion with respect to the effects of any or all of the restrictive covenants they provide some evidence of intent. It is clear from the evidence as a whole that the acquisitions were part of a pattern of anti-competitive acts.

(2) Mergers or Acquisitions and Section 79 - Legal Considerations

With respect to acquisitions one further matter must be addressed: whether they properly can be considered under section 79 at all. In the NutraSweet decision the Tribunal refused to classify a voluntary agreement between competitors as an anti-competitive act. The agreement in question was a worldwide market sharing agreement by The NutraSweet Company with its suppliers. Reference was made in this regard to the fact that a feature of the enumerated acts listed in section 78 (except for that in paragraph (f)) is that the competitor of the dominant firm is a target, not a fellow actor.[82] At the same time, the Tribunal left open the question as to whether or not such horizontal arrangements might be classified as anti-competitive acts. It commented that it was reluctant to conclude that all horizontal arrangements were excluded from sections 78 and 79 and that, in any event, it was sufficient for the purposes of the NutraSweet decision to state that the Tribunal had not been provided with adequate justification (insofar as effects in Canada were concerned) to allow the Tribunal to categorize the market sharing agreement as an anti-competitive act.

The Tribunal in this case, insofar as the acquisition agreements are concerned, is dealing with horizontal arrangements between willing competitors. Extensive and detailed evidence and argument has been heard respecting the anti-competitive effects of the conduct in question. It is not seriously in dispute, as the Tribunal noted in the NutraSweet decision, that the enumeration in section 78 is not controlling with respect to the scope of section 79. The Tribunal in this case has no difficulty classifying the acquisitions as acts constituting an anti-competitive practice.

[82] Supra, note 2 at 37.

Counsel for Laidlaw argues that acquisitions and mergers do not fall under section 79 at all because they are dealt with elsewhere in the Act. A detailed set of provisions concerning the prevention or dissolution of anti-competitive mergers and acquisitions is found in sections 91 to 107 inclusive. Laidlaw argues that, based on the maxim expressio unius (explicit mention of one case involves implicit exclusion of the others), Parliament could not have intended that mergers be dealt with under the abuse of dominance provisions. Laidlaw's argument is based on two sections of the Act: (a) paragraph 78(b) includes as anti-competitive acts the acquisition by a supplier of a customer and the acquisition by a customer of a supplier, but not the acquisition of a competitor; and (b) section 91 defines merger, in part, as "the acquisition ... of control over or significant interest in the whole or a part of a business of a competitor ...". Laidlaw says that because the acquisition of a competitor is explicitly mentioned in section 91 but not in paragraph 78(b) Parliament intended such acquisitions to be dealt with under the merger provisions and not under the abuse of dominance provisions. Had Parliament intended otherwise, Laidlaw contends that it would have listed the acquisition of a competitor as an anti-competitive act under paragraph 78(b).[83]

Laidlaw's expressio unius argument is not convincing. Firstly, paragraph 78(b) is explicitly non-exhaustive. The fact that an act is not listed in paragraph 78(b), even if it is listed elsewhere in the statute, is no reason to conclude that it is excluded as an anti-competitive act. Secondly, while section 91 does state that the acquisition of a competitor is a merger, it does not necessarily follow that such an acquisition exclusively falls under the merger provisions.

Moreover, there would not appear to be any other indication in the Act that merger and abuse of dominance are to be mutually exclusive, such that a merger case could never be brought under section 79. Nor would there seem to be anything inconsistent or repugnant in the finding that a merger case could be brought as an abuse of dominance case. As such, the following words of E.A. Driedger, are applicable:

> If the overlapping provisions, whether in the same statute or not, are not in conflict, then the question is whether they both operate with respect to a particular situation or whether only one operates. It would seem that prima facie both operate, unless there is something to indicate that the legislature intended one provision to be exhaustive or exclusive ...
>
> Acts should be so construed as to avoid or remove inconsistent overlapping. But there is no principle that they should be construed so as to avoid or remove overlapping not inconsistent.[84] (underlining added)

If there were any doubt at all about this question, subsection 79(7) makes it clear that Parliament contemplated the possibility of mergers being the subject of either a section 92 application or a section 79 application.[85] Subsection 79(7) and companion sections 45.1 and 98 are relevant. Subsection 79(7) provides that where proceedings are commenced under the conspiracy or merger provisions of the Act, no application may be made under the abuse provision based on the same or substantially the same facts.[86] These provisions prohibit concurrent proceedings and require that a choice initially be made between the abuse, merger, and conspiracy provisions. The mere inclusion of these sections clearly contemplates that an application on the same facts could be made under either the merger or the abuse of dominance provisions. Otherwise, there would be no need for these sections at all as merger and abuse of dominance would be mutually exclusive and there would be no possibility of concurrent proceedings.

Counsel for the Director referred to the interpretation of section 79 suggested by Anderson and Khosla:

[85] Subsection 79(7) reads:

> (7) No application may be made under this section against a person
>
> (a) against whom proceedings have been commenced under section 45, or > (b) against whom an order is sought under section 92.
> on the basis of the same or substantially the same facts as would be alleged in the proceedings under section 45 or 92, as the case may be.

[86] Sections 45.1 and 98 are similar. Section 45.1 provides that where proceedings are commenced under the merger or abuse of dominance provisions, no application may be made under the conspiracy provision based on the same or substantially the same facts. Section 98 provides that where proceedings are commenced under the conspiracy or abuse of dominance provisions, no application may be made under the merger provision based on the same or substantially the same facts.

> The choice between the merger and abuse of dominance provisions could arise, for example, in situations involving a series of acquisitions in an industry by a dominant firm. In such situations it may be the cumulative effect of such actions (i.e., the practice of anti-competitive acts) rather than any single purchase which lessens competition substantially. In these circumstances, the abuse provisions may be more readily applicable than the merger provision.[87]

This accords with the Tribunal's interpretation of the provisions in question.

(3) Contracting Practices

Professor Noll, in his affidavit of expert evidence,[88] (counsel for Laidlaw chose not to cross-examine him) notes that in most cases long-term, exclusive contracts do not raise significant anti-competitive issues. They can contribute to economic efficiency and thereby benefit consumers. They serve to allocate future business risks; investment decisions, for example, which must be made today can be made with some degree of assurance that they will not be subject to the vagaries of future price increases and other factors. Such timing may be particularly important when a supplier provides a product or service to a customer which is specifically tailored to that customer's needs and which entails a "relation

- specific investment", that is, one made solely for the purpose of serving a particular customer.[89]

Roll-over provisions can be beneficial in some circumstances because they can lower transaction costs. Liquidated damages clauses can often avoid litigation costs. Automatic price rise clauses (often called negative option price clauses) can eliminate unnecessary negotiation or litigation and apportion the risk related to future events between the vendor and the purchaser. In a negotiated contract when there is more or less equal bargaining power one can assume that benefits to both sides will arise.

While certain of the contract terms may in many circumstances be entirely unobjectionable, it is necessary to look at the particular combination of clauses in the contracts in question as they relate to the vendor and purchaser of lift-on-board service in the relevant markets and to balance this against the effect the contracts are having on competition in those markets.

(a) Contract Terms - From the Supplier's Point of View

With respect to the long-term nature of the contracts in issue, Professor Noll notes that the relation-specific investments that we would normally expect to find when there is exclusivity, long terms and liquidated damages clauses, do not exist in the lift-on-board service business.[90] He notes that the customer-specific investment made by Laidlaw consists "primarily of the costs of negotiating the agreement". This is borne out by the evidence. The Tribunal notes that this investment will not be independent of the contract terms since the amount that Laidlaw is willing to spend in obtaining a customer's signature to a contract will depend upon how long and profitably the customer is bound by that contract. Professor Noll expresses the opinion that the other terms of the contract[91] (other than exclusivity, long term and liquidated damages) also do not have any identifiable efficiency rationale. The Tribunal agrees with that opinion.

[89] Ibid. at 9-10. Professor Noll offers the example of a railway spur built specifically to serve a coal mine. The long-term exclusive contract with liquidated damages clauses protects the parties against future opportunistic behaviour on either side that seeks to take advantage of the lock-in nature of the investments.

The terms of the Laidlaw contracts are not justified as necessary to protect Laidlaw against any cost exposure on termination by a customer. In the first place, no such cost exposure exists because the costs associated with commencing service to a customer are minimal. Secondly, if such terms were necessary to protect Laidlaw, one would not expect to find that customers who go out of business or move to locations where Laidlaw does not provide service, would be able to terminate on a 30-day notice, while in all other circumstances they are bound for three years. It is also significant that Laidlaw does not offer customers a lower price for signing a long-term contract; nor does it refuse to provide service if a customer refuses to sign any contract.

The automatic price increase clause protects Laidlaw from any exposure to increases in dump fees, which are a significant portion of its costs, and, under the most recent standard form contract, against increases in taxes, levies, duties, fuel costs, administrative and other costs of doing business. The negative option price clause in the earlier contract gives Laidlaw the power to adjust prices to monopoly level as long as there are no other suitable competitors in the market. The customer is then locked in by the long-term provisions of the contract so that even if a competitor eventually enters the market there is no opportunity to take advantage of that event and thereby obtain the benefit of a price which is closer to that which pertains in a competitive market.

There is no credible explanation for many of the provisions of these contracts other than to create barriers to entry for would-be competitors by making customer purchase decisions inflexible. The tying of the customers to Laidlaw operates to exclude other competitors from the market.

(b) Contract Terms - From the Purchasers' Point of View

The three-year term, the automatic roll-over provisions, the inability to cancel the contract after 60 days before the end of each three years, the liquidated damages clauses and the exclusivity provision bind the customer tightly to Laidlaw for a long period of time. These terms prevent a customer from accepting an offer of service from a Laidlaw competitor unless the customer is careful to arrange for such at some time prior to the 60 days before the expiration of the three-year term.

The negative option price clauses can lead to monopoly pricing even when competitors are present in the market[92]. Since lift-on-board service is usually a minor cost item for a business, there is a tendency for those in charge to overlook the increases which are being levied simply because contesting them takes more time than it is worth.[93] If a customer responds negatively to a price increase he or she is immediately faced with having to arrange for alternate service and within a very short period of time: ten days under some contracts.

The fact that the contracts in question are contracts of adhesion is also significant. Laidlaw notes that some terms in some cases were negotiated. This was clearly an infrequent occurrence and does not detract from the characterization of the contracts as contracts of adhesion. The dominant position of the respondent is both secured by and reflected in these contracts.[94] The evidence makes it clear that the customer derives virtually no benefit from them.

(c) Intent Required

One last consideration with respect to the contracting practices must be addressed: the nature of the intent which must be proven in order to find that a respondent has engaged in anti-competitive practices. Counsel for Laidlaw argues that it is necessary to find a clear subjective intention. He argues that in this case the contract forms were general forms used by Laidlaw everywhere in the North American market. He argues that they are designed to meet competition from Laidlaw's two main competitors on that broader stage: Browning-Ferris Industries ("B.F.I.") and Waste Management Inc. ("W.M.I.") All three firms operate continent-wide. W.M.I., with gross revenues of approximately $5 billion annually, is six to eight times the size of Laidlaw. B.F.I. is three to four times the size of Laidlaw. In the context of Canadian markets, however, Laidlaw is the largest of the three.

[94] F. Kessler, "Contracts of Adhesion - Some Thoughts about Freedom of Contract" (1943) 43 Columbia L.R. 629 at 632:

> In so far as the reduction of costs of production and distribution thus achieved is reflected in reduced prices, society as a whole ultimately benefits from the use of standard contracts. And there can be no doubt that this has been the case to a considerable extent. The use of standard contracts has, however, another aspect which has become increasingly important. Standard contracts are typically used by enterprises with strong bargaining power. The weaker party, in need of the goods or services, is frequently not in a position to shop around for better terms, either because the author of the standard contract has a monopoly (natural or artificial) or because all competitors use the same clauses. His contractual intention is but a subjection more or less voluntary to terms dictated by the stronger party, terms whose consequences are often understood only in a vague way, if at all.

Counsel for Laidlaw argues that the contracts in the North American context are standard in the industry, that they were not designed with the particular markets here in question in mind. Therefore, Laidlaw could have had no specific intention to restrict competition in the Vancouver Island markets.

Proof of subjective intention on the part of a respondent is not necessary in order to find that a practice of anti-competitive acts has occurred. Such intention is almost impossible of proof in many cases involving corporate entities unless one stumbles upon what is known as a "smoking-gun".[95] Section 79 of the Act provides for a civil proceeding and civil remedies. In that context corporate actors and individuals are deemed to intend the effects of their actions.

In addition, the claim that the contracts are designed to compete with B.F.I. and W.M.I. on the national and indeed North American stage seems to be saying no more than "we are doing it because they are doing it." The three firms may be international in size but many markets in which they operate are local. The contracts in question exclude not only the small, local competitors but also [95] A document which makes it clear that the purpose of the conduct in question was to exclude competitors from the market.

B.F.I. or W.M.I. as the case might be. There is nothing before the Tribunal with respect to how these contracts operate in larger markets. Nevertheless, insofar as the markets in issue are concerned, there is no doubt that they have anti-competitive effects. It is no answer to say that they were designed for a different market and therefore not intended to have anti-competitive effects in the smaller market. As has been noted, actions will be presumed to have been intended to have the effects which actually occur in the absence of convincing evidence to the contrary. The argument that Laidlaw lacked the requisite intention because the contracts were designed to counter B.F.I. and W.M.I. contracting practices is not convincing.

(d) Jurisprudence Considered

In general, the jurisprudence which has been cited to the Tribunal with respect to anti-competitive acts, as it relates to various contracting practices, is not directly relevant. It relates to the statute law of other jurisdictions. At the same time, that jurisprudence does provide illustrations as to how the law in those other jurisdictions has developed. This is useful background information for the Tribunal. Of particular interest in this regard were: Hoffmann-La Roche & Company AG v. Commission of the European Communities;[96] International Salt

[96] [1979] E.C.R. 461.

Co., Inc. v. U.S.[97]; Use of Negative Option Plans by Sellers in Commerce;[98] Washington v. TCI Cablevision; Soda Ash-Solvay;[100] European Gas;[101] and "Monopolization and the Definition of "Abuse" of a Dominant Position under Article 86 E.E.C. Treaty" by J.T. Lang.[102]

(4) Aided by Questionable Litigation Practices

No one can read the evidence concerning the use Laidlaw made of litigation and the threat of litigation in this case without a sense of outrage. The respondent used its vastly larger size and economic resources together with the threat of litigation to prevent customers from switching to competitors. It commenced spurious litigation and threatened litigation against its competitors to drive or attempt to drive them out of business by raising their costs of doing business. This is certainly predatory behaviour.

It is useful to quote from R.H. Bork:

> As a technique for predation, sham litigation is theoretically one of the most promising. Litigation, whether before an agency or a court, can often be framed so that the expenses to each party will be about the same. Indeed, if, as is usual, the party seeking to enter the market bears the burden of going forward with evidence, litigation expenses may be much heavier for him. Expenses in complex business litigation can be enormous, not merely in direct legal fees and costs but in the diversion of executive time and effort and in the disruption of the organization's regular activities. Thus, the firm resisting market entry through sham litigation can impose equal or greater costs upon the entrant and, if it has greater or even equal reserves, may be able to outlast the potential rival. This tactic is likely to find unqualified success only against smaller firms, since the costs of litigation must loom large relative to reserves if the firm is to be driven out. The tactic may be successful against larger firms if the costs are large relative to expected profits in a small market.
>
> The predator need not expect to defeat entry altogether. He may hope only to delay it. Sham litigation then becomes a useful tactic against any size firm, regardless of relative reserves, for it may be worth the price of litigation to purchase a delay of a year or several years in a rival's entry into a lucrative market. In such cases, successful predation does not require that the predator be able to impose larger costs on the victim, that the predator have greater reserves than the victim, or that the predator have better access to capital than the victim. No other technique of predation is able to escape all of these requirements, and that fact indicates both the danger and the probability of predation by misuse of governmental processes.
> This mode of predation is particularly insidious because of its relatively low antitrust visibility.[103]

It would be hoped that when courts become aware of this kind of oppressive use of the legal system they would at the very least be prepared to award costs to the defendant on a full indemnity basis.

B. Substantial Lessening of Competition

Pursuant to paragraph 79(1)(c) of the Act, the Tribunal must determine if the practice of anti-competitive acts has had, is having or is likely to lessen competition substantially.

(1) Market Concentration

Laidlaw argues that the Director has not demonstrated that there has been any substantial lessening of competition in the relevant markets. It is argued that no analysis has been done of the state of competition in the markets before Laidlaw entered compared to what exists now. While it is true that the Director has provided no statistical information concerning the state of competition in the markets before Laidlaw's entry, it is known that in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area there were two businesses that could compete in that area: Fox and C.W. Whether PAN should be included as a vigorous competitor is unclear given its size. In the Nanaimo area there were three companies: Nanaimo Disposal, Jones and United. In the Campbell River area there were two: Borgfjord and Campbell River Sanitation. The markets are clearly small and would not likely support more than two competitors in the Cowichan Valley (Duncan) area, two in the Campbell River area and three in the Nanaimo area. This does not mean, however, that there has not been a substantial lessening of competition in those markets.

In addition, it is argued that the Nanaimo-Cowichan market is becoming increasingly competitive. The changing market shares calculated by the Ross-Levelton study[104] are as follows:

| Date | Laidlaw | PAN | B.F.I. | West Coast |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| January 1991 | 90.89% | 3.40% | 5.45% | 0.26% |
| June 1991 | 83.43% | 3.69% | 11.11% | 1.77% |
| October 1991 | 77.96% | 3.97% | 8.72% | 9.36% |

The evidence disclosed that the West Coast percentages for January 1991 and June 1991 were significantly understated. It is likely that the market share for West Coast in the months in question is much larger than indicated. Laidlaw's market share and that of the other market participants would be correspondingly reduced. This means that the evidence of a trend is not very convincing. Indeed, one could not conclude that a trend existed by reference to such a short time frame and particularly when all the data relate to the period after the Director's investigation commenced.

The acquisition practices increased concentration in the market, at times to monopoly levels. Laidlaw bought all the firms in the market so that at times it held a 100% market share. This by itself constitutes at least a prima facie lessening of competition which is substantial. The Tribunal does not purport to determine whether those practices alone, in the absence of the Laidlaw contracts, could have resulted in a substantial lessening of competition. It is sufficient to say that the acquisitions form part of the anti-competitive practices in that regard.

(2) Creation of Artificial Barriers to Entry

It is not just the number of competitors and comparative market shares which are relevant in considering whether a substantial lessening of competition has occurred. In this case the linchpin of Laidlaw's maintenance of its dominant position is the standard form contracts of adhesion which it uses to lock in a customer base. In this regard, the substantial lessening which is to be assessed need not necessarily be proved by weighing the competitiveness of the market in the past with its competitiveness at present. Substantial lessening can also be assessed by reference to the competitiveness of the market in the presence of the anti-competitive acts and its likely competitiveness in their absence.

Counsel for Laidlaw argued that the evidence discloses that competitors can still enter the market easily and grow. Reference was made to the fact that SCS Waste Systems placed about 80 containers with customers in a four-month period. Advance acquired about 350 container rentals in a three-year period. West Coast placed 150 containers in the market between its commencement of business in January 1990 and October 1991. B & D acquired about 180 container placements in a fourteen-month period. Camvest had approximately 135 containers after a seventeen-month period.

In evaluating the number of containers placed by Laidlaw's past and present competitors it is important to bear certain things in mind. To the extent that Laidlaw did not succeed in having all customers sign contracts there was a small pool of customers available to competitors when they entered. It is clear from the evidence that the firms which tried and are trying (since they are not yet viable at their current scales) to establish themselves in the market experienced an initial surge of growth and then ran into the barrier created by Laidlaw's contracts. Extrapolation from the number of containers placed in the early months of operation is therefore not justified. The evidence further discloses that the local firms benefited from the preference of many customers to deal with a local firm. Thus, the firms had an advantage that should have translated into easy success if they were willing, at least, to meet Laidlaw's price. The evidence also discloses that the number of bins placed by Advance and West Coast overstates their success. Messrs. McLeod and Wallace, the owner and manager of Advance, stated that they succeeded in placing many bins with rural customers who otherwise took care of their own garbage disposal. The prices received from these customers were low and the cost of servicing them high. Advance was forced into these arrangements by the need to utilize its trucks and personnel. Similarly,

Mr. Kupiak of West Coast described having to go much farther afield than he would choose to go if he had access to customers closer to his base of operation.

It is argued that without evidence as to how long it normally takes to become established as a viable business in these markets, one cannot conclude that the time horizons have been too long. It is argued that Fox's entry into the Nanaimo market in 1980 was no more rapid than is the case for some of the companies now trying to establish themselves in the relevant markets. It is difficult to put much reliance on Fox's experience of so many years ago as a benchmark for a reasonable period of entry today.

Professor Noll's description, which is fully supported by the evidence, notes that the costs of getting into the business are not great. It requires an investment in a truck, some containers, a minimum commitment in work hours to waste collection employees and a similar commitment in advertising. The most significant factor facing an entrant is to obtain a minimum number of customers to keep the truck and collection workers fully occupied and to cover the other initial commitments necessary for entry. But once a minimum number of customers is obtained, the future scale economies in the provision of lift-on-board service are very small and diminish quite rapidly. (These additional economies arise from being able to design more efficient pick-up routes as more customers are added). The implication is that for a very small company, attaining quickly a minimum number of customers is very important, but for a large company with several trucks and pick-up routes, scale economies are not important. Delay in achieving the minimum scale necessary to operate means that the new firm must experience higher costs than incumbent firms, and probably losses. Losses experienced during early periods increase the risk and reduce the incentive to enter. In the event that the firm does not succeed, the losses absorbed are not recoverable. But in any event these losses must be taken into account when estimating future profits. Professor Noll notes that, in addition, the contracts enable one geographic area to be monopolized regardless of competitive conditions in an adjacent area: they segment the market so that each can be separately monopolized.

There is no reason to doubt that based solely on the economics of lift-on-board service these should be highly competitive markets. The evidence shows, however, that the effect of the contracts is to make entry sufficiently difficult so that it no longer effectively polices the market. The evidence demonstrates that a new firm can acquire a certain number of customers but that it cannot establish a customer base with sufficient rapidity to make entry attractive. In the markets in question there is no doubt that acquisition practices of Laidlaw buttressed by the creation of artificial barriers to entry through the contracts have resulted in a substantial lessening of competition.

VII. EVIDENCE CONSIDERATIONS

Counsel for Laidlaw correctly points out that few of the witnesses in this case were truly neutral. Some of the past competitors and customers of Laidlaw certainly do not view Laidlaw in a positive light. The Tribunal has been conscious of that fact when weighing the evidence. It has equally been aware that many of Laidlaw's witnesses are also not disinterested in the outcome of these proceedings.

Part of the evidence of Michael Wallace was heard by the Tribunal subject to its admissibility being determined at a later time. The evidence relates to a conversation which Mr. Wallace taped. The conversation was with Dean Woods, District Manager of Laidlaw, and took place over lunch. The tape was not submitted in evidence. It was used by Mr. Wallace to refresh his memory before giving evidence. A copy of the tape was provided to counsel for Laidlaw sometime before the hearing and the original was made available to him during the hearing. The tape appears to be undecipherable, because of background noise, to everyone except Mr. Wallace.

Counsel for Laidlaw argued that evidence of the luncheon conversation should not be accepted in evidence because it had been taped by Mr. Wallace without Mr. Woods' consent. This argument was based on the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Duarte.[105]

While subsection 184(1) of the Criminal Code[106] makes it a criminal offence to electronically "intercept" a private conversation, it is not illegal for one of the participants to a conversation to record that conversation without the knowledge of the other participants. The tape recording by Mr. Wallace of a conversation in which he participated is not illegal. In the Duarte case, the Supreme Court decided that when this kind of "participant" or "consent" taping is carried out by "an instrumentality of the state" (e.g., a police officer) it amounts to a search or seizure. As such it would be unreasonable unless it had been authorized by judicial warrant. The Court held that it was unacceptable in a free society that agents of the state be free to use the technology of electronic surveillance at their sole discretion. The unauthorized audio-visual recording in issue in the Duarte case was therefore said to offend section 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. At the same time, the Court held that the admission of the evidence, even though it had been obtained without authorization by judicial warrant, would not bring the administration of justice into disrepute. The evidence had been obtained on the understanding of the law as it existed pre-

[105] [1990] 1 S.C.R. 30.

[106] R.S.C., 1985, c. C-46, as amended.

Duarte and not through a deliberate or wilful breach of Charter rights. The evidence was therefore held to be admissible.

In the present case, it is sufficient to note that Mr. Wallace was not acting as an instrumentality of the state when he recorded his conversation with Mr. Woods. He was acting as a private individual. The Duarte decision does not apply. There is no impediment to the admissibility of Mr. Wallace's evidence on the basis of the Duarte decision.

Laidlaw also questioned the credibility of the evidence given by Darlene Gunter. Laidlaw suggests that she forged signatures on some container service agreements. Laidlaw has made no attempt to pursue its allegations in this regard through the criminal courts and the handwriting expert called by Laidlaw did not do a blind analysis.[107] The Tribunal does not doubt the credibility of Ms. Gunter's evidence.

VIII. REMEDIES

The Director seeks the following remedies:

[107] An analysis in which the expert is not aware of the identity and handwriting of the person suspected of writing the documents.

... an Order or Orders prohibiting the Respondent from entering into or continuing to use any agreement for the provision of the Product in the Markets which contain terms:

1.(i) a) creating an automatic renewal thereof;
b) requiring notice of termination beyond one payment period;
c) creating or containing a term of more than one year;
d) creating a right of first refusal on the part of the Respondent for the continuation or acquisition of the business of a customer or potential customer;
e) obliging a customer to reveal competitive bids or information regarding discussions, negotiations or quotes provided to the customer from competitors of the Respondent;
f) requiring the customer, if it requires the Product at multiple locations or in differing quantities, or levels of service to obtain it exclusively from the Respondent;
g) requiring a customer to pay any stipulated sum upon early termination.

(ii) declaring null and void any such provisions in contracts in place in the Markets.

2. [An order] prohibiting the acquisition of any competitor in the Markets for a period of three years from the date of the Order of this Tribunal.

3. An Order prohibiting the Respondent from exiting the Markets for a period of three years from the date of the Order of this Tribunal.

4. An Order prohibiting the Respondent for a period of three years from charging a price for the Product in any of the Markets, for the purpose of meeting or undercutting the price of a competitor in such market unless the price so charged by the Respondent is applied or made available uniformly by it to customers similarly situated.

5. An Order directing that the Respondent may only supply the Product in the Markets, if, by written contract, which contract shall prominently and unambiguously state thereon that the document is a contract for waste disposal for a fixed term; and that all such contracts in place therein at the time that the orders sought herein are granted and entered into thereafter for a period of three years be provided to the Applicant at the Applicant's request;

6. An order declaring any clause in any contract of purchase and sale or appurtenant or ancillary thereto of a competitor or any other provider of the product in the Markets or its business which restricts that vendor or any of its principals or any other person a party thereto from competing in the Markets or each of them, in any business or activity competitive with that of the Respondent's, null and void until such time that the Respondent demonstrates that it is no longer dominant in the Markets;

7. An order declaring any existing agreements between the Respondent and any other person which allocates customers, fixes territorial limits on the extent of the involvement of the parties in the market for the supply of the Product in the Markets, or which stipulates conditions or prohibitions as to entry into the Markets, are null and void; and prohibiting the Respondent from entering into any such agreement;

8. An order requiring the Respondent to develop a system to determine the cost of service of each of its customers based upon an approved Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants Generally Accepted Accounting Principles formulation thereof derived from the weight of waste generated by each customer as weighed at the time of pick up;

9. An order requiring the Respondent, for a period of five years from the date of the Order to create and circulate to its customers in the Markets and each of them a price list regarding its scale of charges for the supply of the Product;

10. An order requiring the Respondent to provide timely notice to each of its customers of any change in its standard form of container service agreement and providing therein an explanation of each such change and providing to each of its customers an option to adopt such changes or new form of container service agreement in lieu of its then extant contract;

11. An order directing the Respondent to provide a copy of this Order and a synopsis thereof as approved by the Applicant to each customer as of the date thereof;

12. An order directing the Respondent to similarly provide a copy of such order and a synopsis thereof to each of its managerial employees a statement of its policy of compliance with the Competition Act, an explanation of the said Act, and in particular the implications of ss. 78 and 79 thereof; and

13. Such other and further order as may to this Tribunal appear just.[108]

[108] Written Argument of the Applicant at 57-60.

The remedies which the Director seeks can be classified as: (a) prohibition of certain acquisition practices in the future and the voiding of restrictive covenants in existing acquisition agreements; (b) prohibition of certain contracting practices in the future and the alteration of existing contracts so that the anti-competitive terms are made inoperative; (c) other substantive orders designed to restore competition; and (d) notice requirements respecting any order which the Tribunal might make.

Subsection 79(1) authorizes the Tribunal to issue orders preventing the future occurrence of anti-competitive acts. In addition, subsection (2) provides:

> 79. (2) Where, on an application under subsection (1), the Tribunal finds that a practice of anti-competitive acts has had or is having the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market and that an order under subsection (1) is not likely to restore competition in that market, the Tribunal may, in addition to or in lieu of making an order under subsection (1), make an order directing any or all the persons against whom an order is sought to take such actions, including the divestiture of assets or shares, as are reasonable and as are necessary to overcome the effects of the practice in that market.

The Tribunal is aware that its orders pursuant to subsections 79(1) and 79(2) must only go as far as it considers necessary in order to restore competition in the relevant markets. It agrees with counsel for Laidlaw's argument that it is not part of the Tribunal's function to impose penalties or punitive measures. What is necessary to restore competition is a judgment which must be made by reference to the evidence which has been put before the Tribunal as to how the markets in question operate and have operated and the effects the anti-competitive acts are having thereon. The Tribunal has taken these considerations into account in deciding which of the orders requested by the Director it is prepared to grant.

A. Acquisitions and Restrictive Covenants

The Tribunal is willing to grant an order prohibiting Laidlaw from acquiring any competitor in the market for a period of three years from the date of the order (Director's remedy 2). Laidlaw's acquisition practices clearly constituted anti-competitive acts which were a significant element leading to the substantial lessening of competition which occurred in these markets. The acquisition practices have, in some circumstances, made customers reluctant to use the services of a Laidlaw competitor because of a belief, resulting from past experience, that Laidlaw will acquire that new company in the not too far distant future and the customer will be disadvantaged as a result of having left Laidlaw. The Tribunal is therefore of the view that the three-year ban on acquisitions is a necessary aspect of an order designed to restore competition to the markets.

Insofar as declaring the restrictive covenants in the acquisition agreements to be null and void (Director's remedies 6 and 7), counsel for Laidlaw argues that this type of remedy is not within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal because it is a blatant interference with the property rights of the parties to those contracts. It is argued that the Tribunal is a creature of statute and not a court of inherent jurisdiction and therefore cannot grant the remedy sought.

There is no doubt that the Tribunal is not a court of inherent jurisdiction and is a creature of statute. At the same time, it is clear from the types of remedies which are expressly included within the Tribunal's mandate (ordering sales of shares and assets) that the Tribunal was given broad jurisdiction to interfere with property rights not only of the party or parties before it but also of third parties who have contracts with the respondent. This is clear not only from the remedies expressly described but also from the types of activity which the Tribunal is mandated to restrain: pre-emption of scarce resources; buying up products to prevent erosion of existing price levels; adoption of product specifications; requiring or ordering a seller to sell only or primarily to certain customers.

Five of the covenants in question have already expired. Three of the remaining four which relate to lift-on-board service, that given by Jones, that given by B & D, and that given by SCS Waste Systems, are clearly overly broad. The covenants given by Jones and B & D purport to cover areas within a 300-mile radius of Nanaimo and a 100-mile radius of Campbell River respectively. The covenant given by SCS Waste Systems is a step covenant of which the smallest decrement is a 50-mile radius from Nanaimo. This covers large parts of highly populated areas of mainland British Columbia, including at least parts of Vancouver. These are areas in which SCS Waste Systems never operated. The covenants are clearly wildly overly broad and therefore void.

With respect to the covenant given by Advance concerning lift-on-board service, it is carefully crafted so as to be no broader than 30 miles across following the spine of Highway No. 1 (which also follows the coastline of Vancouver Island). It is difficult to conclude that it is an unreasonable restriction on the basis of the applicable common law principles.

With respect to the two covenants respecting the roll-off business given by Laidlaw (one to Jones and the other to Advance), characterizing those covenants is more difficult. While intuitively one is led to the conclusion that given the size of the markets they must constitute either an undue restriction in the terms of section 45 or lead to a substantial lessening of competition in the terms of section 79, on reviewing the evidence there is simply insufficient information concerning the state of the roll-off market to allow such a conclusion.

Counsel for Laidlaw argues that even if the lift-on-board covenants are overly broad, they do not lead to a substantial lessening of competition because they keep such a small number of potential competitors out of the market. Therefore, it is argued that remedies with respect to them are not within the Tribunal's purview.

While it may be clear that an application of the common law principles respecting restrictive covenants would lead to the conclusion that all of the unexpired covenants would be unenforceable as being overly broad, the Tribunal has not been convinced that declaring the unexpired restrictive covenants void is necessary to restore competition in the markets. There is merit in the argument that their effect on the markets and on competition therein is marginal. At the same time, in some sense, the Tribunal's refusal to issue a declaration in this regard is somewhat irrelevant since the parties to the lift-on-board covenants will by virtue of these reasons have an appreciation of the legal weakness of those covenants.

B.Contracts

With respect to future and existing contracts, as has already been noted, Laidlaw has removed the right of first refusal and the right to compete clauses from its standard form contracts. Thus future contracts will not contain those terms. Insofar as existing contracts are concerned, Laidlaw has undertaken not to enforce those clauses and to notify its customers of this position. Similarly, Laidlaw has undertaken to remove the liquidated damages clause from its standard form contracts. Laidlaw is willing to notify its customers that those terms contained in existing contracts will not be enforced (Director's remedies 1(i)(d), (e), (g) and (ii) as it relates to subparagraphs (d), (e), (g) of paragraph (i)).

Laidlaw has revised its contract forms so that there is bold printing on the face which warns the customer that it is a contract for three years which is being signed (part of Director's remedy 5).

Laidlaw has also decided to alter the term of the roll-over renewal period found in the contracts. Under this arrangement the original term of the contract would be for three years but renewals thereafter would be for one year only. The Tribunal does not consider this sufficient to reduce the artificial barriers to entry caused by the contracts. The Tribunal is prepared to grant an order that the contracts, both present and future, shall have no longer initial term than one year. An automatic right of renewal is appropriate but only for a one-year period. At the expiration of the initial one-year term, cancellation of the contract may occur on one-month's notice by either party.[109] It would seem preferable that the existing contracts expire on their anniversary dates within a year of the Tribunal's order rather than all on one day (Director's remedies 1(i)(a), (b), (c) and (ii) as it relates to subparagraphs (a), (b), (c) of paragraph (i)).

[109] Madame Sarrazin is of the view that a more appropriate and perhaps effective method of eliminating the abusive practices would be to simply require that all Laidlaw contracts be terminable on 60 days notice. She notes, first, that there was much evidence that prior to Laidlaw's entry into the markets no formal written contracts were in use and termination of service in general was effected by 30 days notice, that the customer service agreements were not introduced as a result of the customer's preferences and that the competition used them only as a reaction to Laidlaw practices. Professor Noll pointed out that the contracts do not create efficiencies and are the key to maintaining and enforcing market power for Laidlaw. It is further emphasized that in all cases, simple clear cut remedies targeted at the fundamental issues are preferable to more complex and interventionist ones that will have a perpetual life and may not cover adequately all situations present and future. With the evidence before the Tribunal, and in light of the above principle, Madame Sarrazin notes that it would have been reasonable for the Director to have asked for contracts terminable on 60 days notice to overcome the effects of Laidlaw practices in the market. Such remedy would serve the purpose required and would allow the market to restore itself.

The Tribunal is willing to grant an order that the standard form contracts not contain terms requiring a customer to obtain service exclusively from Laidlaw with respect to all its lift-on-board service (Director's remedy 1(i)(f) and (ii) insofar as it relates to subparagraph (f) of paragraph (i)). Laidlaw argued that these exclusivity clauses were included in order to ensure that the customer did not stream recyclable and therefore more profitable waste from the waste stream, which would otherwise have been available to Laidlaw. This is not convincing. In the first place, it is the customer not Laidlaw which does the streaming. In the second place, the reference to recyclable waste only appears in the latest Laidlaw contracts; there is no way that this can be seen as a situation relevant to the earlier contracts. More importantly, however, there is no reason to tie a customer to a location (or quality of service (e.g. recyclable)) for which he or she has not specifically initially contracted. In the context of the present application such clauses abet the anti-competitive reach of the contracts by excluding competitors from these other areas.

In deciding to grant an order relating to the contracts as described above, the Tribunal is aware that only Laidlaw will be bound to conduct itself in this fashion. Other firms in these markets will not be so constrained. No order will exist preventing Browning-Ferris Industries (B.F.I.) from seeking three-year contracts from its customers. This, however, is the consequence of the authority granted to the Tribunal under the Act. Orders can only be made pursuant to section 79 against a dominant firm. While the situation created by such orders would seem to be unbalanced, the Tribunal is aware that if customers are faced with a choice between a three-year lock-in type contract such as that which Laidlaw now uses and a one-year contract from which the anti-competitive clauses have been removed, it seems likely that they would choose the less onerous version.

C. Other Substantive Remedies

The Tribunal is not willing to grant an order preventing Laidlaw from exiting any of the markets for a period of three years from the date of the order (Director's remedy 3). If the Director can provide a fairly precise definition of what is meant by "exiting", the Tribunal is prepared to include in its order a requirement that Laidlaw give the Director 60 days notice of any such intended action. The Tribunal is also willing to include in its order a provision that an application to amend or alter the existing order could be made in reference to this exit activity if it was deemed desirable to do so, despite the fact that section 106 of the Act provides for application for variation of an order in changed circumstances.

The Tribunal is willing to require that Laidlaw provide the Director with copies of all of its existing and future contracts (second half of Director's remedy 5). It is not prepared to require Laidlaw to provide an opportunity to each existing customer to change its contract to new contract forms whenever such forms are introduced (Director's remedy 10). The Tribunal notes that the existing contract between any given customer and Laidlaw will be based on a number of interrelated factors including price. The purpose to be served by obligating Laidlaw, merely because it introduces a new form of contract, to offer that contract to all existing contracted customers is not immediately obvious. At the same time, the Tribunal is willing to include in its order a requirement that if and when any new contract form is prepared, it should be accompanied by an explanation describing the differences between it and the contract which the customer had previously signed when submitted to existing customers.

That leaves for consideration what might be called the pricing remedies: (a) prohibition against Laidlaw charging a price in any of the markets for the purpose of undercutting a competitor unless the price so charged is made available uniformly to all its customers (Director's remedy 4); (b) Laidlaw to create and circulate price lists to all its customers for a period of five years (Director's remedy 9); and (c) requires Laidlaw to develop a system to determine a cost of service to each of its customers (Director's remedy 8).

The Tribunal has difficulty accepting that orders of this nature should be issued. The Tribunal's difficulty arises because no argument has been articulated as to why these remedies are sought and what will potentially be achieved through them. In addition, these remedies, on their face, raise serious questions for the Tribunal.

With respect to the request for an order requiring Laidlaw not to charge a price in any of the markets for the purpose of undercutting a competitor unless it is made available uniformly to all customers (Director's remedy 4), it is difficult to see how customers would benefit from a policy which prevented them from playing off suppliers against each other. Predatory pricing while originally pleaded was not seriously at issue in this case. More importantly, no argument has been made demonstrating that the possible pay-off from such activity would not be greatly reduced, if not eliminated, by the lowering of the barriers to entry which will result from the other remedies.

With respect to the request that Laidlaw be required to circulate price lists to its customers (Director's remedy 9), it has not been demonstrated to the Tribunal that this could serve any useful purpose since it is conceded that any such price list would be a "suggested price" list only. It is understood that any such list would not be binding on Laidlaw and that Laidlaw would be free to negotiate with individual customers. The list, at the same time, could become the focus for implicit pricing agreement by the suppliers in these very concentrated markets.

With respect to the requirement that Laidlaw develop a cost of service for each of its customers (Director's remedy 8), the Tribunal notes that this remedy is conceptually inconsistent with the Director's remedies 4 and 9. The request that the cost of service to each individual customer be determined is inconsistent with the notion underlying remedies 4 and 9 that standardized pricing is possible. If the concern is that Laidlaw may be charging some customers too little compared to average variable cost, the disadvantage would be Laidlaw's as long as the rest of the customer base turned over quickly enough so that it was available to competition from other suppliers.

The Tribunal is willing to reconsider its refusal to include in the order what is referred to as the pricing remedies. It takes this stand because it wishes to ensure that all valid reasons for seeking such remedies have been brought to its attention. Accordingly, the Director, if he so wishes, may file written argument setting out the rationale on which the request for those remedies is based, within ten days of the date of these reasons. This should include, for example, an explanation as to what the remedies are intended to accomplish, why they are justified on the evidence and why they are necessary in the light of the other remedies which the Tribunal has agreed to grant. If the Director chooses to exercise this option the respondent will of course be given a corresponding ten days within which to reply.

D. Notice Requirements

Laidlaw does not object to notifying all its customers of any order the Tribunal might make in accordance with a communication drafted by the Director (Director's remedy 11). Laidlaw does object to providing to its managerial employees notice of any order plus a statement that its policy is to comply with the Act (Director's remedy 12). It is argued that this last is a new remedy which did not appear in the notice of application nor in any documentation before counsel's final written argument. Counsel for the Director indicated that if it was necessary he would make a formal motion to amend the notice of application in this regard. Counsel for Laidlaw's argument, that it is not open to the Tribunal to make the order requested, is based on the Tribunal's decision in the NutraSweet case:

> In formulating an appropriate order the Tribunal is of the view that it must confine itself essentially to the kind of orders requested by the Director in his original application with such modifications as may fairly be considered to have been in issue in the case. While other possible remedies were discussed during argument, no amendment was sought to the application in this respect. It is a matter of fairness that the respondent not now be faced with a remedy of which it had no formal notice.[110] (underlining added)

If a formal notice to amend the application is required, then it is hereby granted. At the same time, the "additional" remedy being sought is not different in kind from that sought under the original application. It is merely an addition to the scope of the notice to be given with respect to any order the Tribunal might make, and a requirement that Laidlaw make an express commitment to abide by the provisions of the Act. The test regarding additions or alternatives to remedies is whether or not the respondent will be prejudiced as a result of not having had earlier notice of the request, of not having had an opportunity to adduce relevant evidence respecting the effects of the remedy or an opportunity to explain why it is inappropriate. The respondent will not be prejudiced in this manner by the expanded notice requirements now being requested and the Tribunal is willing to grant an order which includes such requirements.

E. Request that Order be Drafted

The Tribunal asks that counsel for the Director, in consultation with counsel for the respondent, draft an order for issuance by the Tribunal in accordance with these reasons. A draft shall be submitted within ten days of the date of these reasons.

DATED AT Ottawa, this 20th day of January, 1992.

SIGNED ON behalf of the Tribunal by the presiding judicial member.

Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. et al.

I. INTRODUCTION

This application is concerned, broadly speaking, with two aspects of telephone directory or, as it is commonly referred to "Yellow Pages", advertising. The first aspect is the provision of advertising space in a published directory or the publishing business. This aspect of the business encompasses activities such as the compilation, printing and distribution of the directory. The second aspect is the provision of the advertising services required to create a finished advertisement for publication in a directory. The services aspect of the business includes such elements as locating customers, selling advertising space, and providing advice and information to customers on the design, content, creation and placement of directory advertising.

The applicant in this case is the Director of Investigation and Research ("Director"), the public official charged with enforcement of the Competition Act ("Act").[1] The Director brings an application against the respondents, Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. and Tele-Direct (Services) Inc., under sections 77 and 79 of the Act, the provisions dealing with, as they are commonly known, tied selling and abuse of dominant position:

> 77. (1) For the purposes of this section . . .
> "tied selling" means
> (a) any practice whereby a supplier of a product, as a condition of supplying the product (the "tying" product) to a customer, requires that customer to
> (i) acquire any other product from the supplier or the supplier's nominee, or
> (ii) refrain from using or distributing, in conjunction with the tying product, another product that is not of a brand or manufacture designated by the supplier or the nominee, and
> (b) any practice whereby a supplier of a product induces a customer to meet a condition set out in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii) by offering to supply the tying product to the customer on more favourable terms or conditions if the customer agrees to meet the condition set out in either of those subparagraphs.
>
> (2) Where, on application by the Director, the Tribunal finds that . . . tied selling, because it is engaged in by a major supplier of a product in a market or because it is widespread in a market, is likely to
> (a) impede entry into or expansion of a firm in the market,
> (b) impede introduction of a product into or expansion of sales of a product in the market, or
> (c) have any other exclusionary effect in the market, > with the result that competition is or is likely to be lessened substantially, the Tribunal may make an order directed to all or any of the suppliers against whom an order is sought prohibiting them from continuing to engage in . . . tied selling and containing any other requirement that, in its opinion, is necessary to overcome the effects thereof in the market or to restore or stimulate competition in the market.
>
> 79. (1) Where, on application by the Director, the Tribunal finds that
> (a) one or more persons substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business,
> (b) that person or those persons have engaged in or are engaging in a practice of anti-competitive acts, and
> (c) the practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market, > the Tribunal may make an order prohibiting all or any of those persons from engaging in that practice.

[1] R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34.

In relation to section 77, the Director alleges that the respondents have engaged in a practice whereby, as a condition of supplying advertising space in telephone directories, they have required or induced customers seeking advertising space in telephone directories to acquire another product from them, namely telephone directory advertising services. As the respondents are allegedly major suppliers of advertising space, this practice of tied selling has allegedly impeded entry into or expansion of firms in the market because advertising agencies or others would provide the services or would expand to provide increased services, were space and services not tied together by the respondents. The result, it is alleged, is that competition has been, is, or is likely to be lessened substantially.

With respect to the alleged abuse of dominant position, the Director alleges that the respondents substantially or completely control the classes or species of business they engage in, namely the provision of advertising space and the provision of advertising services. The respondents, it is alleged, have engaged in or are engaging in a practice of anti-competitive acts in each of the markets for space and for services. In the advertising space market, the alleged practice focuses on the actions taken by the respondents upon entry by competing publishers of telephone directories into some of their markets. In the services market, the alleged practice includes acts directed by the respondents against alternative or independent suppliers of services. The acts alleged to be anti-competitive in the services market cover a wide gambit, including, among others, refusal to deal directly with certain service suppliers as agents for advertisers, providing space to independent service suppliers on less favourable terms than to the respondents' internal sales staff, "squeezing" the return available to independent service providers by restricting the availability of commission over time, and refusing to license its Yellow Pages trade-marks to competing service suppliers. These practices allegedly have had, are having, or are likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in the markets for the provision of advertising space in telephone directories and advertising services, respectively.

The respondent Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. is owned by Bell Canada and BCE Inc. It is comprised of two parts: a "directory" division and an "other business" division. The directory division embraces the directory publishing operations for Bell Canada in its territory, which covers most of Quebec and Ontario. The other business division is made up of various companies partly or wholly owned by BCE Inc., one of which is Tele-Direct (Services) Inc.[2] Tele-Direct (Services) Inc. publishes telephone directories under contract for non-Bell Canada telephone companies ("telcos") with discrete territories within Ontario,[3] for Télébec (owned by BCE Inc.) in parts of Quebec, and for other telcos outside of Ontario and Quebec. Tele-Direct (Services) Inc. also has international operations and includes Tele-Direct (Media) Inc., an accredited advertising agency specializing in Yellow Pages created by Tele-Direct in 1994. There is overlap between Tele-Direct (Services) Inc. and Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. at the officer level but Tele-Direct (Services) Inc. has its own employees who run its business. In these reasons, except where the context requires separate identification, the two respondents will be referred to together as "Tele-Direct" or the respondents.

The respondents deny each of the allegations in the Director's application. In particular, regarding the tied selling allegation, the respondents' primary position is that advertising services and advertising space form an inseparable package for reasons of efficiency and revenue growth. In response to the abuse of dominance allegations, the respondents maintain that they do not substantially or completely control, or have market power in, the alleged market as there are many adequate substitutes for telephone directory advertising, namely other local advertising media. With respect to the specific alleged anti-competitive acts, the respondents take the position that the allegations relate to acts directed at three specific groups operating in separate markets: other directory publishers, Tele-Direct's accredited agents and non-accredited service providers. Save for publishers, they assert that they are not in competition with the groups against whom their acts are said to be directed.

Five requests for leave to intervene were received and granted in this proceeding although two of those were later discontinued.

NDAP-TMP Worldwide Ltd. ("NDAP") and Directory Advertising Consultants Limited ("DAC") are accredited Yellow Pages advertising agencies which provide services to clients who wish to advertise in telephone directories, particularly those published by or for the various telcos across Canada. They arrange for the preparation and placement of the advertisements in these directories on behalf of their clients. They presented final argument on the issues relevant to the role of agencies in the market.

The Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company ("Anglo-Canadian"), through one of its divisions, publishes Yellow Pages directories in British Columbia for BC Tel and in parts of Quebec for Quebec Tel. Anglo-Canadian licenses the Yellow Pages trade-marks from the respondents. Anglo-Canadian presented final argument only on the issues related to the possible compulsory licensing of the Yellow Pages trade-marks requested by the Director as part of the abuse of dominance case.

InfoText Limited ("InfoText"), a subsidiary of Newfoundland Tel, and Thunder Bay Telephone supply subscriber listing information to Tele-Direct for directory publication for subscribers in Newfoundland and Labrador and in the city of Thunder Bay, respectively. InfoText subsequently discontinued its intervention. Both InfoText and Thunder Bay Telephone requested intervenor status only to place their requests for leave to intervene on the record, which the Tribunal allowed.

White Directory of Canada, Inc. ("White") is a non-telco publisher of telephone directories in St. Catharines, Niagara Falls and Fort Erie. White discontinued its intervention prior to the commencement of the hearing.

Preliminary Comments of the Presiding Judicial Member

The notice of application in this matter was filed on December 22, 1994. The hearing commenced in September 1995 and ended at the beginning of March 1996. This decision has taken over 11 months to issue. In view of the Tribunal's usual practice of dealing with matters before it more expeditiously, some explanation is warranted.

There is no doubt that this has been the most complex case presented to the Tribunal since its inception. In addition to a strongly contested question of market definition, the case, in reality, consists of five cases, each requiring the Tribunal to address substantial competition issues (tied selling, abuse of dominance in respect of agents, consultants and publishers and trade-marks). Each of the five cases involves a multitude of sub-issues. Many of the Director's numerous specific allegations were multifaceted. To each allegation, the respondents raised a host of defences.

The record in this case provides a telling indication of its complexity. It consists of almost 15,000 pages of transcript taken over 70 days and involving 58 witnesses, including five expert witnesses. There were 36 volumes of documents produced in the joint book of documents alone. A further 156 exhibits not included in the joint book were entered in evidence by the parties. The parties submitted over 600 pages of written argument and oral argument took 11 days.

In many respects, the approach of the Director and respondents to this case does not result in a joining of issues. Counsel for the Director referred to their respective positions as "ships passing in the night". The result is that the Tribunal has often been left to identify and define, as well as resolve, the issues.

Indeed, the appropriate conceptual frameworks for the various issues have been very difficult to determine. The application included novel allegations of anti-competitive acts (for example, "targeting" in respect of publisher entrants) and inter-relationships between issues, such as the alleged anti-competitive acts against agents in the abuse of dominance case and tying, which required considerable deliberation.

Finally, there was the troubling issue of tying. This is the first case in which tying has been raised as a "principal" or substantial allegation.[4] This is a particularly difficult issue when related to services. There has been considerable debate among competition lawyers, economists and jurists about the difficulty of addressing alleged anti-competitive activity without adversely affecting efficiency in the context of tying, and the Tribunal was squarely faced with these issues in this case.

[4] Tying was a minor portion of the case in Director of Investigation and Research v. The NutraSweet Company (1990), 32 C.P.R. (3d) 1, [1990] C.C.T.D. No. 17 (QL).

Summary of Conclusions

1. Telephone directory advertising is a distinct advertising medium without close substitutes and is therefore the relevant product market. Geographic markets are local, corresponding roughly to the scope of each of Tele-Direct's directories. Tele-Direct has an overwhelming share of the product market in all relevant local markets.

2. Tele-Direct has control or market power since the condition of easy entry required to overcome the presumption of market power arising from Tele-Direct's extremely large market share is not satisfied. Direct indicators of market power, such as the level of profits and methods of pricing, reinforce this conclusion.

3. With respect to the allegation of tied selling, telephone directory space and telephone directory advertising services constitute two products solely for national and regional advertisers and Tele-Direct has tied the supply of advertising space to the acquisition of advertising services for these customers. We have prohibited the practice of tied selling.

4. The allegation that Tele-Direct has engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts against entrants into telephone directory publishing, particularly in the Sault Ste. Marie and Niagara regions, is rejected.

5. The allegation that Tele-Direct has engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts directed against agents and resulting in substantial lessening of competition is rejected.

6. The allegation that Tele-Direct has engaged in a practice of discriminatory anti-competitive acts against consultants which have or are likely to result in a substantial lessening of competition is accepted. Tele-Direct is ordered to cease the practice. Other allegations respecting consultants are rejected.

7. The allegation that Tele-Direct's refusal to license its trade-marks to certain competitors is a practice of anti-competitive acts is rejected because the refusal is protected from being an anti-competitive act by subsection 79(5) of the Competition Act as a legitimate exercise of its rights under the Trade-marks Act.

II. BACKGROUND FACTS

A. TELEPHONE DIRECTORY ADVERTISING

A white pages telephone directory is a comprehensive list of all telephone subscribers in a specified area. A listing includes a name, address and telephone number. A classified telephone directory, historically printed on yellow paper (hence "Yellow Pages"),[5] includes all business telephone subscriber listings plus advertising arranged by heading or descriptive category. There are often multiple headings under which a directory user might search in order to find a certain type of business.

[5] The words "Yellow Pages" and "Pages jaunes" are registered trade-marks of the respondents in Canada although they are considered generic or descriptive in the United States. Tele-Direct licenses its trade-marks to other telco directory publishers in Canada but not to non-telco directory publishers.

Tele-Direct's Yellow Pages directories generally cover the same geographic area as the corresponding white pages. Some white pages directories, however, cover a much broader area than the Yellow Pages; in those cases, there would be several different Yellow Pages directories for a single white pages. Tele-Direct also publishes even more narrowly-scoped Yellow Pages directories for individual "neighbourhoods" in Montreal and Toronto.

Telcos are required by the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission ("CRTC") to distribute the appropriate up-to-date telephone directory for their district, both white and Yellow Pages, to telephone subscribers at no additional charge. Tele-Direct pays the various telcos for subscriber listing information and the right to publish and distribute the directories to subscribers. It makes its profits from the net advertising revenues. Tele-Direct publishes directories annually.

Every business telephone subscriber is entitled to receive in its Yellow Pages directory one light-type listing free of charge under the heading of its choice. Any features added to a listing, for example, bold type or extra lines, a second heading or another directory must be purchased. Actual advertisements in the Yellow Pages must, of course, also be purchased. For Tele-Direct's purposes, an "advertiser" is a subscriber who has a paid item in either the white pages (an enhanced listing) or Yellow Pages of a directory. Revenues from Yellow Pages advertising is far greater than any "advertising" expenditures in the white pages.[6] [6] Approximately 10 percent of Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. 1994 directory revenue came from expenditures in the white pages.

Approximately 50 percent of business subscribers are "advertisers". The remainder are called "non-advertisers" or "non-ads". The percentage of advertisers is smaller in the largest centres such as Montreal and Toronto and larger in smaller centres. Excluding neighbourhood directories and agency clients,[7] average advertising expenditures in 1994 in Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. directories were approximately $1,700, with advertisers spending that amount or less constituting around 30 percent of revenues but over 80 percent of advertisers. At the other end of the spectrum, the top 30 percent of revenues comes from only about two percent of advertisers, those who spend more than approximately $10,000 annually. A few very large advertisers spending an average of $113,000 provide 6.5 percent of revenues but represent only 0.1 percent of advertisers by number.

A number of different types of advertising can be purchased in a Tele-Direct Yellow Pages directory. Apart from the basic upgrades to its initial free listing (e.g., second heading, bold type), a business may purchase "in-column" or "display" advertising. The pages in Tele-Direct's directories are generally divided into four columns; an "in-column" advertisement fits within the confines of one of the columns with the variation being in the height of the advertisement. In-column advertisements are arranged alphabetically, interspersed among the simple listings.

A variation on the in-column advertisement is the trade item advertisement, including the trade-name, trade-mark and custom trade-mark advertisements (usually referred to together as

[7] The very small and the very large accounts.

"trade-marks" or "trade-mark advertisements"). In order to place this type of advertisement, the listed businesses must have authorization to use the trade-name or mark in their directory advertising. The trade-name or mark acts as the heading for the advertisement, followed by one or more listings of specific businesses.

Display advertisements range in size from a quarter column (1/16 of a page) to a full page. The placement of these advertisements is loosely alphabetical, as space on a page permits. Options like various types of borders, red, other colours, "white knockout" (white background instead of yellow) may be added to both in-column and display advertisements. They also feature a variety of design and layout techniques, print styles and sizes and graphics.

B. PUBLISHERS

Revenues from the telephone directory business in Canada amount to about $900 million to $1 billion annually. The vast majority of these are generated by the telco-affiliated directories. Apart from the Tele-Direct directories and other directories published by or on behalf of telcos, there are over 250 "independent" directories published in Tele-Direct's territory. These directories are independent in the sense that they have no connection to the provider of telephone service. They come in a wide variety of formats (size, subject, colour of paper) but can, generally, be characterized as two types: "niche" and "broadly-scoped" directories.

Niche directories operate in geographic areas which are substantially smaller than the areas covered by the corresponding telco directories. These directories have a generally smaller, more tightly-scoped distribution area than the telco directory, allowing a local retailer to advertise to a smaller geographic area at a lower cost. Niche directories are often directed at a particular religious, ethnic or demographic group.

Two independent publishers of broadly-scoped directories currently produce directories in parts of Tele-Direct's territory. White, which was for a brief time an intervenor in this proceeding, has published directories in the Niagara region since 1993. Dial Source Plus, Inc. ("DSP") publishes a directory in the Sault Ste. Marie area and has also done so since 1993.

C. SERVICE SUPPLIERS

Telephone directory advertising services, including the sale of space in Tele-Direct's directories, are provided by three groups: Tele-Direct's internal sales force, advertising agencies and consultants. More detail on each of these groups and their particular method of operation will be provided as appropriate throughout these reasons. For the moment, the following should suffice to introduce the various players.

The internal sales force of Tele-Direct consists largely of unionized sales representatives who are remunerated through a combination of salary, commission and other incentives. Services similar to those provided by Tele-Direct's internal sales force are also offered by outside advertising agencies. These include general advertising agencies which, if they deal with Yellow Pages at all, usually have a department devoted to that function, advertising agencies specializing in Yellow Pages only and in-house advertising agencies.

Agencies are not remunerated directly by the advertiser but, rather, through a commission paid by the publisher as a percentage of the value of the advertising purchased. While the agency receives commission, the agency's employees earn salary for providing services to the agency's clients. Agencies are restricted in the accounts that they can service as Tele-Direct only pays commission on accounts which meet certain criteria. Tele-Direct's commissionable account definition has undergone a number of changes over the years which will be discussed in further detail later. It is not controversial that fewer accounts meet the current criteria than met prior definitions. The current criteria were adopted in 1993 and are sometimes referred to as the "national" account definition.[8] In order to receive the 25 percent commission payable on these accounts, the agency placing the advertising must be accredited as a Certified Marketing Representative or "CMR" in accordance with the standards set by the Yellow Pages Publishers Association ("YPPA").

Services are also provided by Yellow Pages consultants. Consultants create advertisements for Yellow Pages advertisers and advise them on where and to what extent they should advertise in the Yellow Pages. Typically, consultants obtain cost savings on behalf of advertisers by advising the purchase of smaller or less colourful advertisements, more limited geographic placement of advertisements or by redesigning the advertising. They are not recognized by Tele-Direct, which refers to them by the less complimentary term of "cut agents". Consultants do not receive commission. In general, consultants are paid by the advertiser out of the savings in advertising expenditures resulting from the adoption of the consultant's advice.

[8] Under this rule, in very general terms, to qualify for commission, an account must involve advertising in at least 20 Yellow Pages directories within Tele-Direct's territory and at least 20 percent of the total value of the advertising must be placed in directories of another publisher outside Tele-Direct's territory.

III. TIME LIMITATIONS

The respondents argue that the Director is subject to three time constraints which limit the allegations of anti-competitive acts that can be advanced for the purposes of the Director's case under section 79. These arguments are that: the Competition Act is not retrospective; the Director's allegations are statute-barred by the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act;[9] and subsection 79(6) of the Competition Act further limits those allegations. Each argument will be dealt with in turn.

The particular allegations that are challenged relate to Tele-Direct's requirement of "issue billing" (payment from CMRs required at the time of issue of a directory as opposed to monthly payments when advertisers deal with Tele-Direct's general sales force) and its restricting of the commissionability criteria applicable to CMRs. The actual words at paragraph 65 of the application are:

[9] R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50.

> . . . the Applicant says that the Respondents have engaged in the following anti-competitive acts:
>
> . . .
>
> (c) providing advertising space to independent advertising agencies on less favourable terms and conditions than to its own sales staff, including: . . .
>
> (ii) requiring that such independent agencies pay the total amount outstanding for a year's insertion of advertising in a given directory, while customers placing orders through internal sales staff may pay such amount monthly over the course of the year without interest charges; . . .
> (d) squeezing the return available to independent advertising agencies by acts which include:
> . . .
>
> (iv) further restricting the availability of commission to such agencies over time.

A. RETROSPECTIVITY

There is no apparent difference between the parties with respect to the broad legal principles regarding retrospectivity. The general rule is that statutes are not to be construed as having retrospective operation unless such a construction is expressly or by necessary implication required by the language of the particular statute.[10] Côté, one of the authorities cited by the respondents, states that a retrospective effect occurs when a new statute is applied "in such a way as to prescribe the legal regime of facts entirely accomplished prior to its commencement." He further states that it is not retrospective operation when a statute is applied to ongoing facts which began prior to the statute's commencement.[11] The Driedger text, also referred to by the respondents, describes ongoing facts or "continuing facts" as

---

[10] Gustavson Drilling (1964) Limited v. M.N.R. (1975), [1977] 1 S.C.R. 271 at 279.

[11] P. Côté, The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada, 2d ed. (Quebec: Yvon Blais, 1991) at 118, 123.

> . . . one or more facts that endure over a period of time, such as ownership or imprisonment or residency. A continuing fact can be any state of affairs or status or relationship that is capable of persisting over time. . . .[12]

The dispute between the parties is whether the allegations advanced by the Director regarding issue billing and commissionability criteria imply retrospective application of the Competition Act.

The respondents submit that since no concept of an "anti-competitive act" existed before 1986, when the Competition Act came into force, no act which occurred prior to 1986 can now be characterized as anti-competitive for purposes of section 79. They also argue that section 79 on its terms can only be applied to discrete acts or events, of which there must be multiple instances to constitute a "practice".

With respect to commissionability, the respondents argue that the Director is alleging that they "narrowed" the definition by discrete acts which occurred in 1975 and again in 1993. The 1975 "narrowing" cannot be anti-competitive and the 1993 "narrowing" alone is only one act and cannot amount to a "practice". Likewise, they say that the Director has alleged that Tele-Direct's "decision" to require issue billing, another discrete act which took place long before 1986, cannot be an anti-competitive act. The fact that these decisions resulted in allegedly restrictive policies that have been applied continuously ever since, they submit, is irrelevant because there is no "new act" of "requiring issue billing" or of "narrowing" besides 1993.

[12] Driedger on the Construction of Statutes, 3d ed. by R. Sullivan (Toronto: Butterworths, 1994) at 514-15.

The Director argues that the respondents have mischaracterized the pleadings. The Director submits that the current situation, the day-to-day restricted state of the commissionable market and the ongoing requirement of issue billing, are the focus of the allegations of anti-competitive acts, rather than the original decisions to implement these policies. The pre-1986 events, the Director submits, shed light on history, intent and progress. Thus, the Director says there is no question of retrospectivity.

We are of the view that section 79 is not restricted in its application to discrete acts or events as opposed to an ongoing course of conduct or state of affairs. The meaning of "practice" in subsection 79(1) was considered by the Tribunal in the NutraSweet case.[13] There, the Tribunal found that a practice may exist where there is more than an "isolated act or acts". It also observed that the examples of anti-competitive acts listed in section 78 could entail both a course of conduct over time as well as discrete acts:

> . . . The anti-competitive acts covered in s. 78 run a wide gamut. Some almost certainly entail a course of conduct over a period of time, such as freight equalization in para. 78(c), whereas others consist of discrete acts, such as the setting of product specifications in para. 78(g). The interpretation of "practice" must be sufficiently broad so as to allow for a wide variety of anti-competitive acts. Accordingly, the tribunal is of the view that a practice may exist where there is more than an "isolated act or acts". For the same reasons, the tribunal is also of the view that different individual anti-competitive acts taken together may constitute a practice.[14]

[13] Supra note 4.

[14] Ibid. at 35.

We are satisfied that the practice contemplated by subsection 79(1) must be more than an isolated act or acts but can include a number of individual anti-competitive acts taken together or a course of anti-competitive conduct over time.

Clearly, the Director's pleadings contemplate the violation of subsection 79(1) of the Competition Act by a current practice of anti-competitive acts by the respondents. The fact that the act or acts giving rise to the current practice took place prior to 1986 does not make application of the subsection retrospective. In this case, the Director is not challenging the initial decisions by Tele-Direct to commence issue billing and to restrict commission in 1975 as discrete anti-competitive acts in and of themselves. Requiring payment from CMRs at time of issue of a directory may have been instituted in 1959 but it continued after 1986 and existed when the Director's application was filed. Similarly, the "narrow" commissionability market which commenced with a change in the commissionability rules in 1975 continued after 1986. While it may have been narrowed further in 1993, it is not the discrete act of narrowing that is in issue in this case. Rather, it is the ongoing narrow commissionability rules that existed when the Director's application was filed and that were, in the view of the Director, exacerbated in 1993 with further narrowing, that are the focus of the allegations of anti-competitive conduct. As such, there is no retrospective application of the Competition Act in this case.

Nor is it inappropriate in these circumstances to have regard to events occurring prior to 1986 to consider fully the allegations made under section 79. We take guidance from the approach adopted by the Supreme Court in Gamble v. R. Wilson J., speaking for the majority, states:

> . . . Frequently an alleged current violation [of the Charter] will have to be placed in the context of its pre-Charter history in order to be fully appreciated. . . . Charter standards cannot be applied to events occurring before its proclamation but it would be folly, in my view, to exclude from the Court's consideration crucial pre-Charter history.[15]

It is clear from the words of the application, and from the way the case developed before the Tribunal, that the current state of affairs is the focus of the Director's allegations of anti-competitive conduct. The respondents have not argued that the Director's pleadings misled them regarding the case they had to meet and that therefore they have suffered prejudice in preparing or presenting their case. Indeed, such an argument could not be advanced given the detailed and inclusive record regarding not only the current situation in the market but also the historical context.

B. CROWN LIABILITY AND PROCEEDINGS ACT

The respondents' second limitation argument is based on section 32 of the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act which reads:

[15] [1988] 2 S.C.R. 595 at 625-26.

> Except as otherwise provided in this Act or in any other Act of Parliament, the laws relating to prescription and the limitation of actions in force in a province between subject and subject apply to any proceedings by or against the Crown in respect of a cause of action arising in that province, and proceedings by or against the Crown in respect of a cause of action arising otherwise than in a province shall be taken within six years after the cause of action arose.

The respondents argue that the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act statutorily bars the Crown (here, the Director) from acting on a cause of action which arose more than six years before the issuing of the application, that is, prior to December 22, 1988. Thus, they argue, all references to changes made in commissionability criteria or any other alleged anti-competitive act after 1986, when sections 78 and 79 were enacted, but prior to December 22, 1988 (six years before the application was filed), are statute-barred.

The respondents did not press this point and it will be dealt with summarily. First, as argued by the Director, the respondents cannot rely on the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act as they did not plead it in their response. The law is clear that a limitation period does not terminate a cause of action but provides a defendant with a procedural means of defence which must be pleaded in the defence.[16]

Second, section 32 of the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act is simply not applicable to this case. The opening words of section 32 indicate that if there is a specific limitation period in the statute governing the cause of action involved, here the Competition Act, that limitation period applies.[17] It is only in the absence of a specific provision that either a provincial limitation period or the six-year limitation period in section 32 is considered. Subsection 79(6) of the Competition Act, to which the respondents have also made reference, provides a limitation period for proceedings brought under that section.

C. SUBSECTION 79(6)

Subsection 79(6) of the Competition Act states:

> No application may be made under this section in respect of a practice of anti-competitive acts more than three years after the practice has ceased.

Again, the respondents did not plead this limitation period. Further, while they refer to subsection 79(6), the respondents made no effort to argue how it applies in this case. No more need be said.

IV. IMPACT OF THE CONSENT ORDER

The respondents argue that the Director is estopped from bringing this application before the Tribunal to the extent that it deals with issues adjudicated by the Tribunal in a previous proceeding. On November 18, 1994, the Tribunal issued an order, the terms of which were agreed to by the parties, as a result of an application brought by the Director against the Yellow Pages publishers in Canada.[18] We will refer to that order as the Consent Order. The respondents in the present proceedings were among the respondents named in that order.

[18] Director of Investigation and Research v. AGT Directory Limited et al., CT-94/2.

In the application which resulted in the Consent Order, the Director alleged that the respondents in those proceedings had jointly engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts within the meaning of sections 78 and 79 of the Act. The specific allegations levied against those respondents and found at paragraph 74 of the application were as follows:

> . . . it is the Director's submission that the Respondents engaged in the following anti-competitive acts to impede or prevent a competitor's entry into or eliminating a competitor from a market. The anti-competitive acts of the Respondents constituted a practice of anti-competitive acts by the Respondents which had the effect of substantially preventing or lessening competition in the relevant product market of the Selling of National Advertising into Telephone Directories in Canada. The Respondents:
> (i) agreed that only Publishers could Sell National Advertising directly into Telephone Directories;
>
> (ii) appointed each other as their exclusive Selling Companies for the Selling of National Advertising in Telephone Directories in each of their respective territories and therefore did not compete with such exclusive Selling Companies in those territories;
>
> (iii) agreed to a Head Office Rule, thus precluding the National Advertiser from either placing the advertisement directly with all the Respondents which actually published the advertisements or using an entity unrelated to any of the Respondents to place the advertising directly in each Respondent's Telephone Directories.

The Consent Order contains prohibitions designed to prevent the respondents who agreed to it from engaging in certain acts in the selling of national advertising in Yellow Pages telephone directories, including:

> With regard to the sale of national advertising in Yellow Pages telephone directories, each respondent shall be prohibited from:
>
> . . .
>
> (f) agreeing with any other respondent on the criteria for determining which national advertising accounts are commissionable;
>
> (g) agreeing with any other respondent on the rate of commission > payable, except during a transition period ending June 30, 1995 during which a minimum commission of 25% will be available to selling companies for national advertising which meets the commissionability criteria established by each respondent. . . .[19]

The parties appear to be in agreement with respect to the law of issue estoppel. The doctrine of issue estoppel precludes an action being brought against a party with respect to an issue which was already decided in an earlier proceeding. There are three requirements to be met before issue estoppel applies so as to bar a new proceeding. First, there must have been an earlier proceeding in which there was a determination of the same issue. Second, the determination of the issue in the earlier proceeding must have been a final decision. Finally, the parties to each of the two proceedings must be the same.[20] The doctrine of issue estoppel applies equally to issues decided in consent orders and in contested orders.[21]

The Supreme Court of Canada has held that the decision upon which a party relies for issue estoppel must have dealt directly and necessarily with the issue which is being raised for a second time:

> . . . It will not suffice if the question arose collaterally or incidentally in the earlier proceedings or is one which must be inferred by argument from the judgment. . . . The question out of which the estoppel is said to arise must have been "fundamental to the decision arrived at" in the earlier proceedings.[22] (references omitted)

Tele-Direct argues that the issues relating to its commissionability criteria alleged by the Director in this case, namely, that its policy of offering commission only on accounts which meet its "national" definition is an anti-competitive act and constitutes tied selling, were dealt with by the Tribunal in the Consent Order. Tele-Direct's position is that the Director is estopped from re-litigating these issues in the present proceeding. According to Tele-Direct, the Director, and the Tribunal by virtue of its issuance of the Consent Order, were satisfied that any substantial lessening of competition in the sales of national advertising would be alleviated by the terms of the order. If the Director seeks to vary the Consent Order, the Director can only do so by following the procedure for rescission and variation of consent orders which is governed by section 106 of the Act; this course was not pursued by the Director.

The respondents further argue that, by implication, the Consent Order authorizes them to set their own commissionability criteria without interference as long as they do not agree on the rate with any other publisher. Accordingly, they say that it is inconsistent for the Director to bring this proceeding, which could result in the Tribunal interfering with Tele-Direct's decisions relating to its commissionability criteria for national advertising.

The Director's position is that the issues raised in the two proceedings are not the same and that, therefore, the doctrine of issue estoppel does not apply. According to the Director, the anti-competitive acts which were the subject of the Consent Order were certain joint practices of the Canadian Yellow Pages Service ("CANYPS") members (the telco publishers) regarding the manner in which national advertising could be placed in their directories. It was the agreements between the respondents to the Consent Order which constituted the anti-competitive acts and resulted in a substantial lessening of competition which were remedied by the order. In the present proceeding, however, it is alleged anti-competitive acts of Tele-Direct itself which are the subject of review. There was no decision in the earlier proceedings regarding how Tele-Direct sets its own commissionability criteria or how it otherwise deals with independent agencies located in its territory.

The requirements for issue estoppel are not met in this case. While the Consent Order was a final decision of the Tribunal, the terms of which are binding on Tele-Direct, the issues which were dealt with in that proceeding are not the same as those in the present case. This is clear from the application and supporting documentation and the Consent Order. It was the substantial lessening of competition resulting from the respondents' joint practice of anti-competitive acts or joint abuse of dominance that the Director sought to remedy by the Consent Order. The instant case deals with entirely separate allegations of anti-competitive acts of Tele-Direct acting alone. The Consent Order prohibits the respondents named in it from agreeing amongst themselves on the rate of commission payable. That order does not address the commissionability criteria which an individual publisher may set. Nothing in the Consent Order limits the jurisdiction of the Tribunal to review the commissionability criteria set by Tele-Direct.

V. TRADE-MARKS

The Director alleges that the respondents, by "refusing to licence [their] trade-marks, such as the words `Yellow Pages' and `Pages Jaunes' and the walking fingers logo, to competing suppliers of advertising services", have engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts contrary to section 79 of the Act. In particular, the Director seeks to prohibit the respondents' alleged practice of "selective licensing" whereby certain competitors are refused licences, allegedly arbitrarily or pursuant to an anti-competitive intent, and others are not. As a remedy, the Director seeks an order "that the respondents licence, at the request of independent advertising agencies, including consultants, and on commercially reasonable terms and conditions, the trade-marks registered for the respondents' own use in relation to telephone directories."

The Director's submissions raise two issues. First, the Tribunal must determine whether the refusal to license a trade-mark to certain persons or groups of persons is an anti-competitive act. Second, if it is an anti-competitive act, the Tribunal must determine whether it has jurisdiction to order the respondents to license their trade-marks. Having carefully considered the evidence and the submissions of counsel, the Tribunal is of the view that the selective refusal to license a trade-mark is not an anti-competitive act. Accordingly, the second question need not be answered.

The facts concerning the respondents' refusal to license their trade-marks are not disputed. The respondents license the use of their trade-marks to CMRs and other telco-affiliated directory publishers; they do not license other advertising agencies or consultants. The respondents aggressively defend their trade-marks against what they perceive to be infringement but they do not pursue every perceived infringement with equal zeal. The evidence is that Tele-

Direct overlooks certain uses of its trade-marks but threatens to, or institutes, legal action against the use of its trade-marks by, for instance, consultants.

Both the Trade-marks Act[23] and the Competition Act are relevant. The purpose of a trade-mark is to distinguish the wares or services of the owner from those of others.[24] The Trade-marks Act provides that the owner of a trade-mark has the exclusive right to its use.[25] Further, the owner of a trade-mark may license another to use that trade-mark, and that use is deemed to have the same effect as use by the owner.[26] Subsection 79(5) of the Competition Act provides:

> For the purpose of this section, an act engaged in pursuant only to the exercise of any right or enjoyment of any interest derived under the Copyright Act, Industrial Design Act, Integrated Circuit Topography Act, Patent Act, Trade-marks Act or any other Act of Parliament pertaining to intellectual or industrial property is not an anti-competitive act.

[23] Trade-marks Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-13.

[24] A "trade-mark" is defined in s. 2 of the Trade-marks Act as "a mark that is used by a person for the purpose of distinguishing or so as to distinguish wares or services manufactured, sold, leased, hired or performed by him from those manufactured, sold, leased, hired or performed by others. . . ."

[25] Trade-marks Act, s. 19.

[26] S. 50(1) of the Trade-marks Act, as am. S.C. 1993, c. 15, s. 69, provides:

> For the purposes of this Act, if an entity is licensed by or with the authority of the owner of the trade-mark to use the trade-mark in a country and the owner has, under the licence, direct or indirect control of the character or quality of the wares or services, then the use, advertisement or display of the trade-mark in that country as or in a trade-mark, trade-name or otherwise by that entity has, and is deemed always to have had, the same effect as such a use, advertisement or display of the trade-mark in that country by the owner.

The Director submits that subsection 79(5) does not preclude a finding that "abuses" of intellectual property rights are anti-competitive acts. It is the Director's position that Tele-Direct's practice of selective licensing is an abuse of Tele-Direct's trade-mark rights. The Director asserts that an owner's "exclusive right to use" its trade-mark is not unlimited. The Director relies upon case law which has defined "use" not to include activities which are for purposes other than distinguishing wares or services of the owner from the wares or services of others.[27] Accordingly, the Director submits that the respondents' position that "any written use of the words `Yellow Pages' would be dealt with" and the fact that the respondents have used their "superior resources" to assert this claim successfully is evidence of the respondents' exclusionary intent in respect of their trade-marks.

Tele-Direct argues that, as owner of the trade-marks, it has the statutory right to decide to whom it will or will not license those trade-marks, including the right to refuse to licence where it is not in its best interest to do so. It argues that there is no evidence that it has adopted a policy of refusing to license trade-marks to competitors for the purposes of restraining competition; rather, it does not make sense for Tele-Direct to license its trade-marks to consultants whose businesses are based on the premise that Tele-Direct "rips-off" its customers.

In support of his position, the Director relies on the decision of the United States District Court in Car-Freshener Corp. v. Auto-Aid Manufacturing Corp., where the Court stated that there was "no doubt that a trade-mark may be utilized in such a manner as to constitute a violation of antitrust laws"[28] and offered several examples: the use of a strong trade-mark to unlawfully tie a weaker product, unlawful price discrimination exercised with respect to a trade-mark, or other illegal anti-competitive practices. The Tribunal is in agreement with the Director that there may be instances where a trade-mark may be misused. However, in the Tribunal's view, something more than the mere exercise of statutory rights, even if exclusionary in effect, must be present before there can be a finding of misuse of a trade-mark. Subsection 79(5) explicitly recognizes this.

[27] E.g., comparative advertising or use of trade-mark in a merely descriptive sense, for example, does not constitute infringement: see Clairol International Corp. v. Thomas Supply & Equipment Co., [1968] 2 Ex. C.R. 552 at 556; Syntex Inc. v. Apotex Inc. (1984), 1 C.P.R. (3d) 145 (F.C.A.).

The respondents' refusal to license their trade-marks falls squarely within their prerogative. Inherent in the very nature of the right to license a trade-mark is the right for the owner of the trade-mark to determine whether or not, and to whom, to grant a licence; selectivity in licensing is fundamental to the rationale behind protecting trade-marks. The respondents' trade-marks are valuable assets and represent considerable goodwill in the marketplace. The decision to license a trade-mark -- essentially, to share the goodwill vesting in the asset -- is a right which rests entirely with the owner of the mark. The refusal to license a trade-mark is distinguishable from a situation where anti-competitive provisions are attached to a trade-mark licence.

The owner's exclusive jurisdiction over licensing accords with the scheme of the Trade-marks Act. There is no statutory means by which a person can petition the Registrar of Trademarks for a licence to use a trade-mark, implying that the decision to license rests with the owner of the mark. Furthermore, the licensing provisions of the Trade-marks Act provide that, in order to constitute a valid licence, the trade-mark owner should have "direct or indirect control of the character or quality of the wares or services" to which the licensee was attaching the mark. Indeed, in Unitel Communications Inc. v. Bell Canada,[29] the Court expunged trade-marks owned by Bell Canada, in part because Bell Canada had failed to exercise control over the use of its trade-marks by an independent telco. In the case at bar, the lack of control over the quality of the goods or services is particularly relevant since the Director is suggesting that the respondents' trade-marks should be licensed to consultants with whom the respondents do not share identity of interest.

While the evidence suggests that Tele-Direct is motivated, at least in part, by competition in its decision to refuse to license its trade-marks, the fact is that the Trade-marks Act allows trade-mark owners to decide to whom they will license their trade-marks. The respondents' motivation for their decision to refuse to license a competitor becomes irrelevant as the Trade-marks Act does not prescribe any limit to the exercise of that right.

The respondents' legitimate desire to protect the value of the goodwill vested in their trade-marks by refusing to license them does not amount to an anti-competitive act. In view of the strength of their trade-marks, the respondents can be expected to be, and are entitled to be, protective of their rights. Indeed, if the respondents did not protect their marks, they would risk having them lose their distinctiveness, as in Unitel. This is a real concern, given that the Yellow Pages trade-marks are no longer registered in the United States.

While independent advertising agencies and consultants may wish to use the respondents' trade-marks, there is simply no basis for granting an order requiring the respondents to license their trade-marks.[30] Although the respondents may have been zealous in protecting their trade-marks, both in refusing to license and in threatening litigation for infringement, the irrefutable fact is that the respondents have been, through the provisions of the Trade-marks Act, accorded the right to refuse to license their trade- marks, even selectively. The exercise of this right is protected from being an anti-competitive act by subsection 79(5) of the Act.

VI. MARKET DEFINITION

A necessary first step in deciding this case is to define the relevant market. This must be done for purposes of section 79 in order to determine if Tele-Direct, as alleged by the Director, "substantially or completely control[s], throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business". The Tribunal decided in Director of Investigation and Research v. D & B Companies of Canada[31] that "class or species of business" means product market and "control" means market power. The remaining phrase, "throughout Canada or any area thereof", refers to [30] In fact, neither the Director nor the respondents directed the Tribunal to any cases where a party was ordered to license a trade-mark.

[31] (1995), 64 C.P.R. (3d) 216, [1995] C.C.T.D. No. 20 (QL) (Comp. Trib.).

the geographic market. Therefore, in order for section 79 to apply, the Tribunal must first conclude that Tele-Direct has market power.

A market must also be defined in order to consider the allegation of tying, brought under section 77. Under subsection 77(2), the Tribunal must find that "tied selling, because it is engaged in by a major supplier of a product in a market . . . is likely to" have a number of detrimental effects. If Tele-Direct is found to have market power, it would qualify as a "major supplier".

A. PRODUCT MARKET

The argument and the evidence presented to us regarding the relevant product market focus on whether there are close substitutes for telephone directory advertising. The Director includes in his relevant market advertising in Tele-Direct's Yellow Pages directories and in telephone directories produced by independent (non-telco affiliated) publishers.

The respondents concede that advertising in independent directories is in the same relevant market as advertising in Yellow Pages directories. Their position is that both independent and Yellow Pages directories form part of a broader product market comprised of all local advertising media. The respondents define "local advertising" in this context as advertising designed to promote business at a particular location. They would include, for example, direct mail, outdoor signage, community newspapers, daily newspapers, catalogues, trade magazines, flyers, radio, television -- in fact advertising in any medium as long as the advertising is designed to promote a particular location.

It is important to keep in mind that our goal in defining the relevant market in this case is to determine whether other local advertising media provide competitive discipline for Tele-Direct in respect of its Yellow Pages pricing[32] and output decisions. The Director argues that they do not. The respondents argue that they do.

(1) Substitutability -- The Basic Test

The parties agree that the fundamental test or "touchstone" for determining the boundaries of the relevant product market is substitutability, as the Tribunal has consistently held in previous decisions, including three abuse of dominant position cases.[33] Products must be close substitutes in order to be placed in the same product market. The parties also agree that the appropriate approach to or framework for market definition is set out in the Federal Court of Appeal decision in Director of Investigation and Research v. Southam Inc.[34] Both parties quote the same passage from that decision:

[32] Or surrogates such as service, quality, etc.

[33] NutraSweet, supra note 4; Director of Investigation and Research v. Laidlaw Waste Systems Ltd. (1992), 40 C.P.R. (3d) 289, [1992] C.C.T.D. No. 1 (QL); D & B, supra note .

[34] [1995] 3 F.C. 557 (C.A). An important issue in Southam was whether the two Pacific Press dailies and various community newspapers, all owned by Southam, were in the same product market. The Tribunal found that they were not; the Court of Appeal reversed on this point. An appeal to the Supreme Court is pending.

> Products can be said to be in the same market if they are close substitutes. In turn, products are close substitutes if buyers are willing to switch from one product to another in response to a relative change in price, i.e. if there is buyer price sensitivity. Direct evidence of substitutability includes both statistical evidence of buyer price sensitivity and anecdotal evidence, such as the testimony of buyers on past or hypothetical responses to price changes. However, since direct evidence may be difficult to obtain, it is also possible to measure substitutability and thereby infer price sensitivity through indirect means. Such indirect evidence focusses on certain practical indicia, such as functional interchangeability and industry views/behaviour, to show that products are close substitutes.[35] (reference omitted)

It is also common ground between the parties that this approach does not represent a radical departure from the approach used by the Tribunal in previous decisions.

(2) The Southam Decision

The Southam decision is the first Court of Appeal decision to deal in any depth with market definition under the Act.[36] That the parties differ considerably on how the general approach stated by the Court of Appeal in Southam is to be applied to the facts of the case before us is evident from the broad product market proposed by the respondents and the narrow product market proposed by the Director.

(a) Direct Evidence of Substitutability

[35] Ibid. at 632-33.

[36] Southam was followed in R. v. Clarke Transport Canada Inc. (1995), 130 D.L.R. (4th) 500 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)), (1995) 64 C.P.R. (3d) 289. While the Director referred to that decision, it was not argued in any detail nor, apparently, relied on by either side.

There is no dispute that, first, we must consider any direct evidence of substitutability. In Southam the Court of Appeal states:

> To the extent that it is possible to adduce statistical evidence of high demand elasticity, such evidence is virtually conclusive that two products are in the same product market. Evidence of price sensitivity can also come in anecdotal form which is a less conclusive, although still a persuasive factor tending to show that products are close substitutes.[37]

The Director did not adduce any statistical evidence. The respondents mention the two "Elliott" reports, studies conducted for Tele-Direct in early 1993 for purposes other than this proceeding, as "statistical data" on advertisers' reaction to relative price increases.[38] The Elliott reports were general surveys of "customer satisfaction" which did not deal with price sensitivity of advertisers between different media.[39] Even if they had dealt with relative prices of various different media, in our view the Elliott reports would not qualify as the type of direct statistical evidence of demand cross-elasticity that was intended by the Court of Appeal. Such a study would have to be undertaken for the purpose of determining cross-elasticity between the products alleged to be in the market, be conducted in an appropriately rigorous fashion and meet tests of statistical significance. While the Elliott reports do not qualify as statistical evidence of demand cross-elasticity, they will be considered as part of the indirect evidence of substitutability.

[38] Confidential exhibit CJ-14 (blue vol. 5), tab 173; confidential exhibit CJ-19 (blue vol. 10), tab 285 (Newfoundland).

[39] The participants were asked if they would shift their advertising from Tele-Direct to an independent directory in response to a 15 percent increase in Tele-Direct's prices.

Although the Director called a number of buyers or advertisers as witnesses in this case, he does not rely on their evidence as "anecdotal evidence" of price sensitivity, from his point of view, low price sensitivity. He refers to their evidence as indirect evidence under various rubrics. The respondents likewise treat the testimony of the advertisers as indirect evidence. We will therefore not address the question of whether that testimony provides any direct evidence of price sensitivity or a lack thereof.

In the absence of direct evidence regarding buyer price sensitivity, we must therefore proceed to examine the available indirect evidence or "practical indicia" to draw inferences about price sensitivity.

(b) Indirect Evidence of Substitutability

The Director has organized the evidence of product market definition using headings similar to those set out in the Merger Enforcement Guidelines:[40] end use, physical and technical characteristics, views, strategies, behaviour and identity of buyers, trade views, strategies and behaviour ("inter-industry competition"), price relationships and relative price levels and switching costs. The respondents have also used the same headings to organize their evidence, although in a slightly different order. The Merger Enforcement Guidelines are not sacrosanct.

[40] Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada, Director of Investigation and Research, Merger Enforcement Guidelines, Information Bulletin No. 5 (Supply and Services Canada, March 1991).

But, as the parties are agreed that the evidence may be organized according to those guidelines, we accept that this is a practical and useful way in which to proceed.

The parties may use the same organizational structure but they do not agree on the respective roles to be accorded to the various practical indicia. In particular, they take different positions on the way in which the indicia of "functional interchangeability" and "inter-industry competition" should be employed in defining a product market based on the Court of Appeal decision in Southam. They also differ, of course, on the nature of the evidence and the conclusions to be drawn therefrom that should be considered under each heading. A detailed review of the evidence and the arguments under each heading will follow. We must first address, however, the arguments regarding the general approach to the practical indicia or indirect evidence of substitutability.

The Director submits that the Court of Appeal in Southam found that functional interchangeability is a "vital feature" and a "central part of the framework" of market definition, although it is not a sufficient condition for two products to be in the same market. The Director argues that the Court of Appeal did not state that functional interchangeability and inter-industry competition were the "sole" or "driving" factors in market definition but only found that ignoring those factors was an error of law.

The respondents in their written argument agree that the Tribunal must consider the evidence with respect to functional interchangeability and that it is central but alone does not conclusively demonstrate that two products belong in the same relevant market -- other factors must be considered. They point out that the additional factor that was "very important" to the Court of Appeal in Southam was inter-industry competition. During oral argument, counsel took the stricter position that the Court of Appeal held that if functional interchangeability and "broad" inter-industry competition are found, then it is an error not to place the products under consideration in the same market. If the two indicia mentioned are present, the Tribunal must infer price sensitivity and therefore a single product market.

The Tribunal must determine whether the Court of Appeal prescribed, as a matter of law, the role and importance of the factors or indicia of "functional interchangeability" and "inter-industry competition". With respect to functional interchangeability as one of the indirect indicia, the Court of Appeal stated that it was "not simply one of many criteria to be considered but a critical part of the framework." It also confirmed that functional interchangeability will generally be regarded as a "necessary but not sufficient condition to be met before products will be placed in the same market." With respect to inter-industry competition, the Court of Appeal found that evidence of "broad" competition, namely that the two types of newspapers were striving to reach many of the same advertisers with significant success by the community newspapers which, in turn, preoccupied Southam and generated responses by it, was sufficient to show competition "in fact".[41]

A finding that the products alleged to be in the same market serve the same relevant purpose is a necessary first step in the analysis. A finding of functional interchangeability, however, is not alone sufficient to place the products in the same market. As the Court stated:

> . . . There are other factors which may tend to reinforce, or undermine, a finding that two products are functionally interchangeable.[42]

With respect to evidence of "broad" inter-industry competition, we do not understand the Court to be saying that the presence of such evidence, along with evidence of functional interchangeability, will, in every case, dictate that the products in question should be placed in the same product market. If the Court intended to confine the analysis to these two practical indicia and effectively negate consideration of other factors, like, for example, the views, strategies and behaviour of buyers, the Court would have done so explicitly. It did not do so. In Southam, the Court confined its conclusions to the matter before it:

> While evidence of substitutability through functional interchangeability and inter-industry competition was adduced, the Tribunal ultimately ignored such evidence. In doing so, the Tribunal adopted an overly narrow approach to substitutability as it dismissed "broad" conceptions of interchangeability and inter-industry competition. In doing so, the Tribunal erred in focusing predominantly on price sensitivity. In this case, the similarity of use between Pacific Dailies and community newspapers, and the competitiveness which existed between them, is sufficient to place both in the same product market.[43] (emphasis added)

We conclude that consideration of functional interchangeability is essential in assessing indirect evidence of whether two or more products are in the same market. But this does not exclude other relevant evidence which may reinforce or undermine what functional interchangeability implies.

In considering the whole of the evidence, the Tribunal will bear in mind the ultimate reason why the market is being defined. In this case, the goal is to determine if the respondents have market power (or are "major suppliers"), that is, if the alleged close substitutes, other local advertising media, provide competitive discipline for Tele-Direct in making price (or quality) and output decisions.

(3) Functional Interchangeability

The Director submits that two headings from the Merger Enforcement Guidelines, "end use" and "physical and technical characteristics", are both related to the question of functional interchangeability. Certain characteristics of directories are, he argues, key factors which dictate the end use of a directory as a directional reference tool and which thus limit the "functional interchangeability" of directory advertising with directional advertising in other media.

The respondents argue that all local advertising has the same end use: to increase business at a particular location. They submit that the characteristics of the various media should not be considered as part of the determination of functional interchangeability.

Regarding functional interchangeability, the Court of Appeal in Southam says:

> . . . But the fact that community newspapers are more local in nature does not go to the question of functional interchangeability, but to the behaviour of buyers as to preference for geographical scope. This latter subjective factor should not be mingled with the purely objective factor of functional interchangeability which focusses on use or purpose.[44] (emphasis added)

The Court imposes the constraint that the views of buyers should not enter when functional interchangeability is being decided because they are "subjective". Only "objective" factors should enter at this point.

Under the criterion "end use", the Merger Enforcement Guidelines refer to the extent to which two products are "functionally interchangeable in end use". That is the way in which the term will be used in this decision. Physical and technical characteristics, along with other indicia, serve to determine whether the products found to be functionally interchangeable in end use are close substitutes. Rather than considering physical and technical characteristics as part of the determination of functional interchangeability, as the Director proposes, the Tribunal will treat them separately from functional interchangeability.

The Director and one of his economics expert witnesses, Richard Schwindt,[45] have defined the relevant end use of telephone directory advertising to be use as a "directional" medium. ("Directional" and "directive" were used interchangeably in the material before us.)

Two elements are said to characterize a directional advertising medium: (a) consumers consult the medium when they are at a point in the buying cycle when they are ready to buy, and (b) the medium is used as a reference tool. Directional advertising is distinguished from creative advertising, which is widely acknowledged to be used for creating or stimulating demand. The Director admits that other advertising media besides Yellow Pages might be considered directional but names catalogues, direct mail and classified newspaper advertising as the only candidates.

The respondents and their economics expert witness, Robert Willig,[46] take the view that all "local" advertising[47] has the same end use, to attract customers to a particular establishment. Thus, they argue, advertising in the Yellow Pages and advertising in other local media are functionally interchangeable. In response to the Director's argument, they argue that directionality is not generally regarded as encompassing the element of use as a reference tool. They further argue that the directional/creative dichotomy is not valid. They take the position that there is no such sharp distinction in the advertising done by local advertisers. In their submission, directional means only that the advertising directs consumers to a particular establishment -- which can be done in any medium. Given the respondents' definition of "local" advertising, all advertising by a local advertiser necessarily has a directional component. Similarly, since they are of the view that all local advertising, including advertising in telephone directories, has as its goal the stimulation of demand at a location, all local advertising necessarily has a creative component.

Since the respondents have defined "local" advertising as advertising designed to promote business at a particular location, it follows that the purpose of all local advertising is to attract customers to a business. Such a definition is at a high level of generality. While we recognize that the "end use" indicia acts as a "filter" or a "first stage" in the analysis only, it should still cast some light on the ultimate question to be determined, i.e., whether all "local" media are close substitutes providing sufficient competitive discipline among themselves that they should be considered to be part of the same product market in this case. We find the words of Gibson J. in R. v. J.W. Mills & Sons Ltd., which the Court of Appeal in Southam found "worthy of replication", to be instructive on this point:

> Defining the relevant market in any particular case, therefore, requires a balanced consideration of a number of characteristics or dimensions to meet the analytical needs of the specific matter under consideration.
>
> At one extremity, an ill-defined description of competition is that every service, article, or commodity, which competes for the consumer's dollar is in competition with every other service, article or commodity.
>
> At the other extremity, is the narrower scope definition, which confines the market to services, articles, or commodities which have uniform quality and service.
>
> In analyzing any individual case these extremes should be avoided and instead there should be weighed the various factors that determine the degrees of competition and the dimensions or boundaries of the competitive situation. For this purpose the dimensions or boundaries of a relevant market must be determined having in mind the purpose for what it is intended. For example, two products may be in the same market in one case and not in another.[48]

[48] [1968] 2 Ex. C.R. 275 at 305-306.

The criterion of functional interchangeability in end use should not be treated at such a high level of generality that it precludes objective yet contextual analysis. To say that, for example, automobiles and bicycles are in the same product market because they both provide a means of transportation would make the level of generality so high that no meaningful analysis could be performed as a result of it. Some consideration must be given to context.

To put functional interchangeability in end use in context in this case, it is important to look at the buying cycle and which types of media are generally regarded as directional and thus particularly effective in reaching consumers who are at the end of the buying cycle. These consumers are "ready to buy" but must decide which commercial establishment to patronize. The question is which types of media effectively bring the particular establishment to the consumer's attention in those circumstances.

The respondents referred us to a number of American cases which, they argue, support their broad conception of end use. We do not find these authorities particularly helpful. First, and most importantly, the product market that is arrived at in a particular case is very much dependent on the facts of that case and the context in which the case is brought, that is, the alleged anti-competitive wrong that the plaintiff is seeking to cure. As Gibson J. stated in the passage quoted above, "two products may be in the same market in one case and not in another." Therefore, the mere fact that another court did or did not find that directory advertising was in the same market as other local media is not in itself compelling. Some of the cases cited by the respondents were not antitrust cases.[49] Others did not deal with directory advertising.[50] In addition, counsel for the Director was able to bring to our attention a number of other American cases in which the courts, either explicitly or implicitly, used Yellow Pages advertising as a relevant market.[51] Further, while the reasoning with respect to market definition in another case might provide us with some insight, one would have to be reasonably certain that the court in question was applying the same conceptual framework or "test" as we have adopted. These considerations all highlight the futility of looking for a simple, neat answer to market definition in the case law.

Based on the evidence, particularly materials created by the respondents themselves outside of the context of this proceeding, which we will review in more detail below, we accept the Director's position that the distinction between creative and directional media is a valid one for determining the end use of Yellow Pages and other local advertising. A fair consideration of the evidence, which will shortly be addressed, supports the position that creative advertising creates awareness of and demand for goods and services at the beginning of the buying cycle and that directional advertising refers to advertising to consumers who are at the end of the buying cycle which "directs" them where to buy a product or service. This effectively limits the number of media that can be considered to be directional.

Although the respondents argued that directional advertising simply means advertising (in any media including those traditionally considered creative) that contains a name, address or phone number to "direct" a consumer to particular establishment,[52] this was not Tele-Direct's view outside of this case. In the Multimedia Training Course created by Tele-Direct for its sales representatives, directional advertising is defined as:

> Media used by the advertiser to direct the buyer where to buy or use a product or service. Examples: Yellow Pages, catalogues, direct mail. Directive media complements and supports creative media.[53]

The three examples used suggest that directional media, in fact, have very specific characteristics beyond simply including a name, address or phone number. All are print media and in each case there is no editorial or entertainment content. The consumer has no reason to consult these media other than a reason related to making a purchase, i.e., at the end of the buying cycle.

The course material also discusses and sets out in chart form the role of the various media at the various stages of the buying cycle: awareness, interest, comprehension, trial, purchase and repurchase. The text explains:

> . . . [S]uch traditional advertising media as TV, Radio and Magazines are by their nature designed to generate awareness for products and services. The impact or intrusion qualities of this advertising creates an interest for the products and services and has the ability to demonstrate the benefits to the consumer and is ultimately designed to create a need or desire in the mind of the consumer.

[52] This is, of course, co-extensive with their definition of local advertising.

Although creative advertising is crucial at the awareness, interest and comprehension stage of the buying cycle, it loses impact at the actual purchase stage because of the time or distance between the initial awareness and the purchase.[54]

At the purchase stage, newspaper, direct mail, outdoor, radio and Yellow Pages are all considered to have some strengths. Television and magazines are not. Of those with strength at the purchase stage, only newspapers and direct mail (and Yellow Pages), however, are described as "directive". The strength of outdoor advertising at the purchase stage is as a "reminder message". The strength of radio at that stage is to offer price points and convey a "sense of urgency". Again, this course material supports the view that directionality imports something more than the ability to provide a consumer with a name and address. All of television, newspapers, direct mail, outdoor, radio and Yellow Pages are capable of including this information in advertising, yet Tele-Direct did not consider them all to be directional.

This interpretation is further supported by the letter sent to the Director by Tele-Direct during the course of the Director's investigation into the industry (referred to as the "Bourke letter"). The letter was intended to provide industry background.[55] It states that:

[55] At the hearing, counsel for the respondents attempted to convince the Tribunal to attribute less weight to the letter than we otherwise might on the grounds that it was not prepared with the assistance of an economist and that it was produced in a compressed period of time. The letter was written by Tele-Direct's Vice-president of Marketing with the assistance of a number of lawyers from counsel's office. We have no information as to the extent of the economic background of any of those lawyers. It is signed by the President of Tele-Direct. During the discovery process the respondents resisted production of the letter on the grounds that it was protected by settlement negotiation privilege. The Tribunal ruled that the letter did not fall within that privilege and ordered it produced. We have no hesitation, for the purposes for which we refer to the letter, of attributing significant weight to it.

> The Yellow Pages traditionally is viewed as a "directional" or "considered purchase" advertising medium, which provides consumers with information on where they can purchase the goods and services they want. . . . Directional advertising is most attractive to local advertisers, particularly local retailers, who seek to motivate customers to visit their stores or to use their services. Other directional media include direct marketing, catalogues, trade magazines, and specialty supplements to newspapers or magazines.[56] (emphasis added)

There is no mention made of outdoor or television and radio as directional media. When Thomas Bourke, Tele-Direct's President, testified at the hearing he confirmed that the basic strength of Yellow Pages was to provide information on where to buy, as stated in the letter. In the list of directional media, he would, however, now include the classified sections of daily and community newspapers and specialty and other classified directories.

The letter continues:

> By contrast, the other major advertising media - outdoor, newspapers, radio, television and magazines - are classified as "creative" advertising media, which create awareness of and demand for products and services. Creative advertising assists advertisers who are either trying to sell a product or service, or promote their name. This service is attractive to major manufacturers or suppliers, who usually do not have a preference as to where the consumer buys its product or services.[57]

Since names, addresses and phone numbers could just as easily be included in advertising in the regular part of a newspaper and a magazine as in a special supplement or classified section, something more is involved in the way that the participants in the industry view directionality. As in the training material, all the examples of directional media are characterized by the absence of general editorial content. The characteristic that specialty supplements and classified sections in newspapers or magazines, other directories, catalogues and direct mail share with Yellow Pages is that the advertising in those media will be totally ineffective unless it is consulted by people who are "in the market" -- who are looking to make a purchase. As Mr. Bourke put it when describing how Yellow Pages complete the buying cycle, they must be in a "buying frame of mind". Consumers will not be involuntarily exposed to the advertising by virtue of going to the medium for entertainment or other reasons; they must voluntarily decide to consult the Yellow Pages or a catalogue, read the direct mail or an advertising supplement or classified section. These media are not picked up and browsed through idly in a spare moment.

The respondents argue that all directional advertising, even Yellow Pages advertising, has a "creative" component. Otherwise, they submit, no one would pay for a display advertisement in the Yellow Pages. The free business listing could provide a name, address and phone number. Clearly, there is "creativity" involved in designing an eye-catching Yellow Pages advertisement. This is not the same as creative ("creates" demand) as opposed to directional ("directs" consumers who are ready to buy) advertising as those terms are used in the industry, according to the evidence.

Mr. Bourke, echoing Raymond Greimel, Executive Director of YPPA, testified that the new attitude in the industry is that Yellow Pages are both directional and creative. He was unable, however, to explain how Yellow Pages advertising "creates awareness of and demand for products and services" in the words of the Bourke letter, as he recognized that people do not consult the Yellow Pages unless they already have a need for some product or service. He could only say that Yellow Pages advertising "reinforced" or "supported" the advertising in the creative media.

We are not satisfied from the paucity of evidence on the point that directional advertising means that the medium containing the advertising is a "reference tool", as the Director further submits. If this element were proven, virtually all media except directories would be excluded from potentially being part of the relevant product market at this point. We do not consider that the evidence supports narrowing the definition of "directional" in this respect.

Functional interchangeability is simply a preliminary filter to exclude those products which evidently do not have the same end use as Yellow Pages advertising. Nevertheless, certain conclusions can be stated. First, the respondents' position that local advertising in all media qualifies as directional is not tenable. In particular, television, radio and outdoor media are clearly not treated as directional in Tele-Direct's own materials. Television is seen as having little relevance to the latter stages in the buying cycle; it is strong in creating awareness and interest at the beginning of the cycle only. While radio and outdoor have a role at the later stages, that role was not to present a directive message but rather to create "urgency" or serve as a "reminder" of other advertising.

This is not to say that these media cannot be used for directional advertising in any circumstances. It is a possibility, but in deciding whether various media serve the same end use, one must look to usual uses and not mere possibilities unsupported by the evidence. We are of the view that both the electronic and outdoor media can be excluded at this point as they are not directional media and thus do not have the same end use as Yellow Pages advertising. Since the electronic and outdoor media have not met this "necessary" condition for inclusion in the relevant product market, we will not deal with them further.

Second, there is some doubt as to whether "regular" advertising (as opposed to special supplements or classifieds) in newspapers and magazines is properly included as directional advertising. Based on the list in the Bourke letter, which was updated by Mr. Bourke in his testimony and is therefore, presumably, as comprehensive as Tele-Direct considers it should be, we could exclude "regular" newspaper and magazine advertising at this point. The Multimedia Training Course, however, does refer to "newspaper" advertising, without further details, as directive. Given the preliminary nature of the criteria of functional interchangeability and in light of the overall model used by the respondents to argue their case, we will not exclude newspapers from further consideration. Magazines will not be dealt with further, as they were largely ignored in the remainder of the evidence and argument of both parties.

(4) Other Relevant Indicia

Having determined that some, though not all, local advertising media pass the threshold test of functional interchangeability, we will now consider the evidence and argument on the remaining practical indicia to decide if those media are close substitutes and belong to the same product market as telephone directory advertising.

(a) Physical and Technical Characteristics

Telephone directories are issued annually, are comprehensive both with respect to including all suppliers and being delivered to all telephone subscribers, and they are governed by their own rules with respect to the content of advertising. The Director is of the view that these characteristics set Yellow Pages apart from other media.

The respondents argue that each advertising medium has different "strengths and weaknesses" and can claim to be unique. They submit that a "catalogue" of differences is not alone enough to place two products in separate markets. They state that the relevant question is whether the product is unique in some respect that significantly limits the extent to which buyers (here, advertisers) are willing to substitute other products for the product at issue. We agree that to deal with physical and technical characteristics separately from the views and behaviour of buyers is somewhat artificial. It is, however, the way in which the parties have chosen to organize their arguments and the evidence in this case. Therefore, in this portion of the judgment, we will restrict ourselves to the points raised by the parties in their respective arguments under that heading. We recognize that this factor is mainly important in the analysis as providing background for the next section on buyer views and behaviour.

(i) Time Insensitivity/Permanence

Advertisements in the Yellow Pages are finalized several months prior to publication and have to stand for the entire year between directories. This means that Yellow Pages advertising cannot be used to convey time-sensitive information. As noted by Professor Schwindt, for the Director, this sets Yellow Pages apart from other directional media, such as direct mail or supplements to magazines or newspapers, in which time-sensitive information such as prices tends to be featured. In fact, until recently Tele-Direct regulations prohibited the inclusion of prices in Yellow Page advertisements to avoid potential false advertising claims. This ban has now been lifted. It is doubtful whether, in a fast-changing world, price advertising can ever be an important part of telephone directory advertising while directories are a print medium that changes only every year.[58] The evidence of the advertiser witnesses amply supported the conclusion that Yellow Pages are not used for time-sensitive advertising.[59]

The fact that Yellow Pages cannot be used to convey time-sensitive information is characterized by the respondents as a "weakness", the "flip side" of which is "permanence", a "strength". Based on a statement by Professor Willig in his rebuttal affidavit,[60] they conclude that a weakness in Yellow Pages does not suggest that advertisers would not substitute other media for Yellow Pages; a weakness probably suggests that they would substitute other media.

[58] Apparently there is some experimentation in some American centres with allowing restaurants to run advertisements that include menus. In a relatively stable economic environment firms in such an industry might be willing to risk committing themselves to prices for as long as a year.

[59] See, e.g., the testimony of Jack Forrester of HOJ Car and Truck Rentals, that he does not use Yellow Pages for specials or promotions: transcript at 5:778 (11 September 1995); the testimony of Jean-Yves Laberge of the Turpin Group of automobile sales and leasing businesses, that he puts prices and specials in his newspaper advertisement but not in the Yellow Pages: transcript at 13:2406-407 (3 October 1995); and the testimony of Steve Kantor of Tiremag Corp., who sells wheels and tires, that he cannot use Yellow Pages to advertise seasonal product offerings or prices: transcript at 17:3288-89 (11 October 1995).

[60] Paragraph 24 of Professor Willig's rebuttal affidavit (exhibit R-181) reads:

> . . . As a matter of economics, it is difficult to see how negative characteristics can contribute to a showing of dominance in a narrow relevant market. Instead, negative characteristics contribute to the willingness of buyers to substitute out of the product at issue, and so their recognition should, if anything, argue for a wider market to be relevant, not a narrower one.

Thus, any identified weaknesses are seen as evidence of Yellow Pages vulnerability and not as evidence that the products against which Yellow Pages is being compared may not be close substitutes.

We do not accept that a "weakness" alone provides evidence of or even suggests substitutability. Substitution is not a one-way process. The conclusion on whether there are close substitutes for the firm's products is not based on asymmetrical substitution. We must certainly consider whether there is ready substitution from Yellow Pages to other media but we must also be satisfied of the reverse, ready substitution to Yellow Pages from other media.

For the very reason that telephone directories are not suited to time-sensitive information, they are the one source of directional advertising that advertisers can be virtually certain will be retained for a long period by consumers. Apart from catalogues, which often are valid for periods of up to six months, the information in other vehicles is quickly dated and will be discarded. Catalogues, however, generally provide information on a single seller and do not cover the wide range of goods and services found in the Yellow Pages. The relative permanence of directories supports the Director's position that Yellow Pages are unique among directional media in serving as a continuing reference of all available suppliers.

(ii) Comprehensiveness

It is conceded by the respondents that telephone directories are unique with respect to their comprehensive list of suppliers. They argue, however, that comprehensiveness comes from the free listings and that the directory would still be comprehensive even if it contained no display advertisements. That is true. The respondents go on to state that an advertiser values comprehensiveness only if the advertiser is targeting customers who contact all listed suppliers before making a purchase, in which case the advertiser would not need a display advertisement. The latter statement simply does not follow. The advertiser witnesses who appeared before us made it clear that they value the comprehensiveness of the Yellow Pages because that is a feature that leads consumers in general to use the Yellow Pages. (Since we are talking about a directional medium, we are speaking of consumers who are ready to purchase some good or service and are looking for a supplier.) Once a consumer decides to consult the Yellow Pages because of its comprehensiveness, an advertiser finds it profitable to advertise in the Yellow Pages to cause that consumer to choose its establishment as opposed to that of another supplier.

On the distribution side, the respondents do not dispute that there is no other medium that is so comprehensively distributed. All telephone subscribers, the vast majority of the population, receive a telephone directory. The respondents attempt to counter this fact by pointing out that persons who receive the Yellow Pages, and thus are the potential customers of businesses listed or advertising in the Yellow Pages, are also exposed to other media which do not depend on their active involvement, that is, on their deciding to consult the Yellow Pages. This argument, in effect, simply reiterates the respondents' position that all media have the same end use, since it ignores the fact that the voluntary nature of Yellow Pages (consumers must decide to consult the Yellow Pages to be exposed to the advertising) means that it is not used for the same purpose as are the creative media (consumers are involuntarily exposed to the advertising by virtue of using the medium for the entertainment or information value). We have found that Yellow Pages are a directional medium. Exposure to creative media is not relevant as they serve a different purpose.

The respondents also point out that the scope of a particular directory may be too broad for a particular advertiser. That advertiser may wish to reach only a limited geographic area and could do so more cost-effectively with flyers. This will be addressed in the next section when we consider buyer views on whether the unique characteristics of Yellow Pages are significant to them and thus limit their choices among media.

(iii) Other Restrictions

In addition to the restriction on price advertising there are Yellow Pages rules regulating comparative advertising, the use of coupons and the use of superlatives. There is no evidence on the effect of these restrictions. However, their existence does indicate that the publishers of telephone directories were and are willing to create an advertising environment that sets their vehicle apart from others. Clearly Tele-Direct is not concerned that these restrictions make Yellow Pages less attractive such that advertisers would substitute other media.

In summary, all media have strength and weaknesses. Contrary to the respondents' arguments, however, we are of the view that "weaknesses" of the Yellow Pages as a medium do not imply that advertisers will readily switch from it to other media. If pricing information is important to advertisers and they cannot use Yellow Pages to convey prices because of restrictive rules or time-insensitivity, then their choice to use newspaper advertising instead cannot be seen as a substitution of newspapers for Yellow Pages. Likewise, if advertisers cannot achieve their goal of being in a "reference" medium by advertising in newspapers, then their decision to advertise in the Yellow Pages cannot be seen as a substitution of Yellow Pages for newspapers. In other words, strengths and weaknesses in areas important to advertisers are really characteristics that tend against substitutability. The existence of significant (to advertisers) differences between Yellow Pages and other media would lead to the inference that other media are not close substitutes to the Yellow Pages.

(b) Views, Strategies, Behaviour and Identity of Buyers

Both sides recognize the importance of the identity, views and behaviour of buyers, in this case, Yellow Pages advertisers. Before turning to the more detailed evidence, we first set out the position of each of the Director and the respondents on the question of substitutability from the perspective of the advertisers.

The Director submits that advertisers do not consider that there are any close substitutes for Yellow Pages advertising. He bases this on the testimony of the advertiser and agency witnesses, who although not a representative sample, gave cogent reasons for their views on substitution despite the diverse businesses involved. He argues that the advertisers cannot easily move their advertising spending from Yellow Pages to other media because of the value that they place on certain unique characteristics of Yellow Pages as a medium. In support of this position, he also points to evidence that Yellow Pages spending is not even part of the "advertising" budget at large for many Yellow Pages advertisers.

The respondents conceive of all advertisers, including Yellow Pages advertisers, as operating on a fixed advertising budget which is allocated among various media (the "media mix") based on the highest returns that can be obtained from the advertising expenditures. Decisions about media mix are driven by perceptions of relative cost-effectiveness. Therefore, Yellow Pages spending is vulnerable to reduction (by means of smaller size, less colour) or cancellation in favour of expanded spending on other local media which are perceived as more cost-effective. The respondents' position emphasizes the possibility of significant substitution between media "at the margin".

The respondents argue that the evidence supports the following propositions (although they state them in a somewhat different order):

(1) the businesses that advertise in Tele-Direct's directories ("current Tele-Direct customers") also advertise in a variety of other media;

(2) current Tele-Direct customers perceive that other media provide as good or better value than Yellow Pages advertising and may be assigned as high or a higher priority in the advertiser's media mix;

(3) current Tele-Direct customers in the same line of business may each choose a different media mix, including a different emphasis on advertising in the Yellow Pages (bigger or smaller, black and white or colour Yellow Pages advertisement);

(4) many of the businesses that do not advertise in Yellow Pages ("Tele-Direct non-advertisers") advertise elsewhere;

(5) Yellow Pages advertisers who have cancelled their advertising in Yellow Pages ("former Tele-Direct customers") continue to advertise in other media; and

(6) former Tele-Direct customers are unenthusiastic about the value provided by Tele-Direct in relation to other suppliers.

They submit that these propositions support their theory that advertisers readily shift their spending between media and thus Yellow Pages advertising and advertising in all other local media are in the same product market. The respondents also point to some evidence which they say reflects actual switching behaviour by Yellow Pages advertisers to other media.

Two preliminary comments are in order. The first relates to the use of a term such as "at the margin" which, in effect, invites the Tribunal to ignore the cellophane fallacy because of its emphasis on current price levels rather than the competitive price.[61] Any firm or group of firms

[61] It is commonplace economics that a firm with market power will set prices where the demand for its product is elastic; that is, at the point where a further increase in price would cause a reduction in revenue. Some of the reduction in revenue may result from consumers switching to other products which are the closest substitutes at that price, but which would not be considered by that have fully exploited their market power might see some substitution if the relative price of their product goes up further. Their inability to raise their prices without buyer switching "at the margin" is, in these circumstances, because they have already exercised their market power not because they have no market power because of the presence of close substitutes.

Secondly, with regard to the proposition that advertising budgets are fixed, there is some support in the evidence that this is true for large companies. The situation is not so clear for small companies. We recognize, however, that some percentage of Tele-Direct's revenue is likely derived from advertisers who have advertising budgets that include Yellow Pages. Therefore, we will proceed to address the critical question of whether these advertisers and others treat Yellow Pages and other media as close substitutes. It will be convenient, in this instance, to organize our review of the evidence put forward by the parties by focusing in turn on each of the customer groups mentioned in the respondents' propositions. We will look first at the evidence regarding former Tele-Direct customers, then turn to non-advertisers and finally, current Tele-Direct customers.

these consumers as substitutes if the firm with market power were pricing its product at a competitive level. This so-called "cellophane fallacy" (originating from criticism of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377 (1956)) can result in the mistaken conclusion that a firm does not have market power because of the presence of substitutes when in fact the reverse is true -- the substitution is occurring because of the exercise of market power. In principle markets should be defined at competitive prices.

(i) Former Tele-Direct Customers

This group comprises Tele-Direct customers who have completely cancelled their Yellow Pages advertising. One would expect, therefore, that these advertisers would provide the most compelling affirmation of the respondents' theory of ready shifts in spending between media.

At the outset, we note, however, that whatever is learned about former Tele-Direct customers cannot be generalized to the population of Yellow Pages advertisers as a whole. From Tele-Direct's 1994 Corporate Post Canvass Analysis Report we know that former Tele-Direct customers are relatively unimportant in terms of total Tele-Direct revenue, and individually they were spending far less than average annual amounts in the Yellow Pages. The 1993 revenue from advertisers who cancelled their Yellow Pages advertising completely in 1994 represented only 1.3 percent of total 1993 revenue for Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. The average annual expenditure in the Yellow Pages for these advertisers was about $700.[62]

The respondents rely on the information about former customers provided by the January 1993 Elliott report on customer satisfaction.[63] The report indicates that former customers view Tele-Direct's products and services as "poor value" and generally of fair to poor quality, both absolutely and relative to other suppliers.

[62] Confidential exhibit CJ-28 (black vol. 7), tab 42 at 129284. Customers who disconnected their business telephone service are not included. There was no general price change between 1993 and 1994, although there were a number of incentive plans.

[63] Confidential exhibit CJ-14 (blue vol. 5), tab 173.

Because the former Tele-Direct customers could answer questions about other media suppliers, the results do indicate that some Tele-Direct former customers use other media. The study does not reveal what percentage of former customers are, in fact, using other advertising vehicles or which ones they are using. We know from the 1994 Corporate Post Canvass Analysis Report that former advertisers were spending relatively small amounts in the Yellow Pages. This would tend to indicate their options for buying other media on an annual basis with the dollars thus freed up are limited, given the cost of some of the media (particularly newspapers, radio and television) alleged to be close substitutes. The survey also found, not surprisingly, a low level of satisfaction with Tele-Direct among former customers. The study does not provide convincing evidence that a significant portion of former customers transferred advertising spending from the Yellow Pages to other media or that Yellow Pages is vulnerable to competition from other media as opposed to losing advertisers by virtue of its own failings.

With respect to former Tele-Direct customers the Director refers to two Tele-Direct reports which set out the reasons which customers gave to Tele-Direct sales representatives for cancelling their advertising: the "P.A.R. (Potential Advertiser Retrieval) Summary" report and the "Wipe Out Sampling Summary".[64] One can assume from the fact that the representatives were able to contact the customers that they remained in business and maintained a business listing.

[64] Confidential exhibit CJ-87 (black vol. 14), tab 111 at 134805; confidential exhibit CJ-33 (black vol. 12), tab 85 at 132815.

Tele-Direct uses the P.A.R. form completed by cancelled customers to attempt to understand why advertising was cancelled. One of the choices on the form for reason for cancellation is "trying other media". Professor Willig found it "notable" that Tele-Direct listed "trying other media" as a choice on the P.A.R. form., i.e., that Tele-Direct was alive to the possibility of its advertisers switching to other media. However, the P.A.R. Summary report printed in September 1995 shows that only four out of 203 former customers (two percent) surveyed stated that they cancelled because they were "trying other media". Professor Willig conceded that this low number would have some significance and would suggest a low level of movement between media if the study were meant to be comprehensive.

To counter the low percentage, the respondents argue that the relevant denominator is actually smaller than 203. To the extent that 56 customers were probably going to go out of business, they should be excluded. If we remove these customers, only three percent of the former customers surveyed gave "trying other media" as their reason for cancelling their Yellow Pages advertising.

The respondents would also exclude a further 84 customers who gave a variety of reasons other than "trying other media" for their cancellation (e.g., "financial reasons", "restructuring", "wouldn't discuss", "clients are mostly from referrals") to bring the sample size to 63. They would also include in the numerator, with those advertisers who answered "trying other media", another 47 advertisers who gave various other responses[65] on the argument that these advertisers were probably already using other media and, therefore, would not say they were "trying" other media when they moved their dollars to what they considered a more effective medium. Thus restructured, they argue that the report yields an 81 percent response rate in favour of substitutability between all media.

There is nothing in the report which supports the changes advocated by the respondents. The inclusions and exclusions are based on speculation, at best. Beyond removing the customers who have gone out of business, the report must be taken as it stands. If it is significant, as Professor Willig maintained, that Tele-Direct wanted to know if former customers were "trying other media", and included it as a possible response for former customers to choose, then it is significant whether they did choose that response or not. Any of the customers who answered could have selected "trying other media" if that were indeed their primary motivation for leaving the Yellow Pages.

On the whole the P.A.R. Summary report demonstrates that only a handful of customers may have discontinued Yellow Page advertising in favour of other advertising vehicles. Even for these customers little can be concluded about substitutability. They said they were "trying other media". Without some follow-up as to whether they found other advertising vehicles more effective in boosting their sales, it is not possible to tell if the other media were close substitutes for them. Indeed, some of these customers may have returned to Yellow Pages because they did not find the other media adequate for their purposes.

Similarly, the "Wipe Out Sampling Summary" by Tele-Direct shows only two of 87 (about two percent) former customers "trying other methods of advertising". The respondents attempt to re-interpret these results in the same manner as with the P.A.R. Summary report, i.e., by reducing the denominator. Again, there is no support in the document itself for such re-interpretation. This report tends to support the conclusion from the P.A.R. Summary report that very few customers discontinued Yellow Pages advertising in favour of other advertising vehicles.

(ii) Tele-Direct Non-advertisers

Tele-Direct's overall penetration rate is about 50 percent. This means, as the respondents state, that some businesses do not buy any Yellow Pages advertising. It is probably also true that most businesses advertise in some way. What does the evidence reveal, if anything, about this class of Tele-Direct non-advertisers? Is their advertising spending likely to be easily switched from whatever vehicles they are currently using into Yellow Pages (and vice versa)?

Tele-Direct divides non-advertisers into two groups: poor prospects for Yellow Pages advertising (Market 6)[66] and current non-advertisers with some potential (Market 7). Market 6 accounts are not contacted during a sales canvass; about 85 percent of Market 7 accounts are contacted. Both Valerie McIlroy, Tele-Direct's Vice-president of Marketing until July 1994, and David Giddings, a Vice-president of Sales, described the manner in which Tele-Direct contacts these non-advertisers as a "blitz". During a canvass, one or two days at various times are designated as "non-ad blitz days" and the telephone sales representatives focus on calling as many non-advertisers as they can each day, up to 20 to 30 calls. Tele-Direct's success in converting these non-advertisers is at most five percent.

If all media are close substitutes and advertising dollars are as fluid as the respondents argue, then Tele-Direct would seem to have a reasonable prospect of luring customers away from those other media and into the Yellow Pages. Yet, Tele-Direct's success rate with non-advertisers is very low. In addition, the approach taken to non-advertisers, namely telephone sales "blitz" days, provides little indication that Tele-Direct considers these non-advertisers "good" prospects which merit spending a lot of time and money to convert. Former Yellow Pages advertisers who have cancelled would presumably be especially good candidates but Tele-Direct does not appear to direct any special effort even to this group.

One of the studies referred to by the respondents that does include some specific information on non-advertisers is the 1990 study by Impact Research.[67] The study consisted of interviews with 36 business people in Montreal and Toronto, half of whom were Yellow Pages "non-advertisers".[68] There is some indication that the non-advertisers were probably using some other media but there is no data on how many advertisers or which media.

[67] Confidential exhibit CJ-18 (blue vol. 9), tab 249.

[68] Contrary to Tele-Direct's habitual use of the term, the "non-advertisers" studied may have had a bold listing.

The results of the study do not, in any event, support the respondents' contention about the potential to shift advertising dollars between all local media in search of the most "cost-effective" alternative. Seventeen of the 18 non-advertisers did not advertise in the Yellow Pages "mainly because of the perceived non-use of the Yellow Pages by their potential customers." Sixteen of the non-advertisers were not going to advertise in the next Yellow Pages edition because they were convinced it was an "inappropriate medium for their advertising needs".[69] Two were undecided.

The views of non-advertisers do not support the contention that there is ready substitution between Yellow Pages and all other local media. If anything, the evidence that is available tends in the opposite direction.

(iii) Current Tele-Direct Customers

The respondents place considerable emphasis on the fact that existing Yellow Pages advertisers use a variety of media and that many believe that other media are as good or a better value than Yellow Pages. Because many firms advertise in a number of different advertising vehicles, the respondents argue, they are thus able to shift advertising dollars among them as the returns on them vary.

[69] Supra note at 107661, 107681 (emphasis added). One non-advertiser was just starting up his business and could not make the current edition deadline.

The evidence from the Director's advertiser witnesses, as well as from the Tele-Direct surveys,[70] confirms that Yellow Page advertisers tend not to be solely reliant on this one vehicle. Many advertisers use a variety of media. Even within a heading, some Yellow Pages advertisers have smaller advertisements, advertisements without colour or simply a free listing, thus potentially freeing advertising dollars to spend in other media. However, there is little that we can conclude from this fact alone. As acknowledged by Professor Willig, the use of more than one advertising vehicle tells us nothing about whether the vehicles in question are substitutes, complements,[71] or have no relationship whatsoever. To draw conclusions about substitutability there must be evidence that advertisers do in fact shift between the various media in response to competitive moves by those media.

The principal evidentiary source referred to by the respondents respecting current customers is the January 1993 Elliott report. As with cancelled customers, current customers were asked to rate Tele-Direct in terms of, among other items, value for money and overall quality. Many existing customers believe that other media provide as good value or better value and quality than Yellow Pages advertising. Thirty-five percent say that the relative value for the money of Yellow Pages is much or somewhat worse than other suppliers while the relative quality is about the same as other suppliers. Likewise, 38 percent of all customers believe that [70] E.g., Elliott reports: confidential exhibit CJ-14 (blue vol. 5), tab 173 (January 1993) and confidential exhibit CJ-19 (blue vol. 10), tab 285 (February 1993 - Newfoundland); V.I.A. survey: confidential exhibit CJ-11 (blue vol. 2), tab 89; Yellow Pages Satisfaction Study (Omnifacts Research): confidential exhibit CJ-15 (blue vol. 6), tab 199.

[71] The term "complement" has been used in this context primarily in its ordinary sense and not in its strict economic sense. No one has asserted that the different advertising vehicles are complements in the sense that a reduction in the price of one vehicle would lead to an increase in the price of the other. Rather the term has been used to indicate that Yellow Pages perform a different function than other vehicles and are thus needed to complete an advertising programme.

Yellow Pages are high or very high priced in relation to other suppliers. In the western region (Ontario), 56 percent of large customers believe that Yellow Pages are high or very high priced while only five percent say that Yellow Pages are very low or low priced. The respondents say this evidence shows that Yellow Pages are vulnerable to advertisers switching to other media.

We are of the view that these results tend to contradict rather than support the respondents' premise that all media are close substitutes. It is difficult to conclude that customers who had good substitutes would choose to continue to purchase a product that they believed was too high priced and of poor value. One would expect that, if all media were close substitutes, the medium perceived as providing better value and price would be purchased in preference to the others. Yet, dissatisfied Tele-Direct customers apparently continue to advertise in the Yellow Pages despite their opinion that other media are as good or better value and lower priced. The Elliott report provides more support for the proposition that Tele-Direct has a comfortable cushion of market power that permits it to keep its customers in spite of the fact that significant numbers of them were not complimentary about its service and pricing than it does for the proposition that Tele-Direct competes with other suppliers providing easily substitutable products.

The respondents also refer to a 1994 study by Omnifacts Research in Newfoundland.[72] Four focus group sessions were conducted with a total of 31 Yellow Pages advertisers, two sessions with new advertisers and two sessions with established customers.[73] In-depth interviews were conducted with 16 customers, 10 of whom had reduced their Yellow Pages spending. Many of the customers also used other media, primarily print, in the form of local trade magazines, flyers and direct mail for new customers and flyers and direct mail for established customers.

[72] Supra note 70.

[73] Ibid. New advertisers were generally very small companies; established customers were larger.

There was a general view among the participants that they had to advertise in the Yellow Pages. They generally found it difficult to judge the effectiveness of the advertising they did, including Yellow Pages. In particular, they expressed considerable uncertainty about the value of larger size and coloured advertisements in Yellow Pages. Established customers ". . . tend to follow the competition when deciding on placement and size of Yellow Pages advertising. Most are clearly not sure whether the advertising in the Yellow Pages actually works, but the consensus is that they have to be there."[74] Some expressed displeasure at the number of headings since they felt compelled to advertise in several headings if their competitors did.

Particularly significant are the results of the interviews with customers who had reduced their Yellow Pages expenditures. The report states:

> Those companies who reported that their expenditures decreased fall into two main groupings: those who decreased as a cost cutting measure and those who decreased primarily because they do not perceive the Yellow Pages to be effective for reaching their target markets.
>
> Those that decreased their expenditures as a cost cutting measure essentially felt that the current economic conditions were affecting their business revenues. . . .

[74] Ibid. at 116796.

> Clients who have decreased their Yellow Pages expenditures because they did not consider the Yellow Pages to be effective, reported that their markets are primarily industrial or business-to-business and given the nature of the products and services that they offer, the Yellow Pages are not therefore consistent with their target markets.[75]

There is no indication in either case that customers reduced their Yellow Pages advertising in order to shift dollars into other media.[76]

Turning to the Director's evidence, the viva voce evidence of advertisers and other market participants who represent advertisers strongly supports the position of the Director that advertisers do not regard Yellow Pages and other media as close substitutes. Although several advertisers were approximately average size in terms of spending on Yellow Pages, most were in the top two or three percent of Tele-Direct customers. That is, average expenditures ranged from about $2,000 annually to well in excess of $100,000. For the most part a large percentage of advertising dollars were spent by these advertisers on other advertising vehicles, although a small number of the advertiser witnesses devoted almost all their advertising to Yellow Pages. Advertisers spending relatively large amounts in the Yellow Pages are, nevertheless, well placed to provide evidence on the opportunities for substituting between Yellow Pages and other advertising vehicles.

[76] In terms of actual switching behaviour, the respondents referred to evidence of a locksmith who cut his Yellow Pages spending and bought brochures, on the advice of a Yellow Pages consultant, and of a photographer who was visited by a newspaper consultant who designed a smaller Yellow Pages advertisement for him. The implications of the existence and practices of the consultants for substitutability will be dealt with in the next section. Both newspaper and Yellow Pages consultants use a similar methodology, in that they attempt to convince an advertiser that a smaller, less expensive Yellow Pages advertisement will be equally effective in the Yellow Pages. The Director also provided numerous examples of "non-switching" where increases or decreases in spending on other media were unrelated to spending on Yellow Pages.

Although the circumstances of advertisers and the language used to describe their advertising strategies varied, none of the advertisers indicated that other media could be substituted for Yellow Pages. What they did say was that they use different media for different purposes. They use Yellow Pages advertising for purposes which take advantage of its unique characteristics. They advertise in the Yellow Pages because it is a reference of all available suppliers which is received and retained by most consumers and is consulted by them. They consider that Yellow Pages is cost-effective in this regard and generates a superior level of customer response.

Some, particularly large-budget, advertisers use other media to "create awareness". The witnesses use media other than Yellow Pages to advertise specials, include prices or to target a specific group or occasion. Steve Kantor of Tiremag Corp., who sells aluminum wheels and tires, uses other vehicles to convey a seasonal message, selling the "sporty" look in spring and "safety" in fall. Likewise, Kenneth Flinn, who operates a taxi and courier business (Lockerby Taxi Inc.) and relies almost exclusively on Yellow Pages, uses radio during the holiday season to convey the message "don't drink and drive". Yellow Pages cannot accommodate this time-sensitive advertising.

On this point, the respondents attempted to demonstrate the vulnerability of Yellow Pages to substitution by a review of advertisements in a number of newspapers from Toronto, Thornhill, London, Ottawa, Niagara, Sault Ste. Marie, St. Catharines and Montreal over a three-week period. The purpose was to show that some advertisers were using both Yellow Pages and newspapers and that they could substitute one for the other.[77] Professor Willig observes that a "limited number" of advertisers employed "much the same" advertisements in both the newspaper and the Yellow Pages. He puts forward only four examples, of which only two are identical. For the other two, "the newspaper ad includes some of the same information presented in the directory display ad, but . . . the newspaper ad also includes some timely information of the kind that a directory ad could not contain, due to its permanence."[78]

The respondents provided three further examples of advertisements that were similar in both the Yellow Pages and a newspaper.[79] These types of advertisements evidently represent a very small percentage of Yellow Pages advertisements. Equally important is the conclusion that the respondents draw from Professor Willig's survey and the other examples, that the advertisements are only "essentially" the same and that where differences arise, they often stem from the greater timeliness of the newspaper. For example, the newspaper advertisement contains a price. They did not, however, provide us with any basis for concluding that prices and other time-sensitive information are trivial or unimportant to advertisers.

[77] Newspaper advertisements were identified for establishments in the businesses represented by the top five Yellow Pages headings in the region's Tele-Direct directories. Then, those establishments with newspaper advertisements were sought in their local Tele-Direct Yellow Pages directories. Overall, the search found 542 newspaper advertisers in these categories. Of this group, 39% had display advertisements in both the searched newspaper and in the local Tele-Direct Yellow Pages directory, while 61% of the newspaper advertisers had no display advertisement in their local Tele-Direct Yellow Pages directory. (The 61% is comprised of 42% who had no Yellow Pages business phone number, and hence no listing in the Tele-Direct Yellow Pages of any kind. Another 12% did have lightface classified listings in the local Tele-Direct Yellow Pages directory, but no advertisement in that directory of any kind. Yet another 6% had a boldface listing in their local Tele-Direct Yellow Pages directory, but no display advertisement in that directory.)

[78] Expert affidavit of R. Willig (17 August 1995): exhibit R-180 at paras. 20-22, appendix 2B.

[79] Exhibit R-116. One of the three contained pricing information in the newspaper and not in the directory.

Time sensitivity for some advertisers cannot mean that those advertisers are likely to switch from Yellow Pages to newspapers and vice versa. Instead, they will use newspapers to convey time-sensitive information because that is what newspapers are good at doing. Likewise, they will use Yellow Pages to convey a message that is not time-sensitive but that takes advantage of other characteristics of Yellow Pages as a medium.

Agents specialized in selling Yellow Pages, general advertising agents, a witness with a large media buying agency and the former Vice-president of Marketing with Tele-Direct also testified that they did not consider other advertising vehicles a substitute for Yellow Pages and had not observed their customers to have ever done so.

Professor Schwindt's evidence supports the Director's argument that certain types of businesses use or do not use the Yellow Pages because Yellow Pages have particular characteristics that set them apart from other advertising vehicles. His evidence showed that businesses providing emergency services (glass repair, contractors, plumbers), infrequently consumed products (lawyers, moving and storage, exterminators), services used by travellers (automobile rental), products for which the use of the telephone is important (pizza), or any combination of these, tend to rely heavily on the Yellow Pages. Professor Schwindt also points out that there are types of businesses (grocers, department stores and theatres) that are known to advertise very heavily in other vehicles such as newspapers and flyers and spend virtually nothing on Yellow Pages.

On the other hand, Professor Willig, for the respondents, pointed out that whether Tele-Direct has market power, i.e., is vulnerable to ready substitution by advertisers to other media, depends on the combined demand of all advertisers, including those who are not necessarily very reliant on Yellow Pages. While he concedes some advertisers are more reliant than others on Yellow Pages advertising and that this affects the average elasticity of demand and the ability of Tele-Direct to exercise market power, he is of the view that the presence of advertisers who are willing to switch serves to discipline Tele-Direct's pricing. He acknowledges, however, that his position is subject to exception if Yellow Pages publishers could be shown to have the ability to price discriminate.

Price discrimination allows a firm with market power to secure higher profits (strictly, price less marginal cost) on sales to some customers than on sales to others. A firm without the ability to price discriminate may be disciplined by the ready ability of at least some of its customers to switch if prices are increased and, when considering a price increase, must weigh what it will lose against what it will gain from that action.

However, where a firm has found a way to price discriminate, no weighing need be considered. The prices for customers who might switch will be left at a level where they will continue to purchase. However, for those customers who are so reliant on the firm that they cannot switch, the firm may extract higher prices and therefore higher profits on sales to them. The ability to price discriminate therefore tends to demonstrate that a firm is not, at least in respect to the customers who are subject to the discrimination, vulnerable to those customers substituting other products for that of the firm.

On our assessment of the evidence, Tele-Direct does engage in price discrimination but not as between headings, i.e., it does not charge plumbers (a business likely to be heavily reliant on Yellow Pages) more for the same advertisement than it does grocery stores (likely to be less reliant). Rather, Tele-Direct price discriminates against those who tend to spend more in Yellow Pages by buying larger advertisements[80] or colour. Those customers are charged much more than can be explained by the additional costs associated with producing and servicing the enhanced advertisement. Thus, larger advertisers (by expenditure) under all headings contribute more to Tele-Direct's profits than smaller advertisers. Professor Willig agreed that if customers who use colour value Yellow Pages more than customers who do not, the pricing of colour is a way to price discriminate between customers who value Yellow Pages more and customers who value it less.

Tele-Direct does not have to target these firms; they in effect identify themselves. Firms that are heavily reliant on Yellow Pages are the ones that will buy a larger and more colourful advertisement in order to attract customers away from their competitors in the same Yellow Pages heading. This is indicated by the large average expenditures per subscriber and per advertiser under headings such as "moving and storage" and five other headings that stand out in the top 25 listed by Professor Schwindt in his report. The fact that there are advertisers under other headings who are less reliant on Yellow Pages can have no influence on the ability of Tele-Direct to extract higher returns from advertisers who compete heavily within headings.

[80] There is an important difference between Yellow Pages and non-classified advertising in other print media (or electronic media, for that matter) that results from the fact that media with editorial or entertainment content usually prefer to have minimum percentage of such content. The effect is to create an opportunity cost to having larger advertisements, because they absorb some of the available space for other content. This consideration is not present in the case of Yellow Pages and should not affect the pricing of larger advertisements.

Moreover, while headings provide an important first indicator of whether a business is likely to be a heavy advertiser, there may be important differences among advertisers within a heading. One advertiser in a heading may have a larger or more colourful advertisement than the advertising by its competition within that heading. This is illustrated by the evidence of Howard Kitchen of Lansing Buildall, whose firm of lumber supply outlets is a relatively large Yellow Pages advertiser in the Toronto area. When asked about the fact that a large new entrant in lumber supply was not advertising in the Yellow Pages, he pointed out that his firm encouraged telephone inquiries while his competitor did not. The pricing of Yellow Pages, therefore, is able to capture the greater need of particular customers within headings as well as between headings. Thus, Tele-Direct's ability to price discriminate causes us to conclude, at least in respect of those larger advertisers who are most reliant on Yellow Pages advertising and therefore purchase large size advertisements or colour, that there is no ready substitutability between Yellow Pages and other media.

(iv) Conclusion

There is little evidence supporting the respondents' position that all media are substitutes for local advertisers. Specifically, the evidence of switching behaviour between Yellow Pages and other media is extremely weak. There is almost no evidence that advertisers regard Yellow Pages as serving the same purpose as other media nor that they regard its purpose in the broad manner put forward by the respondents. While there is evidence of changes in advertising expenditures, they are associated with changes in economic conditions or advertising strategy rather than switching between media in response to competitive moves by those media.

While it is true as a matter of arithmetic that when expenditures are shifted within a fixed budget there will be winners and losers among the media, this fact tells us nothing about the willingness of firms to reallocate expenditures within the budget as a result of competitive moves by advertising vehicles. Advertisers' goals, situations and advertising needs are subject to change. Specific physical and technical differences among media limit the way that they can be used to accomplish a specific objective, such as the announcement of a sale, the listing of prices or a promotion related to a change in season and raise doubt about the willingness of advertisers to treat advertising dollars as fluid or as easily substitutable between Yellow Pages and other media. The respondents' proposition that both former and current Yellow Pages advertisers use a variety of advertising vehicles is likely correct. It was also proven that relatively large percentages of former and current advertisers do not think very highly of Yellow Pages. This tells us nothing about whether there is a sufficiently large body of Yellow Pages advertisers who are willing to switch their advertising dollars in the event that Yellow Pages were priced above the competitive level. There must be evidence that advertisers reallocate dollars in reaction to competitive moves by different media. It is insufficient just to demonstrate a fixed budget and changes in allocation by advertisers between media. In other words, there must be evidence in one form or another that advertisers regard other advertising vehicles as close substitutes for Yellow Pages.

The testimony of the advertiser witnesses about why they use Yellow Pages and the importance of Yellow Pages advertising to them is supported by Tele-Direct's own studies of advertisers. Many advertisers believe they have to be in Yellow Pages to be in a comprehensive reference tool, particularly if their competition is there. They feel they have no choice. As stated in the Omnifacts study:

> . . . There were numerous comments concerning the fact that the Yellow Pages, like the telco, operates in a monopoly situation where their customers are to some extent captive advertisers, who have really no choice but to place their advertising with Tele-Direct.[81]

If they do not use Yellow Pages it is because it does not suit their purpose, not because they can readily move dollars between Yellow Pages and other media. The views of buyers, therefore, strongly tend to support the view that Yellow Pages and other local media are not close substitutes.

(c) Trade Views, Strategies and Behaviour (Inter-industry Competition)

The Director argues that there is little evidence that Tele-Direct or other market participants consider Yellow Pages to be in competition with other media. Whatever steps Tele-Direct took in relation to other media, he submits, are to be contrasted with its reaction to other market participants that it clearly regarded as competition. The other competitors referred to by the Director are consultants, agencies which sell Yellow Pages advertising, and independent publishers of telephone directories.

The respondents argue that Tele-Direct does not compete, for various reasons, with either consultants or agencies in providing services to advertisers. They do, however, admit that independent publishers are in the relevant market with Tele-Direct, whether that market includes only directories or all local media. We will, therefore, compare Tele-Direct's reactions to other media to its reactions to independent directory publishers, about which there is no dispute between the parties.

The respondents argue that the evidence reveals "broad competition" or "competition in fact", as referred to by the Court of Appeal in Southam, between Tele-Direct and all other local media. They submit that Tele-Direct views other media as competitors and has taken various initiatives to compete with other media. They argue that other media, in turn, view Tele-Direct as a competitor.

The respondents submit that evidence of "broad competition" places all local media in the same product market. The respondents say that differences in the type or intensity of response to different "competitors" should not eliminate some "competitors" from the relevant market. We cannot agree. The type and intensity of the alleged competitive response is an element for consideration in determining if the products argued to be in the same market are close substitutes. Substitutability, as pointed out in the J.W. Mills case quoted above, is always a question of degree. Differences in the intensity of the reaction to players admitted to be competitors by Tele-Direct and those alleged to be competitors by Tele-Direct can help us to determine where to draw the line in this case.

(i) Tele-Direct's Views and Behaviour

General

The evidence is unequivocal that other directory publishers have been referred to as competitors by Tele-Direct and the respondents concede that they are. A number of independent publishers not affiliated with a telco produce directories in Tele-Direct's territory. Over the years, Tele-Direct has collected information on and copies of directories of independent publishers. As of 1994, the information was organized into a "competitive database" as part of the creation of a "Sensitive Market Intelligence System". The sales representatives gather information and the marketing department analyzes information on independent publishers as part of this system. Tele-Direct goes to considerable lengths to track and compile data on the revenues, prices, scoping, circulation and other features of independent directories.[82]

[82] See Competition Database Binder (1994): confidential exhibit CJ-15 (blue vol. 6), tab 205; 1994 Sensitive Market Report: confidential exhibit CJ-29 (black vol. 8), tab 51; Directory Publishers in Tele-Direct Operating Area: confidential exhibit CJ-32 (black vol. 11), tab 77 at 132125-45.

Further, it is not in dispute between the parties that when a broadly-scoped independent directory entered into Tele-Direct's territory in each of the Niagara region and in Sault Ste. Marie, Tele-Direct responded with zero price increases, advertiser incentive programs, promotional campaigns, and improvements to its own directories.[83]

While there are references within Tele-Direct documents to other media as "competitors" and to "competing for the advertising dollar", there was no effort on Tele-Direct's part to track revenues, prices, features or circulation in a comprehensive and detailed a fashion as there was with other directory publishers. When one compares the competition data base and sensitive markets material cited above to the documents put forward by the respondents as showing competition with other media, the difference in intensity is immediately apparent. They refer in their written argument, for example, to two speeches from 1984 and 1985 which refer to "competing with all other types of advertising media" and being in a "constant struggle for the customer's advertising dollar." Considerable emphasis is also placed on a 1993 document entitled "East Office Competition Analysis". The "east office" deals with only a portion of Tele-Direct's territory, namely the Peterborough, Orillia and Barrie areas. The document is a summary of a meeting regarding competition. It lists newspapers, flyers, consultants and television as competitors and canvasses various points of discussion. It does not identify particular competitors, give any detail on revenues likely lost, comparative pricing or features like circulation.

[83] For further details, see the facts set out in the section entitled "C. Market for Advertising Space - Publishing" in chapter "IX. Abuse of Dominant Position", infra.

There was likewise no evidence of a Tele-Direct response to other media competition that bears any resemblance to the focused and intense response to the competing directory publishers. The respondents referred us to other initiatives by Tele-Direct that they submit are of particular significance and we will deal with them in further detail below.

Educational Efforts

Educating employees to deal with the existence of competitors might be some evidence of concern by Tele-Direct about the potential for its advertisers to switch to other media. The evidence regarding Tele-Direct's educational efforts indicates, at best, a weak concern about the necessity to compete with other media. The respondents rely on the Multimedia Training Course as the principal Tele-Direct initiative to compete with other media. The only clear evidence we have, which comes from a written answer by the respondents to a question on discovery, is that the course was given once in 1992 for four days to all sales "employees". The oral evidence on the issue was vague, suggesting that the course was not an initiative that was considered significant by Tele-Direct.[84]

Based on the course having been given once in 1992 to all sales representatives, the investment by Tele-Direct was 1880 (470 x 4) person-days. Based on the average remuneration

[84] Mr. Giddings' testimony on this topic was confusing. He testified at various times that the course, or perhaps one module of it (which a discovery answer indicated had never been used for training purposes), was given to new representatives in about 1990 and that it, or some part of it, had been repeated for unknown numbers in 1993 and 1994. However, he also testified that no new premise sales representatives had been hired since 1992 casting doubt as to how many times and to how many persons the course was given.

of a premise sales representative, the cost to Tele-Direct was at most $500,000.[85] This was a one-time cost relating to all of Tele-Direct's territory with benefits spread over a number of years. By contrast, in reaction to the entry of DSP in Sault Ste. Marie, in one year (1993) in one relatively small market Tele-Direct spent over $215,000. Evidence of educational efforts does not suggest a great concern on Tele-Direct's part about other media competition.

Sales Aids

The respondents point to a variety of "sales aids" produced by Tele-Direct which contain references to other media. They submit that the specific claims made in the documents with respect to other media in relation to Yellow Pages are unimportant. Rather, they say significance lies in the simple fact that Tele-Direct created material which refers to other media to provide to its sales force. They claim that if Yellow Pages were "unique", there would be no need for this type of promotional material.

We are of the view that in examining the documents prepared for use by Yellow Pages representatives, we should consider whether the content of those documents points to the treatment by Tele-Direct of Yellow Pages as a separate advertising medium (the Director's position) versus whether the content indicates signs of competitive activity with other media (the respondents' position). The mere existence of sales aids which mention other media in some context cannot be solely determinative of the issue.

[85] The use of the average premise remuneration errs on the side of being too high. The other type of sales representative, a telephone sales representative, earns, on average, only about 60 percent of what a premise representative earns. Also, Mr. Giddings did say at one point that this course was given to new representatives, who would likely earn less than average in any case.

Two memoranda dated 1983 and 1985, respectively, deal with direct mail (flyers) as an alternative to Yellow Pages and provide visual aids to salespeople. The first concludes:

> We all know that any form of advertising is beneficial in one way or another but direct mail should never be an alternative to Yellow Pages when considering the circulation, permanence, or economy of the two mediums, and these visuals prove that.[86]

The second states:

> Unbelievable.
> When comparing the economy of Yellow Pages with the cost of Direct Mail it is hard to imagine why someone would consider Direct Mail an alternative to Yellow Pages advertising.[87]

Despite the fact that Tele-Direct sales representatives may have had, to some extent, to provide arguments on the superiority of Yellow Pages in relation to flyers and, indeed, any other media, the words used suggest non-, or at least low, substitutability between Yellow Pages and the alternative media. The authors of the memoranda appear to express disbelief and incredulity that anyone would ever consider direct mail as an economical alternative to Yellow Pages advertising.

Tele-Direct's Strategic Business Plan for the time period 1983-88 states:

[86] Exhibit J-2 (red vol. 2), tab 82 at 8833.

[87] Ibid., tab 81 at 8827.

> Part of a large, profitable but slow growth industry, the directory advertising business operates from a privileged position in a captive market.[88]

Tele-Direct has characterized its own market as "captive" in this business plan. We infer that this high level document reflects the perception of Tele-Direct management as to competition from other media. It places in context the aforementioned memoranda.

The respondents also refer to a set of documents that was prepared for the 1992 sales canvass which includes comparisons between the cost of advertising in Yellow Pages and two dailies and three community newspapers in the Toronto area. Other documents give the same type of information for other cities and towns. Another similar package compares the cost of Yellow Pages to two Toronto dailies, and shows what could be purchased with the Yellow Pages dollars in television, radio, flyers, calendars, key chains and ball point pens.

When we examine the content of these documents, we find that, as with the direct mail examples, what is being emphasized is the lack of comparability between the cost of Yellow Pages and the other media. With respect to the comparisons with newspaper advertising, one document (from 1992), for example, compares a 1/4 page advertisement for 30 days in the Toronto Yellow Pages (circulation over 1.3 million) at $677 with a 1/4 page single insertion in The Globe and Mail (circulation about 325,000) at over $7,000. Mr. Giddings described this type of sales pitch as making a comparison to point out that there is no comparison between Yellow Pages and newspapers. Newspapers are simply so much more expensive that there is no comparability. Another document has a similar tone; it focuses mainly on newspapers for comparisons but also highlights how little can be purchased with the Yellow Pages dollars if transferred to television ("2-60 second spots, non-prime time"), radio ("2-1 minute spots") and flyers, calendars, key chains and ball point pens (15,600 flyers, 709 calendars, 1,213 key chains and 1,365 pens while Yellow Pages circulation is over 900,000).

Tele-Direct, unlike other print media, does not use a "CPM" or cost per thousand measure in promoting its product to advertisers. A CPM is a calculation of the cost of the medium per thousand persons reached, which can be applied to the number of copies sold (assuming one reader per copy sold) or read (if that number is known) of, for example, a magazine or newspaper. The CPM allows comparisons between print media. Tele-Direct researched the possibility of developing a CPM for its directories in the late 1980s. Its survey of general and specialized advertising agencies revealed that the agencies thought such a measure > . . . entirely unnecessary since we [Tele-Direct] are the only ones in this field and there can be no similar comparison (they absolutely cannot imagine comparing us to the other "media").

> . . .
>
> In the event of serious competition, all agree that such a tool would be useful.
>
> However, two of the largest agencies already understand the usefulness and even suggest the development of this type of measure to better acquaint people with the Yellow Pages on a "national" level, and to establish ourselves as the unbeatable leader in the industry.[89]

[89] Confidential exhibit CJ-10 (blue vol. 1), tab 17 at 106527-28.

Although a later study concluded that a CPM measure should be developed for Yellow Pages that would be, to some extent, comparable to other media in order to "contribute to developing a media image for Y.P. directories, and would create a barrier for potential competition", none was developed. Tele-Direct does use a CPM-type formula internally in its pricing to ensure that its directories of similar circulation are priced similarly but CPM is not used as a marketing tool.

Equally relevant to the question of how Tele-Direct views its product in relation to other media is the large volume of Tele-Direct promotional material selling advertisers on the advantages of being dominant in a Yellow Pages heading. The virtues of size and colour are extolled in testimonial letters and other promotional material. The "YPROI study", which the respondents argue is a primary tool of their sales force in selling the "value of the medium", starts with a comparison of which media influenced persons who had made a recent purchase,[90] but also includes a page trumpeting the importance of size, colour and "impact" within the Yellow Pages so as to influence the buyer's selection of a firm once he or she consults the Yellow Pages.

The advantage of "standing out" that is being sold to customers is with respect to competitors advertising in the Yellow Pages, and not with reference to advertisements in some other medium. As pointed out by one of the Director's economics expert witnesses, Margaret Slade,[91] the amount of advertising a firm does in the Yellow Pages is dependent on how much its competitors do. When a Yellow Pages sales representative convinces a customer to increase its expenditures on Yellow Pages advertising, this creates pressure on its competitors to do likewise (referred to as the "prisoner's dilemma"). This phenomenon came through in the comments received from the established customers participating in the Omnifacts study in Newfoundland, that they tend to follow the competition when deciding on placement and size of their Yellow Pages advertising. The pressure on advertisers to observe and to some extent follow what their competitors are doing in the Yellow Pages indicates that Yellow Pages are a distinct medium, a separate arena within which firms seek to stand out.

The respondents stress that competition for the advertising dollar is not so much a matter of whether firms advertise in the Yellow Pages but of how much they advertise, primarily whether they buy coloured advertisements and larger advertisements. The number of headings would be an additional factor determining the expenditures of customers. It is noteworthy that the attempts by Tele-Direct to sell colour and size to its advertisers are based on comparisons with black and white advertisements or smaller advertisements within Yellow Pages.[92] Thus, the success or failure of Tele-Direct representatives in capturing more of the advertising dollar depends on the extent to which they can convince customers that they need to upgrade their advertisements to be more effective vis-à-vis the customers' competitors in the Yellow Pages. It is difficult to perceive of this as "inter-media" competition.

[92] While it is true that price comparisons with the newspapers are used, including different sizes of newspaper advertisements and advertisements with red, the message is that it is cheaper to use the Yellow Pages regardless of the size or colour of the advertisement.

Pricing -- General Policy

Another relevant area in inter-media views and conduct concerns how, if at all, the prices of other media influence Tele-Direct's pricing. Tele-Direct generally establishes its prices about a year and a half to two years in advance, with prices, for example, for the 1995 directories set in late 1993.

The Pricing Policy documents placed on the record reveal that Tele-Direct considers various inputs in setting prices. For example, in the 1993 Pricing Policy produced in October 1991,[93] these included rate/circulation alignment policy,[94] recent Tele-Direct price-ups (1988-92), the consumer price index ("CPI") (1991-93), the paper and allied industry price index (1990-92), the percentage change year-to-year in the number of directory copies printed by Tele-Direct (1991-93), estimated price-ups in other media for 1992 and Tele-Direct's internal rate of inflation (1991-93). Given the timing, much of the information is estimated. The 1994 Pricing Policy is a two-page document only as all 1994 issues had a zero percent price-up. In the brief text, the following are mentioned: relationship with customers, impact on profitability, prevailing economic factors, cost containment including a recent, more favourable printing contract and the rate of inflation or CPI. In the 1995 Pricing Policy, the only change from the 1993 Pricing Policy is to replace the "paper and allied industry price index" heading [93] The 1993 prices were revised in February 1992. The respondents rely heavily on this particular exercise; it is reviewed in detail below.

[94] Consistency in cost per thousand of circulation across directories.

with "junked directories".[95] The 1996 Pricing Policy adds two additional items, gross domestic product and personal disposable income and reverts to using an indicator of paper cost increase, as for 1993.

In all cases, the information regarding the forecasted price-ups of other media that is contained in the policies was obtained from general advertising agencies, usually two or three different ones, and is stated as a range. The media included are television, dailies, magazines, outdoor and radio. "Business papers" also appeared in one year and "transit" in one other year.

To obtain insight on how the information with respect to other media entered into pricing decisions, we look to the testimony of Ms. McIlroy, who was intimately involved in the pricing decisions. According to her, the "key drivers" of pricing were, in order of importance: relationship to cost, rate/circulation re-alignment, revenue stream for the sales force and local considerations, both economic and the presence or feared entry of a competitive directory. She stated that there was no direct relationship between the prices of other media and Tele-Direct's pricing. Her view was based on her own experience and a review of all relevant pricing documents on the record, dating from the early 1980s to the 1995 Pricing Policy. Ms. McIlroy did not alter her position regarding the relative unimportance of other media in setting Yellow Pages prices when responding to questions on cross-examination.

[95] Ms. McIlroy explained that the "junked directories" are those that never enter into circulation. Tele-Direct used the volume of junked directories to forecast how many copies should be printed and to ensure that estimate was realistic. If many of the copies printed end up as junked directories, this over-inflates Tele-Direct's circulation figures.

Douglas Renwicke was the Senior Vice-president to whom Ms. McIlroy reported from 1991-94 and was involved in sales or marketing from 1988. He expressed general agreement with Ms. McIlroy's description of the price setting process. He disagreed over certain details that are not germane to the present discussion. However, more importantly, he also disagreed with Ms. McIlroy concerning the relevancy of other media prices in Tele-Direct price setting.

Mr. Renwicke stated that the three "primary" key drivers for pricing in the 1990s are CPI, other media price-ups and local market knowledge. A group of "secondary" key drivers include growth and circulation, gross domestic product and Tele-Direct's internal rate of inflation (costs). He distinguished price setting in the 1980s when the key drivers were circulation, internal costs and, from 1987 to 1990, circulation alignment.

At least for the 1980s, during which Tele-Direct enjoyed exceptional growth, Mr. Renwicke agrees with Ms. McIlroy that factors such as the internal rate of inflation at Tele-Direct and circulation growth were primary determinants of Tele-Direct's prices. He also recognizes that towards the end of the 1980s discrepancies in rates per thousand in different directories became another important concern that entered at the local market level. The attempt to get prices in line across markets was abandoned for a couple of years following the recession but appears to be re-emerging as an ongoing factor. Considering Ms. McIlroy's and Mr. Renwicke's evidence together, we conclude that other media prices were not a "key driver" during the 1980s.

Mr. Renwicke explicitly distinguishes the 1990s and it is here that he appears to take issue with Ms. McIlroy. We will, therefore, look in more detail at the information available to the officers engaged in price setting in 1991, 1993 and 1994 (for 1993, 1995 and 1996).[96]

The 1993 Pricing Policy document sets out the following predicted increases in various items for 1993:

> Increase in CPI for Ontario: 3.6%
> Increase in CPI for Quebec: 3.7%
>
> Tele-Direct internal rate of inflation: 5%
>
> Increase in cost of printing: 4.7%
>
> Increase in copies to be printed: 2.9%
> (proxy for circulation increase)

The ranges of predicted percentage price-ups for other media set out in the document were obtained by Claude Phaneuf, Manager of Marketing Research, from two general advertising agencies and a media buying firm.[97] Notably, these predicted increases are for 1992 only:

> Television: 0% - 10%
> Dailies: 3% - 7%
> Business Papers: 5% - 8%
> Magazines: 3% - 7%
> Outdoor: 3% - 5%
> Radio: 4% - 7%

---

[96] The 1992 exercise (for 1994) is not included as prices were not increased.

[97] Information on business papers and outdoor came from only one source.

According to Messrs. Phaneuf and Renwicke the predicted price changes for 1992 were considered relevant even though Tele-Direct was considering price changes for 1993 because the canvass of customers for the 1993 directories was done during 1992. However, Mr. Phaneuf could not explain why predicted changes for other factors such as the CPI were obtained for 1993.

Two notes accompany the information on other media price increases. They state: "Demand Driven Market" and "Anybody's Crystal Ball". According to Mr. Phaneuf, the second note is a warning about the discrepancy in the information received from different sources (as indicated by the wide range of predicted price changes, such as for television). Taking the first note at its face value, it means that the prices that would actually prevail in 1992 would depend on the state of demand at that time.

The average Tele-Direct price increase established in October 1991 for 1993 was five percent, with a minimum of 3.5 percent and a maximum of 5.9 percent for specific directories. The average price increase of five percent for 1993 falls within the range of other media price-ups (not difficult since the range is so large) but the same average increase could just as easily have been arrived at without any reference to other media prices. This observation also applies to the pricing documents for 1995 and 1996 that were used in setting prices in 1993 and 1994.

Several other points emerge from a review of the information available to Mr. Renwicke and other officers. Although Mr. Renwicke stated that he would be concerned about the prices of community and daily newspapers, only the price-up of dailies was collected. While the general agencies that provided the information to Mr. Phaneuf were much more likely to be familiar with dailies than with community newspapers, it is instructive that there is no evidence of any effort by Tele-Direct to obtain pricing information about its other alleged competitors, community newspapers.

Further, no information on flyers or direct mail is included. Other Tele-Direct documents group flyers with Yellow Pages as directional media, indicating that prices for flyers would clearly be relevant, and perhaps more relevant than predicted prices for the electronic media, business papers and magazines. We also note that the information provided by Mr. Phaneuf for television does not reveal whether the prices in question relate to local television, network television or both. When questioned about this Mr. Renwicke was not sure but thought that the predicted price changes related to local television.

We conclude that Ms. McIlroy's view that the prices of other media had little or no influence on Tele-Direct's pricing policy in the 1990s is borne out. Mr. Renwicke's use of the term "key driver" when referring to the prices of other media is disingenuous. The documentary evidence does not support this characterization. Nor, in fact, does the remainder of Mr. Renwicke's own testimony. By a "key driver", he apparently meant a very tenuous relationship between Tele-Direct's price increases and the price increases of other media. He testified that other media prices enter into Tele-Direct's price setting as follows:

> . . . [W]e wouldn't focus this closely on network TV as we would on community or daily newspapers, but we focus on that because we don't want to be way out of line with what newspapers are pricing up at or other comparable media that we feel our advertisers use amongst their choices of how to promote their business.
>
> . . . We feel if the gap was too large and we didn't pay attention to that over time, there could be at least substitution on the margin that could take place.
>
> I think that's a real concern throughout the recession.
>
> . . .
>
> Q. You said you would be concerned if the prices were way out of line. What do you mean by "way out of line"?
>
> A. Frankly, particularly with newspapers, I would consider anything, five percent or greater, to be too much out of line.[98]

A fear of losing some advertising dollars to other media if a relatively large difference in price increases persists over time (and during a recession) confirms only that newspaper or other media pricing provides little or no competitive discipline for Tele-Direct's pricing. Tele-Direct did not ignore the prices of other media; they were a part of the general economic environment. But given the types of media covered and the tentative conclusions that it could derive from the information we cannot conclude that it had the concern of a firm worried about close substitutes.

Pricing -- Revision of 1993 Prices in 1992

The respondents place considerable emphasis on the fact that in February 1992 Tele-Direct, for the first time ever, revised its 1993 prices during the canvass for the 1993 directories as it ran into advertiser resistance due to the difficult economic times. For the remaining directories not yet canvassed the average price increase was reduced from five percent to 3.2 percent.

The respondents point to a brief statement in the minutes of a sales and marketing executive meeting held in February 1992 which they say reflects the reasons why prices were revised:

> The rates that were implemented for 1993 have been revised to lower levels given the reaction of our customers to our 1992 prices, the pricing of other media and the expected rate of inflation in Ontario and Quebec.[99] (emphasis added)

They also rely on the revised Standby Statement for 1993 Pricing which was presented at the meeting and apparently accepted by all concerned. The Statement reads:

> Our pricing policy for 1993 issues of Yellow Pages and White Pages directories has been revised downward to take into consideration the economic conditions prevailing in 1992.
>
> This policy reflects the fact that most prices are on a downward trend for 1992. It is also in step with the advertising industry where media rates for 1992 are expected to be in the 3% to 5% range for daily newspapers, magazines and out-of-home (billboards, etc.). Radio and T.V. are expected to be in the 0% to 5% range with peaks of 10% for T.V. due to high demand for last-minute buying.
>
> All media are expected to increase their rates towards the end of 1992 as the economy picks up. Forecasts for 1993 and 1994 are for prices increases of 10% or more. Based on these forecasts, it is evident that Yellow Pages directory advertising will be one of the media with the lowest price-ups during that period.

[99] Confidential exhibit CJ-12 (blue vol. 3), tab 115 at 109881.

> Finally, our pricing structure must also reflect our own internal cost increases which have been kept to a minimum for 1992 thus allowing us to keep price-ups at their very low levels.[100]

Both Mr. Renwicke and Ms. McIlroy attended the meeting at which the prices were revised. Ms. McIlroy attributed no importance to the Standby Statement as a price setting document, regarding it purely as a document prepared for public relations purposes. Nor did Mr. Renwicke mention other media prices when describing the motivation for the revision in 1993 prices. He emphasized general economic conditions:

> In 1991 we clearly did not project the decrease that would take place in CPI or the recession . . . [I]n February '92, we actually re-did prices for '93 for the books we could still catch and I am thinking of the border markets in particular that were being decimated with cross-border shopping, Niagara Falls, Sarnia, Windsor.
> We reduced those all by a percentage point. So, we did our best to try and get back down to a point where we were near CPI because our customers were reading in the paper every day that inflation in Toronto was approaching zero and why were our rates up at four per cent, five per cent, six per cent. Partly it was a function of the lag we had in setting those prices initially and not foreseeing the downturn that did take place in the economy.[101]

Taking into account both the documents and the views of two of the officers involved in the exercise, the 1993 price revision does not change our view that other media prices are not "key drivers" in Tele-Direct's pricing.

New Products

[100] Confidential exhibit CJ-32 (black vol. 11), tab 76 at 132008-9 (public) (with covering memorandum).

[101] Transcript at 44:9283-84 (22 November 1995).

The respondents list four new product initiatives which they say show competition between Tele-Direct and the other media by the fact of their having been tried. These four products were coupons in directories, AdSpot and BrandSell (creative-type directory advertisements), colour and participation in the "Marketing the Medium" program which is designed to prove the value of Yellow Pages.

There was little evidence about the nature and cost of these programs and why they were launched, which media were considered important competitors in triggering them, what success they achieved in terms of revenue gain or loss for Tele-Direct and if they were discontinued and why. Contrary to the respondents' submissions, we cannot accept that the mere existence of these alleged new products is instructive. Their mere existence is not indicative of substitutability between Yellow Pages and any other advertising medium.

(ii) Newspapers

Newspaper Consultants

The respondents rely on the evidence of the activities of newspaper consultants as proof both of Tele-Direct's response to a "competitor" (daily newspapers) and of an initiative by another medium to compete against Yellow Pages. Newspaper consultants attempt to convince Yellow Pages advertisers that they are spending too much on their Yellow Pages advertising. Once the newspaper consultants have succeeded in persuading the advertiser to cut back on Yellow Pages spending, they then try to convince the advertiser to place some of the dollars "saved" in newspaper advertising.

Newspaper consultants first became active in Canada in 1987, having previously operated in the United States. One method used by the consultants was to hold seminars, sponsored by the newspaper that hired the consultants, to which Yellow Page advertisers were invited. A second method, apparently employed to a greater extent in recent years, is to locate good "prospects" among Yellow Pages advertisers (those with large or coloured Yellow Pages advertisements) and then visit them.

Newspaper consultant activity is not convincing evidence that newspapers and Yellow Pages are close substitutes. If Yellow Pages and newspapers were close substitutes, the newspaper's sales representatives would be fully familiar with Yellow Pages as part of the competitive environment. If the two media were close substitutes it would not be necessary for newspapers to hire outside "consultants" on a one-shot or periodic basis. Further, it would be expected that price discounting by the newspapers would be a more potent weapon than the rather circuitous approach of the use of consultants in regaining or capturing revenue from the Yellow Pages. The success of newspaper consultants depends on finding customers who are unhappy with Tele-Direct. An unmistakable implication is that such customers do not perceive other media as close substitutes for Yellow Pages, otherwise they would already have stopped or reduced their use of Yellow Pages.

Further, a successful newspaper consultant must convince the advertiser that a different, less costly Yellow Pages advertisement or set of advertisements will work as well as the existing Yellow Pages advertising. In other words, the question is how much does that advertiser really need to spend to have an effective advertisement in the Yellow Pages? This is borne out by the fact that a consultant's methodology involves two distinct steps. First, the Yellow Pages advertiser must be convinced that he or she can reduce Yellow Pages expenditures without prejudicing the results from the Yellow Pages advertising. Then, the newspaper consultant must try and sell the advertiser on spending the dollars saved elsewhere. But, this is clearly a second step. This is recognized even by Tele-Direct in a document referring to newspaper consultants:

> newspaper reps are recommending down-size YP and don't talk about newspapers (probably will go in later to make pitch).[102]

The advertiser, of course, may simply decide to pocket the savings. This process is not indicative of shifting of spending from one competing media to another. The restriction of the context to the Yellow Pages as the first step taken by newspaper consultants is a critical point in defining the relevant market. It indicates that what is occurring is not the allocation of the advertisers' overall advertising budget between newspapers and Yellow Pages but rather focusing on whether money can be saved in Yellow Pages advertising without regard to other media.

On the whole, the presence of newspaper consultants has been sporadic, sometimes in one local market and sometimes in another. In no case have they been continuously active in any local market. With respect to the actual success of the newspaper consultants, Ms. McIlroy testified that "they were never successful in doing any damage really of any kind, at least that we monitored. I never noticed any significant damage."[103] Mr. Giddings also testified that he could not quantify their impact.[104] This is telling evidence regarding Tele-Direct's response to the alleged "competition". The success of newspaper consultants could be easily tracked. They visit advertisers individually and try to convince them to adopt a specific advertising plan. In these cases it is perfectly clear to the Tele-Direct sales representatives why the customer is making changes in his or her program. No data was gathered by Tele-Direct on the impact of newspaper consultants, which would have been expected had Tele-Direct considered the effort worthwhile. It apparently did not.

Community Newspapers

The respondents called one witness who represented community newspapers. Ginette Allard-Villeneuve of Quebecor testified that, in her opinion, community newspapers and Yellow Pages compete for the advertising budget and that the advertisements placed in each are "somewhat interchangeable". Since Ms. Allard-Villeneuve appeared to have very little familiarity with or knowledge about the Yellow Pages, it is evident that she is referring to a very attenuated form of "competition" between the two. The respondents do not, in fact, seem to be claiming anything more than that.

(iii) Conclusion

The evidence on inter-industry views and conduct indicates that there was some limited competition between Yellow Pages and other media, principally newspapers. When the form of this competition and Tele-Direct's response to it are contrasted with the kind of head-to-head competition that occurred in Sault Ste. Marie and Niagara Falls, where there was entry of competing broadly-scoped telephone directories, there are pronounced differences in the intensity of Tele-Direct response.[105] The same difference in intensity is found in Tele-Direct's failure to track its successes and failures relative to other media and its assiduous efforts to track the sales volumes of independent publishers that it had identified as competitors. Tele-Direct did collect anticipated prices of other media in setting its prices. However, these were broad estimates and the prices for electronic media, for which there is virtually no evidence of direct competition with Yellow Pages, are included. On the other hand, media which are closer (as opposed to "close") substitutes such as community newspapers and flyers are excluded. It is difficult to see the predicted price changes of other media as an important ingredient in Tele-Direct's pricing. In short, the evidence of inter-media competition supports the Director's position that Yellow Pages and other media are not close substitutes.

[105] As already indicated, Tele-Direct responded with zero price increases, advertiser incentive programs, promotional campaigns and improvements to its own directories.

(d) Price Relationships and Relative Price Levels

There is little evidence that can properly be considered under this heading. Telephone directories and other media do not have a common standard of measurement that would allow valid price comparisons. While price comparisons were prepared for the use of Tele-Direct sales representatives, they were designed to show that Yellow Pages advertising was virtually non-comparable to other media (primarily newspapers). In any event, no common standard of measurement was used.

The respondents refer to two documents which purport to track a weighted average of annual price increases of other media and those of Tele-Direct over approximately a decade, along with the overall rate of inflation.[106] There is no rigorous analysis either in the internal documents of Tele-Direct or by the experts that would allow any conclusion to be drawn from these documents alone. Given that there are common economic forces driving prices even in very disparate industries, one would expect to see some correlation in overall price movement. An attenuated correlation in price movement does not indicate close substitutes. Even a high correlation between two sets of prices is only a necessary condition for the two products to be considered to be in the same market. But, it is not a sufficient condition to prove they are in the same market because other factors than substitutability may be responsible for the correlation.

(e) Switching Costs

There is no dispute that the costs of switching from one medium to another are relatively low.

(5) Conclusions Regarding Substitutability

Each of the indicia points in the same direction. We have little difficulty in concluding that telephone directory advertising is a distinct advertising medium without close substitutes. Directory advertising is a directional medium with a function distinct from that of creative media. Within the group of media considered to be directional, a review of the evidence regarding physical and technical characteristics, advertiser perceptions and behaviour, inter-industry competition and price relationships leads us to conclude that telephone directory advertising is a relevant product market.

B. GEOGRAPHIC MARKET

There is no dispute between the parties that the geographic market is local in nature, corresponding roughly to the scope of each of Tele-Direct's directories.

VII. CONTROL: MARKET POWER

The exercise of defining a relevant market is only a step towards answering the critical question of whether Tele-Direct has "control" or market power in that market. As the Tribunal has said on previous occasions, market power is generally considered to mean an ability to set prices above competitive levels and to maintain them at that level for a significant period of time without erosion by new entry or expansion of existing firms. In those cases, the Tribunal also recognized that where the available evidence does not allow the definition of market power to be applied directly, it is necessary to look to indicators of market power, such as market share and barriers to entry.[107]

The Tribunal has never ruled out the possibility, however, that direct indicators of market power might be available as evidence in an appropriate case. Direct indicators of market power relate to the performance of the firm or firms in question or to their behaviour. The broad question that is posed is whether the observed performance results (e.g., profits) or observed patterns of conduct (e.g., pricing policy) are more likely to be associated with a firm or firms that are competitive or with those that have market power. While there are difficulties in applying direct indicators of market power, if the evidence is available this avenue should not be excluded. In this case, the parties addressed both the indirect or structural approach to market power (market share and barriers to entry) and "other evidence" of market power of a more direct nature. The Tribunal will likewise address both avenues in that order.

A. INDIRECT APPROACH: MARKET STRUCTURE

Having determined that telephone directory advertising in local areas constitute relevant markets, it remains to determine Tele-Direct's market share and the conditions of entry into those markets. A large market share can support an initial determination that a firm likely has market power, absent other extenuating circumstances, in general, ease of entry.[108]

We will deal with the question of market power in the supply of telephone directory advertising, which includes both publishing and advertising services. The issues relating to the possible "subdivision" of the market into two (or perhaps more) component parts will be canvassed later in these reasons.

(1) Market Share

Based on Tele-Direct's November 1995 revenue estimates for independent publishers operating in its markets and the data on the record regarding its own published revenues for Ontario and Quebec for 1994, Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. has approximately 96 percent share of telephone directory revenues in Ontario and Quebec.[109] It is instructive to note that, in 1992, a [109] Overview of Other Publishers in Tele-Direct Markets: confidential exhibit CR-170; Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. - Profitability Study for 1994: confidential exhibit CR-185. Tele-Direct's 1994 published revenues were the most recent available at the time of the hearing. Exhibit CR-170 was put forward by the respondents as their most up-to-date information on independents' revenues and so we will refer to it to the exclusion of the various other numbers and documents brought up during Mr. Renwicke's testimony. Exhibit CR-170 provides two different bottom line totals for number of independent directories and revenue. The difference is accounted for by cessation of publication by one publisher with ten directories and revenues of $1.5 million. The totals that have been used are those that include that publisher and its revenues.

Tele-Direct document estimated the total potential sales of independent directories in Ontario and Quebec at $32 million.[110] That would indicate an upper limit on the potential growth of the independents of well under 10 percent of Tele-Direct revenues. The same year, Tele-Direct estimated the actual sales of independents at less than one-third of the "potential" amount set out. The November 1995 estimates place the total revenues of the independents at slightly over one-half of what was described as their potential business in 1992. Even in Tele-Direct's worst case scenario regarding growth of independents, it would still be left with a market share of 90 percent.

Although there was no significant disagreement between the parties that the geographic markets are local in nature, largely corresponding to the scope of the relevant Tele-Direct directory, Tele-Direct's information on other publishers was presented for sales throughout the territory of Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc., namely Ontario and Quebec. No local market information was placed on the record except for the revenues of White and DSP in the Niagara and Sault Ste. Marie areas. White publishes a directory in each of Niagara Falls, St. Catharines and Fort Erie, as does Tele-Direct. DSP publishes one directory covering the area bounded by Sault Ste. Marie, Elliot Lake and Wawa in Canada. Tele-Direct publishes three separate directories for that area. On the basis that in each of those two local markets the large independent and Tele-Direct are the only significant players, in the Niagara region based on [110] Telephone Directory Competition in Ontario/Quebec: confidential exhibit CJ-13 (blue vol. 4), tab 164; testimony of D. Renwicke: transcript at 46:9679-80 (27 November 1995). This figure was calculated based on a research study conducted in the United States which determined that independents overall had 5.9 percent of telco directory revenues. The 1993 Simba/Communications Trends study places independents at under 7 percent of total national revenues: confidential exhibit CJ-14 (blue vol. 5), tab 174.

1994 revenues, Tele-Direct has a market share of about 85 percent, while in the Sault Ste. Marie region its market share is about 80 percent.[111]

Thus, even in the two markets in which Tele-Direct faces the most significant competition, its market share is still over 80 percent. In the absence of further detailed information on local market shares, which apparently even Tele-Direct does not compile, this fact, allied with Tele-Direct's overwhelming share of sales over its territory as a whole, leads us to conclude that Tele-Direct dominates telephone directory advertising in markets in Ontario and Quebec. Prima facie, we are of the view that Tele-Direct has market power based on its large share of the relevant market, absent compelling evidence of easy entry into the supply of telephone directory advertising.

(2) Barriers to Entry

In the absence of barriers to entry, even a single seller cannot exercise market power. Any attempt by the incumbent to price above the competitive level will attract immediate entry by competing sellers. We have concluded that Tele-Direct has a large share of the relevant [111] According to the respondents' map of other publishers (exhibit R-159), only DSP and Tele-Direct are in Sault Ste. Marie, Elliot Lake and Wawa; only White and Tele-Direct are in St. Catharines and Niagara Falls. There are the Locator and Easy to Read directories in Fort Erie but there is no local revenue information on the record. It cannot be very high based on averages taken from Overview of Other Publishers in Tele-Direct Markets (confidential exhibit CR-170). Niagara calculation: Tele-Direct 1994 published revenues for Niagara Falls, St. Catharines and Fort Erie taken from Tele-Direct's 1994 Corporate Post Canvass Analysis Report (confidential exhibit CJ-28 (black vol. 7), tab 42 at 128980); White's 1994 revenue was stated by Richard Lewis to be 17 percent of Tele-Direct's revenue (transcript at 22:4363-64 (18 October 1995)). Sault Ste. Marie calculation: Tele-Direct 1994 published revenues for the Sault Ste. Marie, Elliot Lake and Wawa taken from Tele-Direct's 1994 Corporate Post Canvass Analysis Report (confidential exhibit CJ-28 (black vol. 7), tab 42 at 128983); DSP 1994 (year 2) revenues taken from DSP - Sault Ste. Marie Directory - Gross Revenue from 1993 to 1995 (confidential exhibit CA-109).

market. Proof of easy entry would overcome the initial determination that Tele-Direct has market power in the supply of telephone directory advertising.

The parties have organized their arguments regarding barriers to entry under three headings, (a) observed entry and exit, (b) sunk costs and (c) incumbent advantages. We will use the same headings.

(a) Observed Entry and Exit

Observed entry into a market can provide some indication of the existence or non-existence and the nature of any barriers to entry. There is no dispute that entry into publishing a "niche" directory appears to be relatively easy. The Director has admitted as much, based on the large number of niche directories and the high level of observed entry and exit.

The Director argues that the smaller directories have captured only a "minuscule" portion of the market and that fact, combined with Tele-Direct's lack of competitive reaction to their presence, confirms that they are of little importance in constraining Tele-Direct's market power. Further, the experience of White and DSP confirms the existence of significant barriers to entry by a broadly-scoped directory.

The respondents submit that entry need not be on a large scale and that many independent publishers have entered on a small scale and then grown slowly, thus avoiding drawing a response from Tele-Direct. Although not directly stated, the implication is that the publishers that chose this strategy have become a competitive force in the market. They also point to White and DSP as proof that broadly-scoped directories have successfully entered, remain in the market and are even profitable.

(i) Niche/Smaller Directories

Relative ease of entry by niche directories is not particularly relevant to an assessment of Tele-Direct's market power as it is clear from the evidence that the presence of these directories has had and can have little competitive impact on Tele-Direct. There is no evidence of any response by Tele-Direct to the presence or entry of a niche directory. There is certainly no evidence that they currently limit Tele-Direct's pricing or encourage better service by their presence.

With the exception of directories published by White and DSP, virtually all of the independent directories cover smaller geographic areas than the directories produced by Tele-Direct. The Director is correct that these smaller directories account for only a small portion of the overall market (less than three percent by revenue). Further, level of activity of each of the smaller independent directories indicates why individually they are not a serious threat to Tele-Direct. If the directories of DSP and White are excluded, there are 279 other independent directories with estimated average annual sales of just over $51,000 each. Of these, the 30 Locator directories had by far the largest estimated average annual sales, of the order of $200,000 per directory. Mr. Renwicke thought that the largest Locator directory "could" be close to $1 million in revenue, which would make the remaining directories even smaller on average. The remaining 249 directories had estimated average annual sales of approximately $33,000 each. In contrast, in 1995, the broadly-scoped DSP directory had estimated annual revenues of over $1 million while each of White's three broadly-scoped directories averaged over $500,000 in revenues.

The respondents spent some time with their witness, Mr. Renwicke, reviewing examples of directories of three independent publishers in support of their position that, instead of going "head-to-head" with Tele-Direct, an independent could enter small and gradually expand and still be a competitive force in local markets. The respondents referred specifically to the Easy to Read directory, the Locator directories and the Other Book. There are Easy to Read directories in about a dozen, mainly small, Ontario communities. Locator publishes some 30 directories in various small to medium-sized Ontario towns. The Other Book published ten directories, all in the Ottawa area, but is not published anymore.[112]

The argument focuses on the Easy to Read directory in Stratford, Ontario. It is described in the argument as an "impressive" directory. The fact remains, however, that it is of negligible size. The total revenues of all the Easy to Read directories are not even stated separately on the Overview of Other Publishers in Tele-Direct Markets. Presumably they are included in the group of "Other Publishers in Ontario (geographic)" which have average total annual sales of only about $31,000. Tele-Direct's 1994 revenues in Stratford were over 40 times that amount.[113]

Mr. Renwicke pointed out and made favourable comments about the features of the Locator directory entered in evidence, which included postal codes, audiotext[114] and community pages. He also described the Other Book, which had postal codes, amortization tables and a babysitter's guide as some of its features, as a "good-looking book".

Yet, despite the apparent quality of these directories, some of which contain features not offered by Tele-Direct in its directories, the respondents did not refer us to any evidence of Tele-Direct reacting to their presence in a way that would indicate that they were actually a competitive concern, in the sense of providing some discipline on Tele-Direct's quality and pricing. It is indisputable that Tele-Direct is aware of the presence of these independents and to some extent monitors their progress. That is not, in our view, evidence that these directories are a competitive force in the market. There is no indication on the record before us of any positive reaction of the type that occurred when DSP and White entered. Other than the existence of the competitive database and Mr. Renwicke's opinions, the respondents referred only to a 1993 presentation by Mr. Renwicke to the Tele-Direct board which provided information on independents and named White, DSP and Locator.

[114] Phone numbers that people could call to get anything from up-to-date news, weather and sports, to medical information and their daily horoscope.

Moreover, even if there was evidence of some competitive response by Tele-Direct to niche directories this by itself would hardly be sufficient to conclude that Tele-Direct did not have market power given its overwhelming market share. The smaller or niche directories are, by their very nature, limited in scope and influence. Thus, although entry on this scale is easy, up to a point (since each new entrant must find a new "niche" and there is a limited number), entry by smaller directories does not limit Tele-Direct's market power.

(ii) Broadly-Scoped Independent Directories

The conditions of entry by a broadly-scoped independent directory covering an area similar to the corresponding Tele-Direct directory, which will compete head-to-head with Tele-Direct, are highly relevant to the question of market power. Tele-Direct's responses to the entry of broadly-scoped directories in the Niagara and Sault Ste. Marie areas indicate that only such head-to-head competition has the potential to produce the benefits to consumers that one looks to competition for, namely lower prices and better products and services.

Can entry by publishers of broadly-scoped directories be considered sufficiently easy so that Tele-Direct is unable to take advantage of its large market share? Additionally, assuming that entry of a single competing publisher were to occur, would this assure that Tele-Direct would no longer have market power because of either the intensity of competition or easy entry conditions for additional publishers? The respondents urge us to conclude that because White and DSP managed to enter in particular markets and have remained in business, entry barriers are low enough that Tele-Direct has no market power. We decline to place so much emphasis on two isolated instances of entry in answering these questions. To answer both questions properly, we must review the arguments on entry conditions for broadly-scoped independent directories in some detail.

(b) Sunk Costs

The Director argues that sunk costs are a barrier to entry as they are perceived by potential entrants as unrecoverable if entry is unsuccessful. The respondents submit that, based on the Tribunal's decision in Southam, sunk costs alone are not enough. In Southam, the Tribunal held that neither sunk costs nor economies of scale were themselves sufficient to create an entry barrier but that together they were.[115] The respondents contend that the other source of a barrier to entry identified by the Director in this case, namely incumbent advantages, is not like economies of scale and does not operate with whatever sunk costs are present to create entry barriers in the sense required by Southam.

We agree that Southam held that sunk costs or economies of scale individually are not sufficient. That decision, however, should not be taken to mean that the combination of sunk costs and economies of scale is the only way in which sunk costs can form part of a barrier to entry. What is important is whether the market in question is one in which the potential entrant faces the risk that the post-entry conditions will be less favourable than pre-entry conditions because of the likely response of the incumbent. Thus, in Southam, the presence of sunk costs and economies of scale meant that there was a credible threat that the incumbent would maintain output in the face of new entry even if doing so drove prices down towards cost.[116] This acted as a deterrent to entry.

In this case, therefore, it will be necessary to ask, first, whether there are in fact significant sunk costs associated with directory publishing. Then, we must determine whether the nature of the market is such that prospective entrants face a credible threat that the incumbent will respond in a manner that will make entry unprofitable given the existence of the sunk costs.

Sunk costs are defined as the part of the investment required for entry that cannot be recovered in the event that the attempt fails. Assets that are of value only to a specific enterprise are sunk and those that are of value to other firms are not sunk, or only partially sunk. The Director submits that entry into the directory business requires substantial sunk costs: acquiring and compiling subscriber listing information, assembling advertising into the finished directory, canvassing clients to place advertising, publishing the directory (including the cost of enhancements), training the sales force and promoting the directory. The respondents admit that there is no doubt that there are "some" sunk costs associated with publishing a directory for the first time but submit that the Director has overstated the sunk costs. They say the sunk costs are not, in fact, significant. However, the evidence of the witnesses from White and DSP, which was not contradicted, amply supports the premise that the activities listed must be carried out in order to produce a directory and that the costs incurred are substantial.

DSP and White both entered by publishing a "prototype" directory. With a prototype directory, the publisher offers advertising in the directory at no charge. The prototype is distributed to consumers and the publisher then has a history of usage to give it credibility in selling advertising in its next directory. The respondents argue that the sunk costs are substantially increased when an independent publisher chooses to enter by publishing a prototype because there are no advertising revenues to offset the costs. They say that the extent of the sunk costs is within the control of the entrant and a different entry strategy would generate lower sunk costs.

Establishing usage and selling advertising are inextricably linked for a directory publisher. As stated in the 1993 Simba/Communications Trends study, achieving credibility among local advertisers is one of the biggest hurdles that a publisher must overcome.[117] It was precisely in order to overcome the credibility concerns of advertisers that both DSP and White chose initially to publish a prototype directory. Entering with a paid directory does not eliminate the credibility problem and achieving credibility, by whatever means chosen, involves costs. We have no basis on which to conclude, as urged by the respondents, that it would have been less costly overall for White and DSP to enter first with a paid directory.

The respondents also submit that if the entrant chose to enter with an initial paid directory, it could avoid the cost of publishing entirely if a sufficient volume of business was not confirmed during the canvass and it then abandoned its plans to enter. While we agree that the only way to avoid the costs of producing a directory is to abandon the project, we do not agree that this is a strategy that could be used with impunity by would-be entrants. The mere possibility that such a strategy could be employed exacerbates the credibility problems facing a would-be entrant, and in the event it were employed, would detrimentally affect any prospects for the same firm or other firms to attempt entry in another market.

Recognizing that there are sunk costs involved in entry into directory publishing, do those sunk costs amount to a significant barrier to entry? We are of the opinion that those sunk costs do create a barrier to entry when a broadly-scoped directory is introduced because the entrant publisher is going "head-to-head" with the telco's directory. In those circumstances, the incumbent will respond and post-entry conditions will be less favourable for a would-be entrant than pre-entry conditions. As the Simba/Communications Trends study noted, under the heading "Disadvantages of Large, Head-to-Head Directories", "[u]tilities are willing to `pull out the big guns' to protect large bread-and-butter markets."[118] It is not disputed that when White and DSP entered into Tele-Direct's markets with broadly-scoped directories, Tele-Direct responded with price freezes, incentive programs, enhancements and promotional campaigns. Thus, the combination of sunk costs and likely response by the incumbent create a significant entry barrier and entry would not necessarily occur even though Tele-Direct was pricing above competitive levels.

(c) Incumbent Advantages

(i) Subscriber Listing Information

Would-be entrants into the directory business do not have access to subscriber listing information from the telcos on the same terms as Tele-Direct. Access to subscriber listing information by independent publishers has been the subject of some controversy and has been dealt with on several occasions by the CRTC. In 1992, the CRTC ordered greater access to the subscriber listing information in the hands of Bell Canada. Because of the price of the information, and other conditions imposed on its distribution, this decision did not result in commercially viable access to the information. Both White and DSP witnesses testified that they were forced to wait until the Tele-Direct directory was published and then re-key, verify and update the listings to use in their own directories, a costly and time-consuming process.

In March 1995, the CRTC revisited the matter at the request of White and liberalized the availability of listing information, including reducing the price that could be charged by Bell Canada. There was no indication from the White or DSP witnesses who appeared before us of any problem with the 1995 resolution by the CRTC of the price and availability issues. Richard Lewis, the Executive Vice-president and Chief Executive Officer of White, stated, in fact, that White was very satisfied with that aspect of the decision.

The CRTC added an important proviso, however, when it ruled that consumers who wanted to opt out of having their listings sold to a "third party" could do so. From the point of view of the independent directory publishers, this caused a problem because the CRTC did not distinguish between types of "third parties". Thus, the independent publishers were grouped in with, for example, telemarketers, to whom many consumers would not want their information to be released. The 1995 decision was stayed pending an appeal to Cabinet which, in late June 1996, overturned that portion of the CRTC ruling.

In light of the Cabinet decision, which was rendered after the close of the hearing in this matter, the Tribunal invited further submissions from the parties regarding the impact of that decision on their respective positions. The respondents submit that the Cabinet decision has removed the only barrier to entry into publishing. The respondents point to Mr. Lewis's statement that after a favourable decision from Cabinet, White will proceed with additional directories in the Toronto/Niagara area. The Director agrees that the Cabinet decision will likely reduce one of the barriers to entry into directory publishing but maintains that there are still other, significant barriers into the market. The Director refers to the United States situation where, despite access to subscriber listing information for several years, independents have less than seven percent of total industry revenues.

The only evidence before us is that the issues of importance to the independents, availability, price and opting out, have been dealt with satisfactorily to them. We conclude that, at present, subscriber listing information cannot be considered to be a significant barrier to entry.

(ii) Reputation/Affiliation with Telco

An entrant into directory publishing has the related tasks of convincing users of the value of its directory and of convincing advertisers that it is a worthwhile vehicle in which to advertise. The directory will only be widely used if it has a critical mass of advertising in it. If the directory is not widely used, few businesses will advertise in it and, in the absence of advertising by its competitors in a new directory, there is no pressure on a potential customer to advertise itself in the new directory. This is not a problem that Tele-Direct ever had to face because of its (or Bell Canada's) longstanding presence in the market as the only available directory. In addition, Tele-Direct benefits from its affiliation with a large and established telco which lends a certain authenticity.

To overcome the preference of advertisers for the incumbent directory requires enhanced expenditures on advertising and promotion and lower prices by the entrant. There is numerical evidence on the disadvantage of entrants vis-à-vis the incumbent only with respect to lower prices. The Simba/Communications Trends study of the directory industry in the United States revealed that in the top 10 competitive markets, the average telco (utility) rate for a double-half column was 53 percent higher than for independent publishers competing head-to-head in those markets. The average cost of advertising, per thousand of circulation, for the utility directories was 46 percent higher than for the independents.[119]

Mr. Lewis of White stated that his company usually plans on pricing about 40 percent lower than the telco directory in a market they are considering entering. Gary Campbell, the General Manager of DSP, testified that on average their prices were 30 percent less than those of Tele-Direct. A comparison of published prices between Tele-Direct and the initial White and DSP directories confirms these general statements although price differences vary considerably between types of advertisements.[120]

In both markets, the entrants had invested in introducing new features (enhancements) into their directories that Tele-Direct had not hitherto introduced. For example, White's Niagara region directories included the following features not previously offered by Tele-Direct: free smaller size copy in addition to the regular size directory (a "mini"), audiotext, extensive community pages which provide information of regional or local interest,[121] larger size print, three column format instead of four, postal codes included in the white pages, additional colour

[119] Ibid. at 115984.

[120] White's prices in 1994 were generally about 25 percent less than Tele-Direct's for in-column, about 40 percent less for display and about 55 less for red display: exhibit A-103. White first published in Niagara in 1993 with a prototype directory in which advertisers could advertise free of charge. The 1994 prices are for its first "revenue" directory in which advertisers paid for their advertising. Likewise, in Sault Ste. Marie, the DSP rates reflected substantial discounts off Tele-Direct's, with greater discounts for display and coloured display than for other types of advertisements: YPPA Rates and Data Information for the period 1992-95: exhibit A-111.

[121] For example, area sports team schedules, seating diagrams for theatres and arenas, a listing of local golf courses, highway access information, historical sites, schedule of events, maps, senior citizens' services listings, human services' listings, "kid's pages", bus routes, customs and goods and services tax information.

in the advertisements. DSP also included many of the same enhancements in its directories plus other, unique, features.[122] Thus, any advantage enjoyed by Tele-Direct clearly stemmed from its incumbency and its affiliation with Bell Canada and not from the superiority of its product.

Based on White's experience in the United States, it appears that the rate differential between the independent and the telco does narrow over time but still remains significant. Mr. Lewis testified that in Buffalo, New York, where White has published for 27 years, its prices are still 25 to 33 percent less than those of the telco directory.

As part of the survey resulting in the January 1993 Elliott report, customers of Tele-Direct were asked if they would advertise in a competing directory if it offered 15 percent lower prices. Only 36 percent said that they would advertise in the new directory and a mere eight percent that they would discontinue advertising in Tele-Direct's directory.[123] As indicated by the United States data and the experience of White and DSP, to attract a significant number of advertisers the entrant would likely have to offer discounts closer to 50 percent than to 15 percent.

Based on both the particular experiences of White and DSP in entering Tele-Direct's markets and the more general evidence relating to the United States experience, it is our [122] For example, it is a "flip" directory with the Canadian cities on one side and the neighbouring American cities on the other. The book also includes a "reverse directory" -- listings by phone number first.

[123] Confidential exhibit CJ-14 (blue vol. 5), tab 73 at 115416-18.

conclusion that an incumbent directory publisher's "reputation" or affiliation with a telco constitutes a significant barrier to entry into publishing a competing broadly-scoped directory. An important part of this barrier is the advantage that the incumbent directory has because it already contains the advertisements of a business's competitors. A new entrant must overcome that fact in seeking to persuade the business to advertise in its new directory. New entrants must offer substantial price discounts, even when they are publishing a product with features not included in the incumbent's directory.

(iii) "Yellow Pages" Trade-mark

The words "Yellow Pages" and "Pages Jaunes" and the "walking fingers" logo are both registered trade-marks of Tele-Direct in Canada. Tele-Direct only licenses those marks to publishers which are affiliated with other telcos. The same words and the logo are in the public domain in the United States.

As attested to by Mr. Lewis, it probably would have been easier for White (and DSP or any other entrant) to explain the nature of the product it was seeking to introduce in the Canadian market if it had been permitted to use the marks, which have a high level of public recognition, as it can and does in the United States. In fact, Mr. Lewis would have paid a "substantial" fee to use the marks in Canada. The trade-mark situation appears to confer some marketing advantage on Tele-Direct and reinforces the other barriers already discussed.

(iv) Strategic Behaviour

Under this heading, the Director first refers to the anti-competitive acts being alleged in a later portion of the argument regarding other publishers. Paragraph 120 states that > . . . It was Tele-Direct's objective to "make competition expensive" and "raising the bar" to entry and it succeeded.

The only way in which we could determine if the strategic behaviour referred to constitutes an entry barrier would be to assess the effects of that behaviour on the market. The Director did not deal with evidence of effects in relation to the issue of market power. The alleged anti-competitive acts regarding publishers will, of course, be dealt with in due course.

The Director also argues that the alleged anti-competitive acts in respect of services are relevant to entry conditions into publishing. It is submitted that one of Tele-Direct's objectives was to reduce the power of the specialized agencies in order to make it harder for new entrants into publishing to gain market share. If it had been proven that some Tele-Direct policy or initiative against agents did indeed have a deleterious effect on new publishing entrants, this would be relevant to our assessment of entry barriers. We are of the view, however, that the limited evidence provided on this point does not prove that there were such effects.

(3) Conclusion

We are of the view that even with subscriber listings available to independent publishers on reasonable terms, significant entry barriers in the form of the reputation effects and sunk costs reviewed above will remain. The condition of easy entry required to overcome the presumption of market power arising from Tele-Direct's extremely large market share is not satisfied.

B. DIRECT APPROACH: OTHER EVIDENCE OF MARKET POWER

As other evidence of market power the Director relies on the high profits earned by Tele-Direct, its lack of responsiveness to customer needs, and an allegation that it has lagged behind other media in supporting agents, in promoting the product and in using technology to process advertisements received from agents. We are of the view that there is insufficient evidence on the record, and that the question was not explored in sufficient depth, for us to draw a conclusion one way or the other regarding the allegation of lagging behind other media. The evidence regarding profitability and customer dissatisfaction, however, is extensive.

(1) Profits

The respondents acknowledge at paragraph 41 of their response that Tele-Direct earns very large accounting profits. It is also undisputed that Tele-Direct pays 40 percent of its collected revenues directly to Bell Canada and a similar percentage to the other telcos with which it contracts to publish a directory. This payment is said to be in return for access to subscriber lists and for services. The evidence revealed that the only service provided by the telcos is billing.

Where the respondents and their expert, Professor Willig, differ from the Director is with respect to the significance of Tele-Direct's admitted profitability as an indicator of market power. The respondents' argument first points out the well-known concerns about trying to convert accounting to economic profit. While we recognize the validity of those concerns in general, we do not consider that they apply with much force to the most compelling evidence of profitability, the payment by Tele-Direct to Bell Canada. That payment is a set percentage of collected revenues. It is not an accounting "profit" figure or a "bottom line" amount produced by the application of accounting conventions. Therefore, we are of the view that an examination of the payment to Bell Canada and its possible implications for market power is not clouded by accounting conventions at the outset. The presence of such a payment indicates that Tele-Direct has revenues of at least 40 percent over its recorded costs.

Professor Willig took the position that the profits which allow Tele-Direct to make the payment to Bell Canada reflect a return on intangible capital which is a necessary investment in the creation of the profits. In his rebuttal affidavit he stated:

> 46. . . . It is well known that there are many reasons why accounting measures of profits can deviate both randomly and systematically from being an indicator of the theoretical notion of economic profits. One reason for systematic deviation is of general significance in businesses where intangible assets are important. Here, the value of the intangible assets does not appear on the accounting books. Then, when operating margins are expressed as a percent of > the book value of assets, the resulting percent is systematically too large, relative to economic meaning, simply because the book's list of assets misses the intangible ones. This effect is likely to be of specially great quantitative significance where trade-marks, brand-names, product or service reputation, proprietary technology, and organizational capital are important to the business.

> 47. Of course, service industries typically contain leading instances of businesses where intangible assets are important. For example, the business of any successful magazine is unlikely to rest on significant tangible assets, and instead to depend on intangible assets that include the name and design of the magazine, and perhaps the organizational capital embedded in the editorial and advertising sales teams. The rate of return on tangible assets earned by such a business will turn sensitively on whether the books include ownership of the business office and a fleet of trucks or autos, or whether the business leases such properties. In either event, the assets that really drive the success of the business will not be valued on the books, and so the rate of return on assets will indicate nothing about the economic profitability of the enterprise, and certainly nothing about market power.
> 48. It goes without saying that the directory publishing business is a prime example of the effects just discussed. For all the conventional reasons alluded to, the rate of return on assets, or other accounting measures of profits, are not reliable indicators of market power. . . .[124]

In other words, Tele-Direct is only earning the requisite return on its intangible assets to remain in business and not any kind of economic rents. Professor Willig returned in his oral testimony to the example of a magazine and its intangible assets which create a loyal readership. We have some difficulty seeing the same effect at work with a directory which has no editorial content, unlike a magazine. There may be creativity in the way the directory is assembled so it is of maximum utility to consumers but the evidence was that Tele-Direct lagged behind new entrants like White and DSP in this respect.

When asked specifically about the intangible assets or activities of Tele-Direct, Professor Willig responded:

[124] Expert rebuttal affidavit of R. Willig (30 August 1995): exhibit R-181 at 13, paras. 46-48.

> Evidently . . . there is some value to having, and having had, the "utility" franchise in a given area. If one tries to translate that into what it means today or next year, the operative word really is "reputation", and the reputation is of significance both to advertisers and also to consumers who have to decide whether to pick the book up or not and, if so, which book to pick up. Somehow that reputation attaches to that book because of its heritage, its history, evidently, and also to its identification with the current telco.

I agree . . . that it is hard to reach out and grab that reputation. But if we think about the character of the directory business . . . the notion that, if you are an advertiser and you are being asked to pay for an ad in advance of the completion of the book and in advance of evidence about what consumers are going to do in terms of using it, then you have to reach, as an advertiser, an expectation, an anticipation of how good the book is going to be.

You have to form an image in your mind before you commit yourself to your advertising expenditure: Is everybody going to use this and will the other advertisers take ads in it? If they don't, then consumers won't use the book and, if consumers don't use the book, then my ad which I am being asked to pay for today won't have its exposure.

The key to the underlying value proposition of the advertiser is the anticipation that 18 months later or 12 months later the book is going to be out and it is going to be a really good book and people are really going to use it.

It is unusual that you can't really tell the value of what it is you are buying until it is done and many months have passed. . . .[125]

There are several difficulties with this hypothesis. First, on a factual level, there is evidence that Tele-Direct's advertisers (except the small group using agencies) do not pay for their advertising 12 to 18 months in advance. Monthly billing commences once the directory is published. Advertisers pay in instalments (interest free) after publication.

Second, Professor Willig emphasized that the key to the value of Tele-Direct's reputation asset was the anticipation that advertisers have that the directory is going to come out and will be a "good" directory that people are actually going to use. Surely all local media, which the respondents postulate are close substitutes for telephone directory advertising, face the same challenge in selling time or space to advertisers. Rather than paying Tele-Direct at a level that allows Tele-Direct to earn a 40 percent premium, would not advertisers simply switch to one of the other alleged close substitutes? Tele-Direct's premium would soon disappear in that scenario.

If, on the other hand, telephone directory advertising is somehow unique because of the close link between a critical mass of advertising in the directory and use of the directory by consumers, then this uniqueness argues against other media being close enough substitutes to provide competitive discipline. Tele-Direct's ability to exploit its association with the telco to earn returns well above its costs would then indicate market power in the market for telephone directory advertising. This latter scenario is more in accordance with the other evidence on the record which reveals that as between the telco directory and other directory publishers, the fact of association makes a significant difference. As was already discussed above, one cannot attribute the premium to Tele-Direct having a "superior product" to other telephone directory publishers in terms of the features of the directory. If it had a superior product, Tele-Direct would not concern itself with competing directories, which it does, and the only evidence before us was that the entrants like White and DSP were initially the superior product, until Tele-Direct responded to their enhancements.

Further, Professor Willig's theory of profits as a return on intangible assets cannot co-exist with the respondents' pleading that Tele-Direct's profits go to cross-subsidize Bell Canada's local telephone service as set out in their second amended response:

> 20. . . . What was initially conceived as an essential but costly feature of telephone service has become a lucrative revenue source for the telcos. . . .

> 21. In Ontario, for example, T-D Pubs pays each of the independent telcos with which it contracts 43% of the gross revenue collected from subscribers of the telco who advertise in the telephone directories. In the case of T-D Pubs, this revenue source, as well as the entire net income of T-D Pubs, are included by the CRTC in Bell Canada's revenues to reduce the cost of local service. Each residential telco subscriber in Ontario and Quebec receives a subsidy of over $2 per month as a result of the revenues captured through telephone directory advertising.

Bernard Courtois, Vice-president, Law and Regulatory Matters for Bell Canada, explained:

> . . . So, both the commission revenues from Tele-Direct [the 40 percent] and all the net income of Tele-Direct, that is equivalent to adding $284 million to the revenues of Bell Canada in 1994 for regulatory purposes. Divide that by the number of residential subscribers and it amounts to $3.38 per month on the average residence telephone bill.
>
> I should say that the average residence basic telephone bill in Bell Canada with Touchtone is about $12.75. So, if you didn't have the Tele-Direct activities going on, that bill would have to be more than $16.00. Of course, if Tele-Direct were a completely arm's length company, we would still get some of that commission revenue.
>
>
> Q. I think you did point out that in any telco basically they always collect some of this profit through the 40 percent. I mean every telco seems to collect that so they all get subsidized in that way by publishers. Is that what you were saying?
> A. That's correct, and I should point out that it's a very large part. I guess the commission revenues might be two-thirds and the net income one-third of that subsidy. . . .[126]

George Anderson, who was previously with NYNEX, described a similar situation in the United States. He testified that the utility directory publisher has to "impute" a substantial portion of its income, over and above the cost for subscriber listing information which has been widely available for some time in that country, back to the telco to help defer the cost of telephone service. In his words:

> The [AT & T] consent decrees . . . took an unregulated business, which was Yellow Pages, and at the ninety-ninth hour put it in with the regulated segment of the business to serve as a cash cow, not my words, to serve as a funding business that would help defray, defer, hold down the rate of return and hold down the cost of telephone service.[127]

James Logan, currently President of YPPA and formerly with US West, confirmed this view.

We observe that if all Tele-Direct and other telco directory publishers were earning was a competitive return on all assets, including intangibles, the telcos would not have "profits" available to use for a completely different purpose, namely cross-subsidization of local telephone service. Unless intangibles are to be treated as a deus ex machina to explain away high economic profits, they must be identifiable, as must be the activities resulting in their creation. Otherwise, simply asserting "intangibles" would always preclude high profits from demonstrating market power. We cannot accept an approach leading to such a conclusion. Intangibles that can account for apparent high economic profit are the result of activities that are extraordinarily successful, such as those creating new products or ways of doing things better than others. In contrast to the example of successful magazines cited by Professor Willig, there is no evidence of this in the case of Tele-Direct or the other Yellow Pages publishers. Moreover, the fact that there is such widespread subsidization of telephone services by Yellow Pages publishers associated with telcos strongly suggests that the source of the subsidies is not any outstanding effort on the part of individual publishers.

[127] Transcript at 41:8556-57 (17 November 1995).

The Director also argues that the fact that new entrants view the market as potentially profitable, even given the large price discounts off Tele-Direct's prices that they must offer and the other expenses they must incur to establish their own credibility or reputation, is an objective measure of Tele-Direct's profitability. We agree that market participants are responding to economic profit rather than to accounting profit.

We conclude, therefore, that the payment to the telcos by Tele-Direct is a form of "economic rent" whose value depends on the surplus that can be earned from publishing a directory associated with a telco. The cost to the telcos of providing the subscriber listings and doing the billing is minimal. The listings are a by-product of supplying telephone service and the billing for advertising is incorporated into the subscriber's monthly telephone bill. While it is true that it would be more costly for Tele-Direct to do the billing itself, it is unlikely that it would cost, at most, more than a few percent of revenue.[128]

In the face of competition from other media the amount that Tele-Direct could afford to pay, and that the telcos could demand, would be considerably less. With sufficient competition the payments to the telcos would disappear entirely. Even if Tele-Direct earns no economic profit on its operations beyond what it pays out to Bell Canada, its price to average cost margin is extraordinarily high. While no benchmark was placed in evidence, merger guidelines, both in the United States and Canada, place products in separate markets if their existence would not prevent a hypothetical monopolist, post-merger, from increasing prices by five percent. Even allowing as much as two percent for mailing costs, one is left with a margin of 38 percent. We are of the view that the evidence of economic rents provides a direct indication of Tele-Direct's market power.

(2) Dissatisfied Customers

The Director submits that the respondents' actions towards the advertisers, their customers, display market power. Reference is made to Tele-Direct's requirement that advertisers give up copyright in their advertisement, its restrictions on group advertising and evidence of low customer satisfaction in general. There is evidence, in the form of studies like the Elliott reports and the presence of consultants, that a significant percentage of Tele-Direct customers are less than happy with the service provided by Tele-Direct. We reviewed the evidence to this effect in the section on Market Definition when dealing with the arguments of the respondents which emphasized the low degree of customer satisfaction. As a direct indicator of market power, however, we are reluctant to rely on customer dissatisfaction because of the practical difficulties in applying such a subjective test.

(3) Other: Pricing Policies

In addition to the evidence of profitability advanced by the Director, the Tribunal is of the view that Tele-Direct's approach to setting prices supports the conclusion that Tele-Direct is behaving more like a firm with a comfortable margin of market power than a firm facing close substitutes. We note Professor Willig's point that evidence of price discrimination, in isolation, would not reliably indicate market power. In combination with the other evidence it is, however, compelling. Two aspects of Tele-Direct's price-setting policy are important: the premiums charged for colour and larger size (price discrimination) and the effort to equalize price per thousand across geographic markets (circulation alignment).

(a) Price Discrimination

As we reviewed in the section on market definition, colour and increased size are more valuable to advertisers who rely more heavily on the Yellow Pages. In broad terms, these are advertisers whose business involves infrequently purchased or emergency services (e.g., plumber, exterminator, mover, auto repairs, lawyer), infrequently purchased, expensive durables where comparison shopping is likely (e.g., cars, major appliances), services used by travellers (e.g., car rental) or which encourage orders by telephone (e.g., pizza, lumber yard with telephone order business). They need to attract attention in the Yellow Pages so that a consumer is drawn to their Yellow Pages advertisement as opposed to the Yellow Pages advertisement of their competitor. In our view, Tele-Direct systematically price discriminates against advertisers who are heavily reliant on the Yellow Pages through its pricing of colour and size and its ability to do so is direct evidence of market power.

Tele-Direct charges a 50 percent premium to add red to an advertisement. This premium is unrelated to costs of production. The representative of one of the independent publishers testified that at a 50 percent premium, a publisher would be realizing a very high profit margin. In other words, the additional printing and production costs are well below the price charged.

Ms. McIlroy explained that the object of Tele-Direct's pricing of colour at a premium is to control its penetration to ensure that it will be sufficiently uncommon so that the coloured advertisements "stand out" on the page. The price is set high enough that everyone will not buy it. In the same vein, Tele-Direct introduced multi-colour in those markets where there was already a lot of red in the directories as an alternative way of allowing advertisers to "stand out". This is not the kind of pricing policy that can be pursued by a firm under competitive pressure because its competitors would simply charge a lower price to take advantage of the profit opportunity and compete away the premium.

Further, the premium for red is largely invariant across local markets. It is difficult to see how there could be such uniform pricing in the face of "competition" from other local media, which would vary from market to market. Tele-Direct's pricing of red can hardly be seen as a response to these prices but is much more consistent with a company concerned only about its own, unique environment.

Based on the evidence before us, there is similar uniformity and lack of relationship to cost in Tele-Direct's pricing of larger advertisements. A comprehensive Tele-Direct rate card was not placed in evidence. In the 33 local markets included on the excerpt from the YPPA rates that was tendered as an exhibit, the price increases by about 90 percent for each doubling of advertisement size from a quarter column (1/16 page) to a double quarter column (1/8 page) and from a double quarter column to a double half column (1/4 page).[129] As in the case of colour, the evidence revealed that the additional costs of producing larger advertisements do not appear to justify the increase in price. Based on cost, one would expect a discount greater than ten percent for an advertisement twice as large.

The respondents do not dispute that Tele-Direct's premiums for red and for size cannot be explained by additional costs. Counsel conceded in argument that those were the facts but argued that Tele-Direct was engaging in "value pricing". He hypothesized that an advertiser buying a larger advertisement might get ten times the results that would have been obtained with a smaller advertisement and, therefore, paying almost twice as much for the larger advertisement is actually a bargain. The larger advertiser, the argument goes, is getting more value out of the medium. Value pricing is not a phenomenon readily associated with a competitive market, the hallmark of which is pricing which is ultimately cost-driven.[130] Value pricing is more likely to be associated with a regulated monopolist and is more an indication of the presence of market power than of its absence.

[129] YPPA Rates and Data Information for the period 1992-95: exhibit A-111 at 9.

[130] Leaving aside dynamic, innovation-driven industries, to which telephone directories do not belong.

The ability of Tele-Direct to discriminate against customers who spend more on advertising by way of larger or coloured advertisements is of particular importance in assessing whether Tele-Direct lacks market power because other local media provide close substitutes for Yellow Pages, as argued by the respondents. Larger Yellow Pages advertisers have greater choice among the allegedly competitive media since, by definition, they have more dollars in Yellow Pages that they can switch to any other media. Smaller advertisers are less likely to be able to afford the full range of other media. While it may be true, as Professor Willig pointed out, that certain vehicles, such as community newspapers or church calendars might be more acceptable to smaller advertisers, there is no denying that, from a budget point of view, larger advertisers have more options. Thus, larger Yellow Pages advertisers should have the more elastic demand if there are, as the respondents argue, close substitutes to Yellow Pages. The fact that Tele-Direct's margin over cost increases with enhanced expenditures on colour and size indicates the opposite. The anomaly of Tele-Direct being able to price discriminate against advertisers who at first blush have the greatest range of options underscores its market power.

The two broadly-scoped independent publishers, White and DSP, also charge some premiums for colour or size, although neither charges a premium as high or as consistent across the board as Tele-Direct's.[131] Certainly, no one has suggested that either White or DSP has market power. Yet, Mr. Campbell provided the same explanation of DSP's pricing of red, for example, as Ms. McIlroy did -- that it is priced above incremental costs to ensure its scarcity. Does the independents' use of some premiums for colour or size imply that Tele-Direct has no market power? We think not. The presence of two publishers in Sault Ste. Marie and Niagara certainly does not indicate a "competitive" market.

The evidence regarding the independent publishers does not detract from our view that Tele-Direct's ability to price discriminate is evidence of market power. Although the independents can, to a much more limited extent, implement some of the same pricing policies, this is not surprising. Tele-Direct prices in each local market create an "umbrella" beneath which the new entrants can shelter which underlines that Tele-Direct has market power sufficient to create the umbrella.

(b) Circulation Alignment

Since 1987 (or for 1989 prices onwards), Tele-Direct has actively pursued a policy of "circulation alignment" in calculating its annual price increases. The only exception was in 1992 (for 1994 prices) when poor economic conditions resulted in a zero price increase across the board. The objective of this policy was to bring about consistency in cost per thousand or CPM between directories. Some directories had experienced rapid growth in circulation but since they were subject to the same general price increases as other directories which had not grown as much in circulation, their CPM or price relative to circulation was substantially lower. Ms. McIlroy referred to the Mississauga directory as one in which the rates were seen as too low given the circulation of the directory. A program was therefore instituted to bring the CPMs in all markets into line over a number of years by imposing additional price increases (but not price decreases) in particular local markets.

In applying the alignment policy absolutely no allowance was made, or is made, for differentials in the intensity of competition from other media in each local market. The entire process can be described as a very bureaucratic one and certainly not what one would expect if Tele-Direct was forced to respond to varying degrees of competitive pressure in the numerous (approximately 100) local markets where it operates.

Professor Willig conceded that this "bureaucratic" approach to pricing and apparent indifference to local market conditions was puzzling but theorized that it could result from Tele-Direct's connection to a utility company. Utilities come from a culture of regulation where pricing flexibility is frowned upon. Further, if individual sales people were given latitude to discount to individual customers, the result for a large organization like Tele-Direct would be chaos.

Pricing individually by customer goes well beyond responding to the supposedly competitive media in a local market and thus does not directly address the point. The regulatory "culture" of utilities, is, of course, undeniable. What is more pertinent is how Tele-Direct could maintain such a culture in the form of its approach to pricing in the presence of the alleged close substitutes. If its bureaucratic price-setting led Tele-Direct to set a price too high in a particular market, surely it would see a dramatic revenue loss to other media and would quickly change its approach. There is no evidence that this has happened.

(4) Conclusion

The other direct evidence of market power advanced by the Director along with Tele-Direct's pricing policies affirm our previous conclusion based on the indirect approach that Tele-Direct has market power in telephone directory advertising.

VIII. TIED SELLING

A. INTRODUCTION

Tying or "tied selling" is dealt with in section 77 of the Competition Act. The relevant parts of section 77 are:

> (1) . . . "tied selling" means
> (a) any practice whereby a supplier of a product, as a condition of supplying the product (the "tying" product) to a customer, requires that customer to
> (i) acquire any other product from the supplier or the supplier's nominee, or
> (ii) refrain from using or distributing, in conjunction with the tying product, another product that is not of a brand or manufacture designated by the supplier or the nominee, and
> (b) any practice whereby a supplier of a product induces a customer to meet a condition set out in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii) by offering to supply the tying product to the customer on more favourable terms or conditions if the customer agrees to meet the condition set out in either of those subparagraphs.

> (2) Where, on application by the Director, the Tribunal finds that . . . tied selling, because it is engaged in by a major supplier of a product in a market or because it is widespread in a market, is likely to
> (a) impede entry into or expansion of a firm in the market,
> (b) impede introduction of a product into or expansion of sales of a product in the market, or
> (c) have any other exclusionary effect in the market,
> with the result that competition is or is likely to be lessened substantially, the Tribunal may make an order directed to all or any of the suppliers against whom an order is sought prohibiting them from continuing to engage in . . . tied selling and containing any other requirement that, in its opinion, is necessary to overcome the effects thereof in the market or to restore or stimulate competition in the market.

A tie is the supply of one product on the condition that the buyer takes a second product as well or on terms that induce the buyer to take the second product as well. Such an arrangement may be prohibited by the Tribunal under section 77 if it meets all the other requirements of that section, namely that the tying is a practice engaged in by a major supplier and results in a substantial lessening of competition. The requirement that Tele-Direct must be a major supplier is satisfied by our earlier finding of market power in the telephone directory advertising market. The other requirements of the section are still to be resolved.

The Director alleges that the respondents have engaged in a practice of requiring or inducing customers for advertising space in telephone directories (the tying product) to acquire another product, telephone directory advertising services (the tied product), from the respondents. The Director further alleges that the practice of tied selling has impeded entry into or expansion of firms in the market resulting in a substantial lessening of competition.

The advertising space or publishing business is described at paragraph 9 of the application as including:

> . . . all matters relevant to the provision of advertising space in a directory, including access to a subscriber data base (including information relating to new subscribers) upon which the books are based, compilation, physical creation of hard copy, printing, promotion and distribution.

The advertising services business refers to:

> . . . the provision of services relating to the sale of advertising space in a telephone directory, including establishing new customers, calling on customers, and providing advice, information and other services relating to the design, cost, content, location, creation and placing of the advertisements.

The Director further states that the purchaser of an advertisement in a telephone directory obtains two products related to the two businesses: advertising space and advertising services.

B. FACTS

Before we proceed further, it is necessary to review some facts relevant to the supply of advertising services to Yellow Pages advertisers.

(1) Tele-Direct's Internal Sales Force

Tele-Direct sells telephone directory advertising through its internal sales force. This group is sub-divided into those representatives who deal with customers over the telephone ("tel-sell") and those who attend at the customers' places of business ("premise"), together called the general sales force or "GSF". The premise sales representatives travel from place to place during the year to canvass advertisers for a particular area or directory within a confined time frame. In 1994, premise sales accounted for about 60 percent of the revenues generated by Tele-Direct's internal sales force, while tel-sell generated less than 30 percent of revenues.

A further category of sales representatives, sometimes included as part of the GSF and sometimes considered apart from it by Tele-Direct, is that which services so-called "national accounts". These representatives are called national account managers ("NAMs") or national account representatives ("NARs"). This group accounts for the remaining approximately 10 percent of revenues.

There are no hard and fast rules governing which accounts are handled by the NAM/NAR group as opposed to the remainder of the GSF. Some large accounts are serviced by the GSF. The Tele-Direct witnesses indicated that, in general, accounts that require a great deal of servicing, for example, multiple visits over a year, are likely to be assigned to the NAM/NAR unit. Because of the canvass-based sales approach used by the GSF, often the GSF is involved in a canvass in another area and is unavailable to service a particular account repeatedly. The NAMs and NARs are located in certain centres all year long and can service these accounts more easily. A further factor is the account's complexity, including number of headings, the number of markets, and the amount of change required each year. If the account requires a lot of attention to ensure accuracy (for example, that no directories are missed) and perhaps clerical-type support, it will end up in the national group. There was also evidence that accounts which had little future growth potential or which had simply proven to be problem accounts in the past are handled by the NAM/NAR unit.

Tele-Direct (Publications) Inc. is divided into two geographic regions, eastern and western. The eastern region is comprised of the province of Quebec, with parts of Ontario such as Ottawa, Kingston, Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury. The western region covers the remainder of Ontario. The structure and organization of the company in both regions is broadly similar, although the eastern region is smaller both in terms of revenue serviced and number of sales representatives.

The facts regarding (a) remuneration, (b) evaluation and (c) account assignment and continuity for Tele-Direct's internal sales force are relevant because one of the Director's arguments regarding Tele-Direct's motivation to engage in the alleged tied selling is that its internal sales force can be more effectively motivated to sell more Yellow Pages advertising than agents.

(a) Remuneration

The remuneration of the Tele-Direct representatives is highly dependent on the revenues generated by each individual as they are paid through a combination of salary and commission. Both the tel-sell and premise representatives earn a base salary (which is higher for premise) and in addition are eligible for a number of commissions and incentives.

The amount of commission paid to a sales representative is determined by the nature of the advertising which is sold. If the sales representative manages to generate new business (an increase over the previous year's advertising expenditure), an annual commission of 13 percent is paid on the total new business. If the advertiser is renewing the advertising which was purchased in the previous year, the sales representative is paid a 2.4 percent commission on the renewal amount. Renewal commission is paid on any portion of an account which is renewed, even if the total amount of advertising purchased is less than the previous year. The renewal commission was first introduced in the early 1980s, prior to which the representatives were paid only salary and new business commission. The final basis upon which a commission is paid to a sales representative reflects rate increases. This applies in a situation where an advertiser renews exactly the same advertising program as it had in the previous year but there has been a rate increase which is applicable to that advertising program. The sales representative receives renewal commission on the amount spent the previous year and rate increase commission on the difference between the two account totals because of the rate increase. The rate increase commission is six percent.

Since 1993, a premise representative also has the potential of earning a yearly bonus in the amount of $2,000. The bonus is based on factors such as the number of complaints made against the representative by advertisers, the representative's score in Tele-Direct's internal evaluation, the number of "lates" (advertising submitted after a directory closing date) and mistakes and the representative's overall work flow. Apart from the bonus, there are a number of other incentives offered to premise sales representatives, for example, awards and trips.

The NAM/NAR group also earn base salary plus commission but with a much larger proportion of their income accounted for by salary. Their new business commission is nine percent, with a renewal commission of 0.5 percent and a rate increase commission of 1.2 percent. They may qualify for a bonus equal to seven percent of their income for maximizing net sales or a bonus of three percent for maximizing retained revenue. An average NAM earns less than an average premise representative.

Sales representatives are supervised by salaried sales managers. Sales managers also qualify for various incentives and bonuses, which may vary in nature from year to year, based on the results of the sales representatives that they supervise.

(b) Evaluation

In the western region Tele-Direct has a formal assessment program for its sales representatives called Total Performance Assessment ("TPA"). Each representative is assessed using the TPA every six months.

The TPA is comprised of three categories: sales results (worth 60 percent), customer satisfaction (worth 20 percent) and job administration (worth 20 percent). The sales results score is largely based on the representative's incremental revenues in relation to other representatives (25 points of 60). Customer satisfaction is broken down into customer disputes and an overall customer survey. Customer disputes refer to the number of times customers of the representative have called in with a complaint or a concern. The customer survey component is a Gallup survey.[132] The final aspect is job administration which includes work flow (success in meeting benchmark requirements for servicing a certain percentage of revenue during a canvass by a certain date), number of internal queries and lates.

The TPA is not used in the eastern region which has not had a formal evaluation program since 1994 because of union disputes. Currently, sales representatives in the eastern region are evaluated by an internal management review in which their supervisors conduct follow-up interviews with clients. It is Tele-Direct's intention to replace this less formal evaluation process in the future.

(c) Account Assignment and Continuity

Tele-Direct uses a canvass approach to sell advertising. Each directory has a canvass period, the length of which depends on the size of the directory, during which the GSF focuses its attention on selling advertising for the next issue of that directory. The GSF is under time constraints to complete its sales and solicitations prior to the deadline, or the closing date, for the directory. Once one canvass is complete, the GSF moves on to the next one.

[132] Each year 25 customers of each sales representatives are asked questions relating to the quality of the service provided by the representative.

For each canvass, Tele-Direct canvass coordinators assign accounts to the sales representatives to ensure as much as possible that each salesperson ends up with a bundle of accounts which is balanced in revenue and in growth potential. Accounts are assigned based on a complex system of "markets" and "grades". For example, "Market 1" accounts are dealt with by premise representatives while "Market 2" accounts are dealt with by tel-sell. As well as being divided by market, accounts are also graded; the lower the grade assigned to an account the higher the potential that type of business will buy Yellow Pages. Grades are based on the type of business as represented by the heading under which it would appear in the directory.

For each canvass the grades and markets for the accounts are analyzed to determine whether, based on factors like time, the size of the cities or towns included and the number of sales representatives available, the premise representatives will cover all of the grades in Market 1, or whether, perhaps, some of the higher grades in that market should be assigned to tel-sell. For the same reasons, for a given canvass, not all accounts are assigned; those with lower potential or that are inactive may be dropped.

For both the premise and the tel-sell group, account assignment has traditionally been random. With a few minor exceptions, accounts were divided up at the beginning of each canvass with no intention of returning individual accounts to the same representative who serviced them in the previous year. In 1993, a test was conducted in a northern market whereby there was 100 percent continuity of tel-sell accounts. Ms. McIlroy's impression of the results was that they were positive in general; however, we have no information about whether tel-sell continuity has been adopted more generally. For premise sales, Tele-Direct adopted the Very Important Advertiser ("VIA") program in the late 1980s which provided a form of continuity: advertisers spending a certain amount per month were assigned the same representative every year. By 1992-93, there was a more general continuity policy in place whereby 30 percent of all premise accounts were assigned back to the sales representative for three years if $500 or more was being spent or a pricing incentive was involved. Currently, about 55 percent of the accounts of a typical premise representative (about 85 percent of revenue) are subject to continuity.

(2) Tele-Direct's Commissionability Rules

Prior to 1958, a 15 percent commission was available on "national" advertising. The definition of "national" was, however, unclear. In 1958, Bell Canada adopted a new policy, developed in consultation with and endorsed by the Canadian Association of Advertising Agencies. To be commissionable at 15 percent, the advertising had to appear in two or more directories serving two or more "calling areas" with no more than 80 percent of the total advertising in one directory. No particular association membership was required of the agency; if the agency's ability to pay was in doubt, its credit was investigated.

Tele-Direct's definition of a commissionable account underwent a further change effective January 1, 1976. The amended definition of commissionability became known as the "eight-market rule". To qualify as a commissionable account under this rule, the advertiser had to purchase advertising with a minimum value of a trade-mark in eight "markets", as defined by Tele-Direct. Canada was divided into 19 markets, with six in Quebec and seven in Ontario. The entire United States constituted a single 20th market. If the account qualified and the agency provided completed artwork, Tele-Direct would pay a 15 percent commission on the account. Again, no particular membership in an industry association was required.

The commissionability rule was next changed effective July 1, 1993 to create the so-called "national definition" which is the current rule. Under this rule, to be commissionable an account must advertise, at a minimum, in directories in two provinces. Advertising must be placed in at least 20 directories and in each directory the value of the advertising must be a minimum of a trade-mark. Finally, 20 percent of the total value of the advertising must be placed in directories outside Tele-Direct's territory.

In order to receive 25 percent commission on "national accounts" the agency has to be a CMR and a member of YPPA. In addition, to be eligible for the 25 percent commission, the CMR must transmit its order to Tele-Direct via the Value-Added Network ("VAN") run by the YPPA. This facility provides for electronic transmission of account data and other information to a publisher. In order to access VAN, the CMR must be a member of the YPPA and must acquire the necessary computer hardware and software.

All accounts which met the eight-market rule as of July 1993 have been "grandfathered"; Tele-Direct still pays 15 percent commission on those accounts. Once an account ceases to qualify under the eight-market rule, it cannot be re-qualified. New accounts, those which reached eight-market status after July 1993, cannot be "grandfathered". Tele-Direct has made no commitment to how long the "grandfathering" of eight-market accounts will remain in place. It could be discontinued at any time.

C. ALTERNATE THEORIES OF THE CASE

As elaborated in the opening statement, the Director's theory of the case for tying is that the respondents, as a condition of supplying space, have required or induced customers to acquire the tied product, services, from them. We have already reviewed the structure of the market. The respondents offer a commission on accounts meeting their "national" definition and on grandfathered eight-market accounts. They service the remainder of the accounts themselves and do not offer a commission, or price space and services separately, for those "local" accounts, amounting to over 90 percent of Tele-Direct's revenue.

In accordance with his theory, the Director alleges that the respondents by refusing to sell either the space or the services in an unbundled fashion have violated section 77. Counsel for the Director described the Director's case in opening in alternative terms by referring to the respondents' refusal to pay commission except to the limited extent that they now do as a violation of section 77 because commission would be a means of recognizing or effecting an unbundling for the services that non-commissionable customers seek. The Director says that as matters now stand, non-commissionable customers have a choice of either obtaining services from respondents as part of the "package" price that they pay for their advertising or paying twice for the services -- once as part of the package price charged by the respondents and once directly to the service provider.

The respondents say that the Director's concept of tying is misconceived. They submit that there is no product known as "advertising services" separate from a product known as "advertising space". They focus on the selling portion of the services referred to by the Director and argue that the sales advice provided by Tele-Direct's internal sales force forms an inseparable package with the space which Tele-Direct supplies in its directories. Indeed, they emphasize, there is no advertising space without a sale. They argue that how advertisements in their directories are sold is a business decision to be made solely by Tele-Direct and is not justiciable. Tele-Direct determines when it is more appropriate to sell its product through its internal sales force and when it will "employ" and pay a commission to agents to sell its product.

In other words, the respondents argue that they have chosen a "hybrid" system. As their primary sales channel, they maintain an internal sales force. They have also chosen to employ agents to sell to a limited group of large advertisers who have distinct needs. Among the reasons given for primary use of the internal sales force were: efficiency, that the average cost of revenues serviced internally was lower than for revenues serviced by outside agents; revenue growth, that the internal sales force is more effective in growing revenue; and servicing, to ensure attention to small advertisers and non-advertisers that Tele-Direct considers important but external agents might not.

The respondents take the position that the Director's application regarding tied selling is an attack on vertical integration. They characterize Tele-Direct's decision regarding commissionability as a choice in some instances to buy services from agents and in others to make the services in-house. They refer to the words of Posner J. in Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Buildings, Inc. for guidance:

> The end that Walters [a terminated dealer] alleges is that Morton [the manufacturer] wanted to take over the retail function; in the terminology of industrial organization, it wanted to integrate forward. But vertical integration is not an unlawful or even a suspect category under the antitrust laws: "Firms constantly face `make-or-buy' decisions -- that is, decisions whether to purchase a good or service in the market or to produce it internally -- and ordinarily the decision, whichever way it goes, raises no antitrust question." . . . Vertical integration is a universal feature of economic life and it would be absurd to make it a suspect category under the antitrust laws just because it may hurt suppliers of the service that has been brought within the firm.
> A common type of vertical integration is for a manufacturer to take over the distribution of his product. . . .
> We just said that vertical integration is not an improper objective. But this puts the matter too tepidly; vertical integration usually is procompetitive. If there are cost savings from bringing into the firm a function formerly performed outside it, the firm will be made a more effective competitor.[133] (references omitted)

The respondents urge us to take from the words of Posner J. that their narrowing of the commissionability criteria is simply taking over the distribution function internally and Tele-Direct's decision about how to run its business, which it does not have to "justify" to anyone.

The Director underlines that he is not opposed to vertical integration in principle. He cautions, however, that if the method chosen for the vertical integration violates a section of the [133] 1984-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 66,080 at 66,024-25 (7th Cir. 1984).

Act, with particular reference to sections 75, 77 and 79, then it is subject to challenge and the respondents cannot achieve immunity by "waving the flag of vertical integration". We agree that simply affixing the label of "vertical integration" does not conclusively decide anything. It does not preclude the Director from attempting to convince the Tribunal that what is going on in the case before it meets the requirements of a section of the Act. This view is not inconsistent with the dicta of Posner J. in the Jack Walters case, who indicates that the presence of market power may cast vertical integration in a different light and points out that market power was not present on the facts before him:

> . . . some economists believe that monopolistic firms might integrate vertically in order to deny supplies or outlets to competitors, or to make it more costly for new firms to enter the market (because they would have to enter at more than one level of production or distribution), or to facilitate price fixing with their competitors. But nothing of this kind is suggested here. Walters does allege that Morton has a big name in the prefabricated farm buildings market, but there is no indication that this is a meaningful economic market that might be worth monopolizing, or that Morton's purpose in integrating into retail distribution was to make life harder for its competitors. Its object was to make more money by reducing the cost of retail distribution, not by coercing or excluding (or for that matter colluding with) its own competitors, whoever they may be, or discouraging potential competitors. Indeed Walters' tie-in claim is premised on the ready availability, from other manufacturers, of the building parts that Morton sells in kits from which Morton Buildings are put together. This shows that Morton has no monopoly.[134] (emphasis added; references omitted)

The recognition that vertical integration is generally pro-competitive on efficiency grounds raises another issue. The Director says there is no provision in section 77 for an efficiency "defence". We agree that there is no such explicit reference to an efficiency defence. However, many forced "package sales" are the product of efficiency and even a supplier with market power may sell items in combination for efficiency reasons.

A fundamental requirement of tying is the existence of two products, the tied product and the tying product. It is implicit in the determination of whether there are one or two products that efficiency considerations must be taken into account. We consider that demand for separate products and efficiency of bundling are the two "flip sides" of the question of separate products. Assuming demand for separate products, if efficiency is proven to be the reason for bundling, there is one product. If not, there are two products. As we will review below, this approach is consistent with the American jurisprudence regarding the test for separate products relied on by the Director.

The Director is of the view that, assuming that the necessary elements of the section have been met -- major supplier, two products, tying, and the exclusion of competitors resulting in a substantial lessening of competition -- it is not necessary for him to provide a plausible explanation of why or how the firm benefits from the tie. This is a valid position. The Tribunal would not impose such a requirement on the Director. It cannot be denied, however, that there is always more comfort in drawing conclusions the greater the depth of understanding.

In this case, the Director has in fact provided explanations as to why Tele-Direct might be engaged in tied selling. The Director submits that Tele-Direct is leveraging its market power in the sale of space into the market for advertising services through tying. One explanation of this is that Tele-Direct's policy of bundling advertising space and services allows Tele-Direct to exploit better an alleged information asymmetry it enjoys vis-à-vis its customers, the advertisers. As with any advertising medium, it is not possible to evaluate effectiveness of Yellow Pages advertising with any degree of precision. To the extent that data on effectiveness of the medium is available, it is in the control of Tele-Direct not the advertisers. In light of this, the Director argues that Tele-Direct prefers to keep advertising services in-house as much as possible because its representatives can be more effectively motivated to "oversell" than independent service providers. We will deal with this reasoning in due course.

The Director also says that the "usual" assumption of profit maximization used in determining whether a firm stands to gain from a tie does not apply in the instant case and the economic literature on the subject that relies on this assumption to analyze the possible effects of a tie is not a useful source. He says it is futile to seek a "rational" or "profit-maximizing" explanation for Tele-Direct's behaviour since Tele-Direct, because of its unique situation and relationship to Bell Canada, is not subject to the constraints of profit-maximization and its corollary, cost-minimization.

In support of the premise that Tele-Direct is not profit-maximizing, Thomas Wilson,[135] an economist expert witness for the Director, draws on the fact that the profits of Tele-Direct are included for regulatory purposes when decisions are made about Bell Canada's prices. He is of the view that the pressure to minimize costs is reduced and that there may also be systematic distortions such as the use of more capital than an unregulated firm would use in order to boost the capital base of the regulated firm (the "Averch-Johnson effect"). However, this particular hypothesis is not supported by the evidence which, in fact, points in the other direction insofar as Tele-Direct has chosen to subcontract capital intensive operations such as printing.

Professors Wilson and Slade, for the Director, are also of the view that management's decisions with respect to the commissionability of various accounts are motivated by a concern to maximize sales rather than to minimize costs. Professor Wilson sees the reduced pressure on regulated firms to minimize costs as allowing Tele-Direct's management to pursue personal interests, such as operating a larger enterprise, thereby garnering personal satisfaction and monetary rewards. Professor Slade is of the view that the ownership structure of Tele-Direct, whereby there is no threat of a takeover, contributes to allow management to pursue its hypothesized desire for larger size.

Even though there are several occasions when we have difficulty understanding the decisions of Tele-Direct's management if they really are pursuing cost-minimization, we are far from convinced that Tele-Direct's management is not generally constrained to follow a profit-maximizing course. The fact that Tele-Direct is a wholly-owned subsidiary should be sufficient to ensure that there is adequate ownership control. It is obvious from the evidence of Mr. Courtois, the Bell Canada representative on Tele-Direct's Board of Directors, that Bell does not practice micro-management. The main instrument of control appears to be the requirement that Tele-Direct pay Bell the same percentage of revenues as Tele-Direct is required to pay other telcos when it contracts to perform their directory functions. This requirement was introduced precisely to impose market discipline on Tele-Direct. In addition to the forty percent of revenue that Tele-Direct remits to Bell, it also makes a substantial contribution to Bell's profits in the form of dividends. The evidence does not support the conclusion that Bell has been cavalier about allowing Tele-Direct's management to pursue other than profit-maximizing goals. Moreover, in recent years Bell's earnings have been well below its regulated allowed rate of return, a situation not conducive to permissiveness. Even when Bell earnings were not below the allowed rate of return, higher profits from Tele-Direct would still benefit Bell between applications for rate increases.

While we do not rule out that Tele-Direct's management may be under less than the usual amount of pressure to perform, we are reluctant to discard the usual working assumption of profit-maximization in the absence of some compelling evidence that is consistent with the assumption that Tele-Direct is pursuing other goals. The only specific evidence cited in support of the premise that Tele-Direct's management pushes revenue growth beyond the point of profit-maximization is the stress that they place on canvassing businesses that do not advertise in the Yellow Pages, the non-advertisers. The success rate from this effort is low and Professor Slade concludes that the fact that the effort is made can be explained by management's greater concern with growth of revenue than with profits. On the whole, however, the evidence on the canvass of non-advertisers is that moderate resources are devoted to this task. We are not convinced that the canvass of non-advertisers is not profit-maximizing.

We note here that there is another possible theory of the case. For reasons of clarity and coherence, however, it is more convenient to deal with it at a much later point in these reasons. We return to it below as an "Addendum" to our conclusion regarding the separate products issue.

We therefore do not accept that we should approach this case with a view to treating Tele-Direct as other than a profit-maximizing firm, albeit a firm with market power. Nor do we accept that efficiency considerations are not relevant to our section 77 analysis. Efficiency and demand, together, form the basis of the consideration of one or two products, to which we now proceed.

D. SEPARATE PRODUCTS

(1) Approach to Determining Separate Products or Single Product

The first element of section 77 to be considered is whether advertising space and advertising services are separate products. The Director takes the position that advertising services constitute a distinct product separate from advertising space. The respondents argue that advertising services are in fact an "input" into Yellow Pages advertising, not a separate product.

Merely labelling advertising services and advertising space as either two "products" or as "inputs" into a single product does not assist. As Areeda, Hovenkamp and Elhauge state:

> . . . just about any product could be described as a tie of its components. And just about any two products could be described as mere parts in a more encompassing single product. . . .[136]

There must be some rationale for distinguishing between situations where there are two products involved, and thus at least the possibility of an illegal tie that should be prohibited, and those where there is a single product and no question of tying.

The parties are in agreement that the Canadian jurisprudence does not provide much guidance on the test to be applied. Both parties referred to the 1984 decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde[137] for guidance, although they emphasize different portions of the decision.

In Jefferson Parish the Court provided its most extensive discussion of the "single product" test. At issue in the case was the validity of an exclusive contract between the hospital and a firm of anaesthesiologists. Any patient who chose to have an operation performed at that hospital was required to use an anaesthesiologist employed by the firm in question (Roux & Associates). The Court had to decide if this constituted an illegal tying arrangement. In making that inquiry, the Court considered two questions, whether the hospital was selling two separate products that might be tied together and, if so, whether the hospital used market power to force its patients to accept the tying arrangement. The majority answered the first question in the affirmative but the second question in the negative (the hospital was found not to have market power), so in the result it found no illegal tying arrangement. The minority found only one product and concluded for that reason that there was no illegal tying arrangement.[138]

In discussing the question of separate products, the majority noted that the answer to the question of one or two products turns not on the functional relationship between them but rather on the character of the demand for the two items. The majority then stated:

> . . . Thus, in this case no tying arrangement can exist unless there is a sufficient demand for the purchase of anesthesiological services separate from hospital services to identify a distinct product market in which it is efficient to offer anesthesiological services separately from hospital services.[139] (reference omitted)

We adopt this statement of the majority as the applicable test for separate products. We believe that this test effectively captures both the demand and the efficiency elements necessary for us to distinguish between cases when a tie that is injurious to consumer welfare is possible and those in which the tie, although imposed by a major supplier, is efficient and should not be condemned. Demand is, of course, critical. If there is no demand, it would be pointless to require that the two products be offered separately. Efficiency is also critical as the existence of separate demand should not govern if providing the products separately would result in higher costs that would outweigh the benefits to those who want them separately.

[139] Supra note 137 at 21-22.

Our approach will be to examine first the evidence pertaining to the demand side of the equation, to determine whether the Director has proven buyer, in this case advertiser, interest in acquiring space and service separately. By this we mean an answer to the question: "Is there a significant set of advertisers who actually want the items separated?" If this question is answered in the affirmative, then we will turn to the evidence relating to whether it is efficient to separate the products.

The respondents rely on a portion of the minority judgment in Jefferson Parish. The minority wrote:

> . . . there is no sound economic reason for treating surgery and anesthesia as separate services. Patients are interested in purchasing anesthesia only in conjunction with hospital services, so the hospital can acquire no additional market power by selling the two services together. . . . In these circumstances, anesthesia and surgical services should probably not be characterized as distinct products for tying purposes.[140]

In conclusion, they reiterated:

> . . . Since anesthesia is a service useful to consumers only when purchased in conjunction with hospital services, the arrangement is not properly characterized as a tie between distinct products. It threatens no additional economic harm to consumers beyond that already made possible by any market power that the hospital may possess. The fact that anesthesia is used only together with other hospital services is sufficient, standing alone, to insulate from attack the hospital's decision to tie the two types of services.[141] (emphasis added)

---

[140] Ibid. at 43.

[141] Ibid. at 46.

The respondents did not provide us with any reason to adopt the minority judgment over the majority. In fact, the majority opinion explicitly rejected tests based on functional relationships, including the "useless without" test. In a footnote the majority noted:

> The fact that anesthesiological services are functionally linked to the other services provided by the hospital is not in itself sufficient to remove the Roux contract from the realm of tying arrangements. We have often found arrangements involving functionally linked products at least one of which is useless without the other to be prohibited tying devices. . . .[142]

There are also sound economic reasons to reject such a test. As pointed out in the Areeda text, it may perversely save the most dangerous ties and call for review when there is little likelihood of adverse effects. The authors of that text use the example of a manufacturer with a monopoly over can-closing machinery who requires all purchasers of the machinery to buy cans from it to point out that:

> . . . [s]uch a tie would bring the [manufacturer] a complete monopoly over cans, for presumably no one would buy empty cans without the machinery to close them. Yet the useless-without test would immunize this tying arrangement. Moreover, while short-run profit maximization is generally not enhanced when the tied product has no other use, monopoly in the tied market can impair competition severely in the long-run. . . .[143]

(2) Other Case Law

The respondents have also advanced a plethora of other American cases with respect to the question of separate products. In general, the respondents rely on these cases to urge us to view the facts before us solely from the supplier's (Tele-Direct's) perspective and to ignore demand considerations. Their fundamental premise appears to be that Tele-Direct's choice to "market" its product in a certain fashion is determinative and negates the possibility of any tying claim. We did not accept the Director's argument that considerations of demand govern; likewise we reject the respondents' argument that a supplier's choice is paramount. Both elements of demand and efficiency will be taken into account, as set out above. In any event, it is clear that the case before us is unique and does not "fit" exactly into any of the precedents cited to us. A more detailed treatment of the case law follows.

[142] Ibid. at 19 n. 30.

[143] Supra note 136 at 269.

(a) Single Product

One tying case was referred to, Souza v. Estate of Bishop,[144] a case against a lessor of land in Hawaii based on the refusal of the lessor, like most other landowners in Hawaii, to sell the land. The tying product was argued to be the residences plaintiffs owned on the land while the tied product was the leasehold. The claim was dismissed on a motion for summary judgment, affirmed by the Court of Appeal.

From this decision, the respondents ask us to conclude that if a supplier presents two products as a package or, in other words, if they are being marketed together, that is the end of the matter and the Tribunal must conclude that there is a single product. The Court found that the plaintiffs' argument defied reason because the product being marketed was a house plus leased land and not a house purchasable separately from the land on which it stood. The Court also found that the plaintiffs presented no evidence that the house and the leased land constituted separate products. We have already set out the test we intend to apply, which takes into account both demand and supply. We do not accept that simply because a producer or a supplier bundles products together that they are, ipso facto, one product.

Four cases are relied on by the respondents because they involve the Yellow Pages industry or an analogous industry. The respondents argue that these cases indicate that the United States courts have uniformly rejected any concept of an antitrust violation because of a publisher's refusal to pay commission or its decision to change the accounts on which it will pay commission. Thus, they conclude that the courts "in effect" have treated directory advertising as one product. They make this argument despite the fact that none of these cases was based on a claim of tied selling and therefore the issue of separate products in the sense with which we are dealing here was not before the court. The respondents claim, however, that these cases indicate that there is only one product because the tying argument was not raised in any of them.

We do not accept that the absence of a tying claim makes the cases dispositive of the issues before us in a tying case. In general, we do not see how the results in these cases can be directly transferred to the case before us. We will, however, review the decisions in order to see what, if any, assistance we can draw from the findings in resolving the issue of separate products on the facts before us.

In Selten Agency, Inc. v. Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co.,[145] a specialized advertising agency brought an antitrust action involving numerous allegations against a number of telcos and telephone directory publishers that were members of the National Yellow Pages Service Association ("NYPSA") (the predecessor to YPPA). All of the allegations involved joint action by the NYPSA members. The only issue with any possible, although remote, relevance to this case was the claim by the agency that the NYPSA members agreed not to pay commissions on local advertising to agencies, constituting an illegal horizontal division of markets.

The Court concluded there was no evidence of an illegal agreement. The evidence was that the NYPSA agreement covered only national advertising; there was no prohibition on commissions for local advertising. Publishers were free to offer commission on local accounts and, the Court notes, some, in fact, did so. The Court also noted that those who did not offer commission on local accounts had their own sales force and therefore did not require the services of advertising agencies. The respondents rely heavily on the next sentence of the judgment, that "[i]t is not a violation of the antitrust laws for a publisher to refuse to buy a service that is not worth buying"[146] to argue that publishers do not have to buy services from agents or, in other words, provide a commission for any accounts they do not want to. As we have already stated, we do not accept that the supplier's choice is the sole governing factor in a tying case. Due consideration must be given to the supply side of the equation but we cannot ignore demand considerations.

[145] No. CV 77-3450-FW (Dist. Ct. C.D. Cal. 8 June 1981).

[146] Ibid. at 17.

In O'Connor Agency v. General Telephone Co.,[147] an advertising agency alleged that a Yellow Pages publisher conspired with other publishers to change the definition of local or "B" accounts so that commission would no longer be paid on those accounts. The defendants brought a motion for summary judgment which was granted.

In granting the motion, the Court found an "agreement" to change the criteria based on adherence to the YPPA guidelines. Using a rule of reason approach, the Court then proceeded to consider and weigh both the anti- and pro-competitive effects of the change in the relevant market. The Court found that the plaintiff had provided no admissible evidence that the relevant product market was Yellow Pages and also provided insufficient admissible evidence of actual anti-competitive effect arising from the change. The Court also found that the publisher had a legitimate business reason for adhering to YPPA standards, namely the uncontroverted evidence that the defendant changed the commission criteria to increase its national Yellow Pages advertising which was not performing up to expectation.

The respondents rely on this case for the very broad proposition that "the U.S. jurisprudence directly involving Yellow Pages has rejected any concept of any antitrust violation because of the refusal of a publisher to pay commission to a CMR or as a result of the publisher changing the accounts on which it will pay a CMR" and that "[i]n effect the courts have said there is only one product that we're selling and we can sell it through whatever channel we want".[148] The case certainly does not support those broad generalizations. It was a conspiracy case resolved on a motion for summary judgment because of failure to prove either a relevant market or actual anti-competitive effect.

The respondents submit that the case of Thompson Everett, Inc. v. National Cable Advertising, L.P.[149] is analogous to the case at bar. In that case an independent cable television advertiser representative brought action against exclusive contracts between the cable company and their spot advertising sales agents on the basis that the "traditional" cable representatives or sales agents were engaged in a concerted effort to exclude the independent from the business. The Court of Appeal affirmed the decision of the lower court to grant summary judgment.

The Court found that the exclusive contracts were not being enforced through an illegal conspiracy. It also found that the independent did not have access to the exclusive contracts because it was not willing to compete with the exclusive agents for them and was simply seeking to substitute its own method of serving the cable company for that selected by the cable company. The Court also found that there was no unlawful monopoly in the cable representative market because cable companies are part of a larger market.

Once again, the respondents rely on this case to argue that the Court endorsed the cable company's choice of using exclusive representatives simply because that was the way the cable company chose to do it. We have already indicated that the supplier's choice will not be the only consideration in a tying case. Indeed, the case itself does not go that far.

The most interesting decision referred to by the respondents is Ad-Vantage Telephone Directory Consultants, Inc. v. GTE Directories Corp.[150] The case involved a claim by an "authorized selling representative" ("ASR") for the placement of national advertising in telephone directories that the publisher had monopolized or attempted to monopolize the sale of Yellow Pages advertising. Because of problems in collecting payment for advertising placed by the ASR, the publisher started billing the advertisers directly. The ASR claimed that the publisher's direct contact with its customers resulted in a loss of accounts to it and its eventual failure.

The monopolization case failed because the ASR could not define any relevant market in which it and the publisher competed. The ASR had originally based its claim on the national advertising market where the publisher competed for the sale of national advertising as an ASR itself but could not show any market power on the part of the publisher in that market. The claim was then amended to allege that the relevant market was the sale of advertising space in a specific directory, shifting the focus to local advertising. Based on evidence that the ASR had received commission for the placement of advertisements for two local advertisers, apparently by accident, the ASR argued that it competed with the publisher's sales force for local advertising. The argument of the ASR was that the lawful power to publish the exclusive directory for a specific geographic area did not give the publisher the right to be the exclusive seller of advertising space within that directory as publication and sale were separate activities.

The Court commented that the ASR's market theory had a certain "superficial" appeal based on its similarity to a typical wholesale/retail monopolization case where a vertically integrated manufacturer uses its dominant position at one level of activity (manufacturing) to eliminate competition at another level (retailing). The Court noted that for the ASR's theory to work, the publisher must be viewed as a wholesaler or manufacturer of advertising space and the ASR as a retailer of this space. If not a retailer, the ASR could not be considered a competitor of the publisher at the retail level.

The Court concluded that, to the extent that the sale of Yellow Pages advertising is an activity separable from the publishing of the advertising, the sales made by independent ASRs were in the nature of an agency and not retail sales. Agents, the Court noted, do not compete with those whom they represent. The wholesale/retail analogy failed, in part, because there could be no "resale" of Yellow Pages:

> . . . Yellow pages is not a product that is produced and distributed. The blank yellow pages do not exist prior to the sale of an advertisement, somehow awaiting distribution on a resale market. Each advertisement, that is, the space of the ad, is "created" when the advertisement is sold to the advertiser. . . . ASRs do not maintain an inventory of ad space to be sold. An ASR cannot purchase a page in the yellow pages and then distribute it to advertisers as it sees fit.[151]

The agency characterization was preferred, in part, because the Court considered the relationship between the publisher and the ASR in the case before it to be analogous to the relationship between an airline and a travel agent:

> . . . The publisher lawfully establishes the price for its advertising and announces it to the public. It determines when it is going to publish directories, and has the ultimate say on how many advertisements it will accept. An advertiser may deal directly with the publisher, or may use an Authorized Sales Representative. However, should it use an ASR, the ASR must submit a request for advertising to the publisher, analogous to a reservation in the forthcoming publication. The ASR does not purchase an inventory of yellow pages space. The service which the advertiser has paid for is performed by the publisher, not the ASR. Further, should the advertisement fail to appear as requested in the appropriate directory, the publisher is under an obligation to refund the advertiser's money. Finally, should a publisher not receive enough advertisements to make a directory profitable, it must still publish the directory; the publisher retains the "risk" that not enough yellow pages advertisements will be "distributed" -- not the ASRs.[152]

The Court found ample evidence in the record that the ASR functioned as an agent, including the NYPSA guidelines which provided that ASRs represented the publisher "when selling National Yellow Pages advertising to national advertisers or their advertising agencies, or when negotiating disputes with such national advertisers or their advertising agencies".[153] The Court noted that there was also evidence that the ASR acted as an agent of the advertiser, including liability to the publisher for payment, but concluded that "[e]ither way, an ASR functions as an agent, not an `independent contractor,' and not, in any case, as a retailer of yellow pages advertising space."[154] Thus, the leveraging argument failed as there was no "second activity" to be monopolized by using the publisher's market power to publish directories as leverage.

[154] Ibid. at 58,484.

One element of this decision is the Court's insistence that the ASRs had to be considered retailers in order to be in competition with the publisher. A finding that the ASRs were merely agents of the publishers or, perhaps, agents of the customers, in the sense of having no independent existence from either or both of those two entities seems to preclude competition between the ASRs and the publisher. We do not believe, however, that the inapplicability of a strict retail model is conclusive. The Court did mention in passing, for example, independent contractors. The fundamental question is whether the publisher is in competition with the ASR or other person alleged to be excluded by the activity in question, which we agree is a question that should also be addressed in the context of a tying claim.

A second important element of the Court's conclusion concerned the functions performed by ASRs, that were apparently viewed as simple "order takers" insofar as the commission from the publisher was concerned. The Court indicated its assumption that the ASR was paid separately by the advertiser for other services such as layout[155] when it distinguished the case before it from a successful monopolization claim by an advertising agency against a television station. The television station had expanded its in-house advertising agency services by starting to produce commercials (for a fee) as well as selling air time. In Ad-Vantage, the Court stated:

[155] Or these might have been provided by the advertiser's "advertising agency" and not the ASR.

> Thus, in Six Twenty-Nine Productions, a leveraging argument was possible. The production of [Yellow Pages] advertisements is a related activity separate from the sale of advertising space. Each is a separate source of revenue. In the context of this case, no evidence was presented indicating that ASRs receive no separate compensation from their clients when the ASRs engage in the production -- the lay out -- of the advertisements. In fact, testimony of a former NYPSA official indicated that most of the national yellow pages advertising is purchased through ASRs by advertising agencies on behalf of national advertisers, supporting the notion that ad agencies perform a separate function. Thus, the leveraging argument made in Six Twenty-Nine Productions is not available here.[156]

What we take from this case is that it is important to examine the actual services performed by the agents for advertisers and the relationship between Tele-Direct and the agents, with a view to determining if they do, in fact, "compete" with Tele-Direct in any relevant sense.

(b) Relationship between Agents, Advertisers and Tele-Direct

The respondents say that, as in the Ad-Vantage case, agents in the case before us function as either representatives of Tele-Direct or, on occasion, as agents of the advertisers. In the first case, Tele-Direct does not compete with itself or its own representatives and in the second, it cannot be considered to compete with its customers. Based on the evidence of Charles Mitchell, Tele-Direct's Director of Marketing Sales Support, they submit that, in fact, Tele-Direct has not competed for agency accounts since 1992. The Director argues that, unlike in Ad-Vantage, the Canadian CMRs are not agents of Tele-Direct. The Director submits that the evidence supports the proposition that Tele-Direct has consistently considered, and still does consider, the agencies as its competitors.

[156] Supra note 150 at 58,484.

The initial point at issue is the exact contractual relationship between agents and Tele-Direct. In 1988, Tele-Direct required the agencies to sign new contracts with it. Under those contracts, the agent warrants that it is duly authorized to enter into the agreement on behalf of the advertiser. Further, the agency agrees that "it is not acting and does not purport to act as agent for Tele-Direct."[157] This is exemplified by the provisions that the agent agrees to pay for the advertising; to indemnify and hold harmless Tele-Direct from claims by the advertiser; and to warrant on behalf of the advertiser the truth of all assertions in the advertising. Tele-Direct's Corporate Secretary and legal counsel, Patrick Crawford, confirmed that these contracts have not been revoked and that the agencies were not agents for or of Tele-Direct.

The respondents argue that the 1993 YPPA agreements entered into by the agencies in order to be accredited as CMRs supersede the earlier contracts although no steps have been taken to repudiate or amend the earlier contracts. In the application to be accredited as a CMR, the agency agrees to "represent" the publisher in the same terms as quoted in Ad-Vantage from the NYPSA guidelines.[158] The YPPA guidelines, however, describe a CMR as a member of YPPA which:

> a. Represents to the users the Publishers' product, services and policies, while representing to the Publishers the customers' needs, desires and concerns.
>
> b. Develops a comprehensive national Yellow Pages advertising program for prospects and/or advertisers.

[157] Confidential exhibit CJ-16 (blue vol. 7), tab 214 (public), art. 10.

[158] Exhibit J-5 (green vol. 3), tab 154 at 32277.

> c. Compiles and provides current information pertaining to all Publishers' practices affecting an advertiser's national Yellow Pages program.
>
> d. Develops market research and cost studies for the advertiser or its agency as a basis for making advertising proposals.
>
> e. Provides Publishers on a timely basis with the authorized list of dealers for solicitation under Advertiser's Trade Item.
>
> f. Pays Publishers' invoices without recourse within the time period set forth in the individual Publishers' credit terms, notwithstanding its own collection status with that advertiser or its agency, unless any individual Publisher provides otherwise.
> g. Absorbs all adjustment amounts incurred as a result of its own acts, errors, or omissions which including (sic) among other things, failure to notify Publishers of cancellations of orders, unless any individual Publisher provides otherwise.[159]

What comes out of this somewhat contradictory documentation of the relationship is that agents are not agents or representatives of Tele-Direct in any sense that would preclude a finding that the two are in competition. The agents are not so allied with Tele-Direct as a publisher that they have no independent existence. Their relationship has elements of both co-operation and competition.

The agents rely on the Yellow Pages industry, as represented by YPPA, and Tele-Direct specifically, to provide information on the effectiveness of Yellow Pages advertising. They are accredited based on industry standards. With respect to accreditation and the promotion of the medium, the relationship between Tele-Direct and the agents is undoubtedly cooperative.

However, the thrust of the Tele-Direct internal documentary evidence is that Tele-Direct treated the agents as competitors of its internal sales force. Prior to the 1990s, Tele-Direct sought to protect its client base from the agents by selling advertisers on using its services instead, stressing the advantages that dealing directly with Tele-Direct offered, including monthly billing and later closing dates, as well as considering more positive initiatives like assigning representatives to large accounts for a longer period of time. During the early 1990s, when Mr. Mitchell was head of the national accounts group, Tele-Direct actively competed for agents' clients. Mr. Mitchell testified that as of 1992, the approach changed to one of protecting internal accounts and revenue only but the documentation does not bear this out. Certainly, one of the reasons for the creation of Tele-Direct (Media) Inc. in 1994 was to combat the loss by Tele-Direct of national accounts to CMRs. The only "contradictory" evidence on this point is a somewhat unclear statement by Wayne Fulcher of DAC that prior to the formation of its CMR, Tele-Direct did not "normally" try to take away agency "headquartered" accounts. However, Mr. Fulcher does think that Tele-Direct's CMR is in competition with his agency.

Perhaps the most telling point is that Tele-Direct requires that agencies pay at the time of issue of a directory for advertising placed on behalf of their clients. If agents were only agents of Tele-Direct, they would not be financially responsible for the obligation of third parties -- the advertisers. This is compelling evidence that the agencies do not act as agents of Tele-Direct.

The evidence is that Tele-Direct has always considered agents to be, and has reacted to them, as competitors.

Nor can the agents be considered to have no independent existence apart from the advertisers themselves that they also "represent" in the sense of placing orders for advertising on their behalf. Yellow Pages advertising is not a simple product to buy and advertisers desire assistance in making the purchase. Agents, however, are not mere "order placers" for advertisers or other advertising agencies employed by advertisers. The evidence before us, which is reviewed in more detail below, is that agents provide a range of services, including advice, layout, design and administration, for which they do not receive additional compensation beyond the commission paid by Tele-Direct.[160] Further, we have no evidence that much of the agents' business consists of simply placing orders for another advertising agency employed by the customer to do the remaining work involved in producing the advertising. Advertisers want these other services in relation to their Yellow Pages advertising from agents. Thus, for advertisers, agents have a separate existence from Tele-Direct.

The relationship between Tele-Direct and agents is complex. Tele-Direct treats the agents as independent businesses with which they cooperate to advance their own objectives but with which they also compete. While Tele-Direct apparently recognizes that agents can service certain accounts better than its internal sales force, by reason of its creation of a class of commissionable accounts, it is also its goal, or at least the goal of certain groups within the corporation such as the national accounts group, to keep as much revenue as possible in-house and reduce its dependence on agencies to the absolute minimum possible. We conclude that the business relationship between Tele-Direct and agents is not inconsistent with Tele-Direct and agents treating each other as competitors.

[160] The evidence is that agents charged separately for artwork when the commission rate was 15 percent but do not do so at the 25 percent commission rate.

(c) Additional Economic Benefit

The respondents argue that there is an "exception" to tying recognized in the American jurisprudence where the seller of the alleged tying product does not receive an "additional economic benefit" from the sale of the tied product. They say that Tele-Direct gets no additional economic benefit from the sale of services in this case because there is no "separate charge" for services.

The respondents cite two cases on this point. The first is Directory Sales Management Corp. v. Ohio Bell,[161] a decision affirming summary judgment granted against the plaintiff in an antitrust suit by an independent directory publisher against the telco and its directory publisher. The two defendants were wholly-owned subsidiaries of the same parent. One of the allegations was that the defendants tied business telephone service (tying product) to a free Yellow Pages listing (tied product) by refusing to reduce the price of the telephone service if the subscriber chose not to be listed.

[161] 833 F.2d 606 (6th Cir. 1987).

The Court noted that an illegal tying arrangement might exist if the telco in some way charged for the "free" listing indirectly in the bill for telephone service, even though it did not charge for the listing directly. The evidence was that there was no hidden charge for the listing as the telco did not pay the publisher for the expenses incurred in publishing the listing. The Court stated that if the telco did not receive a "financial benefit" from the tied product, there could be no tying arrangement.

The second case is Beard v. Parkview Hospital.[162] Dr. Beard, an osteopathic radiologist, was employed by a group of doctors that was the exclusive provider of radiological services to Parkview Hospital. Dr. Beard resigned from the group with the intention of providing radiological services on his own to patients at Parkview Hospital. The hospital did not permit him to do so and Dr. Beard sued, alleging that the exclusive contract for radiological services was an illegal tie of radiological services to other hospital services. Under the terms of the contract between the hospital and the group providing the radiological services, the group billed patients directly for its services and the hospital did not share in the fee. The lower court granted summary judgment for the hospital.

In affirming the dismissal, the appeal court approved the lower court's reliance on the requirement that the seller of the tying product must benefit directly from the sale of the tied product. The Court held that the requirement was also consistent with Jefferson Parish, which stated that an illegal tying arrangement is one where a firm with market power attempts to impose restraints on competition in the market for the tied product, because the seller who "derives no economic benefit from sales of an alleged tied product or service is not attempting to invade the alleged tied product or service market in a manner proscribed by section 1 of the Sherman Act."[163]

Areeda explains the purpose of this rule in American case law and its relationship to tying as a per se offence:

> . . . a tie-in, though affecting a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product, is not per se unlawful when it does not foreclose any rival supplier or, perhaps, when any such foreclosure is inherently minor. . . .
>
> One convenient and frequent way to capture the concept of a relevant foreclosure is to ask whether the defendant has a financial interest in the tied product. In most courts, ties do not cross the threshold of potential power or effect when the defendant lacks an economic interest in the tied product, primarily because such a tie does not ordinarily enhance the defendant's power in the tied market or bring about any other consequences of the kind that the per se rule against tying seeks to prevent. "Foreclosure" there may be but not a relevant one.[164] (reference omitted)

Further, using the example of a defendant firm accused of providing its product A only to buyers who purchase B from a second, separate firm T, thus "foreclosing" other suppliers of product B, he explains:

> The defendant who gains not a penny, directly or indirectly, from firm T's sales of product B is no "competitor" in the market for the tied product B. This much is clear, although there are difficulties ahead in deciding what type and magnitude of financial connection with firm T makes the defendant a "competitor" of those foreclosed suppliers.[165]

[164] P.E. Areeda, Antitrust Law, vol. 9 (Boston: Little, Brown, 1991) at 330-31.

[165] Ibid. at 333.

Therefore, where there is no financial interest in sales of the tied product or in the tied market, the alleged tie-in does not cross the threshold for per se illegality, although the alleged tie does remain subject to review under the rule of reason.[166]

There are three points to be made regarding this argument of the respondents. First, the test of lack of any financial interest in the tied market or economic benefit from the sale of the tied product, however worded, is closely linked in American law to the per se nature of tying, which makes us reluctant to adopt it directly because Canadian law is based on a different standard, that of "substantial lessening of competition".

Second, there is some validity to the Director's argument that the question of economic benefit from the tied product, or of participation by the firm with market power in the tied market, only arises when two separate corporate entities are involved in the supply of the tying and the tied products. That was the case in both decisions cited and is not the case on our facts.

Further, in the Beard case it was abundantly clear that the hospital itself, the supplier of the alleged tying product, was not a participant in the radiological services, or tied product, market in any way as it did not receive any part of the fee for those services, which went directly from the patient to the unrelated doctors' group. In Ohio Bell, the situation was less clear as the two corporate entities were related but, in any event, the Court was definitive that there was no evidence of a "hidden" or "indirect" charge for the Yellow Pages listing in the telco's bill for telephone service. The telco, the firm with market power, was not attempting to, in the words from Beard, "invade" the market for the supply of directory listings.

In contrast, on the facts before us, Tele-Direct itself supplies both space and services to all advertisers, both commissionable and non-commissionable. We also have evidence that it considers both consultants (detailed elsewhere) and agencies, the alternate service suppliers, to be its competitors. Since Tele-Direct provides services, it must be compensated for them. As a rational firm it would not provide something for nothing. Therefore, it cannot be concluded that it receives "no additional benefit" from its own sales of the alleged tied product. The precise form of that compensation or "benefit" is not at issue here.[167] Whether Tele-Direct has succeeded in foreclosing any alternate suppliers in the services market is evidently a relevant question but that is not what this argument of the respondents focuses on. This argument is that Tele-Direct gets no additional economic benefit from the provision of services and that, therefore, any exclusionary effects in that market are irrelevant because of the lack of linkage to the firm with market power over the tying product. The facts do not support this hypothesis.

(d) Separate Billing/Separate Payment

The respondents argue that if a producer pays for the "components" of a "product" directly and then sells the "product" complete with "necessary inputs" at a specified price, there is no tying. They state that the concept of tying only applies where the customer pays separately for the alleged tied and tying products. In oral argument, this was expressed as the proposition that it is not a tie to bundle something because as long as there is only one "cost" to the buyer, what is being sold is the supplier's single "product".

A distinction was drawn between the case at bar and the facts in Jefferson Parish, in which the respondents submit the items found by the Court to be separate products were not "bundled" but were in "two pieces" because there were two bills. They argue that the patient in Jefferson Parish paid for both "parts", presumably hospital services and anaesthesiological services, and that if a buyer pays for two different things on two bills, there cannot be one product. Reference was also made to the case of Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd.[168]

Turning to Jefferson Parish, the distinction drawn by the respondents between that case and the instant case on the facts relating to billing is not as apparent as argued. In Jefferson Parish, the hospital and Roux & Associates had a contract which provided that all anaesthesiological services required by the hospital's patients would be performed by Roux. The hospital agreed with Roux to provide an anaesthesia department, including space, equipment, maintenance and other services, drugs and supplies, and nursing personnel (subject to approval by Roux). The use of the anaesthesia department was restricted to physicians employed by Roux. As the Court said:

[168] 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 67,971 (7th Cir. 1988).

> The hospital has provided its patients with a package that includes the range of facilities and services required for a variety of surgical operations. At East Jefferson Hospital the package includes the services of the anesthesiologist.[169] (reference omitted)

The Court describes the billing arrangement as follows:

> . . . The fees for anesthesiological services are billed separately to the patients by the hospital. They cover the hospital's costs and the professional services provided by Roux. After a deduction of eight percent to provide a reserve for uncollectible accounts, the fees are divided equally between Roux and the hospital.[170] (emphasis added)

The majority of the Supreme Court did consider the "separate billing" of anesthesiological services" as a factor that entered into its determination of whether there were separate products. Yet, the actual billing arrangement, as described by the Court, looks very much like a combined bill for the tied product (professional anaesthesiological services) and part of the tying product (hospital services), much like Tele-Direct's bills for Yellow Pages advertising. Specifically, the amount billed included both a professional services portion for anaesthesiological services and a hospital-supplied anaesthesia equipment, facilities, support personnel and drugs portion. The fee is simply divided equally between the two, irrespective of the actual extent of professional services required in the particular case. It is not explicit separate billing of professional services.

[170] Ibid. at 6 n. 4.

In any event, there is no indication in the Court's decision that the factor of "separate billing" is essential or even critical. The most that can be said is that it is one factor to examine. We agree with the Director that if the entire resolution of the one or two products issue could be determined simply by the pricing or billing arrangements, this would allow suppliers to immunize all activity from tying claims simply by refusing to quote separate prices for items provided as a package.

Further, the Director submits that the mechanism or the route by which the money ends up in the hands of the separate service supplier is not relevant. In the commissionable market, the separate service supplier is paid by commission. A payment by commission may be somewhat more circuitous than, for example, direct billing by the hour by agents for their services (allied with a discounted price for space provided by Tele-Direct to persons who did not use its services) but the end result is the same -- the advertiser pays for the services, the advertiser receives the services of an agent, the agency receives payment for the services provided. Payment to agencies by way of commission was historically, and to a large degree still is, a fact of life in all advertising media.

The significance of the reference to Collins in this context escapes us. The Court in that case found that there was no distinct demand for pathology services as a product separate from hospital services. The Court did not refer to billing arrangements at all in making its findings. It based its conclusion solely on the lack of consumer or patient requests for specific pathologists or perception of pathology services as separate from other hospital services.

In summary, none of the cases referred to convinces us that the approach we have adopted to the separate product question is inappropriate. Several were largely irrelevant because they dealt with completely different facts or different, non-tying, antitrust issues. To the extent issues were raised which we considered relevant, particularly in the other Yellow Pages cases, we dealt with them in that context. We will now proceed with the basic approach we outlined at the outset and consider the evidence and arguments relating to demand and efficiency.

(3) Demand by Advertisers

Are advertisers that fall in that portion of the market which Tele-Direct currently defines as non-commissionable interested in purchasing the services associated with creating and placing a Yellow Pages advertisement from a source other than Tele-Direct? In other words, does Tele-Direct's practice of bundling space and services for a single price "force" them to buy a product that they would rather not buy from Tele-Direct? Or, do they regard the two components as a package that they would rather not acquire separately in any event?

The Director called 19 advertiser witnesses; the respondents called two. All of the witnesses except the two called by the respondents expressed a desire to obtain the services associated with developing and placing Yellow Pages advertising from someone other than Tele-Direct. Seven of the 19 advertisers called by the Director are current agency clients; [171] the remainder of the advertisers are serviced directly by Tele-Direct representatives. Of those, eight use or have used a consultant. Three would like to use an agent but cannot qualify for commission.

Fourteen witnesses represent multi-outlet (whether franchised, licensed or corporate-owned), multi-directory advertisers. The geographic dispersion of the outlets ranges from a metropolitan area to country-wide. Three are single outlet but multi-directory advertisers because of the wide territory from which they draw business. The remaining four advertisers are single outlet, single directory advertisers. All of the witnesses called are spending above-average amounts in the Yellow Pages. Two were spending close to the average of $1,700 (at about $2,000 annually each); the remainder ranged from $7,000 to $300,000.

The respondents have not attempted to rebut the specific evidence of the advertisers who indicate that they would prefer to obtain advertising services from someone other than Tele-Direct. They called two witnesses to show that some advertisers prefer Tele-Direct's services, although one of those witnesses stated that advertisers should have the choice of dealing with Tele-Direct or using an agent. Counsel admitted in oral argument that in the "top end" of the market, some advertisers find the bundling of services and space by Tele-Direct problematic. He argues, however, that these advertisers constitute a "statistically insubstantial sample" and that there will always be a number of people "who would like to get something for nothing" and "as long as they aren't paying for it".

It is true that the customers called to give evidence constitute a very small proportion of total advertisers. They were not randomly selected and we do not treat them as a statistically significant sample. However, coupled with their anecdotal evidence of why they prefer to use agents is the evidence that in the current commissionable market, which includes grandfathered eight-market accounts, agents enjoy the lion's share of the business. When advertisers have the choice, the vast majority choose an agent, rather than Tele-Direct, for services. There is clearly separate demand beyond what Tele-Direct considers a "national" account (the 1993 definition) with respect to eight-market accounts, currently grandfathered. Moreover, there is no reason to believe that the line drawn by Tele-Direct between commissionable and non-commissionable accounts accurately reflects the boundary of demand; that those accounts that are commissionable prefer to use an alternate service provider while those who are not commissionable do not. Given the strength of demand for agents' services in the current commissionable market, we think it is reasonable to infer that the preference shown by the large majority of commissionable accounts for the use of agents extends down into the current non-commissionable market, at least to some extent. We are satisfied there is sufficient evidence before us to conclude that there is demand for separate advertising services below the existing commissionable market and that the advertisers called by the Director can tell us something about the nature of that demand.

Common amongst the Director's witnesses, whether single or multi-directory advertisers, was a preference for the advice or consultative services provided by an agent or a consultant over those of Tele-Direct. A recurring theme was that the agent or consultant provides an "overall" picture, reviewing all of the client's Yellow Pages advertising, including white pages listings, which headings were being used and which should be used, all the directories involved, what the client's competitors are doing and the nature of the business's markets. These service providers help plan the Yellow Pages advertising, including recommending headings and, in some cases where the level of expenditure is higher, budgeting. In the case of agents, a representative is assigned to the account for a long period of time and the clients have the perception that the agency "understands" its particular business. That these service providers tend to pay attention to the overall picture is suggested by the testimony of two advertisers, one the client of an agent and one of a consultant, that the agency or the consultant was the one to bring to its attention duplicative advertisements in its Yellow Pages program.

The advertisers using agents also mentioned creative services as one of the elements of the service provided. For the clients of consultants, creative services are at least equally important since by re-designing an advertisement and by substituting other design techniques, like, for example, screening, for the more expensive size and colour, the consultants are able to reduce the cost of advertising.

In the case of both agents and consultants, advertisers generally perceive that these "independent" service providers are more interested in helping them get more out of their Yellow Pages advertising dollar than is the typical Tele-Direct representative. Frequently, according to the advertisers, the Tele-Direct representative does not have time to sit down and consult with the advertiser. The advertiser has to accommodate itself to the schedule of the representative faced with a full schedule and deadlines in a particular canvass. Another recurring complaint is that the Tele-Direct representative is more interested in selling more colour or a larger size than in arriving at the level and type of advertising that is right for that client; representatives are perceived as quite aggressive and prone to "upsell". Most of the advertisers also recognize that these problems result from the way in which Tele-Direct operates its canvasses and compensates its representatives; their comments were not directed at the representatives as individuals. While the agencies are also paid commission, individual representatives are paid straight salary for servicing the agency's existing client base.[172]

The multi-directory advertisers also prefer the services of third parties because they provide "co-ordination" or "administrative" services. These multi-directory advertisers are primarily the clients of agents rather than consultants.[173] They testified extensively about the advantages of using an agency which will keep track of publication dates for the various directories, control the uniformity of the advertisements, company image and message across directories and, where applicable, organize the contact between head office and franchisees or licensees for approval of advertisements and billing. Promoting a uniform message and image is particularly important to franchisers whose franchisees may be quite independent of head office [172] The evidence is that the agencies generally keep servicing existing clients and prospecting for new clients separate; adding new clients is usually the primary responsibility of one or more designated persons. Out of the five CMRs that testified, two pay commission for new clients; only one of those offers that incentive to all employees, the other has a vice-president who is responsible for new business.

[173] Only two of the multi-directory (leaving aside the one who is in only two directories) advertisers were clients of consultants and only one of those talked about uniformity of advertisements and co-ordinating dates and deadlines.

and also to those which had enrolled businesses to their network which operate the franchised business as only a part of their overall business.[174]

It might be argued that the administrative services provided by agents are not supplied at all by Tele-Direct.[175] On that reasoning, administrative services would not be a component of the advertising services at issue in the tying case. The argument would be that since Tele-Direct does not supply administrative services, it is not in competition with agents because it is supplying different services and customers who want administrative services are free to purchase them separately.

It appears that, in fact, Tele-Direct has made some effort to provide the administrative services emphasized by the advertiser witnesses who appeared before us (uniformity and co-ordination) through its national accounts group and with its efforts regarding continuity. Further, while it is possible that such administrative services could conceivably be purchased separately, there is no reason to believe that it would be efficient to do so. There is no evidence of agents providing these services to advertisers who use Tele-Direct for the remaining services, even [174] E.g., the "Autopro" line of automobile parts is offered by licensed Autopro mechanics and service stations across the country; the franchisees of Location Pelletier offer short-term vehicle rentals under that banner but usually operate another business as well.

[175] A similar conclusion was reached in the United Kingdom by the Office of Fair Trading ("OFT") in its 1984 report on the Yellow Pages industry: exhibit J-6 (green vol. 4), tab 282. When British Telecom withdrew all commission and internalized services through an exclusive sales contractor, the advertising agencies argued that they were placed at a disadvantage in competing to offer services to advertisers as the advertiser had to pay for the sales contractor's services, included in the rate card price, and then pay again to use the services of an agent. The OFT concluded that the "administration of the account" on the advertiser's behalf, by which they meant the day-to-day running of the account (negotiating claims, authorizations, proof-checking, paying bills) could not be carried out by the sales contractor and would either be done by the advertiser using its own resources or an agent. In respect of those services, therefore, the agencies were not competing with the sales contractor but rather with the advertiser's own resources.

though there is clearly a demand for them. The fact that Tele-Direct provides administrative services in some cases but not in others simply means that Tele-Direct and the agents are not providing precisely the same product. Indeed, one would not expect to find homogeneous packages of services. Otherwise, there would be no reason for customers to choose one service provider over the other. Therefore, we are satisfied that administrative services are a relevant and important aspect of advertiser demand for advertising services.

We now turn to the respondents' argument that advertisers only prefer agents because they are getting something for nothing or they are not paying for the agents. We do not accept this argument. The advertiser is paying for the advertising services whether provided by Tele-Direct or, if the account is commissionable, by an agent. With respect to the use of consultants, advertisers pay to use consultants as Tele-Direct's price remains the same but the consultant charges the advertiser a portion of the amount the advertiser saves by use of the consultant. Those savings would otherwise be for the advertiser to either spend on more Yellow Pages advertising or to pocket.

Even if we were to accept that the cost to advertisers of obtaining services is the same whether they choose Tele-Direct or an agent, we think it is still evidence of separate demand that where advertisers have the choice, the advertisers prefer to use agents. However, the evidence is, as will be explained, that when advertisers use agents, they bear costs additional to what they would have to bear if they placed their advertising through the Tele-Direct representative. Thus, it is apparent that customers prefer agents even if it is more costly to use an agent than to deal directly with Tele-Direct. This is strong evidence of demand for the services of agents by advertisers when they have the possibility of using them.

One source of higher cost derives from the billing practices of Tele-Direct. When advertising is placed through Tele-Direct's representative, the cost of advertising is divided into twelve equal parts and included in the Bell Canada telephone bill commencing upon issue of the directory. Advertisers who use agents are required to pay for their advertising on an issue basis, that is, to pay the full amount upon issue of the directory. When this occurs the advertisers' additional cost of using an agent is roughly one-half the annual cost of funds or, in other words, one-half of the commercial interest rate.[176] Given interest rates over the past 20 years, this has, depending upon the time, constituted approximately three to six percent of the advertising bill, a cost the advertiser does not pay if it uses Tele-Direct's services. In the words of Mr. Kitchen of Lansing Buildall, these advertisers are "paying a premium in terms of the payment schedule." While it is true that some advertisers that used agencies have arranged for periodic payments, no arrangement disclosed in the evidence is as favourable to them as the Tele-Direct monthly billing practice.

Another cost borne by some advertisers in order to use an agent is the placing of "extra" advertising in directories outside the areas from which the advertiser draws its customers so that [176] Counsel for the respondents appeared to take the position that advertisers did not incur higher costs of using agents in those cases where the advertisers placed advertisements in a number of directories that were issued throughout the year. Although this argument has a superficial appeal because it appears that advertisers are paying on a periodic basis either way, it is not valid. Advertisers who use an agent must pay in advance for each directory as opposed to over a 12 month period if they use Tele-Direct.

the criteria for the eight-market rule (grandfathered accounts) are met. Five advertiser witnesses buy "extra" advertising. In one case, the cost of the additional advertisements is paid by the agent; in another the agent pays 15 percent of the cost of the additional advertisements. The other advertisers bear the full cost of the "extra" advertising.

How far down does the demand for separate services extend? We have evidence from a number of advertisers, both agency clients and clients of consultants, probably best described as large local or regional advertisers. Despite the amounts they are spending in Yellow Pages, these advertisers would not qualify even under the eight-market rule if they only advertised in the areas where they have locations or from where they draw business.[177] Since there are only seven market areas in Ontario and six in Quebec, that rule requires advertising outside the boundaries of each province.[178]

However, we did not hear from any truly "small" advertisers. Although two of the advertiser witnesses spend about average amounts in the Yellow Pages, they are the outlying examples. Most of the remaining witnesses, even those using consultants, spend at least $10,000

[177] Of the seven agency clients, five, to all appearances, would not meet the eight-market criteria; the sixth apparently does but does not meet the 20-directory requirement for the 1993 rule. The seventh may meet the 1993 definition but as a group advertisement which is problematic for other reasons (see chapter "IX. Abuse of Dominant Position" under "D. Market for Advertising Services", infra). The three advertisers who currently use Tele-Direct but would like to use an agent are similar: a franchiser, a large regional advertiser and a company with three offices in two provinces.

[178] Among the agency clients, HOJ Car and Truck Rentals, for example, spends $125,000 annually and has 36 franchises, all located in southwestern Ontario. Location Pelletier spends $120,000 to $160,000 annually but its 60 licensees are all within the province of Quebec. Stephensons' Rent-all Inc., as Mr. Day of Day Advertising Group, Inc. testified, became non-commissionable when the eight-market rule came in and that was when it began to do the "extra" advertising. Stephensons has 38 retail outlets in southern Ontario and spends $140,000 on Yellow Pages advertising. Among the consultant clients, Canac-Marquis Grenier has 10 outlets across Quebec and spends $50,000 on its advertising; Tiremag Corp. spends $20,000 although it has only one outlet.

and most spend considerably more than that. Advertisers spending more than $10,000 annually represent only two percent of Tele-Direct's total advertisers by number and about one-third of its advertising revenues. There are, therefore, a vast number of advertisers representing a significant amount of revenue about which we know little regarding the character of their demand for separate advertising services.

The Director refers us to documentary evidence dating from 1975 when Tele-Direct changed to the eight-market commission rule to show that approximately 20 percent of the pre-1976 agency customers purchased less than $1,000 per year of Yellow Pages advertising. Many purchased as little as $500 worth of advertising annually. We have no reason to doubt the accuracy of these statements. We are reluctant, however, to reach conclusions about "small" advertisers based only on documentary evidence that is some 20 years old.

On the other hand, we have the views of Michael Trebilcock, the respondents' economist expert witness,[179] regarding "smaller" advertisers, which imply that these advertisers do not demand advertising services from a source other than the publisher. Based on the data provided in the report of the Office of Fair Trading,[180] he notes that for smaller advertisers, the cost of providing advertising services overwhelmingly comprises space and selling effort rather than advisory services. The reasoning behind these statements is sound and there has not been any evidence or argument to the contrary. It is certainly plausible that the lowest-cost [179] Professor of Law and Director of the Law and Economics Programme at the University of Toronto.

[180] Supra note 175.

"advertisements", for example a bold listing, do not contain much, if any, creative content. We therefore accept that the general thrust of this argument is valid and that, for "smaller" advertisers, it is highly doubtful that a separate demand for advertising services exists.[181]

The evidence supports the view that there is buyer interest in obtaining advertising services from suppliers other than Tele-Direct over at least part of the spectrum of advertisers. While it is difficult to know where exactly to draw the line, we can conclude at this point that there is no evidence that would satisfy this threshold test of separate demand from "smaller", including new, advertisers. It is apparent that the larger advertisers would have the greater need for the services of agents or consultants based on the complexity of their advertising. Smaller, including new, advertisers whose advertising is relatively more simple likely would not have such need.

However, based on the evidence before us, we are not prepared to draw a firm line below which we could confidently say there is no evidence of buyer demand for services of independent advertising service providers. Therefore, at this point, we only conclude that there is evidence of buyer demand for advertising services for suppliers other than Tele-Direct for "larger" advertisers.

[181] We note from Tele-Direct's 1994 Corporate Post Canvass Analysis Report that "new" advertisers, those using Yellow Pages for the first time or new businesses, are certainly among the smaller Tele-Direct advertisers. Selling effort is especially important with respect to new advertisers. The average annual expenditure by a new advertiser is $839, less than half the average for all advertisers. Less than one-half of one percent of new advertisers spend $1,000 or more per month where the corresponding percentage among established advertisers is about 3.5 times greater. Apparently, the typical new Yellow Pages advertiser starts with a small advertisement, in which case it is the value of the medium and the "sales pitch" which are important and not other advertising services.

(4) Respondents' "Efficiency" Arguments

Given the evidence of demand for services from suppliers other than Tele-Direct, is there evidence that efficiency considerations would dictate a single product? Based on the historical practices of Tele-Direct, the Director has ample evidence that the products can and were, in fact, sold separately. Pre-1975, a large percentage of advertisers could acquire services from a source other than Tele-Direct. Under the eight-market rule and the 1993 rule, any advertiser that qualifies or can make itself qualify by some extra advertising can acquire services separately from an agent. The respondents have put forward a number of efficiency arguments which, if valid, they say would lead to the conclusion that there is a single product and therefore, no tie. These arguments are largely based on the analysis and evidence of Professor Trebilcock, their expert witness. There were also profitability studies entered in evidence by the respondents and they will be dealt with in the next section.

(a) Impossibility of Leveraging: Fixed Proportions

Professor Trebilcock, for the respondents, is of the view that the Director's theory that Tele-Direct is attempting to leverage its market power (assuming it has market power) over space into the services market by bundling space and services is not valid. He states that such leveraging cannot occur because advertising space and advertising services are complements which are consumed in fixed proportions. There is agreement between the experts on both sides that complementary goods used in fixed proportions imply that the only profit-maximizing motive to bundle the two products is in order to minimize costs; all opportunities to exploit market power could be accomplished with control over either product. This implies that the bundling is socially efficient and it should be concluded that there is only one product.[182]

Professor Slade, for the Director, argues that space and services are at least partially substitutable. Professor Slade is of the view that:

> . . . it is possible to achieve the same impact by using a large ad or one that is cleverly designed. In addition, astute targeting of the "right" directories can substitute for purchasing space in a larger group of directories. More generally, an agency that provides service can often advise on ways to cut expenditure on space while maintaining the same level of advertising impact. In addition, it might even suggest ways of obtaining a higher impact from lower expenditure by, for example, substituting white knockout for colour.[183]

Because of the failure of the assumption of complementarity, she argues, leveraging is possible. Certainly the possibility of an extension of market power over a substitute, even if only a partial substitute, is one which causes concern and should be examined further.

The evidence supports variable rather than fixed proportions. To the extent that agents tend, compared to Tele-Direct representatives, to be less likely to promote increased expenditures on space, the additional expenditures on advertising services by agency clients (through the purchase of extra advertising, foregoing monthly billing) lead to the substitution of [182] We should note here that while the Director refers to space and services, Professor Trebilcock refers to three elements: space, consulting advice (design, graphics, layout, etc.) and selling effort (or pure promotion of the value of the medium). He recognizes that selling effort is clearly variable in relation to space. That is the genesis of the principal-agent problem dealt with later in this section.

[183] Expert rebuttal affidavit of M.E. Slade (28 August 1995): exhibit A-119 at 11.

advertising services for advertising space. Furthermore, once it is recognized that there is an issue of the quality and content of advertising services, as indicated by the evidence of advertisers and their willingness to pay more for agents than it would cost them to use Tele-Direct's representatives, even assuming the same expenditure on space using an agent or Tele-Direct, it is difficult to see how advertising services are being consumed in fixed proportions with advertising space.

The evidence regarding the activities of consultants also suggests that advertising services and advertising space are not used in fixed proportions, and that they are partial substitutes. The purchase of services from a supplier other than Tele-Direct results in reduced expenditures on space. An example provided by a consultant concerned a very large and apparently inappropriate existing advertisement for a taxi company in the Hamilton area. The existing full page advertisement included a large picture of an airplane and reference to airport service. The consultant (Serge Brouillet of Ad-Vice Communications) determined from his marketing needs analysis for the client that he actually did very little airport business. The changes proposed by the consultant were both less costly and appeared to be more effective.

We conclude that advertising space and service are not consumed in fixed proportions and it cannot therefore be assumed, as argued by the respondents, that only efficiency explains why they are bundled by Tele-Direct.

(b) Widespread Industry Reliance on Internal Sales Force

As part of his expert evidence on behalf of the respondents, Professor Trebilcock stated that any theory of the tying allegations in this case must explain four central facts. One of those facts is stated as:

> Almost all yellow pages directory publishers organize their selling functions in a similar way to TD i.e. by heavy reliance on an internal sales force.[184]

It is not in dispute that all North American publishers, whether telco-affiliated or independent, rely heavily on their internal sales force. The Director has, however, brought forward evidence indicating that where the line is drawn between accounts that are open to agency competition because they qualify for commission and those which are exclusive to the internal sales force differs from publisher to publisher. The Director further argues that Tele-Direct's current commissionability rule is one of the strictest in North America.

The respondents submit that Tele-Direct's national account definition simply represents the transposition of the YPPA national account definition (also referred to as the YPPA "A" account definition) into the Canadian context. The YPPA by-laws provide that, as a minimum standard, an advertising program involving two or more publishers, 20 or more directories, and at least three states with 30 percent of the advertising revenue outside the primary state is considered national Yellow Pages advertising. Publisher members must accept advertising meeting those criteria as national. They are not precluded from accepting advertising meeting less stringent criteria as national. Each publisher decides on the level of compensation for advertising it defines as national.

While the terms of the YPPA definition are similar to those used by Tele-Direct in its definition, the evidence was that the effect of applying the definition in Canada is very different. Where there are about 6,000 directories in the United States, there are only about 350 in Canada. Tele-Direct is one of only seven or eight publishers in Canada and controls 70 percent of Canadian Yellow Pages publishing revenue. Tele-Direct's definition incorporates a minimum of two provinces instead of three states. Tele-Direct requires 20 percent of the published revenue outside the primary publisher's territory; the YPPA definition requires 30 percent of the revenue but outside the primary state. Under the YPPA definition, as long as two publishers are involved, there could be minimum revenue in the second publisher's territory. According to the agency witnesses, the 20 percent requirement is especially onerous given that Tele-Direct's territory includes the two most populous provinces. Overall, commission is currently paid on 13 to 14 percent of total directory advertising revenues in the United States as opposed to seven to eight percent of total revenues in Canada.

Although it is true that an account wholly within a large state such as California (with a larger population than all of Canada) might not be commissionable under the "A" account definition, according to the President of the YPPA, most publishers, including telco affiliates (RBOCs) pay commission on regional accounts, called "B" accounts. For example, the evidence was that Pacific Bell has a commissionable account which could include accounts wholly within the state of California.

In Canada, with one exception, all the telco publishers require advertising to be placed in two publishers' territories to qualify for commission at 25 percent,[185] usually with a minimum of 20 percent of revenues required outside the dominant publisher's territory. Effectively, this generally means that two provinces will also be required.[186] Since the other publishers have much smaller territories than Tele-Direct, their "two publishers" requirement is easier to meet.

Professor Trebilcock places great stress on the fact that independent publishers also rely heavily on an internal sales force because "many of these directories do not remotely possess any market power (however measured) in many of the directory markets in which they operate."[187] Therefore, he concludes

> The stark and enormously significant implication of this fact is that the decision to vertically integrate advertising selling functions clearly has nothing to do with market power. It must be explained entirely by the kind of efficiency considerations . . . outlined earlier in this opinion.[188]

[185] AGT Directory Limited only pays 25 percent on foreign numbers (as do all publishers) but pays 15 percent on any other advertising, including local accounts.

[186] Except for Edmonton Tel: advertising in Calgary and Edmonton would qualify under its rule.

[187] Supra note 184 at para. 27.

[188] Ibid.

Based on the evidence from White and DSP, we know that, in Canada at least, despite the fact that they offer commission on all accounts brought to them by CMRs,[189] the independents rely heavily on their internal sales force. The evidence that we have is that an internal sales force is a necessity for their survival rather than a choice based on efficiency considerations. Despite the liberal commission rules, they receive a small proportion of their overall revenues from agents and must rely on their own sales force for the bulk of their revenues.[190] In fact, recruiting an effective sales force is one of the hurdles a new publisher has to overcome.

While we agree that the independent publishers are unlikely to have market power, we are reluctant to conclude solely on the basis of the fact that they rely on an internal sales force that the "bundling" of sales and service by a publisher with market power is competitively benign.[191] We would likely be willing to draw that conclusion if we had evidence that the markets in which independents are operating, particularly in the United States, are competitive. If they were, yet most sales by publishers were on a bundled basis, that would be a very strong indication that efficiency was dictating the bundling and that there was only one product at issue.

[189] The evidence of Mr. Lewis of White was that White pays commission (in the United States and presumably also in Canada) on any account submitted by a CMR without restriction. The commission rate is 23 percent for established directories and 30 percent for newer directories. Likewise, DSP pays CMRs commission on any account.

[190] E.g., for White: eight percent of revenues in U.S. placed by agents; in Canada, one-half of one percent of revenues placed by agents.

[191] In circumstances where the dominant players are telco publishers and those publishers only pay commission on national and regional accounts, it follows that agents are active mainly in those sectors. They are not set up to service local accounts even if independents pay commission on those. Thus, because the dominant players do not want to use agents for local accounts, independents cannot, even if they wanted to, rely solely on agents but must use an internal sales force. Professor Slade is of the view that agents would tend to serve this market over time if the major publishers changed their policies and provided a broader market. Further, as the independent is usually the newcomer into a market dominated by the telco publisher, agents are reluctant to recommend a new directory, even for national and regional accounts where at least some of the major players pay commission, until it has proven itself.

The only evidence we have, however, is that those markets, like Tele-Direct's market, are dominated by the telco publisher. It was pointed out to us by the respondents that most RBOCs' prices are even higher than Tele-Direct's. We also referred in the section dealing with Tele-Direct's market power to testimony that indicates that American telco publishers also have sufficient profits to subsidize local telephone service. We are, therefore, not satisfied that widespread reliance on an internal sales force across publishers, including independents, dictates a single product on efficiency grounds because it may be a function of telco dominance in all markets.

(c) Agents' Views

The implication of finding and prohibiting the tied selling alleged by the Director is that agents would, one way or another, be permitted to offer their services to a wider range of accounts below the level of "national" accounts currently considered by Tele-Direct as commissionable. Professor Trebilcock is of the view that agents are not interested in servicing smaller accounts.

In interviews with agents that the Director's staff undertook in investigations prior to filing the application, the agents stated that they were not interested in the smaller accounts. As reported by Professor Trebilcock, who had access to the summary of the interviews prepared by the Director's counsel, the smallest accounts that any of the agents expressed an interest in ranged from those spending from $10,000 to $50,000 per year on Yellow Pages. A lower limit of $10,000 excludes almost 98 percent of all customers and approximately 70 percent of total revenue but would represent a substantial increase over the amount of revenue currently commissionable.

When giving evidence the agents took a different position and stated that they would be interested in all customers but would handle the business differently. The only reasonable interpretation is that the early answers reflected the agents views given their current method of operation. Their answers when giving evidence, in contrast, reflected the willingness of businesspeople to consider any reasonable opportunity to turn a profit, including considering the possibilities of paddling into uncharted waters. On the whole, we regard their views during the interviews as the more reliable. Because the agents apparently have little or no interest in servicing smaller accounts, we infer that they regard themselves, at least in their current setup, as at a cost disadvantage vis-à-vis Tele-Direct in dealing with these smaller customers.

Therefore, we agree with Professor Trebilcock that agents are not interested in servicing smaller accounts, although neither he in his evidence nor the Tribunal at this stage can be more explicit than having regard to the $10,000 to $50,000 range about what constitutes "smaller" accounts.

(d) Justification for Tele-Direct's Practice of Bundling

Professor Trebilcock attempted the most complete explanation and justification of Tele-Direct's practice of bundling space and services over most advertiser accounts. Initially, he divides what the Director has alleged to be advertising services into selling effort and consulting advice regarding the advertisement (artwork, placement, etc.). He states that selling effort cannot be priced on its own as customers will not pay for a "sales pitch"; it must be bundled with either space or consulting advice. The overall problem facing Tele-Direct (and other publishers) is to exercise control over those selling its product and to motivate agents or internal staff, as the case may be, to provide an optimal mix of selling effort and consulting advice from Tele-Direct's viewpoint. The Tribunal agrees that there is what is known as a "principal/agent" problem at work here. The issue is the nature of the problem and whether Tele-Direct's viewpoint is the only relevant one or should be the operative one.

Professor Trebilcock divides his explanation concerning Tele-Direct's approach to commissionability into three categories: small advertisers, larger local advertisers (which presumably includes regional advertisers) and currently commissionable advertisers (larger national or regional accounts involving multiple publishers). We have accepted that it is likely that small advertisers have no separate demand for advertising services. New advertisers, with few exceptions, coincide with small advertisers. For the sake of completeness we continue with the "efficiency" or cost-side evidence for all advertisers including small advertisers.

Professor Trebilcock's primary explanation of why Tele-Direct prefers to rely on its own resources for servicing small customers is that it is highly likely that it is cheaper for Tele-Direct to service small customers internally. His view is that the most effective method of selling advertising to these customers, probably because of significant economies of scale, appears to entail "`blanketing' directory territories in concentrated time blocks on a sequential basis" as Tele-Direct currently does. It is, however, not self-evident that this approach results in lower per unit costs than using smaller numbers of representatives who take a longer time to do a canvass. There is simply no evidence.

Another factor cited by Professor Trebilcock that is likely to lead to attenuated efforts by CMRs regarding small advertisers is the possibility that advertisers would engage in opportunistic conduct. The difficulty Professor Trebilcock foresees is that once the successful selling effort has been made, which the customer is unwilling to pay for, the customer is in a position to ask for, and other sellers are in a position to offer, a discount because they need only provide the consulting advice and not the selling effort, for which the first seller will be uncompensated. He believes that this problem is most acute for small advertisers, including first-time buyers. For large advertisers, selling effort constitutes a smaller percentage of overall advertising services. In addition, larger customers might have more difficulty engaging in opportunistic conduct because they are more likely to become known to agents. Tele-Direct can avoid this "free riding" by small advertisers by bundling space and selling effort. This is a version of the free riding argument often made in defence of vertical arrangements such as resale price maintenance which may be valid in some circumstances. There is, however, absolutely no evidence that it applies on the facts in the instant case.

Professor Trebilcock also points to a divergence of interest between Tele-Direct and agents which leads to an incentive compatibility problem should Tele-Direct use agents to service small advertisers, otherwise referred to as the "completeness externality". This externality, compounded by advertiser opportunism as explained above, is also the principal explanation advanced for why Tele-Direct prefers to provide services internally for "larger local" advertisers. As Professor Trebilcock recognizes, a simple cost difference cannot explain the reluctance of Tele-Direct to offer a commission on these accounts as the agents would not service them, even if commission were offered, if they were at a cost disadvantage to Tele-Direct.

According to Professor Trebilcock, there is a positive correlation between the "completeness" of a directory and the value that users place on it. Advertisers are willing to spend on a directory to the extent that the users find it valuable. But since each individual advertiser benefits only minimally from their own contribution to completeness, they are unwilling to pay for this effect. Tele-Direct, as the publisher, is able to internalize this externality over the longer term (the more "complete" and useful the directory, the more valuable the advertising space and the higher rates it can charge).

While there is no doubt that publishers value "completeness" for the reasons stated, it is largely an undefined term. There is no explanation in Professor Trebilcock's evidence, for example, of why a directory is in any sense more complete when there are paid bold listings rather than unpaid listings in ordinary type. Nor is there any adequate explanation of why users would value more advertisements in colour or larger advertisements unless they provide more information. There were also indications from the evidence that there can be too much advertising from the viewpoint of users. In large centres such as Montreal and Toronto, it has been necessary to split directories because of their size. Thus, while it is indisputable that directories must have sufficient representation by advertisers so that the directory is considered to be a useful reference, it is far from clear that all increases in advertising contribute to this objective. This point is critical because if Tele-Direct is encouraging increased selling effort beyond the range where further advertising contributes to completeness in any meaningful positive way, then the ability of Tele-Direct to sell additional advertising through its own sales force cannot be assumed to be socially beneficial in providing users with additional value.

Professor Trebilcock is of the view that the completeness externality leads to two results. First, Tele-Direct has a stronger incentive than CMRs to recruit new accounts; CMRs will focus most of their efforts on attracting existing advertisers from Tele-Direct or other CMRs. Second, while Tele-Direct is interested in retaining customers over the long term in order to enhance completeness, CMRs will be more concerned with immediate returns. Thus, when Tele-Direct recommends the, in Professor Trebilcock's words, "optimal" advertising package, the CMR will have an incentive to convince the advertiser that a less expensive or "sub-optimal" package is equally useful in order to recruit the customer. The risk of dissatisfaction on the part of the customer is increased; the customer may stop using Yellow Pages because of informational imperfections which make it difficult to distinguish between weakness in the medium and bad advice.

Further, Professor Trebilcock is of the view that it would be difficult for Tele-Direct to structure incentives to CMRs to induce them to sell a "socially optimal" quantity and quality of advertising by way of contract because of significant transactions costs. On the other hand, Tele-Direct can and does motivate its internal sales force "to sell and advise clients to purchase optimal packages by offering training, encouragement, screening of advertising sales by managers, internal promotions, awards, a team ethic, etc."[192]

The Tribunal is inclined to agree with Professor Trebilcock that it is probably easier for Tele-Direct to create incentives that motivate its own representatives to sell more than agents. The more important question is whether leaving Tele-Direct the unfettered choice of when to use agents and when to service internally leads to a truly "socially optimal" result. We have already indicated some doubts that the unrestricted pursuit of completeness, while it may be in Tele-Direct's interest, is wholly in the public interest or "socially optimal".

The Director argues that Tele-Direct chooses to retain services in-house because this allows it to motivate its sales force to exploit better the "information asymmetry" it enjoys vis-à-vis its customers or, in other words, to "oversell". He submits that Tele-Direct's incentive structure results in its sales representatives convincing advertisers to buy more than they would if they were provided with balanced information or the possibility of obtaining an alternative viewpoint from another service supplier. Witnesses stated that they did not regard the advice from Tele-Direct's representatives as objective. We have acknowledged that, as a general matter, the effectiveness of marginal dollars spent on advertising is difficult to determine. This leaves customers somewhat vulnerable to the advice they receive. The incentive structure for Tele-Direct's representatives makes the Director's argument that they are motivated to "oversell" at least plausible. To the extent that the Tele-Direct representatives succeed in selling "too much" advertising to one advertiser, the effect would multiply throughout a heading, since, as the evidence revealed, many firms base their Yellow Pages expenditures on that of their competitors (the "prisoner's dilemma"). We, therefore, cannot accept Professor Trebilcock's critical assumption that the advertising a Tele-Direct representative sells is necessarily socially optimal.

With regard to recruiting new customers, we accept that a publisher would want to ensure that there was a thorough and efficient canvass of potential new customers, in the sense that all were approached and there was no duplication of effort. Since the prospective new Yellow Pages advertisers are easily identifiable from business telephone subscriber information in the hands of the publisher, it makes sense to assign them to specific persons rather than creating a "free for all". This can be done on an individual basis, by territory, or any other method that avoids multiple contact of the same prospect by different persons. The assignment is key; if customers are assigned it makes little difference whether the persons making the contact are employees or outside agents.

Professor Trebilcock also believes that a reason why Tele-Direct does not make larger local customers commissionable is that agents would curry favour with customers by recommending less than the "optimal" amount of advertising (or the amount that a Tele-Direct representative would recommend), with long-term detrimental effects, because they are primarily interested in immediate returns. While Tele-Direct may worry about the advice being given by agents, it is far from clear that the quality of their advice is a cause for concern with respect to satisfying the needs of consumers. The facts before us do not support Professor Trebilcock's view that agents tend to take a short-term view. When the actual relationships between customers and agents and customers and the internal sales force are considered, it is the former who have the long-term relationship. Until recently most Tele-Direct representatives, unlike agents, predominantly had a short-run relationship with customers. Professor Trebilcock also acknowledged that agents might be reluctant to be perceived as pushing current sales because customers might be inclined to switch agents. Tele-Direct's representatives do not have this concern because customers do not have freedom of choice. Much of the representatives' livelihood depends on increased sales to existing customers whereas the employees of the agents are on salary and receive no additional compensation for increased sales to existing clients.[193] Moreover, there is no evidence that agents' clients have tended to cancel advertising for any reason.

In Professor Trebilcock's view, the fact that Tele-Direct chooses to pay commission on multiple publisher accounts is evidence that Tele-Direct is motivated by efficiency considerations with respect to all its decisions regarding commissionability. Otherwise why would Tele-Direct choose to make any part of its sales commissionable? Professor Trebilcock interprets the fact that Tele-Direct pays commission on national accounts and that the bulk of sales to this segment is made by agents as proof that agents can more efficiently service this segment. While Professor Trebilcock believes that the tendency of agents to undersell and focus on existing advertisers and the possibility of opportunism are still present, the cost advantages of agents compensate for these weaknesses. These sophisticated advertisers are also better able to monitor whether they are being sold the "optimal" amount of advertising and the possibility of losing such a client effectively polices the agent. While the Director accepts that the agents are more efficient in servicing the commissionable segment, he disputes, as noted above, that agents in any circumstances sell "sub-optimal" amounts of advertising as defined by Tele-Direct's perspective. The Director takes issue with the view that Tele-Direct is more efficient in dealing with the rest of its customers. Detailed evidence on relative efficiency was placed before us and is the focus of the next section.

In summary, as indicated in the section on advertiser demand, we have accepted Professor Trebilcock's view that there is no separate demand for advertising services for "small" customers. With respect to those advertisers for which separate demand has been proven, called "larger local" advertisers by Professor Trebilcock, the Tribunal does not accept that either the completeness externality or the possibility of advertiser opportunism is supported on the evidence before us and, therefore, does not dictate that space and services are a single product with respect to those customers. The question of relative efficiency or cost advantages on the part of Tele-Direct with respect to servicing those advertisers will be addressed in detail in the next section.

(5) Comparative Profitability Studies: Agents/Internal Sales Force

The respondents have introduced evidence bearing on the comparative efficiency of Tele-Direct's representatives and agents to argue that the commissionability rules are, and always have been, efficiency based. The primary evidence is a comparative cost study dated 1995 created for these proceedings and entered through Michel Beauséjour, Tele-Direct's Vice-president of Finance. In addition, there are two other internal contribution-to-profit studies from 1974 and 1985, along with the descriptive evidence of Donald Richmond, Director of Manufacturing and Contract Administration for Tele-Direct, and Jan Rogers, Director of Corporate Methods and Support.

Before turning to a detailed discussion of the evidence it is necessary to consider its import with respect to the respondents' claim that its policies with respect to the payment of commission and the utilization of agents are dictated by efficiency considerations. While the studies referred to are relevant to the respondents' position, there are very important caveats that seriously weaken the conclusions that can be drawn from the evidence. Firstly, in an ordinary "make or buy" decision what is being compared is only the cost of producing a particular product in-house or buying it. This basic requirement (of looking only at cost) is violated when a comparison is made between the contribution to Tele-Direct's profit by the internal sales force and agents, i.e., revenue considerations enter.

More importantly, the products (i.e., the provision of services to commissionable and non-commissionable accounts) being compared in the Raheja study from 1974 and the 1995 study are very different. In fact, these studies are well described by the comparison of "apples and bananas". It is difficult to see what can be derived from the exercise of comparing the contribution to profit of agents and Tele-Direct's representatives who each deal with an entirely different set of customers. A significant percentage of the non-commissionable accounts are dealt with entirely over the telephone. Where representatives meet with customers, the customers' needs, for the most part, cannot be compared with the large multi-directory customers who rely on agents. What is the point of comparing the contribution to profit of agents, who are acknowledged to be relatively effective in serving complex "national" customers, with the contribution to profit of Tele-Direct's representatives in serving customers, many of whose requirements are relatively simple? While the comparison in 1985 between NAMs/NARs and agents might be considered to be a close, although not an exact comparison, the data are not current and not particularly detailed.

Overall, we have found these profitability studies not to be supportive of the respondents' position. The early studies are out-of-date (and Raheja is of limited relevance because of the difference in products being compared and an error in it), a critical point when considering current efficiency. At numerous points in the 1995 study, the differences in costs can be traced to differences in the characteristics of the customers being served rather than to any possible difference in the relative costs of agents and Tele-Direct's personnel. It also suffers from bias in favour of Tele-Direct because of its time frame and from methodological weaknesses.

For completeness, we will comment on the studies to further explain why, in our opinion, they are not reliable for the purpose advanced by the respondents, that is, to demonstrate that Tele-Direct's internal sales force is more efficient than agents.

(a) Raheja Study (1974) [194]

This study was prepared as part of a review of Tele-Direct's policy towards advertising agencies, including agencies specializing in Yellow Pages, which were a relatively recent phenomenon at the time, with a view to determining a commission payment. The study itself notes that the system of classifying accounts at Tele-Direct made it difficult to calculate profitability of the various components. Nevertheless, Mr. Bourke was of the view that management at the time placed sufficient confidence in the results of the study to make decisions on the basis of it. The study showed that in the "local market", defined as all sales within Tele-Direct's own directories, agency sales were less profitable. Although there is no evidence of the weight that the study played in the decision, in 1976 Tele-Direct sharply restricted the commissionable market by moving to the eight-market rule.

The odd thing about the exercise is that, taken on its own terms, there is an obvious error in the study: the commission to agents is counted both as a reduction from revenue and as an expense. When the error is corrected the comparative ratio is somewhat better for the agents than it is for Tele-Direct's own representatives. The respondents take the position that the existence of the error is irrelevant; management acted on the information, proving that Tele-Direct was motivated by efficiency considerations and not by any other motive. While the study may suggest that Tele-Direct was at least interested in efficiency at the time, it is peculiar that so simple an error was not easily immediately detected by those supposedly basing decisions on it. In the circumstances, and having regard to the many qualifications in the study, the existence and results of the study are not of assistance.

(b) Profitability Study: National Accounts - Selling (1985) [195]

This study deals with the contribution to profit of national accounts serviced by agencies and NAMs in 1983 and 1984. Agencies included specialized and regular agencies while the NAMs included one Tele-Direct sales representative who dealt with high revenue potential customers and another who dealt with low revenue potential customers.

The study was entered in the record during the cross-examination of Mr. Beauséjour. Although the bottom line contributions to profit were noted, there was no examination of the study with the witness other than to establish that the then prevailing methodology regarding the payment to Bell Canada was employed. Based on the description in the document the only costs that were specifically attributed to the agents and NAMs were agency commissions and so-called sales expenses. The latter included the salaries of sales personnel in the national accounts group but also the personnel who processed orders submitted by agents.[196] All other costs were allocated on the basis of the net revenues generated by each of the two channels.

For the combined eastern and western regions, the contribution to profit as a percentage of total revenues generated for the agents and NAMs in 1983 was 18.7 percent and 17 percent respectively. In 1984 the contribution was 20 percent for both. While there are caveats,[197] the important point that emerges from the study is that Tele-Direct had no reason to believe at that time that it was less costly to rely on its own representatives who dealt with customers with the same or similar characteristics as those served by agents. The respondents did not bring to our attention any further study or any evidence whatsoever of internal consideration of relative efficiency leading up to the 1993 change in the commissionability rules. The only documentation on the record, and the evidence of Mr. Mitchell who was intimately involved in the preparation leading up to the change, focuses on effects on number of accounts and revenues that would be available to agents or the internal sales force under various scenarios.

(c) Profitability Study (1995) [198]

Towards the end of the hearing counsel for the respondents introduced through Mr. Beauséjour a document comparing the relative contribution to profit in 1994 of agents and [196] Total salaries were allocated to CANYPS, agencies, NAMs and GSF.

[197] To anticipate questions that might arise as a result of the discussion of Tele-Direct's latest contribution to profit study, the same percentage cost of customer service (the payment to Bell Canada) and "melt" is used for both agents and NAMs. There is some tipping of the scales in favour of agents with respect to the cost of customer service since it is applied net of commission in the case of agents. On the other hand, no account is taken of the fact that agents pay up-front and the customers of NAMs pay over a year.

[198] Confidential exhibit CR-185.

the internal sales force, including the national accounts group. The document was admitted over the strenuous objections of counsel for the Director. During discovery, Tele-Direct provided a cost of sales figure for its internal sales force of 12.3 percent of revenue. The basis for that figure was explored through detailed follow-up questions and further explanation. There was no indication from the respondents that a second study was being undertaken by Tele-Direct, and that it contained results that were different from those that had been given on oral discovery and in follow-up answers. On December 4, 1995, counsel for the respondents produced the second study to counsel for the Director.

While we found the timing of the production and, in fact, counsel for the respondents' conduct of this whole matter of the new study to be, to say the least, unfortunate, we admitted the document while allowing the Director further discovery and preparation time. Despite the inappropriate timing, we were of the view that the Tribunal should not forego receiving information that could have an important bearing on the case and which apparently went to the heart of the respondents' position that the bundling of space and services by Tele-Direct was dictated by efficiency considerations.

(i) Unrepresentative Timing of Study

Apart from the general difficulty, already highlighted, of comparisons being made between the servicing of very different types of accounts, there is another serious defect in the recent study. The period for which the study is done almost certainly creates a bias in favour of the internal sales force vis-à-vis the agents because of the state of progress of certain improvements Tele-Direct was making to its process. The study fails to take account of the fact that the application of technology is in a period of transition. While improvements favouring the internal sales force have been put in place, those favouring agents are on the immediate horizon. Despite this, the latter have been ignored in the study.

The system that Tele-Direct was putting in place in 1994 with respect to the publishing process was much more efficient for the internal sales force than the system that it replaced. More specifically, a computer system was introduced that allowed the electronic storage of advertisements, including finished artwork. This means that advertisements that renew without change, about 70 percent of all advertisements, are already in the computer. This is contrasted by Mr. Richmond with the previous system:

> . . . In the old system, when we used an outside supplier [for pre-press functions, e.g., layout, paste-up], if we got an ad from last year, we may or may not have found that artwork because it was kept in a filing cabinet somewhere. It meant that the next year we had to have an artist redraw the artwork to match what was in the book before. This was very inefficient. We had to store logos all over the place so that everybody could get hold of it.[199]

There are also savings when there are changes to the advertisement. Under the new system, minor changes can easily be made on the electronic version of the advertisement.

Although agents submit their advertisements "camera ready" (as "veloxes"), they must be scanned into its system by Tele-Direct. If there is no change in an advertisement from the previous year then it follows that it should be possible to avoid re-scanning the advertisement, as it is already in the system, so some savings should be possible. Mr. Richmond did not know the percentage of agents' advertisements that are repeated without change but he did state that all CMR advertisements are scanned, implying they are scanned even if there is no change. It is not clear why Tele-Direct does this.

Thus, until recently and certainly when commission was further restricted in 1993, the costs that Tele-Direct would have experienced for the internal sales force were those that existed prior to the introduction of the new system. Under the old system the fact that agents were submitting complete advertisements meant that the cost comparison in the publishing part of creating a directory was far more favourable to agents than is presently the case. According to Mr. Richmond the cost of implementing the new system is $26 million and the annual savings are of the order of $12 million, which would have made previous publishing costs for internally-generated advertisements almost twice as high as they were in 1994.

Using current data disadvantages the agents with respect to the near future. There would be no need to scan agents' advertisements if the advertisements could be transmitted electronically. Currently, newspapers and magazines have systems in place for this purpose. The Yellow Pages publishers are moving in this direction, according to Mr. Logan, the President of the YPPA. He foresees this capability on the VAN system, the electronic YPPA order system, in two to three years. The pay-off would be a smoother flow with lower costs for publishers and CMRs and a reduction in errors.

The other area within publishing where change can be anticipated is in how Tele-Direct receives orders over the VAN. Currently a clerk in Montreal and one in Toronto take the information off the VAN as hard copy. After the order has been dealt with in this form, it is eventually re-entered into Tele-Direct's system. Ms. Rogers stated that Tele-Direct had hoped to be able to transfer all orders received through VAN directly into the contract data base without re-keying but this did not happen. According to Mr. Logan of the YPPA, "[t]he bigger publishers, both independents and utilities, now are developing and I think probably most of them -- not everybody, most of them -- can take the information directly off the VAN and run it into their systems without re-keying".[200] For some reason Tele-Direct is lagging behind other North American publishers in taking advantage of the VAN, the system for which agents made significant investments and for which, in part, Tele-Direct agreed to raise commission rates from 15 to 25 percent over a two-year period. While there have been reductions in cost in processing agents' orders since the movement to VAN, according to Ms. Rogers these appear to be less related to the VAN than to internal reorganization and, therefore, this confirms that Tele-Direct has not taken full advantage of the VAN.

For all these reasons, we conclude that the study does not recognize the technological transition in publishing Yellow Pages and that failure to do so favours the internal sales force over the agents.

(ii) Methodological Weaknesses

There are significant methodological problems with this study. The study is based on a "causal model". Costs were analyzed by Tele-Direct personnel to determine whether particular costs would be experienced in the absence of either agents or the internal sales force. If the answer was in the affirmative those costs were assigned to the group that caused the costs in question. Costs that could not be identified as caused by one or the other channel were treated as common costs and allocated to the two channels on the basis of relative revenue. This overall methodology was submitted to Tele-Direct's auditing firm for confirmation that the approach was sound. All cost assignments and allocations were performed by Tele-Direct personnel and the results were not audited by an outside firm. The testing of the results was done only through discovery and cross-examination during the hearing.

In the final result, the internal sales force's contribution to profit is shown to be approximately 13.5 percentage points higher than that of the agents. If we ignore for the moment the complications created by the difference in types of accounts serviced by each, this result would mean that in order for the agents to be competitive with the internal sales force the commission rate paid to them would have to be nine percent rather than the average of 22.5 percent that in fact is paid to them (22.5 less 13.5).

We turn first to the method used to allocate common costs. It is, in our view, valid to allocate these costs on the basis of revenue where the common costs can be considered to be related to the level of sales. This is true for an area such as manufacturing the directories, where the costs depend on the volume of advertisements and it may make little difference whether the advertisements are generated by the internal sales force or agents. This approach to allocating common costs is far less justifiable when the costs in question relate to personnel, e.g., the personnel department itself. This is important because sales representatives and all their support personnel are internal to Tele-Direct while the agents and their support personnel are not. In areas like these it would be more appropriate to allocate costs based on the relative proportion of employees identified as devoted to servicing the internal sales force and agents. Mr. Beauséjour admitted that this was an equally valid approach as using relative sales and that either method could have been used.

An analysis of each of the common cost areas to see whether it was more appropriate to use one or the other weighting procedure would have produced a more objective and defensible result. We note that Tele-Direct did depart from its approach to allocating common costs on the basis of revenue in at least one instance, which also happened to work in its favour.[201]

In the study Tele-Direct has violated its own methodology for attributing costs on a causal basis in a way that increases the costs of dealing with agents. As noted earlier, the current system of storing advertisements in a computer is in the process of being introduced. The cost of duplication between the old and new systems which would, on the stated approach, be attributed to the internal sales force, was treated in the study as a "transition" cost and was subtracted from the total internal costs. Similar costs related to moving to the VAN system were, however, attributed to the agents. To be even-handed, they too should have been considered "transition" costs and subtracted from the agents' costs. Further, it is questionable that the large investment in the new system for dealing with internal orders should simply be ignored, as was done in the study, rather than amortized over several years. The effect of not doing so is also to understate internal costs.

Counsel for the Director questioned the validity of the cost attribution in the study in several areas where a relatively small percentage of costs was taken to be caused by internal sales force even though the internal sales force and its direct support account for 61 percent of total employees. With respect to the costs of the Personnel and Benefits department, Tele-Direct concluded that there would only be a saving of about 16 percent from eliminating the internal sales force and thus only 16 percent of the total cost was attributed to the internal sales force. Similarly, in the Labour Relations department the saving assumed was only 30 percent. In defence of these decisions, Mr. Beauséjour explained that there were certain basic requirements that would have to be maintained to service the remaining personnel even if 61 percent of the personnel were eliminated. In effect, this approach treats the present organizational chart as inviolate. We question whether Tele-Direct would approach such a massive change on an "avoidable cost" basis.

The Director's principal challenge to this study relates to the method of dealing with the "cost of customer service" ("CCS"), the 40 percent of net sales revenue that is paid to Bell Canada. In all past studies of profitability, CCS was treated as a cost. It was also so treated throughout the many months when there were successive drafts and refinements of the 1995 study, almost until the moment that the study was entered in these proceedings. As a result of the penultimate amendment to the figure for CCS, the contribution to profit of the agents changed from being slightly less than the internal sales force to almost five percent more than the internal sales force.[202] Subsequent to that, Mr. Beauséjour decided that there was no reason to treat CCS as a cost since Tele-Direct and Bell were part of the same corporate entity and it makes little difference whether Tele-Direct made payments to Bell in the form of CCS or as dividends. Despite the apparently fortuitous timing of this realization, we accept that the point is valid. It is one thing for Bell to insist that CCS be included as a cost in order to impose market discipline on Tele-Direct but it is another matter when a study of the relative costs of using agents and internal staff is being performed. It then makes better sense to treat Bell and Tele-Direct on a consolidated basis. This in itself is not a methodological weakness.

However, the same reasoning means that the Tele-Direct study should have taken into account the benefits accruing to Tele-Direct/Bell from the fact that agents pay up-front for advertisements whereas customers of the internal sales force pay monthly. Mr. Beauséjour recognized this benefit in cross-examination but it does not appear in the study. As discussed [202] The reason why CCS has such a large impact is that under Tele-Direct's contract with Bell Canada the revenue from agents who are billed by Tele-Direct rather than Bell are not subject to the payment of CCS. Thus the average payment of CCS is much lower in the case of agents than of internal sales force.

earlier, the difference in timing of payment amounts to interest for about half a year, an appreciable difference of three to six percent per year.

(iii) Particular Examples of Problems Arising from the Difference in Products

The respondents advance this study as evidence which they say proves the different, and greater, "interface" costs that they incur when processing orders originating with external agents as compared to the costs of processing orders originating internally. As we indicated at the outset, it is extremely difficult, in conducting a study of this nature, to distinguish the genuine interface costs, costs that arise because Tele-Direct is dealing with agents rather than the internal sales force, from costs that arise from the nature of the advertising, and thus are not clearly related to the channel submitting the order and are not true interface costs. This problem permeates the study and, thus, it cannot prove relative interface costs in its present form as the respondents maintain it can.

That is not to say that we think the problems arising from the difference in the products, unlike the unrepresentative timing and methodological weaknesses already identified, consistently operate in the respondents' favour by lowering internal costs and raising agents' costs. As detailed below, this is sometimes the case; sometimes the reverse is true.

We turn to some examples. One relates to the interpretation and treatment of credits to customers as a result of Tele-Direct's errors. Customers using the internal sales force were reimbursed 1.3 percent of gross revenues as a result of errors made by sales representatives or during the publishing process. The rate of reimbursement to agents as a result of publishing error was 3.5 percent. This difference in the rate of Tele-Direct's errors is a factor in the overall lower contribution to profit of agents.

In the notes to the study it is stated that the difference is due to the fact that orders from agents are handled by more people, that is, CMR personnel and the national accounts publishing group of Tele-Direct. It is, however, irrelevant how many people in the CMR handle orders because only errors attributable to Tele-Direct are reimbursed. One possibility that may explain part of the difference in error rates is the greater knowledge and, perhaps, incentive that agents have to discover and complain about errors compared with the customers of the internal sales force. Mr. Beauséjour admitted this was a possibility. While this explanation would probably not change Tele-Direct's view that the higher reimbursement is a "cost", it would hardly be a reflection of lower efficiency in the use of agents compared to the internal sales force.

On the other hand, Ms. Rogers stated that the higher error rate in processing agents' orders was due to the larger, more complex advertising programmes submitted by agents. This suggests that the error rates are related to the nature of the advertising programmes rather than the channel through which they flow. To the extent that the principal reason for the difference is the difference in the type of accounts serviced by each channel, it cannot be concluded that the difference in error rate is a cost of dealing with agents.

The comparatively large error rate in dealing with agents' advertisements also shows up in other costs attributed to dealing with agents. A Tele-Direct employee checks the advertisements after the directories have been printed, a duplication of effort since the agents also verify their advertisements. In addition, there are the resources expended in error negotiations with the agents.

Apart from the difference in the size of advertising programmes mentioned by Ms. Rogers, we also know about one other respect in which there is a significant difference in the content of advertisements submitted by the internal sales force and agents. Approximately 80 percent of "trade-mark" advertisements are handled by agents. Three Tele-Direct clerks within the department which processes agents' orders are assigned to checking a proposed trade-mark advertisement to ensure it has been authorized by the owner of the trade-mark. This is a cost assigned totally to agents that depends on the nature of the advertisement rather than on the channel dealing with the advertisement.

In a related area, that of bad debts, the study may, in fact, underestimate the comparative cost of dealing with agents as opposed to the internal sales force. Over the years there is a regular, although fluctuating, percentage of unpaid bills to customers serviced internally. Until recently Tele-Direct has not had the same experience with agents. Mr. Beauséjour noted that Tele-Direct is currently owed money by an agent but no figure for non-collection from agents was included in the study. The area of "melt", bad debts along with discontinuance of phone service, which negatively affect the internal sales force contribution to profit, are probably due to the character of the clients served by the internal sales force rather than having anything to do with who is servicing them. This is consistent with the more "volatile" nature of smaller accounts commented on in internal Tele-Direct documents.

(d) Conclusion

The numerous points on which the various studies are subject to challenge confirm that they cannot be used for the purpose of comparing the relative efficiency of Tele-Direct's internal sales force and agents.

(6) Conclusion on Separate Products

The Director has alleged that tying is present over the entire demand spectrum, although counsel for the Director has, in effect, recognized that there may not be tying for "small" customers.[203] According to the respondents, there is no tying for any of their customers. The parties' positions represent the two extremes. The Director would have us order the respondents to offer space and services separately (whether by separate prices or expanded commission) to all their customers. The respondents would have us make no order, thus allowing them to offer the two separately only to those customers that they choose.

[203] By proposing the further alternative remedy of reverting to the pre-1975 commission rule.

We are of the view that neither extreme is supported by the evidence. What we see is that customers or advertisers are not homogeneous in terms of their need for services, or demand, or in terms of the costs involved in servicing them, or efficiency considerations. On the contrary, they are very heterogeneous, ranging from an individual running a small business from home and spending a minimal amount on a simple advertisement in the Yellow Pages to large corporations advertising in a multitude of directories. Our view is that we cannot decide whether there is one product or two products for all these different customers in a blanket fashion. We must engage in an exercise of "line drawing".

We are of the view that the evidence on demand for separately supplied advertising services and the evidence and arguments relating to efficiency of supply indicate that advertising space and advertising services are separate products with respect to "large local" and regional advertisers. They are a single product for "small" advertisers. The difficulty is in knowing how reasonably or workably to distinguish regional and, more problematic "large local", advertisers from "small" advertisers, whether in terms of number of markets (as in the eight-market rule) or dollars spent on Yellow Pages. In approaching this task we have been mindful that the Director bears a burden in this regard of justifying any remedy granted. To the extent that the evidence and argument have left the matter unresolved, it behooves us to be cautious in our conclusions.

We know that in the current commissionable market, including grandfathered accounts, where advertisers have a choice, they overwhelmingly choose agents. We have found that demand extends well below the 1993 "national" definition and below the eight-market definition of commissionability.

The differences in the constituents of demand between the relatively smaller advertisers that employ the services of a consultant and those of larger, multi-directory advertisers that use agents or would use them if their accounts were commissionable are notable. The needs of the latter are more complex. In addition to advice and creative services, most require help in administration and in assuring uniformity of message. We infer that the intensity of demand, as measured by their willingness to pay, year after year, for these services by way of extra advertising or issue billing, is greater for larger customers that have multi-dimensional needs.

We turn to cost considerations to focus further on the appropriate dividing line. We have concluded that agents' interest, presumably driven by their view of their comparative efficiency vis-à-vis Tele-Direct, is primarily in customers with a minimum size ranging from $10,000 to $50,000 in annual expenditures on Yellow Pages advertising. This alone would dictate raising the bar for any unbundling of space and services to a minimum of $10,000.[204]

While the evidence that at least some independent publishers are willing to pay commission on any business brought in by agents could be interpreted to mean that it would be efficient to unbundle across the entire demand spectrum, we are not comfortable going that far. It is far from clear that these publishers are guided by the relative efficiency of agents and in-house staff in servicing customers since for the most part their market position requires them to rely heavily on in-house staff despite their liberal commission rules. Their policy on commission could as easily be reflective of their desire to attract additional demand as of the relative efficiency of agents and in-house staff.

[204] We are referring to monetary amounts here because that is the way the evidence came in. Other criteria, such as number of markets, are more informative and other evidence was presented in that form. We attempt to relate the two measures below.

The approach of the large American publishers associated with telcos is to bundle space and services for all accounts smaller than those classified as national accounts or, for those who use a "B" account definition, for accounts smaller than regional accounts. We are not satisfied, however, that the publishers in question operate in competitive markets and that their choice of a dividing line is necessarily efficiency driven. As a result, we conclude that while unbundling of national and "B" accounts by them is probably efficiency driven, we cannot say that bundling for the balance of their accounts is motivated by efficiency and is conclusive on the dividing line for one versus two products.

Tele-Direct's studies are not helpful in drawing conclusions with respect to relative efficiencies of agents and Tele-Direct's employees along the demand spectrum. What we do know is that the eight-market rule was created by Tele-Direct primarily to capture more accurately "national" accounts than did the original 1958 definition and, at the time, Tele-Direct apparently considered this rule to be in its interest. Further, it is also clear that Tele-Direct did no studies and had no internal discussion of relative efficiencies when it further restricted commissionability in 1993. In doing so it ignored demand from existing eight-market customers (including those that were forced to buy unneeded advertising to qualify for eight-market status). Given that agents had served these types of customers over many years, that other publishers have "B" accounts, and that Tele-Direct at no time addressed the comparative efficiency of agents and the internal sales force for these accounts, there is no evidence of any efficiency offset which would lead us to conclude that space and services were not separate products for all the accounts within reach of the eight-market rule.

The eight-market rule was not specifically designed to deal with the needs of regional advertisers. This is obvious from the fact that there are seven markets in Ontario and six in Quebec. By almost any definition an advertiser covering all the markets in a province would be considered "regional" although such an advertiser would not be commissionable under the eight-market rule. Many of them likely managed to bring themselves within the rule with extra advertising. At a minimum, a firm that covers an entire province the size of Quebec or Ontario should qualify without more. We have no reason to doubt that the strong demand for advertising services from agents displayed by currently grandfathered eight-market accounts extends to advertisers that cover six markets, which would mean, for example, the entire province of Quebec. It is difficult to see that the efficiency implications for separately supplied advertising services at the six-market level are significantly different than for eight markets.

There is a rough relationship between the number of markets served and the amounts spent on Yellow Pages advertising. According to Tele-Direct's internal studies, the average amount spent on Yellow Pages advertising among customers served by Tele-Direct representatives but that were in the commissionable category under the eight-market rule was $54,000.[205] The comparable figures for accounts that would qualify under a seven-market and six-market rule, respectively, are $44,000 and $26,000. While some agents might find six-market accounts below their threshold of interest, the evidence is that they are within the range that some agents are willing to service, perhaps in anticipation of future growth.

We are cognizant that looking only on the demand side a case might be made for unbundling well below the six-market level. The evidence with regard to efficiency, principally the agents' views on accounts that they would like to service, does not support this conclusion. The Director suggests that there is no harm in unbundling across the board -- the market can be allowed to decide. If agents are more efficient, they will end up servicing the accounts. If Tele-Direct's internal sales force is more efficient, especially for smaller accounts, it will end up servicing those accounts. This implies a simple solution to a complex problem. In large measure, Tele-Direct is "the market" since the pricing of advertising services is inevitably its responsibility, whether it chooses to set commission rates for various types of accounts or to charge separately for the services of its internal sales force. Given widespread unbundling, Tele-Direct might well decide to set several different prices (or commission rates) for advertising services depending on the relative costs of servicing various categories of accounts. As the study on relative profitability showed, this would likely be a difficult task. It is not one that should be imposed without some greater certainty that there will be a significant overall benefit from the change. Therefore, we find that space and services constitute two products down to the six-market level and a single product below that level.

Addendum on Tying

At the outset of our discussion on tying, we indicated that another theory of the tying case was possible and we address that now. While some of the respondents' arguments and evidence are related, they did not adopt the precise approach which we outline hereunder.

One interpretation of the evidence is that advertising space and services are not demanded nor provided separately even in the existing commissionable market. Rather, larger advertisers either wish to purchase the bundle of space and services from Tele-Direct or from agents, in either case they are purchasing bundled space and services. Tele-Direct insists that the agents it deals with be accredited. The Director acknowledges that the placing of advertising in telephone directories is complex and accepts accreditation of agents by Tele-Direct. Indeed we do not necessarily envision advertisers purchasing space from Tele-Direct and providing their own services (except perhaps in the case of advertisers with accredited in-house advertising departments).

Following from the fact that accreditation means that only accredited services providers (including Tele-Direct's internal sales force) can place orders for space and they do so along with providing other services, it could be concluded that space and services must be bundled to be sold and that, therefore, they constitute a single product. Another way of viewing the matter would be that advertising space and services could be considered a single finished product on the basis that the real complaint respecting tying is not that advertisers are precluded from purchasing space and services separately, but that Tele-Direct has simply refused to supply unbundled space (i.e., at a discount) to agents which prevents them from selling to advertisers the same bundle of advertising space and services that is sold by Tele-Direct.

The evidence does not support this interpretation for the following reasons. First, we are satisfied that agents are not resellers of Tele-Direct's advertising space such that advertisers are purchasing the space from agents along with services. Agents do not carry an inventory of advertising space which they purchase from Tele-Direct for resale to advertisers. They assume no risks with respect to advertising space. Rather, when the agent's customer decides to purchase Yellow Pages advertising, the agent submits an order to Tele-Direct together with all other necessary information and Tele-Direct processes the order. The fact that Tele-Direct contracts with and bills the agents for the space, and treats the agents as the "buyer" in that sense, is not determinative of the relationship between the agent and the advertiser. We think that the fact that the agent does not have an inventory of space for resale is more consistent with the agent acting as an agent for the advertiser for the acquisition of space from Tele-Direct.[206] On this view of the evidence, the purchaser is not purchasing a bundle of space and services from the agent.

[206] Agents are agents for or "represent" advertisers in the sense that they place advertising on the advertisers' behalf but, as indicated earlier, agents have an independent interest and existence apart from advertisers in other aspects of service provision.

Second, the evidence does not indicate that advertisers wish to purchase advertising space from an agent as opposed to Tele-Direct. We think, all other things being equal, they are probably indifferent. However, there was evidence that they would prefer to pay Tele-Direct for space through monthly billing on their telephone bill rather than purchasing the space through agents on an issue billing basis. It is Tele-Direct that requires the latter arrangement, not the customer who demands it. This is not evidence that advertisers demand Yellow Pages space from agents as part of a service and space bundle. Nor have we been presented with evidence suggesting that efficiency would be adversely affected if Tele-Direct was to contract with and bill advertisers directly for space.

Finally, a purpose of the Competition Act is to encourage competition in order to provide consumers with competitive prices and product choice. There is evidence of demand for services from agents as opposed to Tele-Direct and efficiency considerations at the six-market level and above do not preclude facilitating such choice. For these reasons we have rejected this alternative interpretation of the evidence and have accepted that advertising space and advertising services constitute separate products.

E. TYING CONDITION

Having determined that there are separate products over at least part of the spectrum of Yellow Pages advertisers, we must now determine if those advertisers falling within that range were somehow "forced" to buy the products together rather than from separate sources. Since we have not found separate products below six markets, any references to the "local" market in this section refer only to that portion of the market from the current "national" definition down to six markets. In that range, where we have found separate products, we must establish that the two products were "tied" together as set out in subsection 77(1).

Paragraph 77(1)(a) provides one definition of tied selling. In essence, it is described as a practice whereby a supplier, as a "condition of" supplying the tying product to a customer, requires that customer to acquire another product from the supplier. Paragraph 77(1)(b) provides an alternative definition, the operative portion of which is that tied selling is a practice whereby a supplier "induces" a customer to meet the condition of acquiring another product from the supplier by offering to supply the tying product on more favourable terms and conditions if the customer agrees to acquire the second product.

The Director pleaded both the "requirement" or "condition" and the "inducement" in the application. The Director submits that, on non-commissionable accounts, the respondents require the customer to acquire their advertising services as a condition of supplying the space at a bundled price "and/or" the respondents induce customers to acquire their services by offering to supply space at no additional cost for the additional value if the customer also acquires their services.

It is undisputed that Tele-Direct does not segregate the charges for space and services in the non-commissionable market segment and that those "local" customers who get their services elsewhere than from Tele-Direct (for example, by using a consultant) or do not need any or some of the services, do not pay less or get a discount off the total price of their advertising. The Director submits that the effect of this is that "local" customers must buy space and services together from Tele-Direct; it is only economically viable to purchase services separately from an independent provider in the commissionable market. To do so in the non-commissionable market would require the customer to pay twice for services, once to Tele-Direct as part of the bundled price and once to the independent service provider that would actually provide the services. The Director argues that the effect of this is that it is either a "requirement" that both space and services be acquired from Tele-Direct or, perhaps the better fit on the facts, a compelling "inducement" to do so.

The Director points to evidence of the advertisers that recognize that if they use an independent service provider when commission is not available they will, in effect, be paying twice for services and this is why they stay with Tele-Direct despite dissatisfaction with the quality of service. Further, the Director emphasizes that Tele-Direct itself knew the value of this economic inducement and used claims that its services were "free" or included in the cost of the space to convince customers to choose its services.

The respondents advance a number of arguments relevant to the question of whether space and services are indeed tied together on the facts of this case. They argue that there is no "condition" involved because there is no contractual obligation to purchase services from Tele-Direct as local customers are free to acquire services from a CMR; however, Tele-Direct will not pay a commission on the account. They rely on the case of Ortho Diagnostic Systems, Inc. v. Abbott Laboratories, Inc.[207] for the proposition that it is not an antitrust violation to sell components as a package where the same items can be purchased separately but at greater cost. They argue that there are no more favourable terms and conditions offered to customers that take Tele-Direct's services over those that do not because there is only one set of terms and conditions in the local market -- the bundle.

We see no reason to conclude that the references in the section to "conditions" or even "terms and conditions" require that these be embodied in an explicit contractual document. As we understand this requirement, it is to determine that customers are effectively forced or coerced to take the two products, which have been determined to be separate products, from the supplier of the tying product rather than acquiring only the tying product from that source and getting the tied product from someone else. This obviously can occur where there is an explicit contractual requirement to that effect. It may, however, also be equally present where there is a discount or other advantage that constitutes an inducement to acquire the two from the same source. The "conditions" or coercion referred to in the section mean more than contractual terms; they may be economic conditions which have the effect of precluding choice of supplier. Whether customers actually do have an effective choice or not is a question of fact to be determined on the evidence before us, not of the legal nature of the purchase arrangement.

The Ortho case is of no assistance to the respondents. The case involved an application for a preliminary injunction by Ortho to prevent the implementation of a contract between the Council of Community Blood Centers and Abbott for a number of blood tests. Ortho alleged both monopoly leveraging and tying based on the theory that Abbott's pricing of various "packages" of blood tests forced any rational buyer to purchase all five tests from Abbott rather than buying one or more tests from competing suppliers like Ortho. The preliminary injunction was denied on the basis that Ortho had shown no irreparable harm.

The passages quoted to us by the respondents were simply the Court's summary of Abbott's arguments and authorities on the monopoly leveraging point.[208] The Court stated that Abbott's arguments gave it "pause" but all that it concluded in the end was that Ortho had shown that there were sufficiently serious questions on the merits to warrant litigation. On the tying claim, the Court, in fact, noted:

> There is some case law to support the position that a tie does not have to be explicit but can instead be inferred from the pricing structure of two products and the market power which the party has. . . .
> Absent an explicit condition in the contract, there is a question of fact for the fact-finder regarding the existence of the tie, and we are unable on this state of the record to determine if plaintiff is likely to prevail on the merits of the tying claims. What is evident however is that there are sufficiently serious questions going to the merits of the tying claim to make them a fair ground for litigation.[209]

Therefore, the relevant question for us is whether, on the facts before us, the customers of Tele-Direct were "forced" to acquire services from it or did they have the option of acquiring space alone from Tele-Direct. We conclude that the evidence of the advertiser witnesses and Tele-Direct's own behaviour amply support the position of the Director that the lack of commission in the "local" market operated as a powerful inducement to acquire both space and services from Tele-Direct.

F. SUBSTANTIAL LESSENING OF COMPETITION

Has the extent of the exclusion resulting from Tele-Direct's limitation of commission to "national accounts" as defined in the 1993 rule resulted in, or is it likely to result in, a substantial lessening of competition? It is first necessary to establish the relevant comparator that should be employed in evaluating the magnitude of the lessening involved. There is no purpose in comparing the six to eight-market accounts with all other accounts that are currently bundled and that we have decided may remain that way because demand characteristics and likely efficiency comparisons dictate a single product. The most relevant comparator is the size of the existing commissionable market under the 1993 definition because we are considering expanding that market. Eight-market accounts are currently commissionable but this could be discontinued at any moment without an order of the Tribunal so we include eight-market accounts as part of the tied portion of the market to evaluate substantiality. Further, grandfathering currently prevents accounts from "growing into" eight-market status.

In a word, it is clear that six to eight-market accounts constitute an appreciable volume of business that, without the tying practice, would be available for agents to service. The largest constituent is currently grandfathered eight-market accounts. In addition, there are the six and seven-market accounts now serviced exclusively by Tele-Direct. Based on the Tele-Direct documentation prepared in anticipation of the 1993 rule change and the evidence of Mr. Mitchell, both of which are far from being completely clear, we find that a fair approximation of the value of accounts which are now commissionable under the 1993 definition (thus, excluding grandfathered accounts and including "national" accounts serviced both by Tele-Direct and agents) is about $30 million. Our best estimate of the accounts which have been found to be tied, namely six, seven and eight-market accounts, and would be added to the commissionable market is about $19 million. Thus, the combined total of the accounts found to be tied adds up to well in excess of 50 percent of the current commissionable market. Both in relative and absolute dollar terms, the amount of revenue affected by the tie is undoubtedly sufficient to conclude that there is a substantial lessening of competition.

A final issue arises with respect to substantial lessening. The respondents advance in their written argument a "technical" argument based on the use of definite and indefinite articles in subsection 77(2). They submit that the substantial lessening of competition must be assessed in the market for the tying product, here the market for the supply of advertising space: has the tying of space and services impeded entry into or expansion of a firm or had any other exclusionary effect in the space market? This argument was not referred to orally.

While the definite and indefinite articles can be read in different ways, the section should be read in a way that makes sense. Since tying generally, and certainly in this case, involves "leveraging" from the tying product market to the tied product market, it is only sensible to assess the effects of the practice, or the substantial lessening of competition, in the target or tied product market.

G. REMEDY

Section 77 of the Act provides that upon a finding by the Tribunal of tied selling by the supplier of the tying product (Tele-Direct), the Tribunal may make an order "prohibiting [the supplier] from continuing to engage in . . . tied selling. . . ."

Prohibiting Tele-Direct from continuing to engage in tied selling means that the tying product, advertising space, and the tied product, advertising services for six, seven and eight-market accounts, must be unbundled by Tele-Direct. The "unbundling" may take the form of separate prices: Tele-Direct could quote separate rates for space and services. It may also take the form of an expanded definition of commissionable accounts to allow six, seven and eight-market customers to use the services of an agent, who would earn commission at an appropriate rate.

While we do not rule out the possibility of advertisers acquiring space from Tele-Direct (at the separately quoted space price) and then paying a separate fee for services to Tele-Direct or to an agent, we think this scenario is unlikely. There are practical implications arising from Tele-Direct's predominance in the publishing market and the accreditation of agents that suggest that the marketplace in an "unbundled" environment after our order will work largely the same as it does today except that the commissionable market will be expanded to cover six, seven and eight-market accounts. Advertisers that wish to utilize Tele-Direct's services would continue to buy space and services from Tele-Direct at one price.

Because of the specialized nature of the Yellow Pages industry, the respondents regard accreditation as important and the Director and his witnesses, for example, Ms. McIlroy and Professor Slade, support it. Thus, Tele-Direct would be justified in requiring that services, including the placement of orders, be provided by accredited service providers only. Unbundling does not require that advertisers be given the opportunity to interface directly with Tele-Direct to place their orders, if they do not wish to utilize Tele-Direct's services. Advertisers would either deal with Tele-Direct for space and services or with an agent for services and, through an agent, with Tele-Direct for space. This contributes to our view that in all likelihood, the structural arrangement that exists today would likely continue, changed only to permit agents to compete with Tele-Direct to provide services to six, seven and eight-market accounts.

The prohibition on tying, however, does not carry with it a requirement that Tele-Direct pay a specified commission to agents. It will be up to Tele-Direct to pay such commission as it chooses. Commission rates could be identical for all accounts or might be variable. However, the prohibition on tying implies that the price charged by Tele-Direct for its space and services together cannot, in relation to the price at which it offers space to customers using agents (i.e., its price for both space and services together less the commission to the agent) be an inducement to customers' using Tele-Direct's services rather than agents, thus continuing the tie. In other words, the price for space to customers of agents cannot be artificially inflated (or the commission paid to agents artificially reduced) so that space is not realistically available separately. Tele-Direct cannot make it economically non-viable for customers to purchase space from Tele-Direct and use an agent's services because in those circumstances the space effectively costs more than if the customer were to use Tele-Direct's services.

The intervenor agents (and the Director in the alternative) submit that the Tribunal should order Tele-Direct to pay a minimum 15 percent commission to agents. Although this proposition was advanced in the context of the Tribunal finding a tie across the entire market for Yellow Pages advertising in Tele-Direct's directories, in the context of our finding that there is only tying down to the six-market level, the minimum 15 percent commission would apply in respect of six, seven or eight-market customers serviced by agents. We have no difficulty with Tele-Direct voluntarily complying with our order prohibiting tying by paying a minimum 15 percent commission. A 15 percent commission rate has historical precedent and is well accepted in the advertising industry. It appears to be a workable "average" that would be simpler to administer than variable commission rates for each of the six, seven and eight-market accounts, should Tele-Direct choose to use it.

However, the setting of a commission rate by the Tribunal is not, in our opinion, envisioned in the powers given to it under section 77 of the Act regarding tying or in the general jurisdiction given to the Tribunal under section 8 of the Competition Tribunal Act.[210] The Tribunal is not a rate-setting body. The implication of rate-setting is an ongoing regulatory oversight which is the antithesis of the objectives of competition policy. To grant this remedy, the Tribunal would be required to hold itself open to revision to the 15 percent rate. We could not saddle Tele-Direct or the agents with a rate cast in stone forever and the alternative of ongoing rate regulation is, in our view, simply not part of the mandate of the Tribunal. It is true that the Tribunal issued the Consent Order providing for a 25 percent commission on national accounts, but that order was for a limited time and was on consent. It provides no justification for a gearing up of a general regulatory process implied by setting a rate for an indefinite period in this contested proceeding.

The Tribunal's order will therefore provide that Tele-Direct is prohibited from tying its advertising services to advertising space for six, seven and eight-market accounts. Should Tele-Direct choose to comply with the order by a commission arrangement with accredited agents at a minimum rate of 15 percent, the Tribunal would find such an arrangement acceptable compliance. Otherwise, Tele-Direct can price space and services separately or implement a commission arrangement for six, seven and eight-market accounts at an appropriate level or levels. The price Tele-Direct charges for its bundle of space and services, if it continues to offer them as a package, in relation to the price that it charges for space separately cannot be such that it continues to tie space to services by way of an inducement offered to customers that take Tele-Direct's services. The order will specify that the parties may apply to the Tribunal for interpretation of the order or directions if they consider it necessary to ensure compliance.

IX. ABUSE OF DOMINANT POSITION

A. INTRODUCTION

For ease of reference, we set out again subsection 79 (1) of the Act, which deals with abuse of dominant position:

> Where, on application by the Director, the Tribunal finds that
> (a) one or more persons substantially or completely control, throughout Canada or any area thereof, a class or species of business,
> (b) that person or those persons have engaged in or are engaging in a practice of anti-competitive acts, and
> (c) the practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market, > the Tribunal may make an order prohibiting all or any of those persons from engaging in that practice.

Unlike previous abuse of dominance applications that have come before the Tribunal, where only one market was at issue, the Director here is putting forward two abuse of dominance cases, one involving the alleged market for the supply of advertising space and the second, the alleged market for the supply of advertising services.

One case is that the respondents have market power in the market for the supply of telephone directory advertising space, or publishing, and have engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts which has resulted in a substantial lessening of competition in that market. This case involves the responses of the respondents to the instances of new entry by competing broadly-scoped publishers in local markets, most significantly the entry of White in the Niagara region and the entry of DSP in Sault Ste. Marie.

The second case is that the respondents have market power in the market for the supply of telephone directory advertising services or, in the alternative, that they are leveraging their market power in the space market into the services market, and have engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts which have resulted in a substantial lessening of competition in the services market. Among the anti-competitive acts alleged to form a practice affecting this market are both acts directed at agents and acts directed at consultants. For example, one of the alleged anti-competitive acts is the bundling of space and services (restricted commissionability rules for agents) which forms the basis of the tying portion of the Director's application. Another is the alleged refusal by Tele-Direct to deal with consultants.

B. APPROACH TO SECTION 79 ANALYSIS

In dealing with the particular allegations in this case, the purpose of section 79 must be kept in mind. Neither party disputed that section 79 is not intended to condemn a firm merely for having market power. Instead, it is directed at ensuring that dominant firms compete with other firms on merit and not through abusing their market power.[211] Such abuse includes, as pointed out by the Director, entrenchment and extension of market power.[212] It would not be in the public interest to prevent or hamper even dominant firms in an effort to compete on the merits. Competition, even "tough" competition, is not to be enjoined by the Tribunal but rather only anti-competitive conduct. Unfortunately, distinguishing between competition on the merits and anti-competitive conduct, as the Tribunal has noted in the past, is not an easy task.[213]

The Tribunal established in NutraSweet that the list of anti-competitive acts set out in section 78 is not exhaustive. The Tribunal held that the common feature of the acts included in section 78 is that they are all performed for a "purpose", namely "an intended negative effect on a competitor that is predatory, exclusionary or disciplinary."[214] The Tribunal's approach to assessing whether acts are anti-competitive was set out most recently in D & B:

> . . . in evaluating whether allegedly anti-competitive acts fall within section 78, the Tribunal must determine the "nature and purpose of the acts which are alleged to be anti-competitive and the effect that they have or may have on the relevant market". The required analysis will take into account the commercial interests of both parties to the conduct in question and the resulting restriction on competition. The decision in Laidlaw makes it clear that, although such proof may be possible in a particular case, it is not necessary for the Director to prove subjective intent to restrict competition in the relevant market on the part of a respondent. The respondent will be deemed to intend the effects of its actions.[215] (references omitted)

The Tribunal must determine the "purpose" of the act that is alleged to be anti-competitive. "Purpose" is used in this context in a broader sense than merely subjective intent on the part of the respondent. As counsel for the Director pointed out, it might be more apt to speak of the overall character of the act in question.

What the Tribunal must decide is whether, once all relevant factors have been taken into account and weighed, the act in question is, on balance, "exclusionary, predatory or disciplinary". Relevant factors include evidence of the effects of the act, of any business justification and of subjective intent which, while not necessary, may be informative in assessing the totality of the evidence. A "business justification" must be a "credible efficiency or pro-competitive" business justification for the act in issue.[216] Further, the business justification must be weighed "in light of any anti-competitive effects to establish the overriding purpose"[217] of the challenged act:

> . . . The mere proof of some legitimate business purpose would be, however, hardly sufficient to support a finding that there is no anti-competitive act. All known factors must be taken into account in assessing the nature and purpose of the acts alleged to be anti-competitive.[218]

In their argument, the respondents advance several propositions regarding the nature of an anti-competitive act that they submit the Tribunal must determine as a matter of law in this case. One of these propositions is particularly relevant to the case relating to the publishing market. They state that certain acts constitute "competition on the merits" and cannot ever be anti-competitive acts. In another formulation, they state that objectively competitive conduct cannot constitute an anti-competitive act. They would define "objectively competitive" conduct as conduct which a non-dominant firm would have undertaken in similar circumstances.[219] Applying this argument to the specific case of the allegations involving the publishing market, the respondents say that the Director cannot allege, for example, that "zero price increases" are an anti-competitive act because competitive firms sometimes use zero price increases or even price decreases to compete.

We do not take issue with the proposition that section 79 is not intended to prevent dominant firms from competing on the merits. We do, however, doubt that it is possible to define, in the abstract, a list of acts that are "objectively competitive" and that could never, therefore, engage section 79. Competition on price is surely one of the hallmarks of a competitive market. Yet even the act of "price cutting" cannot be given absolute immunity from review under section 79 because of the possibility of predation. In our view, a case-by-case, factual analysis will always be necessary to determine if, in the particular circumstances, an act is anti-competitive. All the relevant factors must be weighed in deciding whether a particular act is, in the circumstances, competition on the merits or an anti-competitive act. That question cannot be answered as a matter of law in a vacuum.

C. MARKET FOR ADVERTISING SPACE - PUBLISHING

(1) Facts

The independent publishers DSP and White have already been discussed at various places in these reasons, largely in chapter "VII. Control: Market Power". We summarize here and add some further relevant facts.

Since 1993, DSP has produced a white pages and classified directory covering Sault Ste. Marie, Elliot Lake and Wawa in northwestern Ontario. Since January 1994, it has been a division of Southam Inc. but is still operated largely independently from the Southam newspapers in the area in question. Tele-Direct publishes three separate directories for the areas covered by the DSP directory.

The DSP Canadian directory is combined with a corresponding directory for the Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan area. The American portion is published by Noverr Publishing Inc. ("Noverr") which publishes several directories in the state of Michigan.

White publishes competing directories (Niagara Falls, St. Catharines and Fort Erie) to Tele-Direct's in the Niagara region in Canada. White also entered Canada in 1993. White is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the American company White Directory Publishers, Inc. which is a private company controlled by the Lewis family. The American company began operations in 1968 with a classified directory (yellow pages only) in the Buffalo area. A white pages directory was later added and then in the second half of the 1980s and early 1990s additional directories containing both classified and white pages were started in other areas of New York state and Pennsylvania. White's entry into Canada was followed by further expansion in the United States in 1994 and 1995, into Florida and North Carolina.

Both DSP and White first published "prototype" directories in Canada, DSP in January 1993 and White in November and December 1993.[220] DSP published its first revenue directory in November 1993. White began its canvass for its first revenue directory in late 1993 and continued in 1994. Its first revenue directory was published in late 1994.

In order to produce their directories, White and DSP had to generate subscriber listings for their white and yellow pages. As discussed earlier, despite the 1992 ruling of the CRTC, at the time of their entry DSP and White did not have commercially viable direct access to subscriber listings. They had to use the most recent Tele-Direct directories, re-key the data, verify and update each listing.

Included in the directories of White and DSP were features which were not present in the existing directories of Tele-Direct in either region, including audiotext, community pages, larger size print, three-column format, postal codes and additional colour plus a free smaller size copy in addition to the regular size directory (a "mini").[221]

Less detail was provided on the other two competitive markets referred to by the Director. In October 1994, a competing directory was published in Joliette, Quebec by Les Pages Soleil, a joint venture involving the company which publishes the Locator directories in Ontario. Les Pages Soleil also feature enhancements like community pages, postal codes and only three columns per page.

In Newfoundland, a company called Unifone Files Inc. ("Unifone") intended to publish a province-wide directory called "The Big Phone Book", apparently some time in 1993 or 1994. Tele-Direct (Services) Inc. publishes seven directories in Newfoundland for Newfoundland Tel (St. John's, eastern Newfoundland (four), western Newfoundland and central Newfoundland). In addition to its broader scope, the Unifone directory was to feature larger print, community pages and a "mini" directory. As of February 1994, however, Unifone was no longer in existence and it never did publish a directory.

The two entrants for which we had evidence on this point (White and DSP) priced advertising in their directories 30 to 40 percent below Tele-Direct's rates.

[221] DSP also included a "reverse" directory -- listings by phone number first.

Tele-Direct responded to these various entrants using a number of initiatives, including price freezes, advertiser incentive programs, advertising and promotional expenditures, and directory enhancements. Tele-Direct was also involved in litigation or threatened litigation against the entrants in Sault Ste. Marie and Niagara. Further details on these responses follow.

Tele-Direct adopted a zero percent price increase or price freeze in Sault Ste. Marie in 1993. Except for 1994, when there was a general price freeze across all of Tele-Direct's territory, prices were increased annually in the vast majority of Tele-Direct's directories outside of the competitive markets.[222] In 1995, there were zero price increases in Sault Ste. Marie, Joliette and the Niagara region. The information on the record regarding 1996 prices is that all markets were subject to a price increase, including the competitive markets.

Tele-Direct has offered advertiser incentive programs of various kinds throughout its territory at different times. The critical distinction between the programs offered in the competitive markets and those offered in other markets is that in the competitive markets the incentives were available to advertisers who renewed or increased their advertising whereas in the other markets only those advertisers who increased their level of spending were eligible.

The advertiser incentive program in Sault Ste. Marie was first offered in 1993. While originally intended as a one-year program it was extended to three years, ending in 1995.[223] In [222] The exceptions for Tele-Direct's directories were the neighbourhood directories and areas subject to rescoping or splitting of directories. At the request of other telcos, like Newfoundland Tel and Northern Tel, prices were also frozen in those directories in 1995.

[223] In the first year (1993), all existing advertisers renewing or purchasing advertising received the next size up or colour, if applicable, at no extra charge. In 1994, all advertisers who participated in the program in 1993 were offered the next size up free,

Niagara, a program similar to the Sault Ste. Marie advertiser incentive program was offered in 1994 and 1995. As of the hearing, no decision had been taken about proceeding to offer the program in Niagara for a third year. In Joliette, a program was offered in 1995 which provided that advertisers renewing or purchasing advertising would receive the next largest size advertisement or colour if applicable. In Newfoundland, the same program was offered in four directories in 1994. Mr. Beauséjour, Tele-Direct's Vice-president of Finance, confirmed that the program was instituted in response to the presence of Unifone.[224]

In each competitive market, Tele-Direct added a number of features to its directories that were introduced first by the entrant. Most of these features tend to be fairly standard in many American markets. For example, the enhancements used by White in its Canadian prototype are almost all standard features for it in its American markets. The features added by Tele-Direct in response are not generally used by it in its directories in other markets.

We have limited information about the Joliette and Newfoundland situations in this respect. Tele-Direct did add a community pages section to its Joliette directory. Mr. Renwicke thought that postal codes had also been added. A memorandum dated October 1993 records a free colour or a 15 percent rebate if they renewed or increased their advertising. Those who had not participated in 1993 and new advertisers were given a 15 percent rebate. In the third and final year, the program became even more complex with different choices available to 1994 participants who were renewing depending on which option they had chosen (rebate/free size up or colour) in 1994. Non-advertisers and non-participants were again offered a 15 percent rebate as were 1994 participants who were increasing their advertising.

[224] In 1995, when Unifone was no longer present, advertisers were offered a 15 percent rebate if they increased their advertising but participants in the 1994 program could receive the rebate if they renewed their upsized or colour item.

recommendation by Tele-Direct (Services) Inc. that the Newfoundland directories contain "some enhancements starting with the central Newfoundland 1994 directory."[225]

In Sault Ste. Marie, Tele-Direct added enhancements to its directories similar to those offered by DSP, including four-colour format, postal codes, community pages and its own audiotext system (Talking Yellow Pages or "TYP"). Likewise, in Niagara Tele-Direct reacted to the entrance of White by adding enhancements similar to those of White to the Tele-Direct directories in that area. Tele-Direct did not introduce all of the enhancements included by the entrants. For example, it did not adopt larger type or distribute "mini" directories.

Some further detail is required about the audiotext system or TYP in order to understand the allegations advanced by the Director in this respect. Audiotext is an electronic technology which allows consumers with Touch-Tone phones to obtain access to audio messages which are stored on a computer. The directory publisher provides in its directory codes which can be used by consumers to gain access to the messages on topics of interest to the consumer. The provision of an audiotext service is comprised of both hardware components, the computer and satellite dish, for example, and the information lines which are fed to the satellite dish from a supplier. Depending on the information being offered, the lines are updated at regular intervals during the day, on a daily basis or on a monthly basis.

Tele-Direct introduced its first TYP in Kitchener in 1988 followed by Toronto and Quebec City that same year. Unlike the audiotext involving the provision of general information on various topics to consumers, the Kitchener and Quebec City services involved advertiser-specific information. The code was provided in the advertisement; the interested consumer could call for more detailed information regarding that supplier, for example, prices. These services were later abandoned for lack of advertiser interest; the Toronto service, which is of the general information type, is still offered. Since it first offered TYP, Tele-Direct's supplier of the information lines required has been a company called Perception Electronic Publishing ("Perception").[226] As of November 1993, Perception is owned by Brite Voice Systems.

When it entered the Sault Ste. Marie market with its prototype directory in January 1993, DSP provided an audiotext service. This was the first time such a service was offered in Sault Ste. Marie. The information supplier for DSP was Perception. During the first two months that it was offered, the DSP audiotext service was heavily used.

Tele-Direct introduced its TYP in Sault Ste. Marie in April 1993 in advance of its June 1993 directory, some three months after DSP published its prototype directory, also using Perception for its information feed. Tele-Direct used flyers to distribute the relevant codes to consumers. It was roughly at the same time as the Tele-Direct TYP were introduced that DSP began to experience deterioration in its audiotext service because the information was no longer being updated in a timely manner. DSP was in constant contact with Perception in order to get the lines updated within an acceptable time frame, but with no success. The quality of DSP information feed from Perception remained poor until November 1993, which was essentially the same time that Perception was acquired by Brite Voice Systems.

Tele-Direct also engaged in large advertising campaigns in Sault Ste. Marie and Niagara. No detailed information was provided in this respect regarding the other two competitive markets. Compared with pre-entry levels virtually all of the advertising and promotional expenditures were new. In Sault Ste. Marie, Tele-Direct spent only about $50,000 on advertising in 1992 as compared to $215,000 in 1993. By 1994, expenditures had dropped back to $22,000. In Niagara, Tele-Direct spent $43,000 in 1992, $71,000 in 1993 and $28,000 in 1994.[227] In 1993, advertising expenditures in Sault Ste. Marie constituted approximately 11 percent of published revenues for that city; in 1993 in the Niagara area, advertising expenses amounted to less than one percent of published revenues.

Another circumstance relevant to the Director's allegations respecting publishers is that Tele-Direct initiated a suit against DSP in May 1993 for infringing the "walking fingers" trade-mark and Tele-Direct's copyright in the advertisements in the Tele-Direct directory with its prototype directory. In the spring of 1995, Tele-Direct notified DSP that it would also be challenging the 1994 and 1995 DSP directories. At the time of the hearing, the lawsuit had reached the stage of discoveries. A representative for Tele-Direct had been discovered and the discovery of the representative for DSP was scheduled for November 1995.

[227] Exhibit R-152.

Although no suit has been launched in relation to White, Tele-Direct made it abundantly clear to White early in 1993 that it would vigorously defend its trade-marks and its interpretation of its copyright interests arising from the advertisements in the Tele-Direct directories. In particular, Tele-Direct informed White that it could not make use of an advertiser's copy, layout or graphics as they existed in the current Tele-Direct directory in creating the first White directory.

(2) Control of a Class or Species of Business in Canada

The Tribunal has already found that the supply of telephone directory advertising constitutes a relevant product market and that the relevant geographic markets are local in nature. We have also found that Tele-Direct possesses market power in those markets. We are satisfied, therefore, that Tele-Direct has market power in the market for the supply of advertising space or the telephone directory publishing market and therefore controls the business in the relevant geographic markets.

(3) Practice of Anti-competitive Acts

(a) Allegations - Pleadings

The Director's application, as amended, says at paragraph 65 that the following acts together constitute a practice of anti-competitive acts affecting the market for advertising space, or the publishing market, which leads to a substantial lessening of competition in that market:

> . . .
>
> (g) targeting price reductions and other discounts to those markets in which entry by competing publishers has occurred or is occurring; and
>
> (h) causing, directly or indirectly, advertising agencies to refuse to place advertising in telephone directories published by competing publishers or otherwise discriminating against or causing independent advertising agencies to discriminate against competing publishers; and
> (i) making disparaging statements in regard to new market entrants.

In argument, the Director did not refer to the act set out in (i). Under the heading in the written argument, "Otherwise Discriminating between Publishers", the Director gathers evidence relating to the respondents' policy of not allowing the directories of competing publishers to count towards the 20 directory requirement of Tele-Direct's national account definition. Under the heading in the written argument, "Targeting/Raising Rivals' Costs", the Director refers to various actions by the respondents in response to entry by competing publishers in the local markets of Joliette (Quebec), Newfoundland, Niagara and Sault Ste. Marie which are alleged to constitute anti-competitive acts because of their targeted nature and intent and the degree or intensity of the response. The particular responses listed are zero price increases, incentive programs, advertising and promotional spending, directory enhancements, interfering with the DSP audiotext feed and litigation or threats of litigation.

The respondents say that the allegations involving directory enhancements, promotional spending and litigation or threats of litigation are not encompassed by the pleadings and cannot be relied on by the Director.

It is not in dispute that the evidence and the argument put forward by the Director on this issue must be supported by the pleadings, either by the specific words in the application or by reasonable inference therefrom. It is trite to say that the pleadings are intended to define the issues in dispute between the parties, to give fair notice to each party as to the case that it will have to meet and to assist the decision maker in considering and deciding the allegations that have been made. Where, as here, an argument about the scope of the application is only raised at the stage of final argument, we agree with the Director that regard may be had to interlocutory proceedings, discovery and the conduct of the hearing itself to determine what the parties considered were the issues raised by those pleadings. We need not restrict ourselves to the pleadings in a vacuum.

(i) Enhancements

Directory enhancements were not explicitly mentioned in the application. However, in its request for leave to intervene, White specified, in paragraph 9 of the request, those matters in issue which affected it. Item (e) reads:

> offering directory enhancements (community pages, an audio text system and postal codes) targeted to areas where competition or the threat of competition exists. . . .

As stated in the reasons of the Tribunal for granting leave to intervene, the respondents did not oppose the intervention. The respondents only objected to White being given leave to make representations with respect to certain issues which, the respondents argued, were outside the scope of the Director's application. The respondents submitted that the representations of an intervenor must be relevant to the proceedings and that relevance is defined by the parties' pleadings. The Tribunal agreed. The issues in White's intervention challenged by the respondents as being outside the scope of the application did not include item (e) "enhancements" but rather focused on six other items. The Tribunal accepted that four of the disputed six items were not supported by the application and excluded them from the purview of White's intervention.

If the respondents were genuinely of the view that the question of directory enhancements was outside the scope of the application as defined by the pleadings, then they would have challenged that part of White's intervention request. The question of what was and what was not supported by the pleadings regarding the alleged anti-competitive acts in relation to independent publishers was squarely in issue at the intervention hearing. The clear implication of the respondents' failure to challenge item (e) is that they considered that enhancements were within the pleadings.

Nothing occurred after the intervention hearing that would have led to any other conclusion. The Director requested the production of documents and conducted discovery on the question of enhancements. Eventually the relevant documents were produced, without objection.[228] The Director submits that Tele-Direct has taken this "about face" on the question of enhancements in order to provide an after-the-fact explanation for its belated production of a boxful of relevant documents relating to its responses in competitive markets. The Director called evidence at the hearing on enhancements, without objection. The respondents themselves led evidence on the question of enhancements. Tele-Direct cannot now change a position that it took on an interlocutory proceeding and maintained throughout discovery, the hearing and up until the commencement of its final argument. The entire case has been conducted on the basis that directory enhancements are fairly in issue. Enhancements are properly before the Tribunal.

(ii) Advertising and Promotional Expenditures

Unlike directory enhancements, advertising and promotional expenditures were not specifically addressed at White's intervention hearing. If we looked only at the words of the pleadings, it might be arguable whether those words would support the allegation. Again, however, we have a course of conduct that sheds considerable light on whether the parties themselves thought promotional expenditures were at issue as part of the allegation of anti-competitive acts. It is clear that they did. Oral and documentary discovery was conducted by the Director on this issue. Counsel for the Director referred to it in his opening address. The Director called evidence in chief on the issue and the respondents called responding evidence. Advertising and promotional expenditures are properly before the Tribunal.

(iii) Litigation and Threatened Litigation

Counsel for the respondents pointed out that the Director was not seeking any remedy specifically relating to litigation. Counsel for the Director did not address the respondents' argument that litigation or threatened litigation falls outside the pleadings. In argument on the merits, however, the Director took the position that litigation or threats of litigation contribute to the anti-competitive act of "targeting" or "raising rivals' costs".

The words of the pleadings do not obviously incorporate such a concept. The original application, at paragraph 65(h), contained a specific allegation of an anti-competitive act of "threatening or taking legal action to restrict competing suppliers of advertising space from gaining access to, or from utilizing, subscriber listing information". This allegation was later withdrawn. However, as with promotional expenditures, litigation was dealt with in the evidence and argument. In view of the specific withdrawal by the Director of the reference in the pleadings to litigation or threatened litigation, the respondents' position is somewhat stronger on this point than on the others. But, it is not necessary to decide the issue on procedural grounds. As will become apparent, we are not satisfied on the merits of the argument that litigation or threatened litigation constitute anti-competitive conduct in this case.

(b) Alleged Anti-competitive Acts

(i) Causing Agencies to Refuse to Place Advertising with Independents

The independent publishers' directories do not count towards the 20-directory requirement that forms part of the 1993 definition of a Tele-Direct commissionable account. The Director argues that the effect of the Tele-Direct policy in this regard is that CMRs do not recommend independent directories to advertisers when they would do so if those directories counted towards qualification as a commissionable account. Thus, it is submitted, this excludes independents from revenues that they would otherwise obtain.

The Director relies on the evidence of Mr. Lewis of White comparing the situation in Canada with respect to advertising placed in his directories by CMRs to that in the United States. In distinction to Tele-Direct's policy, in the United States publishers include the directory of any other YPPA member in determining whether an account qualifies for commission. White is a YPPA member and therefore its directories count towards the minimum directory requirement in the United States. Mr. Lewis testified that in that country eight percent of White's advertising revenues are placed by CMRs while in Canada less than one-half of one percent comes from CMRs.

The respondents respond that this testimony alone does not constitute proof of the requisite exclusionary effect. Because White has been operating in the United States for a lot longer, and is therefore more established than it is in Canada, they question the validity of the comparison being made. Further, they rely on the evidence of Stephanie Crammond of Media Nexus, a specialized Yellow Pages advertising agency, that if she had confidence in the distribution figures cited by the various independents, she would consider them. Likewise, Richard Clark of DAC stated that his position on independent directories was to "wait and see" if they were going to stay around and then base a decision on which directory had greater usage. He did point out that typically the telco directory has the greater usage and, therefore, if a competing directory is used, generally it is on a secondary basis, with the primary advertising dollars allocated to the telco directory.

On balance, we are not persuaded by the Director's argument. While we recognize that monetary incentives are bound to enter into an agency's recommendation to a client, the Director's argument implies that agencies are entirely driven by earning commission and will compromise the quality of the advice they give by omitting to recommend a good, independent directory merely because it would not help the account qualify for a Tele-Direct commission. The burden of the remainder of the Director's case, as it involves agencies, is that they are, among other things, independent suppliers of advice to advertisers and therefore provide a valuable alternative to Tele-Direct's captive salesforce. For the Director to suggest now that agencies would not provide good advice seems to be somewhat inconsistent with that position. But apart from this, the independents, of course, pay their own commission on advertising placed in their directories.

There are factors at play other than Tele-Direct's criteria in agents' decisions when recommending directories to their clients. As Mr. Clark's testimony indicates, an important reason why independent publishers in Canada may not receive a high volume of business from agencies is that, because Tele-Direct is the established publisher, it is rarely a choice between Tele-Direct's directory and the independent directory for a particular area. Rather, the agency will generally recommend the Tele-Direct directory as the primary directory for advertising because of widespread usage and then, if additional money is available, recommend the independent also.

In summary, we do not accept that Tele-Direct's policy regarding the 20-directory requirement discourages agency recommendations of independent directories.

One final observation in this area arises from the respondents' written argument at paragraph 590, that as a matter of law "[i]t cannot be an anti-competitive act for a dominant firm to decline to assist or give aid to a competitor." We agree with the general proposition that a firm is not, and should not be, required to "assist" its competitors. The respondents, however, add an additional element to the proposition when they submit that:

> Each of the anti-competitive acts listed in section 78 require the dominant firm to actively initiate some action. . . . None of the listed acts are triggered simply by the dominant firm not doing something or refusing to assist. . . . (emphasis added)

While the respondents did not advance this argument in relation to the specific allegation we are dealing with here (or, in fact, in relation to any specific allegation), it certainly seems relevant to the question of whether Tele-Direct should be obliged to recognize advertising in independent directories as counting towards Tele-Direct's commissionability requirement of a minimum of 20 directories. As stated above, as a general proposition, competitors should not be required to assist one another. But, this general proposition may be shown to be inapplicable in a given section 79 case by the Director proving that the "act" of the respondent meets the elements of that section and is an anti-competitive act leading to a substantial lessening of competition.

Then, any order of the Tribunal which may issue is, by definition, not an order to "assist" a competitor but rather, in the case of subsection 79(1), an order to cease and desist from anti-competitive conduct.

It is, therefore, not sufficient, in circumstances such as these, to argue the general proposition. Nothing can be determined by simply labelling the alleged anti-competitive "act" as "doing something" (active) or "not doing something" (passive). The anti-competitive effect of the conduct of the respondents, whether "active" or "passive", must be weighed against any business justification in order to conclude whether there has or has not been a substantial lessening of competition. That can only be done by reference to the evidence. On this point, Tele-Direct only argued the general proposition.

(ii) Targeting/Raising Rivals' Costs

Reaction of Tele-Direct

Before turning to the evidence it is necessary to consider what the Director means when he alleges that "targeting/raising rivals' costs" is an anti-competitive act. There is a growing body of literature dealing with "raising rivals' costs" ("RRC"). The theory was proposed as a similar but more credible route to market power than predatory pricing because it does not depend on short-term price cutting beyond what is profit-maximizing followed by later recoupment. With RRC, it is not necessary to cause the rivals to exit, no "deep pockets" are necessary and the additional profits are gained immediately.[229] Typically, an RRC strategy involves increasing rivals' costs by raising the price of some scarce input which in turn results in the rival reducing its output.[230] In other words, there is a relatively immediate output reduction in the market concerned. Only two elements of the act alleged by the Director seem to bear any resemblance to this conception of RRC -- the audiotext affair and litigation and threats of litigation. As we shall see, the remaining actions of Tele-Direct relating to pricing, incentives and advertising did not result in output reduction in the markets in question. The considerations involved in RRC can provide little assistance in evaluating the allegations relating to those reactions of Tele-Direct in competitive markets or the "targeting" aspect of this act.

The Director has not attempted to explain what is meant by targeting in any detail, perhaps regarding the term as largely self-explanatory. It is, however, far from being a household word in competition law. While we have no reason to discourage novel approaches to discerning potentially anti-competitive conduct that might fall within section 79, we do see considerable difficulty in applying the targeting concept. It is always difficult to distinguish between anti-competitive practices and normal competition. The conduct in question may be generally benign and it is only in certain contexts that it is anti-competitive. The difficulty is even more pronounced in this case, given the actions on the part of Tele-Direct that the Director would have the Tribunal, if not prohibit completely, certainly restrict.

In argument counsel for the Director described the nature of targeting as follows:

> The reason that acts of predation or near-predation can be anti-competitive is because the firm is dominant in a larger market. The danger is that, rather than bringing the public the benefit of competition in a limited area, what is happening is that in the long-term analysis the dominant firm is leveraging its market power from its broadly-dominated market into specific targeted areas where competition enters, with a view to either eliminate that competition entirely or, as in the situation here where the expressed intent fell a bit short of that, to ensure that the competition didn't move into any other markets and to raise their costs so that those companies would know that it was not going to be a profitable enterprise to continue their expansion.
>
> What we are suggesting is that this is really a test of degree, that we have in at least one of the markets evidence which is very close to predation. What we have is such a tightly focused and overwhelming marshalling of the dominant resources of the company to these targeted areas that there is a need for a remedy.
>
>
> . . . While one may formulate various tests that would have different requirements in terms of the super-normal targeted response, this is probably the clearest case imaginable in terms of the absolutely overwhelmingly aggressive nature of the response to these targeted markets.[231]

Counsel clarified that "leveraging" in this context means the use of monopoly rents from other markets to subsidize near-predatory behaviour in the markets in question.[232]

One of the ordinary meanings of the word "target" is > anything that is fired at or made an objective of warlike operations . . . [233]

In one obvious sense, therefore, "targeting" simply refers to focused or aimed rather than general responses. The facts show that Tele-Direct behaved differently in the competitive markets. If the Director is arguing that the actions of Tele-Direct constitute the anti-competitive act of targeting merely because its actions in markets in which broadly-scoped entry was occurring were different from those in markets where no such entry had occurred, we do not accept the argument. Targeting cannot be distinguished as an anti-competitive act merely by the fact that there is a differentiated response. Targeting, in the sense of a differentiated response to competitors, is a decidedly normal competitive reaction. An incumbent can be expected to behave differently where it faces entry than where it does not. One competes where there is competition. Similarly there may be gradations of reaction depending on the nature of the competitive threats.

The earlier discussion regarding market power established that, whereas the broadly-scoped directories published by entrants in the "targeted" markets were considered by Tele-Direct as competition for its own directories, the same was not true of other publishers who sought market niches defined by geography or other specific characteristics of their intended audience (e.g., ethnic, religious, easy to read directories). Furthermore, both White and DSP introduced features into their directories such as postal codes, information about cultural events, coupons, etc., that provide value to users that could affect whether the Tele-Direct directories would be retained by telephone subscribers in those markets if Tele-Direct did nothing.

If "targeting" does not depend solely on differentiated responses, how is it to be distinguished from competition on the merits? We do not take the Director to be proposing that an incumbent, even one with a dominant market position, is precluded from responding to entry. Entry would obviously be encouraged if the incumbent accommodated the entrant. It is, however, doubtful that anyone would suggest that this is a desirable competitive outcome. Anything short of accommodation is likely to make the post-entry prospects of an entrant less attractive than the pre-entry benefits enjoyed by the incumbent. It is, therefore, not enough for us to find that Tele-Direct's responses made entry less attractive.

Indeed, the Director's position seems to be that a firm is free to act to discourage entry but that there is a limit to what it may do. This is reflected in the Director's proposed remedy, which would allow Tele-Direct to use two out of three of price reductions or discounts, enhancements and an advertising campaign in individual markets.[234] Once the incumbent passes this critical threshold, it is submitted that it has moved into the realm of anti-competitive conduct. The reasoning behind this, as we understand it, is that while what has been done in the particular markets may not be particularly harmful, the long-term harm caused by discouraging future entry outweighs any immediate benefit. In other words, the response in the markets where entry occurs is part of an effort to discourage entry into other markets by behaving in a fashion which is nearly, but not necessarily, predatory in the strict sense in which that word is usually used.

[234] Tele-Direct would be unrestricted in its responses if it implemented those responses throughout its territory.

In support of the position that Tele-Direct's response went beyond what is "normal", the Director relies on its expressions of corporate intent, the number, variety and degree of its responses and the intensity of those responses. As a standard for assessing how far Tele-Direct went the Director submits that we can look to the evidence that its response in Sault Ste. Marie caused Tele-Direct to incur losses, a comparison to the experience of independent entrants in American markets, and the difference between White's and DSP's expectations and their actual results and their future plans.

Counsel for the Director also suggests that Tele-Direct is using its monopoly rents from other markets to cross-subsidize its responses in competitive markets. This possible meaning of targeting would only apply, however, where the dominant firm is incurring losses in the targeted market. However, the Director does not appear to be suggesting that this is a necessary condition for the Tribunal to find that "targeting" is an anti-competitive act in this case.

First, we will examine the question whether what Tele-Direct did in the competitive markets was generally of benefit to consumers (advertisers) in those markets, largely neutral or, in fact, harmful. While Tele-Direct's actions clearly made it more expensive for the entrants than if it had accommodated them, seizing market share from a rival by offering a better product or lower prices is not, in general, exclusionary since consumers in the markets concerned are made better off. The Director has not attempted to argue that Tele-Direct's responses caused harm to advertisers in the particular markets in which entry occurred. The Director did, however, submit that at least some of Tele-Direct's actions were of negligible or temporary benefit to those advertisers.

With respect to the zero price increases, there is no question that advertisers benefitted from this initiative. The evidence indicates that the advertiser incentive program in competitive markets was carefully designed to absorb customers' directory advertising budgets so that little would be left for the new entrants when they canvassed for paid advertising. Yet, it is difficult to conclude that these programs did not benefit advertisers, particularly when rebates were involved. Making its directories more attractive by adding enhancements and increased advertising by Tele-Direct would both tend to increase usage of telephone directories and, thus, benefit advertisers in those markets. There was evidence that some of the enhancements to Tele-Direct's directories were viewed by the company as temporary expedients. For example, the postal code feature in Niagara was designed to be easily removable.[235] Nevertheless, as no evidence was brought to our attention indicating actual removal of the postal code section, we can only conclude it has been maintained by Tele-Direct. Further, although the Director argued that much of Tele-Direct's advertising was "negative" advertising which only disparaged its competitors, we do not have enough information on the advertising campaign to be in a position to identify which portions were "negative" and if the negative outweighed the positive. Overall, the inescapable conclusion is that Tele-Direct's responses to entry resulted in an improvement for advertisers in the "targeted" markets.

[235] Mr. Bourke wrote to Mr. Renwicke stating that postal codes should be left as a section rather than integrated as part of the listing (as White had done), otherwise "we'll [n]ever get rid of it": confidential exhibit CJ-86 (black vol. 13), tab 101 at 134297.

What, then, about the likelihood of harm in Tele-Direct's territory as a whole because of the effect of these responses on future entry or expansion? There is evidence that Tele-Direct was not solely concerned with "meeting" competition in Sault Ste. Marie and Niagara. Tele-Direct also feared further entry into other areas, particularly from DSP which was associated with Southam and had the advantage of having local connections and organization through the publisher's newspapers. This is clear from the evidence of Ms. McIlroy, who was in a key position as Vice-president of Marketing at that time.

Ms. McIlroy testified that Tele-Direct designed its strategies first around the Sault Ste. Marie situation and then replicated them in Niagara when White appeared. She confirmed that one of her objectives in Sault Ste. Marie, as set out in document recording her notes for a presentation, was to "limit Southam motivation to continue Yellow Pages roll-out in Ontario".[236] She further explained that as a "counter-strategy", if Southam's intention to enter directory publishing was a long-term, well-funded strategy, then her second objective was to "make the cost of carrying on business against [Tele-Direct] market-by-market exceptionally high."[237]

But those were not the sole objectives. Ms. McIlroy also described Tele-Direct's strategy in the following terms:

> . . . the basic premise was to make it expensive for the competitor to compete with us and to focus on doing everything and doing it right in the Sault, putting whatever investments or resources that was necessary to avoid unnecessary market share [loss] and to protect our interest in that market.[238]

Similarly, in a presentation that she made to her fellow officers she set out the following points as constituting Tele-Direct's "challenge":

> • Protect usage and awareness - promotion

Mr. Renwicke disputed whether the last point was ever accepted as corporate policy, but in matters of dispute between Ms. McIlroy and her fellow officers we accept her evidence. She left Tele-Direct on good terms and she has no discernible reason for colouring her evidence, particularly as she was the officer responsible for preparing tactics that the Director would have us label as anti-competitive.

It is only the reference to making competition "expensive" as part of Tele-Direct's strategy that raises any question of anti-competitive motivation. It is doubtful that Tele-Direct could make competition expensive without negatively affecting its own profitability. According
